C'eſt une choſe facile
Aux diſciples d'Apollon:
Mais ce Conquerant habile
A plutoſt pris une ville
Qu'ils n'ont fait une Chanſon.

All theſe thoughts are ingenious, continues Eudoxus; but the Envy viſibly appears, and theſe Authors profeſs to praiſe, whereas he who ſaid; he believes that Verſes are made as faſt as Towns are taken, ſeems not to think of praiſe: He ſeems to be in an Angry Mood, and to think only of coming off: and ſo the praiſe, that he beſtows by the by, is certainly more Nice. The exact Conformity betwixt theſe thoughts and Longinus's parallel will not allow us to doubt that this paſſage carries in it Father Bouhour's approbation of Timæus. But to prevent all Scruples on this Head we ought to have recourſe to the expreſs Words of this Jeſuit: (h) "I am not of Longinus's ſide; his Criticiſm went too far when he Charged Timæus "with puerility in his Praiſe of Alexander. He that "ſhould ſay of Lewis the Great, that he Conquered the firſt time Franche-Comte in fewer Days "than t'was poſſible to Write his Panegyrick, do you "think he wou'd ſay any thing Ridiculous? And "at his return from a Campaign ſo ſhort and ſo "Glorious, if it had been ſaid that thoſe who on that "account were obliged to Compliment his Majeſty, "had occaſion for more time to prepare their Speeches than he employed in the Conqueſt: Would "you cenſure the Thought? I don't believe I ſhou'd, "replied Eudoxus; and yet I take Timæus's thought "to be wrong, becauſe the Speeches which you "Mention relate to the King and his Conqueſts; "but Iſocrates's Panegyrick did not Concern Alexander or his Victories." I believe it had been better for Eudoxus to have given his approbation without any reſerve. Indeed the Greek Author's thought would have been more perfect, if Iſocrates's Oration had been a Panegyrick on Alexander; its Beauty would by this have been improved by ſome freſh Charms: But I cannot conceive that the want of this circumſtance vitiates the Compariſon. Without this it ſtill retains a lively Image of the rapidity of Alexander's Conqueſts.

(h) Id. ib. pag. 81.

I ought not to forget that Mr. Racine muſt needs be for Timæus againſt Longinus. Read this paſſage in Madam de Sevigni's Letter to the Count de Buſſy, dated the 3d of November. 1677. (i) "What "you ſay of Racine and Deſpreaux is very juſt. The "King four Days ſince expreſſed himſelf thus to "them: I am ſorry that you did not come to the "laſt Campaign, you would have ſeen the War, "and the Journey wou'd not have been long. "Racine anſwered: Sir, we had only City Cloaths; "we indeed beſpoke travelling Cloaths but the "places you attack'd were taken before they were "made. This Compliment was very agreeably "received." I can't tell whether any Body has yet made uſe of this thought of Martial, concerning the Copiſts, who wrote faſter than the Words were Dictated to them.

(i) Lettres Comte Buſſy abutin m. 1 pag. n⁴. Dutch dit.

Currant (k) verba licet, manus eſt velocior illis,
Nondum lingua, ſuum dextra peregit opus.

(k) Mar- al. lib. 4. epigr. 08.

Why could it not be ſaid that a Conquering Arm finiſhes its Work much ſooner than the Tongue of an Orator can reach the end of his Oration?

(K) Plutarch Condemned him juſtly on account of his Puerilities—— Common Place ——— preſages.] (l) "He falls into the Follies of Xenarchus in ſeveral places, as where he ſays, that he took it "for an ill boding Omen for the Athenians, that the "Captain Nicias, having his Name derived from "the Word Nice, which ſignifies Victory, ſhou'd "contradict the Sicilian Enterpriſe: And that by "the Mutilation of the Hermes's, that is, the Images of Mercury, the Gods Advertiſed them, that "in this War they ſhould ſuffer abundance of Evils "from the Syracuſan General, whoſe Name was "Hermocrates the Son of Hermon: And that it was "beſides probable that Hercules would favour the "Syracuſans on account of the Goddeſs Proſerpina, "(under whoſe Protection the City of Syracuſa was) "in return of the Favour done him, in ſurrendring "to him the Infernal Cerberus; and on the contrary, "that he bore a Grudge to the Athenians, "becauſe they defended the Ægeſte, who were "deſcended from the Trojans, his Mortal Enemies, "by Reaſon he deſtroyed their City, in revenge of "the violated Faith, and of the Injury done him "by King Laomedon. But perhaps his judgment was "at an equal pitch when he wrote theſe fine Stories, "as when he Cenſured Philiſtus's Style, or Railed "at Plato and Ariſtotle." We may hence obſerve what falſe Notions the Pagans had of God. The Decalogue teaches us that the Iniquity of the Fathers ſhould be viſited on the Children only, to the fourth Generation. And this Ethnick Hiſtorian imagined that the Trojans drew on their Protectors the hatred of Hercules, 800 Years after this Demy-God's Quarrel with a Trojan Prince.

(l) Plu- rch. ubi pra. Note that Longinus ubi Supra Laught at the Reaſon ken om Her- ocrates's Name.

(L) Very unfit for an Hiſtorian, and that he ought eſpecially to have avoided exerciſing his Pen on the Actions of Agathocles.] His Favourite Talent was the Imprinting a Satyrical Character on his Diſcourſe. For this reaſon it was impoſſible his Hiſtory ſhould be good, tho' he had been happy in the other neceſſary Talents of an Hiſtorian (a). This Satyrical Genius prompts a Writer to ſuppreſs all laudable Actions, and only to preſent to the Reader the weak or the ill ſide of things. This is the common way of ſpeaking of a Man who hath offended us: Wherefore our Timæus was not capable of Writing well the Hiſtory of Agathocles. The remembrance of the Injury received, was always before his Eyes, and cryed aloud for Vengeance in the Writer's Ears. I Leave it to you to determine whether an Author naturally Satyrical could in theſe Circumſtances preſerve an exact Neutrality betwixt the good and ill Qualities of the Tyrant who had Baniſhed him. Thoſe who are fond of railing, if they would give themſelves the trouble of a narrow Search, would find that their Satyrical Humour is the product of a Cholerick and Preſumptuous Temper; which as it excites ſtrong deſires of Vengeance, even on account of the leaſt Offence, 'tis reaſonable to conclude that Timæus was tranſported by a violent Paſſion to revenge himſelf on Agathocles. For which reaſon he ought not to have attempted his Life, as being aſſur'd that if he medled with it he could not avoid violating the Laws of Hiſtory. The Modeſteſt and moſt Moderate may diſtruſt their own Virtue, when deſcribing the Actions of a Perſecutor. They have juſt reaſon to fear that the Injuries of Baniſhment ſhould excite thoſe Clouds, which would obſcure the true ſtate of Affairs, and hinder the diſcharging the part of an Hiſtorian. But ſuch a Man as Timæus had yet much ſtronger reaſons to be apprehenſive of the Illuſions of Reſentment. I am of Opinion that there are ſome Men ſo reaſonable, that they would rather chooſe not to write, than to meddle with Hiſtory when their Circumſtances expoſe them to theſe Miſrepreſentations: They would not content themſelves with calming the firſt Commotions of the Mind, and ſtaying till Time had cloſed up the Wound; but they would for ever renounce Writing on a Subject which would infallibly renew it afreſh. But Timæus was not of this Temper, and I dare engage that the ſole deſire of Revenging himſelf on Agathocles, would have determined him to take Pen in hand to Compoſe a Hiſtory of Sicily. Every Age can furniſh us with Examples of Authors, who had never thought of writing Hiſtories, if perſonal Reſentments and modiſh Paſſions had not put them upon it. They have not Patience to ſtay till their Paſſion is over, which is the leaſt they ought to do (b); but they write from the firſt hour of their Reſolution. Their Hiſtories are very Partial, and they add their Gloſſes to every Action which they relate. One would be apt to take them for Qualificators of the Inquiſition: They give Sentence on every Fact; they pronounce it Weak and Baſe, &c. Why do they Impoſe their judgment on the Reader? They ought to confine themſelves to a Narration which only contains the Principles or the Premiſſes of Reaſoning; the Reader ſhould draw

(a) Compare with this the Remark D of the Article Remond.

(b) They ſhould Remember this fine Precept, Ne frena animo permitte calenti, Da ſpatium tenuemque moram: male cuncta miniſtrat Impetus. Stat. Theb. lib. 10. v. 697. But perhaps they are afraid they ſhould not be able to write, if they ſhould ſtay till their Minds are compoſed. Perhaps they fancy that Anger gives 'em a Talent which they had not before. Si natura negat facit indignatio verſum, ſaid Juvenal in his 1ſt Satyr v. 79.

TIMESIUS, (A) a very conſiderable Man in Clazomenæ the Place of his Birth, where he acquired ſo great an Authority, that he did whatever he pleaſed; and as the Publick was obliged to him for ſeveral Services, he did not believe that the Credit which he had gained could render him Odious. But he was ſatisfyed of the contrary, when paſſing by a place where ſome little Children were playing at Cockals, he Liſtned to their Talk. One of them was buſied in making a little Bone fly out of a Hole; which ſeeming difficult, moſt of the Children believed he would not be able to do it: But he who was to Play being of another Opinion, I wiſh to God, ſaid he, that I could make Timeſius's Brains fly out, as I will do this Bone. After this Timeſius never doubted but that he was extremely Hated in the City, and when he came home, he related the Story to his Wife, whom he ordered to follow him, and left Clazomenæ †. I am willing to believe that it was after this time that he endeavoured to conduct a Colony into Thrace, and re-build Abdera. We have ſeen elſewhere || that his deſign did not ſucceed, and that he was driven out by the Thracians before he had ſet his new Eſtabliſhment in order. The Teians who in the 59th Olympiad abandoned their City, ſucceeded much better in the deſign of building Abdera. They a retained ſuch a vaſt reſpect for him, that they Honoured him as a Hero. He experienced the truth of the Anſwer, which the Oracle gave, when Conſulted concerning the conduct of a Colony, which was; Look for ſwarms of Bees, and you will find abundance of Waſps *. The Misfortune was, that inſtead of ejecting the Drones like the Bees in Virgil ‡, the Waſps conſtrained him to quit his Enterprize.

TIMOLEON, General of the Corinthians, was one of the greateſt Men of Antient Greece. He might have been called the Plague of Tyrants; for his ſtrongeſt Inclination and greateſt Occupation was to Puniſh the Uſurpers of Sovereign Power, and to maintain or re-eſtabliſh Liberty. If he fought againſt Tyrants, it was not to rid himſelf of Competitors, and to ſeize the unlawful Authority of which he would deprive them. We find but too many ſuch Enemies of Uſurpers. All his Actions Centred in the Peoples good. His Zeal for the Intereſt of his Country carried him ſo far, that he cauſed his Eldeſt Brother Timophanes (A) to be Killed, after all his Remonſtrances and Requeſts had proved inſufficient to his Converſion. We ought to know that Timophanes ſet up for a Tyrant at Corinth. His Death was followed by ſeveral Conſequences very diſadvantageous to Timoleon. (B) Some were pleaſed to reproach him as an Execrable Parricide, and his Mother loaded him with Curſes on draw the Concluſion, whether it tends to Cenſure or to Commend. It is therefore ſufficient to repreſent Facts: Such Sentences ought to be as well husbanded as Maxims: They ought not to ſhew themſelves in Relievo; but ought to be Incorporated with the Narrative, as hath been already ſaid (c). There are ſeveral Modern Hiſtories, in whoſe Titles the word Critical is wanting; for the Authors of them do nothing elſe but Criticiſe, and ſometimes engage in a regular Diſpute. They relate and refute Alternately.

(A) Timeſius.] I call him by the name which Herodotus has given him, and not Timeſias, as Plutarch names him. I have elſewhere obſerved, that a very Learned Man (d) calls him Tiſamenes, and by an apparent Typographical fault (e) hath made him drive out the Thracians. Another ſaith that he was expell'd by the Teians; I have alſo (f) Corrected this Miſtake.

(A) He cauſed his Elder Brother Timophanes to be Killed.] He did not ſtain his own Hands with his Brother's Blood; but he was one of the real Authors of his Murther, which was in the following manner. Timoleon ſtrictly engaged himſelf with Æſchylus, Timophanes's Wife's Brother, and (a) Satyrus a Diviner. They all three went to the Tyrant, and indeavoured to perſuade him the laſt time to reſtore Liberty to the People. He at firſt Laughed at them, and afterwards grew very much enraged: Whereupon Timoleon ſtepped aſide, covered his Face and wept whilſt the other two Kill'd his Brother (b). This is Plutarch's Relation, which generally ſpeaking agrees with that of Cornelius Nepos (c). But Diodorus Siculus (d) makes Timoleon himſelf kill his Brother. There is a difference obſervable betwixt Cornelius Nepos and Plutarch. The firſt ſays that Timoleon joyned with his Brother-in-Law; the other tells us that 'twas with Timophanes's Brother-in-Law. To be more plain, this Aſſociate, according to Plutarch, was (e) Timophanes's Wife's Brother; but according to Cornelius Nepos, he was the Husband of Timophanes's and Timoleon's Siſter. (f) Per aruſpicem communemque affinem cui ſoror ex iiſdem parentibus nata, nupta erat, fratrem tyrannum interficiendum curavit. Mr. Moreri is here guilty of an Error. Timoleon ſays he conſented that Satyrus, who had Eſpouſed their Siſter ſhould kill this Upſtart Tyrant. He cites Diodorus Siculus, and Plutarch: the firſt doth not mention this and the other doth not ſay that Satyrus was any way Related to Timoleon; but only calls him a Diviner, and makes the other Accomplice to be Æſchylus, Timophanes's Wife's Brother. It is not impoſſible that this Æſchylus might have Married Timophanes's Siſter, and yet be Timophanes's Wife's Brother: And on this foot both Authors would be in the right, tho' each would have Omitted a part of his Relation to that Family.

(B) Reproach him as an execrable Parricide, and his Mother loaded him with Curſes on this account.] Let us take this Story in all its Extent as told by Plutarch (g). Thoſe who could not bear a ſtate of Popular Liberty, or who had been long accuſtomed to be near the perſons of Great Men and to make their Court, ſeemed indeed to Rejoyce at the Tyrant's Death; but were continually Reproaching Timoleon as having committed a Parricide Execrable and Abominable to the Gods and Men: which they continued ſo long till they touched him with a Regret for having committed the Fact: Being beſides Informed that his Mother bore it very Impatiently, continually uttering the moſt terrible Expreſſions and horrible Maledictions, he went to her, in order to Conſolate her: But ordering the Door to be ſhut on him ſhe would never ſee him. Thus born down by accumulated Grief, he ſuddainly reſolved to Starve himſelf: But his Friends who did not abandon him in this Deſperate Melancholy, continued to urge him by Perſuaſions and earneſt Intreaties, till they forced him to Eat. After this he reſolved to quit all publick Employs and retire to a Country Solitude: Where he at firſt led ſo rigorous a Life, that he not only abſtained from ever coming to the City, but avoided all Company, and ſpent his time only in wandring in the moſt remote and ſolitary Places he could imagine, and conſumed himſelf with Melancholy——(h) His Regret for the Death of his Brother, or his being aſhamed to appear before his Mother ſo broke his Spirits and diſheartned him, that for twenty Years after he did not in the leaſt intermeddle in Publick Affairs. Cornelius Nepos (i) ſays much the ſame thing: But Diodorus Siculus doth not in the leaſt mention this long Melancholy of Timoleon, and on the contrary gives us to underſtand (k) that the ſpace betwixt the Death of Timophanes, and the Syracuſan Expedition was very ſmall. He ſaith that as ſoon as Timoleon had Killed his Brother a great Tumult aroſe; one part of the Inhabitants demanded Juſtice on the Murtherer, and the other requeſted † Plutarch. præc. reip. ger. p. 812.

---

|| In the Article Abdera.

a Herodot. lib. 1. cap. 168.

* Plut. de amicor. multitud. pag. 95.

‡ Ignavum fucos pecus a præſepibus arcent. Virgil. Georg. lib. 4. v. 168.

(c) In the Remark C of the Article Theon.

(d) In the Article Abdera, Remark K.

(e) Ibid. Remark B.

(f) Ibid. Remark C.

(a) So Theopompus calls him; but Ephorus and Timæus call him Orthagoras. Plut. ubi infra.

(b) Taken from Plutarch in the Life of Timoleon, pag. 237.

(c) Cornel. Nepos in vita Timoleontis.

(d) Diodor. Siculus lib. 16. c. 66.

(e) Ἀδελφὸν ὄντα τῆς Τιμοφάνους γυναικός. Fratrem uxoris Timophanis. Plut. ib.

(f) Cornel. Nepos ib.

(g) Plutarch in the Life of Timoleon pag. 235.

(h) Id. ib.

(i) Hic præclariſſimum ejus factum non pari modo probatum eſt ab omnibus. Nonnulli enim læſam ab eo pietatem putabant, & invidia laudem virtutis obterebant. Mater vero poſt id factum, neque domum ad ſe filium admiſit, neque aſpexit, quin eum fratricidam impiumque deteſtans compellaret. Quibus rebus ille adeo eſt commotus, ut nonnunquam vitæ finem facere voluerit, atque ex ingratorum hominum conſpectu morte decedere. Cornel. Nepos ubi ſupra.

(k) Diodorus Siculus ubi ſupra.

on this account. All which threw him into a profound Melancholy, he deſign'd to end his Life, and when his Friends had engaged him to alter his Reſolution, he renounced all Publick Affairs, and retir'd to an obſcure Solitude, where he paſſed Twenty Years, as in all probability he had done his whole Life, if an opportunity had not offered of ſetting Syracuſa at Liberty. This City Oppreſſed by the Tyranny of Dionyſius, had recourſe to the Corinthians. They reſolved to aſſiſt them, and gave Timoleon the Command of the Troops deſign'd for that Service. The beginning of that Voyage was accompanied with very favourable Omens (C), but he met with many difficulties in order to Land in Sicily; for Icetes Tyrant of Leontium, who had pretended to joyn with the Corinthians in the Recovery of the Liberty of Syracuſa, but at the bottom aimed at Dethroning Dionyſius, only in order to render himſelf Maſter of that City, had joyned with the Carthaginians, and had poſſeſſed all the Paſſes. He kept Dionyſius cloſe Beſieged in the Fortreſs of Syracuſa, having already taken the reſt of the Town. Notwithſtanding all which Timoleon by Stratagem Landed in Sicily, defeated Icetes's Army, and in a ſmall time became Maſter of the Citadel of Syracuſa, and afterwards of the whole City; * Dionyſius the Tyrant having ſurrendred the former, together with his Perſon into his Hands. He cauſed the Fortreſs to be raſed, in order to aſcertain the Inhabitants of the duration of that Liberty which he came to recover, and after having ſucceſsfully Re-eſtabliſhed their Affairs on a good Foot, he applyed himſelf to the Reſtoration of their Priſtine Liberty to all the Cities of Sicily, who then groaned under the heavy Oppreſſion of Tyrants. He forced Icetes to renounce his Alliance with the Carthaginians, and to content himſelf with living in a private Capacity at Leontium. He obliged Leptines Tyrant of Apollonia to Surrender himſelf, and ſent him to Corinth. He obtained a ſignal Victory over the Carthaginians. He puniſhed (D) the Treachery of Icetes who made new Alliances with them. He Defeated Mamercus Tyrant of Catana, and purſued him to Meſſina,

* He was ſent to Corinth: but it cannot be ſaid, as 'tis in Moreri, that he was ſent thither, after he had been Overcome by Timoleon; for Dionyſius did not oppoſe Timoleon.

ſted thoſe Elogies ſhould be beſtowed on him, which were due to the Deſtroyers of Tyrants. This Diſpute was referred to the deciſion of the Senate; the Cauſe was Pleaded on both ſides by the Counſel for and againſt Timoleon: The Judges had not pronounced their Sentence, when the Syracuſan Ambaſſadors requeſted the Aſſiſtance of the Corinthians. The Senate ordered that Timoleon ſhould be ſent to Syracuſa, and that if he diſcharged that Truſt well, he ſhould be treated as the Killer of a Tyrant; but if the contrary, as a Fratricide. I ſhall once more cite Plutarch, to evince by an unqueſtionable Example, how much the beſt Hiſtorians can wreſt the moſt Eſſential Characters of an Action. Diodorus Siculus aſſures us that the Corinthian Senate did not entruſt Timoleon with the Command of their Forces, otherwiſe than under a diſagreeable Condition, viz. That his Criminal Proceſs ſhould end in his Abſolution or Condemnation, according as he ſhould behave himſelf Well or Ill in that Poſt. But Plutarch's Relation is quite different: He ſays that Timoleon was abſolutely Elected General, without any reſtraining Conditions by the Voice of the People, after which (l) Teleclides then a Perſon of the greateſt Reputation and Authority in the Corinthian Affairs, riſing up made a Speech to Timoleon, in which he exhorted him to behave himſelf like a good Man and brave Commander in this Charge: For, ſaid he, if you do this we ſhall pronounce Sentence on your ſide that you have Killed a Tyrant; but if you do not diſcharge this Truſt well, we ſhall Condemn you for Murthering your Brother. Theſe are no trifling Variations, but eſſential Differences, and according to the Latins toto cœlo diverſi. We cannot poſſibly excuſe both theſe Hiſtorians; one of them is certainly very much in Fault.

(l) Plutarch ubi ſupra pag. 238, 239.

(C) With very favourable Omens.] I ſhall not mention the happy Preſage at Delphi: Moreri hath already done it. But the others were: (m) When the Fleet was ready, and the Forces compleatly Equipped for their departure, the Prieſteſſes of Proſerpina declared, that in their Sleep the laſt Night the Goddeſſes Ceres and Proſerpina appeared to them in a Viſion, in traveling Dreſſes, and told them they would go with Timoleon to Sicily. On this account the Corinthians fitted out a Gally called the Ceres and Proſerpina.—— (n) When Timoleon was on the Main-Sea, having the Wind a-Stearn, in the Night he thought that the Heaven was ſuddainly Cleft, and from that open place, a large quantity of bright and viſible Fire expanded it ſelf over his Ship, appearing like ſuch a burning Torch as is uſual in the Myſterious Ceremonies. This Torch guided and accompanied all his Voyage, and at laſt Diſſolved and Vaniſhed at a place near the Coaſt of Italy, where the Pilots had conſulted to Land. The Diviners being asked the Signification of this Preſage, anſwered that this Miraculous Apparition confirmed the Dream of the Prieſteſſes of Ceres, and that the Goddeſſes favouring the Enterpriſe had ſent this Light from Heaven to guide them; the Iſland of Sicily being Sacred and Dedicated to Proſerpina, the Rape on which Goddeſs was alſo ſaid to be there Committed, and the Government of it offered to her as a Nuptial Gift on her Wedding Day. This relation of Plutarch is not very Accurate; but nevertheleſs all Circumſtances duly weighed, it clearly enough appears that this was only a Dream, and that there was no ſuch thing as a real Conducting Fire which went before the Fleet. So that this cannot reaſonably be compared with the Pillar of Fire which went before the Iſraelites, or with the Star which Conducted the Wiſe-Men to Bethlehem.

(m) Id. ib.

(n) Id. ib. pag. 239.

(D) He puniſhed the Treachery of Icetes.] Timoleon's bright Glory was by this ſomewhat Eccliplſed; he puſhed his Vengeance too far, and exerted a cruelty againſt thoſe Perſons whom he had much better have exempted from Puniſhment. Plutarch's Words are, (a) "Shortly after Timoleon brought his Army before Leontium, took Icetes, his Son Eupolemus and "the General of his Horſe alive, they being ſurrendred to him by the Souldiers themſelves. Icetes "and his Son were puniſhed with Death, and Euthydemus tho' a Valiant Man and brave Warriour, "could not obtain a more Merciful Fate, being "only charged with ſome injurious Reflections on the "Corinthians. For in a ſpeech he made to the Leontins on occaſion of the Corinthians firſt Arrival "in Sicily to War againſt the Tyrants, amongſt "other things he ſaid that they ought not to be "ſurprized at, or afraid, if

(1) "A few Corinthian Women were abroad.

"Thus moſt Men are more offended at Words than "Pernicious Actions; they more patiently ſuffer "a real Damage than a Reflection, and pardon "their Enemies, when they Revenge themſelves by "way of Arms, becauſe they can do no leſs: But "provoking expreſſions ſeem to proceed from too "great an Exceſs of Hatred and Malignity. After "this Timoleon returning to Syracuſa, the Syracuſans publickly Tryed, Condemned and Executed "the Wives and Daughters of Icetes and his Son. "This ſeems the harſheſt Action of Timoleon's Life: "for if he had pleaſed he could eaſily have ſaved "the Lives of theſe unhappy Women: But he "was not ſollicitous about it, he intirely abandoned them to the Fury of the Citizens, who were "reſolved to Revenge on them the Injuries done "to Dion after he had expelled the Tyrant Dionyſius: For Icetes had cauſed Dion's Wife, Arete, "his Siſter Ariſtomacha, and his Son who was but "a Child, to be drowned in the Sea, as we have related in the Life of Dion." Plutarch's reflection on Humane Weakneſs in pardoning ill Actions eaſier than injurious Words, is very judicious.

(a) Plutarchus ubi ſupra pag. 252.

(1) 'Tis the begining of Euripides's Medea.

(E) The

Meſſina, where the Tyrant Hippo Protected him. He Beſieged that place, and had the Satisfaction to get (E) both the Tyrants into his Hands. So many Glorious Actions did not inſpire him with the leaſt Inclination to Rule: But on the contrary he Rejoyced that there were ſome Perſons in Syracuſa (F) who dared publickly accuſe him. He ſpent the reſt of his Life in (G) this City, where he received all the Marks of Gratitude which he deſerved, he really enjoyed all the advantages (H) of Ruling, without hazarding the Glorious Character of Acting for no other end than the Freedom of the People, and without expoſing himſelf to the Envy of the Republicans. His Funeral Solemnities were very Magnificent. I muſt not forget his acknowledging all his great Exploits to be the work (I) of the Gods, a favour of Fortune, a Happineſs, and not aſcribing them to his own Conduct

(E) The Satisfaction to get both the Tyrants into his Hands.] They both came to an unhappy end. Hippo finding Meſſina beſieged by Sea and Land, put himſelf on Board a Ship in order to eſcape: (b) But he was taken in his Flight; and the Meſſinians having got him into their poſſeſſion, cauſed the Children to come from the School to the Theatre to ſee one of the fineſt Spectacles in the World, which was the Puniſhment of a Tyrant, who was publickly whipt and afterwards Executed. Mamercus ſurrendred himſelf to Timoleon to be Tryed by the Syracuſans, on condition that he ſhould not be his accuſer. He was brought to Syracuſa, where he endeavoured to pronounce a ſtudied Oration which he had compoſed for that end: But finding the People made a great Noiſe and expreſſed themſelves in loud and violent acclamations againſt the hearing of him, and conſequently that it was not very likely that they ſhould pardon him, run croſs the Theatre and ſtruck his Head with all his Force againſt one of the ſteps on which the People ſit, deſigning by daſhing out his Brains at once to diſpatch himſelf the quickeſt Way: But he was not ſo Happy, for he was taken up yet alive and Executed in the ſame manner that Robbers uſually were. We muſt not forget that Mamercus was a Poet and had irritated the Syracuſans by his poinant Satyrs. But let us hear Plutarch on this Head: (c) “The common People of Syracuſa very hardly bore the “railleries of the Tyrants: For Mamercus amongſt “others valuing himſelf extremely on his Talent in “Verſe and Tragedy, having in ſome Engagements gotten ſome Advantage over the ſtrangers “which were in the Syracuſan Pay, ſo gloried in his “Succeſs that when he dedicated the Bucklers taken “from them to the Temple of the Gods, he added the “following galling Verſes in raillery and contempt “of the Conquered.

“ Theſe Shields, with Purple, Gold and Ivory wrought, “ Were taken by us that with Poor ones Fought.

This Poet is not ſo much as mentioned by Voſſius. Hieronymo Raguſa the Jeſuit doth not forget him in his Elogies of the Ancient Sicilians; (d) but inſtead of referring us to Plutarch he only cites Giovanni Vintimiglia.

(F) He rejoyced that ſome Perſons in Syracuſa publickly accuſed him.] This ſeems to me the moſt ſhining part of his Life: Plutarch's Words without any retrenchment run thus: (e) But ſeeing not only all the Larks of that Tufted ſort which the Latins call Caſſitæ, muſt, as Simonides proverbially ſpeaks, have a Creſt growing on their Heads; ſo in all Cities governed by Democracy, there are detractors. Two of theſe at Syracuſa, who were accuſtomed to Harangue the People, engaged againſt Timoleon, one of them Laphyſtius, and the other Demænetus. The former of theſe once ſummoning Timoleon to appear before the People to anſwer to a Crime of which he pretended to Convict him, the Citizens mutinyed, and would not have him obey the Citation. But he appeaſed them by remonſtrating to them that he had run through ſo many Fatigues, and expoſed himſelf to ſo many Dangers, to the end that every Syracuſan might freely enjoy the utmoſt privilege of the Laws. Another time Demænetus in a full Aſſembly of the People having reprehended and cenſured ſeveral of his Actions during the time he was a General, Timoleon made no Anſwer to it; but only told the People that he heartily thanked the Gods that they had granted what he had ſo often petitioned for in his Prayers: Which was, that he might once ſee the Syracuſans in perfect Freedom and Liberty to ſay whatever they pleaſed. Thoſe who had rather Read the Latin Narrative of Cornelius Nepos, will find it in the (a) Margin.

(G) He Spent the reſt of his Life in Syracuſa.] Nothing is more extraordinary than a Great Man, who knows how to continue in the quiet Enjoyment of his Glory without aſpiring after new Dignities. Moſt of thoſe who arrive to a great height of Reputation and an extenſive Authority, imprudently aim at Mounting yet higher, and expoſe themſelves through the Oppoſition of ſome mortifying Obſtacles, more eſpecially in popular States. Timoleon was wiſer: (b) He never return'd to Corinth, but obliged his Wife and Children to come to him; he never intermedled with thoſe troubles which afterwards aroſe mong the Greeks, nor expoſed himſelf to the envy of his Fellow Citizens, which moſt Governours and Generals have raiſed by their inſatiable deſire of Honours and Authority. He ſpent the remainder of his Days in Sicily, in the happy enjoyment of the Fruits of his own Labours, the greateſt of which was to ſee ſo many Cities, and ſo many Thouſands of Men owe their Happineſs to him.

(H) He really enjoyed all the Advantage of ruling.] If we may believe Cornelius Nepos, Timoleon's conduct was that of a very Wiſe Man; he voluntarily quitted all Authority and by this means acquired a power more laſting than that of Kings. (c) Quum tantis eſſet opibus, ut etiam invitis imperare poſſet, tantum autem haberet amorem omnium Siculorum, ut nullo recuſante regnum obtineret: maluit ſe diligi, quam metui. Itaque, cùm primum potuit, imperium depoſuit, & privatus Syracuſis, quod reliquum vitæ fuit, vixit. Neque vero id imperitè fecit. Nam quod ceteri reges imperio potuerunt, hic benevolentiâ tenuit. Nullus honos huic defuit: neque poſteà Syracuſis res ulla geſta eſt publica, de quâ prius ſit decretum, quàm Timoleontis ſententia cognita. Nullius unquam conſilium non modo antelatum, ſed ne comparatum quidem eſt. Neque id magis benevolentiâ factum eſt, quàm prudentiâ. This Hiſtorian adds, that tho' Timoleon became Blind he did not deſiſt from the Service of the Publick. He cauſed himſelf to be carried in a Litter to the Aſſembly, and gave his Opinion without ſtirring out of it: Which more at large related by Plutarch is as follows. (d) “It was very agreeable to obſerve “how highly he was Honoured in their Councils. “For if the Affair in debate was of ſmall conſequence, “they diſpatched it without him: But if it were “of importance and required mature Deliberation, “they called him to their aſſiſtance: He was carried “in his Litter a-croſs the publick place to the “Theatre where the Aſſembly of the People was “held, which he alſo entred in his Litter: The “People unanimouſly ſaluted him, and he returned “their Salutations; and after the Praiſes and Benedictions of the whole Aſſembly were beſtowed “on him, the Buſineſs in debate was propoſed to him, “and he gave his Opinion; which being approved by “the Voices and Suffrages of the People, his Servants carried him back a-croſs the Theatre in “his Litter, and the Citizens received him with “Clapping of Hands and loud Acclamations of Joy. “After which the Council proceeded to the remainder of their Publick affairs.

(I) Acknowledging all his great Exploits to be the Work of the Gods.] (e) “And in his Familiar Letters written to his Friends at Corinth, as well as “in ſeveral Speeches made to the People of Syracuſa, he often repeated, that he rendred Thanks

“ to

(a) Hic quidem Laphyſtius [illegible] vadimonium [illegible] imponere, [illegible] complures convenissent, qui procacitatem hominis manibus coercere conarentur: Timoleon oravit omnes, ne id facerent, namque id ut Laphyſtio ceteriſque liceret, ſe maximos labores ſummaque adiiſſe pericula. Hanc enim ſpeciem libertatis eſſe, ſi omnibus, quod quiſque vellet, legibus experiri liceret. Idem, cùm quidam Laphyſtii ſimilis, nomine Demænetus in concione populi de rebus geſtis ejus detrahere cœpiſſet, ac nonnulla inveheretur in Timoleonta: dixit, nunc demum ſe voti eſſe damnatum: nam*que hac à diis immortalibus ſemper precatum, ut talem libertatem reſtituerint Syracuſanis, in qua cuivis liceret, de quo vellet, impune dicere.* Cornel. Nepos in vita Timoleontis. (b) Plut. ubi ſupra (c) Cornel. Nepos ubi ſupra p. m. 344. (d) Plutarch. ibid. pag. 254. (e) Ibid. pag. 253.

(b) Id. ib.

(c) Id. ib. pag. 251.

(d) Mamercus quoque poetarum Siculorum gloria effulſit. Ex Joanne Vigintimillio in Tabula Poetarum Siculorum. Hier. Raguza in elogiis Siculorum pag. 178.

(e) Plutarchus ubi ſupra pag. 253.

duct *. This gives me an opportunity to make some Extracts concerning what the Ancients

* Taken from Plutarch in the Life of Timoleon.

“ to God for that being willing to save “ and deliver Sicily from Slavery, he had been “ graciously pleased to make use of him to that “ end. And having Built an Oratory in his “ House he dedicated it to Fortune and there “ sacrificed to her, and which is more, he con“ secrated and dedicated all his House to Holy For“ tune.” Cornelius Nepos relates the same in the following Words. (f) Nihil unquam neque insolens, neque gloriosum, ex ore ejus exiit: qui quidem, cum suas laudes audiret prædicari, numquam aliud dixit, quam se in ea re maxime diis gratias agere atque habere, quod, cum Siciliam recreare constituissent, tum se potissimum ducem esse voluissent. Nihil enim rerum humanarum sine deorum numine geri putabat. Itaque suæ domi sacellum Automatias constituerat, idque sanctissime colebat.

This Chappel Built to Fortune in his House, and the strict Worship which he paid to this Divinity, give us Reason to believe that he spoke as he thought, when he attributed his Happy success not to his own prudence, but to the favourable influences of Heaven. It is indeed very probable that all those who made these acknowledgments, had not always in View the Duties of Religion, I mean the Gratitude with which we ought to attribute our Happiness to Divine Providence, and not to our own Wisdom. Several talk'd in this manner only for a Political end; they would appease the envious (g) or Create a greater confidence in their friends. But let us hear a Man, who knew how to make very judicious reflections. The great Obstacle, saith he, (h), which the Founders of Sects and Empires have met with in their designs, is the Natural aversion of Men to be Subject to one another, to acknowledge a Superiority of Merit and knowledge. It hath always been a certain way to exclude a Person from all manner of Pre-eminence, to discover that he pretends to it or believes that he deserves it. And therefore all great Men have with the utmost Care avoided ever mentioning the extraordinary Qualities which they had received from the Liberal Hand of Nature. They have been always so circumspect that tho' every Body else admired them, they only seemed Ignorant of them.——(i) But the most successful artifice they ever made use of to secure themselves against the Pride and Natural independence of Men was, when these Illustrious impostors have permitted the People to ascribe whatever was excellent in them, to a certain secret communication with the Gods: By means of this Address whatever was great in them ceased to offend any Person, because it was no longer looked on as any part of a Personal Merit, which Men Naturally don't care to acknowledge, but only as an effect of Fortune, Chance or the particular Favour of Heaven which extends to the worthy, and unworthy, and does not debase the one or the other.—— (k) It is on this ground that Cicero when obliged to particularize all his Conduct against Catiline in order to Justify one accused of being concerned in his conspiracy; this great Orator very well knowing that a recital so Glorious for him, would in his own Mouth rather alienate than engage the minds of his Auditors; to render this recital less Odious he very artfully in the Entrance of his Oration ascribes all his great Actions on this occasion to a Divine inspiration. (l) O ye Gods, begins he, immortal Gods, (for to you I will render what is yours, nor can I indeed presume so much on my Capacity, as to believe that I alone could ever prevent such numerous Accidents, which were so great, so different and so unexpected, and that in a time when the State was in the most turbulent tempestuous Condition) Yes, it is you who inflamed my Soul with an ardent Zeal for the Preservation of my Country; you who have taken me from all other Cares that I might apply my self solely to the Happy prosperity of the Republick: 'Tis you lastly who have darted such a refulgent light into my Mind before obnubilated by Error and Ignorance.

If these Reflections of the Abbot de St. Real are judicious, those of Mr. Costar are not less so, when he is enquiring into the Reasons which engaged Sylla to assume the Sir-name of Happy. He utterly dislikes Mr. Girac's Opinion who saith: (l) “ It was indeed “ a Moderation in so illustrious a Commander to “ ascribe to Fortune so many signal Victories, which “ he might have attributed to his own Virtue. Ne“ vertheless this was the Effect of a consummated “ Prudence, and a refined Policy, which would yield “ to the envy which ordinarily attends those who “ raise themselves above others. The Ancient “ Greeks always feared the Goddess Nemesis, who “ diverted her self with abating and destroying “ those too highly exalted.” Mons. Costar's Reflections on this place of his Adversary are as follows, (m) As for Sylla it was not the Defeat of Mithridates, which engaged him to assume the Name of Happy. (x) After having Oppressed all the Enemies of his Greatness and Person, and becoming Dictator by dint of his own Authority, he made an ample recital of all the Felicities which had attended both his Military and Civil Actions: After which he declared that in Acknowledgment of those Favours which Heaven had plentifully showred on him, he had resolved for the Future to add to his other Names the Title of Happy. (z) That the choice of this Sir-Name proceeded from his Moderation and to appease envy, as Mr. Girac believes, is what I cannot persuade my self. I rather conjecture that it was to give a greater Assurance to those of his Party and to strike terrour into his Enemies. In effect, we are more apprehensive of the Fortune of a great Man than of his Virtue, because the latter is but Humane, and we are pretty nearly acquainted with its Measure, and limited Cause; whereas Fortune is a Divine cause whose force is unlimited. And on this account we more readily rely on the protection of the Fortunate, than of the Virtuous; and the Lord Chancellor Bacon is of Opinion that Cæsar had not so effectually encouraged the affrighted Pilot in the Tempest, if he had said, be not afraid, thou carriest Cæsar and his Virtue, as he did by saying, Fear nothing, thou carriest Cæsar and his Fortune. It seems more reasonable to me to ascribe this Action of Sylla to both Motives, that alledged by Girac as well as that Advanced by Costar; for it is certain that in the Pagan times they very much feared the Goddess Nemesis, and firmly believed her an Enemy to the Proud. And pursuant to this some were persuaded that the General Timotheus's reverse of Fortune was owing to his refusing to acknowledge his Obligations to his Stars. Let us hearken to Plutarch on this Head. (a) Timotheus an Athenian the Son of Conon, whose Malicious Enemies attributed all his great Actions to the Favour of Fortune, to express which they represented in Pictures, Fortune bringing Towns to him already taken in her Net, whilst he was asleep; very warmly resented it, and was very much incensed against them on that Account, urging that they robbed him of his just Glory: On which occasion once on his return from a successful War after having given an account to the People, and publickly recited the particulars of his Expedition, he added, Athenian Lords, I can assure you that Fortune has no Hand in what I have related. The Gods were so enraged at this ridiculous ambition, that after this he never was successful; they thwarted him in all his Actions to that Degree, that he became so Odious to the people that he was Banished Athens. To this may be added what Plutarch tells us of Sylla's affecting the contrary. (b) “ Sylla not only patiently acqui“ esced to those who cried him up as a particular “ Favourite of Fortune, but backed their Opinion “ by his own Practice, always Glorying in the “ especial Favour of the Gods, and ascribing the “ Glory of all his Actions to Fortune (c), either “ out of a sort of vain Glory, or a real Imagina“ tion that the Gods conducted him in all his affairs; “ for he informs us in his Commentaries that of the “ enterprises which were best consulted, those which “ he warmly hazarded according as opportunity “ offered, tho' directly opposite to his former Re“ solutions in Council, were they which succeeded “ best. Besides when he said that he was rather Born “ for Fortune than War, he seems to acknowledge “ his successes rather due to Fortune than to his own “ Valour. In short on all occasions he seems intire“ ly to submit to and own his dependance on For“ tune; he always spoke of it as a singular Favour “ of the Gods that he preserved such an Union and “ Amity with his Father in Law Metellus, a person “ in equal Authority with himself.” See in Plutarch (d) several other actions extracted from the Commentaries of this Roman General; and observe that he supposes that his ascribing all his Glorious exploits to Fortune, might proceed from a bragging Humour (e). Εἴτε κόμπῳ χρώμενος, εἴθ' οὕτως ἔχων τῇ δόξῃ πρὸς τὸ θεῖον, either, saith he, Sylla talked thus out of a vain glorious Bravado, or from the profound Veneration he had for Providence. Tho' indeed the Justness of this disjunction doth not clearly appear to me; for if this great Captain had not really believed that God had Favoured him, I own

(m) Costar Apologie, pag. 257, 258.

(x) Plut. in Sylla.

(z) Page 255.

(a) Plutarch in the Life of Sylla. pag. 454.

(b) Id. ib.

(c) And yet Sallust tells us, Atque illi (Sullæ) felicissimo omnium ante civilem victoriam nunquam super industriam fortuna fuit, multique dubitavere fortior an felicior esset. Sallust. de bello Jugurth. p. m. 362.

(d) Plut. in Sylla pag. 454.

(e) Ibid.

Antients (K) have ſaid on the Influence of Fortune, and particularly to refute thoſe who affirm that there is no other cauſe of Proſperity than Prudence, nor of own he might yet have ſaid ſo on ſome Political Accounts already mentioned. But I cannot believe that Vanity or Vain Glory could induce him to it, ſince he was not one of thoſe worthleſs Wretches, who ground their Bravadoes on Extravagancies, and are ſufficiently ſatisfyed if they do but talk. Such a Man as he could not be Ignorant that whatever Victories he aſcrib'd to Fortune as the cauſe, he in proportion diminiſhed the Merit of his Courage and Conduct. How is it then poſſible that theſe acknowledgments ſhould proceed from a Principle of Vanity, ſuppoſing him Guilty of a Lie? In my Opinion the Hiſtorian ought to have joyned theſe two particulars, which he hath ſeparated. He ought to have ſaid that Sylla being perſuaded that Providence had Accumulated theſe ſurprizing Bleſſings on him, vainly affected to Boaſt of it: For as all things are liable to be Abuſed, 'tis certain that if on the one ſide Wiſe Men Humble themſelves, by acknowledging that they are only the Inſtruments of Providence; on the other hand Haughty Men Pride themſelves not a little, that God hath been pleaſed to make uſe of them for the Execution of his Deſigns. They look upon themſelves as the Darling Favourites of Heaven, and thence believe they are above all the reſt of Mankind. Conſider that St. Paul himſelf had occaſion for a ſtrong preventive againſt Pride, on account of the ſublime Excellence of thoſe Revelations, which God had by a very particular Privilege Communicated to him. But to attempt ſomething in Defence of Plutarch: Thoſe Perſons who believe nothing of what they ſay concerning Fortune, may nevertheleſs out of Vanity and Preſumption aſcribe their greateſt Actions to her. They Govern themſelves by the general Vogue; and imagine that thoſe who believe God to the Sovereign Director of all things, will admire and firmly rely on his Favourites. A Modern Author pretends that a certain Bravade (f) of Tiberius (g) was "rather Political than Vain. For it "is of great Importance for a Prince to be Fortunate "or thought ſo. And this paſſes among his Subjects "for Merit and Virtue; (3) beſides they believe their "Felicity depends on his. So Tiberius who perfectly "underſtood all the Maxims of Government, loudly "Proclaims the proſperity of his Houſe, declaring "that ſuch a Fortunate Incident had never hapned to "a Roman Prince. By which he deſign'd to render "himſelf more Venerable to the People, engaging "them to value him as the Favourite of the Gods. "(4).

(K) What the Ancients have ſaid on the influence of Fortune.] If I would here collect all that hath been ſaid on this Subject, I ſhould be obliged to undertake a Book on that Head alone. I only propoſe to gather a few Ears in this ſpatious Field. I dare averr that no Opinion is better Eſtabliſh'd in the Writings of the Ancients than that Induſtry and Prudence have a much leſs Share in Humane Events, than good or ill Fortune, or in other Words, an unforeſeen concourſe or Diſpoſition of circumſtances not in the leaſt dependant on us. Sunt in his quidem virtutis opera magna, ſed majora Fortunæ, ſaith Pliny (h) after having related ſeveral events: But who doubts that he might have ſaid the ſame of an Infinite Number of other particular occurrences? He lays down the Maxim tho' ſomewhat more obſcurely a little farther. Plurimum refert in quæ cujuſque virtus tempora inciderit. Tho' Quintus Curtius ſhould not (i) formally tell us that Alexander's Conqueſts were leſs owing to Valour than Fortune; yet without that his Hiſtory alone ſays as much. Cornelius Nepos affirms that in the Diviſion of Military Glory Fortune has always the greateſt Share: (k) Jure ſuo nonnulla ab Imperatore miles, plurima vero Fortuna vindicat, ſeque his plus valuiſſe quam ducis prudentiam verè poteſt prædicare. Mr. Spanheim (l) conjectures that theſe Words are only an Imitation of the following: (m) Nam bellicas laudes ſolent quidam extenuare verbis, eaſque detrahere ducibus, communicare cum militibus,———maximam verò partem quaſi ſuo jure Fortuna ſibi vindicat, & quidquid eſt proſpere geſtum id pene omne ducit ſuum. Cicero who ſpoke this to Cæſar, had no Reaſon to fear that he ſhould be offended at it; for no Perſon ever aſcribed more to Fortune than he. You may ſee in Mr. Spanheim (n) what Livy, Diodorus Siculus and others have acknowledged concerning this Supreme power, either in expreſs Words, or by declaring that we ought not to judge of perſonal Merit by the ſucceſs of Actions, which is intirely ſubject to Fortune, but by the means that are uſed. Scarce any of the Poets has ſpoken ſo nervouſly on this Subject as Juvenal.

Si (a) fortuna volet, fies de rhetore conſul;
Si volet hæc eadem, fies de conſule rhetor.
Ventidius quid enim? quid Tullius? anne aliud quam
Sidus & occulti miranda potentia fati?

The Opinion of Princes being in this place of greater force than that of a Poet; I ſhall cite the Anſwer of Dionyſius the younger: (b) Wherefore did not you keep the Kingdom which your Father left you, was he asked by Philip, King of Macedonia: Don't be ſurpriz'd at that, reply'd he, for my Father, who bequeathed to me all his other Goods, did not leave me the Fortune by which he acquired them.

I might here ſubjoin the Opinions of ſeveral Moderns; but ſhall content my ſelf with a paſſage in Montagne. (c) "It is ordinarily obſervable in humane Actions, that Fortune, in order to convince "us of her powerful influence over all things, takes "pleaſure in abating our preſumption; and not "being able to make Fools wiſe, ſhe makes them "happy in Spite of Virtue: And is moſt inclined to favour thoſe executions, where the Deſign "is more eſpecially her own. Hence we daily ſee "the moſt Ignorant Wretches put an end to the "greateſt both publick and private Enterpriſes. And "as Sirannez the Perſian anſwered thoſe, who were "very much ſurpriſed at the ill Succeſs of his Affairs, conſidering that his deſigns were ſo well "laid; That he alone was Maſter of his deſigns, "but the ſucceſs was owing to Fortune. So they "may Anſwer in the ſame manner, but in a different ſenſe. The greateſt part of the buſineſs of "the World is generally done by it ſelf.

"Fata viam inveniunt.

"The Iſſue frequently Authoriſes a very trifling "Conduct. Our Interpoſition is only a thing of "courſe, and more commonly in conſideration of "Cuſtom and Example than Reaſon. When I "have been aſtoniſhed at the greatneſs of an Action, and by enquiry of thoſe who have accompliſhed it, have been led to the Motives and Management; I have found their Counſels very common, and the moſt vulgar and cuſtomary are perhaps alſo the moſt Secure and beſt Adapted to "Practice, not for ſhew———Good luck and ill "luck are in my Opinion two great Powers. "'Tis ridiculous to think that Humane Prudence "is ſufficient to fill up Fortune's Roll. And his enterprize is very vain, who would preſume to graſp "both the cauſes and conſequences and carry the "Progreſs of Actions in his Hand: And above all "it's vain in Martial Councils."

Nowithſtanding all thoſe Authorities, 'tis certain that ſeveral good Writers have maintained that every one is the Author of his own Fortune, and is either miſerable or happy as he acts imprudently or wiſely. (d) Plautus has laid down this Maxim.

LY. Ne opprobra, pater. Multa eveniunt homini quæ volt quæ nevolt.
PH. Mentire edepol, gnate: atque id nunc facis haud
conſuetudine,
Nam ſapiens quidem pol ipſe fingit fortunam ſibi.
Eo ne multa quæ nevolt eveniunt niſi fictor malu'ſt.

The ſame Maxim is to be found in the following Words cited from an Ancient Poet in a diſcourſe attributed to (e) Salluſt. Res docuit id verum eſſe quod in carminibus Appius ait fabrum eſſe ſuæ quemque Fortunæ. Cornelius Nepos, alledges it twice in his Life of Pomponius Atticus. (f) Itaque hic fecit ut vere dictum videatur SUI CUIQUE MORES FINGUNT FORTUNAM——(g) quantum poterimus rerum exemplis lectores docebimus, ſicut ſupra ſignificavimus, SUOS CUIQUE MORES PLERUMQUE CONCILIARE FORTUNAM. Thoſe who exclaimed againſt Theophraſtus for praiſing the Maxim, that Fortune and not Wiſdom the Directreſs of Life, have come very near to Plautus's Aſſertion. And what ſhall we ſay of Juvenal, who after having in his 7th Satyr preached up the Omnipotence of Fate and Stars, tells us in his 10th Satyr that all depends on Prudence?

Nullum (i) numen abeſt, ſi ſit prudentia: nos te Nos facimus, fortuna, deam cæloque locamus.

Some

(f) The Wife of Druſus, the Son of Tiberius being delivered of two Boys, Tiberius ſaid in a full Senate that ſince the beginning of the Empire no Man of his rank had been bleſſed with the like good Fortune. Tacit. ann. lib. 2.

(g) Amelot de la Houſſaye in his Tiberius ch. 83. p. 106. edit. 1683. in 4.

(3) Quibuſdam fortuna pro virtutibus fuit. Hiſt. 2.

(4) Cœleſtis favor, & quædam inclinatio numinum oſtenderetur. Hiſt. 4.

(h) Plinius lib. 7. cap. 28. pag. m. 49.

(i) Fatendum eſt quum plurimum virtuti debuerit plus debuiſſe fortunæ quam ſolus omnium mortalium in poteſtate habuit. Q. Curtius lib. 10. c. 5. n. 35.

(k) Cornel. Nepos in Thraſybulo p. m. 156.

(l) Spanheim, in Juliani Cæſares pag. 428.

(m) Cicero orat. pro Marcello.

(n) Spanheim ibid. & p. 255.

(a) Juven. Sat. 7. v. 197. He ſays the 16 Satyr v. 4. Plus enim fati valet hora benigni Quam ſi nos Veneris commendet epiſtola Marti, Et Samia genitrix quæ delectatur arena.

(b) Ælian. div. hiſt. lib. 12. c. 60.

(c) Montagne, Eſſais liv. 3. ch. 8. p. m. 267, 268.

(d) Plautus in Trinummo act. 2. ſc. 2. v. 80. pag. 43.

(e) Salluſtius Oratio 1. ad Cæſarem de ordinanda republica.

(f) Cornel. Nepos in vita Pomp. Attici pag. m. 394.

(g) Id. ib. pag. 398, 399.

(h) Vexatur idem Theophraſtus & libris & ſcholis omnium philoſophorum, quod in Calliſthene ſuo laudaret illam ſententiam, Vitam regit fortuna non ſapientia. Cicero Tuſcul. l. 5. fol. 273.

(i) Juven. ſat. 10. v. 365. See alſo ſat. 14. v. 315.

of Adverſity than Imprudence. But it ought not to be expected that I ſhould attempt ſome Moderns have approved Plautus's Opinion. Galeotto de gli Oddi pronounced an Oration on this Subject (a) in the Academy of the Inſenſati at Perugia. Reignier declares for the ſame Opinion in one of his Satyrs:

Nous (b) ſommes du bonheur de nous même artiſans,
Et fabriquons nos jours ou faſcheux ou plaiſans.
La fortune eſt à nous, & n'eſt mauvaiſe ou bonne,
Que ſelon qu'on la forme ou bien qu'on ſe la donne.

Mr. de Calliere, in his Book of the Fortune of Perſons of Quality maintains: (c) That our good or ill Fortune depends on our Conduct. He declares in his Epiſtle Dedicatory, That he deſigns to deſtroy the Idols of Fortune, to demoliſh her Temples and Altars, and to force away the ſounder part of her Adorers. Tho' Mr. de Silhon (d) ſays that Fortune is a Fantome which Religion hath aboliſh'd, the invention of which is not uſeleſs ſince the unhappy and imprudent attribute to that, the cauſes of their Miſery, and the effects of their ill Conduct; Yet I don't reckon him one of the Approvers of Plautus's Maxim; for he did not believe, that in order to ſucceed in our Undertakings, it is ſufficient to comport our ſelves according to the Rules of Prudence, and to have a good cauſe. He owns a Proſperity and Adverſity, diſpenſed by the Providence of God, without any neceſſary regard to our Intentions and Meaſures. (e) A very good Book appeared not long ſince Intituled, Reflections on what is called Good or Ill Luck in Lotteries. The Author is undoubtedly of Plautus's Opinion; or to ſpeak plainer, he doth not believe that the fortunate Lots run for, or againſt certain perſons with a ſort of diſtinction. It doth not then amount to a general Opinion, that there is ſome unknown thing which favours or croſſes certain Perſons without any regard to their good or ill Qualities, or the meaſures they take to attain their ends. But we are obliged to own that the greateſt number of Suffrages is for the affirmative; but becauſe that is no manner of Proof of the truth of an Opinion, I wiſh that ſome able Pen would examine this Subject to the bottom, and diſcuſs what could be ſaid on each ſide; in the mean time I will offer a few Reflections.

I. I obſerve firſt of all, that we ought not to believe that the Pagans repreſented Fortune, as a Being which blindly diſtributed Good and Evil, without knowing what ſhe did. They called her Blind (f) I own; but that was not in order to deprive her abſolutely of all Knowledge; it was only to ſignifie that ſhe did not act with a juſt diſcernment. So we ſay a Prince is blind in the diſtribution of his Favours, when he beſtows and takes them away by caprice, and without any reſpect to the merit of his Subjects. We don't infer from thence, that he doth Good or Ill to ſuch and ſuch, without knowing that he gives or takes away the reſpective place from the reſpective perſon. We only mean, that he doth not govern himſelf according to the rules of Reaſon and Juſtice, and that he is determined raſhly by the inſtigation of his inconſtant Paſſions. This is the Idea which the Heathens formed of Fortune. They all, except a few Philoſophers, were perſuaded that the Divine Nature was a ſort of Being divided into ſeveral individuals. They attributed to every God a large ſhare of Power, but did not exempt them from the Imperfections of our Nature; they believ'd them ſuſceptible of Anger and Jealouſie, litterally ſpeaking. They made no ſcruple (g) to ſay in their moſt ſerious Writings, that a Maligne and ſecret Envy of the Gods oppoſed their Proſperity. They more particularly attributed to the God which they call'd Fortune, a Conduct which was inconſtant, raſh and capricious to the laſt degree. It was for this Reaſon that an infinite number of Temples were built to her, and that ſhe was worſhipped in a particular manner, in order to prevent the ill effects of her Caprices. They did not then believe that ſhe wanted either Eyes or Ears, or Thought. Thoſe Philoſophers who acknowledged the Unity of the Deity, called that Divine Being Fortune, when they conſider'd it only as a Diſtributer of Good and Evil things, which did not conform it ſelf in the leaſt to what we call Merit, Conſtancy, or Reaſon. But the wiſeſt of them always owned that it never acted contrary to abſolute Juſtice, or without Reaſons which it very well knew to be perfectly good. At the bottom God himſelf ſays, That his Ways are not our Ways and his Thoughts are not our Thoughts.

II. My ſecond Reflection is, that under the Goſpel Diſpenſation we attribute, to earthly Goods, all the defects which the Pagans aſcribed to Fortune. We ſay that the poſſeſſion of them is no ſign of Merit, that they are very fleeting and periſhable, and that they miſerably deceive thoſe who rely on them, &c. 'Tis eaſie to obſerve the reaſon of this diverſity of Language. The Chriſtians acknowlege only one God, and by that word they underſtand a Nature ſovereignly perfect, which governs all things, and diſpenſes all Events; but the Pagans laviſhed the Name of God into an infinity of limited Beings, imperfect, full of Faults and vicious Paſſions. For which reaſon they made no ſcruple to charge on them the Irregularities of Humane Life, when they could not diſcover the cauſe of them amongſt the free actions of Men. The Chriſtians on the contrary, charge on the Creature whateve they find of Infirmity in the World; they caſt on the Benefit what the Pagans blamed in the Benefactor.

III. I ſay in the third place, That it can ſcarce be deny'd, that there are fortunate and unfortunate People, that is, according to the Pagan Language, that there are ſome People to whom Fortune plays a hundred Tricks in the whole courſe of their Affairs, whilſt there are others, out of whoſe way ſhe removes all Obſtacles, and takes care to hand to them a hundred favourable diſpoſitions. Merchandiſe, Gaming, and the Court have always furniſhed Examples of both theſe ſorts; but nothing ſo manifeſtly confirms this as the Military Art. There Fortune rules more than any where elſe: Our Timoleon (h), Alexander, Sylla, Cæſar, and ſeveral other Antient Warriors, have acknowledged it in the moſt authentick Manner: The Moderns ſubſcribe to it as well in their Memoirs as Converſations. I have been told by a Perſon of Quality, that the Conſtable Vrangel aſſured him, that nothing was more raſh than to hazard a Battle, which was liable to be loſt by a thouſand unforeſeen Accidents; tho' at the ſame time the moſt exact meaſures have been taken, which the moſt conſummate Military prudence can ſuggeſt. Girard, Secretary to the Duke of Epernon, in his long life of that famous Favourite, diſplays ſo many happy Events independant on precaution, that it is hardly poſſible to deny the Truth of the popular Opinion concerning the Fortune of ſome People. After this, ſays the Hiſtorian, we ought not to wonder if the Duke never complained of Fortune on account of the Adverſity of his Old age: On the contrary, ſome of his Friends once talking on that Subject, he told them that he ſhould be very ungrateful for the Benefits with which Fortune had conſtantly favour'd him for above 60 Years, if he ſhould be diſcontented, that ſhe would leave him for the ſmall time he had yet to live; that he had ſcarce obſerv'd an intire life, tho' much ſhorter than his, that had been always proſperous; and that in the inconſtant ſtate of Humane Affairs, it was no ſmall advantage that his Diſgraces were reſerv'd to a time, when he was hardly capable of reliſhing Proſperity.

IV. My fourth Reflection is, that it ſeems utterly falſe, that what we call good Fortune depends only on Prudence; and that what we name ill Fortune, is only the reſult of Imprudence. I freely own that the Aſſertion of the Author above cited (i) doth not appear to me well grounded. It is falſe that the winning Gameſter always plays better than the Loſer; it is falſe that the enriched Merchant ſurpaſſes thoſe who do not grow rich in the knowledge of Trade, Induſtry, or circumſpection. No perſon is ignorant, that in thoſe Games which depend on Chance, an inviſible Somewhat prevails, which contributes more to Loſs or Gain, than whatever depends on the Skill of the Gameſters. There are days on which he wins large Sums: This is not owing to his playing with greater application, or with a more ignorant Gameſter; but he has a good Game, the very Cards are dealt him which he wants, or the Dice turn according to his Wiſhes. On other days he experiences the clean contrary. Nay, even before he riſes from his Seat, he finds the turn of Fortune; he is lucky in the beginning, and unlucky at the end; he loſes the laſt Hour, more than he won in all the fore-going. There are Men who immediately after they begin to play, find their good or ill luck, and perceiving that the Day does not favour them, they are ſo wiſe as not to puſh any farther, and give out in good time. Not that they diſtruſt tempt to do it by inconteſtable Reaſons. It is not poſſible in a Subject of this nature to lead the Reader to Evidence, or Demonſtration. We find it

---

(a) See Don Secondo Lancelotti in the Book intituled, [illegible] pag. 237.

(b) Reignier, Satyr 13. [illegible] 96 verse.

(c) To the Title of the firſt Chapter.

(d) Silhon Miniſtre d'Etat. Book 1. ch. 9. at the beginning.

(e) Printed at Amſterdam 1695.

(f) Spargitque manu munera cæca pejora fovens. Seneca.

(g) Hinc ve invidia Deum, ve fato rapidiſſimus procurrentis imperii curſus parumper Gallorum Senonum incurſione ſupprimitur. Florus lib. 1. c. 13. Indignantium voces exaudiebantur tam viridem & in flore ætatis fortunæque invidia Deum ereptum eſſe rebus humanis Alexandrum.) Q. Curtius lib. 10. c. 5.

(h) Rex juſſum confidere felicitati ſuæ remiſit, ſibi enim ad alia gloriam concedere Deos. Q. Curtius lib. 7. c. 7. Rex fortuna ſua & conſiliis ſuorum ſe uſurum eſſe reſpondet, nam & fortunam cui confidat & conſilium ſuadentium ne quid temere & audacter faciat ſequuturum. Id. ib. c. 9.

(i) Mr. de Cailliere in his Book de la fortune des gens de qualité.

moſt

aſſiſt either their Skill and Capacity, but what doth not depend on them. This inviſible ſomewhat doth not ſo apparently reign in Trade; 'tis nevertheleſs certain, that Perſons of the meaneſt capacity, and of very little judgment, by buying and ſelling thoſe Bargains, which a Man of clear parts and great Experience would by no means venture on, frequently gain immenſe Sums. It may paſs for a general rule, that thoſe who acquire the moſt Riches by Trade, are not either more intelligent, or more laborious than ſeveral others whoſe Gain is very moderate: the latter are not therefore ſuch Favourites of Fortune as the former. There is then a good or Ill Fortune in Humane life, independent on Prudence or Imprudence; which I do not believe the Author I am at preſent examining, will deny ſo far as relates to Play and Commerce: He only means the Fortune which People of Quality may make in the ſervice of their Prince. If he only intended to Counſel a Gentleman to chuſe the prudent part, I have nothing to ſay againſt his Opinion; but he goes much farther, he would perſuade us, that thoſe who ſucceed, owe their advancement to their wiſe Conduct only, and that thoſe who do not make their Fortune, ought to impute it to their imprudence. This is what I cannot indeed believe: I'll allow him to call wiſe Conduct, whatever a Man does to conform himſelf to the preſent Circumſtances, as to be a Braggadocio, a Debauchee, an Impertinent, a Buffoon, &c. whenever it is the certain way to pleaſe; or to pretend to be mad, (a) when without it he cannot eſcape imminent dangers. Let every thing paſs for Imprudence, which is contrary to the Humour of preſent times; as to be a very honeſt Man in a depraved Court, where there is no buſineſs for any but Raſcals. Notwithſtanding all this, I cannot help maintaining my Aſſertion, that the riſe and fall of great Men are not commonly meer effects of Prudence or Imprudence. Chance, fortuitous Accidents and Fortune juſtly claim a large ſhare. Un-foreſeen occurrences in which we have no hand, diſcover the way, and oblige us to redouble our pace. A Caprice, a Jealouſie, which it was impoſſible to fore-ſee ſtops your ſpeedy courſe, and throws you entirely out of the way.

V. The better to refute Mr. de Cailliere, I add a fifth Reflection. We ought not to pretend that all Events being connected to a determinate Cauſe, Fortune is a Chimerical Being, and ſo that we are fortunate or unfortunate, only becauſe we fore-ſee, or do not fore-ſee the reſult of natural Cauſes and Effects. To evince the nullity of this Objection, I will ſuppoſe a Fact not only very poſſible, but which may be proved by ſome Examples. A Prince cauſes a Town to be beſieged in the middle of Winter: If the Rains, Snow, or the Ice come upon him, he is not likely to take it; but if the Weather be dry, and but moderately cold, he will take it. He meets with ſeveral ſucceſſive Weeks of fine Weather; no Rain, no Snow interrupts his Deſign, the Siege advances daily, and the Town capitulates before the Froſt. Another Prince beſieges a place in the heat of Summer, and is likely to take it if the Seaſon keeps its ordinary courſe; but if it rains hard for ſeveral days, if the Nights are cold, if this occaſion ſeveral Diſtempers in the Camp, he will not be able to take it. The Seaſon turns utterly irregular, the Summer is cold and rainy, the Trenches advance but ſlowly, the Army grows weaker daily by the growing Diſeaſes which the rigorous Weather has produced, he finds himſelf forced to raiſe the Siege. Can you poſſibly aſcribe the happy Succeſs of the firſt Siege to Prudence, and charge the ill ſucceſs of the ſecond on Imprudence? This would be to aſſert two Abſurdities; for in the firſt Siege the fine Weather could not be fore-ſeen any more than the ill Weather could reaſonably be feared in the latter; and conſequently the firſt was not prudently, nor the ſecond imprudently attempted. It is then purely owing to good Fortune that the firſt ſucceeded, as it is to be aſcribed to ill luck that the latter did not. I know wery well that if Men were but ſufficiently clear-ſighted to fore-ſee Rain and fair Weather, 'twould have been an act of Imprudence to have formed the latter Siege. The ill ſucceſs would then be a great fault, and not an unfortunate Blow; but humane Capacity doth not extend ſo far, and if we do not know that the Summer will prove rainy, it is not owing to Imprudence. There are a hundred fortuitous Accidents, which we can no more fore-ſee than theſe, and they are equally capable of diſappointing the beſt concerted military Enterprizes. Now as ſome Generals are much more frequently perplexed with theſe croſs Occurrences than others, we may reaſonably acquieſce in the popular Opinion, that there are fortunate and unfortunate Generals. But we muſt not hence infer, that the fortunate always, or almoſt always equal the unfortunate in Prudence and Valour: No, let us on the contrary believe that the latter ſometimes ſurpaſs the former in both Virtues. (b) Forſtnerus, in his Notes on a Paſſage of Tacitus, (c) wherein that Hiſtorian aſſures us, that all Humane Affairs are a continual Game, will afford you ſeveral illuſtrious Examples, which prove that the beſt concerted Deſigns in this World are confounded by an inviſible force, which Humane Prudence cannot ward off: This is particularly obſervable in the (‖) Conclaves; and as for thoſe who pretend that every Perſon is the Author of his own Fortune, you may find them ſolidly and amply Confuted in a Book (d) of Don Lancelotti.

Obſerve carefully what I am about to ſay. Sovereigns do commonly judge of things by the Succeſs. A General ſtands very well in their favour who ſucceeds in a military Undertaking; but if the contrary happens, he forfeits their Eſteem and Amity. Tho' they are perfectly ſenſible that the Victory was barely a piece of good Fortune, and the Defeat was not in the leaſt owing to the General's fault, yet they are always more diſpoſed to prefer the Victor than the vanquiſh'd; for to be fortunate is a recommendatory Character which ſtrongly ſways them, as on the other ſide, an unfortunate, tho' ſhining merit is but a diſguſting quality. Since then Battels are loſt and won by unfore-ſeen Accidents, it is clear that Misfortunes happen independently on Imprudence, and that ſome make their Fortune independently on Prudence. A lucky Raſhneſs, you'll tell me, doth not deſerve the name of Temerity; for ſince it has ſucceeded, 'tis a ſign that it was proper to produce its wiſh'd effect. Wherein doth Prudence conſiſt? Is it not in making uſe of ſufficient means to accompliſh our Deſigns? My anſwer is, that to act prudently, 'tis requiſite we be ſure that the means we uſe are proportioned to the end. A raſh fortunate Man is unacquainted with this proportion; he is hurried on by an impetuous fury; there appears nothing in his Conduct which is not clearly viſible in that of the raſh unfortunate: wherefore the ſucceſs of the enterprize ought not to be aſcrib'd to Prudence but Fortune. Obſerve alſo further, that 'tis no manner of imprudence not to be precaution'd againſt thoſe things which Humane Capacity cannot diſcover, and of conſequence if a Perſon doth not ſucceed at Court, or if he loſes the Fortune he has already made, 'tis not always to be attributed to Imprudence. Is it poſſible for him to diſcover all the Caprices, Diſguſts and Jealouſies that are produced in the Mind of a Monarch, or of his Miſtreſſes or Favourites? Can he diſcover all the Grimaces of falſe Brethren, diſſipate their Calumnies, and prevent their Lies and falſe Reports which wound without threatning? What follows, was ſaid by a great Miniſter, whoſe Genius was not leſs than his Authority. (e) In the Poſt which you are in, ſaid Cardinal Richelieu to a (f) Captain of the Guards, 'tis eaſie for you to know your Friends and your Enemies. No diſguiſe can conceal them from your diſcernment; but with reſpect to mine, in the poſt which I ſupply, I cannot penetrate into their Sentiments, they all ſpeak to me in the ſame Language. They all make the ſame earneſt Court to me, and thoſe who would ruin me, give me the ſame Marks of Amity, as thoſe who are ſincerely and firmly in my Intereſts. Reignier, in the Satyr already cited, tells us:

La (g) faveur eſt bizarre a traitter indocile,
Sans arreſt, inconſtante & d'humeur difficile,
Avecq' diſcretion il la faut careſſer,
L'un la perd bien ſouvent pour la trop embraſſer,
Ou pour s'y fier trop, l'autre par inſolence,
Ou pour avoir trop peu ou trop de violence,
Our pour ſe la promettre ou ſe la dénier,
En fin c'eſt un caprice eſtrange à manier,
Son amour eſt fragile & ſe rompt comme verre,
Et fait aux plus matois donner du nez en terre.

VI. Let

(a) Inſipiens eſto quumtempus poſtulat, aut res: Stultitiam ſimulare loco, prudentia ſumma eſt. Cato diſt. 19. lib. 2. David, & Brutus and many others have been the better for ſuch a conduct. See. Cornelius à Lapide in lib. 1. Regum cap. 21.

(b) We may ſay of ſeveral Great Captains what Florus ſaid of Sertorius l. 3. c. 22. ſummæ quidem ſed calamitoſæ virtutis.

(c) Mihi quanto plura recentium ſeu veterum volvo, tanto magis ludibria rerum mortalium cunctis in negotiis obſervantur. Tacit. annal. lib. 3. c. 18.

‖ See the Melanges of Vigneul Marville vol. 2. p. 230, 231. of the Dutch Edition.

(d) It is intituled Chi ſindovina e Savio, overo la prudenza humana fallaciſſima: The Author refutes it in the 3. diſinganno of the 2d. Book, the Oration of Galeotto de gli Oddi.

(e) Hiſtoire du Marechal de Fabert. pag. 53.

(f) Mr. de Fabert, who was Marechal de France.

(g) Regnier ubi ſupra fol. 96.

moſt only ſtrong Probabilities in it; and it is no ſmall Objection againſt the Opinion

VI. Let us then take it for granted and certain, which is my ſixth Reflection, That the Prudence of a Man is not the ſole nor even the principal cauſe of his Fortune. There are ſome Fortunate People, whoſe Conduct is very Imprudent: And others Unfortunate, tho' their Conduct be prudent. The difficulty is to know what this Fortune is which favours ſome People and perſecutes others, without regard to their Merit or the Meaſures they take. To recur to God is not to remove the difficulty; for acknowledging him the general cauſe of all things, it may be asked whether he manages immediately and by particular acts of his Will, all thoſe unforeſeen Occurrences which cauſe the deſigns of one Man to ſucceed, and confound the Enterpriſes of another. If you anſwer in the Affirmative you will bring all the Philoſophers, eſpecially the Carteſians *on your back, who will maintain that you Attribute ſuch a Conduct to the Supreme Being as is Inconſiſtent with an Infinite Agent. He ought, they will tell you, to make a ſmall number of general Laws, and by this means produce an Infinity of Events, without recurring every Moment to Exceptions, or particular Acts, muſt needs be Miracles, tho' we ſhould not call them ſo, by reaſon they would be ſo frequent (g). You may indeed reply to them, that the Occurrences favourable to the Fortunate, and thoſe that are contrary to the Unfortunate, are a natural conſequence of thoſe general Laws; but they will not eaſily believe you. Can you perſuade me that Chance can produce what I am about to ſay? Let one Hundred Tickets well Sealed be ranged in order on a Table: Let ten of them be Blanks, and ten of them marked with the Letter A, and write a Sentence on all the reſt; then let ten Men be called in, and one of them directed to take up the 1, the 15, the 21, the 37, the 44, the 68, the 80, the 83, the 90, and the 99. Let another be ordered to take the 3, the 6, the 13, the 25, the 50, the 73, the 88, the 89, the 95, and the 100. Tell me, if the firſt of theſe Men draws the ten Blank Tickets, and the other the ten marked A, can you ever hope to perſuade me that this was the reſult of the general Laws of the Communication of Motion? Should not even you your ſelf believe that by a premeditated Deſign theſe 20 Tickets were placed in ſuch an order that one ten ſhould fall intirely into the Hands of the firſt, and the other into the Hands of the ſecond Perſon? Put the caſe that certain Gameſters had always, (h) or almoſt always the beſt Cards, or in general that certain Perſons are almoſt always favoured with Fortunate Occurrences; this would require ſomething beſides the natural reſult of the Communication of Motion, this muſt proceed from a particular Direction and Determination; and I ſhould rather chooſe with ſeveral Learned Men to deny the diſtinction of good or ill Fortune, than to explain it only by the general Laws of Nature. But we argue here on the Hypotheſis that there are Fortunate and Unfortunate People.

Cannot we recur to Occaſional Cauſes, I mean, to the deſires of ſome Created Spirits? Platoniſm would eaſily reliſh ſuch an Explication; but it is beaten off by ſtrong Arguments, according to the Idea which Theology gives us of the Angelical Nature. It teaches us that the Angels are ſome of them perfectly Good, and others extremely Wicked, and both endowed with an almoſt unlimited Knowledge, under the general Direction of God. This Idea cannot eaſily be adjuſted to the particular train of Fortunate or Unfortunate Occurrences. But confining our ſelves to Hypotheſes purely Philoſophical, we ſhall be better able to anſwer theſe Objections, if we ſuppoſe for Example, that the Inviſible (i) Spirits are more different from one another, than Men are amongſt themſelves; that there is a great Subordination amongſt theſe Spirits; that there are ſome who are this Moment Good and the next Evil, now in a good Humour, and preſently in an ill Humour; that they are Fantaſtick, Inconſtant, Jealous, Envious, that they thwart one another, that their Power is very much Limited in certain particulars, and that if they can perform a thing which is very difficult, it does not hence follow that they accompliſh a thing which is much eaſier. Don't we ſee Country-women Ignorant of the Alphabet, who know a thouſand excellent Medicinal Secrets? Archimedes who made ſuch admirable Engines, Could he Sow? Could he Spin? However it be, there is no Fortune without the direction of an Intelligent Cauſe, and I cannot be ſufficiently ſurprized that a Learned Man ſhould venture to ſay, (k) That Fortune was neither God nor Nature, Underſtanding, or Reaſon, but a certain Natural and Irrational Impulſe. (a) Licet diſputatum ſit, fortunam à naturâ prorſus eſſe aliam, non defuere tamen, qui aſſererent, etſi à naturæ moribus, inſtitutiſque longe plurimum fortuna abhorreat, ſitque ipſa inconſtans admodum, & lubrica, non continua, non eadem ubique, non eorundem ſemper effectrix, non ſimileis ſibi retinens progreſſiones, non diſcriminata ſervans tempora, denique improvida ſit, repentina, inordinata, temeraria, quæ ſive mores, ſive impulſus, neque naturæ conveniant, neque rationi, quarum utriuſque propria ſit conſtantia, maturitas, ordo, menſura, regula, diſcriminatio item rerum, temporum effectuum, non inquam defuere, fortunam qui aſſerant, irrationalem quandam eſſe naturam, nec aliud illam denique, quam naturæ impetum quendam, hoc eſt ratione carentem agitationem naturæ quandam, in iis ipſis videlicet, quæ nec rationi ſubjiciantur naturæ, neque hominum electionibus, ac conſiliis. Impetum itaque eſſe eam cenſent, quod ſit abſque ratione, ferature que ſuopte tantum agitatu, atque impulſu, quodque ubi impetus dominetur, illic rationi nullus omnino relictus ſit locus, nulla prorſus authoritas, aut penſitatio earum quæ geruntur rerum. Perhaps you would gladly be informed for what reaſons he deprives God and Nature of the acts of Fortune: Wherefore ſince his Works are ſomewhat ſcarce, I will inſert what he ſaith on this Head. Fortunam non eſſe Deum, is the Title of one of his Chapters: Here is Chapter it ſelf: (b) Quomodo enim Deus erit, ſi hæc tam ſæpe, tam inconſiderate, tam etiam inique, atque ex inopinato extollit ignavos, locupletat immeritos, vexat atque affligit inſontes, bonos in calamitatem adducit, ac ſervitutem, pravos ſtatuit in ſolio, liberat à periculis perverſos, moderatos & honeſtos viros laboribus, periculis, ærumnis, ac miſeriis, conficit? Tyrannorum hæc ſunt non Dei, cujus eſt ſumma bonitas, abſoluta juſtitia, rectiſſimum judicium, æquiſſima rerum omnium diſpenſatio. The following Chapter entituled Fortunam non eſſe naturam, amongſt other things contains the following words: (c) Naturam quoque non eſſe eam hæc ipſa liquido ſatis docent, quod fortuna ipſa quidem inconſtans eſt, inordinata, varia, repentina, incerta: Contra vero quid natura ipſa ordinatius, conſtantius, certius? cujus is eſt ordo, ea lex, ac regula, ut non niſi certis, conſtitutiſque è principiis ſuo tempore, ſuis progreſſionibus, menſuriſque tum univerſa proveniant, tum etiam ſingula quarumcunque ipſa rerum, effectionum, operum author eſt & cauſa. Pergit natura ordine ſuo, graditur ſuis paſſibus, diſpenſat actiones ſuas cum temporibus, viribus, opibuſque ſuis utitur cum menſura, & penſo, non fluitat, non nutat, ſtabilis eſt in officio ſuo, ſibique ſemper conſtat. See the Margin (†).

VII. My laſt Reflection is, that Men uſually are exceſſive in their Murmurs againſt Fortune; for very often they impute to her what they ought to charge on their own Imprudence. Homer was not Ignorant of this Fault, for he introduces the Gods complaining of this Injuſtice of Men. Read theſe words in Aulus Gellius: (d) Propterea negat (Chryſippus) oportere ferri audirique homines aut nequam aut ignavos & nocentes & audaces; qui, cum in culpa & in maleficio revicti ſunt, perfugiunt ad fati neceſſitatem, tamquam in aliquod Fati aſylum; &, quæ peſſime fecerunt, ea non ſuæ temeritati ſed fato eſſe attribuenda dicunt. Primus autem Homerus ſapientiſſimus & antiquiſſimus poetarum dixit in hiſce verſibus:

Ω πόποι (e), οἷον δή νυ θεοὺς βροτοὶ αἰτιόωνται.
Ἐξ ἡμέων γάρ φασὶ κάκ' ἔμμεναι. οἱ δὲ καὶ αὐτοὶ
Σφῇσιν ἀτασθαλίῃσιν ὑπὲρ μόρον ἄλγε' ἔχουσιν.

Theſe three Greek Verſes are taken from the firſt Book of the Odyſſey, and ſignify in Latin.

Papæ, quomodo jam Deos mortales culpant,
Ex nobis enim inquiunt mala eſſe: at illi ipſi
Ob ſua ſcelera præter fatum dolores patiuntur.

La Fontaine hath ingeniouſly deſcribed the ſame Injuſtice; you'll find his Thoughts and ſeveral others in the Book (f) which I quote. But may not one ſay that on ſeveral occaſions, the Perſon whoſe own Fault has rendred him unhappy, has not a

---

(g) There are ſome other Objections taken from Morality, which may be ſeen hereafter in Pontanus's words. See alſo the Reflections ſur le bonheur & malheur des loteries ch. 8. p. 92. & ſeq.

(h) Take notice of the Clauſe; for if there was no Providence, but a Fortuitous Diſtribution of good and evil things, ſome Men would find themſelves in happy Circumſtances, and others not.

(i) I call 'em ſo in Oppoſition to Humane Souls, which are Spirits United to ſenſible Bodies.

(k) Jovianus Pontanus de Fortuna lib. 1. fol. m. 129. & ſeq.

(a) Id. ib. fol. 150. verſo & fol. 151.

(b) Id. ib. fol. 129.

(c) Id. ib.

(†) Jerôme Garimberto who lived in the XVI Century, wrote an Italiana Treatiſe della Fortuna, wherein he maintains in the 10th Chap. of the 1 Book che la fortuna è un impeto naturale privo di ragione ne gli huomini; and in the next Chapter, that a Man is Happy, when he is led by a natural Inſtinct to a thing, which he does not foreſee, and without any ſhew of Reaſon.

(d) Aulus Gellius lib. 6. cap. 2. p. m. 171.

(e) Homer. Odyſſ. lib. 1. v. 32.

(f) Reflexions ſur ce que l'on apelle bonheur & malheur en matiere de loteries chap. 6. pag. 79. & ſeq. See alſo Regnier ubi ſupra fol. 96. verſo.

nion I defend, that Cardinal Richelieu, that prodigious Politician, would not allow any other cauſe of Unhappineſs than Imprudence (L).

TIMOMACHUS, a Celebrated Painter, Born at Byzantium, who Flouriſhed in Julius Cæſar's time. He Painted an Ajax and a Medea, which were purchaſed for Eighty Talents by that Emperour, to be placed in the Temple of Venus *. A Sum not inconſiderable, amounting, according to Father Hardouin's Supputation leſs right to complain of Fortune, than the unfortunate who has punctually diſcharged his Duty? May we not ſay that this Power, which we call Fortune, occaſions Miſery two ways? She ſometimes permits a Man to uſe all the means which Prudence can ſuggeſt, and yet deprives him of the Succeſs he ought to expect; ſhe pleaſes her ſelf with this diſorder to ſhew her Superiority, and the Inſufficiency of our Reaſon and Humane Wiſdom. Sometimes alſo ſhe plunges Men into Miſery, by obſtructing their uſe of the Means which would have preſerved them from it: She confounds their Judgment, and hurries them on to Irreparable Faults. It was probably ſo that ſhe inevitably ruined Pompey. She had declared for Julius Cæſar, and procured him the Triumph, by allowing him to act purſuant to the Dictates of the cleareſt Judgment of a Great Commander, and by Eclipſing in Pompey's Soul thoſe bright Qualities which he poſſeſſed. They did not appear on the Pharſalian Day; Pompey there ſeemed but a weak Man, a poor General. Was not this Eclipſe Supernatural? Was it not the influence of ſome Superior Force, which had deſigned to Raiſe Cæſar on the Ruins of his Competitor? Velleius Paterculus declares that when the Deſtinies are reſolved to deſtroy a Man, they deprive him of Prudence: (g) Sed profecto ineluctabilis fatorum vis cujuſcunque fortunam mutare conſtituit, conſilia corrumpit: . . (h) ſed prævalebant jam fata conſiliis omnemque animi (i) ejus aciem præſtrinxerant. Quippe ita ſe res habet, ut plerumque fortunam mutaturus Deus, conſilia corrumpat, efficiatque, quod miſerrimum eſt, ut quod accidit, id etiam merito accidiſſe videatur, & caſus in culpam tranſeat. This grave Hiſtorian's Opinion was very common amongſt the Pagans; and every Day we uſe this Proverb, quos Jupiter vult perdere dementat. A certain Writer being to prove that it is poſſible for two Authors to utter the ſame Thought without one Borrowing of the other, (k) cites Philip de Commines, who without ever hearing of Paterculus's Name, yet ſaid with him that when God begins to Chaſtize Princes, he firſt leſſens their Senſe, and makes them fly Wiſe Men and ſound Counſels. Here is an excellent Paſſage of Ammianus Marcellinus. (l) Ut ſolent manum injectantibus fatis hebetari ſenſus hominum & obtundi, his illecebris ad meliorum exſpectationem erectus, egreſſuſque Antiochiâ numine Levo ductante, prorſus ire tendebat de fumo, ut proverbium loquitur vetus, ad flammam. A little after ſpeaking of Nemeſis, he tells us that ſhe turns Men out of their Way, and perverts the ends of their Deſigns: (m) Hæc ut regina cauſarum & arbitra rerum ac diſceptatrix, urnam ſortium temperat, accidentium vices alternans: voluntatumque noſtrarum exorſa interdum alio, quam quo contendebant, exitu terminans, multiplices actus permutando convolvit. She doth not always effect this by Error, ſhe ſometimes makes uſe of pure Ignorance. What I call Error is that falſe Judgment which our Mind makes of ſeveral things, in comparing them together, and chooſing the worſt: And I call that Ignorance, when a Man is in ſuch a State, that the neceſſary Ideas do not offer themſelves to his Imagination. Now when he takes the wrong ſide, either by rejecting the proper means actually preſented to his Mind, or by reaſon of the abſence of thoſe Ideas, which ought to have preſented to him thoſe means, he paſſes for Imprudent; but 'tis certain that Imprudence in the firſt caſe is more voluntary than in the ſecond, and conſequently more to be condemned. Several Philoſophers aſſert, that what is called pure Omiſſion is never free. Who ſhou'd dare to maintain that we are Maſters of our Memory, and that to forget certain things which our Conduct requires us to remember, in order to deliberate wiſely, is a Fault? Thoſe who acknowledge the Empire of Fortune, would methinks be unreaſonable, if they ſhou'd ſuppoſe that ſhe doth not Influence our Forgetfulneſs and Omiſſions: For on the contrary, 'tis by them that ſhe frequently occaſions our ill Succeſs. She removes thoſe Ideas which would naturally occur to us, and hinder our commiſſion of thoſe fatal Faults. How many times doth it happen that a Man of Judgment, very much leſſens himſelf by the Anſwers he makes to ſeveral Queſtions propoſed to him? All thoſe to whom he relates the Queſtions, ask why he did not make ſuch an Anſwer? He is immediately convinced that he ſhould have done it. He owns it; he is Surprized that he did not think of it; he proteſts that on all other occaſions this Idea muſt neceſſarily have occurred to him, he finds it ſo eaſy, natural, and exactly conform to common Senſe. Nevertheleſs he is convinced that he did not in the leaſt think of it, and that even the moſt confuſed Notion of it never reached his Thoughts. Why will not you allow him to believe that his Ill Fortune preſided over this Oblivion, and purpoſely directed it? Our Divines don't deny that Providence ſometimes blinds Men, with reſpect to Omiſſions, as well as with regard to actual Judgment. Plutarch wou'd never approve their Doctrine, for he earneſtly recommends to thoſe who read the Poets, the rectifying of all thoſe Paſſages which repreſent the Gods deceiving us, and inſtigating us to Evil. He particularly warns us of theſe (a) Verſes in Euripides, thus Tranſlated by Amyot:

Les Dieux puiſſans trop plus que nous ne ſommes,
Vont abuſant nous autres povres hommes
Par pluſieurs tours de ruſe tromperoſſe.

He is ſo far from owning that a Divine Power influences us to chooſe the wrong way, even when we are not ignorant of the right way, that he would oblige us to aſcribe it to a Brutal Paſſion.

Αἶ (b) αἶ τόδ᾽ ἤδη θεῖον ἀνθρώποις κακὸν,
Ὅταν τις εἰδῇ τἀγαθὸν, χρῆται δὲ μή.

Θηριῶδες μὲν οὖν, καὶ ἄλογον, καὶ οἰκτρὸν, εἰδότα τὸ βέλτιον, ὑπὸ τοῦ χείρονος ἐξ ἀκρασίας καὶ μαλακίας ἄγεσθαι.

Eheu, malum mortalibus divinitus
Venit, ut bonum videant, non utantur tamen:

Immò verò belluinum, non divinum eſt hoc malum, & brutum ac miſerabile, melius videntem intemperantia & mollitie ad deterius rapi. But how ſolid ſoever theſe Reflections of Plutarch are, we ought always to remember that our Theology, and the univerſal Language of all Chriſtians, founded on ſeveral Paſſages of Holy Writ, acknowledge as a certain Doctrine, that the blindneſs of Man, his Raſhneſs, Folly, and Cowardice are frequently the effect of a particular Providence, which inflicts them on him as a Puniſhment; and that his Prudence, his wiſe Anſwers to Queſtions, his firm Reſolution, and his Underſtanding are Favours inſpired by Providence, in order to preſerve and proſper him. This Opinion alſo obtained among the Heathens; for we ſee Manlius declaring to the Roman Citizens, that if the Gods prevented his Ruin, it would not be by deſcending on Earth, but by inſpiring the Romans with a wiſe Reſolution, as they had inſpired him with that Valour and Courage which ſaved the Republick: (c) Benè facitis quòd abominamini: dii prohibebunt hæc: ſed nunquam propter me de cœlo deſcendent: vobis dent mentem oportet, ut prohibeatis: ſicut mihi dederunt armato togatoque, ut vos à barbaris hoſtibus, à ſuperbis defenderem civibus.

I cannot conclude without hinting, that if on the one ſide that is called ill Fortune, which ſometimes is the natural conſequence of Imprudence; on the other ſide we name that good Fortune, which is ſeveral times the reſult of Prudence. We have obſerved ſome Men make uſe of a Conduct ſo raſh, that there appeared no room to doubt but that it would end in a cruel Mortification; they attackt and drove all the World before them, and if the firſt Engagement pronounced them Inconſiderate, the following were only a long train of raſh, irregular and violent Sallies. According to all Rules, theſe Men ſhould have been ſhamefully Cruſhed, and nevertheleſs we have ſeen them Triumph, or at leaſt retire from the Battle without any mark of Diſhonour. This is a great piece of good Fortune, ſay ſome. But it is certain that ſome Stratagem, ſome refined putation to 192000 French Livres. Timomachus had not put the laſt hand to Medea; which procured it a greater Eſteem. Pliny admires this capricious Taſte (A Δ) of Men. There are ſome Epigrams on this Medea in the Anthology, which ‡ Auſonius has Tranſlated into Latin. This was not the Painter's Maſter-Piece; for beſides that his Iphigenia and his Oreſtes were not leſs Eſteemed, his Gorgone was the Picture in which he had diſcovered the greateſt Art (A). I have Collected ſome Miſtakes.

---

* In Veneris Genetricis æde. Plin. l. 35. cap. 11.

(g) Velleius Paterculus lib. 2. c. 57.

(h) Id. ib. c. 118.

(i) That is, of Quintilius Varus.

(k) Ogier, Apologie pour Balzac. p. 34.

(l) Amm. Marcell. l. 14. c. 11. p. m. 55.

(m) Id. ib. pag. 59.

(a) [illegible] Mortalis formis homines ſophiſmatum quod his potentia præſtant in fraudem agunt. Euripides apud Plutarchum de audiendis poetis p. 20. 21.

(b) Id. ib. p. 33. F.

(c) Titus Livius lib. 6. pag. m. 176.

TIPHERNAS (Gregory ‡) a Native || of Tifernum in Italy, deſerves a very good place amongſt the Learned Humaniſts of the XVth Century. He underſtood Greek, and Tranſlated that part of Strabo which Guarinus Veronenſis had left undone. Some tell us that Politian owned the Verſion of Herodian, of which Tiphernas was the real Author; but this is ſcarce Credible a. The manner of his obtaining the (T) Greek Profeſſor's place in the Univerſity of Paris was very particular. His Latin Verſes are to be found in β the Deliciæ Poetarum Italorum. He ſometimes bought his own Proviſions, but he diſputed the Price in ſuch a ſtudied Style, that the Peaſants did not like it (Z).

TYPOT

‡ Epigr. 155, 156.

‡ And not George, as Moreri has it.

|| Leand. Albertus in deſcript. Ital. pag. m. 132.

a Taken from Paul Jovius elog. c. 117. p. m. 259.

β In the 2. tome pag. 1171.

refined ſtroke of Policy, had a greater ſhare in this good Succeſs than Fortune. Theſe pretended raſh Men, by a vaſt Prudence, had long before Armed themſelves with Precaution. They had rendred themſelves neceſſary to thoſe who were capable of retrieving all their falſe Steps. They had found the ſecret of being Subſervient either to their private Pleaſures or Ambition. The circumſtances of the Times favoured them; a topping Spy or ſome other ſecret Service was of extraordinary uſe. They were ſure to be backed with Succeſs in their unreaſonable Quarrels; they did not therefore act raſhly.

(L) Cardinal Richelieu——would not allow any other cauſe of Unhappineſs than Imprudence.] M. Auberi informs us of this particular. He ſaith that Cardinal Richelieu, and the Duke of Olivarez two prime Miniſters, the one of France, the other of Spain, were Rivals and Antagoniſts, (d) That their Credit was much of an equal Duration; that they were compared to two Stars of the firſt, or at leaſt of the ſecond Magnitude; that they drew on themſelves the Eyes, the Eſteem and Admiration of all Chriſtendom. That the Cardinal was firſt Eclipſed by a natural Death, the 4th of December 1642. And that the other enjoyed the advantage of Shining alone, not above five or ſix Weeks, being Diſgraced the 17th of January 1643. The Motive or Pretext of his Diſgrace, was the ill Succeſs which accompanied all his Enterpriſes. This was in effect to accuſe him of Imprudence. In Cardinal Richelieu's Opinion, Imprudent and Unfortunate are but two words to expreſs the ſame thing (e). This great Eccleſiaſtick vigorouſly Practiſed one of his moſt conſtant Maxims which was, to give it you in his own Terms. "That in State "Affairs is is impoſſible to be too Cautious, or look "for too great Security. That a Stateſman ought, if "he can, always to have two Strings to his Bow; "That to ſucceed he ought not to take too exact Meaſures, but that in order to do much, he ought to "ſtrive and take a large Aim at doing yet more: "That in a word, in all Important Affairs, if he did "not take thoſe Meaſures which ſeemed too Extenſive, "he would always find them too ſhort. 'Tis hard to believe that the Cardinal on occaſion of the failure of Succeſs in ſome of his Enterpriſes, never acknowledged that he had notwithſtanding taken all thoſe Meaſures which Prudence cou'd ſuggeſt. If after this he thought himſelf Guilty of ſome Imprudence, he extended the Idea of Prudence beyond its true Bounds; for if he believed that thoſe, who truſt a Man who deceives them, are Imprudent, he ſuppoſed Prudence to comprehend the certainty of Events which depend on Free-Will. But that is a palpable Error. There are Perſons who have given many Proofs of their Fidelity; in ſo ſignal a manner that one may truſt them in an Important Affair, without the leaſt ſhadow of Imprudence. And yet they diſcharge their Duty very ill, they begin their Treachery on this occaſion, and betray or ſpoil the Deſign. It would be to expect a more than Humane Knowledge from a prime Miniſter to pretend that he has raſhly and unadviſedly relyed on this Man, that it is not his Misfortune but his Fault if the Affair miſcarried, ſince he ſhould have known the Thoughts and inward Change of this Perſon. You ſee then that this Diſpute is liable to ſeveral Equivocal Diſputations. The ill Fortune of an Enterpriſe is always attended with want of Knowledge. If indeed you call this Imprudence and will argue on this Definition, you may fully and without the leaſt reſerve maintain Cardinal Richelieu's Theſis; but your Definition will be falſe, and at the bottom you will be found to agree with your Adverſary.

(A Δ) Pliny admires this capricious taſte.] It is no wonder that the Sketches of a great Maſter ſhould be more valued than the finiſhed pieces of a mean Artiſt; but that the finiſhed Pictures of a great Hand ſhould be leſs able to excite our Admiration than his Sketches, ſeems ſomewhat unreaſonable. Is pity concerned in this Affair? Do we think it our Duty to cheriſh theſe Pieces, becauſe they have had the misfortune to loſe their Author before they received his laſt perfecting hand? Perhaps we hunt after Reaſons, and none is able to give any: Let us therefore quit our Search and only cite what Pliny ſaith: (g) Illud perquam rarum ac memoria dignum, etiam ſuprema opera artificum imperfectaſque tabulas, ſicut Irin Ariſtidis, Tyndaridas Nicomachi, Medeam Timomachi, & quam diximus venerem Apellis, in majori admiratione eſſe quam perfecta.

(A) In which he had diſcovered the greateſt art. I have collected ſome faults.] Read theſe Words of Pliny Chap. 11. lib. 35 Præcipue ars ei favisse in Gorgone viſa eſt. Charles Stephens cites the 5th Book; Mr. Lloyd has ſuppreſſed this Quotation inſtead of rectifying it, and has added nothing to this Article, but that Athenæus lib. 14. cites one Timomachus who had Written the Hiſtory of Cyprus. Moreri and Hofman cite no Authorities. The Article Timoniachus is left out in the laſt Editions of Charles Stephens, tho' it remained in that of 1620. which was reviſed and Corrected by Frederick Morel. It is ſtrange that ſuch a Learned Man ſhould not diſcover that a Typographical fault of changing an m into ni, had produced Timoniachus the painter.

(T) The Greek Profeſſor's place in the Univerſity of Paris.] Peter Matthieu's words are: (a) Gregory Tiphernas came from Emanuel Chryſoloras's School to Paris and preſented himſelf to the Rector, freely telling him, that he came to Teach the Greek literature, and demanded the recompence allotted by the Holy Decrees. The Rector was ſomewhat ſurprized at the Stranger's aſſurance, yet commended his deſign, and with the Advice of the Univerſity retained him, and granted him his deſired Salary. Hermonymus of Sparta ſucceeded him. Gabriel Naudé relates the ſame thing, to prove Lewis the XI. his inclination to protect Learned Men. We may judge, ſays he (b), by Philelphus's Epiſtle cited in the preceding Chapter —— how he continually encouraged the Conſtantinopolitan Greeks, who came to Paris to reſide and continue the courſe of their Studies under the Aſſurance of his Liberality. Gregory Tiphernas was the firſt (c) who made Way for the reſt; he being arrived at Paris preſented himſelf to the Rector, &c. Naudé cites Melanchton in oratione de Capnione, tom, 3. Several Authors mention this paſſage of Tiphernas, and amongſt the reſt Sixtinus Amama, who obſerves that he came to Paris about the Year 1470 and informed the Rector of what had been ordered by the Council of Vienne: He did not forget to ſay that the Univerſity of Paris was expreſly mentioned in the Decrees of that Council (d).

(Z) He diſputed the Price in ſuch a ſtudied Style.] Jovianus Pontanus, who was his Diſciple, tells the

Story

(d) Auberi, Hiſtoire du Cardinal Mazarin. B. 1. pag. 100.

(e) This is very different from the opinion of Garimberto, who ...mmain'd ubi ſupra cap. 18. that a Man, who Acts according to Prudence, ought not to be call'd a Happy Man; and cap. 19. that none is Happy out of Art, or Prudence, or through God's favour, but by a Natural Impetuoſity ...ated in the Soul; and cap. 3. and 4. lib. ... that Fortune Favours bold Men, and is a friend to the Preſumptuous, ... a very ... to the ...

(g) Plin. lib. 35. cap. 11.

(a) Peter Matthieu. Hiſtoire de Louis XI. B. 11. p. m. 734. 735.

(b) Naudé Additions to the Hiſtory of Lewis XI. pag. 185.

(c) One may infer from theſe Words of Naudé that he believed that Tiphernas was a Grecian.

(d) See Sixtinus Amama in paræneſi de excitandis SS. linguarum ſtudiis, page 197. of his Antibarbarus biblicus edit. 1628.

TYPOT (James) in Latin Typotius. You'll find in Moreri what Mr. Teissier γ has Published concerning this Dutch Civilian. To which I shall make some ‡ Corrections, and only add that Typot was Guilty of such ill Actions, and wrote a Book in which he Defamed so may Persons of Quality ∫ in Sweden, that he narrowly escaped a capital Punishment. He in particular Abused (A) the Illustrious Pontus de la Gardie, whom he had accompanied in his Embassy to Rome *. How much John the IIId. King of Sweden was Incensed against this Author, clearly appears from his Answer (B) to a Letter, requesting Typot's Enlargement. Which he would not consent to; and accordingly the Prisoner did not obtain his Liberty till after the Death of that Prince, † when getting again into Favour for some time, he found the Face of Affairs changed, and Retired to the Imperial Court. He did not Die in the Year 1604, as Thuanus relates, but (C) some time before. There is also something elso to be Rectifyed in his Article.

TYRANNION,

Story thus: (e) Gregorius Typhernas quo præceptore Græcis in literis usus sum adolescens, ad forum accesserat rerum venalium, dumque rusticano cum homine non potest de mercimonio convenire, sermone enim cum illo nimis composito utebatur, ibi ego qui rem perpendissem, conversus ad rusticum &c.

(A) He abused —— Pontus de la Gardie.] He accused him of gaining the Favour of Eric King of Sweden by delivering to him the Fortress of Wardberg which belonged to Denmark. He supposes that Pontus was in the Service of his Danish Majesty at that time, which was in the Year 1565. Mr. Oernhielm refutes this Accusation by the Pasport which that King gave to la Gardie, May the 16. 1571. La Gardie being in the Swedish Service was taken by the Danes in a Battel in which the latter were victorious in the Year 1569. He was detained in Prison till the Peace was concluded the 13. of December 1570, and ratifyed the 16 of March 1571. The King of Denmark gave him a very Honourable Pasport, which he would not have done if he had taken him for a Traytor. (f) Non aliunde melius dilucet Typotiani mendacii vanitas, qui, ut superius indicavimus, nugatur, apud Ericum Sueonum Regem PONTUM captasse locum gratiæ, proditâ ei Wardbergensi arce. Si sic se res habuisset, quomodò potuisset Fridericus Rex, sponte nullaque adactus necessitate, rerum sibi carissimarum proditorem, cari dilectique sibi Equitis nomine compellare? Quis unquam Regum, arcium, terrarum copiarumque suarum proditorem, dignatus est nomine tam honorifico, ac non potius quovis, pro atrocitate facti, proscidit non injusto convitio? Cur non æquam tanto facinori mercedem retulit? Cur alia omnia de se meritum, mancipio jam sibi etiam traditum, non benignè tantum toto captivitatis tempore habuit Rex, sed etiam redintegratâ cum Suecis pace, honoris gratiæque plenissimis literis securum redire fecit in Sueciam? This Author cites the Words of the Pasport translated out of the Original into Latin. A little before, he had told us that Typotius spoke very ill of Pontus de la Gardie's extraction; which continues he, is not to be Wondred at, for this Writer had Assurance enough to calumniate even the Kings of Sweden themselves. He observes that this Satyrical piece had been lately reprinted by the Diligence of some Malicious Persons. (g) Quæ paulo liberaliore manu adduci à me oportuit, ut famosum libellum Jacobi Typotii venenati convincerem mendacii, quo ille, suggerente veteri quodam congerrone Ægidio, ut ipse fatetur, homine ignoto ac terræ filio, natalibus, vitæ famæque PONTI adspergere voluit labem, quam fœdissimam conscivit sibi ipsi, typis committens fuco dictionis pictas livorisque plenas calumnias. Sed quid mirum est, allatrasse eum genus & famam PONTI, qui ne Regibus quidem, aut ulli Suecicæ gentis honesto viro satis fuit æquus? Etenim, in monstroso illo ingenii fœtu, recuso nuper à malevolis, nefandi in bonorum famam sceleris consciis, atque ideò nec loci nec editoris nomen proferre ausis, debacchatur in Ericum ipsum & Johannem Reges, adeò non parcit aliis viris illustribus ex ordine Equestri, quorum gloriosa semper fuit, ac deinceps erit apud posteros memoria. Quin imo, in religionem, & nationem ipsam, cujus, ut Pontificius è Belgio sacrificulus, flagrabat odio, stolidè nonnunquam invehitur. For this Satyrical Boldness, and other Crimes (adds he) Typotius was Condemned to Death, which he had certainly suffered if the King of Denmark had not interceded for him; but tho' the Intercession of that Prince saved his Life, they did not protect him from an Ignominious Banishment. (h) Ob quæ, aliaque (1) facinora, damnatus hic fuit capitis, luissetque factis dignum supplicium, nisi intercessio Regis Daniæ intervenisset, quæ quidem à meritâ morte illum liberavit, sed non ab ignominiosâ ex hoc regno Relegatione.

(B) His answer to a letter requesting.] Frederick II. King of Denmark had Written to him on this Account: Part of the King of Sweden's answer runs thus: (i) Quo minus (k) petitioni Majestatis Vestræ in hac causâ satisfacere possimus, facit magnitudo scelerum, quibus caput suum obstrinxerat idem Typotius, quæ si æque Majestati Vestræ ac nobis nota fuissent, scimus non tantum tributuram fuisse Majestatem Vestram ejus desideriis ac precibus, ut pro ipso intercedere sustinuerit. Etenim is homo est, qui virus mendacis linguæ, sine ullo discrimine, in summos imosque passim effundit. Inde est, quod non tetro tantum carceri mancipandum, sed ultimo etiam supplicio afficiendum eum censuimus, in quem si quid mitius in posterum decreverimus, id clementiæ nostræ, Majestatisque Vestræ intercessioni, non innocentiæ suæ debebit. Confidimus certò, majestatem Vestram hanc excusationem nostram, ut justam & idoneam approbaturam. This Letter of the King of Sweden is dated the 17. of February 1583. Observe that the King of Denmark interceded for Typot at the Request of a Person for whom he had a particular regard, who was his Physician and the Prisoner's Bother (l).

(C) He Dyed —— before the Year 1604. There is also something else to rectify in his Article.] Thuanus's fault (a) in placing his Death in 1604, is observed by Mr. Mollerus in his (b) Additions to Scheffer's Suecia Litterata. There is a Book Printed (c) in 1602 in which we find Typot's Funeral Elogy by John Jessenius à Jessen, Physician to the Emperor. If Mr. Teissier had observed this, he had corrected Thuanus's Error. Some Authors (d) tell us that Typot Dyed in 1600. We find in the Preface to the Second Tome symbolorum Pontificum, Regum & Principum Octavii de Strada, dated the 15. March 1602, that he died after having finished the Explication of the Symbols of this 2d. Tome. These Words (e) Jacobus Typotius —— in aula Suecica diu fuit, Carolo Sudermaniæ duci ac tandem Regi cum Sigismundo Poloniæ Rege nepote tunc dissidenti percarus, are translated in Mr. Teissier: (f) "James "Typot —— long resided at the Court of Sweden, "where he was very much regarded by the Duke "of Sudermania and the King, who then had some "difference with Sigismund King of Poland his Nephew." This Translation is faulty; the Duke of Sudermania's Christian Name ought not to have been suppressed, nor a King of Sweden been introduced distinct from this Duke; for it is visible that Thuanus says that Charles was Duke of Sudermania, and afterwards King of Sweden. In which he was in the right, but he is to blame when he Reports that Typot was long this Charles's Favourite. He should have said that this Duke's Brother, King John the Third, Favoured Typot for a long time, and that Typot lost the King's Favour, having been Imprisoned and Condemned to Death, and that his Life was granted him by the intercession of the King of Denmark. He might have added, if I am not mistaken, that after the Death of John III. he was restored to Favour, which he also enjoyed under Sigismund his Son; but that he had nothing to do in Sweden when the Duke of Sudermania was Created King by the exclusion of Sigismund King of Poland his Nephew; that he kept his ground during the Contest betwixt the Unkle and Nephew, and at last retired when Sigismund's Party was ruined. These seem to me the Changes in Typot's affairs.

I

γ Additions to the Elogies of Thuanus Tom. 2. pag. 358. Edit. 1696.

‡ See the Remark C.

∫ See the Remark A.

* See the Life of that Pontus published in the Year 1690. Claudius Arrhenius Oernhielm pag. 165.

† See the Remark C.

(e) Jovian. Pontanus de Sermone lib. 5. c. 1. p. m. 1704. 1705.

(f) Claudius Arrhenius Oernhielm in vita Ponti de la Gardie pag. 19. 20.

(g) Id ib. p. 11. 12.

(h) Id. ib.

(1) Messenius Scondiæ Illustratæ I. VII. ab Anno 1581. A Ponto Typotius plurimarum convictus imposturarum & calumniarum, carceri perpetuo adjudicatur mancipaturque, inquit. Unde mirum non est, quod in illum in primis debacchetur.

(i) Id. ib. p. 17. 18.

(k) That is that Typot should be released out of Prison.

(l) Vit [illegible] Friderici II. Danorum Regis (cui frater ejus Majestatis gratissimus erat atque a cura valetudinis) intercessione. Jo. Mollerus hypomn. ad Schefferi Sueciam litteratam pag. 443.

(a) Thuan. lib. 131. pag. m. 1242.

(b) Pag. 443.

(c) In the 2. Tome, Symbolorum Octavii Strada. See Mr. Mollerus hypomn. ad Sueciam litteratam pag. 44

(d) Witte in diario biogr. Mollerus ubi supra. Valerius Andreas ubi infra says that he Died about the Year 160

(e) Thuan. ubi supra.

(f) Teissier's Elogies taken out of Thuanus Tom. 2. p. 34

TYRANNION, a celebrated Grammarian in Pompey's time, who was of Amisus in the Kingdom of Pontus. His first Name was Theophrastus; but by reason of his teazing and tormenting his School-Fellows (A), his Master Hestiæus gave him the Name of Tyrannion. He was a Disciple of Dionysius Thracius at Rhodes. He fell into Lucullus's Hands, when that Roman General beat Mithridates, and seized his Territories. This Captivity of Tyrannion was not disadvantageous to him, since it procured him an Opportunity of rendring himself Illustrious at Rome, and of acquiring great Riches: Which he employed amongst other uses to Erect a Library of above * thirty thousand Volumes. He Died very Old, Harrass'd and Wasted with the Gout †. Suidas is mistaken in the time of his Death (B). I must not forget that Murena asked Tyrannion of Lucullus, that he might have the Glory of procuring the Liberty and Freedom of a Celebrated

I ground what I have said on what Valerius Andreas says in his Bibliotheca Belgica that after the Death of John III. he was set at Liberty by Sigismund, and pronounced the Inaugural Oration at his Coronation before the States of the Realm. (g) Mortuo deinde Suecorum Rege Joanne, ejus filius atque in Regno successor Sigismundus III. annuente etiam Daniæ Rege Christierno IV. Typotium pristinæ mox restituit libertati: eique tum imposita est provincia in ipsis Regni Comitiis Stockolmiæ Orationem illam, quam Inauguralem vocant, habendi, quâ Suecorum erga Regem suum fidei atque benevolentiæ causas diserte exposuit. Rege autem in Regnum Poloniæ, quod ei per electionem accesserat, profecto, Typotius à Romanorum Imp. Rodolpho II. inter Aulæ suæ familiares allectus, ac Cæsarei Historiographi titulo ornatus, Pragæ diem clausit extremum circa annum salutis millesimum sexcentesimum. We find in the same Bibliotheque, that his Orationes genethliacæ ad Annam Sueciæ & Poloniæ Reginam, were Printed at Stockholm in 1594. The above mentioned inaugural Oration was also Printed (h) at the same place in the same Year, and he informs us that he published (i) the Funeral Oration on the Death of King John III. who Dyed in November 1592. (k) 'Twas Printed at Stockholm 1594. Which is a Sign that he was in good Reputation in Sweden after the Death of that Monarch. There is a Difficulty which arises against all this, which is that very good Authors (l) assure us that at the Intercession of his Danish Majesty he was pardoned his designed Punishment, but not excused from an infamous Banishment. Frederick II. King of Denmark interceded for Typot, in the Year 1582 or in the beginning of 1583. If on his Account the Punishment of Death was changing into Banishment, it seems that it should be said that the Prisoner was Banished in 1583. and yet we see that Sigismund the successor of a Prince who Dyed in 1592 (n) gave Typot his Liberty, and that Christiern IV. King of Denmark interceded for him. I cannot Reconcile these two Relations; perhaps after the Death of King John, King Sigismund reversed Typot's exile, and recalled him.

Whilst this is Printing I find a Confirmation of my conjectures in a German Treatise (o), some Pages of which relating to Typot I got Translated. I there find a passage which makes me believe that Mr. Ornhielm was mistaken in saying that the intercession of Frederick II. King of Denmark did not excuse this Man from an infamous Banishment. This place is in a Letter from Zachary Palthenius to Typot, and Printed with a Treatise of Typot at Francfort in 1595. Palthenius informs us 1. that John III. King of Sweden prevented Typot's being intirely ruined by his Enemies: 2. That Sigismund III. King of Poland and Sweden restored this Prisoner to Liberty. (p) *Quæ tibi ergastulum, aut, ut tu loqui soles, Dei gratia peperis, de fortuna & legibus, cum fortuna, quam liberatio, uti videre est, concepit, ego fasciis involvi, prodibuntque brevi in lucem. Felix infelicitas tua, quæ tibi vera laudis, imo solidæ felicitatis principium exstitit. Absuisti a familiarium commercio, doleo, dolet mecum litteratorum chorus, quamquam mœroris tui vehementioris nullum signum in libris tuis repererim, & tu Joannis III. Regis Sueciæ humanitatem ac clementiam prædicare soleas, ut per quem stetit, ne adversariorum malignitate caderes. Sed cum abesses a tuis, versatus es cum, quæ maxime tuæ sunt, Musis. Restitutus in libertatem a Sigismundo III. Poloniæ & Sueciæ Rege, huic enim secundum Dei, cui etiam ille cedit, misericordiam, consuetudinem nostram refers acceptam, profers in lucem luce dignissimos diversi argumenti plurimos Codices. Mr. Tentzelius acquaints us that Typot Dedicated his Treatise de fortuna Printed at Francfort in 1595. to Sigismund III. King of Sweden, as he did his Book de fato Printed in the same Year at the same place to King Christiern of Denmark, and that he says at the beginning of his Treatise de fortuna, that he had received many Favours from King Sigismund, and that he had waited the return of that Monarch at Calmar, and that his Enemies prevented his meeting his Majesty at Dantzick. You may observe that the Preface to this Book was Written at Wurtsburg in December 1595. It is somewhat surprizing that Mr. Ornhielm Historiographer of Sweden, should be ignorant that this Man was gloriously delivered out of Prison, and not by an infamous Sentence of Banishment.

Mr. Moreri has been Guilty of the following faults. I. He says that Sigismund King John's successor enlarged Typot, and employed him in several affairs of the utmost importance. Mr. Teissier (q) makes use of the same Words, quoting only Valerius Andreas, who hath nothing to this purpose, and only informs us that Typot being enlarged was appointed to make the inaugural Speech before the States of the Kingdom. II. Mr. Moreri like a faithful Copist of Mr. Teissier adds; that Sigismund being elected King of Poland, Typot retired to the Court of the Emperour Rodolph II. This hints that Sigismund was elected King of Poland some Years after he succeeded John III. King of Sweden, than which nothing is more false; for John III. Dyed in November 1592, Sigismund his Son was not Crowned King of Sweden till 1594. and he had been elected King of Poland in 1587. The III. Error is that Mr. Moreri has fixed Typot's Death in 1604.

(A) Teazing and Tormenting his School Fellows.] In the version of Suidas we find these Greek Words, Τυραννίων ὠνομάσθη ὡς καταλαζονεύων τῶν ὁμηλίκων, thus rendred, Tyrannio dictus est quod condiscipulos excogitaret, l. ὡς καταλαζονευόμενον. It is hardly necessary to Advertise the Reader that excogitaret is a typographical Error crept into the place of exagitaret; but we may very well say that Mr. Moreri little minded the Title of his Book; he gives his conjecture for the Translations of the Authors whom he cites at the bottom of the Articles. If he had writ a Romance instead of an Historical Dictionary, this Liberty had been excusable. He had read in no Author that Theophrastus was called Tyrannion on Account of his becoming Proud of his Science and despising his Equals.

(B) Suidas is mistaken in the time of his Death.] How was it possible that Tyrannion should dye the 3d. Year of the 120 Olympiad as we find in Suidas, seeing he was not brought to Rome till after Lucullus had put Mithridates to Flight in the 177. Olympiad? Patricius (a) conjectures that instead of ὀλυμπιάδι ρκʹ, Suidas said ὀλυμπιάδι ρπʹ. According to which Tyrannion Died in the 3d. Year of the 180 Olympiad. There is some probability in Patricius's Correction, tho' 'tis certain that Tyrannion taught (b) in Cicero's House, in the last Year of the 180 Olympiad; and as he took care to digest Tully's Library into a Method, 'tis not very likely that he was then in the infirm State in which he Died, according to Suidas. What I am going to Advance is incomparably more forcible against Patricius's Correction or Suidas himself, if he said what the other would have him. When Cæsar was in Africa to make War with Juba, in the Year of Rome 707. which was the 2d of the 184. Olympiad, Cicero, and Atticus promised to meet at an appointed time in order to hear Tyrannion (d) Read one of his own Books; and Atticus

was

* Charles Stephens, Lloyd, Hofman, Moreri, say only three Thousand.

† Ex Suida in Τυραννίων

(q) Teissier ubi supra pag. 354.

(a) Discussiones Peripateticæ. Tom. 1. l. 4. pag. 36.

(b) Cicero epist. 4. lib. 2. ad Q. Fratrem. It was Written in the Year that Tullia was married to Crassipes: 'twas the 697. Year of Rome. See Fabricius in the Life of Cicero.

(c) See the remark G.

(d) Epist. 2. lib. 12. ad Atticum.

lebrated Grammarian. Plutarch's Reflections (C) on this occaſion are not amiſs. Tyrannion's diligent care to collect a great quantity of Books, very much Contributed to the preſervation of Ariſtotle's Works. (D) The Writings of this Philoſopher met with a deſtiny ſo particular, that it deſerves a Relation, eſpecially conſidering was reproached by his Friend (y) for having heard it Read without him.

(C) Plutarch's Reflections on this occaſion, are not amiſs.] Murena, ſays he, did not at all anſwer the generoſity of Lucullus; for, in ſeeming to affranchiſe Tyrannion, he depriv'd him of his liberty. It had been better to leave him as he was. Here are Plutarch's Words in his Deſcription of the ſacking of Amiſus, which Lucullus not being able to prevent, repaired as well as he could. Τότε δὲ καὶ Τυραννίων ὁ γραμματικὸς ἑάλω. Μουρήνας δ' αὐτὸν ἐξῄτησε, καὶ λαβὼν ἀπηλευθέρωσεν, ἀνελευθέρως τῇ δωρεᾷ χρησάμενος. οὐ γὰρ ἠξίου Λεύκολλος ἄνδρα διὰ παιδείαν ἐσπουδασμένον δοῦλον γενέσθαι πρότερον, εἶτα ἀπελεύθερον. ἀφαίρεσις γὰρ ἦν τῆς ὑπαρχούσης ἡ τῆς δοκούσης ἐλευθερίας δόσις. ἀλλὰ Μουρήνας μὲν οὐκ ἐνταῦθα μόνον ὤφθη πολὺ τῆς τοῦ στρατηγοῦ καλοκαγαθίας ἀπολειπόμενος (z). Eadem tempeſtate captus eſt Tyrannio grammaticus. Hunc Murena petivit à Lucullo, quem ut accepit, manumiſit eum. Verum uſus eſt eo munere illiberaliter, nolebat enim inſignem virum eruditione Lucullus prius ſervum fieri, inde libertinum. Quippe ereptio præſentis erat illa ſimulatæ libertatis donatio. Cæterum non hic tantum oſtendit ſe Imperatore ſuo Murena honeſtate imparem.

(D) Ariſtotle's Works met with a Deſtiny ſo particular.] This great Philoſopher left them with his School and his other Books to Theophraſtus. The latter left his Library to Neleus, who had been Scholar both to him and Ariſtotle. Neleus cauſed it to be removed to (a) Scepſis, where he left it to his Heirs. (b) They, ignorant and illiterate, took no other care of this Treaſure of Learning than to keep it cloſe ſhut up; and being informed how diligently the Kings of Pergamum, to whom they were Subjects, ſought after Books, they buried under ground thoſe of Neleus. A long time after, their Poſterity took them out of their Priſon very much damaged by Damps and Vermin, and ſold thoſe of Ariſtotle and Theophraſtus to one Apellicon, who cauſed them to be copied: But his Copiſts very ill ſupplied thoſe places which the Worms had eaten, or the Damps defaced; ſo that thoſe Books came out with innumerable faults. After Apellicon's death, his Library was carried from Athens to Rome, by Sylla. His Library-keeper permitted Tyrannion, who was a great admirer of Ariſtotle, to take away the Writings of that Philoſopher. The Bookſellers cauſed them to be tranſcribed, but they made uſe of ignorant People, who did not collate their Tranſcripts with the Originals; ſo that the miſchief was more encreaſed at Rome than it had been at Athens. Thus having ſeen how far Strabo hath carried this Relation, let us ſee the ſequel of it in Plutarch and others.

Plutarch ſaith (c) that Sylla having render'd himſelf Maſter of Athens, ſeiz'd for himſelf Apellicon's Library, where were the greateſt part of Ariſtotle's and Theophraſtus's Works, then very little known to the Publick. He adds, that it was reported, that after Sylla had tranſported them to Rome, Tyrannion the Grammarian, ſurreptitiouſly got ſeveral of them into his hands; and that Andronicus Rhodius (d) getting of him the Copies, publiſh'd 'em, and made thoſe Tables or Indexes which afterwards appear'd to 'em. Plutarch and Strabo agree, that for a long time the Peripateticks hardly knew the Writings of Ariſtotle and Theophraſtus, and that the ignorance of Neleus's Heirs was the cauſe of their remaining obſcure: Strabo ſaith plainly that the Modern Peripateticks ſurpaſſed the Ancients, becauſe the latter having but very few of Ariſtotle's Books, and on the meaneſt Subjects, (e) were not able to Philoſophize with a nice and methodical exactneſs. But after Ariſtotle's Writings were diſcover'd, it was much eaſier for thoſe of that Sect to reaſon according to their Maſter's Notions; yet they were obliged to rely much upon Conjectures, becauſe there was an infinite number of Faults in his Works. This is Strabo's Obſervation (f).

Athenæus (g) hath a Paſſage very proper to be cited here: He ſaith that Neleus, the Poſſeſſor of Ariſtotle's Library, ſold it intirely to Ptolemy Philadelphus, who removed it to Alexandria, together with thoſe Books which he had bought at Rhodes and Athens. He obſerves at the ſame time, that one Larentius a Citizen of Rome, under Marcus Aurelius, had collected a larger number of Books than Polycrates Tyrant of Samos, Piſiſtratus Tyrant of Athens, Euclid, Nicocrates, the Kings of Pergamum, the Poet Euripides, and Ariſtotle the Philoſopher. Athenæus and Strabo clash in two things. The latter ſays, that Ariſtotle was the firſt who collected a Library, and who taught the Kings of Egypt how to erect one. Athenæus names ſeveral who collected great quantities of Books before Ariſtotle. He ſays further, that Neleus ſold all this Philoſopher's Books to Ptolemy Philadelphus; but Strabo aſſures us, that Neleus left them to his Heirs, who hid them. The Learned Francis Patricius (h) pretends to remove this laſt Difficulty, by ſuppoſing that Neleus got Ariſtotle's Books tranſcrib'd, and ſold a Copy of each Book to the Kings of Egypt, and kept the other for himſelf. I allow that it was a very eaſie thing for Neleus to get ſo many Volumes copied; but when I conſider Ptolemy's Expences on account of his Library, I cannot ſee any impoſſibility in it. What will not a Man do, to furniſh himſelf with what can gratifie a Prince who pays well? On the other ſide 'tis more than probable, that one of Ariſtotle's Scholars, as he was, might be extremely fond of keeping his Library, and there was no other way to ſatiſfy theſe two Paſſions, than to cauſe them to be copied. (i) Voſſius imagins that Neleus ſold all his Library, Ariſtotle's Works only excepted; but beſides that this Exception has no Foundation in the Text of Athenæus, How is it probable that the King of Egypt buying Ariſtotle's Library, ſhould ſuffer the Writings of this great Genius to be taken out? When it was principally ſuch Books that he wanted. I obſerve that (k) Ammonius ſaith, That Ptolemy very carefully bought up the Works of Ariſtotle, and very liberally rewarded thoſe who brought them to him, but he doth not mention Neleus. This Prince's Liberality was ſo great, that to obtain his Rewards, ſome ſuppoſititious (l) pieces were aſcribed to Ariſtotle in order to ſell them the dearer. What Patricius obſerves on the other part of the difference betwixt Strabo and Athenæus appears to me wrong. (m) He pretends that Strabo ſays, That Neleus was the firſt who erected a Library, and that he taught the Kings of Egypt that art. But it is very evident, that Strabo ſays that of Ariſtotle and not of Neleus. If it be objected that Ariſtotle dyed a year after Alexander, when Ptolemy Philadelphus, the firſt founder of the Alexandrian Library, was not yet King, nor a King's Son: I anſwer, That Ariſtotle might have taught People who lived long after him, the method of making a Library; for to do this it was only neceſſary for them to have learned how he placed his Books. Patricius's Objection is therefore ruined, and this without doubt is the true ſenſe of Strabo's Words, διδάξας τοὺς ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ βασιλέας βιβλιοθήκης σύνταξιν, Ægypti reges bibliothecæ ordinem docuit. I know very well that (n) Strabo is miſtaken in that place, where he ſaith that Ariſtotle was the firſt to the beſt of his Knowledge, who collected Books; he doth not remember Polycrates, Piſiſtratus, Nicocrates, nor Euripides, who according to Athenæus's Obſervation, had collected great quantities of Books. This is a great fault in his Memory, I own it; but it ſeems eaſier for Strabo to fall into this Fault, than to think that Ariſtotle was alive when Ptolemy Philadelphus formed his Library. Patricius aggravates Strabo's Miſtake, when he makes him ſay that Neleus was the firſt Collector of Books. This indeed would have been to have forgot how zealous (o) Ariſtotle was in buying of them.

Father Rapin very pleaſantly relates the Adventures of Ariſtotle's Works; ſome Fragments of which Narration I deſign to cite here, becauſe they deſerve ſome reflections. (p) It is pretended that Ariſtotle could not prevail upon himſelf to publiſh his Writings, out of pure reſpect for Plato; becauſe he oppoſed his Doctrine in ſeveral places. But this Conduct diſcovered more Policy than Virtue; he was reſolved to govern himſelf with Diſcretion, becauſe Mens Minds were as yet too much prepoſſeſſed in favour of Plato's Opinions. Hence it was that to conceal his Works, he entruſted them to Theophraſtus, with a ſtrong injunction againſt their " Publication, which was religiouſly obſerv'd. So that

(y) Epiſt. 4. epiſt. libri.

(z) Plut in Lucullo pag. 504.

(a) 'Twas the place of his birth, and a Town of Troas.

(b) Παραδοῦναι ἰδιώταις ἀνθρώποις οἱ κατάκλειστα εἶχον τὰ βιβλία, οὐδ' ἐπιμελῶς κείμενα. Reliquit ineruditis hominibus, qui incuriè poſitos ſub clavibus repoſuerunt. Strabo lib. 13. pag. 413. Salmaſius in Tertul. de Pallio, p. m. 177. proves by this paſſage that κατάκλειστον ſignifies a precious thing, which is carefully preſerved. Strabo inſinuates no ſuch thing. Beſides Salmaſius ſpeaks of Apellicon's heirs, whereas he ſhould have mention'd thoſe of Neleus.

(c) In Sylla, pag. 468.

(d) Add to this the Paſſage out of Porphyrius, in vita Plotini, which I have quoted in the Article of Andronicus.

(e) Theſe were call'd ἐξωτερικοί: the others which contain'd a more profound Doctrine, were call'd ἀκροαματικοί.

(f) Strabo ubi ſupra.

conſidering the celebrated Character of their Author. They were in Apellicon's Library:

“that Theophraſtus, who was the Depoſitory, Strato, Lyco, Demetrius Phalereus, and Heraclides, who ſucceeded one another in the Lyceum, taught Ariſtotle's Doctrine only by Tradition. Which not being ſupported by any Writing, began in time to cool, and ſhare of the warmth of other Sects—— Theophraſtus, in order ſtrictly to obſerve his Maſters's Order, dying, intruſted Ariſtotle's Writings to the deareſt of his Friends and Diſciples, on the ſame condition that he had receiv'd them. His Friend's Name was Neleus. ——He dy'd ſoon after; tho' not without informing his Heirs of the value of the Depoſitum which he left them. Which they ſo well apprehended, that being informed that the King of Pergamum made very ſtrict ſearches after Books and Writings, in order to erect a Library, the better to ſecure Ariſtotle's Works, they buried them in a Vault built on purpoſe. This precious Treaſure remained in this Obſcurity about 160 Years, from whence, half eaten with Vermin, and putrify'd with the moiſture of the place, it was at laſt taken. Which was done only to ſell it at a very dear rate to Apellicon a Citizen of Athens. The Philoſophers who then taught in the Lyceum, being informed of this, made their court to this Citizen, who lent them thoſe Writings for ſome time. But he got them again in order to ſecure them in his Library, which he render'd very famous by this important Depoſitum. Some Years after, Sylla cauſed them to be ſeiz'd and carried to Rome——ſoon after which he died, and theſe Manuſcripts fell into the hands of Tyrannion, a certain Grammarian, who learned from Sylla's Library-keeper, with whom he was very intimate, that they were there. Tho' this Grammarian was a very Learned Man, and collected a Library of above 30000 Volumes, after Lucullus had brought him to Rome, yet he did not know the value of Ariſtotle's Works. But after his death, Andronicus Rhodius being come to Rome, and being perfectly acquainted with Ariſtotle's Merit, becauſe he had been bred in the Lyceum, treated with Tyrannion's Heirs for theſe Books, and having them in his Power, he ſo earneſtly apply'd himſelf to examin them —— that he was in a manner their firſt Reſtorer—— It was this Andronicus who firſt made Ariſtotle known at Rome, about the time when Cicero, by his great Reputation, roſe to the firſt Poſts in the Republick.

What I will obſerve on this Diſcourſe, may be reduced to the following Heads. I. Father Rapin doth not cite one Author who relates that Ariſtotle intruſted his Writings to Theophraſtus, with an expreſs Prohibition againſt their Publication. Strabo and Plutarch, who obſerve that this Philoſopher's Books remained long unknown, aſcribe the cauſe of it only to the Ignorance of Neleus's Deſcendents; and we have already cited an Author (a) who aſſures us, that this Neleus ſold Ariſtotle's Library to Ptolemy Philadelphus: So far is he from ſaying that Neleus preſerv'd theſe Books according to the Injunction laid on him againſt the Publiſhing of them. II. Father Rapin miſrepreſents the Author whom he cites (b); for Strabo doth not any where ſo much as hint that Neleus did not die without informing his Heirs of the Value of the Depoſitum which he left them; and he is ſo far from ſaying that they apprehended the worth of them, that he ſays they left them locked up and in Confuſion (c). It is true that Strabo adds they buried them, when they heard the Kings of Pergamum were collecting Books; which ſeems to ſignifie that Neleus had forbidden the alienation of his Library: But in ſhort Strabo ſaith no ſuch thing, and the Caſuiſts of Parnaſſus ought to inform us, whether it is lawful for an Author to aſcribe to thoſe he cites, the Conſequences, Reaſons, and Motives which he fancies engaged them to write ſuch and ſuch things. How do we know but that Neleus's Executors were afraid that their Prince ſhould not give them any thing for theſe Books, and therefore thought it more proper to reſerve them for a better opportunity? III. Father Rapin applies ſolely to Ariſtotle's Writings, what Strabo ſaith in general of all the Books which Neleus left to his Heirs. IV. Strabo doth not ſay one word of thoſe Philoſophers who made their court to Apellicon to borrow Ariſtotle's Works of him for ſome time. He doth not ſay that Apellicon having lent theſe Books to them for ſome time, afterwards called them home; he ſaith on the contrary, that Apellicon cauſed them to be Copied, and Publiſh'd them full of Faults. V. No Author ever ſaid that Tyrannion did not know the Value of Ariſtotle's Works. Strabo rather inſinuates the contrary by theſe words, Φιλαριστοτέλης ὢν, he was a zealous Admirer of Ariſtotle. VI. Nor hath any one ſaid that Andronicus Rhodius came to Rome after the Death of Tyrannion, and that he bought Ariſtotle's Works of his Executors: On the contrary, (d) Plutarch avers, that Andronicus Rhodius received thoſe Books at the hands of Tyrannion (e). VII. If it was true that Andronicus did not come to Rome before the time mention'd by Father Rapin, he would not have found Tully in the beginning of his Fortune, but at the higheſt pitch of his Glory, recalled from his Exile to the great ſatisfaction of the Roman People. The proof of this is drawn from Tyrannion's coming to Rome in the 177 Olympiad, where he became illuſtrious, (f) enriched himſelf, collected a Library of 30000 Volumes, and dyed very old, in the third Year of the 180 Olympiad, according to Patricius's correction of Suidas. Twelve Years at leaſt were requiſite to ſtore up ſuch a large ſhare of Riches and Books at Rome. Now the third year of the 180 Olympiad is the very (g) Year of Cicero's being recall'd. But beſides, I have proved that Tyrannion was alive in the 184 Olympiad, when Cicero was at leaſt aged 60 Years.

I ſhall conclude this Remark with a Reflection which I find in Voſſius (h). It is no ſmall glory to Ariſtotle, that his Works being ſo long unknown, were no ſooner come out that they cut ſhone the Writings of other Philoſophers, who had enjoy'd a long and uninterrupted Reputation. I add of my own head, that by a turn of Fortune, the Sect which was to prevail moſt in the Schools, is that which for ſeveral Ages found it moſt difficult to lift up its Head, and riſe out of its obſcurity. Laſtly, I ſay that it is much more ſurprizing, that ſo many Books of Ariſtotle are preſerved, than that we have loſt ſo great a number. It is true, there is room to doubt whether thoſe which paſs at preſent under his Name, were the genuine Iſſue of his Pen. (i) Voſſius rejects the Judgment of Cælius Secundus Curio, who owns for Ariſtotle's works only the Hiſtory of Animals, the Treatiſe of the World, and his Rhetorick to Alexander. But I am ſurpriz'd that inſtead of Curio, he doth not mention Francis Patricius, who hath ſo learnedly diſcuſſed what Works are, and what Works are not Ariſtotle's, and hath rejected a very great number on account of being counter-band Goods. Ramus attempted the ſame, and was not the firſt as appears by the following paſſage. (k) It is not ſtrange that Francis Picus (1) who ſucceeded as well in the Learning as in the Principality of his Uncle, the Phœnix of his Age, the great Picus, labours to evince by a long train of Reaſons, that is is utterly uncertain whether Ariſtotle compoſed any of all the Books at preſent contained in the Catalogue of his Works: which was afterwards Confirmed by Nizolius (2), and ſo well examin'd by Patricius (3), that after having given very remarkable Proofs of his diligent ſearch after the truth of this Propoſition, he concludes at laſt, that of all the Books aſcribed to this Genius of Nature, only Four, and thoſe very ſmall and very inconſiderable, with reſpect to the worth of the reſt, are handed to us free from ſuſpicion or Controverſy, namely his Mechanicks, and three others which he wrote againſt Zeno, Georgias and Xenophanes: When on the contrary, Ammonius teſtifies in his Commentary on the Categories, that in the magnificent Library of Alexandria, they found forty Books of Analyticks, which all bore Ariſtotle's Name, tho' he only compoſed Four, the two firſt of which anſwer the Nine cited by Diogenes Laertius. Which is to be imputed, as Galen obſerves (4), to the emulation between the Kings of Pergamum and Alexandria, in Rewarding of thoſe who brought them a Book of any good Author, and eſpecially of Ariſtotle, the better to adorn their Libraries: Before which time none of the Ancient Books were falſly intituled. This I would ſhew more at large, if Patricius had not already done it (5). See Gaſſendus. (l)

(d) Παρ' αὐτοῦ (Τυραννίωνος) τὸν Ῥόδιον Ἀνδρόνικον εὐπορήσαντα τῶν ἀντιγράφων. A quo (Tyrannione) accepiſſe Andronicum Rhodium exemplaria. Plut. in Sylla. p. 468. B.

(e) Add to theſe Remarks concerning Father Rapin, what has been ſaid in the Article of Andronicus Rhodius.

(f) Ex Suida.

(g) See Calviſius ad Ann. Mundi. 3893:

(h) Voſſius de Philoſoph. Sectis, pag. 88.

(i) Id. ib. p. 87 where he obſerves that of theſe three Works, the two laſt are not Ariſtotle's.

(k) Naudé, Apologie des grans hommes, chap. 6. pag. 101, 102, 103.

(1) Lib. 4. Examin. vanit. doctrinæ Gentium.

(2) Lib. 4. cap. 6. de recta ratione philoſophandi.

(3) Diſcuſſion. Peripat. tom. 1. lib. 3.

(4) Comment. in lib. Hippoc. de natura humana.

(5) Diſcuſſ. Peripat. tom. 1. lib. 3.

(l) Gaſſend. Exercit. adverſ. Ariſtotelæos, lib. 1. cap. 4.

Library (E), of whom I ſhall ſpeak hereunder. Sylla rendring himſelf Maſter of Athens, ſeized this Library, and ſent it to Rome. Tyrannion, by inſinuating himſelf into an Intimacy with Sylla's Library-keeper, got into his Poſſeſſion all the Works of Ariſtotle and Theophraſtus which he could find there. The conſequence of which may be ſeen in the Article of Andronicus Rhodius, and more amply hereunder. Strabo † was Tyrannion's Diſciple (F); as were Cicero's Son and Nephew at Rome. Cicero made uſe of him to digeſt his (G) Library. Tyrannion wrote a Book which (H) Pomponius Atticus admired.

TYRANNION, ſo called, becauſe he was the former's (Y) Diſciple: his firſt Name was Diocles. He was of Phœnicia, and taken Priſoner in the War betwixt Octavius and Mark Antony, and bought by one of the Emperor's freed Men *. He was afterwards given to Terentia, who infranchiſed him. After which he ſet up a School in Rome, and compoſed Sixty eight Books. One of which was to prove, that the Latin Tongue was deſcended from the Greek ‖. This Terentia had been (Z) Cicero's Wife.

TIRAQUELLUS (Andrew) in French Tiraqueau, one of the moſt Learned Men of the XVI Century, was born at Fontenai-le Comte, a Town of Poitou. I have but very little to add to what Mr. Teiſſier and Moreri * have already ſaid. Only that 'tis not at all probable that he had ſo many Children as ſome Authors beſtow on him. They reckon Forty five, (A) and tell us that if he had drank Wine, he had been yet much more fruitful, as well in the iſſue of his Brain, † Strabo, lib. 12. pag. 377.

‖ His Name was Tyrmas.
* Ex Suida.
‖ Ghilini teatro tom. 2. pag. 1??, ſays he was born at Fontainebleau Terra del diſtretto di Poitiers.
† He has committed two faults, which I have mended in the Remark B.

(E) They were in Apellicon's Library.] I have not ſpoken of him in his place, but referred hither: It is then juſt that I ſhould ſay ſomething of him in this Remark. APELLICON was of Teos, but ſettled at Athens, of which he was made a Citizen. He was very rich and of a ſhuffling Humour. He apply'd himſelf to Philoſophy, and embraced the Peripatetick Sect (a); but he diſcovered that he had a better Talent for buying the Works of the Philoſophers, than for acquiring Knowledge of their Opinions. He bought Ariſtotle's and ſeveral other numerous Libraries. He ſpared no coſt to buy rare Books, and found out an expedient to rob the Archives of the Original Decrees which had been antiently publiſh'd at Athens. If there were in any other Cities any Original Pieces valuable for their Antiquity, or very little known to the Publick, by reaſon of their being kept up cloſe, he took ſo much care to recover them, that he got all Papers of this nature into his Hands. The Athenians having diſcovered his pillage, had probably puniſh'd him with Death, if he had not made his Eſcape. His Friends ſoon occaſion'd his being recall'd. He engaged himſelf in the Cabal of Athenion, a Peripatetick Philoſopher, who was become very powerful by a popular Sedition during the War betwixt the Romans and Mithridates. The Confuſions then predominant in Athens, contributed to the Elevation of Appellicon on one ſide, and to the Diſcovery that he was utterly unfit for command on the other. Athenion ſent him Commander to the Iſle of Delos; but he ſo ill obſerved Military Diſcipline, and took ſo little care to prevent being ſurpriz'd by the Enemy, that the Romans made a Deſcent into the Iſle, without being perceiv'd by him, and kill'd the Garriſon when aſleep. Appellicon had the good fortune to ſave himſelf (c). He died a little before Sylla maſtered Athens (d). I have already ſaid what he did with regard to the Writings of Ariſtotle, and what became of his Library. He was an Author; for he is cited (e) as a Defender of Ariſtotle againſt the Calumnious Reports raiſed againſt him on account of his intimacy with Hermias.

(F) Strabo was Tyrannion's Diſciple.] I have cited the place where Strabo relates this particular: But it is falſe, that he ſaith that he was his Countryman, and his Diſciple in his own Country. Popma (f) who advances theſe two Errors, hath confounded Amiſus, Tyrannion's native Country, with Amaſia the Country of this famous Geographer.

(G) Cicero made uſe of him to digeſt his Library.] Of which he informs his Friend Pomponius Atticus: Perbelle feceris ſi ad nos veneris: offendes deſignationem Tyrannionis mirificam in librorum meorum Bibliotheca, quorum reliquiæ multo meliores ſunt quam putaram. Etiam vellem mihi mittas de tuis librariolis duos aliquos, quibus Tyrannio utatur glutinatoribus, ad cætera adminiſtris (g). He owns in another Epiſtle, (h) that the two Men which Atticus ſent him did Wonders: Poſtea verò quam Tyrannio mihi libros diſpoſuit, mens addita videtur meis ædibus: qua quidem in re mirifica opera Dionyſii & Menophili tui fuit.

(H) A Book which Pomponius Atticus admir'd.] Some believe it was a Treatiſe of Proſody, and ground their Conjecture on theſe words of Cicero (i) Quid ex iſta acuta & gravi refertur ad τὸν ... Another (k) Paſſage ſeems to hint that Tyrannion pretended to Geography.

(Y) Becauſe he was the former's Diſciple.] I don't know where Mr. Lloyd, Hoffman and Moreri, have found that he aſſumed his Uncle Tyrannion's Name; for Suidas whom they cite, ſays no ſuch thing, and I cannot find it in the Edition of Charles Stephens, at Paris, 1620, nor in that of Geneva, 1662.

(Z) This Terentia had been Cicero's Wife.] Tho' Suidas has not diſtinguiſhed the times, Mr. Moreri ought not to confound them. He ought not to ſay that Damas bought Tyrannion, nor that he gave him to Terence, Cicero's Wife. It was Dymas who bought the ſlave, and no body ſaid that it was he who preſented him to this Woman, whom he ought to have called Terentia and not Terence; and to prevent Miſtakes, he ought not to have uſed an expreſſion which ſignifies, that Cicero was then alive; when indeed he had been long dead, and Terentia was neither his Wife nor his Widow; for ſhe had been divorced ſeveral Years before his death.

(A) Reckon forty five, and tell us.] Not long ſince, I read in a Theſis de aqua calida potu, maintain'd at Helmſtad, under Henry Meibomius, in the Year 1689. That tho' Tiraquellus drank only Water, he was Father of 45 Children, and Author of as many Books; to which purpoſe theſe four Verſes were made:

> Fœcundus facundus aqua Tiraquellus amator
> Terquindecim librorum & liberûm parens,
> Qui niſi reſtinxiſſet aquis abſtemius ignes,
> Impleſſet orbem prole animi atque corporis.

I dare averr, that the Fact is ſtretched too far. Thuanus had not been ignorant of a thing ſo obſervable as this, and would undoubtedly have mention'd it, if he had believ'd it true: But he contents himſelf with ſaying that Tiraquellus (l) beſtowed a Book and a Child on the Publick every Year. Some other Writers have particularized the number, confining themſelves to 30. (m) Tiraquellus was no leſs fruitful in the production of the Children of his Mind than of thoſe of his Body; for in Thirty Years not one paſſed in which he did not give the World a Book and a Son, and if on the one ſide he extended his Name and Family by a large number of Children, all excellent Perſons, which he had by a virtuous Wife, he alſo acquir'd a large ſhare of Glory by a great number of Books with which he enriched the Publick; but what encreaſes the Wonder is, that he was thus fruitful whilſt he drank only Water. Mr. Teiſſier (o), who cites Frey, Admir. Galliæ, does not go beyond thirty. Nor can we reach 45 if we regulate our ſelves by the common obſervation of thoſe Authors who mention this; they averr that Tiraquellus had but one Wife, and that all his Children were lawfully begotten. I am not ſurpriz'd that this Fecundity, ſhould appear more wonderful to thoſe who reflect that this Learned Man drank only Water: But this perhaps contributed to his Prolifick Virtue. His natural

(a) Athenæus lib. 5. pag. 214.
(b) Φιλόβιβλος μᾶλλον ἢ φιλόσοφος. Librorum amore tenebatur majore quam Philoſophiæ ſtudio. Strab. lib. 13. p. 419.
(c) Athen. Ibid.
(d) Strabo ibid. The taking of Athens falls on the 173. Olympiad, about the Year of Rome, 666.
(e) Ariſtocles Peripateticus, apud Euſebium Præp. l. 15. c. 2. pag. 793.
(f) In Ciceron. epiſt. 6. l. 2. ad Atticum in edit. Græviana.
(g) Epiſt. 4. lib. 4. He wrote it ſoon after he return'd from his baniſhment. Confer epiſt. 4 & 5. l. 3. ad Q. fratrem.
(h) Epiſt. 8. l. 4. ad Atticum.
(i) Vide epiſt. 4. lib. 4. ad Atticum.
(k) Ibid. epiſt. 6. l. 2. ad Atticum.
(l) Æque ingenii ac corporis monumentis fœcundus prole, cum ſingulis annis ſingulos libros ac liberos reipublicæ daret. Thuan. lib. 21. p. 432. ad ann. 1558. Sainte Marthe in Elog. p. m. 39. ſays in general cum numeroſam ſobolem ex honeſtiſſima uxore ſuſcepit.
(m) Peter de St. Romuald, Abregé du treſor chronologique, tom. 3. p. m. 324. ad ann. 1558.
(o) Teiſſier, in the Additions to the Eloges, tom. 1. p. 144.

Brain as in that of his Body. He Died very Old (B) in the Year 1558. Some Plagiaries took more from him (C) than he took from others. I have elsewhere cited a Paſſage, where it is obſerved that he inſerted ſeveral Obſcenities in one of his Books.

TIRESIAS, one of the moſt Celebrated Diviners of Antiquity, was the Son of Everus * and the Nymph Chariclo, and derived his Original from Udeus, one of thoſe || who proceeded from the Serpent's Teeth which Cadmus ſowed in the Earth. He was Blind, for which ſeveral Reaſons are aſſigned. Some ſay that the Gods unwilling that he ſhould reveal to Mortals what they deſired they ſhould be Ignorant of, ſtruck him Blind. Pherecydes aſcribed it to the Anger of (A) Minerva. He ſaid that Goddeſs was ſo Incenſed that ſhe had been ſeen Naked by Tireſias, that ſhe deprived him of his Sight. She was earneſtly ſollicited by Chariclo her Favorite, and Tireſias's Mother, to reſtore Sight to her Miſerable Son, but not being able to do her that Favour, ſhe endeavoured at ſome Reparation; and accordingly ſhe perfected his Hearing to that degree, that he underſtood (B) all the

* Moreri call him wrong Everus.

|| They were call'd Σπαρτοί natural Heat would perhaps have been enflamed to an exceſſive degree by the uſe of rich Wines, and in this Exceſs he had been leſs fit for Generation; for we are told of Barren Marriages, by reaſon of the too great Salacity of the Parties. However Tiraquellus's Wife had no reaſon to fear the Attacks of the Wits, as ſhe might if ſhe had been but ſeldom Pregnant. Her Husband was fond of his Studies to an exceſſive degree; his Works loudly Proclaim that he ſpent whole days among his Books. His Writings diſcover a prodigious Reading, Labour and Searches which require a ſtrong Application. When we know a Man ſpends the Day in this manner, we ſuppoſe that he hath Exhauſted himſelf, and hath occaſion for a great deal of reſt in the Night; for (d) quod caret alterna requie durabile non eſt, Hæc reparat vires feſſaque membra novat. People naturally imagine that he ſpent his Spirits by Studying, Writing and Reading, and that he prepares himſelf for freſh Fatigues by a ſound Sleep. They on this account rally his Wife in Company, they pity her, and make her ſad Complements of Condolence: But by ſhewing a numerous train of Children ſhe is ſheltered from theſe Jeſts. As all things have two Faces, it is certain that a Married Author buried all day amongſt his Books and Papers, may paſs for a Convenient or Inconvenient Husband, according to the Wife he is Married to. If ſhe is a Coquet and Looſe, he is a very convenient Spouſe; for whilſt he Studies twelve Hours or more each Day, ſhe is at liberty to diſpoſe of her Perſon at pleaſure. But if ſhe is Virtuous, he is not in all reſpects a good Husband, he ſometimes obliges her (e) to wiſh her ſelf a Book, he goes to Bed utterly haraſſed with Study, and his Head is full of a Chapter which he has left Unfiniſhed. The Inconveniencies of this Diſpoſition of Body and Mind are viſible to every Body. Obſerve that every thing has its Exceptions: In reading the Lives of Learned Men, we may obſerve a great many of them who had large Families. For ſome Tempers are ſo ſtrong and well made, that they ſuffice for every thing.

Obſerve that in order to juſtify thoſe who aver that Tiraquellus had forty five Children tho' Married but once, we cannot ſuppoſe of him what the Menagiana relates of one Blunet (f), who (g) had by his Wife one and twenty Children at ſeven ſucceſſive Births, three at each time; for if this Learned Civilian's Wife had often brought two or three at a time, it would have been the principal Circumſtance which Authors wou'd have obſerved. But not one of them has mentioned it, and on the contrary they have told us that Tiraquellus produced every Year a Book and a Child (h). Singulis annis ſingulos liberos reipublicæ daret.

(B) He Dyed very Old in the Year 1558.] Sainte Marthe obſerves twice or thrice almoſt in the ſame Page, that Tiraquellus attained to a very great Age; but he doth not ſpecify the number of Years: Which if he knew he is to be blamed for not informing his Readers of it. I will not affirm that he did not know for 'tis his cuſtom to forget Dates. He certainly knew that Tiraquellus Died in 1558. and yet he has not told us ſo, but makes uſe of a long Periphraſis to expreſs the time of Tiraquellus's Death. Obiit, ſays he (i), plane ſenex haud multò ante quàm inter Henricum ſecundum & Philippum Hiſpaniæ Regem poſt varias bellorum offenſiones de pace tandem per utriuſque legatos ageretur. Mr. Bullart makes uſe of and explains theſe Words, with reſpect to the time he believes they point at; but he has not Succeeded in the Attempt (k). "Having attained to a venerable and "decrepit Old Age, he piouſly quitted the Earth "for Heaven at the end of the Year 1559, at that "Juncture when the Charming Hopes of Peace began to appear after a Bloody War, which divided "the moſt Potent Monarchs". But the Treaty of Cateau in Cambreſis which gave Peace to Europe was concluded the 3d of April 1559. The World was not then in hopes of this Peace at the end of that Year. Hence doubtleſs Mr. Moreri was led into the Miſtake he hath committed in placing this Civilian's Death in 1559. He hath been guilty of another Fault which Mr. Bullart might have helped him to avoid. He faith Michael de l'Hôpital wrote a Poem in Honour of the Tiraqueau's, when he ought with Bullart to have ſaid (l) in Honour of Tiraquellus's Writings. To ſpeak exactly he ought to have ſaid that Michael de l'Hôpital addreſſed one of his Poems to Tiraquellum. Ghilini is yet more miſtaken than Mr. Bullart, with reſpect to the Circumſtances which Sainte Marthe made uſe of. Ghilini, I ſay (m), believed that the Year 1556 preceded the Peace of Cateau, betwixt Philip the IId. and Henry the IId. but a few days. 'Tis a Blunder, and a falſity to Aſſert as he doth, (n) that Tiraquellus Died the 23d of December 1556.

(C) Some Plagiaries took more from him than he took from others.] He accuſes Bartholomew Chaſſanæus of having ſtolen from his Book de legibus connubialibus above ſix hundred Pages intire, without making any Alterations. (o) In hunc furti nomine vehementiſſime invehitur Tiraquellus cum (p) alibi tum in tractatu de utroque retractu (q), ubi dicit eum pluſquam ſexcentas paginas integras ne vocabulo quidem mutato ex legibus ſuis connubialibus in tractatum ſuum de gloria mundi tranſcripſiſſe. Chaſſanæus accuſed Tiraquellus of having ſtolen ſeveral things from Cœlius Rhodiginus. The accuſed juſtified himſelf and charged him in his turn. His Accuſation is better grounded than his Adverſary's (r).

(A) To the Anger of Minerva.] It will be very proper to compare this place of Apollodorus with a Hymn of (s) Callimachus, which ſays that Minerva having been ſeen by Tireſias, while ſhe was Bathing her ſelf in Company with Chariclo in the Fountain of Hippocrene, had no ſooner declared that he ſhould ſee no more, than he loſt his Eyes. Chariclo was very much afflicted at this Misfortune of her Son. Minerva to comfort her, aſſured her, that it was an Irrecoverable Law of the Deſtinies, that all thoſe who ſaw a Deity without leave, (t) ſhould be ſeverely Chaſtized, and that a time would come when ſhe wou'd be look'd upon as a happy Woman, becauſe her Son came off only with the loſs of his Eyes. Minerva farther added out of her great Affection for Chariclo, that ſhe would render Tireſias the moſt excellent Diviner in the World; that ſhe would perfectly inform him in the Preſages deducible from the flight of Birds; that ſhe would give him a Staff which ſhould ſerve him inſtead of a Guide; that ſhe would give him a long Life; and that he ſhould be the only Knowing Man in Hell, and that Pluto ſhould particularly Honour him.

(B) To underſtand all the Language of Birds.] Ἅπασαν ὀρνίθων φωνὴν ποιῆσαι συνιέναι: Omnium avium vocem feciſſe ut intelligeret. Methinks this favour of Minerva will not be underſtood in its full extent, if it be ſaid only that ſhe Communicated to Tireſias a perfect knowledge of all the Preſages which depend on the Singing of Birds: We muſt further

(d) Ovid. in epiſt. Herod. epiſt. 4. v. 89.

(e) See the ... Vol. of ... the Che- ... vræana ... pag. 115. ... Dutch ... Edit.

(f) A ... Civi- ... of ... ris.

(g) Mena- ... giana pag. ... 27. of the ... Dutch ... Edition.

... is fur- ... faid ... be De- ... ed ... Maid, ... at ... onths ... was ... livered ... three ... s.

(h) Thuan. ... ſupra.

(i) Sam- ... martha ... s, Elog. ... 1. ... m. 35.

(k) Bullart, Academie des Sciences tom. 1. pag. 226.

(l) Bullart ibid.

(m) Ghilini, teatro tom. 2. pag. 18.

(n) Id. ib.

(o) Jacobus Thomaſius, de plagio literario n. 385. p.m. 169. He quotes Speckh. Cent. I. qu. 88. n. 10. p. 376.

(p) Thomaſius quotes here ſeveral Paſſages out of Tiraquellus in leges connubiales.

(q) Thomaſius quotes here §. 1. gl. 9. n. 76. circa fin.

(r) See Thomaſius ubi ſupra n. 563. 564. pag. 249.

(s) Εἰς λουτρὰ τῆς Παλλάδος. In lavacrum Palladis.

(t) See an Inſtance of it in th Text of the Article Adonis.

suppoſe

the Language of Birds. She alſo gave him a Staff, with which he could guide his Steps as ſurely as when he had Eyes. Heſiod gives the Story a different turn; he ſays that Tireſias having found two Serpents coupled, he ſtruck them with his (C) Staff *, and was immediately turned into a Woman; that at the expiration of a certain time † he again found the ſame Animals coupled, and reaſſumed the Male Sex. Now as he || had taſted the Pleaſures of both Sexes, he was choſen Judge of a Diſpute betwixt Jupiter and Juno, on the Queſtion, whether Women had a larger ſhare than Men of the Venereal Pleaſure. Jupiter affirmed it, Juno denied it. Tireſias decided (D) againſt the Goddeſs Juno, who was on that ſuppoſe that they meant that Birds interchangeably impart their Thoughts by their Notes as Men do by Words; and that Tireſias received of Minerva the gift of Interpreting this Language of Birds. Porphyrius takes it in this manner (a); for imagining that Brutes have not only the faculty of Reaſoning, but alſo that of Speaking to one another, he ſaith, that Apollonius Tyanæus, Melampus, Tireſias, and Thales underſtood Animals. It is related of Melampus (b) that ſome Serpents having licked his Ears whilſt he Slept, were the cauſe, that when he awaked he underſtood what the Birds ſaid as they flew over his Head; and that afterwards he declared to Men the future Events he learned of that way. Qui credit iſta & Melampodi profecto aures lambendo dediſſe intellectum avium ſermonis dracones non abnuet. Theſe are Pliny's Words (c), who immediately after adds that Democritus mentions the Names of certain Birds, whoſe Blood mingled together would produce a Serpent, which would impart to him that Eats it the underſtanding of the Dialogues of the Birds. Vel quæ Democritus tradit nominando aves, quarum confuſo ſanguine ſerpens gignatur, quem quiſquis ederit intellecturus ſit alitum colloquia. The Jews and ſeveral Mahometans aſſert that Solomon underſtood this Language (d). To return to Tireſias, if we well take Apollodorus's Expreſſion, to ſignify only that Tireſias perfectly underſtood that ſort of Divination, which was properly called Augury, (or Divining by Birds) Ælian will inform us (f) that Tireſias became principally Famous on this account. Barthius (g) fancies this utterly contrary to Statius; but this Imagination is only Founded on the falſe Suppoſition that this Poet introduced Tireſias deſpiſing Auguries. I aſſert that this Suppoſition is falſe, to prove which againſt Barthius, I need only quote page 1069, of the 2d Tome of his own Notes on Statius, where he acknowledges that Tireſias declares, that the other ways of founding the Intentions of the Gods, had not afforded him ſuch a profound Knowledge of Futurity, as what he had acquired by the Invocation of the Manes: Is the not acknowledging of a thing for the very beſt, to deſpiſe it?

(C) Struck them with his Staff.] Others ſay that he trode upon them: (h) In monte Cyllenio Tireſias dracones coeuntes calcaſſe dicitur: ob id in mulieris formam verſus, ut Ovidius refert. Deinde monitus ſortibus in eundem locum rediit, & in figuram priſtinam. Before Lutatius, Hyginus had told us, (i) In monte Cyllenio Tireſias Everis filius paſtor dracones venerantes dicitur baculo percuſſiſſe, alias calcaſſe, ob id in mulieris figuram eſt converſus: Poſtea monitus à ſortibus in eodem loco, dracones cum calcaſſet, redit in priſtinam ſpeciem. The Commentators are very much puzled about thoſe words, alias calcaſſe; but why don't they take alias for an Adverb, after which there is no need of imagining that a gloſs hath ſlipt out of the Margin into the Text. Hyginus might very well mention both, in order to comprehend both Traditions: But if nothing be wanting in the two mentioned Paſſages, we may juſtly be ſurprized that theſe Authors ſhould omit ſome eſſential Circumſtances. The firſt forgot that Tireſias met a ſecond time the Serpents coupled, and renewed his firſt Blow; he forgot, I ſay, that this was neceſſary, in order to reſtore him to his Manhood; he pretends he was only obliged to return to the place. The other forgets the firſt of theſe two things. Ovid (k) with all his Prolixity likewiſe forgets it. Heſiod in Apollodorus hath alſo omitted the laſt of theſe two Circumſtances; he hath not told us that Tireſias ſtruck the ſecond time. But Phlegon and Fulgentius have remembred them both. Tho' on the other ſide Phlegon hath his peculiar Variations; he (l) will have it that Tireſias ſtruck one of the Serpents the firſt time, and the other the ſecond; but doth not allow him to have ſtruck them both each time. Euſtathius and the Scholiaſt on Homer (m), as alſo Tzetzes on Lycophron ſay, that the firſt time Tireſias killed the Female and became a Woman, and afterwards killing the Male he was changed to his Priſtine Sex; and that this happened on Mount Cithæron (n), and not on Mount Cyllene (o).

(D) Tireſias decided againſt the Goddeſs Juno.] We are told that to give the more judicial Air to this Deciſion, he took into his Hand the Balance with which Juſtice is Painted. He weighed the whole Pleaſure in diſpute, then he made the Diviſion, and aſſigned to each Sex its Lot or Quota in Weight and Meaſure; and pronounced that the whole being divided into ten parts the Woman had nine, and the Man one.

> Οἴην μὲν μοίρην δέκα μοιρῶν τέρπεται ἀνήρ,
> Τὰς δὲ δέκ' ἐμπίπλησι γυνὴ τέρπουσα νόημα.

> Parte una è denis mas partibus oblectatur;
> At mulier ſolidum coitus capit ipſa decuncem.

Apollodorus, (p) who cites theſe two Verſes tells us juſt before, if we follow the preſent Miſerable State of his Greek Text, (q) that the Pleaſure being divided into nineteen parts the Man enjoys nine, and the Woman the other ten; at which Juno was ſo Incenſed, that ſhe deprived him of his Sight. Two convincing Reaſons offer themſelves to ſhew that this place is Corrupted; firſt, nothing can be more flat or inſipid, and more remote from the deſign of the Inventers of this Chimerical Diſpute, than to Condemn Juno for ſo inconſiderable a difference. I ſay nothing of the ſevere Puniſhment which ſhe inflicted on her Judge for a Sentence ſo little diſtant from Truth; for I ſhould be anſwered that her Character is (r) Fierce, Cholerick and Vindicative, and that on this occaſion her Reſentment exceeded the bounds of Reaſon.

> (s) Gravius Saturnia juſto
> Nec pro materia fertur doluiſſe, ſuique
> Judicis æterna damnavit lumina nocte.

The other reaſon is, that Apollodorus would be utterly void of Judgment, if after having related the ſubſtance of the Deciſion one way, he ſhould ſoon after make appear by citing the words of the Sentence, that he had miſerably Falſified it. If this blow may be warded off by ſaying that we have only a ſmall Abridgment of Apollodorus, what ſhall we urge againſt ſo many other Authors, who follow the two Verſes he hath cited, and not his preſent Text? Phlegon (t) and Lutatius (u) admit exactly the Proportions expreſs'd in theſe Verſes. The Scholiaſt (w) on Homer cites theſe two Lines with a very inconſiderable Alteration. Euſtathius (x) quotes ſome words of them, and Lucian doth not much differ from them at the bottom. (y) Fulgentius diſagrees leſs ſtill, and the Scholiaſt on Juvenal ſtill leſs (a) explaining a place where this Poet ſaith that thoſe Women who were moſt fond of manly Occupations, and moſt avoided thoſe of their Sex, would not become Men: The Reaſon he aſſigns for it, is the too unequal diviſion of the Venereal Pleaſure.

> Quæ fugit à ſexu, viros amat, hæc tamen ipſa
> Vir nollet fieri; nam quantula noſtra voluptas!

I ought not to forget that Barthius ſeems very happy in his Correction of the Text of Apollodorus in pag. 319. and 1066. of the 2d Volume on Statius.

Some may aſk whether this pretended Judgment of Tireſias, is ſupported by Natural or Moral Reaſons

---

* See in the Remark C. how this Fable is variouſly reported.

† Ovid is the only author, that I know of, who ſpecifies the time: He makes it 7. years.

|| Venus huic erat utraque nota. Ovid. Metam. l. 3.

(a) Porphyr. l. 3. de abſtinent. See the Article Pereira.

(b) Apollodor. Bibl. l. 1. p. 46.

(c) Plin. lib. 10. cap. 49.

(d) Vide Pfeiffer. Theol. Judaicæ atque Mohamm. pag. 307. 308.

(e) Bonaventure Baron in the 1. tome of the Scotus defenſus, mentions a Franciſcan Monk, who underſtood the Language of Beaſts, and by that means foretold things to come.

(f) Animal. hiſtor. l. 8. c. 5. See alſo Euripides in Phœnic. v. 846.

(g) Barthius, in Statium, tom. 2. pag. 1065. 1149.

(h) Lutatius, in Stat. Thebaid. l. 2.

(i) Cap. 75.

(k) Metamorph. lib. 3.

(l) Phlegon de rebus mirabil. c. 4.

(m) In Odyſſ. K, v. 492.

(n) In Bœotia.

(o) In Arcadia.

(p) Apoll. Biblioth. pag. 155.

(q) [illegible] De novem ac decem quæ inter concubitum voluptatis partes capiantur, novem mares ac mulierem decem ſentire. Ib. ibid. pag. 191.

(r) Et germana Jovis, Saturnique altera proles, Iram tantos volvis ſub pectore fluctus. Æneid. 12. v. 830.

(s) Ovid. Metam. 3.

(t) Phleg. ubi ſupra.

(u) In Statium, apud Barthium tom. 2. pag. 318.

(w) In Odyſſ. K, v. 494. Vide Munckerum in Hygin. pag. 128.

(x) In eumd. loc. Odyſſ.

(y) In amoribus, where he ſays that according to Tireſias. Ἡ θήλεια τέρψει ὅλῃ μοίρᾳ πλεονεκτεῖ τὴν ἄρρενα, muliebris delectatio tota parte maſculam ſuperat (z). Tireſias dixit tres uncias habere virum amoris, & novem feminam. Fulgent. Mytol. l. 2. c. 8. (a) Una uncia libidinis eſt in maſculis, undecim in feminis. Scholiaſt. Juven. in Sat. 6. v. 253.

that occaſion ſo enraged that ſhe (E) Blinded him: But his loſs of ſight was made up (F) by the gift of Prophecy which Jupiter beſtowed on him. He acquired a great Reputation

ſons. I refer them to the Phyſicians for thoſe deducible from Nature in all probability, who will hardly give a clear deciſion of this Queſtion. And as for Moral Reaſons I do not believe any much ſtronger can be alledged, than that a wiſe and good Providence, ſuch as that of God, hath ſo ordered things by way of Compenſation, that he hath multiplied the Female Pleaſures in proportion to all the diſguſts, Uneaſineſs and Pain which they endure from their Conception to their Delivery. On this foot the ſhare of Pleaſure ought to be prodigiouſly unequal in favour of that Sex: But beſides that the Law of Compenſations would be attended with Conſequences that ſhou'd lead one too far; it may be ſaid that God hath thouſands of ways of Compenſating beſides this, and ſo that nothing can be determined about any of theſe ways. But the beſt Morality of this Fable is never to talk of this pretended Hiſtory of Tireſias, without adding that it is falſe as well in Fact as Reaſon. The neceſſity of which Addition Brantome will confirm to you. I knew, ſays he, (b) " a Young Lady, of a very good and " great Family, who was Ruined and became a " Whore, by having heard her School-Maſter relate " the Story or rather Fable of Tireſias, who having " experienced both Sexes, was choſen by Jupiter " and Juno to decide a Diſpute betwixt that " God and that Goddeſs, which Sex enjoyed moſt " Pleaſure in the act of Copulation. The dele- " gated Judge pronounced againſt Juno, that the " Woman, was by much the moſt Happy herein: " The Goddeſs enraged at the Sentence againſt her " ſtruck the poor Judge Blind. 'Tis not much to " be wondred at, if this Girl was tempted by ſuch a " Story: For without doubt ſhe had often heard " from her Companions, or amongſt other Women, " that the Men were always in eager purſuit of, " and expreſſed a great Pleaſure in it; and that the " Woman according to Tireſias, had yet a greater " Dividend of thoſe Joys, and of conſequence ſhe " muſt take a Taſte of them. Such Leſſons are " indeed very proper for Girls! Are there no other " for them? But their Maſters Anſwer that they " will know every thing, and if in the courſe of " their Reading, Hiſtories or Fables occurr, which " either want Explanation (or Explain themſelves) " they Explain them, and muſt not ſkip them, or " turn to the next Page. How many Studious " Girls have been undone reading this very Story, " that of Biblis and Caunus, and ſuch like in Ovid's " Metamorphoſis?

There having been ſome People, who ſaid that I was in the wrong to ſuppoſe that this Queſtion ſhould be referr'd to Phyſicians. I ſhall ſhew them that it has been diſcuſs'd already in the Works of one of that Profeſſion. I can Juſtify it with ſo much the more Liberty, becauſe my Quotation will be only in Italian or Latin. (†) Queſto ſuo donare naſce dalla sfrenata ſua libidine, e dal prendere maggior piacere nel atto venereo, che gli huomini non pigliano, e non ſentono: Come prova Avicenna nel libro nono, e venteſimoprimo de gli animali, & Hali Abbate nel ſeſto libro della ſua Teorica in queſto propoſito diſſe, Duplicia eſt in fæmina concubitus voluptas, quia præter ſeminis motum, & orificii vulvæ in ſuggendo quoque naſcitur oblectatio, vulva ipſa diverſimode mota; il che conferma anco Galeno nel quarto libro de morbis, & ſymptomatis. E lo dimoſtra il giuditio di Tireſia, ſecondo i Poeti.——E lo confermò anco Pietro Aponenſe ſopra il decimo quinto problema d'Ariſtotile; benche Polibio in quel ſuo libro de genitura proui il contrario, facendo due voluttà; voluttà intenſiva, & eſtenſiva: voluttà intenſiva chiamando l'ultima, & eſtrema nel mandare fuora il ſeme genitale, & in queſta uuole, che ſi diletta più l'huomo: Eſtenſiva intende quella, la quale ſi piglia innanzi l'emiſſione nel maneggiarſi: & in queſta uuoles ſi diletta più la donna, onde Gorreo Pariſino medico dottiſſimo nelle annotationi al libro di Polibio ſcriſſe le ſeguenti parole à favor delle Donne. Tametſi maribus ſemen calidius acrius copioſiuſque ineſt, motuquè ipſi majore quam fæminæ in coitu concutiuntur, pluſque multò caloris, & ſpiritus obtineut, quamobrem ex his major eſſe maris quam fœminæ videri poſſit. Verum in fæmina alia privatim conſiderare oportet, quæ inter præcipuas, & potiſſimas voluptatis venereæ cauſſas eſſe poſſunt. Si quidem ejus uterus magno virilis Seminis deſiderio tenetur, ipſumque mirum in modum appetit, & attrahendo, ſugendo, concipiendoque impenſiſſimè delectatur; eſt enim ea in re uterus ventriculo ſimilis: ſicut enim iſte ſuavibus cibis, potibuſque gaudet, eoſque avidiſſimè amplectitur; ita ille ſemen amat, habetque gratiſſimum. Mario Equicola nel quarto libro de natura amoris. Dice, che ſe ciò foſſe vero, che le donne haveſſero maggior piacere che gl' huomini non hanno nell' atto venereo, ſempre le femine ricercherebbono i maſchi, del che (dice egli) ſi vede tutto il contrario.

(E) So enraged that ſhe blinded him.] Apollodorus doth not acquaint us how: But Hyginus informs us that it was with her own Hand, (c) Juno irata manu averſa eum excæcavit. Phlegon's expreſſion may very well be interpreted that ſhe did it with her Bodkin, κατανύξαι αὐτοῦ τὰς ὀφθαλμάς. The Scholiaſt on Statius adds that ſhe cut off his Hands beſides; illa irata manus ejus præcidit & excæcavit; but he being the only Author who ſays this, 'tis probable this place is corrupted. (d) Barthius corrects it thus, manus ei ſuperjecit & excæcavit; and confirms his conjecture from Apollodorus, who ſpeaking of the Puniſhment inflicted by Minerva on Tireſias, ſaith ſhe did it with her own Hands. τὴν δὲ ταῖς χερσὶ ὀφθαλμὰς αὐτοῦ καταλαβομένην πηρὸν ποιῆσαι.

(F) Was made up.] He acquieſced in the Exchange; it doth not in the leaſt appear that he regretted the loſs of his Eyes: ſhe is never introduced deploring his deſtiny; this had been indecent, after the reſplendent light which his mind was ſuppoſed to have received. (e) Augurem Tireſiam quem ſapientem fingunt Poetæ nunquam inducunt deplorantem cæcitatem ſuam. At vero Polyphemum Homerus cum immanem ferumque finxiſſet, cum ariete etiam colloquentem facit, ejuſque laudare fortunas quod quo vellet ingredi poſſet, & quæ vellet attingeret. Rectè hic quidem, nihilo enim erat ipſe cyclops quàm aries ille prudentior: 'Tis for Cyclopes; tis for Ignorant Men to believe that by the loſs of Sight a Man is deprived of the joy of this World. It is true that all the unthinking crew are not agreed on this Principle, Witneſs the two Beggers mentioned in the 19. Seree of Bouchet. They were at a Church Door and could not agree what was the joy of this World; for the Blind Man cried out, beſtow your Alms on a poor Man, who has loſt the joy of this World: The other Raſcal, who by a Faulcon-Shot had loſt what ſhould have been in his Breeches, told him he lyed, and averred that it was he who had loſt the joy of Life. We are told of a Princeſs who would have put it out of diſpute by condemning the firſt of theſe Beggars. The Story runs thus: (f) " A Princeſs of great " Virtue who remained a Virgin all her life, " continued the Duke, loſt her ſight in her old " Age, after which, a Poor Blind Man was led " to her Coach ſide where he immediately ſaid, " my Good Lady have pity on a Poor Man who " hath loſt the joy of this World: The Princeſs " hearing this asked one of her Women, what's the " matter with that Man, is he then an Eunuch? No " my Princeſs, replyed the Waiting Woman, 'tis be- " cauſe he is Blind, alas Poor Man! He is in the " right, ſaid the Princeſs, indeed I did not think of that " in the leaſt. The Natural Simplicity of the " Princeſs's Queſtion pleaſantly enough diſcove- " red what Opinion ſhe had of the joys of Life." It is very probable that Malherbe would have decided the diſpute conformably to the Opinion of the fellow, who was maimed by a Faulcon-Shot. For deficiency in that part made him inconſolable, he had rather choſen to be in a Condition (g) to Reap the Ladies Favours than to obtain the higheſt Dignities of the King his Maſter. By the pathetick Air (h) of his Complaints one would be apt to judge that he had been more than once in the ſame diſagreable Condition of the falſe Hermit, who in vain had the Charming Angelica at his Mercy.

Gia (i) reſupina ne l' arena giace
Atutte voglie del Vecchio rapace.

Egli l'abbraccia, à piacer la tocca.
Et ella dorme; è non può fare iſchermo;
Hor le bacia il bel petto, hora la bocca;
Non è chi'l veggia in quel loco aſpro & ermo.

Ma

(b) Brantome, Memoires des Dames galantes tom. 2. pag. 45.

(†) Io- ph Paſſi the cademy the gnori ccou- ti di dua, & formi di avenna, the 33 d 34 ages of Book lled i onnes chi fetti, inted at enice 618, in o. 'tis 4th dition.

(c) Hygin. c. 75. Vigenere upon Philoſtratus, pag. 50. of the 2 tome in 4. renders it, Junon indignée de cela lui donna une arriere-main dont il demeura aveugle.

(d) Barth. in Stat. tome 2. p. 318. See alſo Munckerus in Hygin. pag. 128.

(e) Cicero Tuſculan, 5. circa fin.

(f) Mr. de Cailliere, of the French Academy, Recueil des bons contes & des bons mots pag. 132. Dutch Edit. 1693.

(g) See Malherbe Remark B.

(h) See his Letter to Balzac, in the Collection of new Letters, Printed at Paris 1642. pag. 65.

(i) Arioſto, Orlando furioſo, canto ottavo, ſtanza 48. & ſeq.

Reputation (G) by his Divining Science, notwithſtanding which he was Ignorant that the Water of the Fountain Tilphuſa would be Fatal to him; for having fled with his Country-Men (H) in the time of the Second Theban War, he drank of this Water and Dyed. This is what Apollodorus affords on this Subject *. We are informed by Strabo † that the Thebans then took refuge on the Mountain Tilphuſa, at the foot of which there was a Fountain of the ſame Name, and Tireſias's Tomb. Pauſanias agrees β with Strabo concerning the place where Tireſias's Tomb was Situated. Which was, I own it, not very far from Alalcomenium; nevertheleſs Moreri is very much miſtaken, when he ſaith γ Alalcomenium was remarkable for Tireſias's Tomb. I have ſpoken in its proper place, (in the Article of Manto,) of that Worthy Daughter of this great Diviner to whom ſhe ſerved as a δ Guide, and was the Staff of his old Age: For it muſt not be forgotten that (I) he lived very long. Some Writers beſtow on him another Daughter Named Hiſtoris ζ, who by an Ingenious Stratagem deceived the Goddeſs Lucina, and occaſioned the Happy delivery of Alcmena, whoſe Labour had been prolonged by that Goddeſs. There was a certain Book which went under Tireſias's Name by means of an Impoſture which hath Hundreds of times been practiſed. This Book treated of the preſages of Incenſe, de thuris Signis. It is twice cited η by the Scholiaſt on Statius. Tireſias practiſed all ſorts of predictions; he made uſe of Pyromancy θ, Capnomancy, Necromancy, &c. The laſt of which, conſiſting in the raiſing up of the Dead, he preferred before κ the reſt; and exerciſed it very imperiouſly

Ma ne l'incontro il ſuo deſtrier trabocca;
Ch'al deſio non riſponde il corpo infermo;
Era mal'atto, perche havea tropp' anni,
E potrà peggio, quanto più l'affanni.
Tutte le vie, tutti li modi tenta;
Ma quel pigro rozzon non però ſalta.
Indarno il fren gli ſcote, e tormenta,
E non può far, che tenga la teſta alta.

Racan, Malherbe's faithful Scholar, had alſo his Maſter's taſte; he would not have parted with the Remainder of his Vigour for all the Triumphs of the greateſt Conquerors, nor for all the Policy of the Prime Miniſters. I am not at all ſurprized, ſays he in (k) a Letter to Balzac, that N. hath adventured to cenſure your Eloquence, ſince Mr. de Malherbe hath had the Impudence to accuſe me of frigidity, when he himſelf is nothing but meer Ice, and his laſt Miſtreſs Died of Age, the laſt hard Winter: In boaſting of the Miracles of his Youth, he plays a ſure Game, for I know none who can give him the Lye; for my Part I would not Exchange my reſt of vigorous Years for the Victories of the Prince of Orange, or the Wiſdom of Cardinal Richelieu, and ſhould be very uneaſy to be in ſuch a State as would render his reproach juſt. Malherbe's raillery was in the following Words: (l) "As for Paſtorals his Affair ſucceeds the beſt in the World, but certainly as to what relates to the Shepherdeſſes it could not go worſe. This requires a ſort of Sollicitude of which his lazineſs is incapable. If he attacks a place he doth it ſo faintly, that it would be Burthenſome to him if he had it; and if he takes it, he ſo ſlightly keeps it that he gives reaſon to believe that a Woman has been very much ſurpriſed when ſhe has Broke her Faſt, for ſuch a wretched Morſel." Malherbe doth not ſpeak of himſelf in the third Perſon as I once thought: He ſpeaks of his Diſciple Racan, and 'tis on this Account that Racan juſtifies himſelf, and inſults the other in the paſſage juſt now cited. But let it be how it will, here are a Couple of Souls to which baſe Minerva could not have made amends, if inſtead of blinding them, as ſhe did Tireſias, ſhe had made them Eunuchs.

I CONCLUDE with the thought of a Philoſopher, who was of a Sect more Heretical in their Notions of Pleaſure, than that of Epicurus. He had loſt his Eyes, and hearing the Good Women deplore his Condition, he asked them whether Nocturnal Enjoyments were not to be accounted pleaſures. (a) Illud Antipatri Cyrenaici eſt quidem paulo obſcœnius, ſed non abſurda ſententia eſt. Cujus cæcitatem quum mulierculæ lamentarentur, quid agitis, inquit? an vobis nulla videtur voluptas eſſe nocturna?

(G) He acquired a great Reputation.] This plainly appears by Sophocles and ſeveral other Ancient Authors. He was the only wiſe Perſon in (b) Hell, if we believe Homer.

Τῷ (c) ϗ τεθνειῶτι νόον πόρε Περσεφόνεια
Οἴῳ πεπνῦσθαι· τοὶ δὲ, σκιαὶ ἀΐσσουσιν.

Huic etiam mortuo mentem tribuit Proſerpina
Soli ut ſaperet, reliqui verò umbræ circumvolitant.

He was Honoured (d) as a God after his Death. Yet I cannot find in the 9th book of Strabo, what Charles Stephens, Lloyd, Moreri and Hofman quote, that the Thebans paid divine Honours to Tireſias interred near Tilphuſa. I find only in Pauſanias (e) that they had in their City a place called Tireſias's obſervatory, οἰωνοσκοπεῖον Τειρεσίου, (which probably was the place where he contemplated the Auguries) and an Honorary Tomb, or Cenotaphium: For the Thebans owned that he Dyed near Haliartus (f); and that they had not his Tomb amongſt them. This is a very odd Argument; but it doth not much concern us. Thoſe Gentlemen who have cited Strabo, would have found their account much better in Diodorus Siculus; who informs us (g) that the Thebans celebrated a Pompous Funeral to Tireſias and paid him Divine Honours.

(H) Having fled with his Countrey-Men.] Mr. Moreri hath very much miſtaken his original Charles Stephens, when he ſaith that Tireſias being in Exile near the Fountain Tilphuſa, Died there. Charles Stephens's Latin runs thus, juxta fontem ejuſdem nominis, ubi profugus diem ſuum obiit: Which is taken from Strabo, ὑφ' ᾧ Τίλφωσσα κρήνη ϗ τὸ τοῦ Τειρεσίου μνῆμα ἐκεῖ τελευτήσαντος κατὰ τὴν φυγὴν, ſub quo fons eſt Tilphoſa, & monumentum Tireſiæ qui extorris ibi mortem obiit. If Mr. Moreri had been acquainted with the Hiſtory of Tireſias, he had not rendred the Word Profugus by that of Exile. From hence we may infer that Tranſlators are liable to ſtrange Blunders, when they don't underſtand their Subject; for they may indeed know 3 or 4 Significations of the ſame Word, but this doth not hinder them from chooſing that which doth not properly agree in this or that place. I obſerve a conſiderable difference betwixt Strabo and Pauſanias. The firſt makes Tireſias Die in his flight without falling into his Enemies power: The ſecond on the contrary Building his Relation on the Grecian Hiſtories, ſaith (h) that the Argivi having take the City of Thebes, were carrying Tireſias with the reſt of their Booty to the Temple of Delphi, but that he having drank of the Water of Tilphuſa Dyed by the Way. Diodorus Siculus (i) relates the Fact to the ſame purpoſe as Strabo. An Author (k) whoſe Memory I Honour, ſaith that Tireſias in his latter Days retired to the Mountain call'd Tilphuſius, to end his life in Repoſes remote from the tumults of the City. He doth not cite any Authority; but I doubt not that he had met with it in ſome celebrated Writer. This retreat of Tireſias was not at all Voluntary.

(I) He lived very long.] Hyginus, Phlegon, and Lucatius agree that Jupiter repaired Tireſias's loſs of Sight, by granting him the knowledge of Futurity, and a life ſeven times as long as that of others, Septem ætates (l). Agatharcides mentions but five imperiouſly (K), and would not ſuffer the Ghoſts to delay their Appearance. He being Blind, Manto x was obliged to inform him of the Appearances of Fire, and Smoak, &c. Lucian in his Treatiſe of Aſtrology obſerves that Tireſias taught that the Planets have not all the ſame Virtue, nor the ſame Sex.

---

* Biblioth. lib. 3. pag. 191. edit. Salmur. 1661.

† Lib. 9. pag. 285. See also pag. 281.

β Lib. 9. pag. [illegible]

γ In the Article of Alalcomenium; for he forgot it in that of Tireſias: He places that Monument right, and quotes Strabo.

δ O noſtræ regimen viresque ſenectæ. Stat. Theb. lib. 4. v. 536.

ζ Pauſan. lib. 9. pag. 290.

η See Barthius in Stat. tom. 2. p. 1106. & tom. 3. pag. 673.

θ Ille coronatos jamdudum amplectitur ignes, Fatidicum ſorbens vultu flagrante vaporem. Stat. Theb. lib. 10. v. 598. See alſo Seneca in Oedipo, act. 2. ſc. 2.

κ See the end of the Remark B.

(k) Racan, Letter to Balzac, in the 2. Tome of the Collection of new Letters, Printed at Paris by Touſſaint Quinet in 1634. p. 295. and ſeq.

(l) Malherbe Letter to Balzac p. 61. of the Collection of New Letters, Printed at Paris in 1642. (a) Cicero Tuſcul. lib. 5. fol. 278. B. (b) See what has been quoted out of Callimachus in the Remark A.

(c) Odyſſ. [illegible]

(d) Cic. [illegible]

(e) Lib. 9. pag. [illegible]

(f) The Tranſlator [illegible] from [illegible] Tilphuſius.

(g) [illegible] in the Tranſlation found at [illegible] Quem in civitatem magna cum pompa ſepeliere, Deorum illi honores tribuentes, there is ſibi inſtead of ipſi.

(h) Pauſan. lib. 9. pag. 307.

(i) Diod. Sicul. lib. 5. cap. 6.

(k) Petrus Muſſardus (de quo vide Decherrum de Script. adeſpot. pag. 337. edit. 1686.) hiſtor. Deor. fatidicorum, pag. 8.

(l) Some render it ſeven Ages.

He was ‖ the inventer of Auſpices: He was Worſhipped as a God at Orchomenus, his Oracle was Famous there for ſeveral Ages, but ‡ ſilenced at laſt after a Plague had rendred the City deſolate. Perhaps all the directors of the Oracles periſhed by the contagion: or perhaps they believed that a God who ſuffered the Inhabitants of Orchomenus to be deſtroyed by the Plague, was not capable of predicting future Events. I wholly omit ſupernatural Reaſons.

TISSANDIER (N.) Author of a Book no otherwiſe known to me than by a Letter of Balzac. He Dyed very (Y) old in the Year 1628. La Croix du Maine doth not mention him, (Z) and I think Du Verdier Vau-Privas. has wholly omitted him.

TITIUS (CAIUS) A Roman Orator and Poet, was a Roman Knight. He carried Eloquence as far as poſſible (A) without underſtanding Greek. His Orations were very polite and abounded with Subtilties and Numerous examples, on which Account they ſeem'd to be in the Attick Stile. This Subtilty of thought did not ſucceed on the Stage, when he attempted it in his Tragedies, as he had uſed it in his pleadings. It did not nobly enough keep up the Gravity of the Tragick x Stat. & Senec. ib.

‖ Auſpicium Tireſias Thebanus (invenit.) Plinius lib. 7. c. 56. pag. 106.

‡ Plut. de oracul. defectu. pag. 434.

---

five Ages: Lucian ſix: But according to Tzetzes ſome made Tireſias to have lived Eleven Ages (m).

(K) Exerciſed it very imperiouſly.] Seneca makes him ſpeak theſe menacing Words.

Carmenque (n) magicum volvit, & rabido MINAX
Decantat ore, quicquid aut placat leves,
Aut cogit umbras.

Statius introduces him Armed with threats and reproaches.

Atque (o) hic Tireſias nondum adventantibus umbris
Feſtor, ait, Divos quibus hunc ſacravimus ignem,
Jam nequeo tolerare moram. Caſſuſne ſacerdos
Audior, an rabido jubeat ſi Theſſala cantu
Ibitis, & Scythicis quoties armata venenis
Colchis aget, trepido pallebunt tartara motu?
Noſtri cura minor! . . .

. . . . . .

Ne tenues annos nubemque hanc frontis opacæ
Spernite ne, moneo, & nobis ſævire facultas,
Scimus enim & quidquid dici noſcique timetis.

See in Lucian (p) a long train of threats uttered by the Theſſalian Magician againſt the infernal Gods. This Style was very common in the Magical Rites. A Pagan Philoſopher ridicules them with a great deal of Reaſon. (q) Πολλῷ δὲ τούτου ἀλογώτερον, τὸ μὴ δαίμονι, εἰ τύχοι, ἢ ψυχῇ τεθνηκότος, αὐτῷ δὲ τῷ βασιλεῖ Ἡλίῳ, ἢ Σελήνῃ, ἢ τινι τῶν κατ᾽ οὐρανὸν ἀνθρώπων τῷ τυχόντι ὑποχείριον ἀπειλὰς προσφέροντα ἐκφοβεῖν, ψευδόμενον ἵν᾽ ἐκεῖνοι ἀληθεύσωσι. Quodque omnium abſurdiſſimum non eſt, jam vulgari cuipiam Dæmoni, aut defuncti animæ, ſed ipſimet Soli ſyderum principi, Lunæ, reliquiſque Diis cæleſtibus, homo cuivis e Populi fæce obnoxius minas intentat, ut eos ad vera dicenda compellat, falſum vanumque terrorem oſtendit. This puts me in mind of our popular Stories concerning Magick. I don't ſpeak of the moſt common, but of thoſe which raiſe themſelves ſomewhat above the crowd. It is pretended that ſome Magicians exerciſe a ſort of conſtraining command over thoſe Spirits which they conjure. As abſurd as this may ſeem, it may be thought poſſible, if we ſhould once allow that certain Covenants or Treaties are made betwixt Men and evil Angels: For there being doubtleſs a ſubordination amongſt theſe Spirits, there may be ſome Dæmons who arbitrarily reign over ſeveral others. Cannot one of theſe Superiour Dæmons promiſe his Magician that he will Subject to him all the Spirits under his command? Cannot he promiſe him to threaten thoſe with his diſpleaſure who are reſty? Thuanus, who was preſent at a Dialogue betwixt the Sieur de Calignon and a famous Magician, relates that the Magician did not deny his commerce with thoſe Dæmons, but affirmed that Magick tended only to the doing good to Mankind, and that there was a very great difference between Sorcerers and Magicians. A Magician, continued he, hath no correſpondence with any other than the aerial and celeſtial Spirits, who are good and beneficent, and teach him a Thouſand very profitable Secrets, and beſides he commands thoſe Spirits. But a Sorcerer is a vile Slave to Terreſtrial Spirits naturally malignant and Enemies to Mankind. He added that there (a) were Schools of Magick in Spain, and that there had been alſo very Flouriſhing ones in Germany, which were moſtly diſperſed ſince Luther divulged his Hereſy. He did not confeſs to his Judges all that he owned to the Sieur Calignon; but this did not prevent the Parliament of Paris condemning him to Death on the evidence produced againſt him. The thing is remarkable enough to engage me to inſert it for my Readers uſe in Thuanus's own Words. (b) Magiam quam profitebatur Bellomontius, dæmonum, qui numinis divini particulæ ſunt, cum hominibus conciliatricem artem præclaram eſſe ad beneficium inventam non ad maleficium, quo Sortiarii qui vocantur vulgo utuntur, ipſi malorum ſpirituum vilia mancipia in craſſam ignorantiam demerſi, & veneno ac diris faſcinationibus eorum arbitrio perniciem humano generi machinantes, cum contra magi ipſis dæmonibus imperent, & eorum conſortio ac familiaritate arcana naturæ vulgo ignota nec libris prodita cognoſcere, futura rimari, mala declinare, pericula antevertere, amiſſa recuperare, corpora citerius quam humana ratione fieri poſſit, de loco in locum transferre, diſſidenteis componere, patres cum filiis, uxores cum maritis, & amicitiam cum iis quibus debet conciliare diſcant, denique ſibi rem cum aeriis ſpiritibus & cælo participantibus eſſe, qui natura benefici nihil niſi juvare ſciunt, cum terreſtres & ſubterranea incolentes, qui Sortiariis imperant, ſint maligni & nocere tantum noverint: tam præclaræ artis ſcholas (c)&c. See the remainder in the Margin of this Page. Let us conclude with Cicero's Words, who informs us that Tireſias was none of thoſe Wretched Diviners who get their Bread by their trade of ſelling Impoſtures. (d) Ante hos Amphiaraus & Tireſias non humiles & obſcuri, neque eorum ſimiles, ut apud Ennium eſt, qui ſui quæſtus cauſa fictas ſuſcitant ſententias, ſed clari & præſtantes viri qui avibus & ſignis admoniti futura dicebant, quorum de altero etiam apud inferos Homerus ait ſolum ſapere, cæteros umbrarum modo vagari.

(Y) He Dyed very old in the Year 1628.] See the Letter (e) Written the ſame Year by Balzac to one Mr. Tiſſandier, where he comforts him on the Death of his Uncle, who was as old as the Hereſy and older than the League; for he publiſhed a Book to forewarn France againſt the conception of this Monſter. I need not tell you theſe are Balzac's expreſſions.

(Z) And I think Du Verdier Vau-Privas.] I expreſs my ſelf thus, becauſe I had not leiſure to examine this Writer's bibliotheque Françoiſe page by page in ſearch of Tiſſandier. The Authors are there ranged according to their Chriſtian Names, and there is no Table of Sirnames added. Theſe are two inexcuſable Faults when they meet together. The firſt is ſupportable when it is alone, as it is in La Croix du Maine; but not to repair the firſt by a Table of Sirnames is to banter the World.

(A) He carried Eloquence as far as poſſible.] Cicero the beſt judge in the world gives him this teſtimonial. (f) Ejuſdem fere temporis fuit eques Romanus C. Titius: qui meo judicio eo perveniſſe videtur, quò potuit fere Latinus orator ſine Græcis literis, & ſine multo uſu pervenire. Hujus orationes tantum argutiarum, tantum exemplorum, tantum urbanitatis habent, ut pene Attico ſtylo ſcriptæ eſſe videantur. Eaſdem argutias in tragœdias ſatis ille quidem acute, ſed parum tragicè tranſtulit.

(B) When

(b) Thuanus devitæ ſuæ, lib. 6. pag. 1233. 1234.

(c) Id. ib.

(d) Cicero, lib. 1. de Divinat. fol. m. 310. C.

(e) 'Tis the 18. of the 8. Book in the Folio Edition.

(f) Cicero in Bruto, p. m. 280.

tragick Character *. When the conſul Fannius propoſed his Law, againſt Luxurious Feaſting, Titius made an Oration to the People to repreſent the utility of that Law. We ſhall ſee in the Remarks whether this Fact will aſſiſt us in the Diſcovery of the time when the Lex Fannia (B) was Eſtabliſh'd. This Oration of Titius clearly informs us that Drunkenneſs (C) was then at its higheſt pitch. To confound our Titius with a certain TITIUS who lived in Auguſtus's time is an intolerable miſtake in an interpreter of (D) Horace.

TORQUATO (Antony) a Famous Aſtrologer of the XVth Century, Born at Ferrara. He gave Mathias King of Hungary a Prediction in the Year 1480, which was very Fatal to Chriſtendom; for he threatned the intire Ruin of the Ottoman Empire after a fixed time, which cauſed the Hungarians to engage in a War † that Ruined them ||. Some of his predictions came to paſs, but the

* Cicero in Bruto, p. m. 185.

† See the Remark A.

|| See Leunclavius in Hiſtoriæ Muſulmanæ appendice.

(B) When the Lex Fannia was eſtabliſhed.] I have in another place (g) examined Glandorp's Opinion and found it ill grounded. This Author believes (h) that he who propoſed this Law was not Caius Fannius the Father, Conſul in the Year of Rome 592. but Caius Fannius the Son, Conſul in the Year of Rome 632. For this he offers but one proof taken from a paſſage of Aulus Gellius, which is of no Force. He would have offered ſomething more ſpecious if he had quoted Macrobius, who acquaints us that Titius contemporary of Lucilius adviſed the People to Eſtabliſh the Lex Fannia. (i). It is certain that Lucilius was Born in the beginning of the 7th Century of Rome: Which agrees wonderfully with Glandorp's Hypotheſis, for according to it Lucilius was Aged about Thirty, when the Lex Fannia was Eſtabliſh'd. The Orator who perſuaded the acceptance of this Law ought then to be Lucilius's contemporary. But if you place the Eſtabliſhment of that Law in the Year 593. this Orator and Lucilius did not live at the ſame time; and the former had been an Old Man in the time of the other's Youth, and conſequently Macrobius furniſhes a very plauſible proof for Glandorp. Which may be ſtrengthened by theſe Words of Cicero, Ejuſdem fere temporis fuit Eques Romanus C. Titius; for he had juſt ſpoke of three or four Orators who Flouriſhed towards the Year of Rome 660. Titius would come near to their time, if he recommended the Lex Fannia in the Year 632. But the diſtance of time between them and him would be found very great, if this Law was Eſtabliſh'd in 593. Notwithſtanding all theſe Reaſons I perſiſt in my Opinion declared in the Article Fannius. That paſſage in Pliny (k) which points out the preciſe interval of Eleven Years betwixt the Lex Fannia and the 3d. Punick War is more valid than ten citations, where it is only ſaid in general, ejuſdem ætatis, ejuſdem ferme temporis. Theſe looſe expreſſions, he lived near another's time, or in the ſame Age with him, will frequently admit of a great Latitude, and may be Lengthned or Shortned, and favour of a Man not very nice in Chronology, and who ſpeaks according to the confus'd Idea's of his Memory. But when an Author makes uſe of a determinate Number, when he Names exactly Eleven Years, 'tis a ſign that he took more pains, that he ſearched farther into the matter, and conſequently Pliny's teſtimony is here of very great Efficacy to fix the Lex Fannia in the Year 593, becauſe the Year 604 was the firſt Year of the 3d. Punic War. If we don't yield to theſe Reaſons, what ſhall we ſay, when we conſider that according to Macrobius the Lex Fannia was inacted in the Year 588. and nevertheleſs he Advances that Titius and Lucilius lived at the ſame time (a) or in the ſame century? I argue thus; either Macrobius was perfectly well acquainted with the Age of Lucilius, or he was not ſo well acquainted with it: If the firſt be true, we ſhall be obliged to conclude according to him, that an Orator who recommended a Law in 588, and a Poet Born 12 Years after, lived at the ſame time, and ſo his Words don't at all confirm Glandorp's Opinion: In the Second caſe they confirm it yet leſs; for no Chronological proofs can be drawn from a Man who ſpeaks at random without regard to exactneſs. As for Cicero's ejuſdem fere temporis, it is a Phraſe which doth not hinder us from believing that Titius made his Harangue in the Year 593. Obſerve that Afranius (b) imitated Titius. I don't offer this as a cogent proof or demonſtration that he was Younger, but only as a ſign that he was ſo. Now Afranius (c) was contemporary with Terence who died (d) in 594. Thus Cicero hath furniſhed us with a ſtrong proof againſt Glandorp. Let us then own that our Titius Flouriſhed about the Year of Rome 590.

(C) Drunkenneſs was then at its higheſt pitch.] The Judges drank ſo much Wine before they went to the Bench, that they were neceſſitated to Urine in every Corner. After having heard the State of the caſe, they cauſed the Witneſſes to be called, and in the mean time went to the Chamber-pot: Being returned they gathered the Votes; and could ſcarce refrain from Sleeping. Going to council they uſed to ſay, why ſhould we torment our ſelves with theſe trifles, let us rather take a Charming Bottle and get a Nice bit of ſomething to Eat. Thoſe who underſtand Latin will be much better pleaſed with Titius's own words. (e) Ludunt alea, ſtudioſe unguentis delibuti, ſcortis ſtipati, ubi horæ decem ſunt; jubent puerum vocari ut comitium eat percunctatum quid in foro geſtum ſit, qui ſuaſerint, qui diſſuaſerint, quot tribus juſſerint, quot vetuerint. Inde ad comitium vadunt, ne litem ſuam faciant: dum eunt, nulla eſt in angiporto amphora, quam non impleant, quippe qui veſicam plenam vini habeant. Veniunt in comitium triſtes, jubent dicere. quorum negotium eſt, dicunt: judex teſtes poſcit: ipſus it minctum: ubi redit, ait ſe omnia audiviſſe, tabulas poſcit, literas inſpicit, vix præ vino ſuſtinet palpebras, eunti in conſilium ibi hæc oratio: Quid mihi negotii eſt cum iſtis nugacibus: quam potius potamus mulſum mixtum vino Græco, edimus turdum pinguem, bonumque piſcem lupum germanum, qui inter duos pontes captus fuit? Macrobius who hath preſerved this curious fragment of this Oration of Titius, hath cited another paſſage of the ſame in his 9. Chapter; for we ought not to doubt that Cincius in ſuaſione legis Fanniæ, in the 9. Chapter is a miſtake of the Tranſcribers, who by degrees changed Titius into Cincius. This other (f) paſſage informs us that they uſed to Cook ſeveral Animals in a Hog's-belly, and that they called this a Trojan Hog, in alluſion to the Trojan Horſe filled with Soldiers. Theſe exceſſes wanted to be ſuppreſſed; Luxury was then become ſo enormous, that ſeveral Children of good Families proſtituted and ſold themſelves in order to gratify their Palate with delicious Meats: Drunkenneſs was become ſo common, that the Citizens went drunk to the Councils, where the Publick Affairs were debated; as we are informed by Sammonicus Serenus (g). The ſucceeding Ages have ſeen the moſt horrible Vices at Rome, but they have ſcarce perceived Drunkenneſs to reign there: At preſent it is not known in that Country; but as for the Ancient Romans, they lived like true Northern Drunkards. See the Drunkenneſs of the Deputies of a Synod in the Remark A of the Article Berengarius. I am ſurpriz'd that Corradus, who was ſo conſummate in the Hiſtory of particular perſons, knew our Titius only by this Paſſage of Cicero: He was ignorant of that of Macrobius. C. Titius, ſaith he, in Page 282 of his Commentary on Cicero's Brutus, de quo ſcriptum nihil nos præterea vidimus.

(D) Miſtake in an Interpreter of Horace.] Corradus takes notice of this Blunder without telling us whoſe it is. Unde videtur interpres Horatii deceptus, qui putavit eundem Titium fuiſſe pindarici fontis qui non expalluit hauſtus, & eum qui ſcripſit tragædias, quum hic multo ante floruerit, & ille tempore Auguſti vixerit: quamquam ille potuit etiam utrumque præſtare. Corradus ſeems to doubt whether Horace's Titius was at the ſame time a Compoſer of Odes and Tragedies, tho' there doth not appear much reaſon of doubt, when we read theſe ſix Verſes of the 3d Epiſtle of the 1ſt Book of Horace:

(g) In the Article Fannius.

(h) Onomaſtic. pag. 333.

(i) Id oſtendunt tum multi alii, tum etiam C. Titius, vir ætatis Lucilianæ, in oratione qua legem Fanniam ſuaſit. Macrob. Saturn. l. 2. c. 12.

(k) Plin. lib. 10. c. 50.

(a) C. Titius, vir ætatis Lucilianæ.

(b) Quem ſtudebat imitari L. Afranius poeta, homo perargutus in fabulis quidem etiam, ut ſcitis, diſertus. Cicero, ubi ſupra.

(c) Dulces Latini leporis facetiæ per Cæcilium, Terentiumque, & Afranium, ſub pari ætate nituerunt. Paterculus l. 1. c. 27.

(d) Sueton. In vita Terentii.

ſalute conſulerent. Sammonicus Serenus, apud Macrobium cap. 13. pag. 367.

Quid

the principal (A) proved Chimerical. This hath not diſguſted People againſt uttering or believing ſuch Prognoſticks. They have been ſo often reiterated, that I forgive an Italian Politician for believing that the Turks (B) ſuborned this ſort of People to Publiſh theſe Predictions, in order to lull the Chriſtians into a ſecure Sleep. I do not think the Infidels guilty of any ſuch Stratagem, which would not be very ſubtil; for nothing more animates Men to Arm againſt a Monarch, than a Belief that 'tis Written in the Deſtinies that he ſhall be very ſoon deſtroyed.

TORTELLIUS (John). See ARETIN (John.)

TOUCHET (Mary) Miſtreſs to Charles IX. King of France, was of Orleans. What is averred by ſo many Authors is not true; viz. That ſhe was an Apothecary's Daughter (A). She bore * Children to Charles IX. and afterwards Married a Perſon of Quality. I believe ſhe did not Marry till after the Death of that Quid Titius Romana brevi venturus in ora?

Pindarici fontis qui non expalluit hauſtus, Faſtidire lacus, & rivos auſus apertos.
Ut valet? ut meminit noſtri? fidibuſne Latinis
Thebanos aptare modos ſtudet auſpice muſa?
An tragica deſævit & ampullatur in arte?

The Antient Scholiaſt on Horace aſſures us that he here means Titius Septimius, who had written both Lyrick Verſes and Tragedies, whoſe Tomb was to be ſeen below Aricia. Mr. Dacier, after ſeveral others, avers that this Titius was the ſame Septimius, to whom Horace addreſſed the 6th Ode of his 2d. Book, and for whom he wrote the 9th Epiſtle of his 1ſt Book. This may be; but ſince he gives no reaſon for it, and two Reaſons ſeem to oppoſe this Opinion, I ſhall remain a Sceptick on this Subject. The 6th Ode of the 2d Book contains 24 Verſes, not one word of which inſinuates, that Septimius was a Poet; whereas all that concerns Titius in the 3d. Epiſtle of the 1ſt Book relates to him as a Poet only. This is my firſt Reaſon. The Second is, that Titius, in Horace's 3d Epiſtle, is one of the Wits who accompanied Tiberius, and compoſed a Society of Learned Men in his Court: Whereas in the 9th Epiſtle, Septimius is one who deſires Horace to introduce him to Tiberius. I ſay nothing in particular againſt another notion of Mr. Dacier: He would (a) have Horace's Septimius, and that who ſo ardently loved Acme in the 46th Epigram of Catullus, to be the ſame Perſon.

(A) The Principal proved Chimerical.] The Prediction at length was. The Turks ſhall make War with the Chriſtians, and loſe great numbers of their Troops (b). They will firſt attack the Venetians, and do them a great deal of miſchief: After which they will make peace with that Republick, and take Belgrade, and Rhodes, and lay Hungary waſte. Then uttering ſeveral Threats, ſacking Hungary, and attacking the Roman Empire, they'll fall under the power of the Hungarians, about the Year 1594. or 1595. But before this they will enter into Apulia, they will diſturb and afflict Sicily, Italy, the Coaſts of France and Spain. Soon after which their Emperor ſhall be killed in a Battle; their Monarchy ſhall be deſtroy'd under the 13th or 14th of their Chiefs; they ſhall not exceed that number, nor the Year 1596. The Chriſtians ſhall then become Maſters of that vaſt Empire (c). Read the Reflection made on this by a Doctor of Divinity of the Faculty of Paris (d). Non eſt vel hujus loci, vel mei otii Hiſtorias retexere, quibus multa quæ hic exprimuntur, eveniſſe intelligamus, ſatis ſit expendiſſe corollarium hujus prædictionis quàm varium ſit, quam falſum, quàm ridiculum, de Imperio Turcico funditus everſo, ad annum Chriſti 1596. cum hoc anno 1608. tam florens & potens, magno quidem Chriſtiani nominis malo, cernamus, quam antea extiterit, nec ulla parte, aut hiare, aut nutare, aut inclinare, tanti Imperii moles perſpiciatur: nec in quarto decimo Imperatore Oſmanidæ ſeriem Sultanorum & Principum ſuorum defeciſſe videamus, cùm Sultanus Muhamet Cham, tertius hujus nominis, ſit decimus quintus Oſmanidarum Principum, à primo illo Oſmano Sultano. Magnò certè conſtitit Hungaris hæc prædictio, cui cùm ſtolidè innixi terentur, motumque maximum ſub Sultano Soleimanno in Hungaria excitaſſent, ab eo magna clade affecti, ſuæ credulitatis veſanæ pœnas non minimas dederunt, quemadmodum narrat Leunclavius hiſtor. Muſulmanæ lib. 18.

(B) That the Turks ſuborned ſome People to publiſh theſe Predictions.] What this Italian Politician ſaith on this Head, ſeems to me worth copying. But we ought to remember that when this was written, the Turks were more potent than they have been ſince the Siege of Vienna, in the Year 1683. (e) Molte preditioni d'Aſtrologi, oltre à molte profetie, ſecondo, che ſi dice, vi ſono, & ſe ne leggono ogni di, con le quali vien minacciata la diſtruttione del Regno, & Imperio Turcheſco, & ogni tanti anni pare, che ſi vadano rinovando cotali credenze, ſenza vederſene l'effetto. Hora io m'auviſo, che non darebbe molto lontano dal ſegno, uno, che diceſſe ciò eſſer'intentione de' medeſimi Turchi, ò di qualche Chriſtiano rinegato, per addormentar gli animi de Prencipi Chriſtiani, con queſto ſonnifero, & renderli negligenti, à penſar d'offendergli, con la ſperanza di dover veder, che il tempo debba eſſer quello, che trionfi di così fatto nemico: & non è dubbio, che Prencipi Cattolici, ricercati à colligarſi contro il Turco, hanno dato per riſpoſta, che egli era meglio ſtar à veder quel che partorirebbe il tempo, parendo impoſſibile, che ſignoria così violenta, debba eſſer di lunga durata. Et per non parere di dire coſe del tutto à vento, certo è che per accelerar la morte di qualche Imperadore Romano, ſi ſerviva alcuno di ſparger voci, che le ſtelle, promettevano il principato à tal'uno, che eſſi conoſcevano atto à dover, con ſi fatto preteſto, inſurgere contro al dominante, & accelerarar' à ſe ſteſſi la ſucceſſione, con l'accelerative della morte di lui. Onde al contrario potrebbe pur eſſere, che tra Turchi per diuturnar'il loro Imperio, ſi diffamaſſero queſte dicerie, della ſua piccola durata, per indurre altri ad aſpettar, che il pronoſtico ſi verifichi, ſenza venir'all'atto d'offenderlo, armata mano: Il che ſarebbe un ſottile, ma non impoſſibile ſtratagemma. This may ſerve as a Supplement to the Remark EE in the Article Mahomet. To enlarge which, freſh Matter offers it ſelf daily; but it generally conſiſts of groſs Errors. An Example of which is the following Story. A Father of the Oratory relates, that on certain days of the Year, the Turks ſolemnly Curſe the Chriſtians. They read in their Moſques a Propheſy, threatning (f) the Deſtruction of the Ottoman Empire by the Francs, after it has continued Ten Ages. During which, the Women cry diſmally, and ſweep the Altars with their diſhevelled Hair. They imagine that this Ceremony will avert the impending Fate with which they are threatned. This Father of the Oratory doth not affirm this of his own Knowledge, but on the credit of one of his Friends. Vias Maſſilienſis Poeta (ſi mihi creditur) valdè bonus, ſays he (g), mihi olim cùm Maſſiliæ Rhetoricem profiterer multùm familiaris, in ſuis ad Sylvas (h) notis, morem refert Turcarum cùm illi Chriſtianos, quos perditè oderunt, ultrò ſtatis diebus deteſtantur. Habent, inquit ille, Turcæ inter ſuos faſtos prophetiam, per id tantum tempus, M. ſcilicet annos, Ottomanorum permanſurum, mox ſubvertendum à Francis. Legitur illa quotannis ſuis in Moſquetis, ut illius ominis terrore ultrò Chriſtianis adverſentur. Lugent interim ululantes fœminæ, ſparſiſque comis infanda verrunt altaria: ſicque huic malo fato procurare credunt, dum tam funeſto vaticinio perterrentur.

(A) That ſhe was an Apothecary's Daughter.] She is obliged to Brantome for this Origin, whom I ſhall cite here under. Papyrius Maſſo ſeems to make her of a meaner Deſcent, for one would think by what he ſays, that ſhe was a Perfumer's Daughter, (i) Amavit Mariam Tochetiam Aurelianenſis (k) Unguentarii filiam. Others ſay, ſhe was a Scrivener's Daughter; but it is certain that ſhe was better deſcended, as Mr. le Laboureur ſhews. "John Touchet, her Father, ſaith he, (l) took the Title of Sieur de Beauvais and Quillart, Counſellor to the King, and Lieutenant particular

" of

* See the Remark F.

(e) Bonifatio Vannozzi, della ſuppellettile de gli avvertimenti politici, volume primo, p. 97. Bologna. 1609.

(f) This Prediction does not concern the Turkiſh Empire, but the Mahometan Religion. If it concern'd the Turks, they would be a little too haſty; their Monarchy would be very far from its deſtruction.

(g) Petrus Berthaldus, libro ſingulari de ara, c. 15. pag. 181, 182. edit. Nannetenſis, 1636.

(h) They are Statius's Silvæ, upon which Vias a Poet of Provence, praiſed by Gaſſendus in vita Peireskii, made ſome Notes.

(i) Papyr. Maſſo in vita Caroli IX.

(k) Perhaps this word ought to be rendred an Apothecary, as le Laboureur renders it.

(l) Le Laboureur, Addit. to Caſtelnau's Memoirs tom. 2. pag. 656.

that (B) Monarch. She had two Daughters lawfully begotten, which follow'd her Example; one was Concubine (C) to Henry IV. and the other to the Marſhal

" of the Diſtrict and Preſidial Court of Orleans. He was the Son of Peter Touchet, a Citizen of Orleans, and Grandſon of John Touchet, Advocate and Counſellor at Orleans, in the Year 1492. whoſe Father was Regnaut Touchet, a Merchant of the Town of Parthai en Beauſſe. And all that could be ſaid againſt this Lady's Birth, was that her Mother was Mary Mathy, the natural Daughter of Orable Mathy, a Dutch man, and one of the King's Phyſician, who to promote his Daughter's Alliance to this Family, gave two thouſand Crowns with her, which was then a conſiderable Sum."

Men commonly fall into two ſorts of Errors concerning thoſe which Providence hath very much exalted above their Birth. Some by fabulous Genealogies furniſh them with Anceſtors of the Firſt Quality; others debaſe them to a much meaner Condition than their true one; either to indulge Envy and Calumny, or to repreſent the aggrandizing of their Fortune as ſomething ſtupendious and more proper for Exclamations. The Hiſtorian of the Amours du Palais Roial, hath degraded the Nobility of Madam de la Valiere, in making her a mean Citizen of Tours. Yet (a) ſhe was of a Family related to that of Beauvau le Rivau, one of the beſt of the Country; and about a hundred Years ago, a certain Seigneur de la Valiere married a Lady who had been Maid of Honour to Queen Louiſe, Conſort to Henry III. Which doubtleſs he had never done, if he had not been a Gentleman. We ſhall ſhew in their places, that Reports of this nature were raiſed againſt Albert de Gondi, firſt Duke of Rets, againſt Cardinal de Pelleve, the Conſtable de Luynes, Cardinal Mazarine, &c.

(B) That ſhe did not marry him till after the Death of Charles. IX.] Mezeray knew very well that Mary Touchet's Father was Lieutenant Particular of the Preſidial of Orleans; but I ſomewhat doubt what he adds, (b) that Charles IX. Married this Miſtreſs to Francis Balzac d'Entragues, Governor of Orleans. I paſs over in ſilence that this Francis Balzac was not Governor of Orleans, before ſeveral Intrigues had occaſion'd the Chancellor de Chiverni's loſing that Government in the Year 1588, (c) before which he was only Lieutenant of that City: I ſay only that his Marriage with Mary Touchet, ſeems to be poſterior to the death of Charles IX. And that is all I can ſay at preſent, not being in a place where I can Conſult the Genealogy of this Houſe, nor being yet poſſeſſor of Books capable of affording an intire certainty. But conſidering on one ſide what Papyrius Maſſon ſays, that King Charles, on his Death-bed, durſt not recommend his Miſtreſs himſelf to the Queen his Mother, but did (d) it by the mediation of Charles de Gondi; and on the other ſide, what Mr. le Laboureur tells us, (e) That we ought not to be ſurpriz'd, that Mary Touchet found ſo good a Match (f) after ſo great a figure ſhe had made at Court, where ſhe maintain'd her Rank as well as any of the Ladies of the firſt Quality: Conſidering, I ſay, theſe two things, I cannot think ſhe was married to the Lord d'Entragues in Charles IX. his life time. For if ſo, it would have been unneceſſary for that Prince to cauſe her to be recommended to Catherine de Medicis, (ſuch a Husband being a ſufficient Protector) and one could not apprehend why Mr. de Laboureur offers ſo many Reaſons why we ſhould not be ſurprized at the Marriage of Francis de Balzac with Mary Touchet, without mentioning the chief, which muſt have been the great Favours beſtow'd by a living King upon his Miſtreſs's Husband. This Author obſerves, that ſhe was equally incomparable for Wit and Beauty, and that the Anagram made on her Name, Marie Touchet, Je charme tout, (I Charm all) was very juſt. He ſaith alſo that M. d'Entragues became ſo enamour'd on her, that he was call'd in deriſion, d'Entragues Touchet, Duke of Orleans, in a Libel Intituled, The King's Edict diſguiſed (g), written in the Year 1586, againſt certain Sparks called Bourbons, and ſome ſtupid Sots, and German Drunkards.

(C) One was Concubine to Henry IV. and the other to the Marſhal de Baſſompierre.] If the Fact which I relate in the Remark (D) is true, Henry IV. might have been deceiv'd; for perhaps the Girl that was raviſhed might be the very Lady d'Entragues, who ſo much valued the Preſent of her Virginity to this Prince. A particular relation of her Subtilties and Cajoling is to be ſeen in Sulli's Memoirs, and Perefixe's Hiſtory. The hundred thouſand Crowns with which the King preſented her, were not a ſhower of Gold ſufficient to introduce him into her Lap, and put an end to her Artifices by which ſhe diſputed the Ground. He muſt at laſt be forced to promiſe her Marriage, to remove the Difficulties and Oppoſitions of the Father and Mother, whom the Daughter had purpoſely obliged to interpoſe, and which ſhe declared were not to be ſurmounted, if theſe good People were not brought over to this nice point, by this Promiſe ſatisfying their Conſciences towards God, and ſheltering their Honour from the malicious World. This fair one ſo pathetically repreſented to her Lover, (h) That he ought not to make any difficulty to ſatisfie their Deſire, ſince it was only that he ſhould give her a ſmall ſcrip of Paper in Exchange for what to her was the moſt valuable thing in the World; that he oblig'd himſelf under his Hand to Marry her within a Year, provided, within the compaſs of that time ſhe brought him a Male-Child. If the Adventure mention'd by St. Romuald, was meant of this Lady, what vaſt Expences and earneſt purſuits was a great Monarch obliged to, in order to enjoy a Page's leavings!

Mr. de Roſni, one of the warmeſt Men in the World in the Prince's Intereſt, was not contented with tearing this Promiſe of Marriage when the King ſhewed it him; but he endeavour'd to Cure that Prince, by urging to him ſome Suſpicions concerning the Lady's Vertue. 'Tis true, that Monarch told this Favourite, that he fatigued himſelf in queſt of a Maidenhead, which perhaps he ſhould not find. But the other talked much more ſuſpiciouſly of her Honour. "If you remember "ſays he, what you have formerly ſaid to me "concerning this Lady and her Brother in the Dutcheſs's time, how freely you then talked of them, "and the Commands which you obliged me "to carry to that Baggage, (for ſo you then call'd "the Houſe and Family of Mr. and Madam "d'Antragues) to leave Paris, you will be apt to "doubt more than at preſent you do, whether you "will ever find what you expect. See Sulli's Memoirs, pag. 248, 250. tome 2. of the Dutch Edition.

However we find this Lady more nicely ſenſible of her Daughter's Honour than ſhe had been of her own. The Puniſhment of the Page (i), if true, is a proof of this; for ſhe would not probably have been guilty of a Murther on that account, if ſhe had been treated in the ſame manner before. We may further obſerve how conſcientious a Mother ſhe was in this particular, and how cautious with reſpect to the World. But her care was ineffectual; for as ſhe came from a right ſtrain with reſpect to her Grandmother, (k) ſo did her Daughters with reſpect to her. One of them furniſhed (l) a natural Race to Henry IV. as the other did to Marſhal Baſſompierre, to whoſe words we ought to hearken on this Head. "I returned to Paris, ſays he, (m) "to ſee my Miſtreſs (n) in the Coutellerie-ſtreet, "where her Lodging was, in which I had a private paſſage to the third Story which her Mother "did not rent; and ſhe came to me by a private "Stair-caſe of the Wardrobe when her Mother "was aſleep." A little after he hints ſomewhat from whence one might infer that Henry IV. would have made no Conſcience of enjoying both Siſters, which is that this Prince was his Rival. He informs us of another thing which confirms my laſt Remark concerning Mary Touchet: "By misfortune, ſaith "he, the Mother had notice of it, and kept the "ſtricter Guard. One Morning, going to ſpit, ſhe "drew the Curtain of her Bed, and ſaw that of her "Daughter uncovered, and obſerving that ſhe was "miſſing, ſhe roſe very ſoftly, and went up into the "Wardrobe, where ſhe diſcover'd that the Door of "our private Stair-caſe was open, which ſhe thought "had been nailed up. This made her ſhriek out, and "her Daughter at her Voice immediately ran to her.

In

(a) Mr. de Marolles, Abbot of Villeloin, in the Catalogue of his Writings p. 8.

(b) Mezer. Abr. Chronolog. tom. 6. p. 154.

(c) Thuan. hiſt. l. 92.

(d) Brantome relates the thing ſomewhat differently. Being a dying, ſays he, he ordered Mr. de la Tour to remember him to her (his Miſtreſs) and never durſt ſpeak of it to the Queen his Mother.

(e) Le Laboureur ubi ſupra.

(f) He had ſaid pag. 70. That ſhe had no leſs Ambition and dexterity than the Dutcheſs of Etampes, and the Dutcheſs of Valentinois, and that ſhe maintain'd her Poſt ſo well, that all the glory, and all the Artifices of Queen Catherine, could not put her out of Countenance.

(g) By way of alluſion to the Duke of Guiſe.

ſhal de Baſſompierre. The Reaſon why ſhe ſtabbed a (D) Page, according to ſome Authors, is ſomewhat curious. What ſhe ſaid, conſidering the Picture of the (E) Princeſs, whom Charles IX. was to Marry, deſerves to be known. I take this occaſion to obſerve, that thoſe who tell us that this King was no Lover of Women, (F) did not look narrowly into the matter. It ought not to be thought ſtrange

“ I in the mean time ſhut the Door, and marched off in Pain to know the Event, which was that her Mother beat her, and cauſed the Door of the Chamber, in the third Story, to be broke open, which ſhe was ſurprized to find hung with Velvet, and ſplendidly furniſhed with Candleſticks and other Utenſils of Silver, as well as all other Rich Moveables. Then all our Converſation was broke off; but I Accommodated the matter with her Mother, by means of a young Gentlewoman whoſe Name was (i) d'Aſt, where I ſaw her and asked her a thouſand Pardons, proteſting that nothing had paſſed beyond Kiſſing, which ſhe feigned to believe (k)”. He was not long deprived of this Lady's Converſation, for after ſome Months Madam d'Entragues being gone to Court, he ſays, (l) he paſſed his time very well with her Daughter and others alſo. The young Lady proved with Child four Years after, and being turned out of Doors by her Mother, (m) ſhe begged of her Spark to give her a promiſe of Marriage to appeaſe her Mother, offering at the ſame time all the Counter-Promiſes which he could deſire, urging that ſhe deſired this only, that ſhe might Lye-in quietly, and enjoy the benefit of her Mother's Aſſiſtance. She obtained her requeſt, and was ſo good natur'd as not to fail in her Counter-Promiſe.

There goes a Story which I ſhall here relate. That Marſhal being in a Coach with the Queen, when there was a great number of Coaches in the (*) Cours, it happened that Madam d'Entragues Coach was obliged to ſtop for ſome time very near that of the Queen, by reaſon of the Crowd. The Queen looking upon the Marſhal, there is, ſaid ſhe, Madam de Baſſompierre. That is only her Gallant Name, replyed he, loud enough to be heard by his old Miſtreſs: Upon which ſhe cryed out, you are a Fool, Baſſompierre: Not enough to Marry your Ladyſhip, replied he, and then the Coaches began to move. As this Marſhal had a vaſt number of Amours, I cannot tell whether this other Story in Mr. Menage relates to another, or the ſame Miſtreſs: (n) “ Marſhal Baſſompierre's Coach being ſtopped by that of a Lady whom he had Loved, and on whom he had Spent vaſt Sums, ſhe ſaid aloud, there is the Marſhal, from whom I have plucked ſo many Feathers. 'Tis true Madam, replied he, but they were only the Feathers of my Tail, and my Flight is not thereby hindred.

(D) The reaſon why ſhe ſtabbed a Page.] I ſhall here repeat without the leaſt alteration what I have ſaid in the Project of this Dictionary. Dom Peter de St. Romuald falls in with the ſame Chronology (o) with Mr. de Mezerai, as to the Marriage of Mary Touchet; for he fixes it in 1572. His Printer was a perfect Murtherer of proper Names, herein following the Example of ſeveral of his Brethren. The Paſſage contains an Action ſo particular that it deſerves to be ſet down intire. “ (p) It was about that (q) time that Francis de (r) Baſſac Lord d'Entragues-Marcouſſe, Governour of Orleans, Married for his ſecond Wife Mary Touchet, an Apothecary's Daughter in that City, equally exceeding in Wit and Beauty, by whom King Charles IX. had had a Son, afterwards called the Count d'Auvergne. An Action as ſtrange as bold is Storied of her, which ſhe did to one of her Husband's Pages, who had Raviſhed one of her Daughters very Young and Beautiful, in a Summer Houſe in the Garden, inſtigated by an extravagant Amorous Madneſs. This Wretch ſhe Stabbed upon the ſpot, depriving him of Life, who had Robbed her Daughter of her Honour.” I wiſh that this Honeſt Monk, who hath heaped up ſo many Events of all ſorts, but not without being liable to ſome Suſpition, had told us where he had this; without which I would not adviſe the Reader to believe him.

(E) Seeing the Picture of the Princeſs.] She eagerly aimed at the Poſſeſſion of King Charles's Heart to the Prejudice of his Conſort. She was very curious when the Treaty of Marriage with Elizabeth of Auſtria was on foot, in the Examination of the Picture of that Princeſs, and having very well conſidered it, ſhe only ſaid, ſhe gives me no cauſe of fear; inſinuating by that, as Brantome (a) ſaith, that ſhe preſumed ſo much on her Beauty and Character, that ſhe believed the King could not leave her. Papyrius Maſſo (b) tells us, that when ſhe examined the Picture, and ſaid, I am not afraid of that German Lady, the Queen was then Arrived; but 'tis not at all probable that Mary Touchet ſhould have ſtaid ſo long before ſhe ſaw the Queen's Picture; and Brantome's Relation ſeems therefore more like Truth, with regard to the Circumſtance of time. Gabrielle d'Eſtrée having ſeen the Pictures of the Infanta of Spain, and of Mary de Medicis, ſhe is repreſented ſaying (c) that ſhe had no apprehenſion of the brown Spaniard, but very much feared the Florentine. We have this from an Hiſtorian, (d) who pretends to have heard it himſelf. I remember, ſaith he, that the King having entruſted to my keeping the Pictures of theſe two Princeſſes, permitted me to ſhew them to the Dutcheſs, and obſerve what ſhe would ſay, which was, I am not afraid of that Black Woman, but the other gives me ſome Apprehenſions.

(F) That this King was no Lover of Women, did not look narrowly into the matter.] Thoſe Hiſtorians who have moſt freely ſpoken of his ill Qualities, ſay that he was not very Irregular with regard to Women. They endeavoured to throw him into ſeveral Debaucheries; but once perceiving that Wine diſturbed his Reaſon, ſo much that it run him into the Commiſſion of ſeveral Violences, he abſtained from it the whole remainder of his Life: And as for Women, being ill received by one of thoſe about his Mother's Perſon, he took an Averſion to the Sex, and ſcarce ever applied to any of them again. So Mr. Mezeray (e) expreſſes himſelf, without obſerving the Rule of the Sophiſtical Grammarian, (f) who cenſured the placing of the Expreſſions in Voiture's Famous Sonnet, where the laſt Imported much leſs than the firſt, I bleſs my Torment, and content to Dye, dare not complain of her Tyranny. Brantome teſtifies that this (g) Prince did not at firſt appear very fond of the fair Sex, and that the Ladies Reproaches animated him. I remember, ſaith he, “ that in his greeneſt Years of 17 or 18, being once violently tormented with the Tooth-Ach, and the Phyſicians Remedies proving ineffectual, a great Lady gave him a Receipt, which ſhe had often Experienced her ſelf and found very good; but it did him no good, and next day ſhe asking him how he found himſelf, he anſwering not well at all, ſhe replyed, I am not at all ſurprized at it, Sir, ſince you neither Love nor truſt the Women, but prefer Hunting and Dogs to all of us. Whence, ſaid he, have you that Opinion of me, that I love the exerciſe of Hunting better than yours? By G...., if you provoke me once, I ſhall joyn you ſo cloſe, that I ſhall throw you all on your Backs one after another. He was not as good as his word with regard to ALL, but he attacked ſome of them rather for the advancement of his Reputation, than the gratifying of his Leachery, and that very coolly too, and choſe a young Lady of a very good Family for his Miſtreſs. She was a very Beautiful, Diſcreet, and Virtuous Lady, whom he treated with all poſſible Honour and Reſpect, and more, ſaid he, to form an agreeable Air than for any other end; Nothing, ſaid he, contributing more to the Accompliſhment of a young Man, than a Love fixed on a Noble Subject. He always loved this Virtuous Lady to his Death, even when he had his Queen Elizabeth, a very agreeable and charming Princeſs. He alſo was very fond of Mary Jaceſſie, otherwiſe called TOUCHET, an Apothecary's Daughter of Orleans, and a moſt Beautiful Creature, by whom he had the Grand-Prior, at preſent called the Count d'Auvergne”. Here is a fair account of (h) three Miſtreſſes beſides a Wife: For we ought not confound her that Mr. Mezerai ſaith diſguſted the King, with her Brantome would not Name, and whom this Prince Loved to the laſt. When therefore we conſider that he Dyed before he was 24 Years of Age, and after

(i) Perhaps the ſame, whom he calls d'Achy, pag. 173. proper Names being very much confounded in this Journal.

(k) Journal de Baſſompierre ibid. pag. 167. ad ann. 1606.

(*) A place of Concourſe like the Ring in Hide-Park.

(l) Ibid. pag. 165.

(m) Ibid. pag. 161.

(n) Suite du Menagiana, pag. .. Dutch edit.

(o) See the Remark F towards the end.

(p) Peter de St. Romuald, Abridgment of the 3d. Tome of his Threſor chronol. & hiſtor. pag. m. 43. ad ann. 1572.

(q) That is, the Paris Maſſacre.

(r) It ſhould be Balzac, Lord d' Entragues Marcouſſis.

(a) Brant. diſ. ſur Charles IX.

(b) Inſpectâ Iſabellæ Reginæ, quæ recens in Galliam venerat, pictura, riſiſſe dicitur, addito verbo, nihil me terret Germana.

(c) Du Pleix, hiſt. de Henri IV. pag. 162.

(d) D'Aubigné, tom. 3. p. 637.

(e) Mezerai, Abregé Chron. tom. 5. p. 183.

(f) See the pieces at the end of Balzac's Socrate Chretien.

(g) Brant. ubi ſupra.

(h) Le Laboureur, Addit. to Caſtelnau's Memoirs tom. 2. mentions a Letter, where 'tis ſaid that Charles IX. was in Love with the Wife of the Sieur de la Tour.

ſtrange that I ſhould beſtow ſome Articles (G) on ſuch Women as this is.

TOULOUSE, a City of France on the River Garonne, being one of the Largeſt and moſt Ancient Weſtern Cities, and the Seat of the Second Parliament of the Kingdom, deſerves a very long Article; but Mr. Moreri and the Author of his Supplement having deſcribed it at large, I ſhall not dwell upon it. I ſhall only ſay that its Conſuls bear the Title of Capitouls, and become Noble by virtue of their Office. Mr. de la Faille Publiſhed an excellent Diſſertation † on this Subject, * when a ſearch was made after the falſe Pretenders to Nobility. The World impatiently expects the continuation of the Annals ‡ of Toulouſe, which that Illuſtrious Writer hath Compoſed. This City which hath always || abounded with Learned a long Sickneſs, and that Hiſtory (i) lays to him two Natural Sons; I cannot ſee on what that Averſion is Grounded, which Mr. Mezerai beſtows on him. What would he have him do more? He wanted, it ſeems, ſomething more to fix the Character of Debauchery on the life of that Prince. It is indeed true that in Proportion to the horrible Corruption of the Court of France at that time, Charles IX might paſs for a ſort of a moderate Man. That Hiſtorian mentions but one Son of this Prince by Mary Touchet, and tells us that he was Born in 1572, and that he was firſt Grand-Prior of France, then Count d'Auvergne and Lauraguais, and afterwards Duke of Angoulême and (k) Count de Pontieu. Father Anſelme diſſents from this Chronology, and makes him Born at the Caſtle of (l) Fayet in Dauphiné, near Montmelian, the 28th of April 1573. I cannot clearly account to my Reader why this Lady ſhould be ſent ſo far from the Court, and her own Country to Lye-in. This was not her firſt Child; the high Character of the Father took off the Diſgrace, and nothing could engage her to affect Privacy, as when upon ſuch an occaſion, a Journey may ſeem neceſſary to conceal the thing, and diſcharge the Burthen unknown to the World.

If what Brantome relates without believing it was true, we ought not to entertain a great Opinion of Mezerai's Memoirs as to the Averſion which he aſcribes to that Prince. 'Some ſay (they are Brantome's 'words) that during his Illneſs he ran to the Queen, 'and ſo heated himſelf that he ſhortned his Days, 'which gave occaſion to the ſaying that Venus killed 'him with Diana, which I cannot believe, for it was 'never talked of at Court amongſt thoſe that were 'moſt worthy of Credit, for I was there. What he ſaith of Venus and Diana is an Alluſion to the two Verſes which he had already cited, and were a kind of Epitaph on Charles IX.

> Pour aimer trop Diane & Cytherée auſſi,
> L'une & l'autre m'ont mis en ce tombeau icy.

Papyrius Maſſo, who wrote an Abridgment of this Prince's Life a Year after his Death, relates an Event perhaps no truer than this, but at leaſt more probable. He ſaith the King once in his long Diſeaſe went to ſee his Miſtreſs Mary Touchet, and it was conjectured that by Diverting himſelf with her at an improper time or to exceſs, he increaſed his Diſtemper and haſtned his Death. (||) Sane Rex ipſe inter moras longiſſimi morbi ſemel ad eam divertit, ſuſpicioque eſt auctum morbum ex importuno aut immodico coitu & acceleratum vitæ finem. Mr. le Laboureur hath ill Tranſlated theſe words (m) to this purpoſe. Alſo the King once during his tedious Diſtemper going to ſee her, 'tis taken for certain, that on account of not being in a Condition to approach her, or being guilty of ſome Exceſs, his Diſeaſe increaſed, and this Viſit haſtned his Days. Not to take notice that he delivers that as a certainty which amounts only to a ſuſpition in the Latin, I am apt to think that there are ſcarce any Readers who by theſe words on account of not being in a Condition, would not imagine ſomething elſe than the Hiſtorian intended to ſay; ſome Accident (n) like that which Mr. Rabutin imitates out of Petronius. Mr. Varillas has not failed to adopt this Paſſage of Papyrius Maſſo. "The King was dangerouſly Ill, ſaith "he (o), and thoſe who were very well inform-"ed, Whiſpered two cauſes of it. The firſt was "his haſty Journey from Paris to Orleans to Viſit "the Beautiful Mary Touchet his Miſtreſs; and the ſe-"cond the Poiſon which they affirm was given him "by his Steward (p) la Tour, younger Brother "to the Marſhal de Rets and the Biſhop of Paris. "The extraordinary vigour of this Prince ſeemed to "ſurmount his Sickneſs, and the apprehenſion which "la Tour had conceived of the report ſpread con-"cerning him, threw him into a Phrenzy which oc-"caſioned his Death ſoon after". Mr. Varillas "only cites Papyrius Maſſo.

Which gives me room to make ſome Remarks; for I. the Author to which Mr. Varillas refers us, doth not ſay that Charles IX. was obliged to take a Journey to Orleans to ſee Mary Touchet; and there is very little reaſon to believe that ſhe ſhou'd keep ſo far from the King, ſince ſhe was his publick Miſtreſs, and had had Children by him. In the II. place it is falſe that Maſſon charges this Poiſoning on la Tour; on the contrary he makes him Dye of a Sickneſs occaſioned by his Grief for having loſt with Charles IX. the hopes of a vaſt Fortune. I do not deny that la Tour was accuſed of this wicked Act by others; but he ought then to have referred us ſomewhere elſe than to Papyrius Maſſo's Elogy. Mr. le Laboureur hath inſerted in his Additions to Caſtelnau's Memoirs, page 462 of the 2d Tome, a Satyrical Letter, in which Catherine de Medicis is Reproached for having cauſed Charles IX. to be Poiſoned by the Sieur de la Tour, and afterwards la Tour by another. 'Your Majeſty contrived it ſo, ſays the Author of this Letter, that the late Sieur de la Tour was 'made to underſtand either by you or by your Ap-'pointment, that the King your Son deſigned to Kill 'him, that he might the eaſier Enjoy his Wife; 'which the ſaid la Tour was eaſily induced to believe, 'becauſe he very well knew that the King paſſionately 'loved her, and was on that account without much 'difficulty engaged to Poiſon his ſaid Majeſty, &c. This Letter is dated at Lauſanne, the 3d Month of the 4th Year after the Treachery, (that is, the Paris Maſſacre) and is Signed Grandchamp, who was a Gentleman of Nivernois, who had been Ambaſſadour at Conſtantinople, and engaged in the Intrigues of la Mole and Coconnas. In the III. place it is impoſſible to Gueſs from Mr. Varillas's words, whether la Tour Dyed before or after the King; but of the two we ſhould be more apt to conclude it was before than after: Nevertheleſs he Dyed after this Prince, either of Regret, or Poiſon, or any other way.

The following Relation doth not redound to the Diſhonour of Charles IX. "(a) That Prince one "day walking in the Tuilleries, and ſeeing a charming "fine Woman Swim the River from the Louvre to "Saint Germains, ſtopped to obſerve her; but whilſt "his Eyes as well as thoſe of the reſt of the Court "were fixed on the Beautiful Object, ſhe Dived "out of ſight, and at laſt riſing to the Surface "of the Water, as ſwift as lightning flew Aſhoar, "began to wring her Hair and do what Antipater "ſays of Venus:

> " Voy n'agueres Venus hors de la mer ſortant,
> " Ouvrage d'Apelles, entre ſes mains tenant
> " Ses moettes cheveux; elle faict de ſa treſſe
> " Humide l'eſpraignant, ſortir l'eſcume eſpaiſſe.

"After which ſhe Retired carrying with her the "Eyes and Hearts of all the Company. Never-"theleſs tho' the thing was diverting enough, it "appeared ſo odd and ſtrange to the King, that "he was not heard to ſay one Word in her Praiſe, "tho' he heard the greateſt part of his Retinue, "and even the moſt Reſerved, loudly expreſs their "Admiration.

(G) That I ſhou'd beſtow ſome Articles on ſuch Women as this is.] The beginning of this Article in my Project contains theſe words: "Dictionaries ought "not to Omit Perſons of this Category: The Fi-"gure which they make in the World, is high e-nough

---

† You may ſee the Subſtance of it in a Quarto Book of Mr. Gilles de la Roque concerning Nobility.

* That is about the Year 1666.

‡ M. de Beauval ſpoke of the 1. Vol. of thoſe Annals, Sept. 1688. p.1. and ſeq. See alſo the Journal des Savans of the 19. of April 1688.

|| See Balzac in the laſt page of his œuvres diverſes, & Sorberiana at the word Toulouſe.

(i) Father Anſelme, Hiſt. Genealog. de France, pag. 146. does not ſay whether they had both the ſame Mother: But Papyrius Maſſo mentions two, whom he had by Mary Touchet.

(k) The laſt Dukes of Angouleme are deſcended from him. He died at Paris the 24th of Sept. 1650.

(l) Hiſt. Genealog. pag. 173.

(||) Papyr. Maſſo in vita Caroli IX.

(m) Addit. to Caſtelnau tom. 2. pag. 879.

(p) Brantome makes him Maſter of the Wardrobe; Papyrius Maſſo calls him Carolum Gondium, Cubicularium. The Journal of Henry III. makes him Maſter of the Wardrobe, and places his Death on the 15th of June 1574, and attributes it to another Cauſe.

(a) Pierre de Lancre Counſellor in the Parliament of Bourdeaux, Tableau de l'inconſtance & inſtabilité de toutes choſes, fol. 52. verſo.

(n) In the Hiſtoire amoureuſe des Gaules. Ovid. Amor. lib. 3. eleg. 7. deſcribes ſuch an Accident at large. (o) Varillas, Hiſt. de Charles IX. tom. 2. pag. 365. Dutch Edit. 1684.

Learned Men, and is at preſent as happy on that account as ever ‡, did very well deſerve the Eſtabliſhment (A) of the Polite Academy Erected there.

‡ The [illegible] and the French Academy may vie[illegible] it.

TRABEA

" nough to place them there, and doubtleſs ſuch a " Work as Mr. Colomies promiſed (b) and deſigned " to Entitle, Cupid on the Throne, or the Hiſtory of " the Amours of our Kings ſince Dagobert, would " be very Curious ". Since the Impreſſion of the Project, a Book has appeared which carries the Subject higher than Colomies deſigned it, and begins with Pharamond. I ſhould rather chooſe Colomies's Performance than this. The former Author would have ſaid nothing but what he would have Extracted from ſome written Book, he would have conſulted ſeveral rare Books, and always have cited his Evidence. But this Anonymous Author who hath given us the Hiſtory of the Galantries of the Kings of France, from the beginning of the Monarchy to Lewis XIV. hath cited no Authors, and has not at all ſecured us from ſuſpecting his Book for a Romance. The 1. Edition is better than the following ones: It is more natural and leſs clogged and looks more like a Hiſtory. I happened one day to praiſe it upon that Account before the Bookſeller that Printed it. But he very freely anſwered that he had found by the Sale of the Book that it was the greateſt fault in the Work, and that it wou'd be ſupplyed in the 2. Edition. The publick did not find (ſaid he) a ſufficient Number of Intrigues and ſurprizing Adventures in that piece. After this I diſtruſted that performance more than before. There are ſeveral things in it concerning Mary Touchet which I have refuted, or have not related, not being ſure that they are not the Author's invention; as I judge concerning a dozen (c) of Cut-Purſes, which he has introduced that the King might ſee the Letter, which his Miſtreſs had received from another Gallant, the Biſhop of Valence's Brother.

(A) The Eſtabliſhment of the Polite Academy erected there.] M. de Baſville (d), who in the Provinces over which he has been appointed Intendant has ſhewed himſelf a Son worthy of his Illuſtrious Father the Preſident de Lamoignon, whilſt his Brother (e) the Advocate General ſhews himſelf worthy of the ſame Honour in the Parliament of Paris, was very diligent in this New Eſtabliſhment. He reſolved (f) to change the Floral Games of Toulouſe into an Academy of polite Learning. The Society of the Floral Games alarmed at this deſign, publiſhed a Memorial tending to perſuade the City to let things remain in their preſent poſture. This Memorial was refuted; the uſefulneſs of the (g) Games were laid down, and the neceſſity of Eſtabliſhing a polite Academy in Toulouſe was urged, that the Happy Genius's which that City produces might be Furniſhed with an opportunity of perfecting themſelves in Eloquence. It was aſſerted that that City could furniſh a great many Subjects to imitate the Academiſts of the other Cities of the Realm, and a long liſt of polite Genius's which Toulouſe has produced was collected. To know whether theſe Reaſons were effectual we need only Read the following paſſage extracted out of one of Mr. Couſin's Journals. (h) " The Floral Games of Tou- " louſe have been at laſt erected into an Academy, the " Letters patents to which purpoſe were Sealed at " the end of the laſt Year. This Society is compo- " ſed of thirty five Perſons eminently diſtinguiſhed " for their Merit and Learning. They'll diſtribute " their Prizes annually, to which purpoſe will be " applyed the Rents of the Floral Games, which are " conſiderable.

SINCE the firſt Edition of this Dictionary I have been informed by the Journal des Scavans of the 11th of June 1696. That it was not long after the Eſtabliſhment of the French Academy (i) that Mr. Pelliſſon, who was then at Toulouſe, formed a Scheme of a Society deſigned to the ſame end; which yet did not grow into perfect Shape till the Year 1688. when ſome Learned Men began to meet at the Houſe of Mr. Carriere, Chief Judge and Preſident of the Preſidial Court of that City, which they continued to do till the Year 1694. when they removed to Mr. de Mondran, a Gentleman whoſe Houſe was more conveniently ſituate. That thoſe (k) who deſire to know who were the Perſons that compoſed this Society, and what their exerciſes were, may be informed of it by Reading the Anſwer of Mr. de Martel, one of the Members and worthy Secretary of this Society, which he cauſed to be Printed at Montauban in 1692. to take off the diſadvantagious Impreſſions which the Author of a Memorial againſt this Eſtabliſhment endeavoured to make, under the pretence of defending the Floral Games. That the Gentlemen who aſſiſt at theſe Academical Conferences, frequently compoſe in verſe and proſe, ſeveral pieces in Honour of the King and on ſeveral important Subjects; ſeveral of which have been Printed and met with a general Applauſe. Their Zeal went conſiderably farther in the Year one Thouſand Six Hundred and Ninety Four, when they beſtowed a prize amounting to Twelve Piſtols. All this and ſeveral other particulars much redounding to the Glory of theſe Gentlemen, are mentioned in a Letter from Toulouſe, made uſe of by Mr. Couſin Author of the Journal des Scavans. I have received from that City a long Manuſcript Relation, the Subſtance whereof I ſhould very willingly inſert here, if the Printer could give me time to write for and receive the information which I want. But as I did not examine this Relation till two Days before I ſent this Article to the preſs, I cannot ſtay for the Arrival of this Information: I am therefore obliged to confine my ſelf to a few extracts, by which the Reader may eaſily apprehend that the Academy erected at Toulouſe, is diſtinct from the Society in which the Academical conferences mentioned in the Journal des Scavans of the 11 of June 1696, were held.

Theſe Conferences began in two different places at Toulouſe in 1640. at Mr. de Malepeires', (a) and at Mr. de Campunaut's (b): But theſe two Societies united at Mr. de Garrigis's Counſellor of the Preſidial Court, and choſe for their Director Mr. de la Garde, who rendred himſelf equally Famous for his Latin Poetry, and his excellent diſcoveries in Natural Philoſophy; for he wrote againſt Ariſtotle's forms and accidents before Gaſſendus's Works appeared. Mr. Donneville Preſident au Mortier, re-Eſtabliſhed theſe excellent Exerciſes in a much more conſpicious manner in the Year 1667. Mr. de Nolet Treaſurer of France, ſome time after eſtabliſhed ſome regular Conferences in his own Houſe under the direction of Mr. Bayle (c) Dr. of Phyſick; and Mr. Regis made very Learned Diſcourſes on Deſcartes's Syſtem there. Another Society was afterwards formed in the College de Foix, and they began the erection of a Polite Academy. The Society of the Floral Games did not reliſh this Project, and an anonymous Author wrote a tract to prove it impracticable. Mr. Martel a Member of the Ricovrati of Padua, refuted him (d) in a Book, the extract of which is extant in the Journal des Scavans of the 14. of September 1693. He in conjunction with Mr. de (e) Carriere and Mr. de Malepeire formed regular Conferences which continued to the Year 1698. " Mr. Pelliſſon, who with Mr " de Malepeire had formerly laid the Foundation of " the like Learned exerciſes at Toulouſe, could not " ſee this Happy re-eſtabliſhment, without looking " on it in ſome Meaſure as his own performance, " ſince he had formed the firſt Plan thereof, and ſince " the Illuſtrious Magiſtrate, whom he had formerly " engaged in the firſt Conferences, had ſo large a " Share and was ſo much concern'd in the reviving " of 'em. This Great Man continually bent on the " improvement of polite Learning, ſuggeſted to " the Authors of theſe new exerciſes the Erection " of their Society into an Academy of polite Learn- " ing, to be firmly Eſtabliſhed at Toulouſe. He of- " fered his Sollicitation, flattering himſelf with Rea- " ſon that he was able to procure the ſame Advantage " for Toulouſe, which he had formerly obtained, even " in a conjuncture leſs opportune, in Favour of Soiſſons. " To further this deſign he engaged the Prince of " Mayne Governour of Languedoc to be their pro- " tector, who had the Goodneſs to preſent a Pe- " tition to the King, ſupplicating his Majeſty to " approve the Project and Execution of that deſign. " It was in acknowledgement of ſo Signal a Favour " that Mr. Richebourg, a Member of this Society, " had the Honour to Addreſs an Ingenious Fable " to this Prince——This piece of Poetry alarmed " ſome of the Gentlemen of the Floral Games—— " and then their Society favoured by ſeveral of the " Chief of the Magiſtracy, who were Members of it " fearing the new Academy would be erected on the " ruins of theirs, which had the Management of " a conſiderable Fund, took the moſt proper Mea-

" ſures

(a) Now Dean of the Preſidial.

(b) Father of Mr. Campunaut Regius Profeſſor of the Civil Law.

(c) He is Profeſſor of Philoſophy.

(d) Printed at Montauban in 1692.

(e) Now Juge Mage.

TRABEA (QUINTUS) a Comic Poet, ſome of whoſe Verſes are cited by † Cicero. The piece which he Intituled Ergaſtulum, is cited by * Nonius Marcellus. Aulus Gellius informs us ‖ that Vulcatius Sedigitus gave him the 8th Place amongſt the Ten Chief Comic Poets of old Rome. Muret's Fraudulent Impoſition (A) on the great Scaliger, which occaſioned his quoting ſome Verſes as Trabea's which were of a much later Date, deſerves to be mentioned here. The ſame miſtake is to be found in the Lexicon, ‡ of Buchnerus.

† Cicero Tuſcul. lib. 4. fol. m. 270. B. See alſo lib. 1. de finibus fol. 519 D.

* Nonius Marcell. voce ra-peiter pag. m. 515.

‖ Aul. Gellius lib. 15. cap. 23.

‡ Voce Præfica f. 1128. See Muret's Poems pag. 50. edit. Lipſ. 1672.

TRAPPE

" ſures to get it Eſtabliſhed by Letters Patents under " the protection of Chancellors of the France. They " preſerved as much as poſſible the Name and " Cuſtoms it had, in order to follow the Footſteps of its ancient Eſtabliſhment: For beſides that
" by their Statutes theſe Gentlemen are reſtrained
" from Printing any thing in the Name of the Society,
" or returning any Thanks on their reception; of the " Four Prizes diſtributed, three, and even one of the " moſt conſiderable, are appointed for Poetry. The " Gentlemen of the Academical Conferences redoubled their Zeal to perfect their Studies; and as " they had particularly in view Eloquence, Antiquity, and all that relates to polite Learning,
" they choſe Terence's Comedies and Quintilian,
" for the Subject of their Conferences. Mr. de
" Mondran Treaſurer of France, who had a Houſe
" very conveniently ſituated in the middle of the " City, offered it to them for the performance of " their Exerciſes.

The Author of the Memorial from whence I have extracted all this, concludes with ſaying that thoſe Conferences, which would not have been interrupted on any other Account than the Death of ſeveral Worthy Members, may, 'tis hoped, be revived in a juncture ſo Favourable to the Sciences as the General Peace (f) which prevails throughout Europe.

(A) Muret's Fraudulent impoſition on the great Scaliger.] I ſhall collect ſeveral paſſages relating to this Fact. " Scaliger at the Age of Eighteen " valued himſelf on diſcerning the different manners of Writing of all Ages. Muret deſirous to " entrap him, made ſome Verſes which he ſhewed
" him, pretending that he had received them from " Germany, and that they were tranſcribed from " an old Manuſcript. Scaliger after having attentively Read them, aſſured him without heſitation
" that Trabeas an Ancient Comic Poet was their " undoubted Author: And continuing in the ſame " Opinion that his conjecture was infallible, he afterwards cited theſe Verſes as Written by this " Ancient Poet in his Commentary on Varro. Muret laughed at it heartily, without the leaſt reſtraint." Coſtar having expreſſed himſelf thus, in his Apology, did afterwards more particularly explain in a Letter the Circumſtances of that Fact.
" (h) Theſe Verſes of Muret, falſly aſcribed to " the Ancient Comick Poet Trabeas, deſerve indeed
" your impatient deſire to ſee them. As I have " the Honour to know you, I dare ſay that you " will Learn them by Heart; for they handſomly
" expreſs a Moral and frequently uſeful Reflection.

" Here, ſi querelis, ejulatu, fletibus
" Medicina fieret miſeriis Mortalium,
" Auro paranda lacrumæ contra forent.
" Nunc hæc ad minuenda mala non magis valent,
" Quam nænia Præfica ad excitandos Mortuos.
" Res turbidæ conſilium, non fletum expetunt.

" Scaliger cited theſe Verſes in his Commentary on " Varro de Re Ruſtica, page 211. of Henry Stephens's Edition. Producam autem, ſaith he, locum
" veteris Comici Trabeæ ex Fabula Harpace, ubi hoc
" loquendi genus uſurpatur (i) &c. (He is ſpeaking
" of the Phraſe, auro contra) Quis enim tam averſus à Muſis, tamque humanitatis expers, qui horum verſuum publicatione offendatur, &c. Muret
" bragged of having deceived that great Man who " thought himſelf infallible, and Scaliger ſenſibly
" touched by this Cheat, reveng'd himſelf by the " following Diſtich.

" Qui rigidæ flammas evaſerat ante Toloſæ
" Muretus, fumos vendidit ille mihi.

" You underſtand what he means by the Flames of
" the Severe Toulouſe, and have not forgot that " Muret was accuſed before the Parliament of that " City of a Crime, which is puniſhed by Fire. Scaliger ſuppreſſed theſe Verſes of Muret in the Second Edition of his Book.

Mr. Borreman (k) had no Reaſon to ſay that this ſnare was laid for Julius Cæſar Scaliger. What is ſaid of this pretended Paſſage of Trabea's being an Epigram, is as groundleſs. (l) Joſeph. Scaliger, cui ille (Muretus) verba dederat, atque epigramma recens à ſe compoſitum pro vetere obtruſerat, &c. It was a paſſage in a Scene of a Comedy. See Mr. Menage in the 83. Chapter of the Anti-Baillet, where you will find ſeveral curious things concerning this Fact, but not the whole paſſage of Scaliger. I cannot believe that Menage purpoſely omitted it. I ſuſpect that he had not by him the Commentary on Varro; for if he had known that it contains another ſnare into which this great Critick fell, I am apt to think he had freely cited it. I have not that Edition of Scaliger's Commentary, but on the credit of Scriverius I ſhall venture to affirm that immediately after the Words cited by Coſtar are the following. (a) Quod ſi hi placent, non gravabor, & alios ejuſdem notæ, ſed alius Poetæ, adhibere, qui tanquam ſuperiorum gemini & germani ſunt. Sunt autem Accii, veteris ac graviſſimi Tragici, ex Oenomao:

Nam ſi lamentis allevaretur dolor,
Longoque fletu minueretur miſeria,
Tum turpe lacrumis indulgere non foret,
Fractaque voce Divûm obteſtare fidem,
Tabifica donec pectore exceſſet lues.
Nunc hæ neque hilum de dolore detrahunt,
Potiuſque cumulum miſeriis adjiciunt mali,
Et indecoram mentis mollitiem arguunt.

Qui verſus hactenus latuerunt, eoſque nunc primum in vulgus publicamus, quorum priores Trabeæ mihi ad verbum è Philemone (vel Menandro, ſecundùm alios,) mutuati videntur: qui eandem ſententiam extulit: Εἰ τὰ δάκρυ' ἡμῖν, &c. Hæc illuſtris heros, qui poſteaquam dolum perſenſit, præ indignatione hoc diſtichon, quod mihi de manu in manum vivus videnſque olim tradidit, ex tempore luſit:

Qui rigidæ flammas evaſerat ante Toloſæ,
Falſidico fumos vendidit ore mihi.

Virum diſertum deſignans, cujus nomini heic parco. Heroe (æterno, heu, doctorum omnium dolore) defuncto, incidi in Poſthuma quædam ſcripta M. A. M. C. R. (†) & inter poemata repperi hæc.

AFFICTA TRABEÆ.

Here, ſi querelis, ejulatu, fletibus, &c.

Prorſus eadem cum iis quæ ſuprà recitavi. Illud alterum ex Actii Oenomao fragmentum nuſquam compares: præterquam in Rittershuſii in Oppianum Commentario: ubi Trabeæ & Actii hos verſus, elegantes & memoria digniſſimos (ut ipſe vocat) producit, tranſcriptos & mutuatos ex Notis Scaligeri. I have not concluded this Citation with Scaliger's Words, but choſe to continue it by citing thoſe which Scriverius adds to them becauſe they afford matter for two critical remarks. In the firſt place it is viſible that Scaliger's Diſtich is otherwiſe expreſſed than Mr. Baillet after Nicius Erythræus has quoted it (b), and otherwiſe than Mr. Menage (c) cites it from the Collection of Scaliger's Poems made by Scriverius from Scaliger's Originals. In the 2d. place we plainly ſee that Scriverins was ignorant that the pretended Verſes of Accius were any where elſe to be found than in Scaliger and Rittershuſius his Copiſt. But we ſhall immediately ſee that they were inſerted in an Edition of Muret's Poems publiſhed two Years after Scaliger had publiſhed his Commentary on " Varro. Here is the proof of it: (d) Muret cauſed
" them to be Printed in his Collection of Poems of Aldus's Edition in 1575, with this Note: Cum veteris
" Comici Græci Philemonis ſententiam à Plutarcho & à
" Stobæo acceptam, animi cauſſâ exprimere tentaſſem,
" & dicendi genere, & numero, veterum Latinorum
" ſimillimo: Placuit etiam experiri, nunquid eandem
" comicè explicare poſſem. Viſum eſt utrumque non infeliciter ſucceſſiſſe. Per jocum itaque prioribus verſibus
" Accii, poſterioribus Trabeæ nomen aſcripſi, ut experirer aliorum judicia, & viderem num quis in eis ineſſet vetuſtatis ſapor. Nemo repertus eſt qui non ea pro
" veteribus acceperit. Unus etiam, & eruditione & judicio acerrimo præditus, repertus eſt, qui ea à me acceptä

(f) This was Written in the beginning of the Year 1700.

(g) Coſtar, Apolog. pag. 303. 304.

(h) Id. ib. pag. 419. in his 2d. Letter to Mr. de Heurles.

(i) Theſe are the Words that are Wanting here: tum propter ſententiæ elegantiam, tum etiam quia vulgo nondum noti ſunt. Scaliger brings in afterwards the ſix pretended verſes of Trabea.

TRAPPE (THE ABBY OF LA) Situate in a very Solitary place (A) on the Frontiers of Perche in the Dioceſs of Seez, is become very Famous ſince the Abbot de Rancé hath reformed it. He held it in Commendam above 25 Years, but in 1662. he made an Agreement, † by Virtue of which the Monks of the ſtrict Obſervance entred and took Poſſeſſion of the Monaſtery. And the better to Encourage their Eſtabliſhment, he quitted to them the Seat of Nuiſement which he enjoy'd as Abbot in Commendam. The following Year he obtained of the King a permiſſion * to become regular Abbot of this Abby. He took the Regular Habit, and was admitted Novice in the Monaſtery of our Lady of Perſeigne, of the ſtrict Obſervance of the Ciſtercian Order on the 13 of June 1663. being then Aged 37 Years and five Months —— † On the 26 of June following having received his Diſpatches from Rome, impowering him to hold the Abby of la Trappe, as a Regular Abbot, he made his profeſſion in the Abby of Perſeigne —— ‖ The 3d of July following he received the Abbatial Benediction —— in the Monaſtery of St. Martin of Seez, and went to his Abby the 14th Day of the ſame Month. By his Natural Eloquence and Example he prevailed on his Monks to ſubmit to the Primitive Auſterities of their Rule. ‡ There was not one of them but would follow his Abbot's ſteps, and in imitation of him abſtain from Drinking of Wine, eating of Eggs and Fiſh and apply himſelf to manual Labour for three Hours each Day. This Abby was fallen into (B) a very depraved State. It was Founded in the Year 1140.

TREBATIUS (CAIUS) ſurnamed ζ Teſta, was a very great Civilian. He had a α vaſt Memory, and tho' he θ profeſſed himſelf an Epicurean, he was a Man of κ incomparable Probity. During the War with the Gauls he

" cepta pro veteribus publicaret. Ne quis igitur amplius fallatur, & rem totam detegendam, & carmina ipſa hic ſubjicienda duxi.

" Afficta Attio.
" Nam ſi lamentis, &c.
" Afficta Trabeæ.
" HERE, ſi querellis, &c. "

Theſe Words of Muret detect a miſtake contained in the paſſage which is in the beginning of this Remark. Mr. Colomiés imagined that Scaliger ventured to find a Father for the Latin Verſes communicated to him; Mr. Colomiés I ſay fancied that this great Critick not content to receive them as a fragment of an Antient Author, peremptorily decided that it was a part of ſuch a Dramatick piece of Trabea. But Muret convinces us that the Fact was not ſo, but that he ſuddenly produced theſe Lines as the Verſes of that Ancient Poet. Scaliger was only deceived by giving Credit to Muret's Words. As for the reſt he clearly ſaw that they were an imitation of certain Greek Verſes in Plutarch (e), which in Amyot's Verſion run thus:

Si nos mal-heurs les larmes gueriſſoyent,
Et ſi nos maux incontinent ceſſoyent
Que l'on auroit larmoyé tendrement,
Au poids de l'or payees cherement
En un mal-heur les larmes devroyent eſtre:
Mais maintenant les afaires, mon maiſtre,
N'y penſent point, & n'y jettent point l'œil:
Ains ſoit, ou non que tu pleures en dueil,
Pas ne lairront d'aller la meſme voye.
Qu'eſt-il beſoin donc que noſtre œil larmoye?
Qu'y gagnons-nous? Rien: mais douleur produit,
Comme arbres font, des larmes pour ſon fruit.

Scaliger was more excuſable on this Occaſion than when he took the Oration de duplici concordia, for a performance (f) of Juſtus Lipſius; for nothing better reſembles the Verſes of the Ancients than thoſe of the (‖) pretended Trabea: But the Oration falſly attributed to (g) Juſtus Lipſius, is not like any of that Writer's other Works. The Poet Apollonius Collatius hath nothing in him which looks like Antiquity, and yet Scaliger (h) and ſeveral other very good Criticks have taken him for an Ancient Poet. Add to this Mr. Colomies's Words. " (i) I have " heard Mr. Voſſius ſay, that Boxhornius corrected " and commented on a Satyr de Lite, which he " believed to be Ancient, which was Written " by Chancellor de l'Hoſpital. Which to " my great Satisfaction I afterward found true. " Pricæus an Engliſh Critick is Guilty of the " ſame fault " in his Commentary on Apuleius's Apology page 54. A Madrigal of Menage paſſed for Taſſo's: It is in the 2d. Tome of the Anti-baillet page 259. and the Hiſtory of this Innocent Cheat is inſerted in the ſame Author's Meſcolanze. Muret (k) complains that he was wrongfully accuſed of being the Author of ſome Letters and Poems Compare with this the Remarks M and Y of the Article Eraſmus.

(A) In a very Solitary place.] (l) " This Abby " is ſituated in a Valley moderately large. The " Wood and little Hills which ſurround it, are diſpoſed as if deſign'd to hide it from the reſt of " the World. They encloſe arable Lands, Plantations, Fruit Trees, paſture Grounds and Nine Ponds " which encompaſs the Abby, and render it ſo " difficult of acceſs that it is very hard to come at it " without a Guide. There was heretofore a Road " from Mortagne to Paris behind the Walls of the " Garden; but tho' it was in the Wood, and above " five Hundred paces from the Encloſure, and tho' " it was not poſſible to remove it farther without " a vaſt Expence, yet the Abbot turned it another " Way, in order to render the place round the " Monaſtery more Solitary. And indeed nothing " is more ſo than this Deſert: For tho' there are " ſeveral Towns and large Villages for three " Leagues round it, yet thoſe who are here ſeem " to be in a Foreign Country. An uninterrupted ſilence Reigns throughout; and if any noiſe, " is heard, 'tis only the ruſtling of Trees agitated by the Wind, or the Brooks running through " the Pebbles. This Abby diſcovers it ſelf at going " out of the Foreſt of Perche, when one is coming " from the South; and tho' the Traveller thinks himſelf very near, he finds it near a Mile before he " reaches it: But having at laſt deſcended the Hill, " croſſed the Heath, and gone on a little way amongſt Hedges and through Shady Paths he comes " to the firſt Court, where the Receiver's Apartment is. It is ſeparated from thoſe of the " Monks by a ſtrong Paliſſado of Pales and Thorns, " which the Abbot cauſed to be made after he retired thither.

(l) Felibien, deſcription de l'Abbaye de la Trappe, pag. 6. & Seq. Printed at Paris in 1671. and the ſecond time in 1682.

(B) Fallen into a depraved State. It was founded.] I ſhall continue to uſe the ſame Author's Words who furniſhed me with the precedent Remarks (a) " The Abby of Our Lady de la Maiſon Dieu de la " Trappe, (for ſo it is called) was founded by Rotrou Earl of Perche, in the Year 1140. and conſecrated under the Name of the Bleſſed Virgin in " 1214. by Robert Arch-Biſhop of Roüen, Ralph " Biſhop of Evreux, and Sylveſter Biſhop of Séez. It " felt for a long time the decay of the Ciſtercian " Order, and fell into the ſame irregularities, in " which every Body knows ſeveral Monaſteries " of that Order continue to this Day ſince the " looſeneſs introduced 200 Years ago, having " not yet embraced the Strict obſervance of " the rule re-Eſtabliſhed in France, by the late " Cardinal de la Rochefoucault, when M. Armand " John Bouthillier de Rancé, Doctor of Divinity, chief Almoner to the late Duke of Orleans, " and Abbot in Commendam of this Abby above " 25 Years by his great Care, and frequent " exhortations brought the Monks of this Abby to " conſent and to requeſt that it might be put into " the hands of the Fathers of the ſtrict Obſervance, " to re-Eabliſh the Primitive and exact practice " of the Rule. The Abbot de Barbarie of the

(a) Felibien ibid. pag. 11. & ſeq.

" ſtrict

he was received into Julius Cæsar's favour by the recommendation of Cicero (A), and if he would, might have enjoyed the Profit of a Tribune's Post without the performance of that Office. Perhaps he would not have acquitted himself very well in it; for Cicero * seems sometimes a little to reproach his want of Bravery, and doubtless it was only his Learned Conversation which indeared him to Cæsar and his Friends. Several of the Letters he received from Cicero are yet extant. Those who say that he engaged in Pompey's party (B), are very much mistaken. He was always firm to Julius Cæsar, and persuaded Cicero to the same. He maintain'd so great a Reputation after Julius Cæsar's Death, that Augustus being in doubt concerning the validity of (C) Codicils, authoriz'd the use of them by the Advice and persuasive Reasons of Trebatius, after having before consulted the most able Civilians. Several are of Opinion, that wherever we find in the Pandects * the Sayings of the Ancients brought in, it ought chiefly to be understood of Trebatius, and his Scholar Labeo. The Character of a Learned Man given to Trebatius by Horace, seems to signifie a great deal in that ‖ place. This Civilian's Tutor was Cornelius Maximus. He Published several Works (D). He was sometimes mistaken in affirming (E), that certain things had never been taught.

TRISTAN L'HERMITE (Lewis) was Lewis the XI. his Instrument of Vengeance and † Cruelty. He was Provost Marshal, or, according to others, Great Provost of the King's Houshold. "a He became so terrible to all good Men, "that they were afraid to Name him——— He was not content to obey the barbarous Commands of depriving those of their Lives who had not been Convicted "of any Crime; but executed those Orders with a precipitation not excusable in the "most savage Monsters of Cruelty. This made him take sometimes the Innocent "for the Guilty; and to repair the Fault committed by his Mistake, he was oblig'd to kill two Persons instead of one.

He was Knighted by β Charles VII. after the Siege of Fronsac. His Son Peter L'HERMITE was the Father of John L'HERMITE, who shewed Thevet the Cosmographer, in the House of Mortaigne, γ several Antient Deeds, importing the Relation betwixt the Lords of that House and the Antient Romans. I take notice of this only as an Instance of the Folly of those Traditions which are preserved in Antient Families. Thuanus δ wonders that Philip de Comines hath not mention'd this Tristan, who left a great Estate behind him, part of which was the Principality of Mortaing in Gascogne—— possibly 'twas he who imprison'd Philip de Comines.

TRISTAN L'HERMITE (Francis) Gentleman to the Duke of Orleans, and one of the best Poets of the XIIth Century, η pretended to descend from Lewis XI's Grand Provost. He was ζ born at the Castle of Souliers, in the Province

"strict Observance, and Visitor of the Province, "being come thither at the request of the Abbot de Rance, with a Commission from the Abbot de Prieres Vicar General, compleated an Agreement "between the Abbot and the Old Monks of la Trappe the 17 of August 1662. wich was ratified "in the Parliament of Paris the 16 of February "1663. By Virtue of which the Monks of the strict "Observance entred and took possession of the Monastery."

(A) Was received into Julius Cæsar's Favour by the recommendation of Cicero, and if he would, might have enjoyed.] Cicero recommended him in the following terms: (a) Hunc, mi Cæsar, sic velim omni tua comitate complectare, ut omnia quæ per me possis adduci ut in meos conferre velis, in unum hunc conferas: de quo tibi homine hæc spondeo non illo vetere verbo meo, quod, cum ad te de Milone scripsissem, jure lusisti: sed more Romano, quo modo homines non inepti loquuntur: probiorem hominem, meliorem virum, prudentiorem esse neminem. Accedit etiam, quod familiam ducit, in jure civili singularis memoria, summa scientia. Huic ego neque tribunatum, neque præfecturam, neque ullius beneficii certum nomen peto: benevolentiam tuam & liberalitatem peto: neque impedio, quo minus, si tibi ita placuerit, etiam hisce eum ornes gloriolæ insignibus. Totum denique hominem tibi ita trado de manu (ut ajunt) in manum tuam istam, & victoria & fide præstantem. This was a very important Recommendation, for Trebatius might have been an Honorary Tribune and enjoyed the Profits of that high Office: (b) Ex tuis literis cognovi præproperam quandam festinationem tuam, & simul sum admiratus cur tribunatus commoda, demto præsertim labore militiæ contemseris. Cicero foresaw that (c) he himself would prove the greatest Obstacle to his Fortune. He is not the only Person of that humour: How many Men are there who would have Risen, if they had had but Patience enough, or if they had been Importunate or Immeasurably Impudent?

(B) That he engaged in Pompey's Party, are very much mistaken.] Zazius gave out this Falsity, and was refuted by Rutilius, as William Grotius observes: (d) Cum bellum civile incrudesceret partes Cæsaris semper bona fide secutus est, ipsumque Ciceronem monere non destitit, ut vel ei se conjungeret, vel in Græciam proficisceretur (1). Ut mirum videri possit Zasium scribere, Trebatium Pompejanarum fuisse partium, & Ciceronis interventu in gratiam receptum: sed hæc jam Rutilius diluit. Suetonius relates, 1st. That Trebatius advised Julius Cæsar to rise when the Senators went to him in the Temple of Venus: 2. That Cæsar disapproving his Counsel (e) shew'd some indifferency for him. This evinces, that our Civilian was a Favourite of Julius Cæsar.

(C) Concerning the validity of Codicils, authoriz'd the use of them.] Bertrand's words are, (f) Cæterum Justinianus in §. 1. de jure codicil. in Institut. refert, Augustum, cum de codicillorum viribus dubitaret, qui antea in usu non fuerant, convocasse sapientes viros, inter quos Trebatium, cujus tunc maxima auctoritas erat, & quæsisse, an non absonans a juris ratione codicillorum usus esset, recipique possit: Trebatium id suasisse Augusto, quod diceret, utilissimum ac necessarium civibus esse, propter magnas & longas peregrinationes quæ apud veteres fuissent; ubi si quis testamentum facere non posset, tamen codicillos posset. Mr. Menage (g) rejects Heinsius's Opinion, who pretends to prove that Trebatius's Opinions are most times Condemned in the Pandects: Longe plura sunt, saith Mr. Menage, in quibus Trebatii sententiam sequuntur cæteri Juris interpretes, & omnino falsa est Heinsiana Sententia. It is certain that Trebatius's Authority was very great for several Ages. Which Ammianus Marcellinus's Words plainly testify: (h) Hi ut altius videantur jura callere TREBATIUM loquuntur & Cascellium, & Alfenum, & Auruncorum Sicanorumque jam diu leges ignotas cum Evandri matre abhinc seculis obrutas multis.

(D) He Publish'd several Works.] An Antient (i) Scholiast asserts (k) That Aulus Trebatius a Roman Knight, and Civilian, Composed several Tracts on the Civil-law, and Nine Books concerning Religions. This Account is not very exact, for (l) Macrobius hath cited the 10th Book of that work of Trebatius. And

---

* See Bertrand, de jurisperitis l. 2. p. m. 249. & Cicero ep. 10. l. 7. ad famil.

* Bertrand. ib. p. 249.

‖ Horat. sat. 1. lib. 2. v. 78.

† Pomponius de origine juris l. 3. c. 11. n. 45.

* See the Remark Q. of the Art. Louis XI.

a Varillas Hist. de Louis XI. Book 10. pag. 341. Dutch Ed.

β Matthieu, hist. de Louis XI. B. 11. p. m. 751.

γ Thevet Cosmographie universelle, B. 14. fol. 517.

δ Thuana. p. m. 37, 38

ε Chevræana tom. 1. pag. 29. Dutch. Ed.

ζ Pellison ubi infra. I think it should be Soliers.

(a) Cicero epist. 5. lib. 7. ad familiar, pag. m. 375, 376. Note that in the 1st Letter of the 10th Book to Atticus, he uses these words, Trebatii boni viri & civis verbis te gaudeo esse delectatum.

(b) Idem epist. 8. ejusd. libri.

(c) Tibi unum timendum sit ne ipse tibi defuisse videare. Id. epist. 7. ejusd. lib.

(d) Guilel. Grotius, de vitis Jurisconf. pag. 78.

Province of Marche. * He was brought up Page of Honour to Scevola de Sainte Marthe. His Tragedy intitled (AΔ) Mariamne paſſed for an excellent Piece †. He was admitted into the French Academy, in the place of Mr. Colomby about the year 1640. After which he lived about ſix or ſeven Years.

"‖ He died very religiouſly at the Palace of Guiſe, without ſuffering his Friends "to viſit him, and forgot all things to think of God. What is ſaid of his Poverty, doth not ſeem true (A) in all particulars, and would be no Proof of the Injuſtice

* Chevræana, T. I.

† St. Baillet Jugemens ſur les poetes, vol. 4. p. 158.

‡ Mr. Peliſſon, hiſt. de l'Academie Françoiſe, p. m. 352. where one may ſee the Catalogue of his Works.

‖ Chevræana ibid.

And Bertrand's Words are yet wider from Truth; (a) Certum eſt Trebatium ſcripſiſſe de religionibus lib. [illegible]

(E) In affirming that certain things had never been ſaid before.] Cicero once convicted him of Falſity. I ſhall cite the Paſſage at length, to inform the Reader that Trebatius treated his Friends very handſomly. (b) Illuſeras heri inter ſcyphos, quod dixeram, controverſiam eſſe, poſſetne heres, quod furtum antea factum eſſet, furti recte agere. Itaque, etſi domum bene potus ſeroque redieram, tamen id caput, ubi hæc controverſia eſt, notavi, & deſcriptum tibi miſi: ut ſcires, id, quod tu neminem ſenſiſſe dicebas, Sex. Ælium, M. Manilium, M. Brutum ſenſiſſe. Thoſe who quote this Epiſtle of Cicero, to make it appear that Trebatius reduced the Precepts of his Sect into practice, and that he lived like an Epicurean Libertin, reaſon very ill. Doth not Cicero, tho' of a contrary Opinion, own that he had drank very freely that Evening? And is it Reaſonable thence to form Concluſions againſt his Manners? It is therefore certain, that this Paſſage doth not hinder Trebatius from being a Proof that the impious Opinions of the Epicureans were compatible with the practice of Moral Virtues; for as I have already ſaid, Trebatius was a very honeſt Man. Bertrand draws another Conſequence from this Epiſtle of Cicero: He would have it to prove that Trebatius attempting to paſs for the Inventer of his Anſwers, magiſterially affirmed that no Author had ever ſaid any ſuch thing: (c) Tantam autem Trebatius in reſpondendo vanam oſtentationem, inanemque gloriolam habebat, ut ſæpiſſime quæ plerique ante eum dixerant, neminem præter eum ſenſiſſe audacter profiteretur.

(*A*Δ) His Tragedy intitled Mariamne.] The Abbot Marolles obſerves, (d) That this Play was that with which the incomparable Mondori, the beſt Actor of his time, ended. This is a little equivocal. He ſhould have ſaid that this famous Player left his Life by the Efforts he was obliged to make, to repreſent the Paſſions which the Author had deſcribed. In the Parnaſſe Reformé, an Actor is introduced, ſaying to Triſtane, (e) I believe you would have us act nothing elſe but Mariamne, and kill a Mondory every Week in your Service.

(A) What is ſaid of his Poverty doth not ſeem true in all particulars.] Let us hear Mr. Menage. (f) M. "Q——— was a Servant to Mr. Triſtan. M. de Montauſier ſaid, That when he died he left him his Spirit "of Poetry, and would willingly have left him his "Cloak too if he had had one: On which Mr. de "Montmor made this Epigram, which is cited by "Mr. de Furetiere:

" Elie ainſi qu'il eſt écrit
" De ſon manteau joint à ſon double eſprit
" Récompenſa ſon ſerviteur fidele.
" Triſtan eût ſuivi ce modele;
" Mais Triſtan qu'on mit au Tombeau
" Plus pauvre que n'eſt un Prophete,
" En laiſſant à Q——— ſon eſprit de Poete,
" Ne put lui laiſſer de manteau.

It is certain that Mr. Furetiere, whom Mr. Menage cites, doth not aſcribe this Rallery to Mr. de Montauſier, but to Mr. Bourdelot. It is no ſmall happineſs for Mr Quinaut, ſays he, (g) "to have been Servant to "the illuſtrious Mr. Triſtan, under whom he ſerved "his Apprentiſhip in Poetry. Which one day drew "on him the Compliment of a great Prince (1), "who at the end of one of his Plays congratulated "him, by comparing him and his Maſter to Eliſha, and "Elijah. As Elijah, ſaid he, when taken up to "Heaven, by giving Eliſha his Mantle, left him the "Spirit of Prophecy; ſo Triſtan at his death, tranſmitted to Quinaut his Prophetical Genius. Mr. "Bourdelot, who was preſent, obſerved that the "Simile was lame of one foot; for Triſtan had never a Cloak: which occaſion'd this Epigram, that "was then made to preſerve the Memory of this "Parallel.

" Elie, ainſi qu'il eſt écrit, &c.

I doubt not but Triſtan's wretched condition was here puſhed too far, and I cannot perſuade my ſelf that his Poverty was like that of the famous Poet with whom Mr. Deſpreaux begins his Satyrs:

Damon (h) ce grand Auteur, dont la Muſe fertile
Amuſa ſi long temps, & la cour & la ville;
Mais qui n'étant vêtu que de ſimple bureau,
Paſſe l'eté ſans linge, & l'hyver ſans manteau,

I dare engage that ſome Perſons, yet alive, have ſeen Triſtan with a Cloak, or at leaſt that they know ſome who have ſeen him with one in cold Weather or Rain. I am willing to believe that it was not a new, or a very dear one, but in ſhort it was a Cloak ¶. A Wit diſpoſed to divert himſelf with the Poverty of the Poets, chiefly turns on theſe two Topicks, viz. their being ill cloathed, and ill lodged; and this ſort of Rallery moſt times exceeds the Bounds of Truth. Coſtar was puzzled when oblig'd to account for theſe words (i). "Arioſto and Taſſo have erected very rich Palaces, not-"to ſpeak of that of Love in Marino's Adonis; and "yet they hir'd Chambers to lodge in: this is not "what we call ædificare caſas. Theſe, Sir, are the "People who, as you ſay, would delay Building till the "Stones will ſucceſſively come of their own accord, "and place themſelves one upon another. But his Adverſary diſcovered his Fallacies and their Origin; he obſerved that Coſtar was not much concerned for Truth, provided he could pleaſe his Fancy. The whole Criticiſm which falls ſeverely on him, runs thus. (k) "I own that Taſſo was poor, "yet he did not live in Lodgings; he had his Apartments in the Palaces of the Dukes of Ferrara, "and other Princes, in whoſe Court he reſided. "And as to what concerns Arioſto, he was rich enough, and ſo far from being reduc'd to live in "Lodgings, that he built a very convenient Houſe, "where he generally reſided, as he himſelf aſſures us "in theſe Verſes which he cauſed to be Engraved "on it.

" Parva, ſed apta mihi, ſed nulli obnoxia, ſed non Sordida, parta meo, ſed tamen ære domus.

"Battiſta Pigna, who wrote his Life ſaith, That he "was very much addicted to Building, and that his "moſt common Employment, was continually to "alter or improve ſomething or other in his Houſe. "Ma dilettando ſi molto d'edificare, &c. Intorno à "queſta ſua caſa non ſi contentando mai d'una coſa fatta, facea ſpeſſo rifarla dicendo d'eſſere ancora tale "nel far verſi, eſſendo che molto li mutava e rimutava. If you deſire another Witneſs, Paulus Jovius "ſays in his Elogies, Receptus inde eſt ab Alfonſo "Principe tanquam bonarum omnium amicus & ſodalis, "cujus benigna manu urbanam domum extruxit "peramœnâ hortorum ubertate, frugi menſa quotidianos ſumptus adæquantem. But you are not "much concerned for the truth of what you ſay; "you are afraid that things would be ridiculous if "too true. All is well, if the matter doth not fail "you, and you can fill the Page." Coſtar was not ſo inſenſible of this vigorous Blow as not to think of ſome Shifts; but indeed they are meer Cavils. It is true, ſaith he (l), that Taſſo for a long time had an Apartment in the Ducal Palace of Ferrara: But when he wrote his Heroick Poem Rinaldo at Padua, or when he was imployed in the diſpoſition of the Deſign and matter of his Gieruſalemme liberata; did not he live in Lodgings? and doth not he in one of his Letters complain of their inconveniencies? As for Arioſto, we ſhall find him in his Satyrs complaining of his extreme Poverty (m). ——— (n) At laſt Alfonſo's Liberalities enabled him to build a Houſe. But Battiſta Pigna teſtifies, that 'twas at a very ſmall Expence, poca ſpeſa. And a certain Perſon telling him that ſuch a ſmall Building did not very well agree with ſo many Towring and Magnificent Palaces, which he had erected in his Writings; he anſwer'd, that building with Words and building with Stones were not the ſame thing: Egli dandogli queſta feſtevole riſpoſta, che porvi le pietre & porvi le parole non è il medeſimo

(h) Deſpreaux Sat. 1. at the beginning.

(¶) Add that it was without doubt rather his own Cloak, tho perhaps bought in a Broker's ſhop, than a borrowed or hired one.

(i) Entretiens de Voiture & de Coſtar. pag. 329.

(k) Girac, remarques ſur les entretiens de Coſtar. pag. 263, 264.

(l) Coſtar, Apologie p. 330.

(m) Coſtar quotes in this place ſeveral Verſes of Arioſto, that witneſs his Poverty; but the Complaints of Poets are not always a Proof of their being poor.

(n) Id. ib. pag. 331.

justice of the Age, nor any Argument of the (Z) sterility of the Services done to the Muses. He had a Brother † who applied himself to the writing of Genealogies, and who Publish'd a History of Touraine, and is, if I am not mistaken, the same John Bap TRISTAN L'HERMITE de Soliers, who * in the Year 1661, Published the Cabinet of Lewis XI. containing several Fragments, Letters, and secret Intrigues concerning the reign of that Monarch; and several other very curious Pieces, never before Published. Collected from several Archives and Repositories.

TRISTAN DE SAINT AMANT (John) an Antiquary and Medallist in the XVII. Century, Author of a Work in Three Volumes in Folio, Entituled a Commentaires Historiques, was the Son of Charles ‖ Tristan, Auditor of Accompts at Paris. Father Sirmond and he wrote against each other. † desimo. I would ask Mr. Girac if it is not probable, that Ariosto lodged in a hired Room, whilst the Builders were at work; and much more before he was able to employ them? Costar subjoins several Examples. He saith that Terence had not so much as one hired House; that (a) Vitellius when he left Rome to go into Germany, (b) where soon after the Roman Legions created him Emperor, left his Wife and Children in a hired Room; that Malherbe never lived otherwise; and that his excellent Verses did not bring him in enough to build even a poor Cottage which he could call his own. Every one must needs see that this way of answering is but a wretched Apology; for, not to insist on every particular, could not Ariosto, while the Workmen were employ'd in building his House, rent another; a Practice very common amongst a vast number of very rich People? Are Terence, Vitellius, or Malherbe concerned in this Dispute, or does the question run upon this, viz. Whether (c) it was scandalous for Tasso and Ariosto to live in Lodgings? The Question is only about the matter of fact it self. Costar could not maintain what he advanced; he is therefore conquered. The same Fate would probably fall on those who should be oblig'd to bring Proofs that Tristan l'Hermite had not so much as a Cloak.

Men are too much pleased with exaggerations in this sort of Rallery; they imagine that without exceeding the bounds of Truth, they cannot give a sufficient vigour to their Thoughts. We shall next take a view of a Rondeau, which supposes some Poets not able so much as to get a Lodging. This is a hint from the Fable of Amphion's Lyre, which was of that strange virtue, that without the help of any other Artifice, it was able to build a City.

Le (d) beau secret pour Elever le corps
D'un grand Logis! Tels Ouvriers sont morts;
Il n'en est plus; a leur douce harmonie
Les gross moelons venoient de compagnie,
Et s'arrangeoient comme par des ressorts.
A peu de frais, & sans aucuns efforts,
Pareilles gens édifioient alors,
La seule voix au Luth estant unie;
Le beau secret!
Ah! pour bastir, si les charmans accords,
Si les bons Vers, tenoient lieu de trésors,
Que de Palais de splendeur infinie!
Nos Amphions sont en chambre garnie;
S'ils n'y sont pas, c'est qu'ils couchenti (d) dehors:
Le beau secret!

You see Mr. Berserade thought it impossible to rally agreeably without taking his Subject a Note higher than those who touched it before him. He believed it too vulgar to lodge the Poets in a hired Room very near the Garret. This is doubtless the Destiny of some, as well as it was the hard fate of the Grammarian Orbilius, who, as Suetonius informs us, taught at Rome with much more Reputation than Profit (e), and he himself complained in one of his Books, that the Poverty which attended his Old-age, obliged him to lodge in a Garret. This Complaint seems better grounded than the Confession which Martial makes of being lodged in the third Story.

Et (f) scalis habito tribus, sed altis.

Mr. Gombaud was rallied for having no better Lodging. "(g) Mr. Boitard, President of the Cham"ber of Accounts at Montpelier, was very much "pleased with jesting upon Mr. de Gombaud.
"Once in raillery he caused a Bill to be clap"ped on his Door, importing, *That if any Per"son had found a Bruges Satin Bag, in which are
"Mr.* de Gombaud's Thoughts, if they'l be pleased to "bring them to the Scutcheon of Ancezune, *in the "*Rue des Noyers, four pair of Stairs, ubi ponunt ova
"(h) columbæ; they shall be very well rewarded.

Some are of Opinion, that Juvenal did not mean that the best Roman Poets were just ready to turn Keepers of Baths or Bakers; but that the true sense of his words is, that they design'd to lodge at some Bath-keepers or Bakers, that they might warm themselves for nothing. However, it be, the place of Juvenal which gives a lively Description of their deplorable condition:

(i) Cum jam Celebres, notique poetæ
Balneolum Gabiis, Romæ conducere furnos
Tentarent; nec fœdum alii, nec turpe putarent
Præcones fieri, cum, desertis Aganippes
Vallibus, esuriens migraret in atria Clio.

But Mr. Benserade goes yet much further; he says some Poets pass the whole Night in the Street, and lie under no other Canopy than that of Heaven, being more miserable than Foxes (k) who have their Holes, or the Birds of the Air who do not want their Nests.

It is so true, that the thing aimed at by this sort of rallery, is to shew, that Poets have no Houses of their own, that a certain ingenious Man was pleased to feign, that a Poet having once bought a House, a Poetical Parliament was call'd to consider of this great Novelty, and the greatest Poets urging that they never lived otherwise than in Lodgings, he was immediately oblig'd to sell his House. This Story in Latin runs thus; (l) Memini me olim legisse elegantem ingenii lusum, superiore ætate excusum, cum inscriptione: Poeta domum emit. Argumentum libelli est, nescio quis poeta, qui cum propriam domum emisset, res ea tanquam novi & pessimi Exempli, ad Poetarum Senatum delata, acerbe judicata est. Præses Senatûs Eobanus Hessus constitutus, cui assederunt, Celtes, Huttenus, Bebelius, Brassicanus, alii. Cum Sententias dicerent, nemo ex omnibus fuit, qui vel Mecœnatum gratia, vel ingenii felicitate tantum profecerit, ut ædes proprias vel hæreditate vel emptione possederit; omnes rei familiaris incurii, in conducto se vixisse & fassi sunt & gloriati. Jussus igitur est quam primum ædes revendere, pecuniam vero in sympotium conferre quo immanem hanc culpam elueret, & ubique habitare ac sine curis vivere poetice discerent. Hac illi.

The Jests made on our Tristan l'Hermite were chiefly levelled at the meanness of his cloaths. It was he whom Mr. Gueret chose to be an Apologist for ill-drest Poets; for a certain Person having said (m) That their uncombed Hair, their nasty Linnen, and the ridiculous figure which their ragged cloaths made, would force a smile from the gravest men, Tristan briskly reply'd, (n) "You trouble your Head about a "Trifle——let the Poets live as they please: don't "you know they can't abide constraint? And what "is it to you, that they are ill cloathed, if their "Verse be lofty and magnificent? Don't deceive
"your self, this great Negligence is the source of "their finest Poems: they are thus unconcerned at "worldly things, to make their court to the Muses
"with the greater assiduity; and when their eyes
"appear to you distracted, their Imagination is busi-
"ed in quest of those surprising Wonders which ra"vish you. Would to God that our Dramatick Po"ets were only guilty of this fault, I could easily Par"don them. But contrary to those you speak of, they "are magnificently dress'd, they look great by reason "of their rich Apparel, and their Poems are languid
"and without Oeconomy.

(Z) Would be no Proof of the Injustice of the Age, nor any Argument of the sterility of the Services done to the Muses.] If any one should ever think of reducing all the Lists of poor Learned Men, which we find in several places (o), into an universal Catalogue, it would swell to a very large Book; and the Poets would here take up more room than all other Authors, if we either regard their Accounts of themselves, or the truth of the Fact. I think I have already cited these Verses of Reignier.

Or

† Marolles, dénombrement des auteurs.

* At Paris, 'tis a Book in 12. of 122 pages.

a See what Judgment M. de Spanheim gives of him, De usu & præst. numism. pag. 774. & epist. 3. ad Morellium. pag. 148.

(a) Id. ib. pag. 332.

(b) Uxore & liberis quos Romæ relinquebat, meritorio cœnaculo additis, &c. Suet. in Vit. c. 7.

(b) Costar supposes without any reason for it, that People fancied he did a great deal of wrong to the Reputation of Tasso and Ariosto.

(c) Benserade, metamorph. d'Ovide mises en rondeaux.

(d) This puts me in mind of Father Garasse's words in his Doctrine Curieuse p. 63. They are of the Opinion of the Parasite mention'd by the Old Comick Poet Orbilius, that the greatest Torment a Spunger can be put to, as they generally are, is affligere cum Domicœnio, to condemn him to sup at home, ii tamen Lares habet.

(m) Gueret, Parnasse reformé p. m. 101.

(n) Ib. pag. 103.

(e) Docuit majore fama quam emolumento. Namque jam persenex pauperem se & habitare sub tegulis quodam scripto fatetur. Sueton. de illustr. Grammat. cap. 9. (f) Mart. epigr. 118. lib. 1. See also the 109. Epigram of the same book, where he says, At mea Vipsanas spectant cœnacula laurus. (g) Suit. du Men. p. 176. Dutch Ed.

TRONCHIN (Theodorus) a Miniſter, and Profeſſor of Divinity, Born April 17. 1581. at Geneva, where his (A) Father was a Refugee on Account of Religion. He was deſign'd to be a Scholar by the Advice of his Godfather Theodorus Beza, and he made an Extraordinary Progreſs in his Studies. The Teſtimonials given him in the Year 1600. when he went to viſit Foreign Univerſities, ſpoke him a Young Man of very great Hopes. He confirmed this Character among all the Learned Men to whom he was Pupil, or with whom he Contracted any acquaintance in his Travels (B). He returned to Geneva in 1606, and gave ſuch Signal proofs of

Or (b) avecq' tout cecy le poinct qui me conſole,
C'eſt que la pauvreté comme moi les affole,
Et que la grace à Dieu, Phœbus & ſon troupeau
Nous n'euſmes ſur le dos jamais un bon manteau &c.

A little lower he ſaith:

Pour moy, ſi mon habit, par tout cicatricé
Ne me rendoit du peuple & des grands meſpriſé
Je prendrois patience, &c.

The Epitaph on Malherbe written by Gombauld, diſcovers the Poverty of both of 'em:

L'Apollon (c) de nos jours, Malherbe, icy repoſe;
Il a vécu long-temps ſans beaucoup de ſupport:
En quel ſiecle? paſſant! je n'en dis autre choſe,
Il eſt mort pauvre, & moy je vis comme il eſt mort.

It would be very eaſy to make a Collection of Poems of the like Nature, which would fill ſeveral Sheets. The General Concluſion is that the Age is very ungrateful and unjuſt to ſuffer ſo many Men to be afflicted with Poverty, who deſerve ſo well to be rewarded, and to enjoy the conveniencies of Life. But it is certain that thoſe who talk thus are very often in the wrong; for there are ſeveral Poets, whoſe Poverty is only to be aſcribed to their too great neglect of their Domeſtick Affairs, and not knowing how to husband the Favours which they receive. Thoſe who apply themſelves wholly to the Muſes, can ſcarce think of any thing elſe, and find ſo many charming Engagements in the Compoſition of a Poem, that they cannot take off their thoughts, even when their private intereſt requires them to be employed in ſomething elſe, than the working up an Ode. " (d) Poetical Diverſions are " very great ones, and—— the Hours paſs away " very faſt that are employed that way. But is it " not this elevated pleaſure which Poets take in " their performances, that diverts them from their " Affairs, ruins their Fortune, and eſtranges them " from common Prudence? For rather than not " finiſh a Sonnet well begun, a Poet will ſuffer his " Friend to depart without bidding him Adieu, " abandon the Solicitation of his Law-ſuit, and neg- " lect the Care of his Health: As it happened " to the Cavalier Marino, who burnt his Leg " writing ſome Stanza's of his Adonis. This Poetick " Madneſs is not diſagreeable after the Evils are " happened; for it does in ſome meaſure take off the " ſenſe of them: But it is not to be valued at a " very high Rate, when it throws Men into perni- " cious Accidents, like that of Marino. On indiffe- " rent Subjects it is inocent and even divert- " ing.

" Si lors que tu luy parles,
" Il te laiſſe au Roy Jehan, & s'en court au Roy Charles.

" The Elevated imagination of a Poet is no diſa- " greeable object, when at leiſure Hours we ſee it " take its flight, and ſoar up towards every thing " that can afford it ſome thoughts. And if ſome- " times the Beauty or the Boldneſs of thoſe Pictures " which he draws, divert us; yet the Poet's ill " Fortune is always to be lamented, becauſe his moſt " preſſing Affairs ſcarce ever prevail over his Di- " ſtraction. There are ſeveral other cauſes of the ill poſture of their Affairs, which are indeed ſcandalous ones; ſome are poor notwithſtanding the Liberalities of a Mæcenas, becauſe they are prodigal and Voluptuous; others loſe at play all the Money which their poetical productions bring in. Our Triſtan ruined himſelf by this. To which purpoſe ſee what Mr. Chevreau ſays of it. " (e) We may judge of his Genius " by his Mariana. We were intimate Friends; and " when he deſired me to inform him of the fate " of the laſt Verſes which he made for the Queen " (f), I anſwered him that the Perſon who ſhewed " them to her Majeſty, did not chooſe a time when " the Queen was in a gay Humour. But if ſhe " had made him a Preſent, he wou'd have made " but a very indifferent uſe of it: Gaming was his " predominant Paſſion; and he loſt all he could " play for. At ſeveral times he received of the Duke " of S. Aignan a Thouſand Piſtoles, out of which " he could not ſpare enough to Buy a good Suit " of Cloaths." Could he then complain of the hardneſs of the Age? If he was not rich in proportion to his Condition, 'twas his own fault, and only to be Charged on his ill Conduct. He is reported to have Written his own Epitaph in theſe ſix Verſes.

Ebloui (g) de l'eclat de la ſplendeur mondaine,
Je me flatay toujours de l'eſperance vaine;
Faiſant le chien couchant auprés d'un grand Seigneur,
Je me vis toujours pauvre, & tâchay de paroiſtre;
Je veſcus dans la peine attendant le bonheur,
Et mourus ſur un coffre en attendant mon Maiſtre.

Mr. Chevreau mentions another Poet, who ruin'd himſelf by his pleaſures, viz. Colletet. " (h) In his Poems we find this Verſe.

" City and Country Houſes I enjoy.

" But theſe Houſes muſt have been in partibus infidelium. He was naturally libidinous, and to tempt " him, it was not neceſſary to be either fair or young. " That he might not get a Scandalous Name a- " mongſt his Neighbours, and not being able to " live without a Female Servant, he Married her, " and ſhe was no ſooner dead than he got ano- " ther, which he alſo did not fail to make his " Wife —— (i) Thoſe who deſigned to take an " Inventory of his Goods, aſſured me that he ſaved " them that Trouble, and left his Son the Name " of Colletet only for an Inheritance.

It would be almoſt as difficult to enrich certain Authors, as to fill the Danaides tub. They are with reſpect to their Expences what others are with reſpect to (k) Secrets; Money ſlips from them a Thouſand ſeveral ways.

(A) Where his Father was a Refugee on Account of Religion.] He was of Troyes in Champagne, and quitted France on the Account of the Maſſacre in 1572. which he eſcaped by the kind Offices of a Prieſt his Friend and Neighbour, who hid him in his Houſe. He deſign'd for Germany, and accordingly to have only paſſed through Geneva, where he nevertheleſs ſtayed by the Advice of an Acquaintance. He obtained the Freedom of that City, and not long after was admitted into the Council of two Hundred, in acknowledgment of ſeveral Services done to the Republick, during the War it was then engaged in with the Duke of Savoy (l).

(B) In his Travels.] Leaving Geneva in 1600. he ſtudied at Baſil under John Nicolas Stupanus, Amandus Polanus, and Antony Walaus. He returned to Geneva in 1602. and departed thence in 1604. to go to Heidelberg, where he was inſtructed by the Lectures of David Pareus Profeſſor of Divinity, and by thoſe of Æmilius Portus Greek Profeſſor. He Spent ſome time at Francfort to ſee Gruterus, who had rendred himſelf Famous by his Collection of Inſcriptions. In 1605. he went to the Univerſity of Franeker, to hear Sibrand Lubbertus. He ſtaid a conſiderable time at Leyden, under the Profeſſors Gomarus, Trelcatius, Bertius and Arminius: Under the laſt of which he ſolemnly maintained a Theſis in Divinity. He alſo frequented Merula and Baudius, and very often viſited Joſeph Scaliger and Heinſius, who ſhewed a great eſteem and affection for him. He was loved and praiſed by all for his Virtue and Learning. At the Hague he ſaw Hugo Grotius, who gave him ſixteen Verſes of his own making, and told him that he did it to put him in mind of his Love for him, and of his eſteem for his Learning. He ſaw at London Aaron Cappel; at Oxford (m) Druſius, and John Raynolds; at Cambridge Richard Tompſon and ſeveral others. He was very much eſteemed at Paris by Montigni and Du Moulin Miniſters, and by Caſaubon who of his Learning that he was the ſame Year made Hebrew Profeſſor. In 1607, he married Theodora Rocca, a Woman of an Extraordinary Merit in all reſpects, ſiſter to the firſt Syndic of the Republick, and Grand-Daughter to Theodorus Beza's Wife, by whom ſhe was brought up, and whoſe * God-Daughter ſhe was. He was choſen Miniſter in December 1608. and Created Rector of the Academy in 1610. He was deſired in 1614. beſides his Hebrew Lectures to Read in Divinity, one of the Profeſſors being then ſick; and when a Profeſſorſhip of Divinity became Vacant in 1618. he ſucceeded to it, and was thereby Diſcharged from his Hebrew Profeſſorſhip. The ſame Year he received Orders from the Paſtors and Profeſſors to anſwer the Jeſuit Coton, who had Writ againſt the French Verſion of the Bible a Book entituled Geneve plagiaire. He acquitted himſelf of this Commiſſion by a Tract entituled Coton plagiaire, a work very much eſteemed by the Publick. At the ſame time he and Mr. Diodati were deputed by the Church of Geneva † to the Famous Synod of Dort, where he diſcovered his profound knowledge in Theology, and a moderation which was very much praiſed. In this great conjuncture he acquired the Reputation of an extraordinary prudence. He was lent to the Duke of Rohan (C) for ſeveral Months in 1632. and perfectly anſwered that Lord's expectation, who teſtified a very great eſteem and particular affection for him. He was very grateful, and Honoured the Memory of that Duke by an Oration which he pronounced a few Days after the Death of that great Man in 1638. He continued to raiſe an eſteem in the exerciſe of all his imployments, and by a very extenſive Correſpondence in the Reformed Countries, where he obtain'd the Friendſhip of the moſt Learned Men, as well as of ſeveral great Lords and Princes. He was very happy in the Compoſition of β Orations and Latin Poems: His Converſation was very inſtructive and agreeable; for he had added to the ſtudy of Divinity, and of ſeveral Languages, the Knowledge of the Civil Law, and of ſeveral other Sciences, and that of ſacred and profane Hiſtory, eſpecially of the two laſt Centuries, of which he knew an infinite Number of Particulars. He was one of thoſe Men, who are more fond of deſerving Reputation, than of hunting after it, and he might if he had pleaſed have publiſhed very excellent Books, as γ Meſtrezat aſſures us. He was choſen by the Paſtors in 1655. to confer with and aſſiſt John Dureus in the Affair of the Union of the Lutherans and the Reformed, on which he wrote ſeveral Tracts. He arrived to a Happy Old Age free from Diſeaſes, and died very eaſily, after a Fever which had continued ſome Days, on the 19 of November 1657. the very Moment after he had received the viſit of the Paſtors and Profeſſors in a Body, who in their diſcourſe with him gave him all the Marks of a tender affection. It was obſerved that he ſurvived all the Foreign Divines who aſſiſted at the Synod of Dort. He was a frank ſincere Man, zealous for Religion and the Service of the Churches, a great Enemy to the Vices of Men, tho' very tender of their Perſons. His Advice was very much valued both for the Government, and in the two Eccleſiaſtical Bodies, and by ſtrangers, a great Number of which conſulted him. Amongſt other Children he left Lewis TRONCHIN, who was Miniſter of the Church of Lyons δ, and Four Years after was elected to ſucceed his Father in his Divinity Profeſſorſhip μ. This worthy Son enjoy'd that Poſt many Years with the Reputation of one of the ableſt Divines of this Age. All thoſe that were acquainted with the juſtneſs and penetration of his Genius paſſionately deſired that he would at laſt become an Author, and were very ſorry that he put ſo ſlight a value on that Title. He died at Geneva the 8. of September 1705. being 76 Years old. See his Elogy in the inaugural Speech of Mr. Turretin his Succeſſor in the Profeſſorſhip of Divinity.

(b) Regnier Sat. 2. fol. m. 5. verſo.

(c) See the Diverſitez curieuſes, part 10. pag. 15. Dutch Edit.

(d) Sorbiere, letter 77. pag. 559. 560.

) Chevræana m. 1. g. 29. tch Edit.

f) That Chriſtina Queen Sweden.

(g) See the Diverſitez curieuſes en pluſieurs lettres, tom. 2. pag. 141. Dutch Edit.

(h) Chevræana ib. pag. 30.

(i) Ibid pag. 31.

(k) Plenus rimarum ſum, hac atque illac perfluo. Terent. Eunuch. act. 1. ſc. 2.

(l) From an imparted Memorial.

(m) I keep to my Memorial, without inquiring who this Druſius was. Apply this throughout whenever there is occaſion.

* 'Tis therefore a thing ſomewhat ſingular, that both the Husband and the Wife ſhould have had ſuch an Illuſtrious God-Father.

† The Republick of the United Provinces had deſired of that of Geneva two of their Doctors.

β I have mention'd his Funeral Oration upon Simon Goulart in the Diſſertation concerning Junius Brutus.

γ The Paris Miniſter.

δ He was admitted Miniſter in 1651.

μ Taken from a Memorial ſent from Geneva

TULENUS, a Learned Man in the Reign of Henry the II. He was Preceptor to the Cardinal and Admiral de Chatillon ✝. He was touched with a ſort of Folly which did not prejudice his Reaſon and Judgment in all other things; but his Amorous paſſion for a certain Princeſs miſerably diſtracted him. Of which Paſquier an Eye Witneſs (Z) relates ſome circumſtances.

✝ Paſquier's Letters, B. 19. pag. 541. 542. & B. 22. pag. 791.

TULLIA,

who beſtowed great Elogies on his Learning and Piety. He afterwards made his Tour of France, and viſited at Blois, Nicolas Vignier the great Hiſtorian; at Saumur Philip Birgan, a Breton called thither by Du Pleſſis and the Academical Senate to be Profeſſor of the Oriental Tongues. He Spent ſome Months in 1606. at Montauban, where the Divinity Profeſſor Sonius ſhewed a particular eſteem for him, and at Montelimar where the Famous Daniel Chamier diſcovered a tender affection for him (a).

(C) He was lent to the Duke of Rohan for ſeveral Months in 1632.] This Duke was then Ambaſſador extraordinary from the King of France and General of his Armies in the Country of the Griſons. He ſent a Gentleman to Geneva with Letters to the Government, and the Paſtors, to deſire a Miniſter to reſide with him, with whom he might adviſe on thoſe things which might tend to the good of the Reformed Churches in that Country, that were ill treated by the Spaniards. Theodorus Tronchin was ſent to him only for ſome Months. The Neceſſities of the Academy could not allow of his long ſtay. The Term being expired, it was prolonged for two Months at the inſtance of the Duke of Rohan. The Churches of the Griſons preſerved a great Veneration for his Perſon, and very gratefully acknowledged the good Offices he had done 'em (b).

(Z) Of which Paſquier an Eye Witneſs relates ſome circumſtances.] Propoſing ſome Objections againſt the Common Opinion of Phyſicians, that the Judgment, Imagination, and Memory are three Faculties which are lodged in three ſeparate ventricles of the Brain, he ſaith that the diſtinction of the three ventricles is inſufficient, and that the ventricle of Judgment, and that of Memory ought to be ſubdivided as often as either of them act ſeparately in us. And to prove theſe different Operations he obſerves that in the Reign of Francis I. (c) One Villemanoche reſided at Court, whoſe Judgment never appeared touched on any other Account

(a) Taken from the ſame Memorial.

(b) Ibid.

(c) Paſquier's Letters, Book 1 pag. 5

TULLIA.

TULLIA, Cicero's Daughter, is ſo often mentioned in that great Man's Epiſtles, that her Hiſtory deſerves to be enquired into. She was Born the 5th of Auguſt †; but the Year is unknown to us. Some very Learned Men || believe that ſhe was Married to her firſt Husband in the Year 689. His Name was (A) Caius Piſo. He was a Man of a ſtrict Honour, he Intereſted (B) himſelf with the utmoſt concern in the Affairs of his Father-in-Law, and wanted neither Capacity nor Eloquence. It is thought he Dyed during Cicero's Exile, which was in 696. Tullia was a ſecond time Married to (C) Furius Craſſipes the following Year. It is not known how ſhe was Separated from this Husband; whether he Dyed, or whether ſhe was Divorced from him: We are only told that in 703, ſhe was Married to Publius Cornelius Dolabella. This third Marriage was Contracted during Cicero's Abſence, when he was Governor of Cilicia. Thoſe Friends whom he deſired to Inform him (D) whether Dolabella was in good Circumſtances, acquitted themſelves very Ill of that Commiſſion; and he afterwards Repented that ever he had conſented to the Concluſion of that Match, before he could himſelf more narrowly ſearch into Dolabella's Affairs, which were not in a very good Poſture. He was a Young Man who (E) Lived irregularly; but knew ſo well how to † Cicero Orat. pro Sextio, & Epiſt. 1. l. 3. ad Attic.

|| See the Remark A.

---

count than the Marriages of Ladies of Quality which he promiſed to himſelf; and after him, continues he, “Tulenus a Learned Man——whoſe Judgment was intire in every thing elſe but a Paſſion, which he had ridiculouſly Vowed to one of the firſt Princeſſes of France, who was Dead. With this Perſon I once diverted my ſelf at my own Table, when ſeveral Men of Honour, who were Strangers, and not in the leaſt acquainted with him were preſent. He Entertained us till the middle of our Dinner with an infinite variety of Learned and Judicious Diſcourſe, to the Admiration of all who heard him. At laſt believing I had ſufficiently Impoſed on the Company, and that it was now time to make the good old Man play another part, I took occaſion ſeemingly by Accident to ſpeak of this Princeſs; after which quitting his Amble he immediately began to Trot, relating an Incoherent Crowd of Follies, concerning the good and ill Treatment he had met with from her. The Company amazed whence this ſudden Change proceeded, could not tell what to think of him, he having before talked ſo Wittily and Learnedly. But he being gone, I at large acquainted them with the reaſon of the alteration of his Brain. Beſides what I have related, it was obſerved of him, that the judging part being wounded on this Subject, had alſo affected the Imaginative ſo much that at the firſt ſight of any Young Lady whom he met with, he was perſuaded it was his Julia, (as he called his pretended Miſtreſs in Latin, and Jolivette in French) and guided by this fooliſh Imagination he ſometimes walked in his Gown and Square-Cap as far as Fontaine-Bleau, perſuading himſelf that ſhe hid her ſelf there. I relate nothing concerning him but what I have ſeen or heard of him (b).” This Example confirms what we have ſeen in another place, that ſome Perſons loſe Common Senſe with regard to ſome things, who nevertheleſs by the reſt of their Conduct plainly convince us that their Senſe, Knowledge, and Reaſon are intire and in a Flouriſhing Condition

(A) His Name was Caius Piſo.] Which is not to be doubted of after theſe words: Tulliolam C. Piſoni L. F. Frugi deſpondimus. So Tully concludes the 3d Epiſtle of his firſt Book to Atticus. It is thought to have been Written (d) in the Conſulſhip of Lucius Julius Caſar, and Caius Martius Figulus, in the Year 689; but no reaſon is urged for that Date, and I find no hint in the Letter it ſelf to Countenance it. Caſaubon (e) believes it was Written before the Year 686, and that Tullia was not above twelve Years Old at moſt when ſhe was Married to Caius Piſo.

(B) He intereſted himſelf with the utmoſt concern in the Affairs of his Father-in-Law. Cicero could never ſufficiently Praiſe him. Vexabatur, ſaith he (f), uxor mea: liberi ad necem quærebantur: gener, & Piſo gener à Piſonis Conſulis pedibus ſupplex rejiciebatur. In one of his Orations he ſpeaks thus: Alter fuit propugnator mearum fortunarum & defenſor aſſiduus, ſumma virtute & pietate C. Piſo gener, qui minas inimicorum meorum, qui inimicitias affinis mei propinqui ſui Conſulis, qui Pontum & Bithyniam Quæſtor pro mea ſalute neglexit. The like Paſſages are to be found in his Epiſtles. See the Elogy which he beſtows on him with reſpect to his Eloquence and Virtue in his Treatiſe de Claris Oratoribus (g).

(C) Was a ſecond time Married to Furius Craſſipes the following Year.] See Cicero's Epiſtles to his Brother, Book the ſecond, Epiſt. 4. and 7. Ludovicus Vives (h) hath reduced theſe two Sons-in-Law of Cicero to one: He ſuppoſes that Tullia was but twice Married, the firſt time to Piſo Frugi Craſſipes, and the ſecond to Cornelius Dolabella, and that ſhe Died in Child-Bed in the Houſe of the latter. We ſhall refute this below (i).

(D) To inform him whether Dolabella was in good Circumſtances.] I only advance this as a Conjecture which I borrow from the Learned Manutius: It is very probable and Founded on ſome Expreſſions of Cicero. He tells Atticus: (k) Tullia mea venit ad me pridie Idus Jun. deque tua erga ſe obſervantia benevolentiaque mihi plurima expoſuit, literaſque reddidit trinas: ego autem ex ipſius virtute, humanitate, pietate non modò eam voluptatem non cepi, quam capere ex ſingulari filia debui; ſed etiam incredibili ſum dolore affectus, tale ingenium in tam miſera fortuna verſari, idque accidere nullo ipſius delicto, ſumma culpa mea. Let us now ſee how the two laſt words are Paraphraſed by Manutius. Mea enim negligentia factum eſt, ut Dolabellæ nuberet: quem ego probare generum non debui, niſi prius omnia perſcrutatus, non ſolum quod ad mores, ſed etiam quod ad facultates attineret: quod ſi feciſſem, ejus ære alieno perſpecto, nunquam paſſus eſſem, ut homini in tanta rei domeſticæ difficultate conſtituto filia mea collocaretur; ſed commiſi, ut me abſente res per amicos ageretur, quibus in Ciliciam proficiſcens ita (l) mandavi, ut, quoniam ego tam longe abfuturus eram, de Tulliæ meæ matrimonio agerent ipſi quod probaſſent, in quo meam negligentiam agnoſco, tantam enim rem aliis committere non debui, ſed in reditum meum integram reſervare. This Author confirms his Paraphraſe in the following manner: Cur autem hoc à Cicerone putem ſignificari, facit epiſtola ad Terentiam his verbis ſcripta: Tullia noſtra venit ad me pridie idus Jun. cujus ſumma virtute & ſingulari humanitate graviore etiam ſum dolore affectus, noſtra factum eſſe negligentia, ut longe alia in fortuna eſſet, atque ejus pietas ac dignitas poſtulabat. Dixit autem, Tale ingenium in tam miſera fortuna verſari, hoc ſenſu; quod Tullia virum haberet tam perditum, tam flagitioſum, tam multa in tribunatu nefarie molientem: ſiquidem in tribunatu iniquas leges ferre Dolabella conatus eſt, maxime debitorum cauſa, è quibus ipſe unus erat (m).

(E) He was a young Man who lived Irregularly.] Cælius hinted it to Cicero, when he Congratulated him on that Marriage: I ſhall cite his own words becauſe they contain the very Compliment we ſhould make at preſent in a like caſe. He excuſes what was paſt on account of his Youth, and tho' he durſt not venture to aſſure him, that all the Imperfections of that Age were Corrected, yet he hoped the Marrying ſuch an accompliſhed Lady, the Daughter of ſuch a Father, would certainly compleat the Cure. (n) Gratulor tibi affinitate viri medius fidius optimi. Nam hoc ego de illo exiſtimo. Cetera porro quibus adhuc ille ſibi parum utilis fuit, & ætate jam ſunt decurſa, & conſuetudine atque autoritate tua & pudore Tulliæ, ſi quæ reſtabunt, confido celeriter ſublatum iri. Non eſt enim pugnax in vitiis, neque hebes ad id quod melius ſit intelligendum. Obſerve

---

(b) Paſquier repeats the ſame thing much in the ſame words in the 2d Book p. 738. But he ſays there that Tulenus was Crazy in two reſpects, in aiming at the Biſhoprick of Cambray, and in his Love for that great Princeſs. See Sorel's Remarks upon the Berger extravagant pag. 176, 177.

(c) Corradus in Quæſtura, p. m. 83. and after him Sagittarius in vita Tulliæ, n. 5. & 11.

(d) See Cicero of Grævius's Edition Epiſt. ad Attic. Tom. 1. pag. 33. And in Manutius's Commentary pag. 18.

(e) Orat. pro Sextio pag. m. 73.

(f) Poſt reditum in Senatu. See alſo his Speech Poſt reditum ad Quirites.

(g) Pag. m. 198.

(h) In Auguſt. de Civit. Dei, l. 19. c. 4.

(i) In the Remark N.

(k) Epiſt. 17. l. 11.

(l) This appears from theſe words of Cicero: In quo unum vereor ne tu parum perſpicias ea quæ geſta ſunt ab aliis eſſe geſta, quibus ego ita mandarant, ut cum tam longe abfuturus eſſem ad me ne referrent, agerent quod probaſſent. Epiſt. 12. l. 3. ad familiares, wherein he excuſes himſelf for having Married Tullia to Dolabella, the Accuſer of Appius to whom he writes.

(m) Manutius quotes Dion in this place.

(n) See Cicero's 13th Epiſt. of the 8th Book ad familiares.

to (F) Cajole the Mother * and the Daughter that they Winked at his Debaucheries, and looked on him as a good Match. He gave his Father-in-Law (G) a thousand Uneaſineſſes by the Tumults which he excited in Rome when he was Tribune of the People. He endeavoured to Eſtabliſh a Law very prejudicial to Creditors; for he pretended that Debtors ſhould not be forced to the Payment of their Debts, either by perſonal Impriſonment or Seizure of their Effects. Mark Antony † was obliged to bring ſome Troops into the City, who charged the Favourers of Dolabella, of which they (H) killed Eight Hundred. Poor Tullia was unhappy in her laſt Husband; and 'tis not to be doubted that her Journey to (I) Brundusium to ſpeak with her Father, proceeded amongſt other Reaſons from the neceſſity of Conſulting him how to behave her ſelf towards ſo troubleſome a Spouſe. She was Divorced from him (K), and yet (L) Cicero always treated

* I mean Terentia, Cicero's Wife, and their Daughter.

† He was at that time General of the Cavalry under the ſecond Dictatorſhip of Julius Cæſar, the Year after the Battel of Pharſalia.

ſerve what Cælius ſays, that Age had already cured the vicious Inclinations of Dolabella. This incines me to believe that Appian was miſtaken when he (a) affirmed that Dolabella was not Aged above 25 Years when Cæſar was killed. He muſt then have been but 18 or 19 when he Married Tullia. Was it then reaſonable to ſay that the vicious courſe of his Youth was paſt? But here are yet other difficulties againſt Appian. The Commentators on Cicero will have the following words to be meant of Dolabella: Illud verò mihi permirum accidit, tantam temeritatem fuiſſe in eo adoleſcente, cujus ego ſalutem duobus capitis judiciis ſumma contentione defendi, ut tuis inimicitiis ſuſcipiendis oblivisceretur patroni omnium fortunarum ac rationum ſuarum: præſertim cum tu omnibus vel ornamentis vel præſidiis redundares, illi (ut leviſſime dicam) multa deeſſent, cujus ſermo ſtultus & puerilis erat jam antea ad me à M. Cælio, familiari noſtro, perſcriptus: de quo item ſermone multa ſcripta ſunt abs te. Ego autem citius cum eo qui tuas inimicitias ſuſcepiſſet, veterem conjunctionem diremiſſem quam novam conciliaſſem. Cicero wrote this in 703, when he was in Cilicia, before Dolabella was his Son-in-Law. The Epiſtle of which theſe words are part, was written to a Perſon (b) whom Dolabella had accuſed. It ſeems therefore that they cannot be meant of any Body elſe beſides Dolabella. But it would be very ſtrange, that before the Age of 18 a Perſon ſhould be twice Arraigned for capital Crimes. Beſides I find that Tullia was not Dolabella's firſt Wife. He had one (c) who left him when he accuſed Appius.

(F) Knew ſo well how to Cajole the Mother and the Daughter.] This we may infer from Cicero's words to Atticus: (d) Ego, dum in provincia omnibus rebus Appium orno, ſubito ſum factus accuſatoris ejus ſocer. id quidem, inquis, dii approbent. ita velim: teque ita cupere certo ſcio. ſed crede mihi, nihil minus putaram ego, qui de Ti. Nerone, qui mecum egerat, certos homines ad mulieres miſeram, qui Romam venerunt factis ſponſalibus. ſed hoc ſpero melius. mulieres quidem valde intelligo delectari OBSEQUIO ET COMITATE adoleſcentis, cætera non ἀξαγανάκτειν. Terentia and Tullia were ſo Charmed with the Complaiſance and Civility of this young Man that they pardoned his Faults, and did not enquire into his Life. The ſame thing frequently happens in our times. A young Debauchee who renders himſelf agreeable by his Deportment, and by acting the well bred-Man, will ſo inſinuate himſelf into the Favour of both Mothers and Daughters, that they will not conſider whether he has waſted his whole Eſtate; he'll exclude his Rivals tho' never ſo meritorious, if not plentifully endowed with this Cringing quality. Let us have him, he pleaſes our Eyes. This undoubtedly utterly ruined the Affairs of the other Pretender to Tullia, who was not Titus Nero, but Tiberius Nero: Probably the ſame who Married Livia, and was Father to the Emperor Tiberius. (e) Some Authors believe that Dolabella by his artful Proteſtations and obliging Civilities ſo touched Tullia's Heart, that ſhe eaſily excuſed his almoſt Dwarfiſh ſhape: For 'tis to him that Tully's Jeſt is applied, Who has faſtned my Son-in-Law to his Sword? Their Conjecture may be a little helped by Macrobius (f), who calls Lentulus the Son-in-Law, whom Cicero rallied in that manner. This Sir-Name agrees better with Dolabella than with Piſo and Furius; for the Lentuli were a branch of the Cornelian Family, and perhaps the Dolabella's were of the Branch of the Lentuli. See below a paſſage of Aſconius Pedianus.

(G) He gave Cicero a thouſand Uneaſineſſes.] Not to repeat what I have ſaid in the Article of Dolabella concerning the new Laws which he propoſed in favour of Debtors, I ſhall content my ſelf with citing one or two Proofs of his Father-in-Law's Uneaſineſs. O dii, ſaith he in a Letter (g) to Atticus, generum ne noſtrum potiſſimum, ut hoc, vel tabulas novas. Quod me audis, ſaith he in another Letter (h), fractiorem eſſe animo, quid putas, cum videas acceſſiſſe ad ſuperiores ægritudines præclaras generi actiones!

(H) Of which they killed Eight Hundred.] We ſhould have had the particulars of this Action, if Livy had come to us entire; for in the Summary of his 113th Book we find: Quum ſeditiones Romæ à P. Dolabella tribuno plebis legem ferente de novis tabulis excitatæ eſſent, & ex ea cauſſa plebs tumultuaretur, inductis à M. Antonio Magiſtro equitum in urbem militibus octingenti è plebe cæſi ſunt. All Hiſtorians repreſent the City at that time in a diſmal Eſtate. It is true that the Inhabitants of Rome were ſo accuſtomed to Bloodſhed in their Streets and in the Aſſemblies of the People by Animoſity and contrary Factions, that they were leſs ſurprized than we at this time ſhould be, to ſee their City filled with Guards continually ready to fall on one another.

(I) Her Journey to Brunduſium.] Her miſerable Condition accumulated the Father's Grief to ſuch a height, that this Interview which on another occaſion would have afforded this tender Father an infinite Satisfaction, turned into an inſupportable Affliction: As we may be informed from the words above Cited in the Remark D, and thoſe in a Letter written to his Wife Terentia. (i) Tullia noſtra venit ad me pridie Idus Junii: cujus ſumma virtute, & ſingulari humanitate, graviore etiam ſum dolore affectus, noſtra factum eſſe negligentia, ut longe alia in fortuna eſſet, atque ejus pietas, ac dignitas poſtulabat. Cicero did not retain his Daughter long there, he ſent her Home; her Preſence could not leſſen their Mutual Affliction. Tulliam autem non videbam eſſe cauſam cur diutius mecum tanto in communi mœrore retinerem: itaque matri eam, cum primum per ipſam liceret, eram remiſſurus. This he writes to his Friend Atticus in the 17th Epiſt. of his 11th Book.

(K) She was Divorced from him.] This is not to be doubted of after Sulpicius's hint in his Conſolatory Letter on her Death. Amongſt other Reaſons he offers this, viz. That in the unhappy poſture of Affairs, nothing could engage Tullia to deſire to Live, ſeeing her Father could not have found a good Husband for her. This ſuppoſes that ſhe was perfectly diſengaged from the Conjugal Bonds. (k) Quoties in eam cogitationem neceſſe eſt & tu veneris, & nos ſæpe incidimus, hiſce temporibus non peſſime cum iis eſſe actum quibus ſine dolore licitum eſt mortem cum vita commutare? Quid autem fuit quod illam hoc tempore ad vivendum magnopere invitare poſſet? quæ res? quæ ſpes? quod animi ſolatium? Ut cum aliquo adoleſcente primario conjuncta ætatem gereret? Licitum eſt tibi (credo) pro tua dignitate ex hac juventute generum diligere, cujus fidei liberos tuos te tuto committere putares. If this Proof was inſufficient I would offer thoſe places in Cicero's Letters concerning (l) the Reſtitution of her Portion. Some think that Dolabella deſigning to Divorce Tullia, preſſed the Eſtabliſhment of the new Tables, that he might not be obliged to refund her Fortune to Cicero (m). It is ſurprizing that Aſconius Pedianus was ſo ill informed concerning Tullia's Deſtiny, as to affirm (n) that after Piſo's Death ſhe Married Lentulus, and Died in Child-Bed at his Houſe: Which are two or three Miſtakes.

(L) Cicero

(a) Appian. lib. 4. de bello civili.

(b) To Appius Pulcher. That Letter is the 10th of the 3d Book ad familiares.

(c) Inter poſtulationem & nominis delationem uxor à Dolabella diſceſſit. Epiſt. 6. l. 8. Cicer. ad familiares.

(d) Epiſt. 6. lib. 6.

(e) Adeo placuit Tulliæ novi ſponſi comitas, ut minori ejus ſtatura non offenderetur. Notus eſt Ciceronis jocus, Quis generum meum alligavit gladio? Caſpar Sagittarius, in vita Tulliæ, n. 30.

(f) M. Cicero cum Lentulum generum ſuum exiguæ naturæ hominem longo gladio accinctum vidiſſet, Quis, inquit, generum meum ad gladium alligavit? Macrob. Saturnal. l. 2. c. 3.

(g) The 23d of the 11th Book.

(h) The 25th of the ſame Book.

(i) Cicero Epiſt. 11. lib. 14. ad Familiar.

(k) Epiſt. 5. lib. 4. Ciceron. ad Familiares, p. m. 132.

(l) Tenor tamen dum à Dolabella procuratoribus exigam primam penſionem. Epiſt. 18. lib. 6. ad familiares, written whilſt Cæſar was in Spain againſt Pompey's Sons.

(m) See Cicero of Grævius's Edit. tom. 2. epiſt. ad Attic. pag. 270.

(n) Cicero filiam poſt mortem Piſonis generi P. Lentulo collocavit, apud quem illa ex partu deceſſit. Aſcon. Pedian. in Orat. Ciceron. contra L. Piſonem, pag. m. 157.

treated Dolabella as tenderly as poſſibly he could, till after the Murther of Trebonius * he fell on him (M) with his whole ſtock of Rhetorical figures. Tullia (N) died

* See the Article Dolabella.

(L) Cicero always treated Dolabella as tenderly &c.] He doubtleſs had a greater ſhare of Capacity than Reſolution, and he ſaw Pompey's party running on Ruin more and more by the continual Victories of Julius Cæſar. He apparently feared that the Conqueror would at laſt ceaſe to ſhew his Clemency, and would make away with ſuch Republicans as were Men endowed with parts ſufficient to oppoſe him. He knew that Dolabella was in very great Credit with Cæſar: After which 'tis needleſs to ask why Cicero diſſembled his reſentment againſt his Son in Law. His kind treatment of him kept him within the compaſs of Friendſhip; for Dolabella ſtood Cicero's Friend at Julius Cæſar's Court in Oppoſition to thoſe who endeavoured to render him odious (a), and a little after the Death of Tullia he deſired to be acquainted with the poſture of his Affairs. For which Reaſon Cicero wrote to him a very obliging Letter (b) in the midſt of the Affliction with which he was Loaded. We have a convincing proof of their mutual intimacy, even when Julius Cæſar was killed, in Cicero's firſt Philippick. Where he repreſents to Dolabella how Glorious his Action was of throwing down the Column which the Mutineers had erected, to animate the People againſt Cæſar's Murtherers. All honeſt Men Complimented and thanked Cicero, they thinking him Dolabella's director in that Affair. (c) Te invenis, Dolabella, qui es mihi cariſſimus, non poſſum de utriuſque veſtrum errore reticere——— Dicerem Dolabella, qui recte factorum fructus eſſet, niſi te præter ceteros pauliſper eſſe expertum viderem. Quem potes recordari in vita tibi illuxiſſe diem lætiorem, quam cum expiato foro, diſſipato concurſu impiorum, principibus ſceleris pœna affectis, urbe incendio & cædis metu liberata te domum recepiſti? cujus ordinis, cujus generis, cujus denique fortunæ ſtudia tum laudi, & gratulationi tuæ ſe non obtulerunt? quin mihi etiam, quo auctore te in iis rebus uti arbitrabantur, & gratias boni viri agebant, & tuo nomine gratulabantur. Recordare, quæſo, Dolabella, conſenſum illum theatri, cum omnes, earum rerum obliti, propter quas tibi fuerant offenſi, ſignificarunt ſe novo beneficio memoriam veteris doloris abjeciſſe. This long paſſage doth not expreſly particularize what was done againſt the Column; but Cicero a little before he had given ſuch an exact Account of it (d), that what I have ſaid hardly admits of a Scruple. I ſhall take this occaſion to obſerve that this Column is the ſame which Suetonius ſpeaks of. Poſtea, ſaith he (e), ſolidam columnam prope 20. pedum lapidis Numidici in foro ſtatuit (plebs) ſcripſitque PARENTI PATRIÆ. Apud eandem longo tempore ſacrificare, vota ſuſcipere, controverſias quaſdam interpoſito per Cæſarem jurejurando diſtrahere perſeveravit. This longo tempore is a miſtake, which clearly proves that Suetonius had not read the firſt Philippick, or at leaſt did not remember it; for that Oration informs us that the Column was deſtroyed before the 1ſt. of June. Cicero's Letters (f) teſtify further that it was pulled down before the 1ſt. of May. Now Cæſar was killed the 15 of the preceding March. But to return to the good correſpondence betwixt Cicero and Dolabella: Nothing could be more endearing than the Letter which Cicero wrote to him on Account of that Column. Cum te ſemper tantum dilexerim quantum tu intelligere potuiſti, tum his tuis factis ſic incenſus ſum, ut nihil unquam in amore fuerit ardentius (g). He doth not forget to acquaint him that he himſelf paſſed for the Author of this good Advice; and his turn of thought on that occaſion is admirable. (h) Etſi contentus eram, mi Dolabella, tua gloria, ſatiſque ex ea magnam lætitiam voluptatemque capiebam, tamen non poſſum non confiteri, cumulari me maximo gaudio, quod vulgo hominum opinio ſocium me adſcribat tuis laudibus. Neminem conveni, convenio autem quotidie plurimos——— quin omnes, cum te ſummis laudibus ad cælum extulerunt, mihi continuo maximas gratias agant. Negant enim ſe dubitare, quin tu meis præceptis & conſiliis obtemperans præſtantiſſimum te civem & ſingularem conſulem præbeas. Quibus ego quamquam veriſſime poſſum reſpondere te quæ facias tuo judicio & tua ſponte facere, nec cujuſquam egere conſilio: tamen neque plane aſſentior, ne imminuam tuam laudem, ſi omnis à meis conſiliis profecta videatur: neque valde nego, ſum enim avidior etiam quam ſatis eſt gloriæ.——— A te autem peto, ut me hanc quaſi falſam hereditatem alienæ gloriæ ſinas cernere, meque aliqua ex parte, in ſocietatem tuarum laudum venire patiare; quamquam, mi Dolabella, (hæc enim jocatus ſum) libentius omnes meas, ſi modo ſunt aliquæ meæ laudes, ad te transfuderim, quam aliquam partem exhauſerim ex tuis. He ſeems to be tranſported when he ſpeaks of this Action to his Friend Atticus. See Epiſt. 15. and 16. of the 14th Book, and the 1ſt Letter of the 9th Book ad familiares. I have ſomewhere Read that he deſigned to go to Syria as Dolabella's Lieutenant, if Hirtius and Panſa who were to be Conſuls the next Year, had not diſſuaded him. He let Dolabella go without him, and embarked for Athens, after having promiſed to return when Hirtius and Panſa ſhould enter on the Conſulſhip. Contrary Winds retarded his Voyage, and he received ſome Advices from his Friends, which engaged him to return ſpeedily to Rome. The Day after his Arrival the Senate was aſſembled, but he did not appear there, at which Mark Antony was incenſed. This is what we find in Amyot's Tranſlation of Plutarch's Life of Cicero. One might convict Plutarch of a miſtake, if the phraſe (i) which he makes uſe of, and Amyot Tranſlates he let Dolabella go, was not Equivocal: But as it may barely ſignify he thought no more of Dolabella, he left him, this Criticiſm only affects the Tranſlator. He was in the wrong to think that Dolabella departed from Rome before Cicero; for the firſt Philippick was pronounced in Dolabella's preſence, after Cicero's return. This obliges me to Repeat what I have ſeveral times ſaid, that it is extremely difficult to Tranſlate well; for tho' we may take the Expreſſions of the Original in the moſt probable ſenſe, that doth not ſecure us againſt ſome miſtakes; and the Knowledge of a Thouſand particular Events is neceſſary to direct us to expreſs the true ſenſe. For inſtance, if Amyot had remembred that Dolabella was preſent in the Senate as Conſul, when Cicero ſpoke his firſt Philippick; if he had remembred that Cicero in that Oration urged his Reaſons for departing from Rome and the Motives of his return, he would not have Tranſlated thoſe Words of Plutarch he let Dolabella go. At the Bottom I don't diſpute the Fact; I ſee nothing to hinder our Believing that Cicero deſigned to follow Dolabella into Syria. This is a freſh proof of the Text of this remark.

(M) Till after the Murther of Trebonius he fell on him.] He had Reaſon to cenſure very ſeverely ſuch a perfidious and enormous Cruelty; but he ſhou'd have taken care not to contradict himſelf, and expoſe his Reputation too much. He had proteſted a great Value for Dolabella in ſeveral Letters, and afterwards in his Philippicks he declared that he never was a Man of any Merit, and had been always a wicked Wretch. (k) Dolabella quidem tam fuit immemor humanitatis, quamquam ejus NUNQUAM particeps fuerit, ut ſuam inſatiabilem crudelitatem exercuerit non ſolum in vivo, ſed etiam in mortuo, ac in ejus corpore lacerando atque vexando, cum animum ſatiare non poſſet oculos paverit ſuos. He makes him Equal to Mark Antony in (l) all ſorts of Vice: What could he ſay more? And when he affirms that to compare Tribonius with Dolabella were to treat the former very unjuſtly, he expreſſes himſelf thus, for the paſſage deſerves to be Tranſcribed: Nam cæteris quidem vitæ partibus quis eſt qui poſſit ſine Trebonii maxima contumelia conferre vitam Trebonii cum Dolabellæ? alterius conſilium, ingenium, humanitatem, innocentiam, magnitudinem animi in patria liberanda quis ignorat? alteri à puero pro deliciis crudelitas fuit; deinde ea libidinum turpitudo, ut in hoc ſit ſemper ipſe lætatus, quod ea faceret, quæ ſibi objici ne ab inimico quidem poſſent verecundo: & hic dii immortales, aliquando fuit meus, occulta enim erant vitia non inquirenti. Neque nunc fortaſſe alienus ab eo eſſem, niſi ille vobis, niſi mænibus patriæ, niſi huic urbi, niſi diis penatibus, niſi aris, & focis omnium noſtrum, niſi denique naturæ, & humanitati inventus eſſet inimicus, (N) Tullia died in the Year 708.] Cæſar was then in Spain engaged againſt Pompey's Sons. The Conſolatory Letter which he wrote to Cicero on this occaſion was Dated from Hiſpalis (m). Which is

(i) Δολοβέλλαν μὲν εἰάσας χαίρειν. Dolabellam miſſum fecit. Plutarch. in Cicer. pag. 882. E.

(k) Philippica 11. pag. 827. edit.. Græv.

(l) Duo hæc capita nata ſunt poſt homines natos teterrima & ſpurciſſima Dolabella & Antonius. ... Ecce tibi geminum in ſcelere par, inuſitatum, inauditum, ferum, barbarum. Itaque, quorum ſummum quondam inter ipſos odium, bellumque meminiſtis, eoſdem poſtea ſingulari inter ſe conſenſu, & amore devinxit impuriſſimæ naturæ & turpiſſimæ vitæ ſimilitudo. Idem in eadem Oratione init.

(m) Now call'd Seville. See the 20. letter of of the 13. Book to Atticus died in the Year 708. Her Father (O) remained inconſolable for ſome time: His Friends uſed all their Endeavours to comfort him: He himſelf wrote a Book on (P) that Subject, and deſign'd to build a Chappel to the deceaſed, and is a ſtrong proof of my Text. That which Plutarch furniſhes me with, is not ſatisfactory; it is not clear enough, not free from ſome Errors. This Hiſtorian having ſpoken of the Divorce of Terentia, (a) adds, That Cicero afterwards married a young Woman, and that Tullia died in Child-bed not long after this Match, ſhe died, continues he, at Lentulus's Houſe, to whom ſhe was married after the death of Piſo, her firſt Husband. To prove from this, that Tullia died in 708, one thing ought (b) to be ſuppoſed, which Plutarch doth not mention, which is, that Cicero married his 2d Wife in 708. And as for the reſt, it plainly appears, that Plutarch did not well conſult Tully's Epiſtles: For he would there have been informed, that Tullia's ſecond Husband's Name was Furius Craſſipes, and that ſhe died divorced from her Third Husband who was Dolabella. (c) A Modern Author in order to prove that Tullia did not die in Child-bed, and that ſhe was with Child when Divorced by Dolabella, alledges the following Paſſage of Cicero, (d) Tullia mea peperit XIV. Kal. Jun. puerum ἑπταμηνιαῖον, quod εὐτόκησεν gaudebam; quod quidem eſt natum perimbecillum eſt. He ought to have known that Cicero wrote this before the Battle of Pharſalia, and that conſequently theſe Words are of no uſe to prove that Tullia did not die in Labour, and that ſhe was divorced when big with Child. What he ſhould have alledged I find in another Letter written during the laſt War which Cæſar made in Spain. The words are: Me Romæ tenuit omnino Tulliæ meæ partus; ſed cum ea, quemadmodum ſpero, ſatis firma ſit, teneor tamen dum a Dolabella procuratoribus exigam primam penſionem (e). Let us favour Plutarch and Aſconius Pedianus as much as we pleaſe, we ſhall yet be forced to accuſe them of having expreſſed themſelves ill. Cicero, whoſe Credit in this caſe, outweighs that of one hundred Hiſtorians, informs us, that Tullia was very well after her Delivery: So that the beſt Suppoſition we can make in favour of Plutarch and Aſconius Pedianus, is that Tullia before ſhe was perfectly recovered, was ſurprized by ſome Diſtemper incident to Child-bed-women, of which ſhe died.

(O) Cicero was inconſolable.] If we believe Plutarch (f) the Philoſophers flocked from all Parts to Cicero's aſſiſtance. They doubtleſs brought him the choiceſt of their Troops, I mean the moſt excellent Moral Reflections which their Topicks, or Common places could furniſh. But Company was inſupportable to Cicero, he confin'd himſelf in a Solitude, where he found much more conſolation, than in the Diſcourſes of his Friends, or his Books. (g) Quod me ab hoc mærore recreari vis, facis ut omnia: ſed me mihi non defuiſſe, tu teſtis es. Nihil enim de mærore minuendo ſcriptum ab ullo eſt, quod ego non domi tuæ legerim. Sed omnem conſolationem vincit dolor —— (h) Ne diſceſſiſſem quidem è conſpectu tuo niſi me plane nihil ulla res adjuvaret —— mihi adhuc nihil prius fuit hac ſolitudine —— me ſcriptio & litteræ non (i) leniunt ſed obturbant. He proteſts in another Epiſtle (k), that Solitude ſeem'd to him the moſt ſupportable thing in the world. Nunc omnia reſpuo, nec quicquam habeo tolerabilius quam ſolitudinem. To be perfectly informed of the Diſorder into which his Affliction had plunged him, we need only conſider his frank Confeſſion that he ſunk under his Grief, and at the ſame time reflect on the oſtentation with which he brags of his Courage. He willingly boaſted that he was inconſolable, but would by no means endure the Reproaches of too much weakneſs. Sentiments utterly incompatible. (l) Quod me ipſe per literas conſolatus ſum non pœnitet me quantum profecerim. Mærorem minui, dolorem nec potui, nec ſi poſſem, vellem. Here is a Man who neither could, nor would abate his Grief. (m) In hac ſolitudine careo omnium colloquio; cumque mane me in ſilvam abſtruſi denſam & aſperam, non exeo inde ante veſperum. ſecundum te nil eſt mihi amicius ſolitudine. in ea mihi omnis ſermo eſt cum litteris. eum tamen interpellat fletus: cui repugno quoad poſſum. ſed adhuc pares non ſumus. He hid himſelf in the obſcureſt place of a Wood from Morning till Night, and could not refrain from Tears. Doth not he almoſt own that he had loſt his Senſes? (n) In conſolationis libro quem in medio (NON ENIM SAPIENTES ERAMUS) mærore & dolore conſcripſimus. Doth not he confeſs that (o) he had ſcandalouſly ſurrendred his Arms to Fortune? But let us ſee on the other ſide, how he glories in the Efforts of his Courage. (p) Quod ſcribis te vereri, ne & gratia & auctoritas noſtra hoc meo mærore minuatur; ego, quid homines aut reprehendant, aut poſtulent, neſcio; ne doleam? qui poteſt? ne jaceam? quis unquam minus? dum tua me domus levabat, quis a me excluſus? quis venit, qui offenderetur? (q) Alteram ſunt a te profectas, legere iſti læti, qui me reprehendunt, tam multa non poſſunt, quam ego ſcripſi. quam bene, nihil ad rem. ſed genus ſcribendi id fuit, quod nemo abjecto animo facere poſſet. To thoſe at Rome who took it ill that he hid himſelf ſo long, he declared that his Employments were not thoſe of a diſturbed or depreſſed Mind. (r) Ne me quidem contemno: meoque judicio multo ſtare malo, quam omnium reliquorum. neque tamen progredior longius, quam mihi doctiſſimi homines concedunt: quorum ſcripta omnia, quæcumque ſunt in eam ſententiam, non legi ſolum, quod ipſum erat fortis ægroti, accipere medicinam; ſed in mea etiam ſcripta tranſtuli; quod certe afflicti, & fracti animi non fuit. See the Marginal Note i above, which makes it appear that writing of Books afforded him ſcarce any relief againſt his grief, but only a little ſtupify'd the part affected. Is this an effect of Fortitude?

We are oblig'd to own that his Affliction is the moſt convincing proof which he gave of his tender Affection for Tullia; but if he had dy'd before her, we ſhould not have wanted proofs of his extraordinary Affection to her. All his Expreſſions, when he ſpeaks of her, are ſo many Evidences of it, deliciæ, deliciolæ, mea anima, lux, deſiderium. It is very probable that Tullia was endowed with a Thouſand good Qualities, and was one of the moſt charming Ladies of her time, ſince ſhe ſo deeply engaged the Affection of ſuch a Father. Mr. Sagittarius (s) conjectures, that ſhe was inſtructed in polite Learning. He had not advanced this as a bare Conjecture only, if he had met with the paſſage (t) hereafter cited out of Lactantius. If Plutarch is to be believ'd, (u) one of the cauſes of Terentia's Divorce was, that ſhe would not allow her Daughter a ſufficient Equipage to go to adviſe with her Father at Brundiſium. He adds, that Cicero's ſecond Wife was divorced, becauſe ſhe rejoyc'd at Tullia's Death. There is no reaſon to (x) diſpute the Truth of this with Plutarch, under pretence that Cicero's Epiſtles to Atticus inform us, that this ſecond Wife lived a pretty long time with her Husband after Tullia's Death: This Objection, I ſay, would be ill grounded, becauſe it is certain the Divorce was perfectly finiſhed (y) the Summer after Tullia's Death.

Cicero's extraordinary Affection for his Daughter, inſpired his Enemies with ſuch a boldneſs as to report that he loved her inceſtuouſly: So true it is, that there is nothing ſo pure from which a Satyrical Genius cannot extract a filthy Poiſon. Thoſe Careſſes which proximity of Blood authorizes amongſt Relations of different Sexes, are expoſed to ſiniſter Interpretations when they are more than ordinary. How doth Calumny envenom things! See in the Margin (z) what the Declaimer, who aſſumed the Name of Salluſt, ſaith, and remember that Donatus, an Antient Interpreter of Virgil, believed that this Verſe of the Æneids, (a) Hic thalamos invaſit natæ vetitoſque hymenæos, ought to be underſtood of Cicero. But Servius rejects this Opinion (b).

(P) He himſelf wrote a Book on that Subject.] I have cited ſome Paſſages in the preceding Remark that hint at this Tract. It is great Pity that it is loſt. But it is not Sigonius's fault that the Publick doth not at preſent believe it is yet extant: He wrote a Tract de Conſolatione, and endeavour'd to make it paſs for Cicero's. The judicious Criticks (c) prevented the Deceit immediately. Sigonius, tho' he Publiſhed ſome Diſſertations againſt them, did not gain his point. Cicero, on this occaſion, ſeem'd like

thoſe

(a) Plut. in Cicerone pag. 881, 882.

(b) Fabricius ſuppoſes it in vita Ciceronis, p. m. 193.

(c) Caſpar Sagittarius in vita Tull. n. 44.

(d) Epiſt. 18. lib. 11. ad Attic.

(e) Epiſt. 18. lib. 6. ad famil.

(f) In Cicer. pag. 882. A.

(g) Cicero epiſt. 14. ad Attic. lib. 12.

(h) Ibid. epiſt. 16.

(i) He ſays much the ſame thing in the 14. ibid. Totos dies ſcribo non quo proficiam quid, ſed tantiſper impedior, non equidem ſatis (vis enim urget) ſed relaxor tamen. He endeavoured to ſtupify himſelf by reading and writing.

(k) The 18 of the ſame Book.

(l) Epiſt. 28. ejuſd. libri.

(m) Epiſt. 15. ejuſd. libri.

(n) Tuſcul. quæſt.

(a) Æn. lib. 6. v. 623. (b) Servius in hunc locum Æneidos. Schottus in Cicerone vindicato, cap. 12, p. m. 90. Gullielmus, &c.

and even deſign'd to make an (Q) Apotheoſis. His Enemies were ſo baſe as to accuſe him of loving Tullia † inceſtuouſly. Plutarch is miſtaken in ſome parts of her Story. He did not know that ſhe had three * Husbands. Mr. Moreri who had || Gaſpar Sagittarius's Diſſertation on the Hiſtory of Tullia, did not know how to make the moſt advantageous uſe of it; he has ſcarce extracted any thing worth his trouble; only a Story related by Cælius Rhodiginus, which Mr. Sagittarius has juſtly baniſhed to the Fabulous Lands. The Project of a Temple is by Mr. Moreri converted into a real one, furniſhed with a magnificent Mauſoleum. See the Remark Q. Cicero's Words in the Exordium of his Book de Conſolatione, where he thoſe who eat nothing with pleaſure, which they themſelves have not a hand in cooking of. All the conſolatory Arguments which his Friends offered either in converſation or by writing, were ineffectual. It was his Book de Conſolatione only which in ſome meaſure abated his Grief: (c) Quid ego de conſolatione dicam, quæ mihi quidem ipſi ſane aliquantum medetur; ceteris item multum illam profuturam puto. He ſaith, that in the greateſt of his grief, he began the Preparation of this Antidote, &c. (b) In conſolationis libro quem in medio (non enim ſapientes eramus) mœrore & dolore conſcripſimus, quodque vetat Chryſippus ad recentes quaſi tumores animi remedium adhibere, id nos fecimus, naturæque vim attulimus, ut magnitudini medicinæ doloris magnitudo concederet. This Tract abounded with Hiſtorical Paſſages and Inſtances, as St. Jerome (c) and St. Auguſtin (d) inform us. We ſhall hereafter produce an Obſervation of Lactantius.

(Q) To make at an Apotheoſis.] He ſeveral times communicated his Deſign to Atticus. But we ſhall at preſent content our ſelves with two or three Paſſages. Habeo nonnullos ex iis, quos nunc lectito, auctores, qui dicant, fieri id oportere, quod ſæpe tecum egi, & quod a te approbari volo. de fano illo dico; de quo tantum, quantum me amas, velim cogites; equidem neque de genere dubito; placet enim mihi Cluatii: neque de re; ſtatutum eſt enim; de loco nonnunquam. velim igitur cogites. ego, quantum his temporibus tam eruditis fieri poterit, profecto illam conſecrabo omni genere monumentorum, ab omnium ingeniis ſcriptorum, & Græcorum & Latinorum: quæ res forſitan ſic refricatura vulnus meum. ſed jam quaſi voto quodam, & promiſſo me teneri puto (e). The following Paſſage more clearly ſhews, That he was engaged by a Vow to the conſtruction of a Temple, and that he believed it was irreligious not to put that Deſign in Execution. Lactantius hereafter will inform us concerning this Engagement. Si iſta minus confici poſſunt, effice quidvis. Ego me majore religione quam quiſquam fuit ullius voti, obſtrictum puto (f). A Monument, a Mauſoleum, or whatever had the Name or likeneſs of a Sepulcher, could not ſatisfie him. (g) Fanum fieri volo; neque hoc mihi erui poteſt: ſepulchri ſimilitudinem effugere non tam propter pœnam legis ſtudeo, quam ut maxime aſſequar ἀποθέωσιν: quod poteram, ſi in ipſa villa facerem. ſed, ut ſæpe locuti ſumus, commutationes dominorum reformido. in agro ubicumque fecero, mihi videor aſſequi poſſe, ut poſteritas habeat religionem. He gave his Imaginations a very proper Name (h). If Mr. Moreri had but given himſelf the trouble of conſidering with attention, what he took from the Moderns; had he then told us, "That Cicero "cauſed a Temple to be built, in which he en"cloſed Tullia's Aſhes, in a lofty Mauſoleum?" Might he not have ſeen in the Author which he cites in the laſt Paſſage quotd by me, which ſays that Cicero deſigning an Apotheoſis, avoided all that could be thought to look like a Tomb? This was not an account of the Expence, as he clearly explains himſelf: (i) Ante quam a te proxime diſceſſi, numquam mihi venit in mentem, quo plus inſumtum in monumentum eſſet, quam neſcio quid, quod lege conceditur, tantundem populo dandum eſſe, quod non magnopere moveret, niſi neſcio quomodo, ἀλόγως fortaſſe, nollem illud ullo nomine, niſi fani, appellari. quod ſi volumus, vereor ne aſſequi non poſſimus, niſi mutato loco. According to Cicero's Principles, nothing was more abſurd or impious, than to pay Divine Honours to thoſe Perſons on whoſe Tombs Funeral Rites were celebrated; and 'twas for this Reaſon that he ſays he would not have given his ſuffrage to the Decree of the Senate, which ordered Supplications to be made to Julius Cæſar: (k) An me cenſetis, patres conſcripti, quod vos inviti ſecuti eſtis decreturum fuiſſe ut parentalia cum ſupplicationibus miſcerentur? ut inexpiabiles religiones in Rempublicam? ut decernerentur ſupplicationes mortuo? ——— Fuerit ille L. Brutus ——————— adduci tamen non poſſum ut quemquam mortuum conjungerem cum deorum immortalium religione, ut cujus ſepulchrum uſquam exſtet ubi parentetur, ei publicè ſupplicetur. If Mr. Moreri had writ conſiderately, he had avoided another Miſtake. He aſſures us that Cicero actually cauſed a Temple to be built: Of which there appears no Footſteps in his Letters. Cicero appears very earneſt and warm on this Deſign, I own; we find him even threatning his good Friend, for not being ſufficiently expeditious, and prefixing a ſet time when the Work ſhould be finiſhed: but it doth not appear by any of his Letters, that it was ever perfected, or even begun. Is not this a ſign that his Project vaniſhed, and that either Time, which aſſwages Grief, had made him apprehend the ridiculous folly of his Deſign, or that unforeſeen Accidents, or other Affairs had diverted the Execution of his Apotheoſis.

Lactantius ſeveral times cites the Book de Conſolatione: By which it appears that Tully did not in the leaſt ſcruple to ſacrifice the Honour and Glory of the Gods to his ridiculous fancy of deifying his Daughter: To juſtify which, he ſhew'd that the Gods publickly adored in Rome, were formerly Men. This inſtance affords a natural Image of the Empire of the Paſſions. They ſpare nothing (l) in Heaven or Earth, when bent on their juſtification. Lactantius expreſſes himſelf very handſomly, and his words the rather deſerve our Tranſcribing, becauſe they contain a fragment of the loſt Book, and Cicero's publick Promiſe to fix his Daughter amongſt the number of the Gods. (m) M. Tullius ——— in eo libro quo ſeipſum de morte filiæ conſolatus eſt, non dubitavit dicere, Deos, qui publicè colerentur, homines fuiſſe. Quod ipſius teſtimonium eo debet graviſſimum judicari, quòd & augurale habuit Sacerdotium, & eoſdem ſe colere, venerarique teſtatur. Itaque intra paucos verſiculos duas res nobis dedit. Nam dum imaginem filiæ eodem ſe modo conſecraturum eſſe profitetur, quo illi à veteribus ſunt conſecrati, & illos mortuos eſſe docuit, & originem vanæ ſuperſtitionis oſtendit. CUM verò (inquit) & mares, & feminas complures ex hominibus in Deorum numero eſſe videamus, & eorum in urbibus, atque agris auguſtiſſima delubra veneremur, aſſentiamur eorum ſapientiæ, quorum ingeniis, & inventis omnem vitam legibus, & inſtitutis excultam, conſtitutamque habemus. Quod ſi ullum unquam animal conſecrandum fuit, illud perfectò fuit. Si Cadmi, aut Amphitryonis progenies, aut Tyndari in cœlum tollenda fama fuit, huic idem honos certe dicandus eſt, quod quidem faciam, teque omnium optimam, doctiſſimamque approbantibus Diis immortalibus ipſis in eorum cœtu locatam ad opinionem omnium mortalium conſecrabo. I might ſtop here, but the reſt of this paſſage affording a Reflection, I ſhall ſubjoin it: (n) Fortaſſe dicat aliquis præ nimio luctu deliraſſe Ciceronem. Atqui omnis illa oratio & doctrina, & exemplis, & ipſo loquendi genere perfecta non ægri, ſed conſtantis animi ac judicii fuit. Et hæc ipſa ſententia nullum præfert indicium doloris. Neque enim puto, illum tam variè, tam copioſè, tam ornatè ſcribere potuiſſe, niſi luctum ejus & ratio ipſa, & conſolatio amicorum, & temporis longitudo mitigaſſet. Lactantius propoſes as an Objection: That perhaps Cicero raved, and the greatneſs of his Affliction had affected his Brain. But I averr, replies Lactantius, that his Book de conſolatione is ſo fine, that it could not have been compoſed by a Perſon which was not in his perfect Senſes, and whoſe Grief had not been worn off by Reaſon, the Conſolation of his Friends, or Time. He was obliged to turn the Argument upon this, in order to render Cicero an unqueſtionable Evidence. But if he had deſigned to prove the inſufficiency of Philoſophy to comfort a Man in Affliction, he would then have alledged this very Book of Cicero, (o) as the performance of a Man who confeſſed himſelf ſhamefully born down by Grief for the loſs of his Daughter. To what cauſe is this Conduct to be aſcribed? Is it owing to Inadvertence, or ſome rhetorical Artifice, that things are thus made uſe of to contrary ends?

(R) To

---

† See the latter end of the Remark Q.

* See the four firſt Remarks.

|| He quotes it; but the Printers have put a Comma after Gaſpar, which made many Reader believe that he had quoted two Writers, Gaſpar and Sagittarius.

(c) De Divinat. lib. 2. init.

(b) Cicero in Tuſcul. apud Conradum in Quæſtura, pag. 193.

(c) In Epitaphio Nepotiani.

(d) Quis enim ſufit quanoris eloquentiæ umine itæ huæ miſeriexplica, quam menta- us eſt Ciro in nſolatine de orte fiæ, ſicut uit? Auguſtin. civit. Dei lib. cap. 4.

(e) Cicero piſt. 18. lib. 12. ad ttic.

(f) Ibid. piſt. 43.

(g) Ibid. piſt. 36.

(h) Hæc tibi æ ineptiæ, fateor enim, tenendæ ſunt. Id.

(i) Ibid. piſt. 35.

(k) Cicero hilipp. 1.

(l) We have ſeen of late a famous Miniſter, who endeavoured to find in the Prophets of the Old Teſtament all the Faults that were objected againſt the falſe Prophets of Dauphiné, whom he thought himſelf obliged to defend.

(m) Lactant. Divin. inſtit. lib. 1. c. 15. p. m. 48.

(n) Ibid.

(o) See above the Remark O.

ng advanced, that Men come into the World only (R) to ſuffer the Puniſhment of their Sins, will admit of a good Reflection.

TURLUPINS, A Sect of impudent and ſcandalous Hereticks, who taught that when Man was arrived at a certain degree of Perfection, he was freed from the Yoak of the Divine Law: And contrary to the Doctrine of the Stoicks, who made the Liberty of their Wiſe Man conſiſt in being free from paſſions, they placed this liberty in being no longer ſubject to the Precepts of Eternal Wiſdom. They did not believe they ought to pray to God any otherwiſe than mentally; but what was yet more ſhocking in their Sect, was that

(R) To ſuffer the Puniſhment of their ſins.] He could not paint his Grief by more ſignal Characters, than by ſaying, that Humane life is a puniſhment, and criticiſing on thoſe of a contrary Opinion. (a) Quid Ciceroni facimus? qui cum in principio conſolationis ſuæ dixiſſet luendorum ſcelerum cauſa naſci homines, iteravit id ipſum poſtea, quaſi objurgans eum qui vitam pœnam non eſſe putet. Lactantius ought not to be blamed for cenſuring (b) this Aſſertion of Cicero; for it is certain that it betrays an Ignorance of the reaſon why God placed us in the World: but as this Reaſon was above the reach of natural light, and is only well known by the Evangelical Revelation, we ought not to be much ſurprized that Cicero, hurried on by Grief, and oppreſſed by Affliction, extended the Platonical Hypotheſis. Plato's Philoſophy taught, That the Soul of Man did exiſt before it was incloſed in a Human body, and that this anterior Eſtate had been much more glorious and happy than that of Man. Hence ſome Reaſoners advanced, that the Soul had never changed its Condition, if it had not deſerved chaſtiſement; and they concluded, (c) that it was confined to the Body as its Priſon, in order to inflict on it its deſerved Puniſhment. Cicero adopted this Hypotheſis, but Lactantius looks upon it as the moſt ſenſeleſs of all Extravagancies. And yet it differs from the Doctrine of Original Sin in its circumſtances only; for ſince the Chriſtian Faith inſtructs us, that Adam ſinned for himſelf and all his Poſterity, it follows, 1. That all Souls, in the Eye of God, are involved in Guilt even before they exiſt. 2. That they are united to the Body only by an Act of Puniſhment, ſince by their being united to the Body, they incur the Penalty of eternal Damnation, to which they are juſtly ſentenced; and it is by no other means than remiſſion and Grace that ſome are ſaved; wherefore the Scripture ſaith, (d) that all Men are born Children of wrath. Lactantius ought therefore to have refuted Tully's Hypotheſis more dexterouſly, and that by Proofs which only affect thoſe particulars in which it differs from that of Original Sin. If he had well conſider'd Arnobius's ſecond Book, he would have believ'd it not very eaſie to refute Cicero by Philoſophical Arguments; for I don't ſee what Reply the Platoniſts might offer to Arnobius's Reaſons, I mean thoſe Objections which he offered againſt the Aſſertion, that immortal Spirits in their own nature Innocent, Happy, abounding in Knowledge, either voluntarily deſcended into Humane Bodies, or were ſent thither by Providence. He makes a long enumeration of the Follies, Crimes and Miſeries of Mankind, and concludes that it was inconſiſtent with the Divine Goodneſs and Juſtice that ſuch Spirits ſhould be united to Humane Bodies. Into which he takes it to be exactly the ſame thing to command or ſuffer them to deſcend. Atque ita perficitur, ſays he (e), ut nihil interſit omnino voluntarie venerint, an illius obtemperaverint juſſioni: cùm non prohibendo quòd oportuerat prohiberi, ceſſatione crimen fecerit proprium, & retentionis diſſimulatione permiſerit prius. Sed procul hæc abeat ſceleratæ opinionis immanitas, ut Deus credatur omnipotens, magnarum & inviſibilium rerum ſator & conditor, procreator, tam mobiles animas genuiſſe gravitatis ac ponderis conſtantiaque nullius, in vitia labiles, in peccatorum genera univerſa declives: cumque eas tales atque hujuſmodi ſciret, in corpora ire juſſiſſe, quorum inductæ carceribus ſub procellis agerent tempeſtatibuſque quotidie fortunæ, & modo turpia facerent, modo paterentur obſcœna: naufragiis, ruinis, incendiorum conflagrationibus ut perirent. Pauperies alias, alias ut mendicitas premeret, ut ferarum paterentur aliæ laniatus, muſcularum aliæ ut interirent veneno, claudæ ne incederent aliæ, ut aliæ lumen amitterent, ut articulis ſederent aliæ colligatis, morbis denique objectarentur ut cunctis, quos infelix & miſeranda mortalitas diverſarum ſuſtinet dilaceratione pœnarum: tum deinde oblitæ unius eſſe ſe fontis, unius genitoris & capitis, germanitatis convellerent atque abrumperent jura: urbes ſuas everterent, popularentur hoſtiliter terras, ſervos de liberis facerent, inſultarent virginibus, & matrimoniis alienis, odiſſent invicem ſeſe, aliorum gaudiis & felicitatibus inviderent: tum deinde ſe omnes maledicerent, carperent, & ſævorum dentium mordacitate laniarent. Sed procul hæc abeat, ut eadem rurſus frequentiuſque dicamus, tam immanis, & ſcelerata perſuaſio, ut ille ſalus rerum Deus, omnium virtutum caput, benignitatis & culmen; atque ut cum laudibus extollamus humanis, ſapientiſſimus, juſtus, perfecta omnia faciens, & integritatis ſuæ conſervantia menſuras, aut aliquid fecerit claudum, & quod minus eſſet a recto, aut ulli rei fuerit miſeriarum aut diſcriminum cauſa, aut ipſos actus quibus vita tranſigitur & celebratur humana, ordinaverit, juſſerit, & a ſua fluere conſtitutione præceperit. Minora hæc illo ſunt, & magnitudinis ejus deſtruentia poteſtatem: tantumque eſt longe ut iſtarum auctor rerum eſſe credatur, ut in ſacrilega crimen impietatis incurrat quiſquis ab eo conceperit hominem eſſe pregnatum, rem infelicem & miſeram, qui eſſe ſe doleat, qui conditionem ſuam deteſtetur & lugeat: qui nulla alia de cauſa ſeſe intelligat procreatum, quam ne materiam non haberent per quam diffunderent ſe mala, & eſſent miſeri ſemper, quorum cruciatibus paſceretur neſcio qua vis latens, & humanitati adverſa crudelitas. To cenſure this Doctrine of Arnobius as an ill one, would be too great a piece of moderation, it ought to be called abominable; for it overthrows the foundations of Chriſtianity, and is not much better than the Doctrine of the Manichees. Cicero might have found in it as lively a Deſcription of Humane Miſery as he could have made; but he might have anſwered that Objection by his Hypotheſis of the pre-exiſtence of Sin, which however falſe it was, might yet inſpire Patience. For he might very well ſay to himſelf, "My Daughter's Death hath overwhelmed me, and plunged me into deſpair; but about or above two hundred Years ago, I committed ſome Crimes which deſerve this Puniſhment. I hereby expiate them. I ſuffer for them in this organized Priſon, in which my Soul was confined when I was born: It is juſt that I ſhould be unhappy, ſince I ſinned ſo long ago." If Pſyche's Father had reaſoned in this manner, he would not have anſwered, as the French Stage makes him anſwer to that Common place of Conſolation, That the Gods have the right to take away thoſe Children which they have given.

Ah, (f) cherche un meilleur fondement
Aux conſolations que ton cœur me preſente,
Et de la fauſſeté de ce raiſonnement
Ne fais point un accablement
A cette douleur ſi cuiſante,
Dont je ſouffre ici le tourment.
Crois tu la me donner une raiſon puiſſante
Pour ne me plaindre point de cet arrêt des Cieux!
Et dans le procedé des Dieux
Dont tu veux que je me contente,
Une rigueur aſſaſſinante
Ne paroit-elle pas aux yeux?
Voi l'état où ces Dieux me forcent à (g) te rendre,
Et l'autre où te receut mon cœur infortuné;
Tu connoitras par là qu'ils me viennent reprendre
Bien plus que ce qu'ils m'ont donné.
Je receus d'eux en toi, ma Fille,
Un preſent que mon cœur ne leur demandoit pas;
J'y trouvois alors peu d'appas,
Et leur en vis ſans joye accroître ma famille.
Mais mon cœur ainſi que mes yeux
S'eſt fait de ce preſent une douce habitude:
J'ai mis quinze ans de ſoins, de veilles, & d'étude,
A me le rendre precieux:
Je l'ay paré de l'aimable richeſſe
De mille brillantes vertus,
En lui j'ai renfermé per des ſoins aſſidus
Tous les plus beaux treſors que fournit la ſageſſe,
A lui j'ai de mon ame attaché la tendreſſe,
J'en ai fait de ce cœur le charme & l'allegreſſe,
La conſolation de mes ſens abbatus,
Le doux eſpoir de ma veilleſſe.
Ils m'otent tout cela, ces Dieux.

Et

(a) Lactant. Divin. Inſtit. lib. 3. c. 18. p. m. 197.

(b) Recte ergo profatus eſt errore ac miſerabili veritatis ignorantia ſe teneri. Id. Ibid.

(c) Quæ ignorantia effecit ut quoſdam dicere non puderet, idcirco nos eſſe natos ut ſcelerum pœnas lueremus, quo quid delirius dici poſſit non invenio. Ubi enim, vel quæ ſcelera potuimus admittere, qui omnino non fuimus. Id. Ibid. pag. 196.

(d) Eph. 2. 3.

(e) Arnobius, lib. 2. pag. m. 74, 75.

(f) Moliere, Tragedie de Pſiché, act. 2. ſcene 1.

(g) A Father is brought in ſpeaking to his Daughter, whom the Gods deſign'd ſhortly to take away from him.

that (Y) they went Naked, and according to the example of the Cynicks †, or rather of Brutes, they performed the work of the Flesh at Noon-Day in view of all the World. They affirmed we ought not to be aſhamed of any part which Nature has beſtowed on us. Notwithſtanding theſe profane Extravagancies they affected a very ſpiritual and devout Air, the better β to inſinuate themſelves into the Womens Favour, and allure them into the ſnare of their Unchaſte Deſires. For this is the fatal Rock of all thoſe Sects who aim at diſtinguiſhing themſelves by Paradoxes in Morality: Examine to the bottom the Viſions of the Pretenders to new Light, and of the Quietiſts, &c. You will find if any thing can Unmask them, 'tis ſomething relating to the Venereal Pleaſure; this is the weak part of the place, where the Enemy makes the Aſſault; it is a Worm which never dies, and a Fire which never goes out. Theſe Hereticks appeared in France in the Reign of Charles γ V. Their principal Scenes were Savoy and Dauphine. Great care was taken (Z) to purge the World of them. It is not eaſy to diſcover the true cauſe of their Name. Vignier derives it from their living in places expoſed to the Wolves. They affected to call themſelves the FRATERNITY OF THE POOR, as du || Tillet and Gaguin ‡ have obſerved.

TURPIN, a Fabulous Hiſtorian of the actions of Charlemagne and Roland. No Body at preſent takes him for Turpin, promoted to the Arch-Biſhoprick of Reims by Charlemagne, nor gives any credit to his Relations; but ſome believe

Et tu veux que je n'aye aucun ſujet de plainte
Sur cet affreux arrêt dont je ſouffre l'atteinte?
Ah! leur pouvoir ſe joue avec trop de rigueur
Des tendreſſes de nôtre cœur:
Pour m'ôter leur preſent, leur falloit-il attendre
Que j'en euſſe fait tout mon bien?
Ou plûtôt, s'ils avoient deſſein de le reprendre,
N'eût-il pas été mieux de ne me donner rien?

However I am apt to think that Cicero would much better have reliſhed Arnobius's Diſcourſe, which doth not extenuate the Miſeries of Life, than that of Lactantius which doth Extenuate them. (a) Quid ergo dicemus, niſi errare illos, qui aut mortem appetunt tanquam bonum, aut vitam fugiunt tanquam malum? Niſi quod ſunt iniquiſſimi, qui pauciora mala non penſant bonis pluribus? Nam cum omnem vitam per exquiſitas, & varias traducant voluptates, mori cupiunt, ſi quid fortè his amaritudinis ſupervenerit: & ſic habent, tanquam illis nunquam fuerit benè, ſi aliquando fuerit male. Damnant igitur vitam omnem, plenamque nihil aliud, quàm malis opinantur. Hinc nata eſt inepta illa ſententia, hanc eſſe mortem, quam nos vitam putemus, illam vitam, quam nos pro morte timeamus. Ita primum bonum eſſe non naſci, ſecundum, citius mori. Quæ ut majoris ſit authoritatis, Sileno attribuitur. Cicero in conſolatione: NON (inquit) longe optimum, nec in hos ſcopulos incidere vitæ: Proximum autem ſi natus ſis, quam primum mori, & tanquam ex incendio effugere fortunæ. Credidiſſe illum vaniſſimo dicto exinde apparet, quòd adjecit aliquid de ſuo, ut ornaret. By this we are informed that Cicero in his Book de Conſolatione, put a great value on this Sentence of Silenus: "The "higheſt pitch of Happineſs is never to be Born, "and next to that to eſcape very quickly out of "this Life as out of a Houſe on Fire.

He mentions this Sentence in one of his Books at preſent Extant, and adds ſome Verſes which import that we ought to Mourn at the Birth and Rejoyce at the Death of Men. (b) Fertur etiam de Sileno fabella quædam: qui cùm à Mida captus eſſet, hoc ei muneris pro ſua miſſione dediſſe ſcribitur: Docuiſſe regem, NON NASCI HOMINI LONGE optimum eſſe: Proximum autem, quam primùm mori: Quâ eſt ſententia in Creſphonte uſus Euripides.

Nam nos decebat cœtus celebrantis domum,
Lugere, ubi eſſet aliquis in lucem editus,
Humanæ vitæ varia reputantis mala:
At, qui labores morte finiſſet gravis,
Hunc omneis amicos laude & lætitia exequi.

Plutarch hath the Original Greek (c) of theſe Verſes, which run thus in Amyot's Verſion:

Plorer convient celui qui ſort du ventre
Pour tant de maux auſquels naiſſant il entre,
Et convoyer au ſepulchre le mort,
Qui des travaux de ceſte vie ſort,
En faiſant tous ſigne d'aiſe & de joye,
En beniſſant de ſon depart la VOYE.

Lactantius ſuppoſes one thing which Cicero would have denyed him: That the good things of this Life ſurpaſs the Evil. I am ſure that the diſmal State to which Cicero was reduced by the loſs of Tullia, appeared to him ſuch a weighty Preſſure that he would very willingly have quitted all the Luſtre of his Glory, to be delivered from this inſupportable Anxiety. I believe withal that he would not have returned in to the World, on condition of paſſing through the various States that he had gone through (d). We have already ſeen what he made Cato ſay (e): He thought as much of himſelf. He had nevertheleſs a large ſhare of Fortune's Favours: His Eloquence was admired; he was raiſed to the firſt dignities of the Republick; he acquired a glorious Character: But if I am not miſtaken, he wou'd have ſwore that all the Pleaſures of his Life weighed againſt the Pain and Uneaſineſs which he had endured, or did then feel, would not have amounted to an Ounce in a Pound. I ſhall elſewhere touch on this Diſpute (f): Whether the Good things of this Life ſurmount the Evil. Authors are divided on this Subject, ſome declare for the Affirmative, others for the Negative.

(Y) That they went Naked.] We cannot ſufficiently wonder that ſuch a whimſical Fancy ſhould be ſo often renewed amongſt Chriſtians. Paganiſm affords us only the Sect of the Cynicks who hit on this impudent Practice; and it muſt alſo be obſerved that this Sect was not Numerous, and that the greateſt part of the Cynicks did not diſcover their Nudity, as it was ſaid of Diogenes. The Indian Gymnoſophiſts were not Naked in thoſe parts which the Adamites, Turlupins, Picards, and ſeveral Anabaptiſts diſcovered. We ought then to grant, that in that reſpect the Chriſtians have been more irregular than the Pagans. At which we ſhall not be ſurprized, when we obſerve that a Goſpel Principle, of which the Pagans were ignorant, is liable to this Abuſe. I mean that the ſecond Adam came to repair the Evil which the firſt had introduced into the World. From hence a Fanatick ventures to conclude, that thoſe who are once partakers of the benefits of the Covenant of Grace, are perfectly reſtored to the State of Adam and Eve. I own that Fanaticiſm muſt be far advanced, and the Doſe muſt be very large, which is able to overcome the Impreſſions of Modeſty which Nature and a Chriſtian Education have ſtamped on us; but what is not the infinite Combination of our Paſſions, Imaginations, animal Spirits, &c. capable of doing? I have in another place (g) ſpoken of ſome Antient Anachorets, who ſcrupled to ſee their own Nudity. The Pagans afford us no ſuch Example that I know of; they were only very careful of hiding it from the Eyes of others. This was obſerved not only amongſt the Women, but alſo amongſt ſome very Debauched Men: And therefore Petronius did not ſtretch too far when he ſaid, Quam ne ad cognitionem quidem admittere ſeverioris notæ homines ſolent.

(Z) Great care was taken to purge the World of them.] The following words afford us a Specimen of that Diligence β Gerſon apud eundem.

---

† Cynicorum Philoſophorum more omnia verenda publicitus nudata geſtabant, & in publico velut jumenta coibant, inſtar canum in multitudine exercitio membrorum pudendorum degentes. Gerſon apud Prateol.

γ Mezeray, Abregé, chronolog. tom. 3. p.m. 227. Dutch Edit.

* Ad ann. 1159.

|| Chroniq. des Rois de France, under Charles V.

‡ In the Life of Charles V.

(a) Lactant. ubi ſupra, pag. 198.

(b) Cicero Tuſcul. 1. ſub fin. m. 153. ...ſe. See the Remark ... of the Article Xenophanes towards the end.

(c) Plut. de Audiend. Poetis ſub ... pag. ...6.

(d) Compare with this what ſhall be ſaid in the Remark F of the Article Vayer.

(e) In the Remark ... of the Article Porcius.

(f) In the Article Xenophanes.

(g) In the Remark F of the Article Adamites.

lieve him to be as antient as (A) that Arch-Biſhop. Others rather incline to fix him in the XIIth Century (B). If it were true that ſome (C) Popes or Councils declared his Book Authentick, it wou'd be a clear proof of a groſs Ignorance, or of an egregious Impoſture.

Mr. Allard * affirms that the Romance of the Arch-Biſhop Turpin of the Year 1092, was compoſed at Vienne, by a Monk of St. Andrew.

TURRETIN

ſiance: (a) "To Brother James le More, of the "Preaching Order, Inquiſitor of the Sodomites in "the Province of France, as a Gift beſtowed on him "by the King by his Letters Patents the 2d of February 1373, for and in Compenſation of ſeveral "Pains, Miſſions and Expences which he had been "at, ſuffered and ſuſtained in purſuit of the Male "and Female Turlupins whom he found and took in "the ſaid Province, and who by his diligence have "been Puniſhed for their Errors and Falſities, the "Sum of 50 Francs which are worth 40 Paris Livres. Gagnin obſerves in his Life of Charles V. that "the Books and Veſtments of the Turlupins were burnt in the Hogs-Market at Paris, "without the Gate of St. Honoré; that Joan Dabentonne, and a Man, being the Chief Holders-"Forth of that Sect, were alſo burnt; but the latter, "ſays he, whom I do not name, dying in Priſon, "before Sentence, his Corps was kept Fifteen Days "in a heap of Lime, after which it was burnt at "the time appointed for Execution. Du Tillet faith alſo that under Charles V. "the ſuperſtitious Religion of the Turlupins, who had called "their Sect the FRATERNITY OF THE "POOR, was Condemned and Aboliſhed, and "their Ceremonies, Books and Cloaths condemned "and burnt." But how do theſe Cloaths which were burnt agree with the report of thoſe, who tell us that they went Naked? We muſt ſuppoſe the Nakedneſs of all theſe ſorts of Fanaticks to have been limited with regard to times, places, and certain Members. We have ſeen that the Adamites did not ſtrip themſelves any where but in the Stoves where they met, and that the Picards condemned above all, thoſe who did not ſhew their Privy-Parts. The Cold and Rain would not permit them to go always Naked: It is not at all probable that they durſt regularly and continually appear Naked in thoſe Cities in which they were not ſtrong enough; and it ſeems that the Turlupins diſcovered only the Parts which diſtinguiſh the Sexes. (b) Turleupini Cynicorum ſectam ſuſcitantes de nuditate PUDENDORUM & publico coitu. My Citation out of Gerſon amounts to the ſame thing. They had then Cloaths notwithſtanding their Impudence; and probably before Perſons not yet Initiated, or thoſe they intended to draw into their Nets, they did not immediately ſhew their Privy-Parts.

(A) Believe him to be as Antient as that Arch-Biſhop.] Papyrius Maſſo places him a little after the Reign of Charles the Bald; but ſpeaks of him as of a Miſerable Author, who miſpent his leaſure Hours in compoſing a Romance for the uſe of Children. See the following Remark.

WE FIND a very curious Obſervation in Mr. Catel. This Author having mentioned ſome Lyes of Tilpin or Turpin Arch-Biſhop of Rheims, adds: (c) "Theſe Fables written by Tilpin are very Antient; the Book is to be ſeen in Manuſcript in a "very Antique Letter, and in old French, in ſeveral "Libraries: They are followed by many Old Authors, as by Matthew Paris, who wrote the Hiſtory of England; Dante an antient Italian Poet; Chalcondylas in his Hiſtory of the Turks; Petrus Venetus in his Catalogue of Saints, who wrote "the Life of Roland and others, which he partly "extracted from the ſaid Tilpin, and Godfery of Viterbo in his Hiſtory called Pantheon, who improving thoſe Fables, adds that Charlemagne was "at Jeruſalem to viſit the Holy Places, where the "Myſteries of our Redemption were accompliſhed. "But moſt of what theſe Hiſtorians have written is "Fabulous, for Tilpin himſelf in the Preface of his "Hiſtory inſcribed to Leopard Dean of Aix la Chapelle, ſaith, that Charlemagne's Spaniſh Wars "are not mentioned in the Antient Chronicles of "St. Denys, of which he might be very well informed being a Monk of the Order of St. Denys. And beſides it is very hard to believe that "Arch-Biſhop Tilpin ſhould be the Author of this "Romance, which contains the Hiſtory of Charlemagne, in which the Death of that Prince "is mentioned, which happened in 814, and yet "Arch-Biſhop Tilpin Dyed in 813, as Trithemius with a great deal of probability obſerves; "for Wulfarius who ſucceeded him in his Biſhoprick, held a Council in 814, as Flodoart in the "third Book of his Hiſtory of Rheims informs "us.

(B) Fix him in the XIIth Century.] Oihenart is ſurprized that Papyrius Maſſo places him much higher. (d) Hanc (de rebus Caroli Magni prodigioſam Hiſtoriam) neſcio quo argumento, Papyrius Maſſonus (etſi authorem imperitiæ & mendacii damnet) è vetuſtate commendat. Dum, non multò poſt Caroli Calvi imperium, ab homine otioſo in juventutis gratiam ſcriptam fuiſſe videri pronunciat. Here is the reaſon which induced Oihenart to believe that Turpin lived in the XIIth Century, and was a Spaniard. Mr. des Cordes Canon of Limoges had lent him a Manuſcript of this Hiſtory, to which was prefixed a Preface written by a Prior a little before the Year 1200. (e) This Preface teſtifies that the Prior had lately recovered that Manuſcript, which was brought him out of Spain, and which he took for Arch-Biſhop Turpin's Hiſtory, to whoſe Interceſſion he devoutly recommends himſelf. I believe his own words may not be unacceptable here: (f) Gaufredus Prior Voſienſis, ſacro Martialis conventui & univerſo Clero Lemovicini climatis gaudiis ſempiternis perfrui. Egregios invicti Regis Caroli triumphos ac præcelſi Comitis Rotholandi prædicandos agones in Hiſpania geſtos nuper ad nos ex Eſperiâ delatos gratanter excepi & ingenti ſtudio corrigens ſcribere feci, maximè quod apud nos iſta latuerant hactenus, niſi quæ joculatores in ſuis præferebant cantilenis. Quia verò ſcriptura ipſa Scriptorum vitio depravata ac pene deleta fuerat non ſine magno ſtudio decoranda correxi, non ſuperflua ſubtrahens, ſed quæ neceſſaria aderant, addens, ne quis me putet reprehendere inclita laudis Turpinum qui ſe infraſcripta ſcripſiſſe fatetur. Ego tanti Pontificis orationibus mihi a judice pio dari veniam opto.

(C) That ſome Popes or Councils declared his Book Authentick.] (g) Voſſius having obſerved that this Hiſtory in the Manuſcript of it in Bennet-College Library at Cambridge, is Intituled, liber Turpini Archiepiſcopi Rhemenſis quomodo Carolus Rex Francorum adquiſivit Hiſpaniam, adds, that Pope Calixtus declared it Authentick: He doth not ſay this on his own Authority, but on the credit of Thomas James, which he ſuppoſes grounded on the Title of the Book, or ſome Manuſcript Note: (h) Hunc librum dicit Papa Calixtus eſſe authenticum, ut adjungit Thomas James: Ut puto ex MSi operis inſcriptione ſive nota ei addita. Voſſius did not know the Foundation of James's Aſſertion; he did not remember a certain place in the Faſciculus temporum. The thing is this. Mr. du Pleſſis Mornai ſpeaking of ſome Canons of a Council held at Rheims in 1119. adds this Reflection, "And obſerve by what "Spirit thoſe Biſhops were Influenced, who in "the ſame Council declared the Hiſtory of Charlemagne by Arch-Biſhop Turpin Authentick, "which is Fabulous and Ridiculous, and as ſuch "condemned and ſentenced by Baronius himſelf "(i)". Coeffeteau anſwered him thus: (k) He cites in the Margin his trifling Chronicler Faſciculus temporum, who doth not ſay one word of this Synod: and the Fraud proceeds from hence, that he ſpeaking of Calixtus ſaith, He wrote a little Book of the Miracles of St. James: He alſo made a Statute concerning the Hiſtory of Charles, compiled by Bleſſed Turpin Arch-Biſhop of Rheims. Well! Reader, is it not a pretty Concluſion? Calixtus made a Statute concerning the Hiſtory of Charles, written by the Arch-Biſhop of Rheims: Ergo the Council of Rheims, where he preſided, declared this Book Authentick. Certainly they had ſomething elſe to do than amuſe themſelves with theſe Fables. But after all where did his wretched Chronicler find that Calixtus made this

---

* Allard, Bibliotheque de Dauphiné at the end.

(a) Ex computo Nicolai Mauregart, Burgenſis Pariſienſis de auxilio Præpoſituræ Pariſienſ. an. 1374. apud Du Cange Gloſſar. voce Turlupini.

(b) Genebrard Chronic.

(c) Catel, Memoires de l'Hiſtoire du Languedoc pag. 545.

(d) Ap. [illegible] Oihenart. Notit. [illegible] pag. [illegible]

(e) MS. præfixo hiſtoriæ illi, a Gaufredo Priore Voſienſi, qui [illegible] annum [illegible] habet, in exemplari manuſcripto, cujus copiam fecit Joannes Cordeſius Canonicus Lemovicenſis, plane [illegible] opus, recens tempore Gaufredi [illegible], Hiſpani hominis illo ipſo ſæculo xii. viventis, abortum eſſe. Ibid.

(f) Apud Oihenartum ibid.

(g) Voſſius, de hiſtor. Latinis, lib. 2. [illegible] p. m. [illegible]

(h) Id. ib.

(i) Du Pleſſis Mornai, Myſtere d'iniquité, pag. [illegible] He quotes Faſciculus temporum an. 1119.

(k) Coeffeteau, Reponſe au Myſtere d'iniquité, pag. [illegible]

TURRETIN (FRANCIS), a Miniſter and Profeſſor of Divinity at Geneva (A) his Native Country, was born the 17. October 1623. Having ſtudied at Geneva, Leyden, Paris, Saumur, Montauban and Nimes with great Succeſs, he was admitted to the Holy Miniſtry in 1648, and officiated at the ſame time in the French and Italian Churches at Geneva. Two Years after he was offered the Philoſophy Profeſſorſhip, which he refuſed, but he complied with a Call to the Church of Lyons †. He was recalled to Geneva at a Year's end, that City wanting him for their Theological Lectures, on which he entred in the Year 1653. He was deputed to Holland in 1661. to requeſt a pecuniary aſſiſtance which the City of Geneva then wanted: In which journey he met with all the Succeſs which he could promiſe himſelf, and got ſo great a Reputation, that the Walloon Churches of the Hague and Leyden earneſtly invited him to their Miniſtry, and the Univerſity at the latter of theſe places paſſionately intreated his ſtay. After his return, he reaſſumed the exerciſe of his Office, in which he continued until his Death with very great Application. He dyed the 28 of September 1687. with the moſt edifying Marks of an ardent Love for God ||. He was a Man of a great deal of Merit; he was eloquent, judicious, laborious, learned, and zealous for Orthodoxy. All which appears by the Books he hath (B) publiſhed. He left a Son (C) endowed with extraordinary parts.

TUSCUS (BALERUS) went (as we are told) for the Author of a Book condemned by the Inquiſition in 1622. and entituled Tela Catholica contra judicia erronea, he went I ſay, for the Author of this Treatiſe, becauſe it was thought that the Style diſcovered it to be written by him *. Brother Angel of the Purification, Hiſtoriographer of the Order of the Barefooted Carmelites made uſe of this inſtance to Authoriſe his ſuſpicion that Conrad Janningus the Jeſuit was the Author of a Letter diſperſed under the Emperor's Name, and written to his Catholick Majeſty in the Year 1696. and alledged alſo that by this Conformity of Style St. Jerome ‡ found that John of Jeruſalem was the Author of a certain Letter. We ſhall ſee (Z) his Illuſions. It is certain that the Letter diſperſed under the Emperor's Name was really written by his Imperial Majeſty.

VAYER

this Statute? What appearance is there that he ſhould trouble himſelf with this Romance? Gretſer the Jeſuit anſwering the ſame Book of du Pleſſis doth not know whether what is related concerning this Authentickneſs of Turpin ought to be reckoned Fabulous. Perhaps, ſaith he, we ſhould not be in the wrong to deny all this, (a) for the Acts of the Council nor the Commentary of Heſſo the Scholaſtick do not Mention it at all. The Faſciculus temporum only hints it in an indefinite manner: Statuit etiam (Calixtus) hiſtoriam Caroli deſcriptam a beato Turpino Remenſi Archiepiſcopo. He doth not tell us the Contents of this Statute, where or when it was made: But let us grant, ſaith Gretſer, that Calixtus approved this Book; what Advantage accrues thereby to the Myſtery of iniquity? This Hiſtory is not ſuch a lying one but the Proteſtants have publiſhed it amongſt the Ancient Hiſtories: (b) At demus Calixtum Hiſtoriam Turpini ſtatuiſſe, hoc eſt, confirmaſſe, quid utilitatis inde ad Myſterium Pleſſæum redit? Quæ tam fabuloſa non eſt, ut abſterreat ipſos etiam Sectarios, quò minus eam cum aliis veterum monumentis publicent. Teſtis Juſtus Reuberus, qui a ſuo Tomo Antiquorum Scriptorum Turpinum excludere, turpe duxit. This laſt part of the Jeſuit's Anſwer is very pitiful; for if it be a ſhameful thing, as it is no doubt, for a Council to approve a Book Stuffed with impertinent Fables, du Pleſſis's reflection is very judicious. And then is it to prove ſtrongly that a Hiſtory is good, to ſay that a Huguenot or Lutheran compiler hath publiſhed it amongſt other Books? Is it not ſometimes a ſufficient Reaſon for the inſerting a Book in a Collection that it hath ſome Antiquity? And after all is an Orthodox Neceſſarily Happy in the Choice of Authors, who beſt deſerve to be placed in a Collection of Hiſtorians? Gretſer had done very well to have kept to his firſt Anſwer: He ought to have been ſatiſfied with the Faſciculus's being no good Witneſs againſt him. Mr. Rivet is of the ſame Opinion; he replies for M. du Pleſſis in the following manner: " (c) It is of no importance whether Calixtus confirmed this Hiſtory of " Turpin in a Council, or whether he did it alone by " Virtue of his Authority. It is undeniable that the " Carthuſian, who collected the Faſciculus, expreſſed " himſelf thus, ſtatuit hiſtoriam Caroli, deſcriptam " a B. Turpino, Rhemenſi Archiepiſcopo. Here Coeffeteau inſults du Pleſſis, after his falſe verſion, " he made a ſtatute concerning the Hiſtory of Charles " inſtead of he decreed, that is, eſtabliſhed or confirmed " the Hiſtory of Charles. He may learn at his leiſure " from any pedantick Grammarian the difference betwixt Statuere Hiſtoriam and Statuere de " Hiſtoria. If this ſorry Chronicler is miſtaken, if " he ſaith this without mentioning any Author, " we are not to blame. We return to the Papiſts " what they give us. For my part I am partly " of Opinion that it is a miſtake, and that inſtead " of Calixtus's Statutes for the Eſtabliſhment of Arch- " Biſhop Turpin, he miſtook and inſerted the Eſtabliſhment of Arch-Biſhop Turpins's Hiſtory.

(A) Geneva his Native Country.] Francis TURRETIN his Grandfather of an Ancient and Noble Family of Lucca, having left Italy on Account of his Religion, reſided ſome Years at Antwerp, and was Familiarly acquainted with the Famous Saint Aldegonde. He afterwards went to Zurich, and at laſt fixed at Geneva, where he had a Son Named Benedict TURRETIN, who was an Illuſtrious Profeſſor of Divinity, in that City, very well known by his Writings (d): This was the Father of our Francis Turretin. All which the Reader may find in the Funeral Oration of the Letter pronounced by Mr. Pictet his Nephew, a very Elegant piece and worthy of its Author, who is a Miniſter and Profeſſor at Geneva, and Author, beſides other Works, of a Book entituled Morale Chretienne in ſeveral Volumes in 12. and of a Theologia Chriſtiana in 8.

(B) By the Books he hath publiſhed.] Beſides his Sermons Dedicated to Madam de Schomberg, he wrote an Anſwer to a tract Publiſhed by a Canon of Aneci, to expoſe the Proteſtants amongſt other Topics, on that of the Obedience of Subjects to lawful Princes. He alſo anſwered the Biſhop of Lucca's Letter to the Families of Geneva, originally deſcended from his Dioceſs, to exhort them to the Profeſſion of the Catholick Faith which their Anceſtors had abandoned. But what will chiefly immortalize him is (e) his Inſtitutio Theologiæ Elenctica in three Volumes in 4. and his Theſes de Satisfactione Chriſti against the Socinians, and De neceſſaria ſeceſſione ab Eccleſia Romana.

(C) A Son endowed with extraordinary parts.] I have cited (f) ſomewhere the Learned Theſes which he maintained at Leyden in 1692. The Carteſian Philoſophy, in which he was ſo perfectly inſtructed by Mr. Chouet (g), does very much ſet off his great knowledge of Divinity. A Profeſſorſhip of Sacred Hiſtory in the Academy of Geneva was erected on his Account, which he very worthily diſcharges, as well as the Office of Miniſter.

(Z) We ſhall ſee his Illuſions.] Father Papebroch, who || Taken from his Funeral Oration pronounced at Geneva by Mr Pictet the 28. of Novemb. 1687.

† To ſucceed Aaron Morus, Brother to Mr Morus.

* Lancell. [illegible] cap. 9. apud Papebroch. [illegible] Histor. pag. 149.

‡ Hieron. epiſt. 5. apud eund. ibid.

(d) He wrote amongſt other Books, the Defenſe des verſions de Geneva contre le Pere Coton. That work contains 2. Vol. in 4. He publiſh'd alſo ſome French Sermons intituled Profit des chatimens. He had been Miniſter of the Church of Nimes.

(e) See the Encomium beſtowed upon it in the Dutch Edition 1696. It has been abridged for the uſe of Young Students. The Author of that Abridgment, which was Printed the Second time at Amſterdam 1695. calls himſelf Leonard Rijſſenius.

(f) In the Article Nicolle.

(g) This Illuſtrious Profeſſor, the Ornament of Geneva, has been long ſince removed from his Profeſſorſhip, and admitted into the Government of the Republick.

(a) Neque enim in actis quidquam hujus apparet, ut nec in Commentario Heſſonis Scholaſtici, qui res geſtas hujus Concilii ex profeſſo literis mandavit. Gretſer. in Examine Myſterii Pleſſæani, pag. 375.

(b) Id. ib.

(c) Rivet, Remarques ſur la Reponſe au Myſtere d'iniquité, tom. 2. pag. 238.

V

VAYER (FRANCIS DE LA MOTHE LE) a Parisian, Counsellor of State in Ordinary, and Preceptor to the Duke of Anjou, only Brother of King Lewis XIV. was a very Learned Man. He was admitted into the French Academy (A) the 14th of February 1639. He had more Reading and Learning than the greatest part of that Society, but of most of them wrote more Elegantly than he: For his Style was not very polite; and if he had made less use of his Memory and of his Reading of the Latin Authors than he did, he would yet have come far short of Perfection in Language. He was a Man of a regular Conduct, very like that of the Ancient Sages: A true Philosopher in his Manners, who despis'd even lawful Pleasures, and was passionately fond of a studious Life, and of Reading and Composing of Books. This Regularity, Austerity and Wisdom, did not prevent his being suspected of having no (B) Religion. It's likely that this Suspicion was grounded on some Dialogues which he wrote, and which appear'd under the Name of * Orasius Tubero, and on his discovering in his Works too great a prepossession in favour of Scepticism or the Pyrrhonian Principles. It is certain there is a great deal of Libertinism in the Dialogues of Orasius Tubero; but he that should conclude from thence that the Author had no Religion, would render himself guilty a very rash Judgment: For there is a vast difference betwixt writing freely what may be objected against Faith, and believing it to be really true. Several People persuade themselves that these Dialogues hinder'd his Preferment to the Place (C) (design'd for him) of Preceptor to his Majesty. This is not very probable, since if the Queen or Cardinal Mazarin had been shocked by this Reason, they would who hath inserted in one of his Books this Carmelite Historiographer's Complaint to the tribunal of the Inquisition, says that the Imperial Embassadour at Madrid demanded that the Author of this injurious Complaint against the Emperor should be punished, and that it was reported that this Carmelite escaped the Punishment only by disowning the Accusation. Observe that this Accuser attempting to prove that the Letter, which he pretended to be suppositious, was Janningus's Style, cited as the works of that Jesuit two Tracts which were Written by Sebastian de St. Paul a Carmelite Monk (a). Was not this effectually to prove the Conformity of Style? Father Papebroch adds (b) that he has not found the Name of Balerus Tuscus in any Catalogue of Books Condemned by the Inquisition, and suspects that this Balerus having prefixed his Name to a Book, wherein the Private Regulations of the East-India Company, were blamed, the Dutch Ministers censured him, and that the Author anonymously opposed that Censure by his Tela Catholica, which were also Condemned. He also conjectures that Lambertus Batavus was Captain of a Ship in the Dutch Service, and consequently a Protestant, and that his Book taught the Art of Sailing in all parts of the World. At last he saith that the most expert in Affairs of this Nature could not hitherto discover any thing concerning this Book at Amsterdam. (c) ipso (libro) necdum reperto, licet ab ejusdem rerum peritissimis Amstelodami quæsitus sit. I never met with any Person who had heard of this Book, nor have I found the Title of it in any Catalogue.

(A) He was admitted into the French Academy.] Mr. Esprit and he were admitted unto it on the same day. Mr. Balzac Writ on this Subject to his Friend Mr. Chapelain thus: (d) I rejoyce at the Academy's new acquest of the Philosopher——who indeed is a fine Gentleman and doth not want Wit, tho' he for the most part makes use of that of others. I observe here by the way that Moreri, when he saith, that la Mothe le Vayer was one of the first admitted into the Academy, is mistaken. For that cannot be said of a Man elected (e) in the place of a dead Academick.

(B) His being suspected of having no Religion.] Patin shall be my Evidence " (f) Mr. de la Mothe le Vayer was lately called to Court, and made " Preceptor to the Duke of Anjou the King's " Brother. He is about 60 Years old, of a mid- " dle stature, as much a Stoick as any Man in the " World; he is one who wou'd be praised him- " self but never praises any Body, fantastical and " capricious, suspected also of the Spiritual Vice " with which Diagoras and Protagoras were taint- " ed." Patin wrote this Letter the 13. of July 1649.

(C) His preferment to the place (designed for him) of Preceptor to his Majesty.] Moreri says that he was Preceptor to the King for a Year: But I dont believe it; for the Learned Naudé informs me of some things which contradict that Opinion. He tells us: " (g) I have also been " always persuaded, that the Choice of Men was " one of the most difficult things at Court. But I " was throughly convinced of it when the Question " was put who should be Preceptor to the King; for " the intention of the Queen and the Ministers " being to commit that Charge to one of the " ablest, most Famous, and esteemed persons in " France, they first cast their Eyes on Mr. de la Motte le Vayer, as on him whom Cardinal Richelieu had designed for that post, induced thereto " as well by the excellent Book which he had " writ about the Education of the Dauphin, as " on Account of the Reputation he had acquired " by his many other Writings of being the French " Plutarch. But the Queen having resolved never " to bestow that place on a Married Man, they " were necessarily obliged to think of another; " which was Mr. Aubert, Abbot of Saint Remy, " Principal of the College of Laon, Canon of that " City, and Regius Professor of the Greek Tongue " of whose polite Manners, Probity, Learning, and " Facility of expressing himself in the Latin and " French Language no Man can doubt modo caput " habeat extra cucurbitam. But neither he, nor Mr. " Gassendi the only Oracle in our time of Phi- " losophy, Mathematicks and Astronomy, and of " whatever is excellent in the most Sublime Sci- " ences; nor also Mr. Rigaud, tho' the Coriphæus " of our Humanists, and of a Capacity universal- " ly known to extend to all other Sciences; af- " ter having been put to the Tryal without " knowing any thing of it, did not stand it so " well as the Abbot de Beaumont, Doctor of Divi- " nity and at present worthy Bishop of Rodez, " who was also preferred to another of the most " Shining lights of the Clergy, because not being " inferior to any of the preceding, he had some- " other qualities, which turned the balance on his " side." The Reason (h) which I have advanced against those who pretend that the Dialogues of Orasius Tubero were the occasion of our Vayer's being excluded from this Charge, seems to me demonstrative; for tho' 'tis usual to take a greater care of a Young King's Education, than of his Brother's, yet they would never give a Precepter to a King's Brother, whom they wou'd not have intrusted with the King's Charge, for fear of an impious Education. If there had been no other Reason, la Mothe le Vayer had been chosen Preceptor to Lewis the XIV. notwithstanding his Dialogues, as well as to the Duke of Anjou: For since it was judged that so Wise a Man would carefully avoid instilling the Libertinism of Orasius Tubero into would not have entrusted the King's only Brother to his care. The World was surpriz'd that so wise a Man (D) should write so very freely on Obscene Subjects, but they were just enough at the same time not to draw any Conclusion from thence to the prejudice of his Morals: So true it is that the Publick is not always Rash, Blind

---

* These Names, and those of Tubertus Ocella, under which he disguis'd himself upon some occasion relate to the signification of la Mothe le Vayer, or Voyer.

(a) Daniel. Papebrochius elucidat. historica actorum in Controversia Carmelitica pag. 150. See also the 1. Part of his answer art. 11. n. 240. 241.

(b) Id. ib. pag. 153.

(c) Id. ib.

(d) Pellisson, Hist. de l'Acad. Françoise, p. m. 228.

(e) Balzac's 1st. letter of the 4. Book to Chapelain page 149. 150. Dutch Edit. 1661. That letter is dated the 4. of January 1639.

(e) See Pellisson. ubi supra.

(f) Patin, letter 22. pag. 97. & 98. of the 1. Vol.

(g) Naudé Dialogue de Mascurat, pag. 575.

(h) In the Text of this Article.

into the Young Duke, 'twas more reasonable to conclude that he never durst presume to inspire it into the Young Monarch. Cardinal Mazarin knew perfectly well that a Philosopher, who by I know not what thread of ratiocination is led to Pyrrhonism in Religion, is a Man of a clearly different Character from a Man who becomes impious out of Brutality and Debauchery. Such a Philosopher, in all particulars like la Mothe le Vayer, would be very uneasy, that Persons liable to make an ill use of his Opinions should ever imbibe them. He would always be so discreet as to keep them from Youth, and much more from a Prince whose solid Piety may extremely contribute to the publick Happiness.

What Moreri says that la Mothe le Vayer was Preceptor to his Majesty for the space of one Year, is affirmed * by Mr. Pellisson: And we find in another Writer † that la Mothe le Vayer began to exercise that Function in May 1652. and that he was chosen by the Queen Mother her self being already Preceptor to the King's Brother. Tho' Mr. Pellisson Mentions only one Year, it cannot be inferred from thence, that this Function lasted no longer. We can only infer from it that it had lasted but one Year, when he spoke of it, that is, when he published his History of the French Academy in 1653. However it be, this confirms what I have said against those, who believed that la Mothe le Vayer was excluded from that place upon the Account of the Dialogues of Orasius Tubero.

(D) So very freely on obscene Subjects] There are some very merry thoughts, and very smutty expressions in the Dialogues of Orasius Tubero: But perhaps they are nothing if Compared with the (b) 3d and (c) 4th Days of the Hexameron rustique. His other Books contain nothing like this, tho' in certain places by way of Quotation or otherwise he expresses himself somewhat Cynically. He seems to have Apologized for himself two ways. 1. By making it appear (d) that Seneca, Dion Chrysostome and St. Augustin have inserted in their Works some things so obscene and so filthy, that there is scarce any Body but is offended at it; and yet (e) the first is acknowledged the most austere Moralist of the Romans, the Second——the wonder of his Age, and the third for one of the principal Doctors of the Church. 2. By establishing as a Maxim, (f) That a Man's Books are no evidence of his Inclinations, and that it is impossible to form a good Judgment of the Manners of any Man by his Writings. Let us see what he offers in confirmation of this Thesis. (g) If we are obliged to Condemn all those Authors who have chosen very obscene Subjects for their Theme, not only Ausonius's Cento and the Hendecasyllabick Verses of Pliny the Younger would defame them to perpetuity; but Plato himself and Xenophon, would be put to a great deal of Trouble to excuse the Liberty which they have allowed themselves in their Compositions. We might further add, that generally this would occasion the most extravagant Judgments in the World on all Authors.

> Accius (1) esset atrox, conviva Terentius esset, > Essent pugnaces, qui fera bella canunt.

The Falshood of this way of arguing formerly influenced Timæus to assert (2) that Homer and Aristotle were great Gluttons, the last having frequently treated of the seasoning of Eatables, and the first frequently used the Word δαιτρεύειν, which implies to distribute Meats. And if such consequences are just, as Virgil must of Necessity pass for a Soldier, and Dioscorides for an infamous poisoner; so the pious Meditations of Aretin will prove his Sanctity, and the fine (h) Sentences of Seneca concerning Poverty will oblige us to believe him necessitous, notwithstanding the six Millions of Gold in cash, and the Eight Hundred Thousand Livres Annual estate which he is said to have enjoyed.

La Mothe la Vayer's Maxim generally considered is very true: The Judgment to be passed on a Man's Morals from his Writings would be false on a Thousand occasions. Sallust is an Example which may be added to the former. What he says "(i) against the corruption and disorders of his Age could not be better expressed by any other: but he should have left that to Cato, or to some other Persons of a rigid Virtue, who were Zealous for the Ancient Discipline: And in my Opinion a Declamation against Luxury and Irregularity is not less Incongruous in the History of Sallust, who was reprimanded for Debauchery by the Censor in a full Senate, and twice accused of Adultery before the Prætor, than an invective against the ambition of Ruling would be in Cæsar's Commentaries." See how Cicero rallies Clodius's (k) Oration against the Negligence of the Romans in their Divine Service. The World hath always been, and is at present full of Persons who declame against Vice, and are themselves very Immoral; who are grave and severe in their Books, and very loose in their Conduct. And we should then be finely deceived, if we should judge of their Morals by their Writings. But may we justly say by the rule of Contraries, that there are some persons whose Morals are stricter than their Writings? Yes, I believe we may: But it more rarely happens that an Author allows himself a large liberty in his Writings and but a little in his Manners, than that he indulges himself with a large scope in his Manners, and takes but a very little freedom in his Books. The reason of this difference is very obvious; for he that can perform the most, can also perform the least, but he who is capable of performing the least cannot perform the most. What is more easy than to declaim in Verse or Prose against the Irregularities of the Age, and what is more difficult than to avoid sharing some part of them? A Wise Man then hath the hardest Task; it is not then very difficult for him to instruct by the productions of his Pen, for this is infinitely easier than that. But it doth not follow that a Man who can write very Edifying and Religious Books, clean and free from all immoral Licence, can live as regular. This is infinitely harder than the other.

To come more directly to the thing in hand. Catullus and Ovid, whose Verses were so impure, lived as they wrote. Their Debaucheries with Women were excessive. The same may be affirmed of the French Poets who Composed the Parnasse Satyrique, and of several Italian Poets whose Poems are very Filthy. And this Sentence is very true.

> Raro moribus exprimit Catonem
> Quisquis versibus exprimit Catullum.

But by allowing all this we do not thereby ruin la Mothe la Vayer's Apology; for there is a vast difference betwixt 1. The relating Debaucheries committed by ones self, praising, and applauding them, and exhorting the Readers to an imitation: And 2. the relating gallant Adventures in terms a little too lively and natural, growing very gay in the recital, tho' one condemns or disapproves those Actions; and discussing a point of (l) Doctrine, or a Mythological Reflection by Phrases which represent Impurities. The first of these is utterly Inexcusable and Infamous and ought to be severely Punished. But the second is perhaps only a witty Diversion, and naturally affords no reason to make any Inferences prejudicial to the Author's Morals. It is this that saves le Vayer.

I shall take occasion to offer, that we ought not universally to condemn all those Poets as unchaste in their Lives whose Verses are immodest. Catullus doth not deserve to be comprehended in the Apology which he made for them: He too much exceeds all bounds in most of his Poems, and even in the very Epigrams in which he pretends to justify himself. There is enough in it to condemn him.

> Pædicabo (m) ego vos, & irrumabo,
> Aureli pathice, & cinæde Furi:
> Qui me ex versiculis meis putatis
> Quod sint molliculi, parum pudicum,
> Nam castum esse decet pium poetam
> Ipsum. Versiculos nihil necesse est:

Qui

ces that may be drawn from a Man's Writings as to his Morals

(i) Father le Moine Discours de l'histoire, pag. 185.

(k) Cicero in Orat. de Haruspicum responsis.

(l) See in the Article of Lucretius what has been said in his Vindication.

(m) Catullus, Epigr. 16.

Blind and Biassed in their Judgments! This Subject affords a favourable opportunity of answering a Question, lately proposed to a learned Journalist, concerning (E) John Qui tum denique habent salem, ac leporem,

Si sunt molliculi, ac parum pudici,
Et quod pruriat incitare possunt,
Non dico pueris, sed his pilosis,
Qui duros nequeunt movere lumbos.

Ovid, Martial, and several others ought to be excluded the benefit of this justification, tho' they protest their (a) Innocence, and the purity of their Lives in the midst of all the impurities of their Muse. Beroaldus hath in vain endeavoured to excuse them, and made himself Ridiculous when he said that if those Books ought to be Condemned which contain criminal Galantries; the canonical Scriptures ought to be treated in like manner: (b) Si scripta omnia quibus amores, vel amatoria continentur sunt cum suis scriptoribus repudianda, repudientur Canonicæ scripturæ, hoc est instrumenti veteris luculenta illa volumina, quibus nihil sacratius, nihil religiosius, nihil mysticum magis æstimatur. This is wretched stuff, and doth not at all affect the reason for which these Poets are condemned (c). But if those already excepted do not deserve the mentioned Benefit, there are yet several who deserve to be included in it. Their Lascivious Poems were only diverting efforts of Wit: The contagion of these impure Ideas never spread so far as to corrupt their Minds: They made those Verses to display their ingenious Thoughts; they could not resist the Temptation of expressing themselves in such a manner as would make their Genius applauded: They were willing to accommodate themselves to the taste of a vast number of Readers, who find in it an agreeable Tartness, and Charms with which they are ravished. They had indeed done very well to have resisted this Temptation, tanti non erat esse te disertum: But they were only words; their Morals preserved their Integrity, and what an Emperour said of (d) Voconius is applicable to them, Lascivus versu, mente pudicus erat: This he would never have ventured to say (e), adds Apuleius, if too Licentious Verses were a proof of Lasciviousness. Ausonius having occasion to prevent the Suspicions which might be formed against his Wisdom on account of his Cento nuptialis, alledges several Persons irreproachable in their Conduct, who had made very bold in their Verse: (f) Sed quum legeris, adesto mihi, adversum eos, qui ut Juvenalis ait, Curios simulant, & Bacchanalia vivunt, ne forte mores meos spectent, de carmine.

Lasciva est nobis pagina, vita proba:

Ut Plinius dicit. Meminerint autem, quippe eruditi, probatissimo viro Plinio in poëmatis lasciviam, in moribus constitisse censuram: prurire opusculum Sulpicii, nec frontem caperare: esse Apulejum in vita Philosophum, in epigrammatis amatorem, in præceptis omnibus extare severitatem, in epistolis ad Caerelliam subesse petulantiam. He besides mentions Plato, Annianus, Lævius, Evenus, Menander (g) and Virgil. Note that a Reader ought not to judge of Poets by himself; I mean that he ought not to think that that piece which in Reading hath an ill effect upon his Mind, made the like impression on the Poet who wrote it. Several of them accustom themselves to these thoughts, and are touched with nothing but the poetical ideas with which they are Cloathed. Constitution and Habit have created in them the same insensibility, which Marigni ascribes to a Governor of the Spanish Netherlands with regard to the fine Ladies of the Court of Brussels. The Arch Duke, saith he, (h) seconded by his sole Virtue resists the powerful Charms of all the Beauties of which I speak——He looks on them as fires which dart refulgent light, but do not inflame him.

Comme dans un jardin rempli de fleurs nouvelles,
Dont l'éclat fait des yeux le plus noble plaisir,
Un Sage curieux regarde les plus belles;
Mais sans songer à les cueillir.

This Prince looks on all these Miracles just as he does on the Pictures of his Gallery, and tho' the Queen (i) of the North lay six Weeks not above 4 paces from his apartment, as if he had drank of Merlin's enchanted Fountain, the passion which often disturbs the Repose of the bravest Heroes, does not at all affect him (k).

Dorme vicino a lui la donna bella,
Fusse altro, fusse l'acqua di Merlino
Non è quel ch'esser suole il Paladino.

You see some Poets make amorous Verses, in which they express themselves broadly, tho' Age hath rendred 'em as Cold as Ice. Ought not what they say to pass for a sportive effort of wit? Read Pontanus's Hendecasyllabick Verses, Written to a Lady who shewed her Breast, and selected from several somewhat less modest.

Pradico (l) tege candidas papillas,
Nec quæras rabiem ciere amantum,
Me quem frigida congelat senecta,
Irritas male, calfacisque, quare
Pradico tege candidas papillas,
Et pectus strophio tegente vela.
Nam quid lecteolus sinus, & ipsas
Præ te fers sine linteo papillas?
An vis dicere basia papillas?
Et pectus nitidum suaviare?
Vis num dicere, tange, tange, tracta?
Te ne incedere nudulis papillis?
Nudo pectore te ne deambulare?
Hoc est ad Venerem vocare amantes.
Quare contege candidas papillas,
Et pectus strophio decente vesti,
Aut, senex licet, involabo in illas,
Ut possim juvenis tibi videri.

There are some Authors who are more scrupulous in the choice of modest expressions, for fear the contrary shou'd confirm the Report which runs concerning their Manners. Others on the contrary emboldened by their Virtuous Life and the good Opinion which the World hath entertained of their Wisdom, morum fiducia, are not so sollicitous in this particular, and allow themselves too large a scope in order to divert their Readers. Probably Mr. de la Mothe le Vayer was of this Number: He very well knew that he could alledge for his excuse (m) in case of necessity, (n) Verba mea arguuntur, adeo factorum innocens sum. Let us conclude with considering the Stupendious diversity of Tempers and Characters observable amongst Men. There are some who nicely Scruple to say, what they make no difficulty of Acting: Others dare not commit what they freely venture to say. " (o) A certain " Writer declares that those who discover so much " Zeal in leaving out such places in the Classicks " offend Chastity, are not always so sober as those " Ancient Authors.

" Nimirum Criticus facere id quàm scribere mavult,
" Quod mavult vates scribere quàm facere. (p) "

(E) Concerning John della Casa.] I have already said that several Italian Poets ought not to be admitted to justify the obscenities of their Poems by this Rule, Lasciva est nobis pagina, vita proba. I shall say nothing in particular against (q) Calcagnini; but Molza, Mauro, John della Casa, &c. deserve a sentence of Condemnation. Not but that the Judgment passed on the last by incompetent Judges, who have not Read him, is somewhat too severe; and as we ought to do justice to every Body, I am obliged to declare that they have wrong'd him in imputing to him a Book de Laudibus Sodomiæ. This pretended Poem is nothing but the Capitolo del forno, where under the Allegory of an oven, John della Casa describes the lewd intercourse betwixt Men and Women. These sort of Allegories were then in Fashion; one borrowed the Metaphor of a Fig, another of a Bean. What is most horrible in John della Casa is that having observed that certain lewd Youths began to despise the common Oven, he adds that for his part he was not so nice, and that he seldom baked any where else. Which was to own that sometimes at least he committed the unnatural Sin.

Tennero (r) il Forno gia le donne sole.
Oggi mi par che certi Garzonacci
L'abbian mandate poco men ch' al Sole.
Spazzinlo a posta lor, nessun non vacci.
Dicon pur ch' egli è umido e mal netto.
E sono ben cagion quelle sue stracci.
Io per me rare volte altrove il metto:
Con tutto che'l mio pan sia piccolino.
E'l forno delle Donne un po grandetto.
Bencbe chi fa questo mestier divino,

Si

(a) Crede mihi mores distant a carmine nostro: Vita verecunda est, Musa jocosa mihi. Ovidius Tristium v. 353. Innocuos censura potest permittere lusus: Lasciva est nobis pagina, vita proba Martialis epigr. 5. lib. 5.

(b) Philippus Beroaldus, Orat. habita in principio enarrationis Propertii, continente laudes amoris.

(c) Consult Raderus upon Martial, epigr, 5. lib. 1.

(d) Hadrianus, apud Apulejum apolog. pag. m. 281.

(e) Quod nunquam ita dixisset, si forent lepidiora carmina argumentum impudicitiæ habenda Apul. ibid.

(f) Auson. in Centone nuptiali, sub fin. p. m. 515. 516. See Ausonius Remark E.

(g) Quid ipsum Menandrum? Quid Comicos omnes? Quibus severa vita est, & læta materia. Auson. ibid. (h) Marigny in his Letters Printed in the Year 1658. (i) That is Christina Queen of Sweden.

(n) Cremutius Cordus apud Tacitum Ann. lib. 4. cap. 34.

(o) Nouvelles de la Republ. des Lettres, October 1686, art. 3. of the Catalogue of New Books pag. 1222.

(p) In the Remark A of the Article Virgil, I shall quote [illegible]

(q) Among his Latin Poems Printed with those of John Baptist Pigna and Lewis Ariosto at Venice 1553, in which there are some very obscene.

(r) John della Casa apud Menage, Anti-Baillet, tom. 2. pag. 15[illegible]

John della Caſa, and his deteſtable Capitolo del Forno. La Mothe le Vayer is a great Inſtance of the ſmall Portion of Happineſs we taſte in this Life; for whatever Reaſon he might ſeem to have, to be contented with his State, he would not have return'd (F) into the World, on condition of being oblig'd to act the ſame part which Providence had impoſed on him. He afflicted himſelf extremely at the loſs of

Sà ben trovar dove l'anno naſcoſto
Colà diritto un certo fornellino.

Mr. Menage cites this ſcrap of the Capitolo del forno in a French book which he publiſhed at the Hague in 1688. This ought to be obſerv'd, to prevent ſome Cavillers ſaying, that I alledge things which no body before knew, and which ought to be kept unknown. Let us now come to the queſtion which occaſions this Remark.

A certain Perſon (a) wrote from Utrecht to Mr. Baſnage de Beauval, that he had read in the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, for the Month of June 1685, That John della Caſa finding himſelf galled in a Satyr, anſwered it in Latin Verſes, where he denyed the Fact, affirming, "That he never pretended to praiſe any "thing beſides the enjoyment of Women. But I "would fain ſee them, adds that Anonymous Perſon "of Utrecht, not being able to imagine that the "Archbiſhop of Benevento was capable of denying "the Fact with ſo much Impudence; for it is not "long ſince I ſaw and read this infamous Italian "piece, Entitl'd, Capitolo di M. Giovanni della Caſa ſopra el forno: And moſt certainly it is not "concerning the uſe of Women as Women, that he "intended to ſpeak." Since Daniel Franeus's Book, where the Latin Verſes of that Archbiſhop are recited, (b) is ſo hard to be found, I here advertiſe the Reader, that he may read them in Mr. Menage's. (c) Anti-Baillet. It is beyond diſpute that Caſa denyed that he had ever praiſed the Sin againſt Nature.

——Obſcœni nihil
Scripſiſſe me ſcitote: namque tunc quoque
Feſtiva nos à turpibus ſecrivimus,
A mollibuſque impura. Cumque verſibus
Laudavimus Furnum, haud mores laudavimus:
Quod ille ait per maximam calumniam:
Sed feminas planè: ut videre Carmine
Ex ipſo adhuc poteſtis.

You ſee he appeals for evidence to the Poem it ſelf for which he was accuſed. Moſt certainly, are we told in the Hiſtoire des Ouvrages des Sçavans, it is not concerning the uſe of Women as Women that he intended to ſpeak. But we may anſwer that moſt certainly his Capitolo was only made for that Uſe. It is true that he inſerted into his Poem the Obſervation which I have cited, that certain great Boys were diſguſted at it, and hunted after other Pleaſures, in which he very ſeldom imitated them. He doth not praiſe thoſe great Boys nor himſelf, for ſometimes imitating them; wherefore he cannot be juſtly accuſed of praiſing that abominable Crime. But the Poem and its Author are nevertheleſs execrable; for tho' the Epithete of Meſtier divino falls (d) on the venereal Exercise in general, and not on Sodomy in particular, the Libertiniſm and Profanation is ſuch as cannot be ſufficiently deteſted. "Some (e) ex"cuſe him by Laſciva eſt nobis pagina, vita proba eſt, "and Laſcivus verſu, mente pudicus erat. And it is pro"bable that Caſa here calumniates himſelf, in imitation "of ſeveral other Poets (f) —— But of all the ex"cuſes alledged for Caſa, on account of this Capitolo del Forno, the beſt in my Opinion is, that "he ſaith he repaired this Fault by a virtuous "Life."

———Moribus,
Induſtria, pudore, continentia,
Laſciviam nos Carminis correximus
Illius: emendavimuſque ſeriis Jocos.

Theſe Verſes are part of the Latin Poem which that curious Perſon of Utrecht deſires to ſee. In which there are alſo others wherein John della Caſa confeſſes his Fault, but too faintly, and endeavours to excuſe himſelf on account of his Youth, and by the cuſtom of good Poets, tho' on all other accounts, virtuous Men.

Annis ab hinc triginta, & amplius, ſcio
Nonnulla me, fortaſſe non caſtiſſimis
Luſiſſe verſibus: quod ætas tunc mea
Rerum me elegit inſcia, & ſemper fuit
Licentiæ gravis, conceſſu omnium,
Juventa: quod fecere & alii tum boni.

The only excuſe is that which Menage likes beſt. Let us obſerve by the by, that there are few Subjects where the boldneſs of Authors in copying one another, without ever conſulting the Original, is more clearly viſible, than in this. Mr. Menage hath cited ſeveral who accuſed Caſa, but he hath forgotten a very great number; and I wonder he did not know this place of a Book which has been read by every body: (g) John de la Caſa, Archbiſhop of Benevento, wrote a Book in praiſe of Sodomy, calling it a Divine Work, and ſaying that he found a great deal of pleaſure in it, and uſed no other ſort of Venery. Obſerve that the moſt illuſtrious Magliabechi having deteſted the Infamous Paſſages of the Capitolo del Forno, points out ſeveral other Italian Poets whoſe Works are equally horrible, or even more execrable than this; of which the Proteſtants have nevertheleſs taken no notice: whence he concludes, that Vergerio's perſonal hatred againſt Caſa, was the ſource of their Complaints ſo often copied. (h) Io non intendo di far qui l'Apologiſta del Caſa: troppo chiare ſono l'infamità che ſi leggono in quel ſuo ſporco Capitolo, &c. Contuttociò, come ò detto, fu ſua gran diſgrazzia l'aver per nemico il Vergerio. Ognun vede le orribili infamità nel medeſimo genere che ſi trovano nel Berni nel Capitolo a M. Antonio da Bibiena, e nell' altro Capitolo ſopra un Garzone, ed in mille altri luoghi: in Curzio da Marignolle: nel Ruſſoli: in Marco Lamberti: nel Perſiani: ed in cento e mille altri noſtri Poeti Fiorentini; per tralaſciare altri quaſi infiniti di altre patrie. The Poets were not the only Perſons who let looſe at this rate; but Proſe was alſo made uſe of to the ſame beſtial end by ſome Authors of that Country: Witneſs the Oration of Heliogabalus compoſed by Leonard Aretinus (i). All theſe Authors are very much to blame, and ſo much the more inexcuſable, becauſe they knew the weakneſs of their Readers. They were not of a Country where Nature is proof againſt temptations, but where it is eaſily heated; for which reaſon Poggius envyed the Swiſs, the Honeſty and Sincerity which he obſerved amongſt them. He could not ſufficiently admire the Baths of Baden, where the Men and Women, Boys and Girls were bathing promiſcuouſly without raiſing any ill Suſpicions. (k) Poggius Florentinus de Thermis Badenſibus Helveticorum admirabundus (l) ſcripſit ad Leonb. Aretinum, in iis pueros puellaſque viros & fœminas ſimul conſpici: ſæpe fœminas nudas nudo viro obviam ire, nulla inhoneſti ſuſpicione: maſculos campeſtribus ſeu femoralibus, fœminas linteis indui veſtibus, crurum tenus à latere ſciſſis: neque collum, neque brachia, neque lacertos tegere, &c. Et addit poſtea: Cernunt viri uxores tractari, cernunt alteri colloqui. Eſt quidem illis ſolatium, nihil his commoventur, nihil admirantur: omnia BONA MENTE fieri putant, neque eſt ex iis, qui Zelotypus eſſet: ô mores noſtris (Italicis) diſſimiles, qui ſemper res in deteriorem partem excipimus; qui uſque adeo calumniis delectamur & obtrectationibus, ut, ſi quid videmus per ullam conjecturam, ſtatim pro manifeſto crimine atteſtemur. Invideo, imo noſtras execror animi perverſitates, &c.

(F) He would not have return'd into the World.] His Words are, (m) "Life alone ſeems to me "ſo indifferent, to ſay nothing farther to its "diſadvantage, that far from ever deſiring "to renew the Race, if put to my choice, "I would not change the few remaining Calamitous days in an Age ſo far advanced as mine is, "for the numerous Years, expected by an infinite "number of young Perſons, all whoſe Pleaſures "I well know. I could really ſwear to this "as well as Cardan, if I did not think it more "to the purpoſe to cite his own Expreſſions, to "which I ſubſcribe, tho' according to his manner "of writing, they are more judicious than elegant: "Nos, per Deum, fortunam noſtram exiguam, atque in ætate ſeni, cum ditiſſimo juvene, sed imperito,

(a) See the Hiſtoire des Ouvrages des Sçavans, May 1686. pag. 427.

(b) Hiſt. des Ouvrages des Sçavans ib.

(c) Anti Baillet ubi ſupra, pag. 102.

(d) Mr. Menage ubi ſupra, pag. 105. has theſe words: "Benche "chi fa "queſto "meſtier "divino, "ought to "be un"derſtood, "accord"ing to "ſound "Gram"mar, of "the love "of Wo"men, and "not of "Boys. "See what "goes be"fore and "what "follows.

(e) Menage ibid, pag. 110, 111.

(f) Mr. Menage quotes here the Verſes of Catullus, which you have ſeen above in the Remark D.

(g) Sainte Aldegonde, Tableau des differens 2. part, tome 2. chap. 6.

(h) Magliabechi, letter to Mr. Bigot in the Anti-Baillet, ubi ſupra, pag. 152, 153.

(i) Extat in monumentis Deſiderii Eraſmi Roterodami ex recenſione editis, oratio invitatoria Heliogabali Romanorum Imperatoris, habita in concione ad meretrices, quam à Leonhardo Aretino compoſitam plerique credunt. Sacra Eleuſinia patefacta, pag. 21.

(k) Matthias Berneggerus, Quæſt. Miſcellan. 90. ex Taciti Germania.

(l) That Letter is the 425 among thoſe of Æneas Silvius.

(m) La Mothe le Vayer, Letter 134. pag. 204. of the 12 vol.

of his only Son *, his (G) Grief diſorder'd him ſo much that he married again, tho he was above 78 Years old, and had no reaſon to deplore the loſs of his Firſt Wife. The Paſſage where he acquaints us with this laſt particular, is (H) very favourable to thoſe who aſſert, that the Conjugal Vow of Fidelity is “ non commutaremus.„ I ſuppoſe with great probability a thing, which he hath not exactly expreſſed; which is, that the race of life which he would not begin again, would be the ſame which he had almoſt finiſhed. From whence I conclude that there is ſcarce any part which to a Man of Judgment ſeems worth repeating on the Stage of the World; for that which was allotted to La Mothe le Vayer, was the moſt deſirable that could be imagined in his rank. He wanted nothing that was agreeable, if we may judge of it by the outſide. La Mothe le Vayer was born in the Metropolis of his Country, an advantage which all Learned Men and ſeveral others would beſtow on themſelves if in their Gift. He was very well educated (a) by a learned Father, whoſe Merit and Employments (b) render'd him conſiderable. He was loved and conſidered by the two Cardinals who governed France ſucceſſively: Splendid Titles, and honourable Poſts he did not want; for he was Counſellor of State in ordinary, and Preceptor to the King's only Brother. He diſtinguiſh'd himſelf gloriouſly amongſt the Authors, and deſerved a place in the French Academy. The great number of Books which he Publiſhed, met with a very great demand. They were ſeveral times re-printed, and afterwards collected together. He was as rich as his Condition required. He was a little inclin'd to (c) forbidden Pleaſures during the heat of the beginning of his Youth; but he ſoon extricated himſelf, and afterwards conſtantly led a pure life, which made him be looked on as a rigid (d) Follower of the moſt perfect Morality, inſomuch that he acquired a very particular eſteem on that Account. It is a Character of greater perfection to be always wiſe than to become ſo by way of amendment; but the Converſion to Wiſdom is more difficult than the keeping in her Paths without ever turning out of the way. There was then in this particular of La Mothe le Vayer's life ſomething very agreeable. This made him remember the Violence which he made uſe of to renounce the Pleaſures which he was very well acquainted with: A Violence perhaps greater than to abſtain from thoſe Pleaſures which one hath never taſted. Beſides, was it not agreeable to find in one's Lot the ſucceſſive Enjoyment of the Pleaſures of the Body and Soul? This was more likely to tempt him to accept of the repetition of his condition, than if he had been deprived of the pleaſures of Youth. Yet neither this, nor all the other Allurements of this Author's Life, tho' ſo Charming, could engage him to deſire the repetition of his part. This is a Proof that it was intermixed with Croſſes, of which we are ignorant, which turned the Scale on the ſide of Evil. But if Misfortune fell in upon ſo many ſeeming happineſſes; if it poiſoned them with a loathſome bitterneſs, ſo as to make him deſpiſe Life as a Burthenſome Honour, which he would not accept, if he had the power of refuſal; What can we think of the condition of ſo many Perſons, who ſeem to us to be deſtitute of almoſt all the Cauſes of Humane Happineſs, and expoſed to a thouſand Diſgraces? A great many aſſert, that except ſome brutal Wretches, no old Man would return into the World on condition to be obliged to act the ſame part over again. We are indeed unwilling to die, we would always live, we flatter our ſelves that things will mend; but the remembrance of what is paſt, the Good and Evil things of this World being duly weighed, does not permit to deſire to run again in the ſame career. The Antients feigned that the Souls that were to return into the World, paſſed through the River of oblivion, as if without that there were reaſon to fear they ſhould grow reſtive. On this Head, ſee (e) the new Letters againſt Maimbourg.

(G) At the loſs of his only Son, his Grief diſorder'd him ſo much that he married again.] To this purpoſe, Guy Patin furniſhes me with two neceſſary paſſages. “(f) We have here an honeſt Gentleman “ greatly afflicted. It is Mr. de la Mothe le Vayer, “ a celebrated Author, and formerly Preceptor to the “ Duke of Orleans, aged 78 Years. He had an only “ Son about 35 Years old, who fell ill of a continual “ Fever, to whom Dr. Eſprit, Dr. Brayer, and Dr. Bodineau, have given Emetick Wine three times, and ſent “ him to the place from whence there is no return. This is extracted from a Letter dated the 26th of September 1664. Three Months after Patin wrote another Letter, in which are the following words: (g) Mr. de la Mothe le Vayer, to comfort himſelf for the death of his only Son, is this day married, being 78 years old, to the Daughter of M. de la Haye, formerly Ambaſſador at Conſtantinople, who is at leaſt Forty. She ſtaid long enough to be a Sibyl. Non invenit vatem, ſed virum, ſed vetulum. Obſerve, that Patin makes him 78 years old in the Year 1664. This doth not at all agree with what he ſaith in another Letter, that in 1649, he was aged about 60 Years. Mr. de Viſé's Noveliſts make it a round Number; they aſſure us that he married when eighty Years of age. The death of Mr Godeau (i) gave occaſion to ſpeak of that of Mr. de la Mothe le Vayer, who hath thereby left a ſecond Vacancy in the French Academy. He was a very learned Man, richly ſtored with Polite Learning, and hath left the Publick fifteen or ſixteen Volumes of his Works, by which he acquired a vaſt Reputation. He was Preceptor to the King's only Brother, and at the age of fourſcore, married Madam de la Haye. After which he lived ſeveral Years. Thus the Noveliſts diſcourſed about it, and as they ſaid nothing but what is true, I have nothing further to add on this Subject. The Author of the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres ſticks at 78. I ſhall cite what he ſays ſomewhat at large, becauſe, beſides other particulars, we are thereby informed, that this Marriage was a weakneſs which the Philoſophers will never forgive him. Mr. (k) Petit diſcharges his indignation on ſome Learned Men, who imagin that the Deſcription of the (l) Nymphs Cave, denotes the characteriſtick part of Women. He ſaith, that after the War which they have declared againſt the Sciences, and Humane Reaſon, nothing could ſtop their fury from attempting the Ruin of polite Learning by beſpattering Homer. 'Tis eaſie to perceive that this is levelled at the fourth day of the Hexameron ruſtique of La Mothe le Vayer, a famous Pyrrhoniſt. Indeed it had been better, if in his old age, he had not Printed ſuch a Book as this, in which, notwithſtanding his prudent care, in ſeveral places, it cannot be deny'd that there are too many impure Thoughts. But this is not the only thing which is cenſured in the laſt Years of this venerable Old Man, whoſe Virtue had ſo ſucceſsfully conducted him in the Paths of the Antient Sages: He married again at 78 Years of age; a weakneſs which the Philoſophers will never forgive him. Becauſe all Learned Readers will deſire to ſee this Indignation of Mr. Petit, as it is vented in the Original, and perhaps may not have his Work de Sibylla, I ſhall here cite his Words: (m) Sed & prope pudicoſa quorumdam interpretamenta exploduntur, qui iſta imagine antri Nympharum uterum & pudendum muliebre ænigmatice ab Homero deſignatum cenſent: quibus cum opponitur duarum ejus antri portarum deſcriptio, eo amentiæ & furoris procedunt, ut ad adverſa & averſa ſeu poſtica veneris flagitioſa divortia confugere non erubeſcant. Adeo impudentes ut non vereantur poetarum omnium principem, literarum parentem, ingeniorum fontem, ad hæc transferre nefanda. Nempe hoc illis ad extremam vecordiam reſtabat, ut qui rationi humanæ & ſcientiis bellum indixiſſent, literas quoque omnes, infamato earum principe, quantum in ipſis eſſet, perderent. La Mothe le Vayer's Son was reckon'd amongſt the Learned Abbots; it is to him that 'tis thought Mr. Deſpreaux inſcribed his 4th. Satyr. In the Year 1656 he Publiſh'd a French Tranſlation of Florus, and dedicated it to the Duke of Anjou, the King's only Brother. He ſaith that he Publiſhed this Florus from the Tranſlations which the young Prince had made. This Verſion is accompanied with a Learned and curious Commentary, where Caſſeteau's Tranſlation is very much cenſured. See the Elogies which the Abbot of (n) Villeloin beſtows on the Father and the Son.

(H) The Paſſage —— where he acquaints us that he had no reaſon to deplore (o) the loſs of his firſt Wife, is very favourable to thoſe who aſſert.] Firſt of all I ought to acquaint the Reader that he never charges his Wife with any Amours: He only owns that he was perhaps as ſenſible of the incommodities of Marriage as any Body. In a letter to a Friend who had informed him that a certain Perſon was ſeparated from his Wife, on account of Adultery, he expreſſes himſelf thus. Do

---

(*) He died in 1664.

(a) See la Croix du Maine pag. 84. who calls him Felix de la Mothe le Vayer.

(b) Moreri ſays he was Counſellor to the King, and Subſtitute to the Attorney General in the Parliament of Paris.

(c) See the Hexameron ruſtique, p. 97, 98.

(d) Virtutis veræ cuſtos rigiduſque ſatelles. Horat. Epiſt. 1. lib. 1. We have ſeen that Patin calls him a Stoick.

(e) New Letters againſt Maimbourg's Hiſtory of Calviniſm, p. 722. 719. bis & 768.

(f) Patin's Letter 326. p. 656. of the 2. vol.

(g) Patin, Letter 3[illegible]. of the 3. Tome. It is dated the [illegible] December, 1664.

(h) See the Paſſage of Patin cited in the Remark.

(i) Mercure Galant for the Year 1672. Tome 1. pag. 31. & 32. Dutch Ed.

(k) Nouv. de la Republique des Lettres, October 1686, p. 11[illegible], 11[illegible].

(l) The Author of a Treatiſe of Anonymous, I think, Sacra Eleuſinia patefacta, explains in the ſame manner the Cave of Atalanta. See Ælian Var. Hiſt. lib. 13. c. 1.

(m) Petrus Petitus, de Sibylla lib. 2. cap. [illegible] in fine. p. 23[illegible].

(n) Marolles, Memoires, p. 194.

(o) You'll ſee in the Remark B of the Article Crito who ſhe was.

is not much better obſerved than that of Celibacy. The Reflections he made in

“ (*) Do not expect that I ſhou'd offer you a Panegyrick on a condition of Life, whoſe Inconveniencies I am perhaps not leſs acquainted with than thoſe who are moſt weary of them. I have always taken that Sleep into which God caſt our firſt Father before he preſented him with a Wife, not only for a caution to diſtruſt our own ſight, as a very evil Counſellor in this Affair; but for a Moral Hint, that no Man would ever clog himſelf with that Incumbrance, if the Eyes of his Mind were open enough to foreſee the Inconveniencies to which he ſubjects himſelf, who engages in ſo dangerous a Society. And I never read the firſt Verſe of the tenth Book of Ovid's Metamorphoſis, where he arrayes the God Hymen in a Saffron coloured Robe, “ ——— Croceo velatus amictu,

“ without fancying that the Poet thereby deſigned to expreſs what is ſo Eſſential in Marriage. The cares of a Family with which you charge your ſelf, the ſeveral Blows of Fortune which you render your ſelf liable to, the Inevitable Jealouſy which you will have of your Wife, on account of the Charms you find in her, and the fear of being touched in your Honour, are they not ſufficient cauſes of Jaundice? And is it not a Miraculous thing, if a Conſtitution even the moſt Sanguine or Gay, be not by this means Icterial? But after all we ought to acquieſce to our Deſtiny, and ſubmit to what the wiſeſt Legiſlators have on this occaſion ordered for the beſt. We cannot change their Decrees, and we may render our ſelves yet more Miſerable, by taking a courſe much more dangerous than that already preſcribed to us.” By theſe laſt words he gives us to underſtand that the Inconveniencies of Marriage do not render that State the moſt Miſerable of all conditions of Life; this he had plainly told us in the foregoing Pages. (a) I am very much miſtaken, if this Man doth not find the Remedy which he deſigns to apply to his Misfortune, worſe than the Evil which he believes to be inſupportable; and if at length he doth not find that in ſeveral reſpects Concubinage is ſomething more intolerable than Marriage it ſelf. For it does not ſeem a ſufficient thing to ſay only with the Antients,

Tam (1) malum eſt foris amica, qàm malum eſt uxor domi.

——— He is ridiculous, if he expects a greater intimacy in Libertiniſm, and imagins that he ſhall be more ardently and ſincerely Loved in a ſtate where the Fires are barely Artificial. You, as well as I, have known ſeveral Men more haraſſed in extricating themſelves from the fatiguing Effects of ſuch a Licentious Life as he deſigns, than they could be by all the diſgraces of an unfortunate Marriage. All this is worthy of the Wiſdom and Genius of this great Author. But I proceed to what he ſays more eſſentially proper for the Commentary on my Text.

“ (b) I will not penetrate ſo far as you into the Secrets of this Marriage. It is enough that I tell you that without being a very great Prophet, one might long ſince have foretold this Adventure. No Man ever diſcovered a more fooliſh Paſſion for his Wife, he made Love to her with all the Extravagancies of an enamoured Spark. But this is a great defect in a Wiſe Man, who ought to avoid all ſuch Behaviour; Adulter eſt uxoris amator acrior, and this is; according to Laberius, to make a Cocquet of one's own Wife. And truly it cannot be denied that the Wife I ſpeak of has hitherto behaved herſelf in ſuch a manner, that one may very well believe part of her Husband's Accuſations, without doing her much wrong, or without being too Credulous. And yet what does he charge her with beſides living according to the Mode? Indeed our Manners are at preſent arrived at a very ſtrange Period; and the proſtitution of the Sex, even by thoſe whoſe Honour ſo abſolutely depends on their Conduct, is what is not to be accounted for by Reaſon, nor could any thing but ſeeing it every day make us believe it poſſible. (z) Eo prolapſi mores jam ſunt, ut nemo ad ſuſpicanda adulteria nimium credulus videri poſſit. And the Latin Grammar by its Rules never rendred (Cornu) Horn ſo indeclinable, as our ſenſeleſs Deportment in this reſpect hath at preſent rendred it inevitable by a pleaſant Synonimy.” Do not believe that la Mothe le Vayer is the only Author who thunders out ſuch Terrible and Satyrical Sentences: A vaſt number of other Writers pronounce the ſame Sentence. To mention ſome of the neweſt Books, ſee thoſe which terminate in (c) ana, and thoſe that go by the name of Stories, Letters, Memoirs, Comedies, Novels, &c. They repreſent Lewdneſs like Deucalion's Deluge which overſpread the whole Earth, and like an Evil which Marriage rather heightens than reſtrains.

They induce us to conclude that the time which Seneca mentions is returned upon us, the time I ſay when the multitude of Adultereſſes took off the ſhamefulneſs of that Crime, when conjugal Fidelity was a proof of Uglineſs, and a Husband was for no other reaſon than to excite the Love of a Gallant. Seneca's Deſcription is ſo nervous, that I chooſe rather to Tranſcribe it than Tranſlate it faintly. (d) Non expedit notum omnibus fieri, quam multi ingrati ſint, pudorem enim rei tollet multitudo peccantium: & deſinet eſſe probri loco, commune maledictum. Numquid jam ulla repudio erubeſcit, poſtquam illuſtres quædam ac nobiles fœminæ non conſulum numero, ſed maritorum annos ſuos computant? & exeunt matrimonii cauſſa, nubunt repudii? Tam diu iſtud timebatur, quamdiu rarum erat, quia verò nulla ſine divortio acta ſunt; quod ſæpe audiebant, facere didicerunt. Numquid jam ullius adulterii pudor eſt, poſtquam eò ventum eſt, ut nulla virum habeat, niſi ut adulterum irritet? argumentum eſt deformitatis, pudicitia. Quam invenies tam miſeram, tam ſordidam, ut illi ſatis ſit unum adulterorum par? niſi ſingulis diviſit horas, & non ſufficit dies omnibus? niſi ad alium geſtata eſt, apud alium manſit? Infrunita & antiqua eſt, quæ neſciat, matrimonium vocari unius adulterium ——— horum delictorum jam evanuit pudor, poſtquam res latius evagata EST.

The Champions of Monaſtical Vows boaſt of no ſmall advantage to their cauſe by this, and they pretend that the Vow of Celibacy is as effectual as the Solemn one of conjugal Fidelity. Theſe are two ſorts of Vows, one of which ought to be obſerved as Inviolably as the other; and if one is not better kept than the other, as Practice plainly ſhews, of what advantage would the Abrogation of Monaſtical Rules be? The Monks and Nuns are charged with thouſands and thouſands Incontinencies. Terrible Liſts (e) are made of Baſtards and Abortives, and ſuch other diſorders proceeding from the Celibacy of Eccleſiaſticks. But if thoſe Perſons obliged to Continence by their Vow of a Single Life, ſhould diſengage from any ſuch Tie, would not they fall into worſe Uncleanneſs? Turn your Eyes to what Authors (f) relate of the Abortive Births at Paris: Under the covert of Marriage, exempt from the fear of dreadful Conſequences, to what Lewdneſs do not they abandon themſelves? And if thoſe who have Reaſon to fear the Anxiety which the Fox was reduced to, I mean the neceſſity of being confined, till their Bellies grow as flat as they were before, will notwithſtanding jump in; can we expect any better from thoſe who on the like occaſion lye under no neceſſity to hide themſelves, Marriage Vailing their fault from the Eyes of the World? But whatever you may ſay, in vindication of Monaſtical Vows, you will never be able to evince with all the Proofs which you are pleaſed to cite out of la Mothe le Vayer and a hundred other Authors, that the conjugal Vow of Fidelity is not better obſerved than that of Celibacy, and that Marriage is not an effectual Remedy againſt the Incontinence of a very great number of Perſons. We ought not to ſtretch too far what was ſaid by a very honeſt Man, equally recommendable for his Father's Glory and his own Virtue. In one of the beſt pieces of Chriſtian Morality that we have, Entituled, Of the Peace and Contentment of the Mind, a ſerious, grave, and religious Book, he ſaith, that the Husband whoſe Wife is falſe (g) ought to practiſe the great Remedy againſt irremedia-

(*) La Morale de Vayer, Lettre 86. pag. [illegible] & ſeq. of the [illegible] Vol.

(a) Id. ib. pag. 223, 224.

(1) Laberius.

(b) Id. ib. pag. 222. 223.

(z) Sen. Cont.

(c) As Menagiana, Harlequiniana, Furetieriana, Saintevremoniana.

(d) Seneca, de benefic. lib. 3. cap. 16. pag m. 53. vide etiam ibid lib. 1. cap. 9.

(e) See the Book Intituled, Le Cabinet du Roi de France, dans lequel il y a trois perles precieuſes d'ineſtimable valeur. It was Inſcribed to Henry III. the 1ſt of November 1581. The Reader is there frequently referred to another Book Intituled, La polygamie ſacrée. Theſe two Books are full of horrid things; but there ſeems to be ſome Exaggeration in them.

(f) See the Article Patin, Remark C and D△△.

(g) Peter du Moulin the Son, Traité de la paix de l'ame, Book 3. Ch. 14. pag. 382. Paris 1673.

another place of his Books give us room to imagine that he was experimentally acquainted with the ill side of Marriage, (H Δ) the Broils of the Day, and the manner of composing them at Night, &c. He lived several Years after his second Marriage, his Folly, which is Patience, and that the good Company of so many Honest Men, who are in the same Condition, helps to bear it, and he needs not think it more strange than to wear a fashionable Hat. Once more, this Expression ought not to be extended too far; for the number of those, who follow the Mode in their Dress, surpasses the number of those whom this wise Divine endeavours to Comfort.

What I have said above concerning the Fox will be more intelligible, when I have related to those Gentlemen what I have read concerning the pernicious Effects of those Vows, which they would justify. It is a Relation, the ground of which I could never yet meet with in the Ecclesiastical Annals: I have engaged some People in quest of it. In the mean while all that hath yet reached my Knowledge is, that (a) about the Year 1537, the Countess of Guastalla, by the advice of Baptist de Crema, a Jacobin Monk, founded a Society of the Victory over one's self against the Flesh ——. To gain this Victory a certain Lady named Julia, put a Young Fellow into Bed with a Young Girl, and laid a Crucifix as a Barrier betwixt them, to the end that they should not kick one another, as we generally clap Bars or Poles between Horses: And this was the Tryal. This Society multiplied prodigiously. (b) Frequently such Ladies, says my Author, go to several of the Neighbouring Towns, to visit their Priests and Spiritual Fathers, for they have their Nests in many Towns. But it often happens to them as to a certain famished Fox, who entring into a Chamber by a little hole eat so greedily, and stuffed his Belly so full, that he became so swoln that he could not get out again: So it happens frequently to these good Ladies, when they enter the Chambers of their Fathers Confessors, their Belly begins to swell to that degree that they are obliged to stay there, and not stir a foot till the Fruit is ripe, because their Repast proved too large: Which proceeds from their hunger, which is as great as that of the Fox (c). He assures us that at Venice and in several other places these Libertin Guastalians were expelled (d).

Let us return to la Mothe le Vayer. He judiciously observes that this Married Woman was ruined by her Husband's Fault; who loved her too Lasciviously. (e) Brantome for the same reason charges the ill Lives of several Wives to their Husbands account. Generally speaking we may affirm that the Mens part in all these Disorders is infinitely greater than the Womens. They are the Instigators, Sollicitors and Seducers. Which an Author of the XVI. Century hath very handsomly shewed in Justification of the fair Sex. "We very seldom see, saith he (f), Women guilty of Pride, Cruelty, Murther, Drunkenness, Intemperance, Sacrilege, Robbery, or generally tainted with all sorts of Vices as Men are: But on the contrary they are for the most part Humble, Gracious, Sober, Chaste, Discreet and Charitable; their Hearts are tender and humane; and if there are any, as it may be alledged against me, who are Vicious, I aver and maintain that they are most commonly induced to and initiated into it by Men, without whose Inticements few or none of this sort would be found. And to speak plainer, for a small number of ill Women the greatest part of the Men are stark naught. And if any Person is pleased to contradict me, I ask him what the Men would be, if they were continually enticed, excited and sollicited to Evil, Vice and Sin, by the Women as they are by them, considering that of their own accord without any Instigation they are so Corrupt and Vicious? Who ought to be esteemed most excusable, she who at the Inticement of another loses her Virtue, or he that uses his utmost endeavours to engage her to it, which we see confirmed by daily Experience? And therefore I am not a little surprized at the thoughtless Sparks, who incessantly Censure the Women for the very Vice which is not near so ripe amongst that Sex as amongst their own. And if the Women were subject to Luxury and Incontinence, (which I utterly deny) ought they not to think full as abominable and detestable, or rather more, the infinite Load of other Vices which they may find amongst themselves, the least of which deserves as much to be blamed as that? I cannot imagine whence such an Error should proceed, unless from a desire of Condemning others to Justify themselves; which will not avail with most of 'em; for I know that they are almost all so generally addicted to the same Vice (besides others) that there is not a Wretch tho' never so mean amongst them that doth not desire to gratify his Lust with all or as many Women as please him: So that if their Modesty and Chastity did not stop the torrent of Vice, there would be no more Continence amongst Mankind than amongst Brutes. But we see they are sollicited without Intermission, and with much less trouble than Men they might enjoy their fill of Pleasure, notwithstanding which they very seldom fall into this Fault, which tho' so much blamed in them is become almost a Virtue in the Men. Is it then less displeasing to God in one Sex than in the other? It is indeed very strange that they should be so severely Censured, for what these Fools Glory in, considering also that the Sin is committed on the Female side with some colour of Excuse, whilst the other have really none." What hath been lately said concerning the weakness of Men and the strength of Women, in a Book Entituled (g) Moliere, Comedien aux champs Elisées, is the best thing in that Book. And doubtless he that wrote the Satyr against Husbands, in answer to Mr. Despreaux's Satyr against Women had the more ample Subject.

(H Δ) To imagine that he was experimentally acquainted with the ill side of Marriage, the Broils of the Day, and manner of Composing them at Night, &c.] See a Letter which he wrote to a Person who desired his advice concerning Marriage. He first of all makes an enumeration of some Imperfections which the Antients attributed to Women, after which he adds (h). "But the want of Capacity, and a sufficient number of other defects, with which those of our Days abound more than ever, would not perhaps be so considerable, if we had the Remedies which the Antients practised against the most Incorrigible. For besides Divorces, which were allowed them if they found their Wives but in a small fault, on four occasions they had a right to take away their Lives, and the Women ran as great a risk by drinking of Wine, or using of false Keys, as by imposing of Children on the Husband, or committing Adultery. —— (i) But as our Laws are very far from any such strict severity, we find that their Indulgence favours the Debauchery and Depravation of Women to that degree, that being at present restrained by no sort of fear, I see nothing which we ought reasonably to hope for from the most Prudent of them.

"Pauca (1) adeò Cereris vittas contingere digna.

"And if we ought to except some few who are touched with a sense of Honour, how can you be free from the rest of their Infirmities, which the greatest Philosophers, nor the most Potent Emperors have not been able to Correct? Philip of Macedonia freely protested (2), that he did not know a Humour so Martial as that of his Wife Olympias, who incessantly made War against him. Their gaming, the excesses of their Mouth and the rest of their Profusions, at present exceed those of the most Debauched of our Sex, and quickly make a Husband sensible of the truth of the Italian Proverb, sposa di spesa, noce che nuoce. Nor are you yet to expect that the noisy uneasiness of the Day will exempt you from the duties of the Night. There is no Reconciliation or Repose to be hoped for, if it doth not proceed from that side,

"Sed (3) lateri ne parce tuo, pax omnis in illo est.

"And you will find the greatest part of them like the Fountain of Hammon (1) extremely cold by Day, and very hot by Night." When a Married Man talks at this rate, he gives very good reason to believe, 1. That he has often undergon such a Tryal. 2. That this made him so well acquainted with the Seal, which ought to be affixed to

(a) Histoire de la Mappe-monde Papistique, pag. 46. Edit. 1567. in 4.

(b) Ibid. pag. 87.

(c) See what Horace first Epist. 7. lib. 1. Forte per angustam tenuis vulpecula rimam Repserat in cameram frumenti, pastaque rursus Ire foras pleno tendebat corpore frustra. Cui mustela procul: si vis (ait) effugere isthinc, Macra cavum repetes arctum, quem macra subisti.

(d) I can't tell whether the following passage of a Letter of Lucretia Gonzaga pag. 134. may be applied to the Members of that Fraternity. Havete ridette tutte quelle piacevolezze che io vi narrai occorse tra le Guastalline, & lui. Hortensio Lando is meant by the word lui.

(e) Brantome, Memoires des Dames galantes, tom. 1. pag. 54, 55.

(f) Claudius de Taillemont, of Lyons, in his Discours des Champs Faëz, à l'honneur & exaltation des Dames, Printed at Lyons 1553, in 8.

(g) Printed in 1696. See Scene 6. of the 3. Act, pag. 157 & seq. of the Amsterdam Edition. You'll find the same things in the 4th Part of the Diversitez curieuses pag. 68. & seq. Dutch Edit.

(h) La Mothe le Vayer's Letter 45. pag. 357. of the 12th Vol.

(i) Id. ib. pag. 358, 359.

(1) Juven. Sat. 6.

(2) Dio. Chrys. or. 2.

(3) Ov. l. 2. de art. am.

(1) Diod. Sic. l. 17.

Marriage x, and died in the Year 1672 ‡. I ſhall ſpeak of the Editions of his Works (I).

" || The French Academy conſider'd him as one of their beſt Members; but the " World look'd on him as a Capricious Humoriſt, who lived according to his Fancy, " and as a Sceptick Philoſopher. His Phyſiognomy and Dreſs made every Body " that ſaw him judge him an extraordinary Man. He walked always with his " Head erect, and his Eyes fixed on the Signs of the Street. Before I was told who he was, continues the Writer from whom I have extracted this paſſage, I took him for an Aſtrologer, or a Searcher after Secrets and the Philoſophers Stone. This ſerves only to confirm x what we have ſeen above.

VAL (GEFFREY DU) See VALLEE.

VAL (JOHN DU) a Phyſician at Iſſoudun his Native place, who Tranſlated into French the Antidotary or Diſpenſary of John James Wecker, Phyſitian at Baſil, and added to it ſeveral things of his own. This Book was Printed at Geneva in quarto in 1609. The New Edition of Vander-Linden de Scriptoribus Medicis, doth not Mention him at all, any more than it doth James du VAL a Phyſitian of Evreux who publiſhed β a Book in French treating of Hermaphrodites and the delivery of Women in 1612 γ. He had before Printed δ a Book concerning the Medicinal Springs about Rouën, and a * New Method of curing Catharrs †.

VALDES (JOHN) in Latin Valdeſius, flouriſhed at Rome under Pope Julius II. He was a Young well proportioned Handſome Spaniard. His Learning Induſtry and intereſt with ſeveral Great Perſons procured him very Great Riches. He fell in Love with a Senator's Daughter, not leſs Virtuous than Beautiful; and finding that the only way to gratify his paſſion was Honourable Love, he courted her for Marriage, and carried the matter even to the ſigning of the Contract. A little after which it was diſcovered that it was not poſſible to Advance ſo far as the Nuptial Solemnity, by Reaſon of his engagement in the Eccleſiaſtical Life. This very much Angred the Father of the betrothed Lady, and obliged him to Complain to Cardinal Leonard de la Rovere, who commanded in Rome in the abſence of Julius II. He cauſed Valdes to be Impriſoned in the Caſtle of Saint Angelo. The Priſoner ſeeing himſelf Charged with a Crime, promiſed to renounce his Prieſthood if the Pope would permit him, and Marry the betrothed Lady, even tho' ſhe had no Fortune. Upon which he was diſcharged under Bail; but while to thoſe Reconciliations. 3. That he was very well verſed in the diſtinction betwixt the groundleſs quarrels, which are like the ill Humour of a Creditor ill payed, and thoſe which reſult from an angry temper.

---

(I) Of the Editions of his Works.] His Son collected them into a Body in 1653. and Dedicated them to Cardinal Mazarin. This Edition in Folio being followed by a 2d. he publiſhed a (a) 3d. larger and more Correct than the two former, and Dedicated it to the King in 1662. After this Edition another came out in 15 Volumes in 12. which comprehends more Tracts than the laſt in Folio which was in 3 Volumes. Theſe 3 Volumes in Folio contain but the twelve firſt Tomes of that in 12. The 13. 14 and 15. being the Tracts which the Author publiſhed in the Year 1667. 1668 and 1669. There is no ſmall Advantage to be made of Reading this Writer, and we have no French Author who approaches nearer to Plutarch than he. We find Beautiful thoughts, and Solid Arguments Interwoven and diſperſ'd through his Works. Wit and Learning go Hand in Hand. His Wit would doubtleſs appear more conſpicuouſly if it went alone: for the Authorities and Citations very often obſcure it: but in ſome places it ſhines moſt by the happy Application of a Foreign thought. This Author amongſt his other various ſorts of Reading, applyed himſelf to that of Voyages. In which each Perſon hath generally his particular end. Mr. Daillé (b) Read them only to diſcover the difference betwixt the Apoſtles converting the Ancient Pagans, and the Popiſh Miſſionaries converting the New ones. Our Vayer had another aim, he only looked for Arguments to confirm Pyrrhoniſm. The prodigious diverſity which he met with betwixt the Manners and Cuſtoms of different Nations charmed him: He could not conceal the Satisfaction with which he digeſted theſe Materials, nor did he hide the Conſequences which he would have us draw from thence; which was that we ought not to be ſo deciſive as to Condemn as ill and unreaſonable, whatever we do not find conform to our Opinions and Cuſtoms. I cannot tell whether he believed with Cardan, that Opinion is (c) the Queen of Mankind; but I believe that he might have made as good an Oration about the Empire of Opinion as that of (d) Scioppius, and an Excellent commentary on theſe ε Verſes of Sophocles.

Παῦσαι· καλὸν γὰρ τῷδε κεκλῆσθαι πατρός,
Εἴπερ πέφυκά γ'· εἰ δὲ μὴ, μεῖον βλάβη.
Τὸ γὰρ νομισθὲν τῆς ἀληθείας κρατεῖ.

Pauſa: ſat eſt me hoc patre natum dicier,
Natus tamen ſi ſum: ſin autem, obeſt parum.
Nam veritate potentior eſt opinio.

His Treatiſe concerning (e) the inſtitution of the Dauphin and that of the Pagan Philoſophy, are the beſt which he hath written. That of the Hiſtorians is good: But as Mr. Baillet very judiciouſly obſerves (f), it did not coſt him much Pains. I have obſerved in it ſeveral other Faults beſides thoſe which I have mentioned in the Articles of Suetonius and Tacitus. (g) No Body is Ignorant that his laſt Works are much inferiour to thoſe compoſed in the Flower and Vigour of his Age. Theſe are the Words of Mr. Baillet.

MR. DE Vigneul Marville pretends (h) that la Mothe le Vayer's Works are only a collection of what he liked beſt in the courſe of his Reading; that formerly ſuch ſort of Rhapſodies were read, but are not reliſh'd at preſent. There is too much harſhneſs and Severity in this Sentence: All unbyaſſ'd perſons have always made a vaſt difference, betwixt la Mothe le Vayer's Writings, and Rhapſodies. He was not an Author who heaped up paſſages like the Compilers of a Florilegium or a Polyanthea. He contented himſelf to confirm his thoughts by thoſe of the moſt excellent Authors of Antiquity, or to uſe his Learning in order to give new hints by the Applications which he made, or the conſequences which he drew. This is not what is called a Rhapſody. He gave out an infinite Number of things which were purely his own, and which he intermixed with a great deal of Salt and Wit; and tho' he hath interſperſed ſeveral borrowed thoughts, all which are not choſen with ſufficient diſcernment, it is nevertheleſs true that from thence ariſes a Work, the Reading of which is highly advantageous, and which continues to pleaſe ſome very good Judges. Mr. de Vigneul Marville believes that he hath done a great Honour to France by ſaying that la Mothe le Vayer's Rhapſodies are not adapted to our preſent taſt, and ‡ Moreri [illegible] 1672. Mr. [illegible] is very much miſtaken in his [illegible] graphicum, where he places the Death of the Author in the Year [illegible] x That is, he was a Philoſopher, who minded only the [illegible] part and deſpiſed the vanities of Humane Life.

---

|| Vigneul Marville, Melanges d'Hiſt. & de Litterat. tom. 2. pag. [illegible] Dutch Edit.

β At Rohen in 8.

γ I have this from Mr. Drelincourt.

δ At Poitiers in 1603. in 12.

* Publ. 1611. in 8.

† I have this from Mr. Bourdelot.

(a) Epiſtle dedicatory of the 3. Edition.

(b) See his Life Written by his Son.

(c) Æſtimatio & opinio rerum humanarum reginæ ſunt. Cardanus, lib. 3. de utilit. apud Naudæum, Coups d'Etat, p. m. 92.

(d) Chriſtopher Pellerus quotes it ſometimes in his Politicus ſceleratus Impugnatus. See there pag. 55. 56. & 2.9.

(e) See Sorberiana pag. 223. Dutch Edit.

(f) Baillet, Jugemens des Savans, tome 2. pag. 215.

(g) Id ib. tome 1. pag. 390.

(h) Vigneul Marville, Mêlang. d'hiſt. & de litt. tom. 2. p. 300. Dutch Edit.

whilst they were endeavouring to obtain the dispensation, he was so embarassed betwixt the desire of keeping his Benefices, and that of enjoying a Wife, that he could not disengage himself from this (Z) Labyrinth, otherwise than by throwing himself from the top to the bottom of his House. By which he broke all his Bones, and Died immediately very much lamented by the whole City. His Mistress being informed of this desperate Act, would have killed her self; wherefore they were obliged to keep a Watchful Eye over her to prevent any attempts of that Nature. You expect to hear that Time and another sighing Lover comforted her, but you are mistaken; for as soon as her Grief admitted of a little Solace, she turn'd Nun †.

VALDES (JOHN) one of the first Founders of Lutheranism in the Kingdom of Naples, was a β Civilian, and a Spanish Gentleman α on whom Charles the fifth conferred the Honour of Knighthood. It is believed γ that in his Travels to Germany he got a relish of the Opinions there Preached against the Church of Rome; and that having carried to Naples the Books of Luther, Bucer and the Anabaptists, he made use of them to get Proselytes. It is certain that he communicated his Opinions to several Persons, who Assembled in Secret (A) to serve God according to these new instructions. Some Women of Quality frequented these Assemblies, as did also some Monks of Extraordinary Merit, and among others ‖ Peter Martyr Vermilius, and * Bernardinus Ochinus often resorted thither. The Inquisition perceived it, and by the Application of their usual Violent Remedies Supprest this beginning of Reformation. Valdes's Disciples were not all equally stedfast: Some stuck to the new Doctrines and retired into Protestant Countries; but the greatest part (B) yielded and betrayed their Conγ See the Bibliotheca Antitrinit. pag. 2. & Spondanus ad. Ann. 1547. n. 21. 22.

β See the Remark A.

* Spondanus ubi supra n. 21.

‖ Cœlius Secundus Curio, Preface to Valdes's considerations

† Taken from [illegible]

§ See [illegible]

‖ [illegible] Melch. Adam. in vita Petri Martyris pag. 31.

and that the Readers no longer lose their time in Reading them; but it is to be feared that he will hereby confirm several Foreigners in the Judgment which they make, that France too much disgusted with all that favours of Learning, only employs her self in the refining of her Language and the happy turning of the Pictures and Characters of Men. The best Writings of the first Academists are not less slighted than (a) those of la Mothe le Vayer; and yet it is agreed on all hands that the French Academy was never better filled than in its beginning.

(Z) He could not disengage himself from this labyrinth otherwise than by throwing, &c.] He received a very Vigorous Charge from two different passions; On the one side he found himself unable to quit the Charms resulting from the large Revenue of his Benefices, and on the other he despaired of resisting the Violence of his Love, if he could find Means to annul his Contract. If I keep my Benefices, said he to himself, I shall never enjoy the Person I Love, and I don't find my self able to endure that privation. If I enjoy this Person, I shall lose my preferments, and I don't believe I can any more bear that than the other. This plunged him into an intollerable Melancholy, which was aggravated by his reflecting on the prejudice he did his Mistress. He knew that by breaking off the promised Marriage, he at once ruin'd the Reputation and Fortune of a very Virtuous Lady. For he doubtless imagined that she would find no more a Sortable match. The Scrupulous niceness of the Italians is such that they cannot easily digest the privacies which they suppose to have been in such a case. Nay in the very Countries, where People are not so nice, some Men would never address to a Lady who hath several times hearkened to the Declarations of Love of a Young Spark admitted by the Relations; for they suppose that the more she became sensible of her Parents consent, the fewer bounds she set to her Endearments, and that she abandoned the out-side of the place. What would they not think if the matter broke off betwixt the Contract and the Wedding Day? However it was our Valdes's thought he should ruin the Reputation of this fair one, if he should annul the Contract; he was, touched with a Compassion for her; he was ashamed to use her so ill, and these two Passions joyning with others, so cruelly tormented him, that to free himself from this Slavery he resolved to end his Life. Early in the Morning he went to the prospect Turret on the top of his House, and threw himself into the Street; (b) Valdesius neque libenter sacerdotiis, quæ opulenta erant, abdicare cogitat, neque perferre se amorem, etiam si impune liceat, ulterius sperat. Igitur cum id consilii se cepisse videret, quod non facile poterat explicare, graviore ob id dolore affectus, quòd pudicissimæ feminæ famam, & fortunam omnem everterit, si repudii nuntium remisisset, magnis excruciatus sollicitudinibus, misericordiaque & pudore confectus, ut erat æstivus dies, turriculam quandam ad prospectum super ædium culmen excitatam discinctus adhuc ascendit, quasi matutinalem auram strictiorem animi gratia capturus, servuloque mox negotii certi nomine ablegato nullam aliam rationem nactus, qua se turbulentissimis miseriis explicaret, & dulcissimæ sponsæ famæ nominique prospiceret, ex editissimo eo loco in viam mediam sese præcipitem dedit, quo ita totis ossibus colliso, & statim exanimato, Alterii filia re percepta, ipsa quoque sponsi desiderio sibimet manum inferre tentavit, sed diligenti familiarium observatione prohibita, custoditaque, posteaquam tempore dolor aliquantulum mitigatus est, maritalem perosa vitam perpetuo victura cœlibatu vestalem induit. This Author does not mention whether this unhappy Man was interred in a Church, or whether the Judges exercised the Rigour of the Law on his Corps. He only tells us that the whole City deplored his Death (c).

(A) Who assembled in secret to serve God—— some Women of Quality frequented.] A passage in Peter Martyr's life informs us of this more particularly. We have there a very fine Elogy on our Valdes the Founder of this dawning Church. (d) Qui (Joannes Valdesius) posteaquam à DEO vera religionis agnitione donatus est, vitam suam in Italia, & præcipue Neapoli egit, quo loco doctrina & sanctissimo vitæ exemplo, quamplurimos, præsertim nobiles, Christo lucrifecit, ac fuit eo tempore non spernenda Ecclesia piorum hominum in urbe Neapolitana. Nam in illo cœtu multi viri erant nobiles & docti; multæ etiam excellenti virtute fœminæ: inter quas ut alias illustres & vere heroinas omittamus, silentio tamen præterire non debemus nobilissimam heroinam Izabellam Manricham, quæ postea CHRISTI nomine a patria exulavit. In hoc cœtu piorum fuit ibidem CHRISTI nomine exul Galeazzius Caracciolus Marchio Vici, & alii magni viri post exules, & quos omnes nominare non necesse est. Quamvis autem hujus Ecclesiæ prima laus debeatur Valdesio: nihilominus tamen Martyris quoque virtus commemoranda est. See the Remark F.

(B) The greatest part yielded and betrayed their consciences.] Nicolas Balbani Minister of the Italian Chuch at Geneva informs us of this: His Words according to Mr. Minutoli's version are. " (e) The " greatest Danger that threatned him (f) pro" ceeded from the same Person from whom he " had received the beginning of his knowledge;
" for the Number of the Disciples of this Valdes, of " whom we have already spoken, and who were " the only Company that Galeazzo frequented af" ter he became acquainted with them, being ex" tremely encreased in Naples, most of them not " advancing farther in point of Religion than to " Establish the Means of Justification by Jesus Christ
" and to Condemn some of the grossest Popish Su" perstitions, without abstaining on that Account
" from frequenting the Churches, and assisting at

" Mass

(a) I made this Observation to shew that if la Mothe le Vayer is not read as he was formerly, it proceeds from a general disgust at most things that have lost the Grace of Novelty.

(b) Pierius Valerianus de litterator. infelicit. lib. 1. pag. 45.

(c) Valdesius totius Romæ luctu deploratus est. Id. ib.

(d) Melch. Adam. in vita Theolog. exter. pag. 31.

(e) Vie de Galeace Caracciolo pag. 47. 48.

(f) That is Galeazzo Caracciolo Marquis de Vico.

Conſciences. He lived ‡ unmarried and very Chaſtly, and dyed at Naples, about 1540. He attacked the Church of Rome (C) on ſome points only, and it is reported that on the Doctrine of the Trinity, he did not agree with the (D) Proteſtants, nor the Roman Catholicks. The Unitarians have placed him in the Number of their Authors. He wrote ſeveral (E) Books, of which the moſt eſteemed is ‡ Cœlius Secundus Curio, Preface to Valdes's Conſiderations.

" Maſs, and partaking with the reſt of the " Papiſts in ſeveral Idolatries; it was to be feared " that Galeazzo would make no greater progreſs than " thoſe Gentlemen, whoſe good Intentions miſcarried when they came to be perſecuted and imprisoned, and they were conſtrained to abjure " their Principles, after which ſome were put to " Death on pretence of relapſing to their former " Errors, and amongſt them was Caſerta himſelf, who had been the Inſtrument of Galeazzo's " Converſion.

(C) He attacked the Church of Rome on ſome points only.] Add to the Paſſage I have juſt now cited the following words of the ſame Book: " (a) " There was then at Naples——a certain Spaniſh " Gentleman whoſe Name was John Valdes, who " having ſome knowledge of, and being ſenſibly " touched with the truth of the Goſpel, eſpecially " in the point of Juſtification, had the happineſs to " ſow ſome Seeds thereof amongſt the Nobility he " converſed with, and began in that manner to " draw ſome Gentlemen out of their Ignorance, " undeceiving them concerning the Merit of good " Works and the Righteouſneſs of Men, as well as " concerning ſeveral Superſtitions." Compare this with what I have cited from Thuanus, in the Article Flaminius, and obſerve that Flaminius (b) was one of thoſe who with Valdes confirmed Peter Martyr Vermilius in his new Opinions.

Ibid. 10. 11.

Melch. m. ſupra.

(D) On the Doctrine of the Trinity he did not agree.——The Unitarians have placed him.] See the following paſſage of the Bibliotheca Antitrinitariorum: (c) Ab eo (Johanne Valdeſio) Bernardinus Ochinus ſententiam ſuam contra receptam de Trinitate opinionem imbibiſſe perhibetur. Floruit a. 1542. De eo Miniſtri eccleſiarum conſentientium in Sarmatia & Tranſylvania lib. 1. cap. 3. de falſa & vera unius Dei Patris, Filii & Spiritus Sancti cognitione, hæc ſcribunt: De Joanne etiam Valdeſio, genere & pietate clariſſimo, quid dicendum? Qui ſcriptis publicis ſuæ eruditionis ſpecimina nobis relinquens, ſcribit, ſe de Deo ejuſque Filio nihil aliud ſcire, quam quod unus ſit Deus altiſſimus Chriſti Pater: & unicus Dominus noſter Jeſus Chriſtus ejus filius, qui conceptus eſt de Spiritu Sancto in utero virginis, unus & amborum Spiritus. This may perhaps be confirmed by Balbani's words: (d) The Devil ſtill continued to forge Shackles for Galeazzo Caracciolo; for fear he ſhould eſcape, he again endeavoured to pervert his Mind, by the efforts which he obliged certain Perſons to make, to draw him over to a Pernicious Party. Theſe were a band of Anabaptiſts and abominable Arians, who were unhappily ſpread in Naples and other parts of the Kingdom; they promiſed themſelves to find in Galeazzo (thinking the ſtarting of a new Opinion enough to gain a Novice) the Man whom they wanted to be their powerful Support and Defence, and the Patron of their Cabal: Wherefore they left no means which they thought proper unattempted to engage him on their ſide, and taint him with their Hereſy. The Author further adds, that this Gentleman vigorouſly repulſed their Efforts. Obſerve that he makes (e) a diſtinction betwixt theſe Perſons, and Valdes's Diſciples: But we may venture to ſay, that his acknowledgment that a Party of Antitrinitarians appeared in the Kingdom of Naples, renders more probable what (f) Sandius affirms concerning Valdes's Hereſy. I have read a thing in Beza's Letters which deſerves a place here. A Miniſter of the French Church at Embden, was accuſed amongſt other things of having got Tranſlated and Printed in the Dutch Language, without the Knowledge of his Collegues, Valdes's Conſiderations, (g) filled with Blaſphemies againſt the word of God, and of having left out the Notes which were added to the Lyons Edition. Beſides other reaſons in his Defence he urged the two following; that the Book was not full of Blaſphemies, and that it ought not to be leſs permitted at Embden, to praiſe the Piety of Valdes than at Baſil, Zurich, and Geneva. He was anſwered, that Book had done a great deal of Miſchief to the Flock of Chriſt at Naples, and that Ochinus had there found the extravagant Errors which had ruined him; and that if any good Men had beſtowed Elogies on thoſe Conſiderations of Valdes, they would change their Opinion as ſoon as they had Examined them. It was added that the Bookſeller at Lyons, who Printed them, was very ſorry and asked Pardon for it, after Calvin and ſome others had Advertiſed him of his Fault. Read all the particulars in the following Latin words of Beza: (h) Scimus ex idoneorum hominum teſtimonio, quantum naſcenti Neapolitanæ Eccleſiæ liber ille detrimenti attulerit: Scimus etiam quod fuerit de illo judicium D. Joannis Calvini: Scimus & illud, Ochinum infelicis memoriæ virum ex illis lacunis ſuas illas prophanas ſpeculationes hauſiſſe, & ita tandem ſenſim a verbo Dei abductum in ultimum illud exitium ſeſe præcipitaſſe, in quo miſer interiit: ac proinde librum illum a ſpiritu Anabaptiſtico multis locis non multùm diſſidentem, id eſt, à verbo Dei ad inanes quaſdam ſpeculationes, quas falſo Spiritum appellant, homines abducentem, vel nunquam editum, vel ſtatim ſepultum fuiſſe magnopere cuperemus.——Cæterùm quinam illi ſint procati judicii homines qui ſcriptum illud (perſonam enim ipſam Valdeſii non attingimus) ut pium & religioſum libris etiam editis commendarint, nos quidem ignoramus, neque dubitamus quin ſi boni viri ſunt, re diligentiùs perſpecta ſententiam mutent, quod & Lugdunenſi Typographo viro bono evenit, ut qui, quamvis additis illis notis meritò ſe poſſet excuſare, admonitus tamen à fratribus, & nominatim quidem à D. Calvino, culpam deprecari quàm excuſare maluit.

Balba- vie de ace accio- pag. 45, 46.

Ibid. 47.

He is Author the liothe- Anti- itario-

Multis oribus e m pie. ad- us fa- m Dei bum entes. u, epiſt. g. 220. 3. ope-

(h) Theod. Beza ibid.

(E) He wrote ſeveral Books.] Of which Sandius gives us the following Liſt: (i) Dialogi Charon & Mercurius impreſſi Italicè. Conſiderationes piæ & doctæ. In Pſalmos aliquot. In Evangelium Matthei. In Evangelium Johannis. Commentarius in epiſtolam Pauli ad Romanos. a. 1556. Commentario breve, ó declaracion compendioſa, y familiar, ſobre la primera epiſtola de ſan Pablo á los Corinthios, muy util para todos los amadores de la piedad Chriſtiana. He obſerves that the Spaniſh Inquiſition hath inſerted Valdes's Commentary on the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, in their Index of Prohibited Books, both with and without the Author's Name. He was in the right to make this Obſervation, for that it is ſo expreſſed in the Index is very (k) true. Don Nicolas Antonio (l) obſerves the ſame thing; but he doth not diſcover that he knew who Valdes was. Joannes de Valdes quidam, ſaith he, ſcripſit commentario breve ò declaracion, &c. He adds that du Verdier Vau-Privas relates that Claudius de Kequiſinen a Pariſian, Tranſlated the hundred and ten Divine Conſiderations Johannis Valdeſii out of Spaniſh into French. Du Verdier (m) calls this Author Jean de Valdeſſo, and ſaith, that the French Tranſlation of theſe Divine Conſiderations was Printed at Lyons in 8. by Charles Peſnot, and at Paris in 16. by Mathurin Prevoſt 1565. So he ſays under the word Claudius de Kequiſinen: But under the word Jean de Valdeſſo, Secretary to the King of Naples (n), he only ſpeaks of one hundred Conſiderations, and refers us to Claudius de Kerquiſine. By which we may obſerve that he had no regard to Uniformity either in Proper Names or the Titles of Books. He adds that Charon and Mercury, Dialogues of the ſame Valdeſſo, were rendred into French by an uncertain Tranſlator. This confirms the Bibliotheca Antitrinitariorum and the Epitome of that of Geſner, where our John Valdes is call'd Secretarius Regis Neapolitani, and declared to be the Author of the Dialogues Charon and Mercurius. Let us ſay by the by that they deceive us, when they make uſe of the Plural Number with reſpect to the Book wherein Charon and Mercury are the Interlocutors. It is but one Dialogue; which I own is followed by another, but the Perſons there are Lactantius and an Arch-Deacon. The whole Title of the Book runs thus. Due Dialoghi, l'uno di Mercurio & Caronte: nel quale, oltre molte coſe belle, gratioſe, & di buona dottrina, ſi raconta quel che accade nella guerra dopò l'anno M D X X I. L'altro di Lactantio

(i) Bibliot. Antitrinit. pag. 2. See alſo the Epitome of Geſnerus's Bibliotheca p. m. 506.

(k) See the Index librorum prohibitorum & expurgandorum pag. 736. of the Edition of 1667. at the word Juan Valdeſio.

(l) Nicol. Antonio, biblioth. ſcript. Hiſpan. tom. 1. p. 606.

(m) Du Verdier, biblioth. Françoiſe pag. 182.

(n) Ib. ib. pag. 759.

is intituled one Hundred and ten Considerations. I shall (F) relate by whose care it was Printed.

VALDES (James *) Author of a Book, in which he endeavours to prove (Z) that the Kings of Spain have a just right to the Pre-eminence of all Christian Princes. He was born in Asturia in the XVI Century, and run through the Course of his Studies at Valladolid, where he exercised the Profession of an Advocate, and taught the Canon-Law for Twenty Years. After which he was promoted to the Office of Counsellor in the Council of Granada. His Additiones ad Roderici Suarez lecturas variorum Jurium were Printed at Valladolid in 1590 †.

VALERIA, Sister to the Orator (A) Hortensius, by a very odd way came to tanio & di uno Arcidiacono, nel quale piacevolmente si trattano le cose avenute in Roma nell' anno M. D. XXVII. Di Spagnolo in Italiano con molta accuratezza & tradotti & reviste. In Vinegia con gratia & privilegio per anni Dieci. The Date of the Impression is not specified: It contains 148. Leaves in Octavo. Mr. Konig misleads us, when (a) he refers us to Pierius Valerianus in quest of John Valdes, who wrote a Commentary on the Epistle of St. Paul to the Romans, Printed in 1556. For Pierius's Valdes is another Man. I find nothing concerning our Valdes in the Oxford Catalogue, but under the Name of John de VAL D'ESSO, or Valdesso, you find One hundred and ten Divine Considerations, Printed at Lyons in 8vo, 1563. Also the same Book Printed in Italian at Basil in 1550, and in English at Oxford, in 1638. in 4to.

(F) By whose care it was Printed.] The French Edition which I here make use of, is that of Paris, 1565. in 16. Entitled, Cent & dix Considerations divines de Jan de Val d'Esso. Traduites premierement, d'Espaignol en langue Italienne, & de nouveau mises en François, par C. K. P. The Preface is Cœlius Secundus Curio's, who was the Editor of the Italian Edition at Basil in 1550. He represents it as an excellent Work, and after a great many Elogies, goes on in the following Words. "But we are obliged for this great and Heavenly Treasure, to Mr. Peter Paul Vergerius, as the Instrument of Divine Providence to occasion the Printing and the Publishing of it, that it may be seen and possessed by every Person. For leaving Italy, and quitting a false and pretended Bishoprick to joyn and apply himself to the true Apostleship, to which he was called by Christ, he brought with him several excellent Compositions. He did as every body uses to do, when by some sad Disaster, his House is on fire, or the place where he lives in danger of being plunder'd by Soldiers; for he endeavours to save himself with the most valuable things he has. In like manner our Vergerius having nothing dearer to him in this World than the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ, he packed up and carried off with him those Compositions which tended to illustrate and spread it. He neglected the Earthly Riches, and carefully preserved the Heavenly and Divine Treasures: Amongst which this little piece was one of the most valuable which could be imagin'd or coveted. After which, very well knowing that all things in their own Nature excellent, raise their value and esteem, by being communicated and distributed to several Persons, he left me these hundred and ten Considerations on condition I should Publish them: which I have done, as you see with the utmost diligence that I have been capable of. These Considerations, as several can testify, were originally written by the Author in Spanish, but afterwards translated into Italian, by a Person of great Piety and Virtue: And through inadvertence, several Spanish Idioms, have slipt into the Version. John de Val d'Esso the Author, was a Spaniard, of a Noble and Ancient Family, raised to an honourable state, being at first a Gentleman, Knighted by Charles V. but after that a more Honourable and Magnificent Knight of Jesus Christ. After Christ was revealed to him, he did not long follow the Court, but lived in Italy, and resided at Naples. Where by the engaging Charms of his Doctrine, and the holiness of his Life, he gained many Disciples to Christ, especially a good number of Gentlemen and Knights, and Women of Quality who deserved all sorts of Praise. He was so mild and charitable, that he made himself Debtor to every Person for the great Talents with which he was entrusted, and accommodated himself to Persons of the meanest condition in order to gain them to Christ. Not only this, but he served as an Instrument to convey the light of the Gospel to some of the most famous Preachers in Italy. This is what I know, by having particularly conversed with them — And besides he left several excellent Compositions behind him, which by means of the mentioned Vergerius, we hope in time will be communicated to us."

(Z) A Book in which he endeavours to prove.] This piece was Publish'd at Granada in 1602, in Folio, and Dedicated to Philip III. King of Spain, and it was re-printed at Francfort, in 4to in 1626. The Title is Prærogativa Hispaniæ, hoc est, de dignitate & præeminentia regum regnorumque Hispaniæ, & honoratiori loco ac titulo eis eorumque legatis a Conciliis, nec non Romana sede jure debito, tractatus eximius, Reges Catholicos Christianissimis aliisque jure, regno, sede ac titulo potiores extitisse & adhuc (b) liquido demonstrans. The Author had chosen this for the Subject of an Oration, which he pronounced in the University of Valladolid in the presence of King Philip II. Which was so applauded, and that Monarch was so well pleased with it, that he order'd him to write a Tract on that Subject. This occasioned the Book, (c) wherein the Author pretends to the same Fate with Ægidius Romanus, who having argued on the Question de Regno in the Schools, in the presence of Philip IV. King of France, received Orders from that Prince to prepare an intire Treatise de regimine Principum. (d) Mihi evenit id, quod olim Ægidio Romano accidisse Paulus Æmilius in Philippo IV. auctor est, quod cum in Scholis publicis de regno coram Philippo Pulchro quæstionem habuisset, tandem ejus regis imperio, opus de regimine principum edidit. If Valdes hath not more sincerely cited other Authors, I look upon his Book to be one of the worst in the World; for it is false that Ægidius Romanus disputed on the Thesis de Regno, in presence of Philip IV. It is false that he received any Order to write a Book on that Subject after the pretended Disputation. But the thing is this. That Prince engaged him to Publish a Tract de Regimine Principum, and afterwards commanded him to make a Speech to him in the Name of the whole University, at his return from his Coronation. Paulus Æmilius's words are: (e) Philippus pulcher jam inde à prima adolescentia Ægidium Romanum theologum observarat, authorque fuerat ut de regimine principum monumenta quæ extant conscriberet, ederetque. Eundem Lutetiam a Rhemensibus sacris regressus, quod Sacræ Scholæ universique Musæi orationi novos excipi Reges solemne sit, dicere jussit. It is indeed true that the Subject of this Oration was de Regno: Paulus Æmilius has it, but it is of his own Composure. Ægidius Romanus could not express himself otherwise than in the crabbed Scholastick Style; he could not use the selected words and neat Latin which that Historian lends him. To conclude, the French Authors have not been silent concerning this Spaniard's Pretensions: They have Publish'd Books to convince him of his Mistake. See the Memoirs concerning the precedence of the Kings of France before the Kings of Spain, by F. Godefroy, Advocate in Parliament, Printed in 1612. but above all, Mr. Bulteau's Tract (f) Printed at Paris in 1675. The Journal des Sçavans of Feb. 11. in the same Year, gave an Extract of it.

(A) Sister to the Orator Hortensius.] Doubtless she was only his Sister by the Mother's side, and it ought to be said, that Hortensius's Mother was married to a Man of the Antient Family Valeria. But on the other side, we know that Hortensius had a Sister, (g) who was the Mother of Valerius Messala, Consul in the Year of Rome 701. It must therefore to be Sylla's Wife. She was a Woman of great Beauty and Quality, and had lately been Divorced from her Husband. Sylla having juſt loſt his Wife, was preſent at a great Combat of Gladiators: The Women ſat then confuſedly intermixed with the Men. Valeria going to ſit next to Sylla, ſoftly put her Hand to his Robe when ſhe was behind him, and pinched off a little of the Wool. He looking on her with ſurprize; 'Tis nothing, my Lord, ſaid ſhe, I would only enjoy a little of your good Fortune as well as others. These Expreſſions, very far from diſpleaſing Sylla, inſpired him with ſome agreeable emotions. He preſently diſcovered that he was touch'd; he ſent to inform himſelf of the Name, Quality, and Reputation of the Lady. After which nothing but Glances and (B) mutual Smiles paſſed between 'em, which at laſt ended in a (C) promiſe of Marriage. The Hiſtorian, * from whom we have this Adventure, blames Sylla only; others think, that without injuring his Judgment, he might alſo have cenſured (D) Valeria. Which he doth not in the leaſt; but he obſerves that her Husband was ſo far from being very fond of her, that he kept Actreſſes in his Houſe. He left her pregnant of a Daughter, called Poſthumia, from her being born after the Death of her Father.

* Nicolas Antonio Biblioth. script. Hispan. tom. 1. pag. 547. calls him Didacus.

† Taken from Nicolas Antonio ubi supra.

(a) Konig bibl. vet. & nova pag. 836.

* Plutarchus in Sylla, pag. 475.

VALERIUS (Auguſtin) Biſhop of Verona, and a Cardinal, flouriſhed towards the end of the XVI. Century. He was born at Venice, and taught Moral Philoſophy there. He perfectly underſtood the Latin Tongue, which he ſpoke freely and elegantly; but could not without difficulty expreſs himſelf in his Native Language. His Morals were very edifying, and he faithfully diſcharged the Duties of a Biſhop and of a good Paſtor. He was created Cardinal by Gregory the XIII. His Grief to ſee his Country lie under the Excommunication of Paul V. threw him into a Diſtemper, of which he dy'd †. Beſides ſeveral other Books, he Compoſed a holy Rhetorick, where he informs us of a very curious particular relating to the (Z) Martyrologies.

† Taken from Nicius Erythræus, Pinacoth. 1. p. 170, 171.

VALLA

fore be ſaid that his Mother and Siſter married into the ſame Family. I have not found any Author, who hath informed me whether Valerius Meſſala's Mother had the ſame Father with Hortenſius, or whether ſhe was the ſame who married Sylla.

(B) Nothing but Glances.] If any one is ignorant that the Greek Language abounds with very ſignificant terms to expreſs the mute Language of Love, let him only conſider the words which I cite (a).

(C) Which at leaſt ended in.] Plutarch hath not exactly ſpecified whether the Propoſals of Marriage, and the acceptation of it, happened the ſame day at their departure from the Spectacle. It is probable that that Affair was not long a doing, and that after they had tired their Eyes with making love by Signs, while the Gladiators were engaged, they broke ſilence as they were leaving the Amphitheatre. Sylla quickly took fire, and the Lady did not act a very nice part. It is then very likely that ſhe did not put him to the trouble of asking twice, and that as ſoon as ſhe had a glimpſe of Hopes to participate of Sylla's fortunate Star, not by barely touching of his Robe, or keeping a little of the Wool of it, but by a Conjugal Union, ſhe abandoned her ſelf to her good Fortune. This was to take the opportunity by the Fore-lock. From an Union of Glances, they proceeded to that of Lips and Bodies within the narrow ſpace of one day, tho' Plutarch doth not tell us ſo in expreſs terms.

(D) He might alſo have cenſured Valeria.] She perhaps, ſaith he, according to Amyot's Verſion, does not deſerve any Cenſure for her Carriage on this occaſion; but tho' ſhe was the moſt honeſt and virtuous Woman in the World, the occaſion of Sylla's marrying her, was neither honourable nor proper, becauſe he was ſtruck on a ſudden by an affected Look and Expreſſion, as if he had been a young Boy, and thoſe Paſſions which are moved by theſe Trifles, are commonly the groſſeſt and moſt ſcandalous. Methinks I hear Brantome relate the Adventures of his gallant Women, after having given them the Elogies of good and Virtuous Ladies. If a Tranſlator ſhould give himſelf never ſo little liberty, he might make Plutarch ſpeak more reaſonably than he doth in Amyot's Tranſlation: He might make him ſay, that tho' Sylla ſhould have met with a Virtuous Woman, yet he would be to blame to marry her from ſuch a Principle of Love as this which determined him.

(Z) A very curious particular relating to the Martyrologies.] In the Mercure Galant of September, 1695, there's a Letter inſerted (b), which to me ſeems very extraordinary. I cannot tell how the Publick judges of it; but I imagin that I am not the only Perſon who reliſhes it. There is in it a judicious and modeſt cenſure on a piece (c) of Loredano, tranſlated into French very lately. The Author ſeems to me to treat him too gently, contenting himſelf with ſaying, That he hath apparently trifled with his Subject, and without any reſpect to the holy ſource from whence he drew it, but only painted it in the gayeſt Colours of his Eloquence, and adorned it with the moſt agreeable Incidents which his imagination could ſuggeſt. He adds, that Lope de Vega uſed the ſame liberty in his Paſtoral, where he treats of the Shepherds coming to the Manger at Bethlehem, and that he has ſeen a Manuſcript in Folio, Written by a poor young Man on the Dialogue betwixt our Lord and his Diſciples at Emmaus. After this he relates, That Cardinal Valerio, Biſhop of Verona, in his Book, Entituled de Rhetorica Chriſtiana, informs us, that one of the cauſes of the falſe Legends of the Martyrs, was the cuſtom formerly obſerved in ſeveral Monaſteries, to exerciſe the young Monks, by Latin Amplifications propoſed to them on the Martyrdom of ſome Saint, which gave them the liberty of introducing the Tyrants and the perſecuted Saints ſpeaking, in ſuch a manner as appeared to them the moſt probable, giving them room at the ſame time to compile out of theſe Subjects a ſort of Hiſtories, rather filled with Ornaments and Inventions than Truth; but tho' they did not deſerve much conſideration, yet thoſe which ſeemed moſt ingenious and beſt compoſed, were laid up. So that after a long ſeries of Years, they, together with other Manuſcripts (d), *were found in the Libraries of the Monaſteries, when it was very difficult to diſtinguiſh theſe Exerciſes of Wit from the true Hiſtories of the Saints there alſo preſerved. It is to be confeſſed that thoſe pious Writers are very excuſable, they having no other Deſign than to exerciſe themſelves on holy Subjects, could not fore-ſee the erroneous conſequences, which in proceſs of time proceeded from thence; ſo that if Poſterity is thereby deceived, it is rather owing to their own want of diſcernment than a proof of the ill Intention of thoſe Writers. It would be hard to have the ſame regard for Si*meon Metaphraſtes, a Greek Author, of the Ninth Century, who firſt gave us the Lives of the Saints for every day of the Month thro' the whole Year; ſince it is viſible they were not written in that manner, but very ſeriouſly, tho' at the ſame time amplified and ſtuffed with ſeveral imaginary events, as Bellarmin himſelf teſtifies, who plainly tells us, that Metaphraſtes writ ſeveral of theſe Lives, as they might be, and not as they really were. But 'tis no wonder that ſuch a thing ſhould have been done by ſome Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtorians, thro' a pious Zeal to Honour the Saints, and to render their Lives agreeable to the People, commonly more inclined to admire thoſe they reverence than to imitate them; ſeeing this Liberty creeps into the very Tranſlation of ſome Books of the Bible; as we are informed by St. Jerome, in his Preface to that of Eſther, that the vulgar Edition of that Book of Holy Writ, commonly read in his time, was ſtuffed with ſeveral Additions, which I cannot better expreſs than in his own words.

(d) See the Article Tanaquil, at the end of the Remark B.

VALLA (Lawrence) One of the most Learned Men of the XIV. Century, Born at Rome (A) in 1415. He very vigorously attacked the Barbarity under which the Latin Tongue had groaned for several Ages, and compiled some Books in which he Collected the Elegancies of that Language so little in use in the Works of the School-men and Civilians. (B) But writing a History, he shewed that he was more capable of pointing out how others ought to write, than of practising his own Rules. He was a great lover of Criticism and Contradiction, in both which he allowed himself a liberty which drew on him a great many Enemies (C). He had the courage to Confute a false Tradition, which intirely pleased the Court of Rome; it was the pretended Donation of Constantin. He left * his Country either by the Pope's Orders, or because he had rendred himself the Object of the Hatred of too many, and retired to the Court of Alphonsus King of Naples, that great Protector of Learned Men, who attempted to learn Latin of him at 50 Years of Age. If he had confined himself to criticising on the Humanists, he had escaped several Reflections Publish'd against him with a great deal of Animosity, which he returned in the same Style; but he did not stop here, he levelled his Censures yet higher, he fell on the Ecclesiasticks (D) and spoke very boldly of certain things which they approved, and he disliked. These Adversaries were much more formidable Quem librum, saith he, speaking of the Book of Esther, Editio vulgata lacinosis hinc inde verborum finibus trahit, addens ea quæ ex tempore dici potuerant, & audiri, sicut solitum est scholaribus disciplinis sumpto themate, excogitare quibus verbis uti potuit qui injuriam passus, vel qui injuriam fecit.

Those, who would see a vast number of curious and judicious Observations on this head, need only read Mr. Baillet's Discourse of the Lives of the Saints. Of which Mr. de Beauval has given us a very good Extract in his Journal for January 1701. pag. 37, to 56.

(A) Born——— in 1415.] The proof of which I draw from his Epitaph, where we find he died the first of August 1465, and that he lived 50 Years. The words of this Inscription in the Church of St. John of Lateran are: Laurentio Valla harum ædium sacrarum Canonico, Alphonsi Regis & Pontificis maximi Secretario, Apostolicoque scriptori, qui sua ætate omnes eloquentia superavit, Catharina mater filio pientissimo posuit. Vixit annos L. obiit anno Domini M. CCCC LXV. Calendis Augusti. According to Vossius, this Distick follows the Epitaph. (a)

Laurens valla jacet, Romanæ gloria linguæ,
Primus enim docuit qua decet arte loqui.

But he is undoubtedly mistaken; for these Verses were indeed written as a sort of Epitaph, (b) by Franchinus of Cosenza, but 'tis no Proof that they were ingraved upon the Tomb of the deceased. Paul Jovius does not say they were. Several Persons are mistaken concerning the Age of Laurentius Valla, and the Year of his death. Some assure us that he signaliz'd himself in the Council of Constance, in 1420. (c) Claruit in Concilio Constantiensi personaliter sub Sigismundo Imperatore Anno Domini 1420. Here are two Errors, for that Council began in 1414, and ended in 1418. And we have seen that Laurentius Valla was 50 Years of Age in 1465. So that he was but three Years old when that Council ended. (d) Gesner hath committed the same fault; he hath made him flourish in (e) 1410. The learned Mr. Huet hath also patronized this Opinion; for making Casaubon speak towards the latter end of the Reign of Henry IV, he makes him say (f) that two hundred Years ago Laurentius Valla Translated Herodotus. His death is placed in 1457, by Paulus Jovius (g), in 1467 by (h) Spondanus, and in 1495 by Moreri.

(B) He very vigorously attacked the Barbarity——— But writing a History.] Paul Jovius furnisheth me with an Evidence of these two things. (i) Indignatus tandiu corrumpi seculum leguleorum & sophistarum immani conspiratione, optimasque artes inculta sermonis barbarie defœdari, Elegantiarum libros edidit, traditis Romanæ elocutionis præceptis ex accurata veterum scriptorum observatione, quibus juventus æmulandi studio ad detergendas corruptarum literarum sordes accenderetur——— apud Alphonsum regem de avitis bellis in Hispania, atque Sicilia gestis historia perscripta est, sed eo styli charactere, ut ejus minime videri possit, qui cæteris elegantiarum præcepta tradiderit.

(C) Which drew on him a great many Enemies] On which head read the following Passage of Paul Jovius: (k) Fuit Valla ingenio maxime libero, ob idque mordaci, contentiosoque, utpote qui aliena satirico dente facile perstringeret, & lites in literis, quasi id opus esset, adversus ignorantes acerrimas sereret. Extant enim Invectivarum, & recriminationum aliquot libri, erudite satisque perscripti; quibus dum læsi nominis famam tueretur, Facium Ligurem, Panhormitam, Pogium, & Raudensem jugulasse videri possit. I shall specifie the Titles of some of his Works, which will be sufficient to prove him one of the greatest Duellists of the Republick of Learning, and that we may justly compare his life to that of a Gladiator. Antidoti in Pogium Florentinum libri 4. in quibus promiscue & mores ac vitam hominis & impuram dictionem notat. Apologus & actus Scenicus in eundem. Adversus eundem libellus sive dialogus secundus. In Antonium Raudensem annotationum libellus. In Benedictum Morandum Bononiensem libri duo sive confutatio prior & posterior. In Bartolemæum Facium Ligurem & Anto. Panhormitam recriminationum libri 4. He never forgave his Adversaries one Word or Phrase that relished of Barbarism; which gave occasion to the Fiction after his death, that he rendred himself so formidable in Hell, that Pluto dared not presume to speak Latin. To which it was added that Jupiter would have given him a place in Heaven, if he had not been afraid of introducing a Censurer of his Words. Spondanus cites the 4 Verses, which contain this ill-natur'd Jest. (l) Acerrimâ mordacitate suâ & aliorum doctorum virorum veterum recentiorumque satyricâ perstrictione infamis. Ut non illepide quidam in illum mortuum, apud Trithemium (1) sic luserit.

Nunc postquam manes defunctus Valla petivit,
Non audet Pluto verba Latina loqui.
Jupiter hunc cæli dignatus parte fuisset,
Censorem linguæ, sed timet esse suæ.

Cato the Censor was rallyed almost in the same manner.

Πυῤῥὸν, (m) πανδακέτην, γλαυκόμματον, οὐδὲ θανόντα
Πόρκιον εἰς ἀΐδην Φερσεφόνη δέχεται.
Ruffum, mordacem, glaucum, ne quidem exanimatum
Porcium in infernum Persephone recepit.

Another Epitaph on our Valla was,

Ohe ut Valla silet solitus qui parcere nulli est!
Si quæris quid agat, nunc quoque mordet humum(n).

Several have believed that in writing of Books, his end was not the Instruction of his Readers, but to Censure both the living and the dead. He (o) fell upon Aristotle, Cicero, Virgil, and paid no respect to any besides Epicurus. The latter was a fit Man to be praised by those, who loved to be singular. All the World cried out against, and abhorred him; which perhaps was the reason that rendred him admirable to Valla's Eyes. This Thought is not in Pontanus whom I here cite: (p) Qui cum Laurentio familiarius vixerunt, affirmant illum eo nequaquam consilio in Grammaticis scripsisse, ac dialecticis, quo doceret, disciplinasque ab ignoratione vindicaret, atque à sorde, verum ut malediceret, obloquendoque detraheret de fama atque autoritate rerum scriptoribus; tum illis qui exemplo sunt ad scribendum aliis propter antiquitatem majestatemque dicendi, ac præcipiendi, tum illis ipsis, qui tunc viverent, quos dubitaverit ipse quidem dicere, profiterique palam, habere se quoque in Christum spicula. This Learned Man, notwithstanding, did not want Defenders: read the Writings of Floridus Sabinus, and Erasmus's Epistle to (q) Christopher Fisher in 1505, occasioned by Valla's Notes on the New Testament, which he found in a Library, and which he Publish'd. See also the 3d Letter of Erasmus's 7 Book of Epistles.

(D) He fell on the Ecclesiasticks, and spoke very boldly of certain things.] It is agreed that his Censure was dable that thoſe who diſputed with him on points of Literature only; they were not leſs able to Rail, and beſides could dart the thunders of the Inquiſition, and deliver him up to the Penal Laws of the Secular Power. They Proſecuted him ſo violently that he had been Burnt alive †, if King Alfonſo had not Moderated their Rigour. They were then obliged to content themſelves with Whipping him round the Jacobins Cloiſter. He returned to Rome *, where he found ſo good Patrons that they obtained for him the Pope's Favour, and leave to Teach, beſides a Penſion. He Died there the 1ſt of Auguſt 1465, as appears by ‖ the Epitaph which his Mother cauſed to be Engraven in the Church of St. John de Lateran of which he had been Canon. I ſhall give you the ſubſtance of a very long Relation (E) which I have met with of his Quarrel with the Inquiſitors. We find beſides that he had drawn on himſelf the violent Enmity of a Civilian,

---

* He [illegible] Hankius de Romanarum rerum scriptor. lib. 2. parte 1. pag. 116. Orthuinus Gratius in fasciculo rerum expetendarum, says he, was expelled from Rome.

(a) Vossius de hist. Latinis lib. 3. c. 7. p. 580. Moreri has transcribed this fault

(b) Paulus Jovius in elog. c. 13. p. 37.

(c) Trithemius de scriptor. ecclesiast.

(d) Gesner. in biblioth. fol. 477.

(e) And not in the Year 1510. as Hankius de scriptor. rerum Romanar. tom. 2. parte 1. c. 11. pag. 118. says he did.

(f) I have set down his words in the Remark K.

(g) Jovius in elog. c. 13. p. 37. Boissardus in iconib. 13. apud. Hankium ubi supra pag. 117. Aub. Miræus in auctario scriptor. ecclesiast. p. 275. Zeillerus in Histor. parte 2. pag. 154. agree with Paul Jovius.

(h) Spondan. in an. ad an. 1467. n. 13. which he grounds upon Paul Jovius, who only mentions the Year 1457. (i) Paul. Jov. ubi supra pag. 36. (k) Id. ib.

was not only Perſonal, but alſo Real in ſome reſpects; for he cenſured the Faults and ſeveral of the Opinions of the Eccleſiaſticks: (a) Ipſos etiam ſui ſeculi Theologos ſeu ignorantiâ ſupinâ ſeu inveteratâ perſuaſione variis opinionibus indormientes, ad veri ſenſum a ſtilo excitare nihil veritus eſt——quod in publicis Scriptis quaſdam Eccleſiæ Romanæ traditiones erroris damnaviſſet, aliis ipſe gravis cenſor, hæreticæ pravitatis cenſores ſibi graviſſimos ſentiebat. He was Advertiſed that unleſs he was weary of his Life, he ought to refrain from cenſuring the Eccleſiaſticks, and writing ſuch Tracts as his refutation of Conſtantin's Donation. Two things then raiſed him Enemies, he had galled the Sacred Heads by cenſuring both their Morals and Opinions. (b) Et ſane a Franciſco Philelpho etiam commonitus eſt ſatyrâ luculentâ, ut niſi vitæ ſatur ſit, abſtinere velit a perſtringendis ſacri ordinis viris, ac ſimilibus ſcribendis, uti illa adverſus donationem Conſtantinam. Satyra ea extſtat Hecatoſtichorum lib. 2 ſat. 4. Several take one of theſe two things for the true cauſe of the Perſecution which he ſuffered, and the other for the pretence. His perſonal Satyrs irritated the Inquiſitors to Revenge, after which they endeavoured to Convict him of Hereſy. To ſatisfy their Reſentment they accuſed Laurentius Valla of Hereſy in ſeveral points of great Conſequence, ſuch as the Myſtery of the Trinity, the Doctrine of Free will, and Vows of Celibacy, &c. 'Tis affirmed that he was Condemned to be burnt, the Execution of which Sentence he eſcaped only by the Favour of the King of Naples; that he was obliged publickly to Abjure the Aſſertions for which he had been Condemned, and beſides to ſuffer the Chaſtiſement of the Laſh in the Jacobins Monaſtery. Spondanus's words in the Year 1447 are: (c) Eodem tempore Laurentius Valla Romanus, elegantiæ quidem pro ſeculo, ſed pro quolibet tempore virulentiſſimæ linguæ homo; Neapoli exiſtens, cum quaſdam propoſitiones hæreticas aſſeruiſſet delatus ad Inquiſitores, & in carcerem truſus, damnatuſque pro hæretico, beneficio Alfonſi Regis pœnam ignis evaſit; propoſitionibus tamen publicè ejuratis, virgis, privatim per clauſtra monaſterii Prædicatorum manibus revinctis cæſus. He adds (d) that Poggius inſinuates that Laurentius Valla had erred on thoſe Articles, which I have mentioned above. It is very obſervable that this Annaliſt doth not relate the Propoſitions which Laurentius Valla was obliged to retract; he doth not ſay that they contained Hereſies relating to the Trinity, Free-will, &c. he ſaith only that one of Laurentius Valla's Enemies inſinuated it. This may make us think that this Man's Doctrine was miſrepreſented by captious and malitious Extracts, and that it was charged as Erroneous, tho' it was not really ſo. Obſerve that notwithſtanding all the Miſchievous Efforts of the Neapolitan Inquiſitors, he lived Honourably at Rome; he there obtained permiſſion to Teach; he enjoyed a Penſion, and the Pope's Eſteem. This confirms the Aſſertion of thoſe who conjecture he was no Heretick, but that it was reſolved he ſhould be Chaſtiſed for having Cenſured the Clergy. See the following Remark.

(E) Relation which I have met with of his Quarrels with the Inquiſitors.] The Author whom I cite doth not mention theſe Quarrels before he hath related a diſpute which Laurentius Valla maintained on a Juridical Subject. A Civilian cenſured him very ſeverely: (e) You are, ſaid he, a Shoemaker, you go beyond your Laſt, you do not content your ſelf with the Study of Philology, you thruſt your Sickle into other Peoples Corn, and pretend to underſtand the Roman Law. Explain me then that place of the Code, continued he, ſhewing him the famous puzling Law (f), Quinque pedum Præſcriptione. Valla replyed that nothing could be more unjuſt than to aſſert that he was abſolutely Ignorant of the Roman Law, if he did not explain a Paſſage which ſcarce any Perſon had yet underſtood; that he ought not to propoſe that difficulty to thoſe who only believe they have ſome Knowledge of the Ancient Law, but to ſuch as pretend to be Ignorant of no part of it. (g) Quid improbius quam velle damnare me, ut nihil juris intelligentem, quia locum aut nulli, aut vix ulli intellectum non expoſuerim? Debuiſſe illum proponi non ei qui aliquid juris ſe intelligere diceret, ſed ei qui omnia. He nevertheleſs by his Elucidation of the Queſtion diſcovered that he very well underſtood the Roman Laws; after which in his turn he propoſed a Queſtion to the Civilian which ſilenced him. This Aggreſſor finding himſelf gravelled by the Queſtions put to him concerning the Right of Preſcriptions Eſtabliſhed in the XII. Tables, withdrew in a Rage, and from that time conceived ſuch a Mortal Hatred againſt Valla that he attempted his Death. (h) Alia e Jure quæſtione petita adverſarium ad ſilentium adegit. Nam cum de Jure Uſucapionum ex duodecim tabulis nonnihil rogaret, in eas anguſtias eundem illum ſuum adverſarium adduxit, ut hic in conclave, velut furens ſe receperit, atque ex eo tempore homo vindictæ cupidiſſimus, odio pluſquam Vatiniano Vallam fuerit proſequutus, vitæque ejus inſidiatus. This is the firſt part of Boxhornius's Relation, the ſecond follows.

As the Knowledge of the Divines is more holy and more neceſſary, continues he, and their Authority greater, Valla could not attack their Follies without expoſing himſelf to the greateſt dangers. (i) Ut Theologorum & ſanctior magiſque neceſſaria diſciplina eſt, & auctoritas major, ita cum eorum quoque ignorantiâ & putidiſſimis ineptiis commiſſus, vitam ac omnes fortunas ſuas in ultimum pene diſcrimen adduxit. He was preſent at a Lent Sermon, Preached by a Cordelier (k) at Naples, he was one of the Auditory, I ſay, when the Monk took for his Text the Apoſtles Creed. And having obſerved the Preacher to affirm that St. Peter ſaid I Believe in God the Father Almighty, that St. Andrew added, Creator of Heaven and Earth, and that the other Apoſtles furniſhed the reſt of the Articles in their turn; after the end of the Sermon he asked (l) Angelillus Campanus, whether he knew any Authors who related that the Creed was compoſed in this manner. Campanus anſwered that he had never met with any ſuch thing in any Book, and that this Monk was the only Perſon whom he ever heard aver that St. Jerome was Born at Rome. They made him a viſit, and asked him where he had read that this Holy Father was a Roman. Several affirm it, replyed he, but who denies it? Valla (m) Laughed at this Incongruity; for 'tis he that affirms who ought to produce his Evidence, when required; and others are not to name thoſe who deny it. Yet he did not fail to obſerve to the Preacher that St. Jerome makes himſelf a Native of a Town in Dalmatia: (n) Hieronymus ipſe non ſe Romanum dicit, ſed Pannonium aut Dalmatam ex oppido Stridone. Some, anſwered the Monk, ſay he was a Roman, and others that he was a Dalmatian. There were two faults in this Anſwer. Could any Witneſs worth hearing be oppoſed to St. Jerome himſelf? And after all, ought he not to have Named his Evidence? Valla finding the Ignorance and Obſtinacy of the Man (o) left that Subject and proceeded to the Queſtion concerning the Creed. What Foundation have you, ſaid he,

---

† See the Remark D.

‖ See the Remark A.

(a) Boxhornius ſupra pag. [illegible]

(b) Voſſius de hiſtor. Lat. pag. [illegible]

(c) Spondanus ad ann. 1447. n. 10. pag. m. [illegible]

(d) Quod probris narrans Poggius ſermonis in eum invectivâ, erraſſe dicit in articulis Perſonæ in Deo, Trinitatis, Liberi Arbitrii, & Virginitatis ſanctimonialium. Id. ibid.

(e) Vallam aliquando acerbe increpuit quod, ut ſutor ultra crepidam, humaniorum literarum cultu haud contentus falcem mitteret in meſſem alienam, & juris Romani ſcientiam ſibi arrogaret. Boxhornius, hiſtor. Univerſ. pag. 953. edit. 1652.

(f) Quem (locum) obſcuriſſimum, & a nemine ejus ætatis Juriſconſultorum intellectum, imo depoſitum eſſe conſtabat. Id. ib. p. 954. See Abelard Remark Y.

(g) Id. ib.

(h) Id. ib.

(i) Id. ib.

(k) His Name was Antonius Betontinus.

(l) He was Secretary to the King.

(m) Primum hominis ſtultitiam riſu Valla excepit quaſi alius deberet oſtendere qui negaret, & non ipſe qui hoc affirmaverat, & quis traderet rogabatur. Id. ibid.

(n) Id. ib.

(o) Cognita hominis imperitia & improbitate, ultra noluit inſtare. Id. ibid. pag. 955.

him, whom he had gravelled in a Diſputation. He was provoked to this Diſpute by an air of Contempt, which doubtleſs increaſed the Rage of the Aggreſſor. He is blamed for being a little too Vain; for he made too great a ſhew of his Wit and Learning, which he diſplayed with more Pomp and (F) Affectation in the converſation of Learned Men, than in his Works. This is the Character of thoſe who aim at being paid on the ſpot, and are willing to be the Witneſſes of the Admiration they aſpire after. He Embraced Epicurus's (G) Opinion of the ſovereign Good, but ſo rectifyed as to render it agreeable to the Principles of Chriſtianity. He was an immoderate admirer of Quintilian (H), and affected to deſpiſe Ariſtotle. It is Storied of him that at Table he once let fall a Hint, that he had Arrows in his Quiver againſt (I) the Meſſiah himſelf. He did not underſtand Greek well enough to undertake, as he did, the Tranſlation of Thucydides, Herodotus, and Homer's Iliad: Theſe Verſi-

ons

to aſſert that it was formed by pieces by the Apoſtles? The Doctors of the Church, anſwered the Monk, have informed me ſo. Name them, replyed he, cite them. I have already anſwered you, ſaid he, and (a) then growing very Angry he ſaid that Valla was an impious Man, and an Enemy to the Chriſtian Religion. Some days after he defamed him in a Sermon, and continued to inveigh againſt him ſo outragiouſly, that King Alphonſus was obliged to ſtop the Torrent of his Calumnies. Valla believing himſelf Challenged to diſpute with him, affixed to the great Church all the Propoſitions which he found Cenſured, and offered to maintain them againſt all Opponents. To this fight he Invited ſeveral Spectators, and even the King's Son. He prepared a very ſpacious Hall; Every Body was very attentive on the Iſſue of this Affair, but Valla's Enemies would Hazard nothing: In order to ſtrengthen themſelves they made Intereſt at Court that Valla might be forbidden to proceed any farther. He obeyed, but inſulted his Adverſaries by a Latin Diſtich which he affixed to the Door of the Hall.

Rex pacis, miſerans ſternendas Marte phalanges
Victoris cupidum continuit gladium.

After this they became ſo Incenſed that they uſed their utmoſt endeavours either to have him Condemned to Death, or a perpetual Impriſonment. They cited him before the Arch-Biſhop's Vicar. He appeared and was ſurprized to ſee a numerous crowd of Monks; for he never once ſuſpected that this Intrigue was of that Importance. He was asked whether he did not believe that the Creed was compiled by the Apoſtles? No, ſaid he, but by the Council of Nice, and I ground my ſelf on very ſtrong Reaſons. The Inquiſitor who interrogated him, declared that the Anſwer was Heretical. Some Letters were produced, in which Valla Corrected ſome Errors, which by the negligence of the Copiſts had crept into the Pope's Decrees, and it was urged againſt him that his Inſolence deſerved Burning. He perceived the danger, and proteſted that on all theſe Heads he believed as the Church believed. They preſſed him to Condemn and Retract his Writings; but he deſired that firſt they would pleaſe to ſhew where he was Miſtaken, otherwiſe they would plainly make it appear that they did not aim at the Correction of his Heart, but only at that of his Tongue. (b) Cur non potius vos docetis eſſe revocanda? an mavultis oris mei quam animi emendationem? quo enim pacto ego emendor, niſi id quod ore fateor, animo etiam ſentiam? Et quomodo ex animo ſentiam niſi ſententiam, quam ut veriſſimam hactenus tueor, vos falſi convincatis? (c) A Biſhop then laid hold on him and cryed out, Wicked Wretch that thou art, thy Pride muſt be immediately abated. Valla repeated as before, I believe all that the Church believes. He was afterwards asked what he thought of the ten Categories. What, replyed he, do they belong to matters of Faith as the ten Commandments of the Divine Law? (d) Why, replyed they, ſhou'd they not belong to Religion? Are you Ignorant that the Logical Doctrine, ſenſus diviſus, ſenſus compoſitus, ſerves to explain the moſt important Controverſies in Theology? To ſhorten the diſpute, anſwered Valla, I declare, that tho' our Holy Mother the Church knows nothing of the matter, yet I believe all that ſhe believes concerning it. Age, inquit Valla, rem compendii faciamus: etſi iſta mater Eccleſia ignoret, tamen idem de illa credo quod mater Eccleſia. They would have proceeded; but the King having ſent Meſſengers to protect Valla, they ſtopt there.

I find two faults in this long Relation of Bzovius: One is that he dates all theſe things in 1401, which is before the Birth of Valla; the other that he cites no Author.

(F) He diſplayed with more Pomp —— in the Converſation —— than in his Works.] Jovianus Pontanus makes this Obſervation after having very much Praiſed the Modeſty of Pomponius Lætus. Contra vero, continues he (e), Laurentius Vallenſis, multæ vir doctrinæ, ingeniique in primis acuti, popularibus in congreſſibus, ac literatorum circulis oſtentatione diſciplinæ judicatus eſt fuiſſe ſtudioſior, ne dicam parum modeſtus, ut in iis circulis multo appareret arrogantior, quam in libris ipſis, quos ſcriptos reliquit. Cumque non pauca in Dialecticis admonuiſſet adverſus horum temporum artis ejus magiſtros, eo ſeſe efferebat, palam ut diceret, nullam eſſe Logicam præter Laurentianam.

(G) Epicurus's Opinion of the Sovereign Good.] See his Book de voluptate & vero bono, which was put into the Index as a Book, the reading of which is prohibited. See alſo the Book, which he calls Apologia pro ſe & contra calumniatores ad Eugenium quartum Pont. Maximum. You will there find that he chiefly juſtifies what he had taught, that Pleaſure is the Sovereign Good. (f) Defendit ſe ſuaque ſcripta, & PRÆCIPUE quod voluptatem ſtatuerit ſummum bonum, Virtutes ancillas eſſe voluptatis, Prudentiam non a malitia, Nihil amari propter aliud, nec etiam propter ſe, Præſcientiam Dei non obſtare arbitrii libertati, Symbolum non factum eſſe ab apoſtolis per particulas.

(H) An immoderate admirer of Quintilian, and affected to deſpiſe Ariſtotle.] Voſſius furniſhes me with all I want on this Head. Which I borrow from that place where he attempts to prove that Ariſtotle is the greateſt Maſter of Rhetorick that we can imitate. Neque nos, adds he (g), aut Auſonii judicium movet, qui Latinorum tantum rationem habuit: aut Vallenſis (quamvis viri non minus de Rep. literaria meriti, quam Camillus olim de Romana) elogium terret: quia ille, nec in Fabio laudando modum invenit, nec in Ariſtotele, Tullio, Priſciano, (& quo non, ſi unum Fabium demas?) inſectando, ſæpe habebat cauſſam. The following words are obſervable: Videtur autem vir ille nimis quantum liberaliter Quinctilianum ſuſtuliſſe laudibus, quod videret Georgium Trapezuntium perpetuum eſſe in hoc inceſſendo. Nam Pontanus & lib. iv. Antidoti ſcribit, ea de cauſſa ſibi ſemeſtri integro cum Trapezuntio fuiſſe contentionem; neque in hac gratiam cum eo rediiſſe, niſi cum is publice docendi provinciam deſereret. I believe with Voſſius that the Spirit of Contradiction hurried Laurentius Valla to this exceſs of Admiration of Quintilian: He had an Adverſary who continually declaimed againſt this Rhetorician, he wanted no other reaſon to eſpouſe the contrary Party. In his Logick he depreſſes as much as in him lies the Authority of Ariſtotle.

(I) Arrows in his Quiver againſt the Meſſiah himſelf.] We are told that he uttered this Blaſphemy to Antonius Panormita. This was doubtleſs whiſpered in his Ear (h) and not ſpoke ſo loud that all at the Table could hear it. Panormita trembled with horrour and would not ſpeak to him. Taceo, ſaith Voſſius (i), quod neque in Chriſtum (horrendum!) ſpicula ſibi deeſſe dicebat; ut quidem ſcripſit Jovianus Pontanus (1): & ante eum Poggius ſecunda in Vallam Invectiva (2), ubi exprobrat, quod hoc in convivio dixerit Antonio Panormitæ: qui propterea exhorruerit, & alloquio ulterius dignum negarit. Spondanus (k) has not forgotten this,

after

(a) Vehementer in Vallam velut impium hominem & Chriſtianæ rei Eccleſiæque hoſtem exorſus eſt ſtomachari. Id. ib.

(b) Id. ib.

(c) Tum Aleſanus Epiſcopus ejuſdem Ordinis (Prædicatorum) manus ei injecit, & tibi, inquit, homo ſceleſtiſſime ſuperbia hæc deponenda eſt. Id. ibid.

(d) Quidni, inquit Aleſanus, ad fidem iſta pertineant? An ignoras ex illo dogmate Dialecticorum de ſenſu diviſo & compoſito graviſſimas in Theologia controverſias explicari. Id. ibid.

(e) Jov. Pontan. de ſermone, [illegible]

(f) Geſner. in Biblioth. fol. 478.

(g) Voſſius de Rhetoricæ natura ac conſtitutione pag. 41.

(h) Ut Pontanus [illegible] habere [illegible] quoque in Chriſtum ſpicula.

(i) Voſſius ubi ſupra.

(1) Lib. de ſermone.

(2) [illegible] edit. 1511.

(k) Spond. [illegible] ann. [illegible] n. [illegible] on (K) are not good, but his Notes on the New Teſtament are not amiſs. See what Mr. Simon † ſaith of them. He was much more Learned in Latin than in Greek, as his Book of Elegancies (L) compared with his verſions of Thucydides, &c. proves: He is falſly accuſed of having ſtolen it. (M) Ludovicus Vives praiſes him for a thing which deſerves to be known. Mr. Varillas hath committed (N) ſeveral Errors.

VALLA (GEORGE) a Native of Piacenza. He was a Phyſician and Profeſſor of polite Learning at Venice, and Flouriſhed ‡ after the middle of the XV. Century. He was very well acquainted with the Greek and Latin Tongues, and wrote ſeveral Books of (A) Phyſick and Litterature. He ſo * irritated after having told us that this Critick ſpared neither St. Auguſtin, St. Jerom, nor Boethius. We may add that he had no Mercy on Thomas Aquinas. "(*) His ſtyle is too free, cenſuring too "ſeverely the Faults of Remigius, St. Thomas Aquinas "and ſome other Writers, who preſumed to comment on St. Paul (according to him) without any "Knowledge of the Greek Tongue. He rejects "as a Story what is commonly ſaid of that Apoſtle "appearing to St. Thomas Aquinas, and aſſuring him "that no Man ſo well underſtood his Epiſtles as "himſelf. If this had been true, ſaith he, he had not "failed to give him Notice of his Faults." (3) Puteam niſi id commentitium: Nam cur eum Paulus non admonuit erratorum ſuorum? He ſeveral times injudiciouſly reprehended the Popes, as when he accuſed Cœleſtin the IV. Father † Theophilus Raynaud loads him with Invectives on this account.

(K) Theſe verſions are not good.] Let us ſee what Mr. Huet ſuppoſes that Caſaubon thought of 'em. (a) Annis ab hinc ducentis Herodotum & Thucydidem Latinis literis exponebat Laurentius Valla, in eâ bene & eleganter dicendi copiâ, quam totis voluminibus explicavit, inelegans tamen, & penè barbarus; Græcis ad hoc literis leviter tinctus, ad auctorum ſententias parum attentus, oſcitans ſæpe, & alias res agens, ſidem apud eruditos decoxit.

(L) His Book of elegancies—— proves: He is falſly accuſed of having ſtolen it.] This Book hath been Printed a vaſt many times. He ſays in the Epiſtle Dedicatory that it was publiſhed, without his order or Conſent. This Epiſtle Dedicatory was inſcribed to Tortellius Chamberlain to Nicolas the V. It is without any date, notwithſtanding which one may ſee that it was written in that Pope's time. In thoſe days it was very difficult to collect ſo many Obſervations: It required a vaſt ſtudy and a ſtrong Genius. The great ſucceſs of this Book angred the Author's Enemies, and moved them to ſay that he appeared in borrowed Feathers, and that the piece was really a production of Aſconius Pedianus. This Calumny, which at the bottom very much redounded to Valla's Glory, met with no Credit. Voſſius was very much in the right to call it impudent: (b) Admodum perfrictæ frontis fuiſſe neceſſe eſt, qui, cum Laurentii Vallenſis Elegantiarum libros in honore eſſe dolerent, in vulgus ſparſere, eos jam olim in Germania fuiſſe repertos, quodque ſcripti eſſent literis fugientibus ac fatiſcentibus vix certum cognitum indicatis tandem fuiſſe, Aſconii Pediani eſſe opus: cujus calumniæ meminit Mariangelus Accurſius in diatribarum ſuarum defenſione, cui Teſtudo nomen fecit.

(M) Ludovicus Vives praiſes him for a thing, which deſerves, &c.] Notwithſtanding Valla's great diligence in diſcovering the propriety of Terms, and teaching it his Readers, yet he ſpared his pains when he met with an obſcene Word, and ſeemed rather to deſire that its import ſhould remain unknown. This Vives with a great deal of Reaſon approves. (c) Bene Laurentius Valla de verbo quodam obſcœno, ignorari malo quam me docente ſciri.

(N) Mr. Varillas hath committed ſeveral Errors.] I. He ſaith (d) that Laurentius Valla, finding no longer any Body to cenſure in the Court of Rome, went to that of Naples. This is a double miſtake, he hath ill Tranſlated his Original, and advanced a thing, that has but little Truth in it. The Latin which Varillas Tranſlates, ſignifies that Laurentius Valla (e) finding nothing at the Pope's Court which pleaſed him, went to Alphonſus King of Naples. Is this to ſay, that he found no longer any Body to cenſure the Court of Rome? Doth not this rather inſinuate the Contrary, that there remained yet a great many to Cenſure? For when every thing in a Court diſpleaſes, the Subject of Cenſure is not exhauſted. We may take it for granted that a Perſon of Valla's Humour could never leave Rome for want of objects on which to employ his Cenſure, as having already ſaid all that he could againſt that Court. II. Valla did not offer to write the Hiſtory of the moſt Illuſtrious events of Naples: But he wrote the Hiſtory of Ferdinand King of Caſtile and Arragon, the Father of Alphonſus King of Naples. Here are two Faults; Paul Jovius's (f) Latin ill Tranſlated, and a falſity in the Fact it ſelf. III. Mr. Varillas too much exceeds the bounds of Juſtice in the Sentence which he pronounces againſt that Book of Valla. He laboured therein—— with ſo little ſucceſs, they are his own words, that his adverſaries had room enough to reproach his falling into the Faults which he had cenſured in others. He commits a third time the two Errors, which I have mention'd. Paul Jovius's Latin (g) ſaith no ſuch thing, and it is utterly falſe that Laurentius Valla in Writing this Book was Guilty of all the Barbariſms with which he Charges other Authors. IV. No Body believes, tho' Mr. Varillas's aſſures it, that Laurentius Valla exiled himſelf from the Court of Naples becauſe this Work was ſlighted. He had other and more ſevere (h) diſgraces, which forced him to leave that Court. V. It is very Ridiculous to imagine that this Learned Man's Mother made his Epitaph. It is true we find theſe Words in the Inſcription on his Tomb, Catharina Mater filio pientiſſimo poſuit; but according to the ſtyle of Epitaphs, this imports no more, than that his Mother cauſed this Tomb to be erected. And allowing this falſe Principle of Varillas, we may eaſily believe that ſeveral Perſons who never underſtood one Latin Word, have written very fine Epitaphs in that Language; for we find a great many under which we read mæſtiſſima conjux or mater, or filia poſuit, or mæſtiſſimi filii poſuerunt. VI. As one fault often introduces another, Mr. Varillas falls into a freſh miſtake; for believing that Laurentius Valla's Mother made her Son's Epitaph, he aſſures us that no Body would ſave her that trouble. VII. As to what he ſaith of Valla that he gave an ill example in the Common Wealth of Learning, by publiſhing firſt intire Books of Invectives and recriminations, I refer him to Mr. de Larroque, who hath ſhewed him (i) that Saint Gregory Nazianzen, and St. Hilary publiſhed Invectives, the one againſt the Emperor Julian and the other againſt the Emperor Conſtantius. We may yet go higher, for tho' there is room to doubt whether Salluſt's Invective againſt Cicero, and that of Cicero againſt Salluſt are really the performances of thoſe Authors whoſe Names they bear, yet it is certain that they are Older than Conſtantin's time. It is not to be pretended that Varillas intended only to ſpeak of Chriſtian Writers; for the Republick of Letters of which he is ſpeaking doth not exclude Paganiſm. But if we ſhould have the complaiſance to confine our ſelves to the limits of Chriſtianity, we ſhould yet find other Examples beſides thoſe mentioned by Mr. Larroque. Have we not two (k) works full of Invectives, Written by Ruffinus againſt St. Jerom? I elſewhere (l) mention an Invective written in the very age of Laurentius Valla, but before he thought of writing his. And Petrarch who preceded him one Hundred Years did not he write Invectives againſt a Phyſician? VIII. It is not true that Laurentius Valla (m) praiſed no Grammarian of his time beſides Candidus December. This is to be Guilty of the ſame Fault a fourth time; for the Fact is utterly falſe, and he hath very ill Tranſlated his (n) Original: Paul Jovius's Words tend to the praiſe of December without excluding any other Grammarian.

(A) Several Books of Phyſick and Literature.] The Titles of ſeveral of which are: De tuenda ſanitate per victum, & quæ ſecundum cujuſque naturam in victu ſequenda aut fugienda ſunt. De humani

[illegible] * Simon Hiſtoire critique des commentateurs du Nouveau Teſtament chap. [illegible] pag. [illegible]

(a) Huetius de claris interpretibus pag. m. 218.

(3) Laur. Vall. Not. in Epiſt. I. ad Cor. Cap. 9. v. 11

† Theoph. Raynaudus in hoplotheca, ſerie 1. cap. [illegible] pag. m. 16, 17.

(b) Voſſius de hiſtor. Latinis lib. 3. c. 27. pag. 144. He quotes the title of Mariangelus Accurſius.

(c) Lud. Vives de tradendis diſciplinis lib. 3. pag. m. 237.

(d) Varillas, Anecdotes de Florence pag. 166.

(e) Quod nihil in aula Pontificis ſibi placeret Neapolim ad Alfonſum regem ſe contulit. Jovius ubi ſupra pag. 36.

† In the [illegible] of his Critical Hiſtory of the Commentators on the New Teſtament.

* Pierius Valerianus de literatorum infelicitate lib. 1. pag. m. 17.

(f) Apud quem (Alfonſum regem) de avitis bellis in Hiſpania atque Sicilia geſtis hiſtoria perſcripta eſt. Id. ib.

(g) Eo ſtyli charactere ut ejus minime videri poſſit qui cæteris elegantiarum præcepta tradiderit. Id. ibid.

(h) See above the Remark D.

(i) Larroque, preface to the Nouvelles accuſations contre Mr. Varillas.

(k) They are commonly Printed in the 9th Volume of St. Jerom's works.

(l) In the Remark B. of the Article Vergerius

(m) Varillas, ubi ſupra pag. 167

(n) Candidus December .. Laurentii Vallæ teſtimonio exactiſſimæ cenſuræ Grammaticus Paulus Jovius in elog. c. 15. pag. 39.

tated the Duke of Milan by his too impetuous Zeal for the Trivultian Faction that the Duke ſo violently perſecuted him, as to cauſe him to be Impriſoned at Venice it ſelf. He endured the moſt grievous hardſhips in this confinement; but being tryed was declared innocent, and his Poſt reſtored to him. Which he did not long enjoy, a ſudden Death hurrying him out of the World ſoon after. He was juſt going out of his Apartment in order to Read his Lecture, nothing ſtopped him but a Natural Neceſſity to go to the Privy, where he expired in the ſame manner as Arius the Hereſiarch. His Scholars waited a tedious while in the Auditory, and were (B) ſeized with a deep Melancholy when acquainted with the Reaſon why he did not come. He was that day to continue his Explication of a paſſage in Cicero's Tuſculanæ Quæſtiones, which concerns the Immortality of the Soul ||. Pierius Valerianus, who informs me of this particular, makes very judicious reflections (C) on the Nature of this kind of Death.

|| Taken from Pierius Valerianus ib.

VALLA

mani corporis partibus. De differentiis pulſuum. De corporis commodis & incommodis. Univerſæ medicinæ ex Græcis potiſſimum contractæ libri ſeptem. It is obſerved in Lindenius renovatus, that the laſt Tract (a) is a part of that intituled expetenda & fugienda. We may alſo add that our Valla Tranſlated out of Greek Rhazes de peſtilentia, Pſellus de victus ratione, Alexander Aphrodiſienſis de febrium cauſis & differentiis, Nemeſius de Natura hominis (b) and ſome (c) others. It is to be obſerved that Mr. Huet (d) calls him a very ill Tranſlator. The Books of literature compoſed by Valla are either ſome Treatiſes of Grammar and Rhetorick, or ſome Commentaries on ſome Books of Tully, on Horace's art of Poetry, on Juvenal, &c. He alſo commented on the Second Book of Pliny: That Work was Printed at Venice in 1502. in 4. and muſt needs be very ſcarce ſince (e) Father Hardouin could not meet with one. But we muſt not forget his Book de expetendis & fugiendis rebus: It is a ſort of Body or collection of all Sciences, of which Paul Jovius ſpeaks ſomewhat contemptibly; for it is ſcarce to be doubted that the Words which I here cite relate to this compoſure. (f) Diſciplinas, literaſque omnes, uno ingenti volumine complexus, multa potius didiciſſe, quam in eo celeri tranſcurſu perdiſcenda poſteris reliquiſſe videtur. Quandoquidem coacervandis omnis, indefeſſique ſcribendis, requiſitus ille Romanæ elocutionis ſpiritus omnino defuerit, quo uno voluminum vita præclarè alitur, longiſſiméque producitur. John Peter Valla the Author's Son cauſed it to be Printed, and very humbly acknowledged that the Work was not perfect: He (g) makes ſeveral excuſes to the Reader that Death had prevented his Father's putting his laſt Hand to it. This Work is divided into 49 Books or 7 Weeks. It was very much criticized by * Sovel. Geſner obſerves that George Valla borrowed largely from the Greeks without owning it. (h) Nos ſane obſervavimus Georgium Vallam à Græcis permulta diſſimulanter eſſe mutuatum, & non pauca perperam in Latinum ſermonem tranſtuliſſe. He then deſerves to be put into the liſt of Plagiaries.

(B) His Scholars——were ſeized with a deep Melancholy.] The following Citation is longer than the Text requires, but I ſhall ſtill venture to inſert it to ſhew what eſteem Valla's Scholars had for him. (i) Haud ita multo poſt cùm mane ſummo paratus eſſet conferre ſe ad auditorium, ubi tunc Tuſculanas Ciceronis quæſtiones prælegebat, deque animæ immortalitate vehementiſſimè, doctiſſiméque quotidie diſſerebat, dum interim corpori vacaturus excrementa cibi dejecit, animam etiam morte ſubitaria exhalavit. Nos qui quotidie ad admirandam hominis doctrinam ſub matutinum crepuſculum conveniebamus, non prius tali nos doctore defraudatos intelleximus, quam hora profitendi fruſtra elapſa certos, qui moræ cauſam ſciſcitarentur, domum ejus delegavimus, qui redeuntes gymnaſium noſtrum præter omnium ſpem, quia, nullum malæ valetudinis incommodum præceſſerat voce illa erudita ſpoliatum, atque orbatum renunciaverunt.

(C) Pierius Valerianus——makes very judicious reflections on the Nature of this kind of Death.] He firſt obſerves that ſome may think George Valla's dying without any Sickneſs to be a great Happineſs. He afterwards ſaith that according to the Chriſtian Law, ſudden Death ought to be looked on as a misfortune. He then obſerves that according to Philoſophy this accident and all others, which do not depend on us, ought not to paſs for Evils. To be ſhort, he would have us believe that Valla's manner of Death was a Happineſs, ſince it was not preceded by pains and uneaſineſs. (k) Erant qui genus hoc mortis inter mortalium felicitates enumerabunt, quippe nullo dolore prævio, nullaque mortis metu ſtatim exanimari. Nos tamen ex Chriſtianæ pietatis inſtitutis in ærumnis hoc exiſtimamus, ex Philoſophiæ verò præceptis, neque quidem calamitates alias, quæ alterius, non noſtri juris ſunt, mala exiſtimo; ſed erit ſuper hoc alius differendi locus. At fuerit felix Valla, quia cruciatu nullo, nulliuſque rei anxius è vita migravit: nobis certè ejus diſcipulis calamitoſa fuit hominis mors, quibus eruditionis ſuæ tam triſte deſiderium reliquit. All this is very juſt; for the tormenting Pains of a Diſeaſe of 15 Days, and the Languiſhing weakneſs of a long Diſtemper, reduce a Man to a miſerable State naturally ſpeaking. He is uncapable of enjoying both forbidden and lawful pleaſures; he ſuffers in Body and Mind; his Members render him ſenſible of ſeveral uneaſineſſes; his Reaſon is enfeebled; he is peeviſh, he is afraid of Death, and cannot think of the approach of the King of terrours without horrour. A ſudden Death ſpares all this, and ought therefore to paſs for a great Happineſs, unleſs we reflect on the Goſpel Principles. Wherefore Pierius Valerianus very judiciouſly inſerted this exception. Chriſtianity teaches us that a Sinner ſhall not enter into the Kingdom of Heaven without Repentance: And Experience convinces us that all Men are Sinners. According to theſe Principles we ought to look upon ſudden Death as a very great infelicity, ſeeing the Dead Perſon hath not had ſufficient time to Humble himſelf before God, and implore his Mercy through the Merits of JESUS CHRIST. Now a Man, who preſents himſelf an impenitent Sinner before the Throne of God, can expect nothing but Eternal Damnation. This is the Chriſtian Doctrine. 'Tis in vain to alledge that a Man predeſtinated to Salvation, cannot dye impenitent, ſuppoſe his Death never ſo ſudden; and that a reprobate cannot dye penitent tho' his Death is preceded by a tedious Sickneſs: it is in vain, I ſay, to alledge this; for this Remark will not ſatisfy the Scruples of thoſe who Reaſon in this manner: A Man predeſtinated to Salvation always reconciles himſelf to God before his Death; thoſe who dye ſuddenly have no time to Reconcile themſelves to God; they are not therefore predeſtinated to Salvation. I own it would be raſh to aſſert the Minor of this Syllogiſm as certain Truth; but it is at leaſt the moſt ſpecious Argument againſt the Advantage which ſeveral pretend to find in a ſudden Death. They don't fail to obſerve that Diſeaſes are very often great Obſtacles to Repentance, either becauſe they deprive us of our Senſes and Judgment, or becauſe they ſo much enfeeble our Reaſon, and Memory, that we are not very well qualified to reflect on the Goſpel Truths, or to make a good uſe of the Exhortations of a Divine, or becauſe when they prove long and lingring they occaſion Complaints and Murmurs. This diſpoſition leads directly to impenitence, and hardning, and ſometimes to impiety it ſelf. Tho' we ſhould agree to all this, yet we may very juſtly aſſert that Diſeaſes moſt commonly produce a better effect. So that to pronounce George Valla's Death Happy, it ought not to be conſidered according to the Chriſtian Principles but looked on with the Eyes of Auguſtus. In the Judgment of that Emperor, that was the Happy Death which was preceded by no pain; he deſired ſuch a Death for himſelf and his Friends. He found herein what good Men find in the Death of the juſt, that is, the object of his Wiſhes. He obtained al-

moſt

(a) Extant operis ſui expetendorum & fugiendorum libri 24.25.26.27.28.29.30. Mercklinus in Lindenio renovato pag. 342.

(b) Id. ib.

(c) See Geſnerus's Bibliotheca fol. 273.

(d) Nec felicius Georgio Vallæ labor ille ſucceſſit, nam & à Græcis diſſentit ſæpe & quæ aſſequitur non raro pervertit. Huetius de claris interpretibus. See here under Geſnerus's words.

(e) Vide Harduini præfation. in Plinium.

(f) Paulus Jovius in elog. c. 113. pag. 256.

(g) In epiſtola nuncupatoria. See Geſner in Bibliotheca fol. 273.

* Sovel of Man's perfection, Pag. 289, 290.

(h) Geſn. ibid.

(i) Pierius Valerianus de litterator. infelicit. lib. 1. p. 27,28.

(k) Id. ib. pag. 28.

VALLA (NICOLAS) Doctor of Law, and Canon of St. Peter's Church at Rome, lived in the XV. Century. He undertook to Translate Homer's Iliad into Latin Verse, but Death prevented his compleating that Work †. So far as he proceeded in this (A) version was Printed after his Death in 1474. and Reprinted in 1541. We have also his Latin version β of a Poem of Hesiod, and two Letters in Elegiack Verse. He died (B) very Young γ in 1473. His Father Lelius δ VALLA Doctor of Law was consistorial Advocate ε.

VALLA (NICOLAS) in French du Val, Counsellor * in the Parliament of Paris, and afterwards in the Parliament of Rennes, is the Author of a Civil Law Book which is (C) esteemed. He flourished in the XVI. Century. He mentions ‡ his Son in Law James Capel, who was Counsellor in the Parliament of Bretagne. Konig † confounds him with Nicolas Valla the Subject of the preceding Article. It is not improbable that our du Val was the Counsellor of the Parliament of Paris β who was suspected of Lutheranism in the Famous Mercuriale of 1559. and by Flight avoided the impending Danger. Thuanus γ calls him Nicolaus Valla.

VALLEE (GODFREY DE LA) a Native of Orleans caused a Book to be Printed at Paris Intituled Erre Geru, le fleau de la Foy bigarré. It is full of Blasphemies and Impieties against JESUS-CHRIST. This Author was Burnt at Paris for his Heresy in 1574. He was commonly called handsome Vallée ‖. This is what we find in la Croix du Maine's Bibliotheque Françoise. Others say he was Burnt for Atheism at Paris in 1571. and that he wrote a Book Intituled, The art of believing nothing *. Maldonat made a false Reflection (Z) on a passage which he pretends to be in that Book. I wonder that so few Authors have mentioned that Atheist, and that most of those who have taken any Notice of him have grounded their Relations on the Evidence of this Spanish Jesuit.

VANDER-LINDEN (JOHN ANTONIDES) Professor of Physick at Leyden, was not the first Learned Man of his Family. Some of his Ancestors have also enjoyed Posts in the Republick of Letters, as we are informed by

γ Id. ib. pag. 15

‖ Taken from la Croix du Maine pag. 155. Renatus de la Barre at the beginning of his Notes upon Navitimine de Trinitate, says that Man was call'd Bellum Vallensem. That is, handsome Vallée.

* Maldonatus in Matth. cap. 26. p. m 572. in the margin. Others say it was in the year 1572.

most what he desired. (a) Sortitus exitum facilem & qualem semper optaverat. Nam fere quoties audisset cito ac nullo cruciatu defunctum quempiam sibi & suis εὐθανασίαν similem (hoc enim & verbo uti solebat) precabatur. Cæsar his Father by adoption was of the same Opinion. He despised the lazy Death of Cyrus mentioned by Xenophon, and nothing seemed to him preferable to leaving the World unexpectedly. (b) Illud plane inter omnes fere constitit, talem ei mortem pene ex sententia obtigisse. Nam & quondam cum apud Xenophontem legisset, Cyrum ultima valetudidine mandasse quædam de funere suo, aspernatus tam lentum mortis genus, subitam sibi celeremque optaverat. Et pridie quam occideretur in sermone nato super cœnam, apud, M. Lepidum, quisnam esset finis vitæ commodissimus, repentinum inopinatumque prætulerat. Hesiod reckons it amongst the Prerogatives of the Golden-Age that Men then died in the Arms of Sleep. One of our Criticks has blamed Ovid for omitting this Privilege in his description of the Felicities of that Age. Mr. Menage remembred this Censure, when he said that his Father died in that Manner. His words are: (c) At verò cùm dormiturus caput in cervical inclinasset, ecce tibi confestim exanimatus est. Dictum est senis Ascræi, aurea ætate mortales quasi domitos somno interiisse: quam rem optimam, ut hoc te obiter doceam; neque enim te docendi occasionem ullam prætermittere debere mihi videor; in optimi illius sæculi descriptione omittere Pelignum Vatem non debuisse, rectè à Julio Scaligero animadversum. Eo igitur modo placido & quieto parens meus fato functus est. You see plainly (d) that his Relish, and that of Scaliger the Elder were conform to that of Augustus. They would willingly have applied to them who died thus, the Proverb, le bien leur vient en dormant. See the Remark F of the Article Regius.

(A) So far as he proceeded in this Version was Printed —— and Re-printed.] The first of these Editions was made at Rome, and was neither known to Gesner or his Abridgers. It contains the 3. 4. 5. (e) 13. 18. 20. 22. 23. and 24 Books of the Iliad, and a small Portion of the 19. To the second Edition were added Joseph Iscan's six Books de bello Trojano, and the Translation of (f) four Books of Homer in Latin Verse by Opsopæus (g).

(B) He died very Young.] Which Vossius doth not mention, but we find it in Pierius Valerianus. Inter Romanos autem, saith he (h), paucis antè annis non ignobilis fuit Nicolaus Valla, summæ juvenis eruditionis, Græcis, Latinisque literis apprimè doctus, qui quidem adolescens admodum ad Homeri sublimitatem eleganti Latini carminis facilitate cæperat aspirare. Is tamen nondum alterum a vigesimo egressus annum fati quadam inclementia eruditorum omnium spei surreptus est. What occasions some difficulty is that Valerianus, who wrote (i) in Clemens the Seventh's time, saith that few Years before Valla died at the Age of 21. If we go to the rigour of exactness, this doth not very well suit a Person, who Dedicated a Poem to Pius II. Observe that I here consider the particular ways, by which Valerianus commonly expresses himself in the Tract which I cite.

(C) A Civil Law Book.] The Title of which is: De rebus & dubiis quæstionibus in jure controversis Tractatus XX. I make use of the fifth Edition at Arnheim 1638 in 4.

(Z) A false reflection on a passage.] This Jesuit's Words are. (k) Nonnulli progressi sunt longius, ut nihil crederent, quorum unus cum libellum quendam his annis de arte nihil credendi composuisset, nihil in eo nisi hoc unum verum dixit, oportere prius Calvinistam fieri qui atheus esse volet. Fuerat ille antea Calvinista, fuit postea atheus, & unicuique in sua arte credendum est. Verissima sententia: nam quisquis Calvinista est, si ea quam ingressus est incredulitatis via ire pergat, ad nihil credendum perveniat necesse est. It is incredible how many Jesuits and other Controversial Writers amongst the Romanists, have copied this passage of Maldonat. Several of which have at the same time corrupted it; for they suppose that Godfrey de la Vallée (l) in his Book endeavoured to prove at large, that whosoever would be an Atheist ought first to be a Calvinist. Maldonat never said that this Assertion was amply handled in the little Book de arte nihil credendi. His Copists have not trodden in his Footsteps. They suppose this Atheist to have said so because he believed the Calvinistical Sect to be so abominable, that all those who took a near view of it would rather chuse to profess no Religion than that. (m) Cur autem dixit eum, qui atheus esse volet, oportere prius Calvinistam fieri; nisi quod putaret, tam fœdam ac profligatam esse Calvini sectam, ut qui eam prope aspexisset, mallet nullam, quam talem sectam profiteri?

(f) Viz. the 1. 2. 9. and 10. of the Iliad. Vossius ib.

(g) Taken from Vossius ib.

(h) Pierius Valerianus de litteratorum infel. l. 2. pag. 55.

(i) See his tract de litterat. infelicit: init. & pag. 11.

(k) Maldonat. in Evangel. Matthæi. c. 26. pag. m. 572.

(l) In suo libro de arte nihil credendi, fuse contendit eum qui Atheus futurus est, Calvinistam prius esse debere. Henricus Fitz Simon, Britannom. pag. 107.

(m) Martinus Becanus, Opusculorum Theologicorum tom. 1. p. m. 175.

ficia- / Poet. La- / tin. pag. / 80.

β This which is ... This Translation is in Epick Verses, and was Dedicated to Pius II. See Gesnerus in Biblioth. fol. 514.

γ Konig Bibl. pag. 828. where he observes that his Epitaph is to be found at pag. 1176 of Fabricius's Roma.

δ Or de Valle.

ε Vossius ibid.

* See Pasquier, Recherch. de la France B. 9. ch. 39. pag. m. 920.

‡ Nicolaus Valla, de rebus dubiis tract. 8. circa fin. pag. m. 136.

† Konig Biblioth. pag. 828. where he ascribes to Nicolas Valla the Translator of Hesiod who died at Rome in 1473. the Treatise de rebus dubiis.

β Thuan. lib. 22. p. m. 453.

Sueton. in Augusto c. 100. (b) Sueton. in Cæsare c. 87. Ægidius Menagius in vita Guillelmi Menagii p. 76. 77. In his Remark upon the passage quoted by me, he speaks thus: ese are the Words of Julius Scaliger, in the 8 chapt. and 5. Book de Poetica. Omisit autum illud Hesiodi longè optim in hac ætate. Θνῆσκον δ' ὡς ὕπνῳ δεδμημένοι. The age of Hesiod is in his Ἔργα καὶ ἡμέρας. (e) Except above two ndred Verses at the end. See Vossius de poet. Lat. g. 80.

by his funeral Oration, where we are preſented with a very exact Genealogy of his Family (A). He was Born at Enckhuyſen † the 13th of January, 1609. He was ſent to the Univerſity of Leyden in 1625. to ſtudy Philoſophy; and afterwards he applied himſelf to the ſtudy of Phyſick. From Leyden he went to Francker, in order to continue his ſtudies there in 1629. where he took his Degree of Doctor of Phyſick ſome Months after. His Father, who had practiſed Phyſick at Amſterdam ever ſince the Year 1625, called him home in order to inſtruct him in the method of Practice, and died in 1633. Our Vander-linden continued in the Exerciſe of that Function, of which he acquitted himſelf with ſo much Reputation, that in 1639 he was invited to be Profeſſor of Phyſick in the Univerſity of Francker. He very worthily filled that place for almoſt twelve Years. He read on the Theorial and Practical part, on Anatomy and Botanicks, and it was to his care that the enlargement of the Academical Garden, and the building of a Houſe there were owing. The Library was not leſs indebted to him; for whilſt he had the direction of it, he ſupplied it with a great many Books, by a perſuaſive Addreſs which engaged the Nobility to that good Work. The Univerſity of Utrecht offered him a Profeſſor's Place in 1649, which he refuſed; but two Years after he accepted of that tender'd to him by the Curators of the Univerſity of Leyden. He worthily diſcharged all theſe Functions till his Death, which happened on the Fifth profu-rit? Theſe are Becanus's Words. He adds, that the Fruits of Calviniſm are more pernicious than thoſe of Atheiſm, and that tho' the Atheiſts do not believe a Providence, yet they in ſeveral particulars obſerve the Rules of Virtue. They are not guilty either of Robbery or Murther; they abhor a Lye, they keep their Word, they abominate unjuſt Wars, and love Peace: But on the contrary, Calvin's Diſciples are inſtructed not to account Lying, Perjury, Adultery and Sacrilege amongſt the number of Sins; for they believe that God hath impoſed on them a neceſſity of committing them, and that the Elect cannot periſh whatever they are guilty of. (a) Si ex fructu doctrina cognoſcenda eſt; pejores fructus Calvini, quàm Atheorum Doctrina parit. Hi tametſi negent Deum aliquem orbi præſidere, honeſtatem tamen, & rectæ rationis ductum ac directionem in multis ſequuntur, & multa rectè agunt, quæ laudari poſſunt. Cavent furta, homicidia, rapinas, à mendacio abhorrent; juramenti religionem colunt; ſervant fidem alteri promiſſam; bellum injuſtum deteſtantur; pacem ac tranquillitatem amant. At contra docentur à Calvino diſcipuli, parvi pendere mendacia, perjuria, adulteria, rapinas, libidines, ſacrilegia. Unde hoc? Quia Deus, inquiunt, æterna ſua prædeſtinatione neceſſitatem, &c. This Objection of Becanus is too ridiculous to ſtand in need of any Caution againſt it. For which reaſon I ſhall content my ſelf with barely ſaying that he had appear'd leſs ridiculous, if he had exactly follow'd his Original. I do not pretend that in arguing as Maldonat hath done, he would have reaſoned juſtly; I only ſay his Objection had been leſs abſurd. Maldonat's Reflection runs thus: That Calviniſm having once ſhook off the Yoak of Tradition with regard to the Real-preſence, under pretence that it is an Opinion clogged with a thouſand Difficulties contrary to Senſe and Reaſon, hath put all ſorts of Hereticks in the way of rejecting all Myſteries; and that ſome of the (b) moſt ſubtil and incredulous Calviniſts have made uſe of the ſame Arguments to deny the Trinity, which they had formerly uſed againſt Tranſubſtantiation. Some, adds he, advance farther, even ſo far as to believe nothing, and that is what the Road they are got into naturally leads to. He goes on thus: what I have obſerved is not deſign'd to injure the Calviniſts, but to ſhew them the Precipice that is at their Journy's end, that a view of this imminent danger may divert them from the way of perdition. Two things in this common place of Maldonat deſerve to be Cenſured; for in the firſt place to grant that preferring the light of Reaſon to the Authority of thoſe Councils, which have defined the Real-preſence, leads one into the direct Road to Atheiſm, is to give too great ſcope to Libertines and Atheiſts. Is it not to aver that the Doctrine of the exiſtence of God is not leſs contradictory to common ſenſe than that of Tranſubſtantiation? Is it not to aſſert, that to believe this Exiſtence, we ought blindly to ſacrifice the cleareſt light of Philoſophy to the Authority of Tradition; as we ought to ſacrifice it to the ſame Authority, in order to believe the Romiſh Opinion concerning the Euchariſt? But what can he more pernicious to Religion than ſuch an Acknowledgment? It is therefore very neceſſary to limit this Objection. He ought only to have ſaid that ſuch a Breach being made in the deciſions of the Councils by denying the Real preſence, may grow ſo wide, as to extend to other incomprehenſible Opinions of the Church of Rome. 2. Maldonat was ignorant of the Principles of thoſe whom he calls Calviniſts. They are ſo far from teaching, that we ought to reject a Doctrine becauſe our Reaſon cannot comprehend it, or is capable of offering almoſt invincible Arguments againſt it, that they are the firſt who aſſert, and are always ready to maintain, that nothing can be more pernicious, than to regulate our ſelves by Reaſon in the choice of ſome particular Doctrines. This is what they inceſſantly alledge againſt the Socinians, always urging the neceſſity of ſubjecting our Underſtanding to the obedience of Faith. So that if the Opinion which this Spaniſh Jeſuit attacks, was full as dangerous as he repreſents it; yet what he advances againſt the Calviniſts by urging la Vallée's Book againſt them, would be abſolutely unjuſt. In ſuch a critical Work as this, it is neceſſary that not only Errors in fact, but alſo the ill uſe of true Facts ſhould be handled in this manner.

† 'Tis a Town in North-Holland.

(A) With a very exact Genealogy of his Family.] Which reaches as high as his Abavus, or his great Grandfather's Father, who was Hen. Regnier, a Burgher of Harderwick, whoſe Houſe being burnt in the Conflagration which conſumed that Town, he removed to Naerden (c). Where his Son Antony was preferred to be Maſter of a Claſs, Chanter in the Choir, and Secretary to that City: he was a ſtrict Papiſt, (d) but Orthodox in a point which, according to Coccejus, is of the higheſt importance to Chriſtianity; I mean the right which the Children of God obtain in JESUS CHRIST by Faith, as being made one Body with him by his Spirit. Antony left a Son named Henry, born in 1546, who acquainted himſelf throughly with the Learned Languages, and with a Chriſtian Conſtancy ſuffered a great many Afflictions for the Reformed Religion. He was very young when he firſt reliſhed the Reformation, and applied himſelf to the Inſtruction of the perſecuted Faithful, and even of little Children. Being in a Boat where the Paſſengers refuſed to make room for a young Gentlewoman of Gelderland, each urging they could not crowd themſelves any cloſer; he notwithſtanding by preſſing made room for her to ſit (e). He diſcovered ſuch a ſolid Piety in this Lady, that he fell in love with her, and with the conſent of her Relations married her. She was the faithful Companion of his Afflictions and Dangers. He loſt his Father, his Father-in-law, his Relations and Friends at the Spaniſh Maſſacre at Naerden in 1572. After this fatal Accident, he exerciſed the miniſterial Function at Enckhuyſen, till the Year 1585, when he was invited to be Profeſſor of Divinity at Francker. He was the firſt who read Lectures in that Univerſity, and it was he who pronounced the inaugural Oration of the Univerſity, (f) Quam Academiam ipſe initiavit oratione prima & lectione. Hence by the way, we are informed, when that Univerſity was firſt founded. He continued in this Profeſſorſhip till he died, which was in 1614. He left ſeveral Children. Antony, the eldeſt, was a Learned Man; whoſe great

---

(a) Becan. ibid.

(b) Multos jam Calviniſtas videmus qui ingenioſiores & magis increduli, id eſt magis Calviniſtæ cæteris erant, eò jam perveniſſe, ut qua ratione hoc prius myſterium (Euchariſtiæ) non credebant, nunc Trinitatis myſterium non credant cæteroſque Calviniſtas ſicut Calviniſtæ nos tanquam nimis ſimplices & credulos rideant, Maldonatus ibid.

(c) 'Tis the chief Town of Gooiland upon the Borders of Gelderland, and the Province of Utrecht.

(d) Sed in Papiſticis dis[illegible] inimicus, niſi quod de juſtitia Dei, h. e. jure filiorum Dei, quod in Christo per fidem, per Spiritum ipſi ut unum corpus cum ipſo fideles obtinent (qui religionis Christianæ apex eſt) integram ſemper habuerit ſententiam. Coccejus in Orat. funebri.

(e) Eam virginem primam in navi cum eam recepiſſet in multitudine, [illegible] arctius [illegible] ob pietatem amavit & conjugem optavit, ac deinde a parentibus impetravit. Ib.

(f) Id. ib.

Fifth of March 1664. * He was Author (B) of ſeveral Books, and Editor of (C) others. His Place remained vacant until May 1668. when Mr. Drelincourt was called to ſucceed him. See Guy Patin's 501 Letter, in the 414th Page of the third Tome; and obſerve that Guy Patin who was a Friend (D) to Vander-Linden, hath frequently mention'd him in his Letters.

VAQUERIE, (John de la) Firſt Preſident in the Parliament of Paris, in the time of Lewis XI, had been † Penſionary of the City of Arras. He ſpoke for that City in 1476, they were obliged to anſwer the Deputies of that Prince, who demanded the ſubmiſſion of the Inhabitants to him, as their lawful Sovereign, after the death of the Duke of Burgundy. They declared that the King pretended to have Arras and Artois by way of Confiſcation, and that if the Citizens did not open the Gates, it would be in danger of being taken by force. La Vaquerie reply'd, that the County of Artois belonged to the Princeſs of Burgundy, Daughter of Duke Charles, on whom it devolved in a direct Line, from Margaret, Counteſs of Flanders, the Conſort of Philip the firſt Duke of Burgundy; and he ſupplicated his Majeſty, that he would be pleaſed to obſerve the Truce betwixt him and the late Duke Charles ‖. This Anſwer was to no purpoſe, Arras was obliged to ſubmit to the Yoak of France. There is a ſtrong report of a Remonſtrance (A) made by La Vaquerie to the ſame King: Nor is the Anſwer much leſs talked of which he offered when the Attempt great Knowledge of claſſick Learning engaged the Magiſtrates of Enckhuyſen to make him Rector of their College. He was beſides, a good Muſician, and a good Organiſt; he was no Novice in Theology; but what he excelled in was Phyſick, of which he commenced Doctor at Franeker in 1608. and practiſed it with great Succeſs and Reputation, firſt at Enckhuyſen, and afterwards at (a) Amſterdam. I have already (b) ſaid that he dy'd in 1633, and that the Leyden Profeſſor John Antonides Vander-Linden was his Son. Cocceius enlarges very much on the maternal Relations of the deceaſed: He is doubtleſs herein too particular; but in general the funeral Orations in the Northern Univerſities are of this ſort. I believe the Word Antonides was formed in imitation of the Patronymical Names of the Antient Poets. Tho' I own that there are ſome Families in Holland of the Name of Antonides. Yet probably it was at firſt no more than a patronymical Name.

* Taken from his Funeral Oration pronounced by John Cocceius Prof. of Divinity.

† That Office is much the ſame with that of Syndic. See the 2d Edition of Furetiere's Dictionary at the word Penſionaire.

‖ Taken from Philip de Comines B. 5. chap. 11. p. m. 298.

(a) He writ ſeveral Books about Phyſick, Muſick, and other Sciences. His Son has given a Catalogue of the Books of Phyſick, in his Tract de ſcriptis Medicis: I do not think that they have been Printed. He left many others imperfect.

(b) In the Text of this Article.

(B) He wrote ſeveral Books.] The Titles of which are: Univerſæ Medicinæ Compendium, quinque centuriis ſub Clypeo Clariſſ. viri D. Menelai Winsbemii Med. Doct. & in illuſtri Friſiorum Academia ejuſdem Facultatis & Anatomes Profeſſoris, publico examini decem Diſputationibus propoſitum. Addita eſt centuria inauguralis poſitionum Medico-practicarum de virulentia venerea, ibidem propoſita & defenſa ad diem 18 Octobris 1630. Theſe are properly the Theſes which he maintained when he went out Doctor in 1630. Medulla Medicinæ partibus quatuor comprehenſa Printed at Franeker 1642 in 8vo. Medicina Phyſiologica novâ curatâque methodo ex optimis quibuſque Auctoribus contracta, & propriis obſervationibus locupletata. At Amſterdam 1653. in 4. Selecta Medica & ad ea exercitationes Batavicæ. At Leyden 1656 in 4. But this Book more properly falls under the following Remark than under this, it being a Collection of ſeveral Pieces of Hippocrates and other Antient Authors. Diſſertatio de Lacte, this is amongſt Deuſingius's Diſſertations, Publiſhed at Groningen 1655. in 12. De Hemicrania menſtrua, hiſtoria & conſilium. Printed at Leyden 1660, and 1668. in 4. Meletemata Medicinæ Hippocraticæ. At Leyden 1660, and at Francfort 1672. in 4. Hippocrates de circuitu ſanguinis. At Leyden 1661. in 4. De Scriptis Medicis Libri duo, quibus præmittitur Manuductio ad Medicinam. This Piece was three times Printed at Amſterdam by John Blaeu in 1637. 1651, and 1662 in 8. It is a Catalogue of Medicinal Writers. The Author inlarged it at every Edition; and after his Death Merklinus a German, very conſiderably enlarged it, and Publiſhed it in a large Volume in 4. Entitl'd Lindenius renovatus. It is Printed at Nuremberg 1686. It is from this Edition that I have taken the Catalogue of Vander-Linden's Writings, which I have inſerted in this Remark.

This Book of Vander Linden de Scriptis Medicis, hath had the fate of all Works of this nature; tho' they be very much corrected, and enlarged in every new Edition, yet they remain imperfect ſtill. See Voglerus's (c) cenſure on this Book of Vander-Linden. How large ſoever the Additions of Merklinus are, we are yet very far from meeting with all the Medicinal Writers therein. This I'll prove by an Example: There are in it five Authors named Martin, and yet Bernardin MARTIN Born at Paris the 8th of January 1629, is omitted. He was the Son of Samuel Martin Apothecary to Mary de Medices, Queen of France, and Publiſhed a Treatiſe of Milk, and another of Dentition, both which were very well received (d) and approved by the Faculty of Paris. He alſo wrote a Relation of his Travels in Spain, Portugal, Holland and Germany, &c. which contains ſome very remarkable things. The late Prince of Conde deſired his attendance on his Perſon in 1669. Martin, from that time to the Death of that great Prince, diſcharged his Function very well, and received ſeveral marks of his Highneſs's Affection. The preſent Prince of Conde (e) only Son of that Prince, kept him continually in his Houſe (f). Since Merklinus's Edition often contains an Abridgement of the Lives of the Medicinal Writers, this may, on ſeveral Accounts, be ſerviceable to thoſe who ſhall make Additions to the Lindenius Renovatus.

(c) Voglerus, Introduct. in notitiam bonorum Scriptorum, pag. m. 48.

(d) They have been Printed at Paris for Denys Thierry.

(e) I write this in the year 1696.

(f) Taken from a Memorial imparted to the Bookſeller.

(C) Editor of others.] Let us continue our Extracts from the Book (g) juſt now cited. Adriani Spigelii Opera quæ extant omnia, recenſuit & cum addita præfatione edidit, At Amſterdam 1645, in Folio. Hier. Cardani, de utilitate ex adverſis capienda libros iv. ſerio emendatos edidit, at Franeker, 1648, in 8vo. Cornel. Celſi de Medicina libros octo recognovit & edidit, at Leyden, 1657, & 1665. 12. Hippocratis Coi Opera omnia Græcè & Latinè duobus voluminibus comprehenſa, & ad omnes alias editiones accommodata, edidit, at Leyden 1665, in 8vo. This Edition of Hippocrates was not intirely finiſhed when Vander-Linden dyed. He beſtowed a great deal of care on it. The Journal des Sçavans ſpoke of it thus: (h) "The New Edition —— hath the advantage of anſwering all the former, by the help of the Figures in the Margin, which ſhew in what Page and Place every thing is to be found. So that it is preferable to all other Editions, and remedies the Confuſion introduced by their Diverſity, when a Paſſage was to be looked for. It is alſo the moſt correct of them all, for Mr. Vander-Linder having carefully compared all the Old Editions with ſeveral Manuſcripts, hath reſtored a great number of places, not before corrected even in Fœſius's Edition. The Latin Verſion he hath choſen is that of Cornarius, becauſe it is the Oldeſt, and that which is commonly uſed. Death ſurprized him a little before this Edition was finiſhed, which prevented his deſigned Notes on Hippocrates." Cocceius touches on this laſt Particular (i).

(D) Guy Patin —— hath frequently mention'd him.] I ſhall only cite one Paſſage. (k) "I know nothing that's new of Vander-Linden's Hippocrates. The Editor dyed at Leyden, aged 53 (l) years, of a Fever and Defluxion on his Breaſt, after having taken Antimony, and without bleeding: What a pity it is, he ſhould write ſo many Books, underſtand ſo much Latin and Greek, and die of a Fever and ſuffocating Catarrh without Phlebotomy!"

(A) Of a Remonſtrance made by la Vaquerie to the ſame King.] I ſhall here make uſe of John Bodin's Words.

(g) Lindenius renovatus.

(h) Journal des Sçavans of the 22d of February 1666.

(i) Scio τὸν μακαρίτην multa de variis locis Medicorum principis eſſe meditatum, & magnam ſibi ſupellectilem collegiſſe obſervationum ad hunc auctorem illuſtrandum utilium, quas non potuiſſe ab ipſo edi dolendum eſt. Cocceius ubi ſupra.

(k) Patin. letter 310. p. m. 610. of the 2d vol.

(l) It ſhould be 55.

tempt was made to engage the Parliament to (B) interpose their Authority in the choice of a Regent of the Realm. Chancellor de l'Hoſpital ſaid one day in a Speech, ‖ "That the Poverty of the Preſident de la Vaquerie was much more commendable than the Riches of a Chancellor of Burgundy, to whom his Maſter ſaid, "Rolin, 'tis too much."

VAUBRUN (The Marquis of) See BAUTRU (Nicolas.)

VEDELIUS (Nicolas) a famous Reformed Divine, who lived in the XVII Century. He was Born in the Palatinate, and was Profeſſor of Philoſophy for Twelve Years at Geneva, and Miniſter of the Church in the ſame City for Ten Years *. He was invited to Deventer in 1630. in order to become Divinity and Hebrew Profeſſor, having accepted of which, he commenced Doctor of Divinity at Baſil, in his Journey from Geneva to Deventer, the 24th of June the ſame Year §. He acquitted himſelf very well of his Duty, and diſcovered a great Zeal againſt (A) the Arminians. He excerciſed proviſionally the Function of Profeſſor of Philoſophy in 1634. He removed from Deventer, and became Divinity Profeſſor at Franeker, about the Year 1638. † This was his laſt Station; for he died in that Words. "(a) Lewis XI. had terribly threatned the "Court of Parliament for refuſing to Publiſh, Ratify, and Regiſter ſeveral pernicious Edicts: The "Preſident Lavacrie, accompanied with a great "number of Counſellors in Scarlet Robes, went "to preſent their Complaints and Remonſtrances "on account of thoſe menaces. The King obſerving "the Gravity, Countenance, and Dignity of thoſe "Gentlemen, who were reſolved to quit their Poſts "rather than ratify the Edicts ſent to them; was "ſurprized, and dreading the Authority of the Parliament, cauſed the ſaid Edicts to be torn in their "preſence, deſiring them to continue in the adminiſtration of Juſtice, and ſwore to them that he "would never ſend any Edict to them which was "not juſt and reaſonable. This action was of very "great importance in order to keep that King in "ſtrict Obedience to Reaſon, who had always exerciſed an Abſolute Power; and when he was only Dauphin, he ſent for the Preſidents of that "Court, and told them that they ſhould raze out "the Clauſe DE EXPRESSO MANDATO, which "the Court had inſerted into the Ratification of the "Privileges granted to the Count du Maine, otherwiſe he would not leave Paris till it was done, and "that he would ſurrender the Commiſſion which the "King had given him. The Court order'd that thoſe "Words ſhould be blotted out, but that the blotting "out might plainly appear, the Regiſter was order'd to be kept, as it is at preſent, in purſuance of that Order, with the Date of the xxviii "of July M CCCCXLII." The Latin Edition of this Book of Bodin contains a Circumſtance which I muſt not omit. It is that the King commanded the Parliament to Ratify his Edicts on forfeiture of Life, and that the firſt Preſident at the Head of that Senate declared to the King, that they had rather die than Obey him. (b) Rex ſua juſſa ingeminans minas adjecit, capitis etiam indicta pœna niſi curia paruiſſet. (c) Lanacrius præſes re intellecta regem adiit corona judicum purpuratorum ſtipatus, non ut culpam deprecaretur, ſed ut mortem precaretur, cum diceret ſe ſuoſque collegas mortem malle quam legis propoſitæ promulgationem pati.

It was not a needleſs thing to relate in this place what was done by this Prince in 1442. This enhanceth the Merit of la Vaquerie; for it is much more glorious to ſhew one's Courage in reſiſting an Imperious Perſon, than to make uſe of it in oppoſition to thoſe who have never diſcovered any obſtinate reſoluteneſs in the maintenance of Arbitrary Power. Tho' Bodin forgot to mention the Year when this firſt Preſident made this reſolute and undaunted Declaration, it is certain that we are informed by another Proof how abſolutely this Monarch reſolved to be obey'd. Paſquier relates (e) That in the Year Four hundred ſixty five, the ſame Lewis being King, cauſed his Grant to the Count de Charolois, to be forcibly Publiſh'd in full Court; and notwithſtanding the Proteſtations made againſt it by the greateſt part of the Councellors, he would have endorſed on the Inſtrument, Regiſtrata Audito Procuratore Regis, & non contradicente. La Vaquerie was ſtill Pentionary of the City of Arras, in the Year 1476. And therefore he was not firſt Preſident of the Parliament of Paris, till long after Lewis XI. had exacted this form of Regiſtring. Obſerve carefully Paſquier's words. "(f) Such Proteſtations have been "very frequent in this Court; and ſeveral Edicts "have this Clauſe, De expreſſo & expreſſiſſimo mandato Regis, pluribus vicibus reiterato. Which clauſe, as it "is added for a good end, ſo ſeveral People could "wiſh (perhaps not without cauſe) that honourable "Society would ſometimes be more flexible, according as the publick neceſſity requires." This confirms what I have ſaid (g) concerning the Evils which the Parliaments have frequently occaſioned by their refuſing to regiſter Edicts, or by the Clauſes which they added to the ratification of them. Paſquier had not talked in this manner, if he had not known that the ſtiffneſs of thoſe Sovereign Courts had been ſometimes prejudicial to the State. Let us alſo confirm by an Obſervation of Bodin, a particular which I have mention'd in another place (h). "Now the words DE EXPRESSO MANDATO & "de expreſſiſſimo mandato, and ſometimes multis vicibus "iterato, which are frequently found in the Regiſters of Sovereign Courts, about the publication "of Edicts, occaſion ſuch Edicts to be neglected, or ſoon after forgotten and ſlighted by the "Magiſtrates. There is no greater Encouragement to Diſobedience, than to ſuffer the Tranſgreſſors of an Edict to hope for Impunity: But this is in effect what the Parliaments did, when they diſgraced the Princes Edicts in ſuch a manner.

(B) The Anſwer—— which he offered when the Attempt was made to engage the Parliament—— In the choice.] After the Death of Lewis XI. the Counteſs de Beaujeu, his eldeſt Daughter had the Adminiſtration of the Government, during the Minority of Charles VIII. The Duke of Orleans deſirous to diſpoſſeſs her of the Regency, addreſſed to the Parliament of Paris; but (i) Mr. de la Vaquerie, firſt Preſident, declared to him, that Affairs of that nature did not fall under their Cognizance. The Author of the Book Entitl'd, The Miniſtry of Cardinal de Richelieu relates it thus: (k) "The Parliaments are not "leſs obliged by the Laws of Juſtice than by thoſe of "Prudence, to ſtand firm to the King in Affairs of "State: I ſay they are obliged to it by Juſtice, "becauſe it is to uſurp a Power which doth not "belong to them, to attempt to judge of ſuch things, "they being only created by the King, to adminiſter Juſtice to the People; as the Preſident de la "Vaquerie told the Chancellor of the Duke of Orleans, who formerly deſired Parliament on the "part of his Maſter, to preſs the King to come to "Paris and make uſe of their Counſel in the moſt "important Affairs."

(A) And diſcovered a great Zeal againſt the Arminians.] He Publiſhed a Book in 1631, Entitled De Arcanis Arminianiſmi, in which he maintains that explicitly and by Profeſſion, they introduce a ſubtil ſort of Atheiſm into the Church; and that tho' they do not with premeditation attempt to bring in a groſs Atheiſm, they open a great and wide Gate for its admittance. The beginning of one of his Chapters runs thus: (l) Propoſuimus hactenus doctrinam Remonſtrantium, quæ omnis generis hæreſes & ſectas in Eccleſiam Dei, adeoque Libertiniſmum hoc eſt Atheiſmum ſubtilem EX PROFESSO introducere conantur. A little after he hath theſe words: (m) Scopus meus non eſt gravare Remonſtrantes accuſatione ea, ac ſi Atheiſmum craſſum introducere data opera ſeu ex profeſſo molirentur. Nequaquam vero prout eodem cap. primo monui.

‖ Le Grain, [illegible] pag. 1[illegible], 1[illegible].

* See the Programme mentioned by Revius in his History of Deventer, pag. 496.

§ Revius, in Historia Daventriensi.

‖ Id. ib. p. 604.

† Id. ib. p. 713.

(a) Bodin, de la Republique B. 3. chap. 4. p. m. 417. See alſo Matthieu, hiſt. de Louis XI. B. 11. p. m. 668.

(b) Bodinus ubi ſupra pag. 454. edit. 1601.

(c) It ſhould be Lavaquerius.

(d) Paſquier, Recherches. B. 2. c. 4. pag. m. 61. gives a larger account of it than Bodin.

(e) Paſquier ibid.

(f) Id. ib. pag. 62.

(g) In the Remark K of the Article of Chancelier de l'Hoſpital.

(h) Bodin ubi ſupra pag. 318.

(i) Le Grain Hiſt. de Louis XIII p. 4.

(k) Hiſtoire du Miniſtere du Cardinal de Richelieu part. 2. p. 219. Dutch Edit. ann. 1631.

(l) Vedelius, De arcanis Arminianiſmi, lib. 2. cap. 12. p. m. 242.

(m) Ibid. p. 243.

that City in 1641. He was concerned that Death (B) did not permit him to Publiſh the Anſwer, which he had prepared to his Adverſaries, concerning the Power of the Magiſtrate in (C) Eccleſiaſtical Affairs. I ſhall give you a Catalogue (D) of his Works. I have in another place § ſpoken of his quarrel with Barlæus.

VEGIUS (MAPHEUS) Born at Lodi in the Milaneſe in 1407. was an illuſtrious Orator, and the ‖ greateſt Latin Poet that had been ſeen for ſeveral Ages. He went through his School Learning at Milan, from whence he removed to Pavia to ſtudy the Civil Law; but the Plague obliged his quick return to Lodi, where he applyed himſelf intirely to polite Learning, and particularly to Poetry, and began to write Books very early (A). Going to Rome he made himſelf beloved and eſteemed by Pope Martin the V. who made him Secretary of the Briefs. Which Office he diſcharged ſo faithfully that he was raiſed to a more conſiderable Poſt by the ſame Pope; which was that of Datary. He beſtowed on him alſo a Canonicate ‡ in Saint Peter's Church. He was ſo throughly contented with theſe preferments that he refuſed a Rich Biſhoprick. The Value which Eugenius the IV. and Nicolas the V. had for him, obliged them to continue him in the Poſt of Datary. He was very much eſteemed by Panormitanus, and Æneas Silvius, and ſhewed a great Devotion for (B) Saint Auguſtin. His Morals were very exemplary. He died at Rome in 1459 †. Amongſt thoſe Authors who mention him, I find ſcarce any, who do not paſs over in ſilence the fineſt Paſſage of his Life; for they don't tell us any thing of the Alteration of his Taſt. The Poetical Fictions were at firſt his greateſt delight *; he thought of nothing but making of Verſes, and placing the Pagan Divinities in them. Virgil was § In the Remark D of the Article Barlæus.

‖ Jovius elog. c. 117. p. m. 240.

‡ Moreri ſays he was Canon of Lateran.

† Taken from Ghilini teatro d'Huomini letterati, parte 2. pag. 188.

* See the Remark C.

mari. Sed tantum oſtenſurus ſum, præter alia effecta peſtilentiſſima quæ nova ipſorum Theologia & Religio producit; etiam feneſtram & portam aperiri ea Atheiſmo craſſo patentiſſimam atque ampliſſimam. He adds that he has no other deſign than to Convert the Remonſtrants by ſhewing them the Danger which attends their Doctrine. (a) Quo nimirum unuſquiſque eo magis ab ea ſibi caveat: & ipſi Theologi Remonſt. Lucri fiant, qui etiam noſter in hoc labore ſcopus eſt. We have ſeen (b) ſomething like this in Maldonat's Commentaries. The Arminians vigorouſly returned the Blow in a Book intituled Vedelius Rhapſodus.

(B) He was concerned that Death did not permit him.] This circumſtance you will find in one of Voſſius's Letters. You will there ſee alſo that in caſe this reply of Vedelius had been Printed, they would have left out all the violent and injurious expreſſions diſperſed in that Book by way of return to his Antagoniſt. (c) Vedelius Theologiæ apud Franekeranos Profeſſor, dum in Friſia ſum, fatis conceſſit. Moribundum cruciabat, quod terris eriperetur, priuſquam potuiſſet Revio & Triglandio reſpondere. Horum uterque acerbe ſatis ſcripſit adverſus ſcriptum ejus de Conſtantini Epiſcopatu; quo Magiſtratus jura circa res Eccleſiæ defendit. Collegæ defuncti mihi Franekeræ aiebant, fortaſſe reſponſum ſic etiam edendum; ſed deletis, quæ ut par pari redderet hoſtimentum, virulentius chartis illeviſſet adverſus Revium.

(C) The Power of the Magiſtrate in Eccleſiaſtical Affairs.] Several diſputes aroſe concerning this queſtion in Holland after the Synod of Dort; ſome Divines endeavoured to withdraw the Eccleſiaſtical Authority from the Sovereign, and others would confer on the Magiſtrate all Eccleſiaſtical Authority. At leaſt thus each party interpreted the other's intention. Vedelius engaged in this diſpute, and in the beginning of 1638. publiſhed a Diſputatio Theologica de Magiſtratu adverſus Bellarmini librum de Laicis, where he extended the Magiſtrates power much farther than others would have it. Some time after knowing that ſome were preparing to refute him, he publiſhed a (d) 2d Edition of his Diſputation, to which he added ſeveral Explanations. The whole Title of this piece is, De Epiſcopatu Conſtantini magni, ſeu poteſtate Magiſtratuum Reformatorum circa res Eccleſiaſticas, diſſertatio repetita cum reſponſione ad interrogata quædam. He foreſaw that he ſhould irritate (e) his Adverſaries, and draw on himſelf a heap of Calumnies; but for all this he had Courage enough to enter the liſts. His foreſight was juſt, and 'twas not neceſſary to be a great Prophet in order to predict an Event of that Nature. He was attacked in his Life time and after his Death. Several Zealand Miniſters cauſed him to be refuted, when he was Dead, making uſe of the Pen of a Miniſter of (f) Middleburg. His Friends in Frieſland defended him, and Treated the Zealand Miniſters with the utmoſt contempt. See the Book intituled (g) Grallæ ſeu vere puerilis cothurnus ſapientiæ, quo ſe jactat apud imperitos Guillelmus Apollonii, &c. Apollonius anſwered: They replyed by a Book whoſe Title (h) is Comical enough.

(D) A Catalogue of his Works.] I have already Mentioned three: The reſt are Notæ in Epiſtolas Ignatii. Commentarius de tempore utriuſque Epiſcopatus, S. Petri, Antiocheni & Romani, at Geneva 1624. Rationale Theologicum, ſeu de neceſſitate & vero uſu principiorum rationis ac Philoſophiæ in Controverſiis Theologicis; at the ſame place 1628. A Remedy againſt Apoſtacy in French, Printed alſo there in the ſame Year. Panacea Apoſtaſiæ, at the ſame place 1628. This is a Tranſlation of the former. S. Hilary or an Antidote againſt ſorrow, in French, at Geneva, 1630. S. Hilarius ſeu Antidotum contra triſtitiam pro ſancta hilaritate, at Leyden, 1632. 'tis a Tranſlation of the former. De prudentia veteris Eccleſiæ, at Amſterdam 1633. De Deo Synagogæ contra Caſp. Barlæum at Harderwick 1632. Opuſcula Theologica at Franeker.

(A) He began to write Books very early.] At the Age of ſixteen, if we believe Ghilini, whoſe Authority in this caſe ought to be of little weight; for it is certain that he is tainted with the Enthuſiaſm of a Panegyriſt, and that he has not well adjuſted the Parts of his Narrative. Doth he write judiciouſly when he relates 1. That Vegius (i) being arrived at a ſupreme perfection in all ſorts of Humane Literature, went to Pavia in order to ſtudy the Civil and Canon Law? 2. That having ſcarce began to ſtudy there, he was obliged to leave the Town on Account of the peſt? 3. That he returned into his own Country, where he applyed himſelf again to the Study of polite Learning, and to Writing, being (k) ſcarce yet ſixteen Years old? Doth not this Relation naturally mean that Vegius underſtood perfectly all the Parts of Literature before he was ſixteen? This Hyperbole is abſurd. He dyed before he nearly approached that perfection; how then was he arrived at it in his Younger Years?

(B) A great Devotion for Saint Auguſtin.] He Built a Chappel in the Church dedicated to that Saint at Rome on the Right Hand of the great Altar, and having cauſed the Bones of Saint Auguſtin to be put into a very fine Shrine with thoſe of his Mother Monica, he Tranſported them from Oſtia to this Chappel. He wrote Poems in Honour of thoſe two Saints, which he alſo very much praiſed in the Preface of his Book, de educatione puerorum & claris eorum moribus. In which work he confirms his Precepts concerning the Education of Children by as many proper inſtances as he could poſſibly find in the Life of Saint Auguſtin and his Mother Monica. (l) In præfatione poſtquam D. Auguſtini & matris ipſius Monicæ laudes pluribus prædicavit, ſubjungit: Enitemur oſtendere omnem bene educandorum filiorum rationem, & convenientiſſimis ſubinde etiam ſanctiſſimiſque

(a) Ibid.

(b) See the Article Vallée.

(c) Voſſius epiſt. 483. p. m. 429. col. 2. It is dated the 25. of October 1641. It is among thoſe of the Arminians pag. 811. of the Edition in Folio.

(d) In the Year 1641.

(e) Jam præclara temeritatis & ſuperbiæ ingenia nihil magis in votis fuit, quam ut ſpretis ſalutaribus pacis & concordiæ conſiliis ac monitis in me inſolescant, & virus ſuum contra me evomant. Nicol. Præf. de Epiſcopatu Conſtantini.

(f) Called Gulielmus Apollonius.

(g) It was Printed at Franeker in the Year 1646.

(h) Grallator ſaventis de novo in ſcenam productus, cum pantomimo ſuo bombomachide Vliſſingano. At Franeker 1647.

(i) Dopò eſſer egli a ſomma perfezione arrivato in ogni genere di lettere humane andò a Pavia. Ghilini, teatro part. 2. p. 188.

(k) Diedeſi nell' età di ſedici anni appena a ſcrivere Ibid.

(l) Geſner, in biblioth. fol. 491. ſpeaking of Vegius's Treatiſe de educatione puerorum Printed at Baſil with other ſuch ſmall Books in the Year 1541.

was one of his great Gods. David's Pſalms ſeemed to him but old Womens Songs, and he equally abhorred the Prieſthood and Death: But at laſt he (C) was diſguſted at the Profane Beauties of Poetry; the Pſalms of David appeared to him admirable, and he was touched with an extreme Pleaſure in the ſacerdotal Functions, and employing himſelf in the inſtruction of the Nuns. I ſhall ſpeak of his Works (D).

VELSERUS (MARK) (A) Conſul of Augsburg, his Native City, was a Learned Civilian and a Famous Author. He was Born the 20 of June 1558 (B) of ſanctiſſimiſque tum precum Monicæ quam filii Auguſtini exemplis, ſingula quidem tamen ea applicari poterunt confirmare ſtudebimus.

(C) But at laſt he was diſguſted at the profane Beauties of Poetry; the Pſalms of David.] Such an excellent converſion, ſuch an holy Metamorphoſis are ſo rare that they ſhould not have been forgotten by thoſe who mention this Writer. Moſt Poets retain till Death their paſſion for the Beauties of Poetry. Vegius is an Exception to this general Rule, his Confeſſion runs thus. (a) Prima recolens tempora, ſaith he, quibus inhiabam quotidie condendis carminibus, nihil præter Muſis & Poetarum luſit pulchrum ducens, mirari non ſatis poſſum, adeo IMMUTARI affectus meos, adeo vim animo meo [ut ita dixerim] fieri potuiſſe, ut a dulcibus prurientibuſque fabulis, ad ſtudia ſeriora converſus ſim, & qui decantandis ingentibus rerum geſtis, confiſiſque tot incertorum Deorum numinibus, ardentius inſtabam, nunc ad exhortandas ſorores, ad docendas virgunculas deſcenderim, ut pro Ovidiis & Flaccis, nunc Auguſtinos & Hieronymos, pro Virgilio, quem alterum in terris Deum eſſe arbitrabar, nunc David fideliorem Vatem colam, ſuſcipiam ampleƈtarque, & ejus mihi carmina, quæ tanquam anilia deliramenta ſordebant, nunc mira aſpergant animum ſuavitate, atque [unde magis etiam obſtupeſcam] quod tantopere deteſtabar exhorrebamque inſtar mortis, nunc ſacerdotis dulcius nihil putem.

(D) I ſhall ſpeak of his Works.] Some of which are in proſe, others in Verſe, ſome are Printed, others not. The Poem for which he is moſt Famous is his ſupplement to the Æneid; he imagined that Virgil had not concluded that work. He reſolved then to add a 13th Book which is cuſtomarily Printed with the 12. of that Roman Poet. His enterprize hath been Cenſured (b). His Dialogue de felicitate & miſeria for ſome time paſſed for (c) a piece of Lucian. It was printed with the Book de Educatione puerorum, the Philalethes, and the diſceptatio inter terram, ſolem & aurum. All theſe tracts are in Proſe. Ghilini falſly believes that the 7 Books de perſeverantia religionis ad Sorores, were never Printed. But they were really Printed at Paris (d) in 1511. with ſome of thoſe pieces whoſe Titles I have mentioned. They were inſerted in the great Bibliotheca Patrum. His Poem on the Frauds of the Peaſants muſt needs be very curious. You will find in Ghilini the Titles of a great many pieces of this Author, which were never Printed. Paulus Jovius hath not forgot to praiſe him on Account of ſome Monuments of the Application of his Pen to ſacred Subjects, which he left behind him. (e) Ne quid ad cumulatam eruditionem vero Chriſtiano acceſſet, quædam etiam in ſacris literis ſynceræ interpretationis gloſſemata reliquit, aureumque præſertim libellum de rebus antiquis memorabilibus Baſilicæ ſancti Petri, in quo donaria, ſepulcraque Pontificum recenſentur.

(A) Conſul of Augsburg.] I cannot tell whether theſe Words Duumvir Reipublicæ Auguſtanæ, about the Print of our Velſerus, can be better rendred. It were to be wiſhed that ſome Body would publiſh a Dictionary of Modern Offices, a Task very worthy of a Learned Man. Such a work would be very ſerviceable to Tranſlators, and Readers; for inſtance, it would inform us what we ought to underſtand by Duumvir Auguſtanus, the continual Title of Marcus Velſerus. Conſul of Augsburg is not a right Tranſlation; for the conſular Dignity of the Romans did not reſemble that of thoſe, who are call'd Duumvirs of Augsburg. On this Occaſion I obſerve that one of the moſt conſiderable poſts of Holland, I mean that of Penſionary, is very improperly Named. Its name is derived from an accident (f) intirely external, which gives no manner of idea either of the Rights or (g) Functions of him, who is poſſeſt with it. What I have ſaid of the Conſulſhip of Velſerus, I ſay it alſo of his Prætorſhip. I am perſuaded that a Prætor of Augsburg doth not at all reſemble the old Roman Prætors; and yet we can ſcarce avoid giving the Roman Names to Modern Offices, when we either Write in Latin or Tranſlate any of the Moderns out of that Language. I don't know whether Duumvir and Prætor are not the ſame thing at Augsburg. However there are Offices in that City inferior to that of Duumvir, which Modern Writers expreſs by the Word Conſulſhip (h).

(B) Of a very ancient Family.] Some will have it to be deſcended from Beliſarius, the Famous General of the Emperor Juſtinian. It is ſtoried that Francis Beliſarius about the Year 564. Married Antonia, Pompey's Daughter, and Couſin to the Siſter of the Emperour Anaſtaſius the I. He left two Sons, Peter, and Charles, the firſt of which Married Mary Colonna, and died without Iſſue at Milan; the other in order to live ſecure from the incurſions of the Barbarians, retired into the Country of Vallais, and poſſeſſed a Caſtle (i) in the Territory of Sion, which he left to his deſcendants (k). What a Genealogy is here of a Citizen of Augsburg! But what is very ſurprizing is, that we are told that Authentick Proofs to make good all this, are ready to be produced. For, ſay they, John Bartholomew VELSERUS, Counſellor to the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria, and Canon of Straſburg, wrote a Letter to that Emperor in 1336. when the Diet was aſſembled at Spire, to ſupplicate him earneſtly, to affix his Signet by way of approbation to the German Tranſlation of a Book, which Cardinal Stephen Colonna had written concerning the Genealogy of the Velſeri. This Emperour himſelf had commanded the Compoſure of this Book; and the Author therein produced an exact ſeries of Proofs founded on publick Acts and Deeds, from 545. to John VELSERUS the Brother of John Bartholomew. (l) Pro venuſtiſſima familiæ ſuæ gloria ac dignitate non rogans ſolum, verum etiam obſecrans, ut Germanicam libelli verſionem ſigillo annuli ſui confirmaret, quem auctoritate ac juſſu ipſius Imperatoris Stephanus Colonna, ſummi Pontificis tunc Vicarius & Cardinalis, ex omnibus inſtrumentis, tabulis, literiſque publicis ab A. C. 545. uſque ad Johannem Velſerum, Joh. Bartholomæi fratrem germanum, omni cura & diligentia complexus eſt. This work was put into Latin at Rome in 1337. by the ſame John Bartholomew. We are told that Emanuel VELSERUS Canon of Baſil in 1071. Writing to his Brother Octavian mentioned Charles Beliſarius, who with his Wife Paula degli Urſini retired from Rome into Vallais in 620. Agitur inibi mentione de Carolo Beliſario, qui una cum conjuge Paula Urſina Valleſiam verſus ad Rheni fontes A. C. 620. ex urbe Roma ob ſæviſſimos & violentiſſimos in omnem nobilitatem Longobardos, exemplo aliorum egreſſus eſt. (m) This Octavian VELSERUS already mentioned was the firſt of the Family, that has been Senator of Augsburg. He was alſo Captain in that City, Director of the Military Affairs, and beſides Counſellor to Conrad Duke of Franconia. He died in 1074 (n). James VELSERUS was the firſt of the Family who ſetled at Nuremberg, whither he came in 1493. He Married and died there in 1544. being the Father of Six Sons and Eleven Daughters. The Alliances of the Velſeri have been very illuſtrious, in Switzerland, and ſeveral Provinces of the Empire: But the greateſt Honour which they received on this Account was doubtleſs the Marriage of Philippina Velſerus to Ferdinand Arch-Duke of Auſtria, Son of the Emperor Ferdinand the I. and Brother to the Emperor Maximilian the II. That Prince fell deſperately in Love with Philippina in the time of the Diet at Augsburg in 1548. and (o) Married her privately. She lived with him as his lawful Wife till his Death, (p) above 24 Years. She was a very fine Woman, and endowed beſides with a rich ſtore of good Qualities. She was Daughter to (q) Francis VELSE-

RUS

(a) Vegius de perſeverantia religionis in tomo 26. bibl. Max. f. 698. apud Spizelium in literato feliciſſimo pag. 162.

(b) See Mr. Baillet, Jugem. ſur les Poetes n. 1222. tom. 3. p. 43. & ſeq.

(c) Ghilini, ubi ſupra.

(d) See the Catalogue of the Bodleian Library pag. 224.

(e) Jovius elog. c. 107. p. m. 250.

(f) From his receiving a yearly Penſion from the Publick.

(g) They are very well explained in Furetiere's Dictionary Corrected by Mr. de Beauval.

(h) [illegible]

(i) Supplementum [illegible]

(k) [illegible] MARCO [illegible] MATTHAEO [illegible] PAULO [illegible]

(l) Ibid.

(m) Ibid. pag. 6.

(n) Ibid.

(o) Marinus Cruſius, part. 3. Annal. Suevic. l. 12. fol. 713. apud Arnold. ib. pag. 12.

(p) Jacob. Menius, apud Arnold. ibid.

(q) Arnold. ibid.

of a very Ancient Family, which (C) had poſſeſſed vaſt Riches. He was carefully Educated; and being touched with a paſſion for polite Literature, he was when very Young ſent to Rome as a Pupil to Antony Muret *, where he was in 1574. With the Study of the Antiquities he Intermixed that of the Italian Tongue, in which he became ſo great a Proficient, that he wrote that Language like a (D) Florentin. Returning Home he applyed himſelf to the Bar in the Year 1589. He obtained the Senatorial Dignity in the Year 1592. He was preferred to the little Council in the Year 1594, and Elected Prætor in the Year 1600. He diſcharged all theſe Offices with a great deal of Honour, and was an Ornament to his Country. He was both a lover and a protector of Learning and Learned Men. He Publiſhed ſeveral good (E) Books, and afforded rus Baron of Zinnenberg, and Siſter to Charles VELSERUS, Governour of the Marquiſate of Burgaw. She died at Inſpruck the 24th of April 1580, and left two Sons, which their Father Ferdinand could never qualify to ſucceed him. He was obliged to content himſelf with the Marquiſate of Burgaw for the Elder; and the Younger being an Eccleſiaſtick became a Cardinal (a). Arnoldus cites an Author who affirms (b) that Andrew, the Eldeſt Son of Ferdinand and of Philippina Velſerus, was a Cardinal, and that Charles his Younger Brother Marquis of Burgaw, Married Sybilla Siſter to John William Duke of Cleves. Theſe two Brothers died without Iſſue. It is ſaid that Charlemagne gave three Flowers-de-luce for Arms to Philip VALISERUS, who behaved himſelf very Bravely in the War of Lombardy. It is added that he was Honoured with ſeveral other Prerogatives, (c) and that Otho the Great confirmed all thoſe Privileges in Favour of Julius VELSERUS Grandſon of Philip Valiſerus, whom he made his Counſellor in the Council of War in 950, and a Knight in 971. (d) Charles the fifth ranked this Family amongſt the immediate Noble Men, whoſe cauſes are cognizable before the Emperour only (e). The Arch-Duke Ferdinand made Charles VELSERUS, Philippina's Brother, a free Baron (f).

* [illegible] pag. 17.

---

Obſerve that Julius Velſerus ſaved the Emperor Otho's life in a Battle againſt the Huns, and that he died of a continual Fever in the Camp at the Age of 96. in the Emperor Henry the II's. time, (g). The Author whom I cite ſpeaks of ſeveral Velſerus's, who ſignalized either their Valour in the Armies, or their Prudence in the Magiſtracy.

(C) Which had poſſeſſed vaſt Riches.] Melchior Adam relates that Francis the I. being by a Treaty of Peace obliged to pay 12 tuns of Gold to Charles the V. the Fuggers and the Velſers promiſed to Advance that great Sum of Money (h). Martin Cruſius ſaith that in the Year 1528. Bartholomew VELSER and his Partners Armed ſeveral Ships in Spain, and ſent them into America, where they diſcovered a very Rich Country, on the Frontiers of Peru, called Venezuela, of which they made themſelves Maſters, and kept it 28 Years, according to the Treaty which they concluded with Charles the V. But a difference aroſe betwixt the Farmers of Elizabeth King Philip's Queen, and George of Spire, who govern'd that Country in the Name of the Velſers. At firſt they diſputed only about Tolls, and then about the Limits, and at laſt it was pretended that thoſe Germans ought not to poſſeſs any part of Venezuela. The Cauſe was pleaded in Spain, and they were ejected out of all they poſſeſſed in Venezuela, by Virtue of the Sentence pronounced in the Spaniſh Court in 1555. The firſt Governour whom the Velſers Eſtabliſhed there was Ambroſe Dalſinger Born at Ulm, whom the Spaniards killed; but Charles V. cauſed the Authors of this Murther to be Puniſhed (i). Mr. Arnoldus is very angry becauſe Jerom Benzo calls the Velſers (to whom the Emperour engaged the Country of (k) Valentiola) Merchants. Vano iſtius judicio & Reges & Principes magnarii negotiatores erunt, & delicatarum mercium inſtitores. Hercules tuam fidem! Thus Arnoldus exclaims againſt the word Merchant. He Abridges what Herrera hath ſaid concerning the Exploits of thoſe Governors, whom the Velſers ſent to that Country.

(D) He wrote that Language like a Florentin.] The Teſtimony of an Italian to this purpoſe is cited by Mr. Arnoldus (l): Mirari poſſibus deſinant qui linguæ Italica civem in Marco attoniti ſtupent; Orlandus enim Peſcetti (m) in reſponſione ſua ad Anticruſcam Benii Florentinam, illius puritatem [illegible] exſultatur, dum ait: Se'l Cavalier (n) Guariti, Uomo pur Ferrareſe, prepi come nelle ſue lettere ſi vede, il Cavalier Salviati che purgaſſi il ſuo Paſtor Fido da Lombardiſmi, e dell' Illuſtriſſimo Sig. Marco Velſero Duumviro della Rep. Auguſtina, e chiariſſimo lume della Germania ſcrive all' Eccellentiſſimo Sig. Chiocco, che le ſue lettere gli paiono dettate da Uomo nato ed allevato in Firenze. Immo judicium Velſeri de lingua Italica mille aliis præfert cenſoribus: quando (o) ogn' altra vi mancaſſe, quella del Sig. Marco Velſero addietro mentovato, mi varebbe per mille, il quale in una lettera ſcritta all' Eccellentiſſimo Sig. Chiocco, dice che nel legger le coſe del Caſa ſente tanto diletto, che non vorebbe che aveſſer mai fine. You will find in Arnoldus the Elogy which Nicolas Manaſſes beſtowed upon Velſerus, in his Dedication to him of (p) a Book of Lewis le Roy, which Hercules Catus had Tranſlated from the French into Italian. I ſhall not Tranſcribe this, but another Elogy which ſeems of more weight. Galileo declaring his Reaſon why he made uſe of the Italian Language, in his three Letters to Velſerus de Maculis Solaribus, expreſſes himſelf thus: (q) Ma in oltre ci hò avuto un altro mio particolar intereſſe, ed è il non privarmi delle riſpoſte di V. S. in tal lingua vedute da me e dagl' Amici miei con molto maggior diletto, è meraviglia, che ſe foſſero ſcritte del più purgato ſtile Latine, e parci nel legger lettere di locuzzione tanto propria che Firenze eſtenda i ſuoi confini, anzi il recinto delle ſue mura, ſino in Auguſta.

(m) Nelle riſpoſte all' Anticr. del Beni, cart. 16.

(n) It ſhould be Guarini, and 'tis likely a fault of Impreſſion.

(o) Riſpoſt. cart. 112, 113.

(p) Concerning the Viciſſitude of the things of this World.

(q) Lettera terza, cart. 103. & 104. apud Arnoldum pag. 44.

(E) He Publiſhed ſeveral good Books.] His firſt Work, according to Melchior Adam, was that which he Publiſhed at Venice in the Year 1594. The bare Title diſcovers the uncommon Learning of the Author; it runs thus. Rerum Auguſtanarum Vindelicarum libri octo, quibus à prima Rhætorum ac Vindelicorum origine ad annum uſque 552. à nato Chriſto nobiliſſimæ gentis hiſtoria & antiquitates traduntur, ac antiqua monumenta tam quæ Auguſtæ, quam quæ in agro Auguſtano, quin & quæ alibi extant ad res Auguſtanas ſpectantia, ære inciſa & notis illuſtrata exhibentur. Melchior Adam had reaſon to (r) call this a happy Prelude. Velſerus Conſecrated the firſt Fruits of his Labours to the Glory of his Country. (s) In Italiam progreſſus edidit antiquitates Auguſtanas, felix famæ ſurgentis auſpicium & pium. In the Year 1602. He Publiſhed at Auſbourg, Rerum Boicarum libri quinque, hiſtoriam à gentis origine ad Carolum Magnum complexi. He afterwards Publiſhed at ſeveral times the Lives of ſome Martyrs of Augsburg, St. Ulric Biſhop of that City, St. Severinus and Apollonius of Tyre. As for the Ancient Itinerary, which Peutinger poſſeſſed, whence it was called tabula Peutingeriana, he Publiſhed it at Venice (t) in the Year 1591. Moſt of thoſe Pieces are Illuſtrated with Velſerus's Commentaries. All the Works of this Author have been Collected into a Body, and Re-printed in Folio at Nuremberg in 1682. Christopher Arnoldus Profeſſor at Nuremberg had the care of this Edition, and adorned it with Prefaces, in which he informs us of a great many Particulars, concerning the Family of the Velſers in general, and the Life of Mark Velſerus in particular; together with the judgment which the Learned have paſſed on his Works, and the Funeral Elogies with which they Honoured him. And as he kept a great Correſpondence with the Learned of Italy, and of ſeveral other Countries,

(r) It ought to be remembred that Velſerus had Publiſh'd a little Book in 1591.

(s) In vitis Juriſconſult. pag. 480.

(t) He ſays ſo himſelf in his 96th Letter ad Italos, pag. 879.

afforded helps to (F) several Authors; and no Man ever had more Friends than he in the Republick of Learning. He would never suffer himself (G) to be Drawn; but his Picture was taken unknown to him. He Died the 13th of June in the Year 1614, and left no Children. He had several Brothers † distinguished as well by their great Merit as considerable Posts. See his Life prefixed to the new Edition of his Works, for which we are beholden to the diligent Care of Christopher Arnoldus Professor at Nuremberg. An Author observes || that Velserus left his Domestick Affairs in an ill Posture; at which I am not at all surprized. When a Man Consecrates himself as he did to the Service of the Learned, and the Correspondence with Authors, it is extreamly difficult for him to avoid Expences, and neglecting his Patrimony. One Roserius Censured him, to whom he did not vouchsafe the Honour of an Answer. Scaliger and others advised him to this contempt of his Adversary.

Cluverius

ries, the Editor hath Collected several of his Latin and Italian Letters which he hath added to this Edition.

OPINIONS concerning the Author of the Squittinio della liberta Veneta.

Velserus passed for the Author of the Squittinio della liberta Veneta, which was Printed about the Year 1612. Gassendus acquainting us that several ascribed that Book to Mr. de Peiresc, adds that they were mistaken, and that it is very probable that Velserus composed it. He grounds this Conjecture on Velserus's great Learning and singular Propensity to the House of Austria: (a) Non disquiro quidem an auctor hujusce libri fuerit Antonius Albizius, nobilis ille Florentinus, qui Christianorum Principum Stemmata ediderat ante duos annos, ut nonnullis persuasum est; an, ut videtur verosimilius, insignis ille Marcus Velserus, cujus sæpius meminimus, ob consummatam eruditionem, propensionemque singularem erga domum Austriacam. Mr. Arnoldus (b) declares that he knows nothing of this affair, and blames their Temerity who pronounce so decisively concerning a Fact so uncertain as this is. He cites Ernstius (c), Rhodius (d), Scavenius (e), Placcius (f), who affirm that Velserus was the Author of this Book. He owns that Octavius Ferrarius wrote to him that Scioppius had frequently assured him, that Velserus was the Author of the Squittinio. (g) M. Velseri scripta eo plausu a studiosis excipientur, quem ingens viri fama & celebre nomen meretur. Nollem tamen illis inseri Venetæ Reip. Scrutinium, cujus illum auctorem fuisse sæpe mihi Scioppius firmavit. The Authority of Scioppius in this case seems to me to carry a great force; for besides that he was generally very well acquainted with all things of this Nature, he enjoyed a large share of Velserus's Friendship, and kept a very strict (h) Epistolary Correspondence with him. Mr. Arnoldus was not ignorant that the Author of the Book Entituled, The Conspiracy of the Spaniards against the Republick of Venice, attributes the Squittinio to the Marquis of Bedemar; but he hath not chosen the passage of that Piece, which most clearly ascribes the Squittinio to the Marquis. His Proof is grounded upon these words: The other point was that in all Affairs which he was to Negotiate concerning the Prerogatives of the Republick, he should make use of the Memoirs of the Squittinio della liberta veneta, to which the Marquis of Bedemar refers in several places of this Instruction, and that in Terms which tho' somewhat modest, yet discover plainly enough HIS PATERNAL LOVE FOR THIS LIBEL. The Abbot de St. Real Author of the Relation of this Conspiracy, saith this in the last Page but one; and in the 35. 36. and 37th he relates the History of the Squittinio, and how the Marquis of Bedemar had conceived and executed the design of this Work. From whence, and not from the last Page save one, Mr. Arnoldus ought to have drawn his necessary Proofs. But this is a very little fault compared with that which I am about to observe. He pretends that the Relator of that Conspiracy is very much mistaken, when he supposes that the Marquis of Bedemar in his Instruction to the Ambassadour, who was to succeed him, very much recommended the reading of the Squittinio. This is false, saith Mr. Arnoldus, for the Marquis decried this Piece, as a work abounding with Errors. The intire passage in the Professor of Nuremberg runs thus: "Verum quam falsus etiam hic auctor fuerit ex instructione secreta ab Alfonso della Cueva Hispanico apud Venetos legato successori suo Lud. Bravo data, cuivis uni ad oculum statim apparet, prout Laur. Bank eamdem cum Scrutinio evulgavit. (i) E perche in tempo mio fu divulgato un libretto intitulato Squittinio della liberta de Venetiani, opretta veramente degna d'esser letta. Deinde omnem illi derogat fidem, ob multas fallacias veritati inimicas quæ inibi occurrunt, ac vivos magistros mortuis longe præferendos censet. Questo ancora vorrei che si trovasse appresso di lei, scoprendosi per la lettura di quello molte fallacie introdotte da gli historici moderni, che trascurando la pura verita contenuta nelle Chroniche antiche, hanno dato ad intendere a posteri tutto quello che gli e parso a proposito per stabilire la loro liberta. Ne meno profitto sara che Vostra Excellenza potra trarne da libri vivi, che s'hara cavati da Volumi morti: Vuoglio dire che l'informatione a bocca di persone prattiche solite a frequentar la casa nostra, &c. Sed quid pluribus verbis opus est? Mentis acies se ipsam intuens nonnunquam hebescit."

The Reflection couched in these last words, seems to be made only to be turned against its Author; for it is plain that Mr. Arnoldus is dazled with too bright a Light. The passage, which he cites out of the Instruction, clearly shews that the Squittinio ought to consulted by the Ambassadour, because by reading it he might be informed of the Impostures of several Modern Historians. So far is Bedemar from saying that it is filled with Lies, that he recommends it as a Corrective of the Falsities of others. What is most blameable in the Abbot de St. Real is perhaps that he too warmly engages in the Affirmative, in ascribing the Squittinio to Alphonso de la Cueva. Which hath occasioned others (k) to declare too decisively on this Head. He had indeed better have suspended his Judgment: And we have here an instance which proves that some Books which make a great noise, are falsely attributed to various Persons, without our ever discovering (l) the true Author. A French Historian, who wrote when the Squittinio appeared publickly, makes no scruple to Attribute it to our Velserus, whose name he spells very ill. The second, saith he (m), is a Treatise composed by one Vulser, concerning the Liberty of Venice.

(F) And afforded Helps to several Authors.] No one Person contributed more than he to the large Collection of Inscriptions, which Gruterus Published. See the Elogy of Velserus in Gruterus's Preface. Melchior Adam gives us a long List (n) of several Antient Books, the Publication of which were procured by Velserus. Mr. Arnoldus enlarges on the (o) detail of the Services, which this Learned Man did to several Authors, and doth not forget the two Manuscripts of Anastasius, which he sent to the Jesuits of Mentz, after having borrowed them out of the Palatine Library, by the Interest of Marquard Freherus. The Story of Pope Joan was in those Manuscripts. Nor doth he forget that Velserus was security for one thousand Florins, in order to procure for Conrad Rittershusius a Manuscript of the Epistles of Isidorus Pelusiota out of the Duke of Bavaria's Library (p). But the Generosity of this Action wou'd not sufficiently appear, if we did not know that Velserus paid the mentioned sum without pretending any Obligation from Rittershusius, or so much as giving him notice of it.

(G) He would never suffer himself to be Drawn.] As we are informed in Peireskius's Life. There was a great and amicable Epistolary Commerce betwixt these two Learned Men; but Peireskius could never obtain this Friend's Picture. He was obliged to have recourse to a Stratagem, which he practised more than once: He payed a Painter

to † See Schottus, in the [illegible] and the Remark A in the Margin.

|| [illegible] pag. [illegible]

(a) Gassendus in vita Peireskii, lib. 3. ad ann. 1612. p. m. 279.

(b) In præfat.

(c) Lib. 2. Observat. variar. c. 36.

(d) In Auctor. supposit. p. 20, 21.

(e) In Catalogo, n. 60. in calce libri Placcii.

(f) De anonymis, cap. 15. pag. 116.

(g) Ferrarius, epist. ad Arnold. in præfat. operum Velseri.

(h) See the Remark F of the Article Bongars.

(i) Bizzar. Polit. num. 14, 15. pag. 85 & seq.

(k) See the Nouv. de la Repub. des Lettres for May, in the Year 168[illegible] p. [illegible] of the 1 Edit.

(l) See the Cabinet chimerique, pag. 21[illegible] of the 2. Edition.

(m) Le Grain, Decade de Louis XIII. Book 10. p. 440. The Author of the Veritez Françoises Printed in the Year 164[illegible] says pag. 31[illegible] that Vulser Publish'd his Treatise of the Liberty of Venice.

(n) In vitis Jurisconsult. pag. 412.

(o) De vita … Marci Velseri, p. 55. & seq.

(p) Georg. Rittershusius, in vita Conradi patris [illegible] præmissa, apud Arnold. pag. 59.

Cuverini, who Cenſured him in ſome particulars, deſerved an Anſwer; but Velſerus had been Dead one Year when Cuverini's Book came out §. Pignorius wrote a very good Epitaph on him, which is to be ſeen in the Jacobins Church at Augsburg, and in John Tonjola's * Appendix to the † Baſilea ſepulta retecta continuata.

VERDIER (N. DU) Hiſtoriographer of France, Author of (A) ſeveral Books, which as they are not Excellent, are not inferior to ſeveral which have ſupplied their Authors with Bread. Notwithſtanding which he had the Misfortune not to be able to ſubſiſt on the Fruits of his Pen, tho' very fertile: As I am informed by a very long (B) Parentheſis of Mr. John Baptiſt de Rocoles, Hiſtoriographer of France, and Brandenburg, which I have Inſerted in a Remark. We may learn from it at what time Du Verdier lived.

VERGERIUS (PETER PAUL) One of the Learned Men of the XVth Century, was Born at Capo † d'Iſtria on the Gulph of Venice. He was a good Philoſopher, and ſo happily intermixed Polite Learning with the Law, that he was eſteemed the moſt Eloquent Civilian of his time. He ‖ Learned Greek under Emanuel Chryſoloras at Venice, and the Canon Law χ under Francis Zabarella at Florence. He was ζ very much reſpected by Prince Carrari Lord of Padua, who choſe him Preceptor to his Children. He was not leſs conſidered by the Emperor Sigiſmund, ∧ at whoſe Court in Hungary he died, and whom he accompanied to the Council of Conſtance, if I am (C) not miſtaken. He wrote ſeveral (D) Books.

VERGERIUS (PETER PAUL) of the ſame * City and Family with the precedent, Flouriſhed in the XVIth Century. He ſtudied the Civil Law, and took his degree of Doctor Law; but he made himſelf more famous by his Embaſſies, and eccleſiaſtical Affairs than for his Learning in the Civil Law. He was ſent Nuncio into Germany to the King of the Romans † by Clement VII. and had Orders to uſe all poſſible means to hinder the Aſſembling of a National Council. He ſupported the Intereſt of Popery with a great deal of Vigour and Addreſs, and oppoſed the Progreſs of the Lutherans as much as in him lay. He was recalled by Paul III. who was reſolved to be thoroughly informed of the Diſpoſitions of Germany, and was ſent thither again in the Year 1535, with Orders to promiſe the holding of a Council, and with ſome other Inſtructions. On this Head he conferred to watch an opportunity of placing himſelf in a convenient place, where unſeen he could eaſily have a full view of Velſerus. (a) Hoc uno ipſi durus fuit (Velſerus) quod ſui effigiem conſtantiſſime denegavit, pro eo quo omnibus aliis ardentiſſime flagitantibus denegaverat inſtituto. Et Peireskius tamen ut alios nonnullos, ſic illum neſcientem pingi procuravit, conducto artifice qui ipſius vultum è clandeſtino loco ſpectaret. Sic obtinuit quod illi Occo ſperare nefas prædixerat, cum id abs Velſero tuliſſet reſponſum, Cato major poſteros volebat quærere cur ſibi ſtatua nulla poſita: Mihi contra, quantum video cavendum ne quis aliquando miretur, ſi non & indignetur, qua ambitione conſortio magnorum virorum, quorum imagines ſe colligere Fabricius oſtendit, irrepſerim. This ſhews that Velſerus was not more Complaiſant to others than to Mr. de Peireſc, and that he very modeſtly Excuſed himſelf to him. I cannot tell whether the Effigies of Velſerus in the Library of Milan, was copied from that drawn for Mr. de Peireſc: But I know that the Picture of this Illuſtrious German was placed in that Library. Of which Boſca informs us when he mentions the Interview of Olgiati and Velſerus. Et quidem nos cùm pictam tabulam quæ expreſſam ipſius imaginem refert, in Ambroſiano Muſeo ſpectamus, gravitatem eam ex oculis conjicimus, & ex oris ipſius majeſtate vim literaturæ ac conſilii in adminiſtranda Vindelicorum provincia deprebendimus (b).

(A) Author of ſeveral Books.] Beſides others, he hath Publiſhed the Abridgments of the Hiſtory of England, France, Spain, and of the Turks, &c.

(B) As I am informed by a very long Parentheſis.] The Author whom I cite having related the Death of Baſſa Geduc Acomat, according to the Narrative of the Turkiſh Pandects, extracted from the Italian of the Secretary of Sigiſmund Malateſta Prince of Rimini, adds immediately after: " (c) But Poor " du Verdier, who wrote in a Conciſe but Elegant " Style, an Abridgment of the Hiſtory of the Turks, " relates it after ſeveral others. (I call this Celebra- " ted Writer Poor, becauſe whilſt I write this, he " and his Poor Wife are in the Hoſpital of the " Salt-Peter-Houſe at Paris, where they have been " for ſeven or eight Years paſt, where I have viſited " him, and found true what Fame had long ſince " divulged concerning his great Probity: This " made me deplore the Fate of ſeveral Learned " Men in this Flouriſhing Age, in which Virtue and " Merit ought to be more valued.") This Author ſaith &c.

(C) Accompanied to the Council of Conſtance, if I am not miſtaken.] I make uſe of this Reſerve, becauſe the Expreſſions of thoſe, who inform us that he appeared with a great deal of Luſtre in that Council, (d) claruit in Concilio Conſtantienſi, do not prove him a Domeſtick to the Emperour. Perhaps the Proof he gave of his Merit during the holding of that Council, determined Sigiſmund to take him into his Service.

(D) He wrote ſeveral Books.] The Hiſtory of the Princes of Carrari, and that of the Princes of Mantua. An Elogy of St. Jerom. A Treatiſe de republica Veneta, Printed at Rome in 1526 (e). An Invective againſt Malateſta, who cauſed Virgil's Statue at Mantua to be thrown down (f). A Letter de vita & obitu Franciſci Zabarellæ Cardinalis Florentini (g). The Life of Petrarch. A Treatiſe de ingenuis moribus ac liberalibus ſtudiis, which was Printed at Venice in 1502, with ſeveral other ſmall Tracts of like nature, cum commentariis Joannis Bonardi Veronenſis & aliis aliorum de puerorum educatione opuſculis (h), and Re-printed at Baſil in the Year 1541. cum L. Vitruvii Roſcii de docendi ſtudendique modo, & claris puerorum moribus libello (i). This was read in Colleges, when Paul Jovius (k) was a young Scholar. Beſides which he was the (l) firſt who Tranſlated Arrianus de rebus geſtis Alexandri Magni. But this Verſion being deſigned for the uſe of the Emperor Sigiſmund, who was not very Learned, he therefore made uſe of very Barbarous Latin, as Bartholomew Faccius (m) obſerves. We may here by the way obſerve a Miſtake of Leander Albertus; he clearly inſinuates that Marius Æquicola is the firſt, who mentioned that Charles Malateſta cauſed Virgil's Statue to be thrown into the River. Quamquam, ſaith he (n), a Mario Æquicola in commentariis lingua vernacula de Mantuanis principibus conſcriptis injuria hercle carpatur, ac ſi ſtatuam Virgilii poetæ in flumen abjici juſſerit: Etenim (o) ipſo auctori hu e rei Æquicolæ fides tribuitur exigua, modicæ

§ [illegible]

* Miniſter of the Italian Church of Baſil.

‖ See what Anſelm Dromcellis him in Dedicating to him his Latin Tranſlation of the Iliad. You'll find his words in Geſner's Bibliotheque fol. 552. and in Voſſius de hiſt. Lat. pag. 553.

† Ferdinand Brother to the Emperor Charles V.

(d) Andreas Divus, præfat. in Iliada Homeri à ſe verſam.

(e) Geſner: in biblioth. fol. 551. verſo.

(f) Voſſius de hiſtor. Lat. pag. 553.

(g) Panzirol. de claris legum interpret. l. 3. c. 28. pag. m. 444.

(h) Voſſius ibid. pag. 552.

(i) Geſn. ib. fol. 552.

(k) Jovius in elog. c. 111. pag. 254.

(l) Voſſius ibib.

(m) In præfat. ſuper ſua tranſlat. eorundem librorum apud Geſn. ubi ſupra.

(n) Leand. Albert. in deſcripa. Ital. p. 455.

(o) I ſet down thoſe words with the faults of the Preſs that are in them.

conferred with ſeveral Proteſtant Princes, (C) and with Luther himſelf at Wittemberg. He gave an account to the Pope of his Nunciature the following Year, and was immediately ordered to Naples to Treat with Charles V. He was raiſed to the Epiſcopal Dignity † in the ſame Year 1536, and in Conjunction with twelve other Commiſſioners he drew up the Papal Indiction or Promulgation of a Council. He returned into Germany in the Year 1541, to aſſiſt at the Aſſembly of Worms: He appeared there as a Perſon employed by the King of France, but this dicta nimirum opinione ſcriptori. It is certain that our Vergerio lived before this Æquicola.

I deſire it may be obſerved that Voſſius when he wrote his Book concerning the Latin Hiſtorians, remembred very well, that our Vergerius was Author of the Invective againſt Charles Malateſta; but he perfectly forgot it when he Compoſed his Treatiſe of the Latin Poets: For he there declares that he did not know whether this Invective was Written by Guarini of Verona, or one of his Diſciples. (a) Statuam Mantuæ conſtitutam Maroni ante bos annos ducentos Carolus de Malateſta, tanquam quæ nihil ad religionem Chriſtianam pertineret, dejici curavit. Habeoque orationem Manuſcriptam adverſus Carolum in temporibus ſuper hoc exaratam, ſatis ſanè acerbam: Et tamen auctor ait, acerbiùs ſe ſcripturum fuiſſe, ſi tutum fuiſſet in eos ſcribere, qui poſſent proſcribere. Nomen auctoris non apponitur: Sed permiſta legitur orationibus, libelliſque Guarini, ac diſcipulorum, qui auctore magiſtro hujuſmodi oneris aliquid ſuſcipere ſolerent. Ut videri poſſit ſcripta ab ipſo Guarino Veronenſi, clariſſimo ſui temporis viro, vel ſaltem diſcipulorum aliquo.

(C) And with Luther himſelf at Wittemberg.] Father Paul and Pallavicini relate this very differently. The firſt (b) aſſures us that the Pope ordered Vergerius to treat with Luther, and the Chief of his Fraternity, and to endeavour to regain them by Promiſes and Careſſes, and that this (c) Nuncio went to Luther at Wittemberg, and treated him very obligingly, according to his Orders. He recites the diſcourſe the Nuncio made, and Luther's Anſwer. He ſhews the Magnificent Promiſes and moſt engaging Behaviour of the former in his Diſcourſe. But Luther's Anſwer is full of a Holy contempt of all thoſe advantageous Offers: He diſcovers an admirable firmneſs and reſolution. Pallavicini relates this Story in a quite other manner, and accuſes Father Paul of having ſtuffed his Hiſtory with more Lies than Homer had invented concerning the Trojan War. He complains that Father Paul diſgraces the Pope by repreſenting him making ſuch ſhameful Advances, and that he beſtows ſo much Piety, Wiſdom and Greatneſs of Soul on a Heretick. He maintains that Vergerio unexpectedly ſaw Luther. This Nuncio, ſaith he, being obliged to paſs through Wittemberg, was there very honourably Received. The Commander of that Town waited at his Table during his Supper, and came to him next Morning to do him the ſame Service at his Breakfaſt, bringing with him two Doctors, Martin Luther and John Bugenhage, and telling him that the Court and Univerſity were both abſent, (d) and that he could find no other Perſons but theſe two, who were able to converſe with him in an intelligible Language, and keep him Company; and he begged of him to accept of them whilſt he breakfaſted. The Nuncio could not deny it, he found that Luther expreſt himſelf barbarouſly in Latin; he ſuffer'd him to ſay ſeveral things without anſwering ſcarce one word, and took him for a very haughty, malitious, and impudent Man, whoſe Manners were very courſe. (e) Have you heard any thing in Italy, concerning the Character I have there of a drunken German? was one of the Queſtions which Luther asked Vergerius. He ſaid ſeveral things of the ſame nature, which the Nuncio mentioned in his Letter to the Pope's Secretary, in which he did not forget to deſcribe Luther's Habit and Manners. This is the ſubſtance of Pallavicini's Relation (f), which he took from Vergerius's Letter written to the Pope's Secretary on the 12th of November 1535, and he concludes from hence, that Father Paul is miſtaken when he affirms that the Pope gave Vergerio Order to make large Promiſes to Martin Luther. This Inference is inconteſtable, and there is no other way left to bring off Father Paul than to plead the Falſity of the Nuncio's Letter; for if it be owned to be Authentick, it plainly appears that the Pope did not order Vergerio to gain Luther by endearing Perſuaſions and the hopes of Honours; for if it be ſo, Vergerio by this relation of his diſcourſe with Luther, which he ſent in his Letter to the Pope's Secretary, had render'd himſelf as ridiculous as any of the moſt ſenſeleſs Wretches that are ſhut up in a Mad-houſe.

Perhaps it may be ſaid, that it is at leaſt true that Vergerius held of his own head, this Diſcourſe with Luther, which Father Paul relates, from whence it will naturally follow, that Luther's Anſwer is not a pure Invention. I wiſh at leaſt that Father Paul's fidelity on this laſt head could be juſtified; but I cannot ſee how: for in the firſt place according to Father Maimbourg's Remark, (g) Theſe fine Diſcourſes of Father Paul are not found in the Writers of thoſe times; not even in Sleidan, who ſaith only in one word, that Vergerio ſaw Luther at Wittemberg. In the ſecond place, the curious and indefatigable Seckendorf (h), who met with a relation of the interview betwixt the Nuncio and Luther, ſaith nothing concerning the Nuncio's Promiſes; and this relation being made by a very good Friend to Luther, it is not credible that he ſhould forget the moſt conſiderable paſſage in his Narration, I mean, the Nuncio's advantageous Offers, and the Heroick, and intirely Apoſtolical contempt of them which Luther ſhewed. And therefore the ſilence of this Relater in this particular, is a demonſtrative Proof againſt Father Paul. It ought not to be objected that the Author of this Relation informs us, that he has omitted ſeveral particulars; for ſince what he relates is leſs important and honourable than Father Paul's fine Diſcourſes, he would doubtleſs have inſerted them into his Narrative, rather than any of the reſt, if they had really been ſpoken. He hath not omitted Luther's jeſting Anſwer to his Barber, and would he then have forgot an Anſwer more worthy of St. Paul than of a Doctor of the XVIth Century? Luther before he made a Viſit to Vergerio, cauſed himſelf to be ſhaved very early in the Morning. At which the Barber was very much ſurprized. Don't wonder at this, replies the (i) Reformer, I have been ſent for to talk with the Nuncio of the Holy Father, and I would not appear in a ſlovenly manner; and ſhaving will make me appear younger, and I ſhall the more terrify my Adverſaries with a fear of my living the longer. This Author does not forget this Particular. Obſerve that this Account very plainly inſinuates, that this Interview was not unexpected on the Nuncio's ſide, and that it expreſly ſays, that they talked much concerning the holding of a Council. From whence we may infer that Vergerio did not write an exact Account of all the Particulars of this Converſation to the Pope's Secretary: So that one of Pallavicini's Reaſons is very weak; (k) he ſaith the Nuncio dared not diſguiſe the Truth, ſince the Contents of his Dialogue with Luther before a whole table full of Auditors, might be related to the Pope by other hands. Obſerve alſo that Spondanus (l) relates, that Paul the Third charged his Nuncio, Peter Paul Vergerius, to treat Martin Luther in a very engaging manner, and to make him a great many Promiſes. Once more, this is inconſiſtent with the Nuncio's Letter, and perhaps we ſhould not be in the wrong to ſubſcribe to the Judgment of a Jeſuit in this particular. I believe, ſaith he (m), that the moſt certain thing that can be ſaid upon this is, That Father Paul diverted himſelf at the Expence of Truth, by making theſe two Perſons ſpeak as he pleaſed, to whom, as it appears, he was no Enemy.

Will it be objected that the Order to tempt Luther by magnificent Promiſes, was a Secret whiſpered in the Ear, that only Vergerio and the Pope were acquainted with, and therefore it was not mentioned in the long Letter written to the Pope's Secretary by Vergerio, which Father Pallavicini cites? This is the laſt Intrenchment of a Cavilling Man, which may be eaſily forced; for if this particular inſtruction of the Nuncio was only whiſpered in his Ear this is said to have been only a feint (D), and that he took that Character in order to render himself the more serviceable to the Court of Rome. He Published an Oration on the Unity of the Church, chiefly to prove that a particular Council ought not to be attempted. Being returned to Rome, he found that some Persons had so far rendred him suspected of Lutheranism, that the Pope hearkning to their Calumnies, had given over his Design * of making him a Cardinal. This News threw him into a Consternation, and he resolved to justify himself. To which end he retired into his own Country, and there began a Controversial Book against the German Apostates. He examined their Books, he weighed the force of their Objections, he attentively sought after ways of refuting them; but this diligent study only served to convince him, that they were in the right. From that time he renounced all hopes of a Cardinal's Hat, and went to his † Brother, who was Bishop of Pola, to whom he declared the Condition he was in; he asked his Advice, and without any regard to the compassion he had excited in him, he exhorted him to consult the Scripture, and above all on the Doctrine of Justification. The Bishop of Pola having followed his Counsel, was convinced of the truth of the Protestant Doctrine, and agreed with his Brother to teach the truth for the future. They executed their Design; but the Monks perceiving it, alarmed the Inquisition, and made a great stir about it. One of the Inquisitors (E) prodigiously vexed the Citizens of Pola and Capo d'Istria; insomuch that our Vergerius, not believing himself safe, retired to Mantua, to Cardinal Hercules de Gonzaga: which he did not long find a secure retreat; for John della Casa, the Pope's Legate at Venice, made so many Instances to the Cardinal, to oblige him to rid himself of such a Guest, that † Tunc primum factus Epiſcopus Modruſſienſis, ac non multo poſt Juſtinopolitanus. Melch. Adam ubi infra pag. 118.

---

(a) Voſſius de poetis Latin. p. 27.

(b) Fra. Paolo, hiſt. du Concile de Trente l. 1. p. 69. of Amelot's Tranſlation Printed at Amſterdam 1686.

(c) Id. ib. pag. 70.

(d) The Profeſſors had removed elſewhere by reaſon of the Plague.

(e) La prima coſa che diſſe vedendomi taciturno fù, ſe in Italia io haveva inteſo alcuna coſa, della ſua fama d'eſſer Tedeſco imbriaco. Vergerius Epiſt. ad ſecretarium Papæ apud Pallavic. iſtor. del Concilio l. 3. c. 18. n. 9.

(f) Pallavicin. ibid. n. 6. & ſequent.

* See the Remark D.

† John Baptist Vergerius

ter by the Pope: If the Nuncio durst not write any thing to the Pope's Secretary, which should hint that his Holiness had given him such an Instruction, how came Father Paul by this large account of the Nuncio's Offers? Had he seen Vergerio's Letters, which were to be read by the Pope only? This is what he should inform us of, and till we know it, we have occasion to believe Vergerio's Dispatches, that are still in the Archives, and to affirm that the Pope burnt all those Letters which were written for his perusal only; which is a new Reason to ask how they then reached the Hands of this Servite at Venice. And after all, may we not object to Father Paul, silence of the Relation the which Mr. Seckendorf found amongst the Wittemberg Manuscripts.

(D) This is said to have been only a feint.] Sleidan and after him Melchior Adam affirm it. (a) Erat etiam hoc in conventu (Wormatiensi) Petrus Paulus Vergerius, episcopus Justinopolitanus, verbo quidem, tanquam Galliæ regis causa, sed revera missus à pontifice, qui suis rebus illum inservire magis posse putabat, si quidem alieno nomine ibi versaretur. Father Paul affirms the same thing, The Bishop of Capo d'Istria, saith he (b), was present at this Conference, not as the Pope's Minister, tho' really sent by Paul as a Man very well verst in the Knowledge of that Country, but in the name of France, that he might be less suspected by the Germans, and more capable of serving the Pope under a foreign Name. He adds, "that several Persons there made it their Business to prolong "that Affair, to which they were engaged by the Nun"cio Campegio, and the secret Practices of Vergerio. Cardinal Pallavicini, according to his Custom, here complains of the malignity of Father Paul; he accuses him of falsly charging the Pope with a Spirit of Fraud; and to convince him of Falsity, he tells us that Vergerio had been long suspected at the Court of Rome. Cardinal Alexander's Letters had produced this effect; he had advertised the Pope that Vergerio spoke disadvantageously of the Holy See, and held correspondence with Luther's Disciples. It was believed at Rome, that this Bishop's continuance in Germany was a sign of the Venom of Heresy which he had swallowed, wherefore they endeavour'd to oblige him to residence, and made it a Request to the Emperor, that a Prelate so much suspected as he, should be obliged to live far from the Empire, and not assist at all at the Conferences concerning Religion. If this be true, we may suppose that he assumed the Character of Envoy of France, without any Collusion of the Pope. Pallavicini's words and proofs run thus. (c) Il qual racconto è si falso, che molto prima il Cardinal Aleandro haveva ammonito (1) segretissimamente il Pontefice, come il Vergerio parlava con poco onore della Sede Apostolica, minacciava contra di essa, e teneva amicizia con Luterani; del che allegò per testimonii il Nunzio Morone, e quel di Vinezia. E conforme à tale opinione formata di lui, nel quale trasparivano i semi di quelle serpi ch'egli covava nell' animo, e che poi uscirono nelle scritture e nell' azioni: era il senso che havevasi à questo tempo in Roma della sua dimora in Germania: Tantoche gli s'era anch'esibito lo sgravamento della pensione per indurlo alla residenza nel Vescovado. E tuttociò fe significare il Pontefice (1) all' Imperadore dal Nunzio Poggi, affinche l'autorità Cesarea (quando ciò fosse possibile) il tenesse lungi da quelle Provincie, e da que trattati. Observe that the Cardinal doth not deny what Fra. Paolo says concerning Vergerio's Conduct: He doth not deny the Artifices of this Minister of the King of France, which were so conform to the Court of Rome. He saith nothing on that Head, but tells us that Vergerio was a Man of a lively and bold Genius, and of the humour of certain Persons who cannot live without being in the management of publick business, and who fancy that it cannot be carried on without them. (d) Huomo quanto vivace, tanto audace, e frà la condizion di coloro che nè possono vivere senza maneggiar negozii, nè pensano che i negozii possano maneggiarsi senza di loro. As for the rest (e), what Sleidan saith, that Vergerio at his return from the Dyet of Worms, had been created Cardinal, if some Persons had not alter'd the Pope's Mind, he calls it a Falsity, and maintains that in 1539 the Pope was displeased with that Bishop.

(E) Prodigiously vexed the Citizens of Pola, and.] We can never too often represent the Villany and Injustice annexed to the Trade of an Inquisitor. Wherefore I shall here give a short account of that Man's Conduct, who exercised that Office in the Dioceses of the two Vergerio's. His Name was Annibal Grison. He entred the Houses of the Inhabitants to search for suspicious Books; he Excommunicated those who did not detect the Persons that appeared to them suspected of Lutheranism; he promised to mitigate the Punishment of those who should renounce their Heresie, and apply to him to ask Pardon; but he threatned those with Fire, who did not prevent their Accusers by an humble confession of their Crime. He denounced his Threats from Door to Door, and scattered Terror in every place. Some accused themselves: He very terribly censured those, who had read the Bible in the vulgar Language, and forbad their continuance in that crime. In a very small time nothing was seen but Accusations, every one ingaged in them without regard to the Laws of Consanguinity or Gratitude. The Wife did not spare her Husband, the Son his Father, nor the Client his Patron; several Persons were brought into trouble for Trifles, such for Example who had only adventured to speak against the Bigottry of others. (f) Deinde promiscua Multitudo, timore perculsis animis, deferebant quosque certatim, nulla neque propinquitatis neque necessitudinis aut beneficiorum habita ratione: non parenti filius, non uxor marito, non cliens patrono parcebat. Delationes autem erant plerunque de rebus frivolis; ut quisque forte aliquid ob superstitionem in aliquo reprehenderat. On a solemn day this Inquisitor celebrated Mass in

(a) Sleida- lib. 13. m. 318 rio.

(b) Fra. olo, ift. du Concile Trente k 1. p. 7. of A- lot's rsion.

(c) Palla- in. ubi pra lib. . c. 12. . 11. p. m. 33, 434. e also hap. 13. 3. of the th Book. g. 635.

(1) Lette- a del Card. A- ndro l Cervi- no a, 12. di Marzo 1539. del- la quale il Cervino accusa la ricevuta in una all' Aleandri otto i 28. dell' i- stesso.

(1) Lettere del Card. Farnese al Poggi dell' ultimo di Febraio, 1541.

(d) Id. ib.

(e) Id. lib. 6. c. 13. n. 1.

(f) Melc. Adam. in vitis Theol. exter. pag. 119.

that Vergerius found it very proper to leave Mantua. He went to Trent (F) in order to purge himself before the Council. The Pope would very willingly have received him, but being loath to give occasion to any Complaints that the Assembly was not free, he wrote to his Legates to forbid this Bishop taking his place there, and that they should order him to depart. Some Circumstances are related on this head, which (G) are pitiful. Vergerius retired to Venice, where he took care not to conform to the Desires of John della Casa, who advised him to go to Rome. A few days after he was forbid returning to his Bishoprick, in the Pope's name. He went to Padua, and there became a Witness of the deplorable death of Francis Spira. This Example of Despair, to which those expose themselves, who wickedly and knowingly deny the Truth, made him resolve to undergo a voluntary Exile, that he might be thereby enabled to make an open profession of the pure Religion. He went to the Grisons, and was a Minister amongst them for several Years, as well as in the Valteline: After which, he was invited to Tubingen by the Duke of Wirtemberg, where he died the 4th of October 1565. He Publish'd in the Cathedral of Capo d'Istria, and told the People: Of late years you are loaded with numerous Calamities; your Olive-Plantations as well as your Corn-fields and Vineyards are barren; your Cattle are sorely afflicted. Your Bishop and other Hereticks have exposed you to these Evils. Don't expect any mitigation of these Judgments, unless you suppress those Hereticks, and what have you now to do but to stone them immediately? (a) Hoc tempore, & hisce aliquot annis multæ vos premunt calamitates: quæ nunc oleas, nunc segetes, modò vineas, modò pecudes, aliasque facultates graviter affligunt: his verò malis causam præbet Episcopus vester & hæreticorum turba reliqua: nec est quod levationem ullam speretis, nisi coerceantur: proximum autem est, ut impetu facto lapidentur. You will find all this in Sleidan's (b) History. Observe, that Vergerius had so much prudence as not to trust himself to the mercy of a Populace thus animated by a furious Persecutor. He made his escape, as Father Paul (c) observes, from the fury of the People of his Diocese, which the Inquisitor Hannibal Grison had irritated against him by charging him with being a Lutheran, and the cause of the sterility of the Earth. I cannot tell whether this Hannibal had ever read the (d) Writings of the Fathers, wherein we find the ridiculous Reproaches of the Pagans, that the Followers of JESUS CHRIST were the cause of all the Calamities which befell the People. I do not know whether he had read this excellent passage of Tertullian: (e) At è contrario illis nomen factionis accommodandum est, qui in odium bonorum & proborum conspirant, qui adversum sanguinem innocentium conclamant, prætexentes sanè ad odii defensionem, illam quoque vanitatem, quòd existiment omnis publicæ cladis, omnis popularis incommodi Christianos esse causam. Si Tyberis ascendit in mœnia, si Nilus non ascendit in arva, si cœlum stetit, si terra movit, si fames, si lues, statim Christianos ad leonem. But I am persuaded that tho' he had perfectly known all this, it would not have hindred him from saying, when Provisions were dear, or there was a mortality amongst the Cattel, that the Hereticks were the cause of it. Such a Man consults his false Zeal more than Reason, and consequently may very well be so blind as not to see the absurdity of casting the same Reproaches on Lutheranism which the Pagans did upon the Primitive Christians, and which all Protestants may return on Papists in the Countries where they are strongest. But which is more, tho' such a Man had been sensible of this Absurdity, he was yet capable of practising it, because no means seemed more proper to him, to enrage the People against the Lutherans, and make 'em stone them than this. Is it astonishing that a Monk should use this contrivance? Don't we see that as soon as the Christians were able to persecute, they reproached Error with the same effects which Paganism had ascribed to them, that is to say, with being the cause that they had not good Crops, and that the Seasons changed their natural course. I do not cite a private inconsiderable Author to prove this, but a very Authentick Piece and Imperial Authority. Read what follows, (f) An diutiùs perferimus mutari temporum vices, iratâ cœli temperie? quæ, Paganorum exacerbata perfidiâ, nescit naturæ libramenta servare. Unde enim ver solitam gratiam abjuravit? unde æstas messe jejunâ laboriosum Agricolam in spe destituit aristarum? unde hyemis intemperata ferocitas, ubertatem terrarum penetrabili frigore sterilitatis læsione damnavit? nisi quod ad impietatis vindictam transit lege suâ naturæ decretum. Mr. Van Dale (g) hath made some very good Reflections on this Head. When we consider these disparities, it is not easie to refrain from saying that there are certain Faults which cling fast to Sects, not as they are Sects, but as they are predominant. And hence it is that the same Communions change their Spirit and Maxims, proportionably as they acquire or lose superiority. That Maxim, that Honours alter the Manners, is very true here, and we may very well invert the sense of that of (h) Cornelius Nepos, without falsifying it.

(F) He went to Trent in order to purge himself.] Melchior Adam ought to be blamed for not expressing the Year in which Vergerio went to Trent. He hath extracted all that he hath said concerning the Conversion of this Bishop from Sleidan; but tho' that Author successively relates these things under the Year 1548. we ought not to believe that Vergerio was at Trent in that year. He was there according to Father Paul in 1546. (i) "He believed that the most honourable and commodious way of justifying himself was at the Council. But the Legates would not admit him into the Congregation, because he had not cleared himself to the Pope, to whom they earnestly pressed him to go; and if they had not been afraid of raising a report against the liberty of the Council, they had not contented themselves with Exhortations. So that Vergerio, after some days stay, departed from Trent, intending to return to his Bishoprick, where he hoped the troubles were appeased. But when he was at Venice, the Nuncio (1) forbad his return thither, having receiv'd orders from Rome to prosecute him. Which obliged him to quit Italy within a few Months, either induced to it by resentment, or fear, or some other Motive.,, I cite this passage, as well because it relates some facts not touched on by Sleidan, as because Father Paul's Chronology wants a little Correction. What he tells us of Vergerio's leaving Italy in 1546 is not true. He did not quit that Country till after having seen the miserable end of Spira at Padua, who died in (k) 1548. If we will add to this Pallavicini's Censures, we must say that (l) Vergerio finding himself cited at Rome, where he had been accused as suspected of Heresy, went to Trent, where he expected a safe refuge, and hoped to enjoy his right of Session amongst the Bishops as Judge of that Faith which he was charged with having deserted. But being excluded from this Right, he obtained, by the intercession of the Legates, a Dispensation from appearing at Rome; and his case was committed to the Nuncio and Patriarch of Venice, according to his request: but being sensible that he could not justify himself, he retir'd to the Protestants.

(G) Circumstances —— which are pitiful.] (m) "Vergerius intending to retire from the Council, went to Cervin (n), and asked him for what Articles he was rejected out of the company of the other Bishops of the Council. Cervin then answer'd: Because I have heard that you deny'd the Truth of the Legends of St. George and St. Christopher. It is true, reply'd Vergerio, I did, and do yet deny them: But I ground that denyal on the Authority of Pope Paul III, who commanded them both to be left out of the Breviary. And in the Preface at the beginning of that Book, he saith that he had commanded that all those Legends should be left out which are not true. Cervin being surpriz'd, could think of no other Answer than this:

Those

(a) Id. ib. ex Sleidano ubi infra.

(b) Sleidan, Book 21. fol. m. 589. ad ann. 1548.

(c) Fra-Paolo ubi supra, lib. 2. p. 141.

(d) See Origen contra Celsum lib. 3. & in Matthæum c. 24. Arnobius l. 1. St. Cyprian lib. ad Demetrianum, and among his Letters the 75. Orosius, lib. 7. c. 37. St. Augustin de civit. Dei passim, &c.

(e) Tertul. Apologet. c. 40.

(f) Novella 3. Theodosii de Judæis, Samaritanis & Hæreticis.

(g) Van Dale de Oarculis pag. 21, & 22.

(h) [illegible]

(i) Fra-Paolo ubi supra pag. 141.

(1) John della Casa, Archbishop of Benevento, who was Secretary of State under Paul IV.

(k) Sleidan. lib. 21. fol. m. 558.

(l) Pallavicini ubi supra lib. 6. c. 13. n. 3. He quotes the Letters written by the Legats to Cardinal Ardinghelli the 20th of February, 1546, and to Cardinal Farnese, the 2d and the 6th of March in the same year.

(m) Crespin, Estat de l'Eglise, p. m. 570.

(n) He was one of the Legates, and afterwards Pope Marcellus II.

liſhed ſeveral Books (H) which proved very prejudicial to the Roman Communion. Before he left Italy he loſt his Brother, who died by Poiſon, as was ſuſpected *. The Relation which I have extracted from Melchior Adam, is defective in many particulars.

“ thoſe Perſons ought not to paſs for good Men, “ who ſeem to agree with the Lutherans in any “ particular whatever, and therefore leave our “ Council.” Thoſe who hold it utterly improbable, that Vergerio's deſpiſing thoſe Legends could be the only reaſon which the Legate urged, will be at leaſt ſatisfy'd with the Hiſtorian, when he owns that it left the Legate quoted that reaſon and alledged another. But they will never pardon Chemnitius for ſaying, That Vergerius ran the riſque of his Life by adventuring to declare, that he did not approve all that was contained in the Legend of St. George. (a) Narrat de Vergerio, hiſtoria quæ cum in Tridentina ſynodo Georgii legendam, quam Gelaſius diſtinct. 15. [illegible] hæreticis tribuit, ſibi non per omnia probari dixiſſet, in diſcrimen dignitatis, imo vitæ & capitis adductus fuit. It muſt be allowed that this Recital is not very exact, and that at leaſt there plainly appears in it the Sophiſm a non ſufficienti enumeratione partium. He reduces ſeveral Reaſons to that, which in all likelyhood was look'd upon as the moſt inconſiderable.

What I am going to ſay is not one of the Circumſtances which concern the Text of this Remark. (b) Creſpin avers, that ſeveral Biſhops being inform'd that Cervin, contrary to the Opinion of his two Collegues and of ſome Cardinals, perſiſted in his refuſal to admit Vergerius into the Council, reſolved to write to the Pope: (c) Hierom Vida of Cremona, Biſhop of Alba, an excellent Poet, had already drawn up the Letters as well in the name of himſelf as of others, but this Legate's ſevere Advertiſement hinder'd his ſending them to the Pope.

(H) Several Books which proved very prejudicial to the Roman Communion.] As he was well acquainted with the Intrigues and moſt hidden abuſes of Italy, he was better able than another to render Popery odious. Beſides he ſcarce wrote any but ſmall Tracts, which could eaſily be diſperſed throughout Europe, and choſe ſuch Subjects as were ſuſceptible of a particular turn which very ſenſibly touched the Readers. You will find in the Catalogue of his Writings (d): Relatio de perſecutione facta contra Evangelium in urbe Juſtinopolitana. Contra librum cui nomen Floſculi ſancti Franciſci. Contra librum cui titulus Rotarium. Contra librum cui titulus Miracula Virginis. De libro cui titulus Lux fidei. De libro cui titulus Floſculi Bibliæ. De ſtatuis ac imaginibus. De coronatione Julii Papæ III. quid ſperandum ex papatu Julii III. de literis Othonis Cardinalis Auguſtani ſcriptis de creatione Julii III. Quatuor literæ ſub nomine (e) Bonini de Boninis de ſtatu Romanæ Curiæ. De nugis & fabulis papæ Gregorii I. (f) De idolo Lauretano. Scholia in orationem Cardinalis Poli ad Cæſarem qua illum ad arma contra eos qui Evangelio nomen dederunt, inſtigat. Nova editio libri Ceremoniarum Romanæ Eccleſiæ cum præfatione & ſcholiis. Quot modis vir pius qui in Italia degat ſæpe Deum & Chriſtum negare compellitur. I omit ſeveral others, whoſe Titles are extant in the Epitome of Geſner, and (g) in Verheiden; but I ſhall take notice of that piece of his Entitl'd, Epitome libri cui titulus, Anatomia Miſſæ ab Antonio de Adamo. I never ſaw this Abridgement of the Anatomy of the Maſs, and cannot tell whether thoſe who mention it, write well the name of the Author of this Anatomy; for I find in the Latin Edition of this Work, that the Author's Name was Antonius ab Ælia. A paſſage in the Preface runs thus: Quoniam igitur Anatomiæ cognitio non ſolum medicis chyrurgiſque, verum etiam aliis ſummopere commendatur: eam ob cauſam, Anthonium ab Ædam Italum imitatus, hanc miſſæ ac miſſalis Anatomiam Gallicè, ut ab omnibus percipi poſſet facilius, in lucem edere ſtatui. Theſe words inform us that this piece was firſt Publiſh'd in Italian and then in French (h). It was Tranſlated into Latin in 1561. The Title of the Latin Verſion is: Miſſæ ac Miſſalis Anatomia. Hoc eſt dilucida ac familiaris ad minutiſſimas uſque particulas Miſſæ ac Miſſalis enucleatio. Nunc primum (ut ea res purioris fidei cultoribus ſcitu neceſſaria, ad alias quoque nationes deveniret) è Gallica lingua Latine verſa anno Domini M. D. LXI. This Book contains 172 Pages in Octavo, beſides an Errata of 15 Pages. The place where it was Printed is not expreſſed. The Perſon who wrote the Errata advertiſes us that a very urgent occaſion obliged him to it. It was, ſaith he, to prevent the Artifices of the Devil; for he ſuppoſes that Satan, to ruin the effects of this Book, had made uſe of two very malicious Frauds; the firſt of which was before, the ſecond during the Time of the Impreſſion. The firſt was, that the Manuſcript was thrown into a Mire, and reduced to a miſerable ſtate. The ſecond was, that the Printers committed a great many Faults. So that to oppoſe this double machination of Satan, he was obliged to reviſe the work very carefully, and to make a long liſt of Typographical Faults. I know very well that ſome may ſuſpect me of impoſing on my Readers; wherefore I cannot help citing part of the Prologue to the Errata. Maledictus Sathan, ut totam MISSÆ (execrandæ filiæ ſuæ) Tragœdiam in hoc inſtituit, & gubernavit hactenus, quo Chriſti meritum prorſus in hominum pectoribus extingueret, & mendaciorum tenebras pro veritatis luce obtruderet: Ita jam quoque, dum hic ipſe libellus excuderetur, rurſum artes ſuas egregie adhibuiſſe videtur, dum tot eum mendis conſpurcari (ut multis in locis non modò nullam ſententiam, ſed inverſam planè colligere liceat) curavit, quò ejus lectionem vel prorſus è manibus piorum excuteret: vel mendarum tedio ita lectores afficeret, ut ad finem uſque lectionem deducere non niſi ſumma cum nauſea poſſent. Idem verò etiam antea quam ad Typographum libellus perveniret, alia via aggreſſus, eum in lacunam alicubi projectum ita deturparat, ut non paucis foliis in itinere, antequam afferretur, ex cœno ac humore illo jam corruptis ac putridis, ſcriptura etiam paſſim ita oblitterata fuerit, ita multis in locis lacerata omnia, ut non modo non legi rectè, ſed ne aperiri quidem alicubi abſque detrimento, ac folia a ſe mutuo ſeparari potuerint. Huic itaque Sathanæ fraudulentiæ occurrere ſtudens, libellum jam typis abſolutum denuo percurrere, atque errata, quamlibet multa, tamen ea (nam in nullo unquam libro, vel centuplo hoc quidem majore, tot eſſe unquam commiſſa puto) hic ſubnotare, quo cuivis lectionem ſuam emendare in promptu eſſet, operæ pretium duxi. Obſerve that the Corrector hath ſtumbled at the very Threſhhold, for he reckons the firſt fault to be the word Gallicè in the paſſage of the Preface cited above. He would have it read Latinè; his Correction is ill grounded: Is it not indiſputable that a Perſon who tranſlates a Preface into Latin, in which it is ſaid, for good reaſon a French Tranſlation was made, ought to make uſe of the word Gallicè, and not Latinè? It is alſo obſervable that du Moulin, who called one of his Books the Anatomy of the Maſs, is not the Inventor of that Title. Not by the way did he invent that of the Buckler of Faith; for I have a Book Printed at Avignon by Francis Tachet (i) 1549. and Intituled the Buckler of Faith, by way of Dialogue, extracted from Sacred Writ, the Holy Fathers, and moſt antient Doctors of the Church. Of which, Brother Nicolas Grenier, Canon of St. Victor, is the Author.

Thuanus hath ſpoken amply enough of Vergerius's Book, which he Publiſhed againſt the Proclaiming of the Council in the time of Pius IV. in the Year 1561. Vergerius was then at Augsburg. We ſhall find how ſeverely ſharp this Tract was, if we examin theſe words of Thuanus. (k) Contra diploma illud Paulus Vergerius Juſtinopolitanus quondam Epiſcopus, & magnis legationibus ſub Pontificibus defunctus, qui (l) paulo ante ab iis defecerat, cum Auguſtæ Vindelicorum eſſet, ſcripto edito acriter invectus eſt, & Curiæ R. faſtum, pompas, luxum, ambitionem, ſordeis, corruptos mores, quos perſpectos ſe habere dicebat, multis & acerbis verbis deteſtatus, poſtremo addit Concilium a Pontifice indictum non ut oportuit ad ſtabiliendam Chriſti doctrinam, ſed ad firmanda infirmæ carnis divinis mandatis adverſantis commenta, non ad purgandum ovile dominicum, ſed ad diſſeminandos hominum inveteratos errores; denique non ad Chriſtianam libertatem, ſed ad miſerarum animarum ſervitutem & oppreſſionem inſtitutum eſſe: quippe in quo juxta ceremonialis, &c. Spondanus (m) ſays, that Father Paul made very great uſe of the Libels compoſed by Vergerius, who, ſaith he, made all the Acts of the Council of Trent, the ſubjects of his Sermons: He diligently collected all the Diſputatiparticulars. We do not find there the Service (I) which Vergerius did to Henry II. nor his Conferences in Alsace with the Apostolical (K) Nuncio. We are not

---

* Taken from Melchior Adam in vitis Theologorum exterorum pag. 116, & ſeq.

(a) [illegible]

(b) Creſpin [illegible]

(c) Ibid.

(d) Note that many of them are only Italian Pamphlets.

(e) Here is a Pſeudonymous work not mention'd by Placcius. Mr. Baillet in his Liſt of Pſeudonymous Writers, pulls off this Mask as well as that of Athanaſius, under which Vergerio appear'd ſometimes.

(f) This Book was Tranſlated out of Italian into French in the year 1556. by Paul VERGERIUS, the Author's Nephew.

(g) Verheid. in effigiebus præſtant. aliquot virorum pag. 154, 155.

(h) The French Tranſlation was Printed at Geneva, the firſt time, in 1555.

(i) This is not the firſt Edition, for the Title imports that it was reviſed and inlarged by the Author. La Croix du Maine mentions only the Edition in 2 volumes, which came out at Paris in 1566. and 1567. 'Tis true, that a little after he ſays that the 2d volume was Printed in 1565. This is not very exact.

(k) Thuanus lib. 28. p. m. 570. col. 2. ad ann. 1561.

(l) Thuanus is miſtaken in that: Vergerius had profeſſed himſelf a Proteſtant above 12 years.

(m) Spondan. ad ann. 1545. n. 13.

ons of that Assembly; he communicated them to other Ministers; he wrote Books concerning them, and dispersed his Calumnies on the whole Conduct of the Council (a). I am surpriz'd not to find in the Epitome of Gesner, what Vergerius wrote against his Country man and violent Persecutor Mutius. I find only, ad Papam Julium III, qui librum Mutii approbavit. This Mutius was joined to Annibal Grison in the Function of Inquisitor at Capo d'Istria, and Published an Invective against our Prelate. (b) Huic (Annibali Grisonio) adjunctus Hieronymus Mutius qui & Vergerianam scripsit invectivam postea, nec id modo, sed evulgato quoque libello Germaniam, odio religionis, maledicentissime traducit. But the following words seem to hint that Vergerius and Mutius wrote Letters against each other; (c) Finalmente accorgendosi il Vergerio che'l suo delitto non haveva difesa, si ricoverò fra' Grigioni eretici, e di là mandò fuori contra la Religione, contra il Concilio, e contra'l Papa libri tanto indotti quanto audaci; e che non piaceranno se non à que' palati si pravi che con essi il fele, come già la manna, fa ufficio di tutti i più dilicati sapori. Ed intorno à quest' huomo ed alle sue azioni basti di leggere oltre agli altri le Vergeriane e le lettere cattoliche del Muzio suo compatriota. I have fetch'd a little higher the Testimony of Pallavicini, to shew that it was not without Reason that I advanced that Vergerius's Works cruelly galled the Court of Rome and its Devotees. They affected to speak of them with contempt and to represent Boldness, Rashness and Ignorance as the parts which made up their Character. This Affectation is not disadvantageous to his Works. See Stanislaus Hosius's (d) Epistle Dedicatory of the Propugnatio veræ, Christianæ, Catholicaque doctrinæ. Our Vergerius is there treated very violently; Hosius, besides other things, complains that he had the assurance to dedicate a Book of Brentius to his Polish Majesty, and to urge (e) Lipomannus to a Disputation on all the Doctrines contained in that Book, of which he offer'd this Monarch should be judge. This is not all, he complains of several Tracts which he carefully dispersed amongst the People, during the last Diet at Warsaw, Books, saith he, full of Impudence and Falsities: (f) Ego verò, quòd illius tam eminet, tamque projecta est audacia, minùs miror, quem & frontem pridem omnem perdidisse, & ab omni Dei metu prorsus remotum esse, vel ea sola scripta satis indicant, quæ in proximis hisce Varschaviensibus Comitiis in vulgus spargi curavit. Illud non possum non mirari, quòd inveniuntur nihilominùs, qui non sine quadam animorum assensione commenta legant ejus hominis: qui sic ad omnem levitatem incubuisse videtur, nihil ut caverit diligentiùs, quàm ne quid usquam veri scriberet. Add to this the passage I shall hereafter cite (g) from Cardinal Pallavicini.

I shall conclude with a Reflection which seems to me to deserve a place here. I am certain that in Vergerio's time few Books were read more than his. They were very Satyrical, they contained a vast many personal particularities which easily passed for true, because it was very well known what opportunity he had to be throughly informed of them, having been so long engaged in publick Employments by the Court of Rome. Yet these pieces so much esteemed when new, could not maintain their Reputation. They were Favourites with whom Fortune did not long continue, they quickly lost their Credit, and became so neglected, that scarce any Books are at present harder to find. We scarce meet with one piece of Vergerius in the most numerous Libraries. It was in vain that an Edition of his Works (h) was Published at Tubingen in 1563. So many small Tracts reduced into one Volume, are not less lost than if they had continued in their former dispersed Condition: scarce any of them more sensibly affect my Curiosity than his (i) Censure of Leander Alberti, and of the Letters of (k) Claudius Ptolemæus.

(I) The service which Vergerius did to Henry II.] Before I come to the Proof, I shall cite a passage of Father Paul: " (l) The Pope by his Letter invited " the Catholick Swiss to come to the Council——— sent " from France, his Nuncio, incessantly solicited " them on his part, and made pressing Instances, " which were supported by the good Offices of the " Emperor. But the most Christian King dissuaded " them by his Ambassador Marlot; and Paul " Vergerio (*) perfectly versed in the secrets and Artifices " of the Court of Rome, gave that Minister " so good Instructions, besides the Book he wrote on " that Subject (†), that at the Diet then held at Baden, " the Catholick and Evangelick Cantons resolved " in concert, not to send any Person to " Trent. And the Grisons suffering themselves to " be persuaded by Vergerio, that the Pope was contriving " something against them, recalled Thomas " Planta, Bishop of Coire." These words do not prove that the King of France employed Vergerius. Embassadors frequently conceal from their Masters the Name and Character of those Persons whose assistance or advice they make use of; so that it may be pretended, that Marlot made use of Vergerio without ever mentioning any thing of it to Henry II. But an Annalist, a French Bishop, owns that that Prince was throughly informed of Vergerius's intrigues, and made use of his assistance to obtain his ends, which were to vex the Pope and the Emperor. (m) Rex——ut Pontifici & Cæsari ægre faceret, cum Helvetiis, quos Pontifex hortatus fuerat ad Synodum suos dirigere legatos, egit ne tam Catholici quam Sacramentarii, nec item Rheti mitterent, & qui jam missi fuissent revocarentur: in his, quod turpius fuit, industriâ usus Petri-Pauli Vergerii Episcopi olim Justinopolitani, qui ad hæreticos delapsus inter Rhetos agebat. Spondanus had reason to say that it was very scandalous for Henry II. to employ a Protestant Minister, who had formerly been a Bishop. If Vergerius had been in France, he had caused him to be burned, and yet the same Prince Caresses him in a foreign Country, employs him against the Pope, to forge Machines to overthrow the Council, and apparently recompences all his good Services. Doth not this plainly discover the Genius of Sovereign Princes? Their Conduct towards Hereticks is not of a piece, they persecute them in one place and encourage them in another. Their Conduct is void of all Principles, or rather they universally form themselves on the Maxim, that all things ought to be sacrificed to the temporal glory of the State, which requires that a jealous Neighbour should be crossed by all possible means, on all occasions.

(K) His Conferences in Alsace with the Apostolical Nuncio.] Which happened in the Year 1561. He was then in the Dutchy of Wirtemberg: He first spoke with the Nuncio Delfino at (||) Zabara, and afterwards at Strasburg, and the Neighbouring places, sometimes alone, and at other times in company with John Sturmius: When he was with the Nuncio alone he talked more freely (n), but when in company with Sturmius, he was very reserved both in words and deportment. On the one side he discovered an ardent desire to return into Italy, and on the other he broke out into Calumnies against those who had persecuted him, and even against the Pope himself. He chiefly accused John della Casa of having forced him to turn Protestant. The Nuncio exhorted him to reunite himself to the Church, and to recommend himself to the (o) Legates his old Patrons. Vergerius acknowledged his infinite Obligations to them, but utterly rejected the Proposition of making a recantation. He wrote two Letters to the Cardinal of Mantua, one of the Legates, and gave them to the Nuncio Delfino, who sent them to Rome before they were transmitted to the Cardinal. In these Vergerius testified a great Zeal for his Country, and the peace of the Church; he offered his Endeavours towards this great work, and promised him that he could give some advantageous Overtures if he could speak with the Legate. He did not shew any design of repenting of his Errors, he only requested a safe Conduct both from the Council, and his Imperial Majesty. The Nuncio passionately desired the recovery of this lost Sheep. He believed that in all Germany, there not informed by it that he bought a Collection of Reliques (L) for an Elector of Saxony, &c. He was the cauſe that the Capitolo del Forno (K) expoſed its Author to a Hundred ſorts of Invectives, which obliged John della Caſa to write a ſmall Tract, which was Publiſh'd in 1688, (M) wherein Vergerius is very roughly treated. Prudence will not allow us to believe what an Enemy Publiſhes of another without Proof, and therefore we ought at leaſt to ſuſpend our Judgment concerning the infamous Crimes charged on our Vergerius; but I muſt own that there are

---

(a) Actis Concilii omnibus detrahens. Id. ibid.

(b) Sleidanus lib. 21. fol. 589.

(c) Pallavic. ubi supra lib. 6. cap. 13. n. 3. pag. m. 636.

(d) It is dated the 15th of October 1557.

(e) He was then Nuncio in Poland.

(f) Hosius in epist. dedicatoria ad Sigismundum Augustum Poloniæ Regem.

(g) In the Remark K.

(h) It is in quarto. See Seckendorf hist. Lutheran. lib. 3. p. 601. col. 2.

(i) In Gesner's Epitome there is in the Title, contra Leandrum Albertum monachum Dominicanum, ejusque mendacia quæ ille scripsit in libro cui titulus descriptio Italiæ.

(k) The Title ibid. is de epistolis Italice scriptis a Claudio Ptolemæo.

(l) Fra. Paolo ubi supra lib. 4. p. 327. ad ann. 1551.

(*) [illegible] the [illegible] of the Grisons, [illegible] Apostate [illegible] Cardinal's Hat.

(†) Thuanus speaks of it in the 28th Book of his History, An. 1561. Mr. Amelot is mistaken; for the Book mentioned by Thuanus, was written against the [illegible] the Council in the time of Pius IV. I have quoted his words above. Father Paul mentions that Book of Vergerio in the 5th Book pag. 419.

(m) Spondanus ad an. 1561. n. 18. pag. 537.

(||) So 'tis in Pallavicini: perhaps it should be Zabern, Saverne.

(n) Likewise this is extracted out of Pallavicini.

(o) The Cardinal of Trent, and the Cardinal of Mantua.

(K) See the Remark M.

there were not two perſons whoſe Converſion was equivalent to that of Vergerius. This was not becauſe he did not believe that he was ignorant, but by reaſon he found his Pen very pernicious to the Holy See. (a) Il Delfino era cupidiſſimo di ricuperarlo: imperò che quantunque, ſecondo ch'egli ſcriveva, il Vergerio niente affatto ſapeſſe; onde mentr'era ſoggiornato in Elvezia haveva ſolo ſpeſa l'induſtria nel traſportare i libri eretici in italiano; ciò non oſtante riputava, in tutta Alemagna non eſſer due Teſte il cui acquiſto foſſe ſtato di pregio uguale à quel di coſtui: tanto riuſciva la ſua penna a diſſervigio della Sede Apoſtolica per una certa ſua eloquenza popolare, e sfacciatamente maledica de' più invidiati Perſonaggi. The Cardinal of Mantua, whom the Pope abſolutely intruſted with this Intrigue, did not think it proper to Anſwer Vergerius. He thought that a Letter from a Legate would render a Perſon in his Circumſtances too vain, and would tend to perſuade the Proteſtants, that he was eſteemed in the Church of Rome as a Perſon of a great deal of Merit, whoſe Converſion they were willing to purchaſe with a large Reward. This Cardinal caution'd the Nuncio to have a particular care of this: This advice was neceſſary, for the Nuncio had made uſe of Vergerio's Ambition in order to gain him by the offer of a glorious Recompence. The Pope was extraordinary well pleaſed with this Conduct of the Legate. The Nuncio at laſt declared that Vergerio's Impudence and Arrogance increaſed daily, and he received orders to ſee him no more. The Legate would have had Vergerius come to the Council of Trent, not alone, but accompanied by John Sturmius, and Hierom Zanchius, and that new Methods ſhould by their aſſiſtance be attempted to confer with the Sectaries; but the Pope diſapproved all thoſe Propoſals. This is what I find in the Hiſtorian here (b) cited.

(a) Pallavic. ubi ſupra lib. 15. cap. 15. n. 13. p. m. 644, 645.

(b) Cardinal Pallavicini.

(L) He bought a Collection of Reliques for an Elector of Saxony.] This was the Elector Frederick firnamed the Wiſe. (c) He amaſſed as many Reliques as he poſſibly could. He collected himſelf to Francis I. and Margaret of Auſtria, Governeſs of the Low-Countries, to that end, and obtained his Requeſt. He had ſeveral ſent him from Mantua, Colmar, Baſil, and the Monaſtery of (d) Ilmene. A German (e) Monk was in diligent ſearch of Reliques in Italy, and employed our Vergerius, who had delivered this Collection into the Elector's Hands if he had not been ſeized by a Diſeaſe on his Journey. James Vergerius his Brother, who accompanied him, and who as well as he had ſerved the German Monk was alſo ſtopped by a like occaſion: He alſo fell ſick by the way (f). I believe that Peter Paul hoped, as a Reward, to be made a Profeſſor in the Univerſity of Wittemberg; for he had been recommended as a learned young Man, who deſired a maintenance that would enable him to finiſh his ſtudies under the Profeſſors of that Univerſity. Here are the words of this Monk's Letter from Venice to Spalatin the 29th of Octob. 1521. (g) Intendit ipſe Petrus Paulus, frater Jacobi, permanere & complere in Wittenberga ſtudium ſuum, ſi potuerit & ſit beneplacitum Principis noſtri. Rogavit quoque me, ut tibi ſupplex fierem pro eo, & certe credo, magni honoris & utilitatis eſſet illi Univerſitati; habet enim nobiliſſimum ingenium & memoriam, ut experientia videre licet, reputaturque præcipuus de humanitate & jure, inter juvenes ſtudii Patavini. Rogo propterea T. Dom. ſuſcipe eum, & commenda eum Principi Ser. ut filium, & primo in Univerſitate, ut invenias locum legendi, vivendi, & proficiendi. Spalatin anſwered that he could promiſe nothing to the two Vergerio's: and as for the Reliques which he had already receiv'd, the payment for which the Monk ſollicited, he anſwer'd that he would ſend them back again, the price of them being fallen ſince Luther's Reformation, and that doubtleſs they would be more eſteemed and ſell better in Italy than in Germany: (h) Reliquias a nobis miſſas, una cum cruce, recipies omnes, a te, quanticunque poteris, vendendas; credibile enim eſt, illic quam hic majoris eſſe tum pretii tum honoris. Hic enim vel vulgus ita reſipuit, ut verba Dei edoctum ſatis ſibi eſſe putet, ut & revera eſt, fide & fiducia erga Deum & charitate erga proximum. The Perſon who wrote this Letter had told the Elector his Maſter, that it had been very well if the Diſpute concerning Indulgences had began ſooner, for it had ſaved him a great deal of Care and Money (i).

(c) Seckendorf, hiſtor. Lutheran. lib. 1. pag. 223.

(d) It was in Thuringia.

(e) Call'd Burcardi, He was of the Family of the Barons of Schenck.

(f) Taken from Seckendorf, ibid.

(g) Seckendorf ubi ſupra litera i.

(h) Id. ib. quoting a Letter of Spalatin to the Monk Burcard, dated the 13th of July 1522.

(i) Id. ib.

(M) Wherein Vergerius is very roughly treated.] When I mention'd his Books, I did not ſpeak of that Entitled, contra Catalogum Joannis della Caſa Sodomiæ Patronum. He beſtowed the Epithete of Apologiſt for Sodomy on John della Caſa on account of his Capitolo del Forno. He ſo defamed him throughout Germany, that this Author thought himſelf obliged to addreſs a Poem to the Germans, to remove thoſe finiſter Impreſſions which our Author had made on them againſt him. I have (k) elſewhere obſerved the miſtake of a Modern, who was of opinion that Caſa wrote this Poem by way of anſwer to the Invectives of Naogeorgus. It is certain that it was only aimed at Vergerius. I have (l) alſo ſaid ſomewhere that the Reaſon why John della Caſa was ſo defamed, when ſeveral Italian Poets remained undiſturbed, whoſe Poems were more deteſtable than his, was, that he perſecuted Vergerius at Venice, which other Poets did not. But let us here ſpeak of the ſmall Tract, which Mr. Menage Printed in 1688, at the end of his Anti-Baillet. This is a Piece written in very good Latin, which Mr. Menage received from the celebrated Magliabechi, in which Caſa throws Reviles at Peter Paul Vergerius at a ſtrange rate. He accuſes him of long and violent quarrels with his Brother John Baptiſt, Biſhop of Pola; of Perjury to avoid the payment of his Debts, and of having cauſed his Wife to be killed, in order to advance himſelf to Benefices: he charges him with having ſupplicated Cardinal de Tournon to carry him into France, and with offering him to write concerning Germany and the Swiſs, and concerning Religion, whatever ſhould be preſcribed him. Obſerve that Vergerius was then in the Griſons Country. This Cardinal who (m) at firſt took him for a Butcher, at laſt knowing who he was, very ſeverely reproved him, and took no notice of his Offers to repent. This ſmall Tract informs us that (n) Vergerius in his younger days profeſſed Poetry; that he was afterwards admitted Advocate; that he practiſed as ſuch; but in pleading, he render'd himſelf inſupportable to the Judges, to the Litigants, and in general to the whole Court, by his Falſities, Calumnies and Prevarications: (o) Linguâ atque audaciâ fretus, cauſſas agere te velle dixiſti: ſed cùm, quoties diceres, toties maledicceres, mentireris, pejerares, calumniareris, prævaricarere, neque litigatores tibi jam, neque corona, neque Judices, fidem habebant; nemoque ferre te, ac ne aſpicere quidem poterat. That getting no Money, and being a Widower, (thanks to the Poiſon which he had given his Wife,) he caſt his Eye on Spiritual Benefices, and went to Rome where his Brother Antony recommended him to Clement VII. and obtained for him the Nunciature of Germany. He adds, that (p) Francis Spiera, whom he paſſed on the World, as a Man inſpired, one day put him into an extreme confuſion (q) by calling him Bankrupt, Poyſoner and Heretick. To conclude; he accuſes him of flying to the Griſons, in order to ſhelter himſelf from the purſuit of his Creditors (r). The Leipſick Journaliſts, in their extract of the Anti-Baillet exactly quote moſt of the Accuſations againſt Vergerio; but they ſuppoſe that Mutius had praiſed him, and that Caſa refuted that Elogy: (s) Mutii laudes Vergerio tributas, p. 377 evertit Caſa. Which they ground on theſe words of Caſa, de Mutio vero affirmare

(k) In the Article Oricellarius.

(l) In the Article Molza and in the Article Vayer.

(m) Qui cùm te ſqualidum, ſordidum, pannis obſitum, conſpicatus, viſuſque tibi videre lanionem aliquem eſſet; quæſivit de te qui tu eſſes: atque ubi Vergerium eſſe dixiſti, multis, homo graviſſimus, te verbis malè accepit. Antibaillet tom. 2. p. 370.

(n) Ibid. pag. 381.

(o) Ibid. p. 383, & 384.

(p) He does not name him; but doubtleſs he means him.

(q) Ibid. pag. 386.

(r) Ibid. pag. 387.

(s) Acta eruditor. Lipſ 1689 pag. 497.

are ſome Proteſtants who own that he was (N) Inconſtant, Fraudulent, and Ignorant in Theology. In the Authors which I have conſulted concerning him, I don't find any mention of his Journey to France after he was made a Biſhop: I am informed affirmare tibi hic poſſum non eſſe illum hominem cum de te ſcripſit, bibiſſe, ſed potius eſſe. Which import that Marius had not done Vergerius the Honour to refute him, if he had not had a particular regard to the Country which produced them both. And he was ſo far from Praiſing Vergerius, that he Publiſhed moſt injurious Invectives againſt him.

Two things are yet obſervable concerning this Tract of John della Caſa. He objects two Faults with reſpect to the infamous Crimes with which Vergerio charges Paul III. The firſt is, that thoſe Crimes which he imputed to that Pope were of ſuch a nature, that they could never reach his Cognizance: The ſecond is taken from the Enmity betwixt Paul III. and him: (a) Obſecro te quid tu tibi voluiſti, aut quicumque ille fuit, qui de PAULI III. vita ſcripſit? Putaſtine quemquam fore qui tibi de tot tantiſque criminibus ac ſceleribus crederet? Qui tu iſthæc ſcire potuiſti? Præſertim cum tam multa ſint inteſtina ac domeſtica, de quibus vix unus aut alter ex intimis familiaribus etiamſi maxime velit ſuit, ſuſpicari aliquid ſignis quibuſdam poſſit, qui igitur tu homo alienus, ac prope alienigena, tam pro certo affirmas, præſertim ſolus? Quis ad te detulit? Qui teſtes aſſuerunt? Quæ proferantur literæ? Ubi tu interfuiſti? A few Pages farther he expreſſes himſelf thus concerning his Invectives againſt Peter Lewis Farneſe, and Julius III. (b) A te requirunt Itali homines ſuperiora illa ſcilicet quibus teſtibus, atque adeo quibus indiciis ea compereris? Cur id, quod tibi non magis quam cæteris omnibus compertum ſit, ſolus affirmes? ——(c) Eadem tibi de Julio III. reſpondeant, deque iis literis quas tu de Conclavi miſſas, ad te delatas ais. Negant tibi quicquam credi oportere à quoquam: vanitatis, levitatis, mendacii, te convictum defendunt. Profer igitur eas literas: Manum, ſignum, proba. Theſe are preſſing and really very juſt Interrogatories: For the Rules of writing oblige an Author, who Publiſhes the moſt occult Tranſactions of a Monarch's Palace, and relates a thouſand infamous Crimes committed in its moſt dark Receſſes with an uncommon Aſſurance; theſe Rules I ſay, oblige ſuch a Writer to inform us how he came to the knowledge of theſe Events; he ought to produce and name his Authorities; he muſt have either Original Letters or Authentick Copies; in a word he ſhould very ſubſtantially prove what he ſaith. If it be objected that it is not poſſible to produce ſuch proofs of Facts of that Nature; I anſwer that a Man ought not then to ſet up for a publick Accuſer: He ought to back what he ſays at leaſt with the Authority of his Name, I mean the Title of the Book ought to declare its Author. But if it be found that the Author, who names himſelf, may juſtly be charged with too much Credulity, or with Crimes, or is an utter Enemy to the Perſon defamed, it is then certain that his Teſtimony will not be much Credited. I believe that I have more than once Remarked that the Authors of Libels do not at all conſider what I have offers: Nor, which is worſe, are their Readers more careful herein than they. I am not fond of Patronizing Caſa's Applications, I content my ſelf with Remarking that he pretends Vergerius was too Ill a Man, and too much an Enemy to Paul III. to deſerve that an ear ſhould be given to his Teſtimony againſt this Pope. Don't you know, ſaith he, that Perſons (d) of the moſt exact Probity are not allowed to be Witneſſes in a Cauſe againſt their Enemies? On this occaſion he relates the Enmity betwixt Paul III. and Vergerius, and ſaith that he offers an Affront to the Germans, in thinking them capable of giving any Credit to his Libels: (e) Magnam tu Germanis hominibus contumeliam facis quòd idoneos arbitreris eſſe, apud quos tam impudenter mentiare, quoſque uſque adeo contemnas, imperitoſque rerum putes, ut tibi de tuo inimico tam inepte, tamque aperte mentienti fidem habeant. Si literas, ſi teſtes, ſi tormenta atque equuleum, ſi omnia probationum genera proferres, nemo tibi tamen veneſico atque uxoricidæ crederet; de tot tantiſque præſertim rebus. Tu innuenti modò tibi fidem haberi exiſtimas.

This is the firſt of my two Obſervations: The other will ſerve to prove that a Satyriſt can put a Criminal Interpretation upon the moſt Pious Actions. We have already ſeen that (f) Vergerius deſigning to refute Lutheraniſm, applyed himſelf to the Study of that Controverſy, which convinced him that the Romiſh was a Falſe Church; we have ſeen that his Brother was of the ſame Opinion, and that they both reſolved to apply themſelves to the Inſtruction of their Dioceſe. The Malicious John della Caſa gives a quite different turn to this Conduct. He ſaith that Vergerius having drained thoſe Springs which ſupplyed the extravagant Expence of his Luxurious Table, applyed himſelf to Dogmatizing in private, and chiefly to ſeveral Rich Women, and under the ſpecious pretext of Inſtructing them in the pure Religion, he emptyed the Purſes of a great many People: (g) Gula licet creverit, & luxus atque ſuperbia: Quæ quorundam hominum, qui male te noverant, benignitate ſuſtentata aliquamdiu ſunt: Sed ubi exhauſta eſt, nec enim tu parvo contentus eſſe poteras; convertiſti te ad aliam quæſtum: Homines quoſdam non nimium ſapientes, ſuperſtitioſos, ruſticanos, ſtultaſque aliquot mulieres locupletes aggreſſus es: Seduxiſti; Docere eos te poſſe arcana quædam de Religione dixiſti: Nam quæ adhuc tradita illis eſſent ab aliis, perperam eſſe tradita: Mutari ea oportere atque corrigi perſuaſiſti imprudentibus ac fatuis quibuſdam. Interea; merces magiſterii ſcilicet magna; perſuadati multi à te ſunt, atque ad ſummam inopiam redierunt. How many Catholicks are there who believe this on the ſingle Teſtimony of Caſa, Vergerio's declared Enemy? Which is a very great Injuſtice. Perhaps ſome indifferent Perſons may credit part of what he ſays: They know that a Private deſign to reform a Dioceſe might probably draw the Purſe-ſtrings of ſome well-meaning Perſons; for it is eaſy to make it appear, that for the advancement of ſo good a Work ſuch and ſuch Expences are neceſſary. By which means a Man becomes (without being accountable) the Truſtee, with whom ſeveral Alms and Subſidies, which the Zeal of the firſt Brethren furniſhes, are depoſited.

(N) That he was Inconſtant, Fraudulent, and Ignorant in Theology.] Mr. Seckendorf will Evidence this. Verſatile ingenium Vergerio tribuitur, ſaith he (h), nec ſuſpicione caruit quod conciliationem religionis quovis modo moliretur, & tandem ad vetera ſacra redire cogitaret. Which is to ſay, that he was ſuſpected of a deſign to Unite the Religions even at the expence of Truth, and at laſt of being deſirous to return to Popery. It is pretended that he made uſe of fraudulent (i) means in the Letters which he ſent to Paris, when he deſired to be one of the Deputies which the Duke of Wirtemberg ſent into France in 1561. He did not obtain this Honour, either becauſe that Prince had not a ſufficient Confidence in him, or becauſe he was not thought to be ſufficiently verſed in Theological Subjects. (k) James Andreas forgetting the Injury he had received of him pronounced his Funeral Oration, and praiſed him for profeſſing the Truth, and diſcovering ſeveral wicked Intrigues of the Court of Rome; but he charged him with not having perfectly underſtood Religious Controverſies. Surius relates that Gablerus Profeſſor of Phyſick was preſent at the Death of Vergerio, and made ſome Obſervations (l) which determined him to become a Catholick: (m) Adfuerat is Petro Paulo Vergerio e corpore migranti apud quem mira quædam viderat quæ illi animum videbantur perfregiſſe, ut non modo Catholicus ſed pientiſſimus quoque Catholicus fieret. Obſerve that Surius is no Claſſical Author in point of Hiſtory. Much more ought we to diſtruſt thoſe who Magnify this Story. They aſſure us that the horrible Death of Vergerius cauſed ſeveral Proteſtants to return into the Boſom of the Church (n). See in the Margin the moderate Expreſſions of thoſe Authors.

By

(a) Anti-Baillet ib. pag. 405.

(b) Ibid. pag. 37.

(c) Ibid. pag. 38.

(d) Vel caſtiſſimi atque integerrimi viri —— à teſtimonio dicendo removeri ſolent (inimicitia.) Ibid. pag. 365.

(e) Ibid. pag. 366, 367.

civitatum hominibus ſalutare præbuit documentum, ut ſeſe collegerint, & ad pacem ac unitatem Eccleſiæ reve fruſtra frementibus lupis infernalibus. Jo. Paulus Windeck Prognoſtic. futuri ſtatus p. 113. He quotes Ederus.

formed of this part of his Life only by a Collection of Letters Printed at Venice in 1558. in which are some of his Writing, which acquaint us (O) that he admired the Piety and excellent Qualities of the Queen of Navarre, Siſter to Francis I. and began to diſreliſh his courſe of Life, and to think of reſiding in his Biſhoprick. There is alſo one † Written by his Brother Aurelius * VERGERIUS to Julia Gonzaga. I have not much to object againſt (P) Moreri on this Article.

VERGERIUS (ANGELUS) Born in the Iſle of ‖ Candia, Tranſlated out of Greek into Latin the Tract de fluviorum & montium nominibus, attributed to Plutarch. He wrote the Greek Character ſo exquiſitely, (Q) that his Writing was made uſe of as an Original by thoſe who Engraved the Letters of that Language for the Royal Impreſſions ‡ in the Reign of Francis I. He was alive ſtill in (R) Charles the IX's time. He is too violently Cenſured (S) by a Dutch Critick. Nicolas

By a Letter of Hubert Languet written from Paris the ninth of October 1561. we underſtand that the Duke of Wirtemberg had ſent our Vergerius into France, who was the moſt proper Man in the World to Imbroil things. Languet thought it ſtrange that this Prince ſhould be deſirous to put Ubiquity and other Fancies of Brentius among the Doctrines of the French Reformation (a). Miror etiam Virtembergenſem nobis velle obtrudere ubiquitatem & alias nugas Brentii, nec religionis apud nos infantiam conſiderare, quæ non ſit obruenda iſtis ſpineſis & futilibus diſputationibus, quas ne quidem intelligunt qui eas proponunt, ſed omni indulgentia fovenda, & tanquam lactis potu alenda donec magis in Chriſto adoleſcat. Præterea huc miſit Vergerium, hominem quo nullus eſt magis Idoneus ad res turbandas. Languet writ another Letter eight days after, and ſays that Vergerius was not yet come to the French Court, but that (b) 'twas reported he would be ſent quickly, or at leaſt that he endeavoured it. I wiſh, ſays he, he would ſtay at Home.

(O) That he admired the Piety ——— of the Queen of Navarre*———and that he began to Diſreliſh.*] See what he writ to Lewis Alamanni the day after he had Converſed with that Princeſs: (c) Ne la Signora Marcheſa di Peſcara, ne la Signoria voſtra, che ſapete tanto ben tutti due in vive voci, e tanto bene ne i ſcritti voſtri dir cio, che volete, ne il Cardinal noſtro Illuſtriſſ. ne tutta Roma, predicandomi l'altezza & la bellezza dell' animo, & dell'ingegno, & il fervor dello ſpirito acceſo in Chriſto, & la carita ardente della sereniſſima Regina di Navara, me ne havete ſaputo dire tanto, quanto io nel vero ho trovato hieri, che ſua maeſta degno di fare, che io udiſſi un pezzo quelle ſue rari voci, il qual giorno mi ha portato una letitia inenarrabile, & ſenza dubbio la maggiore, che io habbi havuto gia molto tempo. All the reſt of the Letter turns on the Pious Sentiments, which the great Knowledge of that Queen excited in the Heart of that Prelate. He was in France when he wrote a Letter to Ottonello Vida, in which he deplores the Progreſs of Lutheraniſm, and the little care that was taken of the Lord's Vineyard. He declares that having weighed theſe words of the Goſpel, What doth it profit a Man to gain the whole World and loſe his own Soul, againſt all thoſe reaſons which encouraged him with hopes of making his Fortune, he found the Scale turn on the ſide of the words of JESUS CHRIST. Wherefore, ſaith he, it will be beſt for me, for the future to apply my ſelf to the culture of that Portion which is allotted me. (d) Perciò dico, che ſarà meglio, ch'io venga a coltivare quelle poche viti, ch'io ſu quel confine Tedeſco, & veder di circondarle con un buon ſiepe, & tenerle difeſe, per poterne cogliere qualche frutto da offerire a Dio; che ſtare fuori, & otioſo ad aſpettare, che altri ſi riſolvino a voler mettere in lavoro tutta la vigna inſieme. Vida's Anſwer (e) to confirm him in this Reſolution is very Pertinent and Excellent.

(P) I have not much to Object againſt Moreri on this Article.] I. The two Articles of Verger (Peter Paul) are Tranſpoſed; for he places the Biſhop of Capo d'Iſtria before Emanuel Chryſoloras's Diſciple. As for the laſt he referrs us to the Authors of the following Article, that is, to thoſe which he cites after having amply ſpoken of John Verger de Haurane Abbot of St. Cyran. This Abſurdity is redreſſed in the Dutch Edition of that Dictionary. II. What Moreri (f) affirms that Paul III. intended to make Vergerio a Cardinal, is contradicted by (g) Pallavicini. III. What he adds that he brought away with him one of his Brothers, who was alſo a Biſhop, is diſproved by Sleidan, who averrs (h) that before the Biſhop of Capo d'Iſtria left Italy, the Biſhop of Pola was Dead. IV. To what end doth he cite Paul Jovius, Volaterranus, Jacobus de Bergamo, Voſſius, &c. to confirm what he had ſaid concerning the Biſhop of Capo d'Iſtria, of which they make no manner of mention, and which could not be known to ſome of them. V. What is the meaning of theſe words, for the ſecond conſult Spondanus? They ſeem to direct us to ſome places wherein mention is made of John Baptiſt Vergerius Biſhop of Pola: But that would be a falſe Direction, and is not Moreri's Senſe. It muſt be a Typographical Blunder.

(Q) He wrote the Greek Character ſo exquiſitely, that his Writing was made uſe of as an Original by thoſe who Engraved the Letters, &c.] This I find in the variæ lectiones of Rutgerſius. (i) Duos, ſaith he, (interpretes) mihi videre contigit, Italum unum, Natalem de Comitibus, alterum Cretenſem, Angelum Vergerium eum qui tam eleganter Græcè pinxit, ut ejus manus pro archetypo iis fuerit, quorum opera in ſculpendis regiis characteribus Rex Franciſcus uſus eſt. The two Tranſlations mention'd here are thoſe of the little Book de fluviorum & montium nominibus.

(R) He was Alive ſtill in Charles the IX's time.] Of which I have no other Proof than the Epiſtle Dedicatory to the Poems of Jan Antoine de Baïf, Which is directed to that Monarch, and beſides other things affords the following Lines,

Charle Etiene premier, diſciple de Lazare
Le docte Bonamy, de mode non barbare
M'aprint à prononcer le langage Romain:
Ange Vergece Grec, à la gentile main
Pour l'écriture Grèque, Ecrivain ordinère
De vos Granpere & Pere & le VOSTRE, ut ſalère
Pour a l'accent des Grecs ma parole dreſſer,
Et ma main ſur le trac de ſa lettre adreſſer.

You will alſo find another place (k) below, where this Candiot's Name is written Vergece as well as here. Which makes me apt to ſuſpect that inſtead of calling him Vergerius in Latin, he ought to be called Vergecius.

(S) He is too violently Cenſured by a Dutch Critick.] We have ſeen in the Remark Q. that Natalis Comes, and our Vergerius Tranſlated into Latin the Tract περὶ ποταμῶν ϰ̀ ὀρῶν ἐπωνυμίας. Theſe words are to be found in it. (l) Κάδμος τὸν κρηνοφύλακα δράκοντα τοξεύσας, ϰ̀ εὑρὼν ὥσπερ πεφαρμακευμένον φόβῳ τὸ ὕδωρ, περιήρχετο τὴν χώραν ζητῶν πηγήν. They are thus expreſſed in Latin by Natalis Comes: Ubi Cadmus ſerpentem fontis cuſtodem jaculis confodiſſet, inveniſſetque aquam quaſi ob timorem veneno infectam, regionem luſtravit fontem inquirens. Vergerius's Verſion runs thus: Cum Cadmus fontis cuſtodem draconem jaculis confeciſſet, & aquam ejus veneno infectam cerneret, eam abhorrens circuivit regionem ad inveſtigandum fontem. Rutgerſius's Judgment of theſe two Verſions is: (m) I believe, ſaith he, that Vergerius was Drunk when he talked in this manner; and it is not to be wondred that Natalis Comes hath ill Tranſlated a Corrupted place, for he did moſt times ſpoil even ſuch places as were Correct. This Cenſure is ſo extravagant with regard to Vergerius that his Memory would ſuffer leſs by it than that of Rutgerſius. For his Tranſlation is not only better than that of Natalis Comes, tho' this Critick mentions the latter much more tenderly than the former, but is the beſt which could poſſibly be made ſuppoſing the Greek Text not Corrupted. The Learned Mauſſac underſtood this place juſt as Vergerius did, and thus Tranſlates it: Cum Cadmus ſagittis confixiſſet draconem qui fontem cuſtodiebat, VERITUS ne aqua veneno infecta eſſet, circuivit regionem

(a) Lan- …Epiſt. …lib. 2. pag. 143.

(b) Dici- …r mit- …dus …vi aut …tem hoc …re in …ntatur. …perem …m ma- …re domi. …l. Epiſt. …o. pag. 151.

(c) Lettere …lgari di …verſi no- …liſſimi …omini …. 1. fol. …h. See …ſo fol. …1. what …wrote to …Mar- …neſa of …ſcara.

(d) Ibid. …l. 82. …rſo & …l. 83.

(e) You'll …d it …bid. fol. …3. & ſeq.

(f) He …s ſo …erſpon- …nus …l ann. …542. n. …3.

(g) See …e end of …e Remark …).

† … of … Book.

* He was a Learned Man. See Scholiis, ubi ſupra in ſupplem. indicis n. …

‖ See the Remark …

‡ Mr. Chevillier, Origine de l'Imprimerie p. 159. ſpeaks of thoſe fine Letters, that were caſt in the Matrices which Francis I. cauſed to be made with a Royal Magnificence.

(h) Ante quam ex Italia diſcederet, jam erat mortuus ejus frater Epiſcopus Polæ ſuſpitioque fuit veneno ſublatum eſſe. Sleid. lib. 21. fol. 590.

(i) Jo. Rutgerſius var. lect. lib. 3. c. 12. p. 235, 236.

(k) In the Remark T.

(l) In the 2. Chapter, where the River Iſmenus is mention'd.

(m) Equidem Vergerium cum hæc ſcriberet, ſobrium fuiſſe non puto. Nam in Natali mirandum non eſt ſi corrupta non recte tranſtulit, cum illi pene fatale fuerit, male vertendo, ut ille ait, etiam ex Græcis bonis Latina facere non bona. Rutgerſius ubi ſupra pag. 236.

colas Vergerius (T) his Son was a Learned Man, and made ſome Verſes on the Death of Hadrian Turnebus.

VERONA, A City of Italy, which ſome Writers ſay, was built, and others that it was only rebuilt by the Gauls. Pompey's Father led a Roman Colony thither †. It was ſacked by Attila, and ſucceſſively poſſeſſed by Odoacer King of the Heruli, Theodorick King of the Goths, and his Succeſſors to Totila, by the Lombards, Charlemagne, and his Poſterity; but when his Deſcendants loſt the Empire, ſeveral Lords made themſelves Sovereigns of ſeveral Cities of Italy. Which ſort of Government continued till Otho I. re-united ſeveral States to the Empire, which had been alienated from it. Amongſt which Verona was one, but it obtained the power of electing its own Magiſtrates: So that it was properly a Republick, under the name of an Imperial City. In which ſtate it continued till Ecelin ſeized the Sovereign Power, to come at which, he waded through a great effuſion of Blood. He enjoy'd his Tyranny 33 Years, and died in 1269. After him the Veroneſe elected Martin della Scala their General, whoſe Conduct they ſo well approved, that five Years after they created him perpetual Dictator. His Deſcendants govern'd Verona with great Reputation, and were created Princes by the Emperor in 1310. They render'd themſelves formidable by their Conqueſts, and were driven out of Verona in 1387, by John Galeazzo Duke of Milan. They re-enter'd in 1404, but did not keep poſſeſſion long, for the Venetians ſeized the City in 1409 *, and have ſo carefully kept it, that they enjoy it to this day. It is not known whether any of the Illuſtrious Family della Scala remained, who left any Children. Julius Cæſar Scaliger, one of the moſt Learned Men of the XVI Century, pretended to be deſcended from this Houſe. But the truth of it is diſputed; and few at preſent believe his Pretence to be well grounded. Several are of opinion, that the Letters of Naturalization which he obtain'd in France, contradict his Claim, ſince he there bears only the Character of a Phyſician born at Verona ‖. I am certain the Publick will be very glad to ſee thoſe Letters of Naturalization (A) here, wherefore I inſert them.

VESPA-

regionem alium fontem quo ſitim levaret, quærens. So that all Vergerius's Fault is not having conjectured as Rutgerſius (a) hath, that inſtead of φόβῳ the reading ought to be ἐκ φόνου, hoc eſt, è ſanguine ſive tabo. Mauſſac did not think of it neither: Wherefore I wonder that Rutgerſius did not cenſure his Verſion, which makes me believe he knew nothing of it. Tho' according to the time of its Publication (b), he might have ſeen it; but how many Books are there which remain unknown, even to the moſt Learned? Mr. Mauſſac had never heard of any Verſion of this Tract (c) when he undertook its Tranſlation, and afterwards he ſaw indeed the Verſion of Natalis Comes and Turnebius, but not that of Vergerius. A hundred Examples of this nature might be quoted.

(T) Nicolas VERGERIUS —— made ſome Verſes.] This you find in theſe Words of Thuanus (d) Ei (Hadriano Turnebo) Joan. Auratus —— Nicolaus denique Vergerius, Angeli illius Cretenſis elegantiorum Græcæ linguæ characterum ad omnem admirationem & oculorum jucunditatem formatoris F. —— & alii epitaphiis carminibus parentarunt. He was born in Candia, from whence he went into France about the year 1540. This I infer from two paſſages of John Antony de Baif, one of which (e) informs me, that the ſame John Antony was committed to the Tutorſhip of Tuſanus, and the other that he there contracted a Friendſhip with Nicolas Vergece, then lately come from Candia,

Amy (f) qu'en la prime jeuneſſe
J'acointay chez le bon Tuſan,
Voicy cinq fois le cinquieme an Tout nouveau venu de la Grece.

—————————

—————————

Bien jeune tu vis eſcumer
Deſſous toy la ronflante mer
Tiré de l'iſle ta naiſſance
Qui vit de Jupiter l'enfance.

Theſe Lines are taken from the Contretrene a Nicolas Vergece Candiot, in which you will find the following Elogy on his Muſe,

FEE, (g) ces mignardiſes laiſſe,
Je ne puis entendre à tes jeux;
Laſchons un peu couver nos feux,
A fin que m'acquite à Vergece,
Qui m'a mis en ſoucy plaiſant,
M'étrenant d'un mignard preſant
Que la Muſe avec la Charite
Ont ourdi de fleurons d'eſlite.
Ces beaux vers en langue Latine
Confits au miel Catullien,
Vers de bon heur, meritent bien
Que beuſſe de l'eau Cabaline.

John Antony de Baif, before he finiſhes this Poem, takes notice of his own Poverty and of that of his Friend.

Pauvreté (h) mes eſpaulles preſſe,
Me foule & jamais ne me laiſſe.
Je ſuis pauvre, & tu n'es pas riche:
Vien-t'en me voir, Amy treſdoux:
Embraſſons-nous, conſolons-nous:
Le ciel ne ſera touſiours chiche
Envers nous du bien qui des mains
De fortune vient aux humains:
Or vivons une vie eſtroitte
En pauvreté, mais ſans ſouffrette.

(A) The Publick will be very glad to ſee thoſe Letters of Naturalization.] Mr Baluze, one of thoſe extraordinary Men, who are born for the good of the Republick of Letters, and who beſides the Productions with which they enrich it, are pleaſed to furniſh other Authors with all ſorts of aſſiſtances, did me the favour to ſend me what follows.

An Extract of an Original Regiſter of Francis I. which is in the Repoſitory of Records at Paris.

"Francis, &c. We give to underſtand, &c. that we "have received the humble ſupplication of our dear "and well beloved Julius Cæſar de l'Eſcalle de Bordons, "Doctor of Phyſick, Native of the City of Verona in "Italy, containing that about four Years paſt, or thereabouts, He came into this our Kingdom to the City "of Agen in Agenois, with intention and full reſolution to end the remainder of his days there; in "which City, and the Country about it, the ſaid Supplicant is poſſeſſed of a Houſe, and ſeveral other Eſtates. But becauſe he is a Stranger and not a Native of our Realm, he is dubious that the Eſtate "which he may have gotten, or hopes to become "poſſeſſed of, likewiſe the Inheritances which may devolve on him from his Relations or others, may be "pretended to, as belonging to us by right of Aubaine or otherwiſe, and that our Officers may accordingly give him ſome trouble or hindrance, "if he be not qualified and diſpenſed with on that "account, and humbly requeſting us to impart to "him our Favour and Liberality. Wherefore we, "theſe things conſidered, freely inclined to grant "the Supplication and Requeſt of the ſaid Suppliant, † Taken from Cluverius in Italia antiqua, lib. 1. cap. 16.

---

* Taken from Leander Alberti's Deſcript. Italiæ, pag. 516. & ſeq. He made uſe of the Antiquities of Verona, Publiſhed by Torello Sarayna.

‖ See the Nouvelles de la Rep. des lettres, February 1686 pag. m. 164. & Menagiana, p. 25. of the Dutch E-

(a) Ibid. pag. 235.

(b) The Book de fluviorum ac montium nominibus tranſlated into Latin by Philip James de Mauſſac was Printed at Toulouſe in 1615. and that of Rutgerſius at Leyden 1618.

(c) See his Preface.

(d) Thuan. lib. 38. pag. 769. ad ann. 1565.

(e) John Antony de Baif Epiſtle to the King prefixed to his Poems, Printed at Paris, in the Year 1573. in 8vo.

(f) John Antony de Baif, œuvres en rime fol. m. 119.

(g) Id. ib.

(h) Id. ib.

VERSORIS, (Peter de) Lord of Fontenai le Viconte, and Marilli, and in Part of Moninger, and President of the Council of the Dukes of Guise in the XVI Century, was an Advocate in the Parliament of Paris, and one of the most famous and illustrious of his Profession. He was born at Paris the 16th of February 1528, of (A) a Noble and considerable Family. He was design'd by his Father to be an Officer in a Sovereign Court; but having extravagantly spent, whilst he was young, the Money that was laid by for that use, he set himself to repair that Loss by hard Labour, whereby —— he became one of the chief Advocates of his time: He was so much Master of all the things which were necessary to him, that he hardly used any Books. He pleaded for the Jesuits in 1564, in the famous Tryal which they had with the University of Paris, and to speak properly, he gained the Cause. He was deputed to the States of Blois in the Year 1576, and spoke in the Name of the Third State. He was as good a Chamber Counsellor as a Pleader. He was very zealous for his Clients, particularly for the House of Guise —— He died of Grief in less than four or five Hours, the 25th of December 1588, after he heard that the (B) Duke of Guise had been killed at Blois. 'Tis said that that Duke used him as Counsel for his private Affairs only *, but not for the Cabals

"pliant, given and granted, give and grant leave and licence; willing by our especial Grace, full Power and Royal Authority, by these presents, that he be freely permitted to inhabit, and dwell in our said Realm, and in it hold and possess all such Estates moveables or immoveables, which he hath already acquired, or shall for the future lawfully acquire; and likewise that he may succeed to all those Goods and Inheritances which in our said Realm, Territories, Lands and Lordships, shall devolve on or belong to him by good and just Title, and that he may dispose of 'em by his last Will, as his proper Goods and Inheritance; and that his Heirs or others to whom he may dispose of them, may be enabled to succeed and take possession of and enjoy the said Goods, and in general that he shall enjoy intirely all and every the Honours, Privileges, Prerogatives, Franchises, Liberties and Rights which are customarily enjoyed by the Originary Natives of this our Kingdom, and that he shall be held and accounted our Subject, in all Cases as a Native of our Realm; and therefore we have qualify'd and dispensed, and do qualify and dispense him out of our said Grace by these presents; he paying us a moderate Sum for once only. We give in command by these same presents to our Trusty and Beloved Officers of our Accounts and Treasurers at Paris, Baillies, Seneschals, and to all our other Justiciaries and Officers, and to their Lieutenants for the present and for the future, and to every one of them whom it may concern, and we will that the Grace, Licence, Habitation, and all the Effects by these presents granted, be by them suffered and permitted to the Suppliant to enjoy and use, fully and peaceably without giving or suffering to fall on him any arrest, disturbance or hindrance in what manner soever on any occasion, &c. For such is, &c. But without prejudice, &c. Given at Paris in the Month of March in the Year of Grace, One Thousand five Hundred and Twenty eight, and the 15th of our Reign. Thus signed. By the King, Gedoyn. Visa. Consentor. des Landes."

I expected from Mr. Baluze a Memorial which I have not receiv'd concerning (a) Du Pin, Bishop of Rieux. The Bishop of Rieux (b) one of the most Learned and Illustrious Prelates of France was to send it to him.

(A) Of a Noble and considerable Family.] The Proof of this is given by Mr. Joly in his Notes on the Alphabetical Index of the Advocates, Printed with divers pieces of Antony Loisel, in the Year 1652. Mr. Peter Versoris, says he (c), "Advocate in Parliament was the Issue of a Noble Family, which came originally from some Gentlemen in Normandy about Falaize, as he himself remarked in his Genealogy which he writ with his own hand, during the leisure which the contagious Distemper that raged in 1582 afforded him in his Retirement in his House de Clichy la Garenne near Paris. Their Name was le Tourneur, which they have changed since into Versoris. John le Tourneur alias Versoris coming to Paris about the Reign of Charles VII. was one of the first Doctors of the University, and writ several Books in Latin, some of which, as this Genealogy observes, are to be seen in the Library of the Minimies, at Nigeon. He changed his French Name le Tourneur into the Latin one Versoris, as Men of Letters were wont then to do. He took his Nephew with him, made him a Lawyer, and married him to Jan Fourier, of a good Family, and nearly related to the Lieutenant Civil Charmolue. All the Versoris's are descended from this Marriage, who have for the most part exercised the Function of Advocate with great Reputation both in the Palace and the Chatelet." There is something wanting in this relation of Mr. Joly, we don't find by it that the Nephew whom John le Tourneur had with him, was call'd Frederick le Tourneur, and that in imitation of his Uncle, he call'd himself Versoris. He left one Son, William Versoris, who was Lord of Garge, and a famous Advocate, and Father of our Peter Versoris (d). 'Tis without doubt the same William Versoris, who is in the List (e) of the Advocates pleading in the Court of Parliament in 1524, and who (f) dyed at five and twenty, after he had been Married five times, as Mr. Peter Versoris observes in the Genealogy which he made of that Family in the Year 1582. Mr. Blanchard mentions this Family in the Catalogue of the Counsellors of the Parliament of Paris.

(B) He dy'd —— for grief after he had heard that the Duke of Guise had been killed at Blois.] Mr. Joly relates it thus. "Peter Versoris (g) was President of M. de Guise's Council, kept his Seals, and was very affectionate to the Family, tho' he had no Communication, or any thing to do but with his domestick Affairs; so that on the very day of the Barricadoes in 1588, he came in his Coach in the Morning to the Hotel de Guise, to speak with him as he used to do, not knowing any thing of what passed, and returned again to his own House without seeing him, Mr. de Guise having then more urgent Business on his hands. He dy'd the same year on Christmass day in the Morning, having heard at his Collation the Night before, the News of what was transacted at Blois, for which he was very much concern'd, deploring the Misfortunes into which he saw they were going to fall, and spoke these words with grief, That those Princes (meaning Messieurs de Guise) were very well beloved, and that if the King had not prevented it, he would have a great deal of trouble. However he was very easie, and went to Bed, designing to communicate at the Midnight Mass, having already been confessed; but finding himself ill, he could not go: Mr. de Verthamon Counsellor in Parliament, his Son-in-law, and his Daughters, coming to see him, at their return about five a Clock in the Morning, found him dead in his Bed. The eldest of his Sons, Frederick Versoris was then young, and was admitted into the Court as a Counsellor a long time after. His two Sons in law M. Rauncher, Master of the Requests, and M. de Verthamon also Counsellor in Parliament, follow'd the King's Person and Interest during all those Commotions, as well in the States of Blois, as in the Parliament sitting at Tours.

(d) Out of some manuscript Memoirs.

(e) 'Tis in the 574, & 575. pages of Loisel's Opuscul.

(f) Opusc. cul. of Loisel, pag. 750.

(g) Opusc. cul. of Loisel. p. 751, 752.

Cabals of State. We ſhall ſee (C) below in what his Talents lay. § Mornac made an Encomium upon him in his Feriæ forenſes. I ſhall ſpeak (D) of thoſe who Deſcended from him.

VESPASIAN (TITUS FLAVIUS) Son of an Honeſt Publican (A), and Grandſon of a Collector, ‡ who had been Captain of a Company of one hundred Men in Pompey's Party, and who eſcaped from the Battel of Pharſalia, roſe to the Higheſt Dignity on Earth, being Created Emperor of Rome, in the Year of Grace 69. He was Born ♯ in a Village of the Country of the Sabins, near Reate the 17th of November, in the Year of Rome * 761. He was brought up in the Country by Tertulla his Grandmother by his Father's ſide, and preſerved ‖ ſo great a Reſpect for her Memory, that at great Solemnities he always Drank in her Goblet. He paſſed gradually through all the Dignities of the Empire. He was made Tribune of the Soldiers in Thrace, as a Reward of his ſervices. Crete and the Province of Cyrene fell to his Lot when he was Quæſtor. He was refuſed the Office of Ædile the firſt time he ſtood for it. He obtained it afterwards, but was the laſt of the ſix Ædiles, to which he could not Arrive without ſome difficulty. He was a more ſucceſsful Canditate for the Prætorſhip; he got into the firſt Rank the very firſt time he ſtood for it. He made uſe of a great many Arts to gain Caligula's Favour, and ſtood very well with Narciſſus under the Emperor Claudius. By the Intereſt of which Favourite he was ſent into Germany at the Head of a Legion. He was afterwards ſent into Britain, at § Ibid. p. 357.

‡ Sueton. in Veſpaſ. c. 1. See the Remark A.

♯ Id. ibid. cap. 2.

* That is the 9 Year of CHRIST.

‖ Aviæ memoriam tam tenere dilexit, ut ſollemnibus & feſtis diebus pocillo quoque ejus argenteo potare perſeveraverit. Id. ibid.

(C) We ſhall ſee——in what his Talents lay.] Antony Loiſel made a ſort of Parallel between John le Maitre and Peter Verſoris. The firſt, ſays he (a), was really a very ſtrenuous and powerful Advocate, Reſolute in points of Law, Cuſtoms and Practice, very Prudent and Deliberate in his Cauſes, as he made appear as well at the Bar as in the Adminiſtration of his places. After he had reſigned that of Preſident to M. de Sillery, he deſired to Live and Die privately in his own Houſe, in which he was Conſulted without going to the Palace, and often employ'd in Arbitrations. After this he adds, "that 'twas not exactly ſo with Mr. Peter Verſoris; for altho' they went to him, 'twas chiefly to mend ſome Faults which happen ſometimes in preparing a Caſe for a hearing; for he was really full of fine and ſubtile Inventions, and underſtood the Affairs of the Palace ſo well, that tho' he had in a manner quitted it, yet the Palace never quitted him, for his Houſe was another Palace; inſomuch that he kept not only his Days, his Mornings and Afternoons, but his Hours alſo, which he ſo managed that there were always Attendants in the Great-Hall, whilſt he gave his Advice in the Little one. And as he was much Sollicited in his latter Years for Advice, ſo was he Employed in his Younger Days more than any Body elſe for Pleading, as one who ſpoke with a ſprightly ready and natural Eloquence: (1) And with a great Facility and Perſuaſion which made him to be concerned in the greateſt and fineſt Cauſes of his time, as that of the Jeſuits (2) which we Pleaded together, he for them (3) and I for the Univerſity of Paris, of which I ſhall ſay nothing, becauſe ſince both Pleas are Printed, every Body may paſs a Judgment on them. Only this I ſhall ſay, that having read his ſome Years ſince, I did not think it near ſo good as when we Pleaded, which proceeds from the Grace, the Force, and the Weight that is given to a Diſcourſe by the Voice, and way of delivery, eſpecially by his, which was Fine and Agreeable to what a meer, Dull, Mute, and Inanimate Reading is. 'Tis true he had one Fault, which was generally pronouncing A for E and E for A, and thoſe who knew what he quoted out of Claſſick Authors, might perceive that he was not well Verſed in them; but take him altogether he was a great Advocate."

(a) Ibid. p. 526.

(1) Mr. du Vair compares him with Mr. Mangot, at the beginning of his Treatiſe of the French Eloquence. We have heard, ſays he, Mr. Mangot and Mr. Verſoris at the ſame time: But one of them was rather a Subtil Civilian, who eaſily explained himſelf with a cloſe and a ſharp Voice, than a great Orator. The other did not want a full and free Expreſſion, or a great and nice Judgment; but having employed all his Thoughts about Cauſes, he did not go ſo far as his Natural Parts, if they had been Cultivated by Care and Art, would have carried him. (2) Paſquier in the firſt Letter of the XXI. Book to Mr. de Sainte Marthe relates at large how he was engaged in that Cauſe, and all that paſſed in it. (3) Mr. Peter Verſoris, ſays he, at the end of that Letter. pag. 675. a great Advocate Pleaded againſt me for the Jeſuits, being aſſiſted by the Memoirs which Caigord the Jeſuit furniſhed him, who was a Native of Auvergne, one of the fineſt Sollicitors the Palace ever ſaw, and as ſuch I have heard him Commended by the late Cardinal of Lorrain.

(D) We ſhall ſpeak of thoſe who Deſcended from him.] He Married Margaret Caignet, by whom he had two Sons and two Daughters, Frederick, James, Catherine, and Mary. The latter was the Wife of Francis de Vertamont Counſellor in the Parliament of Paris, and Died in Auguſt 1625. Catherine was Married the 5th of September 1580. to Antony Rancher Seigneur de la Foucaudiere, Counſellor in the Parliament, Maſter of the Requeſts, and afterwards Preſident in the Parliament of Paris.

Frederick de VERSORIS, Counſellor in the Parliament February 19. 1601. left among other Children Francis Frederick Lord of Fontenai le Vicomte, (who left only one Daughter) and Lewis Lord of Marſilli, Lieutenant of the Guards, who left only two Daughters. They Died without Iſſue, The youngeſt was Married the 10th of September 1689. to her ſecond Couſin, and Died the 6th of November 1691.

James de VERSORIS, the other Son of our Advocate, was Lord of Coulommiers, Counſellor and Secretary to the King, and Father of Peter de VERSORIS, Lord of Coulommiers, Beauvoir and Malmuſſe, the King's Steward in Ordinary. This Peter de Verſoris left five Children, three Daughters who are Nuns, and two Sons, Charles and Peter. Charles de VERSORIS, Lord and Patron of Agi and Beauvoir, was Married firſt to his ſecond Couſin, Daughter of Lewis de Verſoris, Lieutenant of the Guards; and afterwards on the 3d of March 1695. to Genevieve Bourgoin, by whom he has no Children. Peter de VERSORIS Lord of Beauvoir, Married Mademoiſelle Tonnelier at Orleans the 22d of February 1700 (b).

(A) Son of an Honeſt Publican.] He behaved himſelf generouſly in his Employ, and ſo juſtly withal, that the Cities gave a publick and laſting Teſtimony of his Probity. (c) Hujus filius cognomine Sabinus——publicum quadrageſima in Aſia egit. Manebantque imagines à civitatibus ei poſita ſub hoc titulo, ΚΑΛΩ͂Σ ΤΕΛΩΝΗ΄ΣΑΝΤΙ. Poſtea fœnus apud Helvetios exercuit, ibique diem obiit, ſuperſtitibus uxore Veſpaſia Polla, & duobus ex ea liberis: quorum major Sabinus ad præfecturam urbis, minor Veſpaſianus ad principatum uſque proceſſit. Satyrical Men cannot here come in with their Gloſs on this Text, they cannot object that Veſpaſian's Father was an Honeſt Man in the ſame ſenſe that one of thoſe, who was Crucified with JESUS CHRIST, is called the good Thief. The latter did not deſerve that Character in ſenſu compoſito, as the Logicians ſpeak, but only in ſenſu diviſo. He was not Good and a Thief at the ſame time, but from a Thief he became a Good Man. The ſame may be ſaid of Zacheus: He was not an Honeſt Man when he gathered the publick Impoſts: He became ſo by acts of Reſtitution and Repentance (g). This cannot be ſaid of our Emperor's Father; for he United the Character of an Honeſt Man at the head of a Legion. He was afterwards ſent into Britain †, where he fought the Enemy thirty times, ſubdued two Potent Nations, above twenty two Towns, and the Iſle of Wight. In recompence of which he obtained the Triumphal Ornaments, two Prieſthoods, and the Conſulſhip. He lived in a ſort of Retirement whilſt Agrippina continued in Favour, who hated all Narciſſus's Friends. Returning to publick Employments, he became Proconſul of Africa, which Poſt he very (B) Honourably diſcharged, without enriching himſelf. He accompanied Nero in his Voyage to Greece, but not having the complaiſance to Applaud that Emperor's Singing (C), he was utterly Diſgraced, and concealed himſelf in an obſcure Town. He did not believe himſelf ſafe there, he feared the fatal effects of Nero's Rage, when he received the News that the Government of a Province, and the Command of an Army were beſtowed on him. No perſon was found ſo proper as he to reduce the Jewiſh Nation to Obedience, which had preſumed to Revolt. This Expedition in which Titus his Son ſerved him as Lieutenant General, was perfectly Glorious, and opened a way to the Throne. Which great Riſe he began to hope for during the Civil War betwixt Otho and Vitellius *. Several Preſages which promiſed him a very ſublime Fortune, were very powerful Engagements to his reſolution of Seizing the Imperial Authority; for beſides the Impreſſion which they made upon his Mind, they Supplied his Friends with

† Now call'd [illegible]

* Taken from Suetonius ubi ſupra cap. 2. & ſeq.

Man with that of a Publican, ſo much decryed in the Goſpel, and profane Authors. Nay, the Satyriſt, who cannot deny this, would ſtretch things too far, if they ſhou'd make uſe of the Application of this thought, theſe two words are very much ſurprized to find themſelves together, for in all likelyhood they never met before. I have formerly touched (a) on this in obſerving that a great extent of Learning is very rarely accompanied with a great Modeſty. Nevertheleſs we meet with ſome Examples in which they are United: Some Partiſans are alſo Honeſt Men, tho' it ought to be owned that from all Antiquity theſe two Qualities have been pleaſed to ſeparate themſelves. The eaſineſs of Gaining cauſes them to amaſs Riches, which without Regret are expended (b) on whatever Luxury inſpires; but to defray theſe extravagant Expences, new and more exorbitant Extortions are neceſſary. This is the Venom which Poiſons the Minds of thoſe concerned in the management of the Treaſury. See ſeveral Remarks againſt them in the firſt part of la Mothe le Vayer's (c) proſe chagrine.

We may obſerve that Veſpaſian's Maternal Anceſtors were more Illuſtrious than the Paternal; for Veſpaſia Polla his Mother was a Senator's Siſter, and Daughter of Veſpaſius Pollio, who went through conſiderable Offices in the Army. (d) Polla Nurſiæ honeſto genere orta, patrem habuit Veſpaſianum Pollionem, ter Tribunum militum, præfectumque caſtrorum, fratremque Senatorem prætoriæ dignitatis. Several Monuments of this Family were obſerved at a place called Veſpaſiæ, on the top of a Mountain ſix Miles from Nurſia, in the Road to Spoleto, which diſcovered its Ancient Luſtre. (e) Ubi (Veſpaſiis) Veſpaſiorum complura monumenta exſtant, magnum indicium ſplendoris familiæ & vetuſtatis. Veſpaſian's Elder Brother aſſuming the Sir-Name of Sabinus, affords us reaſon to conclude that in that Age, the Younger Brothers ſometimes took a Sir-Name borrowed from their Mothers Family, and terminated like thoſe which indicated Adoption.

(B) He very Honourably diſcharged the Proconſulſhip of Africa.] We have here a proof of what I ſaid (f) above, that Suetonius was not hurried by a Satyrical Genius to ſpeak ill of People. He here beſtows Elogies on Veſpaſian very contrary to the Teſtimony of Tacitus; this ſhews that he had throughly examined what had been ſaid concerning Veſpaſian's Conduct, and having found the ill Reports concerning him falſe, he rejected them, in order to do that Proconſul the juſtice which was due to him. A Hiſtorian naturally ill Natured and Satyrical is not ſo juſt. (g) Exin ſortitus Africam, integerrime, nec ſine magna dignatione adminiſtravit: Niſi quod Adrumeti ſeditione quadam, rapa in eum jacta ſunt. Rediit certe nihilo opulentior, ut prope labefactata jam fide, omnia prædia fratri obligaret. You ſee that Suetonius doth not conceal the Inſurrection of the Inhabitants of Adrumetum, nor that they threw Turneps at Veſpaſian. He is then ſo much the more credible in the Elogies he beſtows upon him, and we may reaſonably believe that Tacitus was neither juſt nor exact enough, when he tells us only that Veſpaſian (i) was Decried, and drew on himſelf the publick Hatred during his Proconſulſhip.

(C) Not having the Complaiſance to Applaud Nero's Singing.] This Prince's paſſion for Muſick was a Ridiculous Extravagance. The principal cauſe of (k) his Voyage to Greece was his ardent deſire of ſignalizing himſelf in the Muſical diſputes in ſeveral Cities of that Country, and to bear away the Prize. Suetonius (l) relates a great many Circumſtances to this purpoſe which are very ſurprizing. He ſaith amongſt other things that no Perſon was admitted to retire from the Theatre whilſt Nero was a Singing, and that ſome Women were forced to be Delivered there, and that the Gates of the Cities being ſhut, ſome Perſons were ſo fatigued and tired with Hearing and Praiſing this Prince, that they ſecretly eſcaped over the Walls, or feigned themſelves Dead, that they might be carried out of the Town under pretence of being Buried. (m) Cantante eo, ne neceſſaria quidem cauſſa excedere theatro licitum erat. Itaque & enixæ quædam in ſpectaculis dicuntur, & multi tædio audiendi laudandique, clauſis oppidorum portis, aut furtim deſiluiſſe de muro, aut morte ſimulata funere elati. It is eaſy to conceive that Nero was extremely Incenſed againſt Veſpaſian, who very often went out of the Theatre, or grew Sleepy whilſt his Maſter was Singing. (n) Peregrinatione Achaica inter comites Neronis, cum cantante eo, aut diſcederet ſæpius, aut præſens obdormiſceret, graviſſimam contraxit offenſam: prohibituſque non contubernio modo, ſed etiam publica ſalutatione, ſeceſſit in parvam ac deviam civitatem, quoad latenti, etiamque extrema metuenti, provincia cum exercitu oblata eſt. Some will aſk why Suetonius ſaith here, that Veſpaſian frequently retired from the Theatre? Hath he not elſewhere affirmed that no Perſon was admitted to go out of the Theatre on any pretext whatſoever? I anſwer, that indeed he did not very well remember to render all the parts of his Relations exactly conſiſtent; but to juſtify him in ſome ſort, we may ſuppoſe that the Prohibition of leaving the Theatre was a conſequence of the Liberty of not ſtaying till the Spectacle was ended, which ſeveral had taken. Veſpaſian, before the Prohibition, was one of thoſe who laid the leaſt Conſtraint upon himſelf. By which he began to diſpleaſe that Prince, and his Diſgrace was compleated after the forbidding Order. He indeed obeyed, but fell aſleep on the Theatre. I cannot think of a better way of Reconciling theſe two places of Suetonius. It may perhaps be imagined that he Confounded the times, I would ſay that inſtead of applying this to the Year of the Muſical Victories which Nero obtained at Rome, he placed it in the Year of his Victories amongſt the Greeks. We are informed by Tacitus that it was at Rome that Veſpaſian fell into Diſgrace for Sleeping at the Muſical Diſputes of the Emperor. (o) Ferebantque Veſpaſianum, tanquam ſomno conniveret, a Phœbo liberto increpitum, ægreque meliorum precibus obtectum: mox imminentem perniciem majore fato effugiſſe. Mr. de Tillemont (p) conceives that Veſpaſian twice

---

(a) See [illegible] Book [illegible] Chap. XIX.

(c) See the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres for June [illegible] Article 2. at the end.

(b) Julian the Apoſtate knew very well that the Financiers love Luxury. [illegible]nerat bilem dictum, they are Ammianus Marcellinus's words lib. 22. c. 4. p. m. 300. ut ad detondendum Imperatoris capillum tonſor venire præceptus, introiret quidam amplo [illegible] veſtitus. Quo viſo Julianus obſtupuit: Ego, inquit, non Rationalem juſſi, ſed tonſorem acciri.

(d) Pag. 327. of the 9th tome edit. in 12. See alſo the 1. tome, pag. 70. & ſeq.

(e) Sueton. ubi ſupra.

(f) Id. ib.

(g) In the Remark D of the Article Suetonius.

(h) Sueton. ubi ſupra cap. 4.

(i) Integrum illic ac favorabilem Proconſulatum Vitellius; famoſum inviſumque Veſpaſianus egerat. Tacit. hiſt. lib. 2. cap. 97.

(k) Sueton. in Nerone cap. 22. See alſo Tacitus ann. lib. 16. cap. 4. & 5.

(l) Suet. ibid. cap. 23. & ſeq.

(m) Id. ib. cap. 23.

(n) Id. in Veſpaſiano cap. 4.

(o) Tacit. annal. lib. 16. cap. 5. ad ann. Romæ 818. Chriſti 65.

(p) Tillemont, Hiſt. des Emper. tom. 2. pag. m. 6 with a good opportunity of Animating him to this Enterpriſe. † Tacitus and Suetonius || who have related the Preſages, have not omitted the Anſwer made him on (D) Mount Carmel. It was given by the true God, if we may believe the Carmelites, who Build on the Authority of theſe two Hiſtorians, the Chimerical Antiquity of their Order, and the pretended Succeſſion of the Diſciples of the Prophet Elias continued to the beginning of their Inſtitution. Veſpaſian tho' animated by Preſages, and the Inſtances of his Friends, did yet Heſitate for ſome time, and wanted the Concourſe of ſeveral Fortuitous ‡ Events, and the moſt preſſing § Reaſons of Atheiſm to puſh him from uncertain Thoughts to the fixed Reſolution of declaring himſelf Emperor. It is very probable that the Lies, which with a great Addreſs were ſpread, (E) contributed very conſiderably to the ſucceſs of his Enterpriſe. He was γ the firſt who mended on the Throne; and not to own that he Remedied ſeveral Evils, and did ſome very good Actions, were to be Unjuſt. The deſire of amaſſing Treaſures was his great Vice, which he took no care to hide; yet there is reaſon to believe that he contrived

† Tacit. Hiſtor. lib. 2. cap. 78.

|| Sueton. in Veſpaſ. cap. 5.

‡ Id. ib. cap. 6.

§ You'll find 'em in Tacitus Hiſt. cap. 76, 77.

γ Ambiguæ de Veſpaſiano fama: Soluſque omnium ante ſe principum in melius mutatus eſt. Tacit. ib. lib. 1. cap. 50.

twice committed this Crime of Sleeping at Nero's Muſick; firſt at Rome, and afterwards in Greece. This is not very probable: A Courtier who hath once run the Riſque of his Life, would take more care to avoid a Relapſe, eſpecially, when it may be eaſily done.

(D) The Anſwer made him on Mount Carmel. —— The Carmelites who Build——the Chimerical Antiquity.] Tacitus's words are: (a) Eſt Judæam inter Syriamque Carmelus, ita vocant montem, deumque: nec ſimulacrum deo, aut templum, (ſic tradidere majores) ara tantum & reverentia. Illic ſacrificanti Veſpaſiano, cum ſpes occultas verſaret animo, Baſilides ſacerdos, inſpectis identidem extis. Quidquid eſt, inquit, Veſpaſiane quod paras, ſeu domum extruere, ſeu prolatare agros, ſive ampliare ſervitia, datur tibi magna ſedes, ingentes termini, multum hominum. Has ambages & ſtatim exceperat fama, & tunc aperiebat, nec quidquam magis in ore vulgi; crebriores apud ipſum ſermones: quanto ſperantibus plura dicuntur. The laſt words of this Citation ought not to be ſuppreſſed by me, for they contain an excellent Morality, or rather a lively Image of the Deceits and Illuſions of Ambition. The People diſcourſed of thoſe Preſages, but thoſe who approach'd Veſpaſian talk'd more of them ſtill; for the more ſuch Diſcourſes create a ſort of hope, the more they are increaſed. I proceed now to Suetonius: (b) Apud Judæam Carmeli Dei oraculum conſulentem, ita confirmavere ſortes, ut quidquid cogitaret volveretque animo, quantum libet magnum, id eſſe proventurum pollicerentur. Thoſe who weigh the Circumſtances of theſe two Hiſtorians words, and underſtand the Religion which God deliver'd to the Jews, will without any difficulty be convinced that the Oracle conſulted by Veſpaſian was a Deity full as falſe as that at Delphi. Nevertheleſs the Carmelites maintain, that this was the Oracle of the ſame God who was Worſhipped at Jeruſalem. Hermenigildus, a Sancto Paulo, a Spaniſh Monk, refuted this Opinion, and ſhew'd the Paganiſm of the God Carmelus mention'd by Tacitus and Suetonius: But Laurence Angelus Eſpin, a Carmelite, could not bear this Truth; he Publiſhed a Tract at Saragoza in Anſwer to it, with the Pompous and Inſulting Title of ruina Idoli Carmelitici quod ſomniavit Reverendiſſ. P. Fr. Hermenigildus a S. Paulo. This bold Writer did not maintain his preſuming Character; he was ſilenced by the Marquis of Agropoli, who Printed a piece at Seville, in 1678. in which he with a great deal of Solidity and Learning proves that Father Hermenigildus a S. Paulo had a very juſt Cauſe: The Carmelites reſolved him a Miſchief, and to gratify their Paſſion (c) with the more Addreſs, they Proſecuted the Marquis for denying the pretended Haubert of Seville. They brought him into the Inquiſition, as an Accomplice of Papebroch a French Writer, and hired ſaid they, to Write againſt Spain. They pretended that he had Betrayed Spain, and that his Crime was really High Treaſon. (d) Neque ſcimus, inquiunt, utrum major ſit audacia quod homo Francus (qualem me fingunt) eo ſtylo utatur contra ſcriptores Hiſpanos, quam quod Agropolitanus Marchio homo mere laicus, ſcriptis ſuis ignorantia plenis, patriæ honorem prodat, favens auctori Franco, quem novit conductum ut ſcribat contra Hiſpaniam —— quod grave Marchionis illius delictum eſt, perduellionis etiam crimine exaggeratum, adeoque facit cum ſacro Tribunali delatabilem, ſicut eum delatamus in præſentiarum, una cum Papebrochio, ut eorundem peccatorum complicem. This is what they did in the Year 1691. By which we ſee that the moſt Eminent Characters are no ſecurity againſt Monkiſh Perſecutions; for a Man can ſcarce have more Titles of Honour than this Marquis: Part of which follow, for I am ſtopt by an Et cætera from citing the whole. Gaſpar de Mendoza, Ibañes de Segovia & Peralta, Eques Ordinis de Alcantara, Marchio de Mondexar, Comes Tendillæ, & utroque titulo ex Primatibus Hiſpaniæ; nec non Marchio de Valhermoſa & Agropoli, Dominus Provinciæ de Almoguera, Toparcha Oppidorum Corpa, Meci, Fuentonobiliæ, Loranciæ, Aunionis, Viana, &c. Obſerve that his Book was Printed in Spaniſh at Seville, and Tranſlated into Latin by Father Papebroch a Jeſuit of Antwerp, and not a French-Man as theſe Accuſers moſt ignorantly pretend. This Latin Tranſlation was Printed at Antwerp in 1698. See the Utrecht Journaliſts (e).

(a) Tacitus Hiſtor. lib. 2. cap. 78.

(b) Sueton. in Veſpaſ. c. 5.

(c) Eodem aſtu contra Marchionem mihi conſentientem procedunt; eamdem quidem pretendentes cauſam, reapſe vero ſtomachantes quod ſuum Laurentium Eſpin conatum Carmelo vindicare pro ætate Veſpaſiani decorem indebitum, fecerit obmuteſcere. Dan. Papebrochius præf. ad examen divinitatis quam in Carmelo Veſpaſianus conſuluit.

(d) Id. ib.

(e) In September and October 1698. pag. 770. & ſeq.

Beſides other Reaſons which this Marquis uſes, he refutes the Carmelites by an Argument drawn from the Perſon of Veſpaſian; for he cites (f) ſeveral Authors who are of Opinion that this Emperor was the Boar of the Foreſt, of which David ſpoke (g) by a Prophetick Spirit. He ſaith that he is called Ceſor piorum in the Sibyl's Verſes, and that he and his Son Titus are the Types of Antichriſt according to Malvenda. What probability then, concludes he, is there that the true God ſhould Honour ſuch a Man as he with his Anſwers? He ſolidly refutes Marcellus Donatus, who was of that Opinion (h).

(f) Exam. divinit. art. 25.

(g) Pſalm 79. v. 14.

(h) Marc. Donatus ſchol. in Hiſtor. Roman.

(E) That the Lies —— contributed very conſiderably to the Succeſs of his Enterpriſe.] Copies of a Letter from the Emperor Otho to Veſpaſian were diſperſed, by which the latter was Conſtituted that Emperor's Avenger, not to ſay that Otho therein expreſſed an ardent deſire that Veſpaſian would relieve the Republick. A report was alſo induſtriouſly ſpread that Vitellius had reſolved to remove the German Legions to Syria, and thoſe of Syria to Germany. (i) Plurimum cœptis contulerunt, jactatum exemplar epiſtolæ, veræ ſive falſæ, defuncti Othonis ad Veſpaſianum, extrema obteſtatione ultionem mandantis, & ut Reip. ſubveniret, optantis, ſimul rumor diſſipatus, deſtinaſſe Vitellium victorem permutare hiberna legionum, & Germanicas transferre in Orientem ad ſecuriorem molliorem que militiam. Theſe two particulars which doubtleſs were forged by the Enemies of Vitellius, very much conduced to Veſpaſian's Intereſt. The pretended Letter of Otho paſſed for a ſort of Laſt-Will, which afforded Veſpaſian a Lawful Pretence. The Syrian Legions charmed with their Pleaſant Quarters in ſo agreeable a Climate, and forming to themſelves a terrible Idea of the German Ice and Snow, were eaſily gained to the Emperor's Party, who would prevent the change of their Winter Quarters. The Syrians alſo uſed to theſe Legions, were very uneaſy to part with them for others ordered thither from a Barbarous Country (k). This encouraged them to favour Veſpaſian. This is the fate of Revolutions: They require the aſſiſtance of a thouſand Forgeries and falſe Alarms to affect the Minds of the People. Without which two in a thouſand will never ſucceed.

(i) Sueton. ib. cap. 6.

(k) See Tacitus ubi ſupra cap. 7.

(F) Part

ward it ſo, that part of his Extortions were imputed to his Concubine (F) Cænis. This was a poor way of clearing himſelf; for even thoſe who had believed that he knew not that ſhe ſold all Places, wou'd have accounted this Ignorance as a moſt ſcandalous Fault. He was the firſt § who laid a Tax on Urine. I have ſaid ſomething ‖ elſewhere concerning ſome Miraculous Cures of which he paſſed for the Author. He Died the 24th of June, in the Year 79. after a Reign of Ten Years wanting Six Days, aged a little above Sixty Nine Years. It ought not to be forgotten that he Deported himſelf with great Moderation * towards thoſe who had Offended him, and ſhowered numerous Preſents and Favours † on Ingenious Men, and thoſe who Cultivated the liberal Arts. He never was aſhamed of the Meanneſs of his firſt Condition, but ridiculed the vain Efforts of ſeveral (G) Genealogiſts who would make him to be Deſcended from one of Hercules's Companions. He was too fond of Rallery, which he carried to a great degree § Sueton. ib. cap. 23.

‖ In the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, June in the Year 1686. Art. 1. pag. 630.
* Sueton. ib. cap. 15. & ſeq.
† Id. ib. cap. 18.

(F) Part of his Extortions were Imputed to his Concubine Cænis.] Xiphilin in Abridging Dion Caſſius left out ſeveral things that were doubtleſs of great Importance: but if I miſtake not, he hath not done ſo in thoſe Facts which concern this Concubine: I am apt to think he hath retained the whole. His Abridgment (a) acquaints us when ſhe Died. We there find that Veſpaſian loved her tenderly, and was accountable to her for the Great Power which he acquired, and the vaſt Treaſures which he Amaſſed. She ſold all the Offices depending on the Law, the Sword, and Religion, beſides the very Anſwers of Veſpaſian himſelf. No Body loſt his Life under that Emperor upon the account of his Money; but many ſaved it with the help of their Purſes. Cænis received all thoſe Sums, and he was ſuſpected not without reaſon to be Privy to it. The Hiſtorian offers two Reaſons (b) which obliged him to mention this Woman: Firſt ſhe had a great ſhare of Fidelity, and in the ſecond place a very extraordinary Memory; for Proof of which, ſee the Anſwer which ſhe returned to Antonia her Miſtreſs (c), who had obliged her to write ſome ſecret Paſſage relating to Sejanus, to be communicated to Tiberius, and who ordered it to be immediately blotted out, to prevent all Inconveniencies from the diſcovery, (d) 'Tis in vain, replyed ſhe, that you give me that Order, for this and all other things which you ſpeak of to me are ſo firmly fixed in my Memory, that they cannot be blotted out. I admire this in her, (e) ſaith the Hiſtorian. I allow this Anſwer worthy a place in this Author, but it muſt at the ſame time be acknowledged that it was not pertinent. It could only have been juſt, if Antonia had deſired that all Ideas of this Letter might be Aboliſhed. But this was not what ſhe deſired, her Intention was only to prevent all external Evidences of her ſecret, and that no diſcovery ſhould be confirmed by Proofs: She did not diſtruſt Cænis, nor was ſhe apprehenſive of Accuſations purely Verbal, and deſtitute of the ſtrong ſupports of written Teſtimonies. To what purpoſe then was it to ſay that blotting out the Letter, was no effectual way to prevent the Inconvenience, againſt which Antonia's Precaution was levelled? Cænis's Memory did not give Antonia any Uneaſineſs, when ſhe knew the Writing was not in being. Obſerve that Cænis was made free by this Lady, and was her Secretary. Veſpaſian kept her in his Houſe before he Married, ſent her away when he Married, and took her again after the Death of his Wife, and treated her almoſt like a Wife. (f) Poſt uxoris exceſſum, Cænidem Antoniæ libertam, & a manu dilectam quondam ſibi, revocavit in contubernium: Habuitque etiam Imperator pene juſtæ uxoris loco. After her Death he took ſeveral (g) Concubines, which ſhewed that he thought none ſufficient to ſupply her place, and that he had recourſe to ſeveral to compenſate the Loſs which he ſuffered in this one Miſtreſs. It is obſerved as an Evidence of Domitian's Pride or Incivility, that Cænis (h) at her return from a Journey offering to Kiſs him according to cuſtom, he preſented her his Hand to Kiſs.

(a) Xiphilin in Veſpaſiano p. m. 271.
(b) [illegible] propterea mentionem feci quod maxime fide & excellenti memoria fuit. Idib.
(c) Mother of the Emperor Claudius. See the Remark C of the Article Antonia the Elder.
(d) Id. ib.
(e) [illegible] θαυμάσαι. Id igitur in ea admiratus ſum. Id. ib.
(f) Sueton. in Veſpaſ. cap. 3.
(g) Id. ib. cap. 21.
(h) Cænidi patris concubinæ ex Iſtria revertenti oſculumque ut aſſuerat offerenti manum præbuit. Id. in Domit. c. 12.

(G) He Ridiculed the vain Efforts of ſeveral Genealogiſts.] Moſt of whom are prodigiouſly Impudent, and when encouraged by the leaſt beck of a Favourite or Miniſter, they preſent him with whatever Pedigree he pleaſes. A Superintendant of the Finances needs only chooſe, and if he is diſpoſed liberally to Reward thoſe Genealogy Makers, he ſhall deſcend, if he will, from the Ancient Trojans.

Tunc (i) licet a Pico numeres genus, altaque ſi te Nomina delectant, omnem Titanida pugnam
Inter majores ipſumque Promethea pones:
De quocunque voles proavum tibi ſumito libro.

(i) Juven. ſat. 8. v. 131.

"(k) Pegnafiel Contreras of Granada, —— not "content to particularize —— one hundred and "eighteen Succeſſions from Adam to Philip the "Third, hath deduced one hundred and twenty "one from the ſame Original to the Duke of "Lerma, on whoſe account this Excellent Piece "was written. To accompliſh this, the Author, as "others have done, takes up the Ruins of Old "Troy, where he finds (even before its Deſtruction) two Brothers Ilus and Aſsaracus, from the "firſt of which he makes the King of Spain to "be deſcended, and from the other his Excellency; who by this means being a very diſtant "Relation to his Catholick Majeſty, he hath obliged him with a much nearer Affinity by his "Maternal Line, which he hath alſo drawn. And "becauſe it would not be proper to leave a Duke "ſo highly Deſcended without ſome Sovereignties "in his Family, he makes Æneas one of his Anceſtors. —— A little after Æneas he crowds in "Brutus, who is ſaid to have given his Name to Great-Britain." The number of Cheats and Bubbles was not Anciently leſs than at preſent. If Veſpaſian had pleaſed, the Genealogical Stem of the Houſe of Flavia had been ſo drawn, that the greateſt Names in Old Rome had infallibly been Inſerted in the Male or Female Line. He would have ſeen in it, (k) La Mothe le Vayer, Diſcours de l'Hiſtoire tom. 2. pag. 160, 161.

(l) Stantes in curribus Æmilianos,
Et Curios jam dimidios, humeroſque minorem Corvinum, & Galbam auriculis naſoque carentem,
. . . .
Fumoſos equitum cum dictatore magiſtros.

(l) Id. ſat. 8. v. 3.

He would therein have found Murranus who was killed in Æneas's time, from whom the moſt Ancient Latin Kings were deſcended.

Murranum (m) hic, atavos & avorum antiqua ſonantem
Nomina, per regeſque actum genus omne Latinos,
Præcipitem ſcopulo, atque ingentis turbine ſaxi Excutit.

(m) Virgil. Æneid. lib. 12. v. 529.

Some undertook to prove that the Founders of the City of Reate, and a certain Hero whoſe Monument was in a Street of Rome, and who had accompanyed Hercules, were alſo the Founders of the Family of Veſpaſian; but this Emperor was the firſt who Laughed at their Endeavours, he never concealed the Meanneſs of his Extract, but frequently ſpoke of it himſelf. (n) Mediocritatem priſtinam neque diſſimulavit umquam, ac frequenter etiam præ ſe tulit. Quin & conantes quoſdam originem Flavii generis ad conditores Reatinos, comitemque Herculis, cujus monumentum exſtat via Salaria, referre, irriſit ultro. It is not ſtrange that ſuch a Genealogical Labour ſhould be undertaken to Flatter an Emperor, ſince more than this was done for a Perſon who was no more than Quæſtor to Auguſtus. I ſpeak of one Quintus Vitellius, to whom it was proved (o) by a Book written expreſly to that end, that his Anceſtors had Reigned over all Latium, and that they owed their Original to Faunus King of the Aborigines, and to Vitellia, who had been Worſhipped in ſeveral places as a Goddeſs. Notwithſtanding which, according to ſeveral other Authors (p), the Vitellii ſprung from a Freed-Man, or even from a Cobler. It is incredible how many Families

(n) Sueton. ubi ſupa cap. 12.
(o) Sueton. in Vitellio cap. 1.
(p) Id. ibi cap. 2.

degree of Buffoonry, and made no ſcruple of (H) the moſt obſcene Expreſſions. He very frequently made uſe of this turn of Thought to elude the juſt Reproaches to which his Avarice and the rigour of his Exactions expoſed him.

VIGERIUS (Mark) Cardinal of the Title of St. Mary beyond the Tiber, was of Savona. He was taken from a Franciſcan Monaſtery, and created Cardinal by Julius the II. He was afterwards made Biſhop of Præneſte, and Archprieſt of the Vatican Church. He had taught Theology at Padua and Rome. He died the 18th of June 1516, aged 70 Years, and was buried without an Epitaph at Saint Mary's beyond the Tiber *. He wrote ſeveral Books, one of which was (A) to prove that JESUS CHRIST's Tunick was inferior to Longinus's Spear.

VIGILANTIUS, a Pariſh Prieſt in the Dioceſe of Barcelona in Spain, was by Nation (A) a Gaul, and lived about the beginning of the Vth Century. He compoſed ſome Books, in which he diſcover'd ſome Zeal for Religion, but ſuffering himſelf to be ſeduced by the love of Praiſes, and preſuming too much on his milies boaſted of an elder Date than the famous Siege of Troy. The Glabrio's (a) pretended to be deſcended from Æneas. The pious Paula ſo celebrated in St. Jerom's Works, gave out that ſhe was iſſued from Agamemnon; and that Genealogy was mentiond in her Epitaph written by St. Jerom:

Scipio (b) quam genuit, Pauli fudere Parentes
Gracchorum Soboles, Agamemnonis inclyta proles
Hoc jacet in tumulo.

Syneſius Biſhop of Cyrene (c) in the beginning of the V. Century, ſaid he was deſcended from Hercules, and maintain'd that the Archives of Cyrene contain'd ſufficient proofs of this Extraction. The obſervation of theſe things is not uſeleſs; for it plainly ſhews, that our Age (†) doth not go beyond the moſt venerable Antiquity in this ſort of Chimera's. Our Age affords us Example which runs parallel with that of Veſpaſian. Read Naudé's Words; "Cardinal Mazarin, ſaith he, (d) above five years ago in the preſence of ſeveral Perſons of Honour and Probity, from whom I have it, ridiculed a certain Flatterer, who would trace the Original of the Family and Arms of Mazarin, from the old Roman Conſuls T. Geganius Macerinus, M. Geganius Muerinus II. Proculus Geganius Macerinus, M. Geganius Macerinus III. which the Ancient Chronicle of Haloander, Panvinius in his Faſti, and the Roman Hiſtorians mention, in the Years à Regifugio xviii. & ab urbe condita cccvii. cccxiv. & cccxvii. He much at the ſame time threatned a certain Prieſt of Avignon named Thomas Bonnet, to cauſe him to be ſent to the Baſtille, if contrary to his frequent forbidding Orders, he Publiſhed a Genealogy or Hiſtory di Caſa Mazarini, becauſe he ſaid wonderful things of it without any Proof, and without ſhewing by ſome Authentick Deeds the Affinity of many illuſtrious Families he ſpoke of.,, (H) He was too fond of rallery—— made no ſcruple of the moſt obſcene Expreſſions—— to elude the Reproaches.] Being accuſtomed to this in his private condition, it would have been very difficult for him to have abſtained from it on the Throne, for the Itch of jeſting is one of the moſt incurable ones that can poſſibly infect a Perſon. However it is infinitely below the Character of a great Monarch to debaſe himſelf by ſcurrillous jeſting as Veſpaſian did. (e) Super cœnam autem, & ſemper alias comiſſimus, multa joco tranſigebat. Erat enim dicacitatis plurimæ, & ſic ſcurrilis ac ſordidæ, ut ne prætextatis quidem verbis abſtineret. Et tamen nonnulla ejus facetiſſima extant, in quibus & hoc: Menſtrium Florum, conſularem, admonitus ab eo plauſtra potius quam ploſtra dicenda, die poſtero Flaurum ſalutavit. Expugnatus autem à quadam, quaſi amore ſui deperiret, cum productæ pro concubitu ſeſtertia quadraginta donaſſet: admonente diſpenſatore quemadmodum ſummam rationibus vellet referri, Veſpaſiano, inquit, adamato—— (f) Maxime tamen dicacitatem in deformibus lucris affectabat, ut invidiam aliqua cavillatione dilueret, transferretque ad ſales. Did he believe theſe ralleries would make People inſenſible of the Oppreſſion of his exorbitant Exactions?

(A) He wrote ſeveral Books, one of which was to prove that JESUS CHRIST's Tunick.] The occaſion of this Work was ſomewhat ſingular. (g) Bajazet, Emperor of the Turks, having two very precious Reliques, the ſeamleſs Coat of our Saviour, and the Spear which pierced his Heart, preſented the latter to the Pope, and kept the former for himſelf. On this occaſion a great Diſpute aroſe in Italy, whether the Preſent made to the Pope was better than that which the Grand Signor reſerved for himſelf. They diligently examined whether a Turkiſh Prince had a good taſte in point of Reliques. Our Vigerius was order'd to make it appear, that the Sultan was no nice Judge in things of this kind, ſince the ſeamleſs Tunick ought not to pretend to come near the Lance. The Spear penetrated to the Heart, and was tinctur'd with the very vital Blood; but the Tunick only touched the external parts. Bartholinus mentions this Diſpute, Inſedit hæc opinio, ſaith he, (h) Marco Virgerio Epiſcopo Præneſtino & Cardinali Senogallienſi in Controverſia quam juſſu æqualium ſuorum de præſtantia & dignitate lanceæ Longini Pontifici Romano à Turcarum Imperatore miſſæ, præ tunica inconſutili, quam ipſe Bajazetes ſibi reſervarat, olim ipſe conſcripſit, poſt à Simone Begnio Modruſienſi Epiſcopo per prælum Aſcenſianum typis divulgatum. Tractatu quarto fol. 10. primas lanceæ defert, quia non extrema ſolum, ut tunica, ſed ſanctiſſimi corporis medium attigit & nobiliſſima; vel forte loca cordis; & ipſum attigit cor; ad quæ in morte Chriſti omnis vigor vitalis humoris, in exhauſto corpore reliqui, ut ad arcem muniendum, & ad proprium domicilium ſe contulerat: qua forte de cauſa ſangnis defluxit & aqua per lanceam. Poſtea paucis interjectis: Ferrum autem aqua perfuſum eſt; quam de fonte intimi cordis eduxit, & de micanti mucrone rubens & ſanguinolentum ſpiculum regio ſacerdotalique ſanguine cruentatum extitit.

Calvin had not heard of this Preſent of Bajazet, for he takes no notice of it (i) in that place where he obſerves that the Iron point of that Lance was actually in four different places, if we believe the Papiſts. He did not forget that the Turks boaſt of having the Tunick. His words are, "(k) Concerning the ſeamleſs Garment for which Lots were caſt, becauſe it was thought very proper to excite the Devotion of the ignorant, there are ſeveral of them. For at Argenteuil near Paris, there is one; and another at Trier. And if the Bull of St. Salvador in Spain ſpeaks truth, the Chriſtians, by their inconſiderate Zeal, have done worſe than the Infidel Soldiers. For they not daring to tear it in pieces, they caſt Lots for it: But the Chriſtians have divided it in order to adore it. Beſides, what Anſwer will they make to the Turk, who laughs at their folly, and pretends it is in his poſſeſſion? But we need not make 'em quarrel with the Turk; let them end the debate amongſt themſelves. In the mean while we ſhall be excuſed from believing what is ſaid by the one as well as the other ſide, that we may not favour one party more than the other, without any knowledge of the cauſe. For that would be contrary to all reaſon.,, Oldoini mentions the following Books of our Vigerius: (l) Apologiam contra Piſanum Conciliabulum ſcripſit, & libellum unum decachordum Chriſtianum prænotatum, & alterum de ferro lanceæ, & Chriſti indumentis, eorumque dignitate. I omit the Liſt (m) of Books not Printed.

(A) Was by Nation a Gaul.] Gennadius (n) aſſerts his ſtrength, and having acquired more Politeneſs (B) of Style, than Knowledge in the Scripture, he very ill explain'd * one of the Viſions of the Prophet Daniel, and vented ſome other trifles, which placed him in the Catalogue of Hereticks. St. Hierome refuted him †. This is what Gennadius ſaith of him; from whence we may conjecture that he did not altogether approve the Vehemence with which St. Hierome wrote againſt Vigilantius; for one would think, by what St. Hierom (C) ſays of that Prieſt, that he was the moſt accurſed Heretick that ever was. The Proteſtants judge otherwiſe of it, they are perſuaded that Vigilantius very juſtly condemned Vows of Celibacy, the uſe of Torches at the Sepulchers of the Martyrs, the Honour paid to Saints, Prayers for the Dead, and nocturnal devotional

---

* Taken from the Athenæum Romanum of the Jeſuite Auguſtin Oldoini pag. 481.

(a) Herodian. lib. 2. cap. 3. pag. m. 70.

(b) Hieronym. epiſt. ad Euſtochium Virginem pag. m. 514.

(c) See Balzac's Diſſertations at the end of the Socrate Chretien p. 63, 64.

(†) See la Bruyere's Characters in the Chapter intitled de quelques uſages. p. m 599.

(d) Naudé, Dialogue de Maſcurat pag. 26, 27. That Book was written in 1649.

(e) Sueton. in Veſpaſ. cap. 22.

(f) Id ib. cap. 23.

(g) See the Article of Innocent VIII.

(h) Thomas Bartholinus, diſſertat. de latere Chriſti pag. [illegible]

(i) Calvin, Inventaire des reliques p. m. 29.

(k) Idib. pag. [illegible]

(l) Auguſt. Oldoinus in Athenæo Romano pag. 481.

(m) [illegible] Oldoini ibid.

(n) Vigilantius preſbyter natione Gallus. Gennadius de ſcript. Eccleſ. [illegible]

ſerts it in expreſs terms; but he is thought to be miſtaken by ſome who ground their Opinion on St. Hierome, who gives Vigilantius the Epithete of Calaguritanus. (a) Fuit ipſe natione Hiſpanus, patriâ Calaguritanus, ut idem S. Hieronymus tradit, ex quo Gennadius redarguitur. But I ſhould rather chuſe to juſtifie Gennadius from St. Hierom's words; for an Author who mentions ſeveral Monſters, and ſaith particularly that Gerion was born in Spain, (b) triformem Geryonem Hiſpaniæ prodiderunt, and adds, that Gaul alone never had any Monſters, and that it always abounded with great and eloquent Men, but that all on a ſudden Vigilantius aroſe, and fought againſt the Spirit of our Lord; a Writer, I ſay, who places his Periods in this manner, would he have us believe that this Heretick was born in Spain, and not in Gaul? It is certain that if a Perſon deſign'd to ſignifie that Vigilantius was a Gaul and not a Spaniard, he would expreſs himſelf like St. Hierome. (c) Cacum deſcribit Virgilius, triformem Geryonem Hiſpaniæ prodiderunt. Sola Gallia monſtra non habuit, ſed viris ſemper fortiſſimis, & eloquentiſſimis abundavit. Exortus eſt ſubito Vigilantius, ſeu verius Dormitantius, qui immundo ſpiritu pugnet contra Chriſti ſpiritum. Another paſſage of St. Hierome more expreſly points out Vigilantius's Country, and that ſo exactly, that no room is left to doubt that he makes him a Native of the Country which is at preſent called Cominge. (d) Nimirum reſpondet generi ſuo (Vigilantius) ut qui de latronum & convenarum natus eſt ſemine: quos Cn. Pompeius, edomitâ Hiſpaniâ, & ad triumphum redire feſtinans de Pyrenai jugis depoſuit, & in unum oppidum congregavit; unde & Convenarum urbs nomen accepit. Huc uſque latrocinetur contra Eccleſiam Dei, & de Vectonibus, Arrebacis, Celtiberiſque deſcendens incurſet Galliarum Eccleſias, portetque nequaquam vexillum Chriſti, ſed inſigne Diaboli. Fecit hoc idem Pompeius, etiam in orientis partibus; ut Cilicibus & Iſauris piratis, latronibuſque ſuperatis, ſui nominis inter Ciliciam & Iſauriam conderet civitatem. Sed hæc urbs hodie ſervat ſcita majorum, & nullus IN EA ORTUS eſt Dormitantius. Galliæ VERNACULUM HOSTEM ſuſtinent, & hominem moti capitis, atque Hippocratis vinculis alligandum, ſedentem cernunt in Eccleſia. But it is then asked why he uſed the Epithete Calaguritanus, in ſuch a manner as (e) diſcovers that he took that word in the ſame ſenſe as if he would have expreſs'd Quintilian's Country? For an Anſwer to this, I refer you to the Learned Mr. de Marca, who, I doubt not has abſolutely removed this Objection in a Diſſertation which I have not read, nor do any otherwiſe know than by the words of the Abbot de la Roque: " (f) As it is no diſhonour for a Man to be of a Country which hath produced ill Men, and an Hiſtorian is always obliged to ſpeak truth, Mr. de Marca, in a Diſcourſe which he wrote concerning the Country of Vigilantius, which this Monſter hath ſcandalized by his Errors, corrects the Blunder which almoſt all Hiſtorians have committed concerning this Heretick, by proving that his Birth-place was not Calaguris, a City in Spain, but Calaguri a Village near the City of St. Bertrand in the Dioceſe of Cominge. This is what Baronius was ignorant of, and which they may certainly correct in Moreri's new Dictionary.,, I ſhall paſs over Hadrian Valeſius's Obſervations againſt St. Hierome. That learned Critick (g) ſhews that this Father utters a Contradiction, ſince the ſituation of the places will not allow that the ſame Perſon ſhould be deſcended from the Vectones (h), the Arebaces, the Celtiberi, and thoſe Robbers whom Pompey gathered into a body. Father Pagi (i) promiſes to anſwer Valeſius's Objections in favour of St. Hierome, and ſaith beforehand that inſtead of Vectonibus, it ought not to be read (k) Veronibus, but Vettonibus. This Correction will not remove the difficulties as to the Arebacis Celtiberiſque. This is only by the way.

Obſerve that James Valdes the Civilian conjectures that the Epithete Calaguritanus might be taken from ſome Town in Gaul; for he will not allow Vigilantius to be a Spaniard. Gallus, ſaith he (l), a Gennadio de ſcript. Eccleſ. dicitur, & quamvis Calaguritanus a B. Hieronymo nuncietur in princ. adverſus Vigilantium, & a Baronio t. 5. anno 406. & Pampilonenſem dicat Mariana de reb. Hiſp. libr. 4. c. 20. tamen non Hiſpanum appellant, ſed potius videntur Gallum nunciare, cum tunc monſtra Galliæ naſci hæreticorum dixerint, & potuit eſſe Calaguritanum aliud oppidum Galliæ, vel ibi presbyterum fuiſſe, ut Barcinone, non tamen natum. In another place he alledges (m) Saint Hierome declaring that Spain never produced any Heretick beſides Priſcillian.

(B) More politeneſs of Style.] For ſo with Mr. du (n) Pin, we may tranſlate the lingua politus of Gennadius. I obſerve this to the end that we may more clearly ſee the difference betwixt St. Hierom and Gennadius. The former ſaith that Vigilantius wrote very ill: (o) Miſeruntque libros per fratrem Siſinium quos inter crapulam ſtertens evomuit. —— Eſt quidem imperitus & verbis & ſcientia, & ſermone inconditus, ne vera quidem poteſt defendere. Gennadius who knew what Character St. Hierome had given him, yet doth not ſcruple to acknowledge the Polite Language of Vigilantius. He meant doubtleſs, not that this Heretick ſpoke elegantly, and wrote barbarouſly, but that there appeared a Politeneſs in his Writings. He then judges quite otherwiſe of him than St. Hierome, and ought more to be credited; for when an Adverſary refutes a Man with that acrimony which clearly appears in St. Hierome, it is hardly poſſible for him to own that he writes well; he chiefly aims to expoſe him to the Readers Contempt.

(C) One would think by what St. Hierome ſays of this Prieſt, that he was the moſt accurſed Heretick] St. Hierome calls him Samaritan and Jew, a filthy Wretch, whoſe Tongue ought to be cut out, and a furious Monſter that ought to be bound. (p) Aio, Vigilantium, qui κατ' ἀντίφρασιν hoc vocatur nomine, nam Dormitantius rectius diceretur: os fœtidum rurſum aperire, & putorem ſpurciſſimum contra ſanctorum martyrum proferre reliquias; & nos, qui eas ſuſcipimus, appellare cinerarios & idolatras, qui mortuorum hominum oſſa veneremur. O infelicem hominem, & omni lacrymarum fonte plangendum, qui hæc dicens, non ſe intelligat eſſe Samaritanum, & Judæum. —— (q) O præcidendam linguam a medicis, immò inſanum curandum caput, ut qui loqui neſcit, diſcat aliquando reticere. Ego vidi hoc aliquando portentum, & teſtimoniis ſcripturarum, quaſi vinculis Hippocratis, volui ligare furioſum: ſed abiit, exceſſit, evaſit, erupit, & inter Hadriæ fluctus, Cottiique regis alpes in nos declamando clamavit. Quidquid enim amens loquitur, vociferatio & clamor eſt appellandus. He calls Vigilantius's words (r) a moſt filthy drunken Vomit: He ſaith in another place, that the Conduct of his Followers is not ſo much their own action, as that of the Devils which dwell in them. (s) Quales nuper ſub Magiſtro cerebroſi in Gallia pullularunt, qui baſilicas martyrum declinantes, nos qui ibi orationes ex more celebramus, quaſi immundos fugiant. Hæc autem non tam illi faciunt quam habitantes in eis dæmones, fortitudinem & flagella ſancti cineris fugientes. He ſaith ſo particularly of Vigilantius, (t) Sentio, ſentio, infeliciſſime mortalium, quid doleas, quid timeas. Spi-

ritus

---

* [illegible] Gennadii de Scriptor. Eccleſiaſt. c. 35.

† Taken from Gennadius ibid.

(k) Tis Valeſius's Conjecture is

(l) Jacobus Valdeſius de dignitate Hiſpaniæ c. 9. n. 17. p. m. 204.

(m) Regio enim Hiſpania ut B. Hieronymus c. 17. in Eſaiam inquit, monſtra hæreticorum non generavit & unum partum Priſcilliani ut abortivum & impium pia mater procul à ſe abdicavit, pariterque ablegavit. Id ib. c. 19. n. 72. p. 398.

(n) Du Pin, Biblioth. des auteurs Eccleſ. Tom. 3. p. 158. Dutch Edit.

(o) Hieron. adverſ. Vigilant. p. m. 550.

(p) Hieron. epiſt. ad Riparium p. m. 543.

(q) Ibid. pag. 545.

(r) Eructaret immundiſſimam crapulam. Ib.

(s) Id. in Iſaiam c. 75. apud Baron. ad ann. 406. n. 43.

(t) Idem. epiſt. adv. Vigilant. p. 558, 559.

devotional Assemblies, &c. Several Sins were committed in those (D) Assemblies, and at last it was thought necessary to do as Vigilantius advised, to suppress those Assemblies, and to give another form to that sort of Devotion. The ardour which St. Hierome shewed, was perhaps intermixed with some Personal resentment; for Vigilantius had traduced him as a favourer of (E) Origen, and this was at the instigation of Ruffinus. He had discovered several Marks of Esteem ‡ for Vigilantius, whom Paulinus had recommended to him. This was when Vigilantius travelled to Jerusalem. An Earthquake which happen'd whilst he was in the Holy Land, so much

ritus iste immundus, qui hæc te cogit scribere, sæpè hoc vilissimo tortus est pulvere, immo hodieque torquetur: & qui in te plagas dissimulat, in ceteris confitetur. Observe that Vigilantius's Diocesan acquiesced in his Doctrine. Which St. Hierome (a) disliked, and would have had this earthen Vessel broken with an Iron rod. If these Invectives are very exorbitant, I don't think that St. Hierome's Description of Vigilantius's Opinions is less so. I believe he was treated with the same injustice as the Protestants are treated. He disapproved the religious Honour paid to Relicks, and therefore he was accused of abhorring the Memory and the dead Bones of the Martyrs, and avoiding their Sepulchers, as places filled with Carrion. But who is ignorant of the difference betwixt hating an Object, and refusing to pay religious Worship to it? I cannot believe that Vigilantius's Opinions concerning Celibacy, were what they are represented. Undoubtedly he contented himself with asserting that Marriage ought not to be forbidden to Ecclesiasticks, and that they ought not to ingage in Vows of Continence. To render this Doctrine odious, it was Publish'd that he condemn'd and detested Celibacy, and look'd on those as incapable of the Priesthood who had no Wife. This false Gloss was yet further improved; it was affirmed that according to Vigilantius, incontestable proofs of a consummated and fruitful Marriage, ought to be given to qualify a Person for Ordination, and that no Man ought to present himself to be ordain'd without being attended by a Wife big with Child, or who carried one in her arms. There is no appearance that he either taught or caused to be practised such fooleries as these. What judgment then would you have us form of the sincerity of St. Hierom, or of those Accusers who informed him concerning this Heretick? Consider very well the words of that Holy Doctor. (b) Proh nefas, Episcopos sui sceleris dicitur habere consortes (Vigilantius); si tamen Episcopi nominandi sunt, qui non ordinant diaconos, nisi prius uxores duxerint, nulli cælibi credentes pudicitiam, imò ostendentes quàm sanctè vivant, qui male se de omnibus suspicantur. Et nisi prægnantes uxores viderint Clericorum, infantesque de ulnis matrum vagientes. Christi sacramenta non tribuunt. He reports the same thing (c) at the end of his Book. If these extravagancies had been stretched a little farther, Vigilantius would have been accused of a Discipline which revived the jus trium liberorum in favour of the Ecclesiasticks, I mean which allowed exemptions and Privileges to the Clergy whose Wives were fruitful. They would have asserted, that the Laws of his Discipline assigned the best Bishopricks and Benefices not to the most Virtuous and Learned, but to those who had most Children. They would have said that it subjected those Clergymen to Canonical Penalties, who could not shew any Heirs of their Body. They had maintain'd at last that even with regard to the Laity, all the antient Rules of Paganism were revived, which annexed a sort of real Damage and Scandal to Celibacy. They had uttered a hundred more extravagancies of this Nature.

(D) Several Sins were committed in those Assemblies, and at last, &c.] In those times it was customary to pass whole Nights in the Churches on occasion of the celebration of certain Festivals. The Youth applied these opportunities to amorous ends, and several Women were hereby debauched, which had not been possible if they had staid at home. It is then certain that Vigilantius justly condemned those Assemblies, which afforded so many tempting opportunities to sin. See what I have said in the Remark D, at the Article Thesmophoria. St. Hierome doth not deny that these Watchings were attended with several disorders, but he asserts that this ought not to interrupt the frequency of their celebration. He alledges that those who pervert these opportunities to sinful purposes, would, without them find means to defile themselves; that People are more careful to take hold of occasions which very seldom offer themselves; and that the Easter Watchings were not exempt from this Lewdness, and consequently ought to be abolished if his Adversary's Reasons were just. But after all, tho' wicked men abuse good things, it does not follow that the use of them ought to be abolished. His words are. (d) Error autem & culpa juvenum, vilissimarumque mulierum, qui per noctem sæpè deprehenditur, non est religiosis hominibus imputandus; quia & in vigiliis Paschæ tale quid fieri plerumque convincitur: & tamen paucorum culpa non præjudicat religioni; qui & absque vigiliis possunt errare vel in suis, vel in alienis domibus. Apostolorum fidem Judæ proditio non destruxit. Et nostras ergo vigilias malæ aliorum vigiliæ non destruent: quin potius pudicitiæ vigilare cogantur, qui libidini dormiunt. Quod enim fecisse bonum est, non potest malum esse, si frequenter fiat: aut, si aliqua culpa vitanda est, non ex eo, quod sæpè, sed ex eo, quod fit aliquando, culpabile est. Non vigilemus itaque diebus Paschæ; ne expectata diu adulterorum desideria compleantur; ne occasionem peccandi uxor inveniat, ne maritali non possit recludi clave. Ardentius appetitur, quidquid est rarius. It would be very easie to evince the Sophisms in every one of St. Hierom's Arguments, but it is sufficient for me that the event refuted him, and justify'd Vigilantius; for these nocturnal Assemblies were at last abolished, to put a stop to the Impurities there committed. Remember here the Mandate which the Archbishop of Fara Publish'd in 1697, to remedy a like abuse. Let us occasionally observe that the Assemblies of the faithful in the Churches of the Martyrs were exposed to another inconvenience; the Christians brought with them wherewithal to make good cheer, and made themselves drunk. This abuse prevail'd still in Africa in St. Augustin's time; but that Custom had been then abolish'd in several places: Men are so corrupt that even the exercise of Devotion it self is perverted to an occasion of Evil.

(E) Vigilantius had traduced him as a favourer of Origen, and that was at the instigation of Ruffinus.] The Proofs of all this are to be found in Baronius: You will there see (e) that Ruffinus being at Jerusalem, instigated Vigilantius against St. Hierome. You will there find that after Vigilantius's departure from Palestine, he traduced St. Hierome in all places. (f) Dimisisti Ægyptum & cunctas provincias reliquisti in quibus sectam tuam libera plerique fronte defendunt, & elegisti me ad insectandum qui omnia contra Ecclesiam dogmata reprehendo, & publica voce condemno. You will there find that this Sect of Vigilantius has no relation to the particular Opinions, which he did afterwards Publish in Gaul, but to the Calumnies which he dispersed against St. Hierome, whom he accused of Origenism, to impute to him an unequal conduct (g), and a way of proceeding very common among Zealots, who condemn in their Neighbour what they are themselves guilty of. You will there besides find that this Holy Father denies that he accused Vigilantius of Heresy. (h) Unde adversus Ruffinum, illum in se concitantem, ipsemet Hieronymus hæc ait: (1) In Vigilantii nomine quid somnies, nescio. Ubi enim eum scripsi hæretica apud Alexandriam communione maculatum: Da librum, profer epistolam; nusquam omnino reperies; & inferius; Ego in Vigilantio tibi respondi. Eadem enim accusabat, quæ tu postea & amicus laudas, & inimicus accusas, nimirum quod ille diceret Sanctum Hieronymum Origenis errores sectari; nam subdit: Scio a quo illius contra me rabies concitata sit, novi cuniculos tuos. Hæc Sanctus Hieronymus. Agebat enim id astutè Ruffinus, ut esset qui Origenis heresis accusaret Hieronymum, qui ipsum Ruffinum & alios omnes Origenistas

‡ See the last Remark.

(a) Miror sanctum Episcopum, in cujus parochia esse presbyter dicitur, acquiescere furori ejus, & non virgâ Apostolicâ, virgaque ferreâ confringere vas inutile, & tradere in interitum carnis, ut spiritus salvus fiat. Id. epist. ad Riparium pag. 545.

(b) Hieron. advers. Viglant. p. m. 549.

(c) Tota nocte vigilabo, & sociis illius, immò discipulis, vel magistris, qui nisi tumentes uteros viderint feminarum, maritos earum Christi ministerio arbitrantur indignos id ib. pag. 564.

much affrighted him, that he immediately run ſtark naked to a Church (F) for ſhelter. Leaving this Country he took a view of † Egypt, and when he return'd into the Weſt, he ſowed his Opinions amongſt the Gauls. His Sect was of no very long duration; the irruption of the barbarous Nations quaſhed it; the Irruption, I mean which the Barbarians made not long after into that Country, and of which the Errors of this Heretick were the cauſe (G) if we believe the Eccleſiaſtical Annaliſt. I have only two Faults to charge (H) Mr. Moreri with.

† Hieron. epiſt. 75.

VILLAMARINI, (Iſabella) Wife of the Prince of Salerno. See the Remark B in the Article Capucins.

VILLAREAL (Emanuel Fernandes) the Plagiary Author (A) of a Book, which procured him a Penſion from Cardinal Richelieu, was burnt at Lisbon for Judaiſm. He had been Conſul for the Portugueſe Nation at Rouen; and wrote a Book againſt Caramuel whilſt he was in that poſt.

rigeniſtas ejuſdem Origenis errorum inſimularet; ipſumque talionis pœnam ſubire cogeret: ut quem in Origeniſtas ipſe gladium exacuerat, in ſua ſe præcordia convertiſſe non ignoraret. I have cited a Paſſage (a) in which St. Hierome complains, that Vigilantius had traduced him between the Adriatick Sea and the Alps. From all which let us conclude that it was poſſible a Perſonal Reſentment might enflame the Zeal which he ſhewed for the Truth.

(a) In the Rem. C.

(F) He immediately run ſtark naked into a Church for ſhelter.] St. Hierome reproaches him with this Fear, and the diſcovery of his ſhameful parts to the Eyes of the faithful. (b) In hac provincia cum ſubitus terræ motus, noctis medio omnes de ſomno excitaſſet, tu prudentiſſimus & ſapientiſſimus mortalium, nudus orabas, & referebas nobis Adam & Evam de paradiſo. Et illi quidem apertis oculis erubuerunt, nudos ſe eſſe cernentes, & verenda texerunt arborum foliis: tu & tunicâ, & fide nudus, ſubitoque timore perterritus, & aliquid habens nocturnæ crapulæ, ſanctorum oculis obſcœnam partem corporis ingerebas, ut tuam indicares prudentiam. Obſerve that he continually, as well as here, accuſes him of being a Drunkard.

(b) Hieron. adverſ. Vigilant. p.m. 559.

(G) The Errors of this Heretick were the cauſe, if we believe the Eccleſiaſtical Annaliſt.] I mean Baronius. He and an hundred other celebrated Writers have made it a Common place to aſſign Hereſies as the cauſe of the heavy ſtroaks of Divine Juſtice; I mean thoſe ſtroaks which indifferently fall upon the followers of Error, and thoſe who engage againſt it: for Example, the Evils with which the Gauls were loaded, gave no more quarter to the Orthodox than to the Diſciples of Vigilantius. All Parties pleaſe themſelves with this Common place, without (c) remembring that the Pagans made uſe of it againſt the primitive Chriſtians. However we ſhall cite Baronius's words: They inform us that St. Hierome's Books did not ſilence the Followers of Vigilantius: It was requiſite that God ſhould make uſe of other means to repreſs this Hereſie. (d) Porrò quod poſthac ſiluerit infamis hæreſis, nec amplius ad multa ſæcula audita fuerit: haud ſcias brevem illam Hieronymi ſcriptionem eſſe veritam, ut caput tollere amplius auſa non fuerit. Non enim ea eſt natura hæreticorum, ut victi cedere ſciant, & dent manus ratione convicti: ſed proſtrati licet, pertinaciori audaciâ ſurgant, reſtituantque acriora certamina. Sed unde accidit ut ſileret? audi: ( ) Terribilis Deus in conſiliis ſuper filios hominum, vocavit gentes ab extremis terræ: immiſitque in Gallias, in eamque potiſſimum partem graſſari juſſit, in qua hæreſis nefanda plantata eſt; adeo ut ſub barbarico gladio magis de vita tuenda contendere, quàm de dogmatibus licuerit diſputare. Creduntur autem è barbaris illi eſſe ſublati, quorum nulla umquam fuit poſteà vox audita. Ecce tibi quod ſoleant vehere ſecum, vel poſt ſe ducere hæreſes, clades nimirùm provinciarum; quod multis exemplis ſæpe omnibus ſæculis, & hoc ipſo infelicius contigit demonſtrari. Could not Vigilantius's Friends aſſert, that the Gauls were thus afflicted, becauſe they did not embrace the Truths which he declared to them? What Anſwer could they make to them? They would be oblig'd to come to this Theſis, I am in the right, and you are miſtaken. But doth not every one make uſe of this Language? Has not one as much right as another to beg the Queſtion, if ſuch a thing be once allowed? Nothing is then more frivolous than Baronius's Reflections.

(c) See the Article Vergerius Remark I.

(d) Baronius ubi ſupra n. 52. p. m. 310.

(1) Pſalm. 65.

(H) Only two Faults to charge Mr. Moreri with.] The 1ſt is, that he ſaith that St. Paulinus entertained Vigilantius when Sick at Barcelona. He here miſtakes the place, for St. Paulinus's words as cited by Baronius are: (e) Vigilantius quoque noſter in Campania, & antequam ad nos veniret, & poſtquam pervenit vi febrium laboravit, & ægritudini noſtræ qui & ipſe ſociale membrum erat, (f) ſalutivo dolore compaſſus eſt. We don't find there, that St. Paulinus entertained Vigilantius; We are only informed that they were both ſick at the ſame time. I am nevertheleſs willing to believe that St. Paulinus offered the other the civility of his Houſe. His goodneſs, civility and piety perſuade me to it, beſides which he had a great eſteem for Vigilantius, and had (g) been very intimate with him at Barcelona. He recommended him to St. Jerom; and his Letter proved effectual, as appears by theſe words of the Anſwer, (h) S. Vigilantium Presbyterum quâ aviditate ſuſceperim, melius eſt ut ipſius verbis quam meis diſcas literis. St. Jerom credited the Teſtimonial in favour of Vigilantius, contained in the Letter of recommendation. But ſome time after writing againſt him, he ſaid that he repented the credit he had given to Paulinus's Teſtimonial. We ſhall cite this Paſſage ſomewhat at length: (i) Credidi ſancti presbyteri Paulini Epiſtolis, & illius ſuper nomine tuo non putavi errare judicium. Et licet ſtatim accepta epiſtola, ἀσυνάρτητον ſermonem tuum intelligerem: tamen ruſticitatem & ſimplicitatem magis in te arbitrabar, quam vecordiam. Nec reprehendi ſanctum virum: maluit enim apud me diſſimulare quod noverat, quam portitorem clientulum ſuis litteris accuſare. Sed memetipſum arguo, qui alterius potiùs acquievi quam meo judicio; & oculis aliud cernentibus, aliud ſchedulæ credidi, quam videbam. Moreri's 2d Fault is ſaying that Vigilantius called the Miracles wrought at the Tombs of the holy Martyrs, Illuſions. This is to calumniate Vigilantius, and I admire that Baronius hath advanced ſuch a Calumny, ſince he needed only to conſider the words of St. Jerom, which he cites, to be informed that it was falſe. (k) Idem nebulo reſpuens ſanctorum reliquias addebat illud horrendum dictu ſigna apud eas fieri ſolita, dæmonum eſſe præſtigias. This is Baronius's enormous Accuſation levelled at this Heretick, and ſee how he proves it, (l) niſi forte in morem Gentilium, impiorumque Porphyrii & Eunomii has præſtigias dæmonum eſſe confingas. It is clear that theſe words of St. Jerom teſtifie that Vigilantius did not call the Miracles wrought at the Tombs of the Martyrs, Diabolical Deluſions. St. Jerom had not talked as he did, if he had found either in the Book of his Adverſary, or in the declaratory Letters of his Opinions, what Baronius imputes to this pretended Hereſiarch. He had then refuted it as a poſitive Opinion of Vigilantius, and not as a ſubterfuge to which he ſuppoſed he might have recourſe. When one anticipates an Objection, when one ſpeaks thus to one's Adverſary, perhaps you will alledge ſuch a thing, how do I know that you will not affirm as the Heathens did, &c. it is certain that the Adverſary hath ſaid no ſuch thing. Obſerve, that Baronius's Calumny is to be found in many Authors. Lindanus had already advanced it. I cite him to ſhew his want of judgment. (m) Porphyrius, Eunomius, Euſtathius, Vigilantius aliique Hagiomaſtiges ſanctorum miracula ajebant eſſe dæmonum præſtigias. Prateolus adopts (n) this whole Paſſage, as doth the Jeſuite Gaultier (o) under the Shelter of Prateolus. But what more ſurprizes me is, to ſee that Mr. Godeau (p) has aſſerted this Calumny. Mr. Moreri took it from him.

(e) Paulinus epiſt. 1. ad Severum apud Baron. ubi ſupra n. 42. pag. 324.

(f) In ſome Manuſcripts 'tis fetido.

(g) Baronius ibid.

(h) Hieronym. epiſt. 13. apud Baron. ib.

(i) Idem. epiſt. 75. apud eumd. Baroniumib. n. 41. pag. 324, 325.

(k) Baronius ibid. 50. pag. 329.

(l) Hieron. adverſ. Vigilant. apud Baron. ibid.

(m) Lindanus in Dubitantii dialogo 2. p.m. 207.

(n) Prateolus in elencho hæreſ. pag. m. 512.

(o) In tabula Chronograph. p. m. 372.

(p) Godeau Hiſtoire de l'Egliſe ad ann 406.

(A) The Plagiary Author—— was burnt.] All which particulars I learn from Mr. le Laboureur: He relates them immediately after an Obſervation which he had made againſt the Genealogiſts, who Publiſhed, that Cardinal Richelieu was deſcended from the Marriage of Guyonne de Laval with Francis du Pleſſis. He proves it a Falſity, and conſequently, adds he, (q) the whole Book ought to be ſuppreſſed, which was written in Spaniſh by a Portugueſe named Ville-Real, afterwards burnt for Judaiſm at Lisbon; a famous (q) Le Laboureur, Addit. to Caſtelnau's Memoirs, tom. 2. p. 303.

VILLAVICENTIUS (Lawrence) a Religious of the Order of Saint Auguſtin, and Preacher to Philip the II. King of Spain, was born at Xerez in Andaluſia. He continued a long time in the Low Countries, and took his Degree of Doctor of Divinity at Louvain, before he was call'd to the Court, in order to be Preacher to the King of Spain †. In 1561 he made his laſt Viſit in the Province of the Lower Germany, of which he was Vicar General *. We have already || ſpoken of ſome of his Writings, which coſt him only the trouble of cutting off from the Works of other Authors, what did not favour enough of Catholiciſm. We are not certain that he had a Share even in that manner, in all the other Works attributed to him. He flouriſhed β 'till 1581.

VILLEGAIGNON (Nicolas Durand de) a Knight of Malta, a γ Native of Provins in Brie, ſerved a long ſpace of time in the Gallies, and was in ſeveral Naval Expeditions, ſo that having beſides (A) ſome Learning, he render'd himſelf conſiderable as a Perſon of Merit, and was δ promoted to the Vice-Admiralty of Bretagne, in the Reign of Henry II. He quarrelled with the Governour of the Caſtle of Breſt, and fearing the conſequences † of this difference, he thought of an Enterprize, which frequently ſerves for an Epiſode in Controverſial Books, and which is mention'd by (B) Mr. Maimbourg. He reſolved to eſtabliſh a Colony in Braſil, and knowing † Andr. Schottus, Biblioth. Hiſpan. pag. 265.

* Elſſius Encomiaſtic. Auguſtin. pag. 428.
|| In the Remark C. of the Article Hyperius.
β Id. ib.
γ Theod. Beza, Hiſt. Eccleſiaſt. Book 2. pag. 158.
δ Id. ib.
† Id. ib.

Plagiary, who copied from du Cheſne, in order to make Cardinal Richelieu deſcend by the Alliance of Laval, from the Kings of Caſtile and Portugal, for which ſervice he enjoyed a good Penſion. I wonder that Don Nicolas Antonius ſaith nothing concerning the Tragical death of this Author; he (b) contents himſelf with giving the Titles of the two Pieces mentioned in the Text of this Article, and obſerves that they were written whilſt the Author was Conſul for the Portugueſe Merchants at Rouen. The firſt of theſe Books is entitl'd, (c) El Politico Chriſtiano, ò diſcurſo Politico de la Vida y acciones del Cardinal de Richelieu: And the other, (d) Anticaramuel, ò defenſa del manifeſto del Reino de Portugal. See the Anti (e) of Mr. Baillet.

(A) Having beſides ſome Learning. "(f) Which is "very rare in Perſons of his Condition, he was very "well verſed in Polite Literature, as appears by his "beautiful Latin Deſcription of the unfortunate "Algerine Expedition, in which he was wounded, "in the Service of Charles V. who was then in Peace "with France." Mr. Maimbourg adds in the Margin, that this Deſcription is inſerted in the 2d. Tome of the Hiſtorical Pieces which Schardius hath collected. He might have told us that it was Printed alone (g) at Straſburg in 1542, in 8vo. His Treatiſe de Bello Melitenſi & ejus eventu Francis impoſito, was Printed at Paris by Robert Stephens in 1553, in Quarto. La Croix du Maine (h) ſaith that the ſame Piece was Printed in French, in the ſame Place and Year, by Charles Stephens. I ſhall ſay ſomething below concerning Villegaignon's Controverſial Works. John de Leri tells us: (i) That he never heard a Man talk better concerning Religion, and a Chriſtian Reformation than he.

(B) Which is mention'd by Mr. Maimbourg.] What he ſays of it in the ſecond Book of his Hiſtory of Calviniſm, hath ſerved as an Original to the Continuator of Moreri. I ſhould then have a very particular right to examin it, but the Continuator hath taken nothing which I deſire to contradict. I ſhall only obſerve, 1. That the Dutch Editions have falſly Changed the Date of 1557. into 1558. concerning the arrival of the Geneveſe at the Iſle of Coligni. 2. That Mr. Moreri had no reaſon to ſay that Villegaignon did not return into the Romiſh Communion till after he came back into France. But to come to Mr. Maimbourg: His firſt Lie is ſaying (k) That there was alſo a Diviſion betwixt the Proteſtants, and even amongſt the Miniſters themſelves; for, adds he, ſome would have the Lord's Supper adminiſtred according to the Roman manner, as Jeſus Chriſt had inſtituted it, with unleavened Bread; and others affirmed that it ought to be celebrated in the Greek manner with leavened Bread. The former would retain the Ceremonies of the Catholick Church, and the other rejected them as Superſtitious. He cites the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of the Reformed Churches, and that alone confounds him; for we find there that it was Villegaignon and a Student of Sorbonne only who raiſed the Diſpute. "(l) A Perſon named John Cointat, a Student of Sorbonne, ſecretly aſpiring after I know not what Epiſcopal Dignity as fantaſtical as Villegaignon's Kingdom, "came on the day appointed for the celebration of "the Lord's Supper, asked where the ſacerdotal Habits were, and began to diſpute concerning unleavened Bread, which he ſaid was neceſſary, as well "as to mix Water with the Wine, and other ſuch "like Objections he raiſed. Nevertheleſs the "Sacrament was adminiſtred according to the plain "Ordinance of Jeſus Chriſt, and as it is in the Reformed Churches of France: But the difference ſtill "grew, and came to ſuch a pitch that Richer celebrating the Sacrament of Baptiſm and Condemning "the additional Superſtitions, Villegaignon aloud "gave the lye to the Miniſter, proteſting that he "would come no more to his Sermons, nor adhere "to the Calviniſtical Sect, as he call'd it." The ſecond Falſity is ſaying that (m) the Miniſter Richer aſſerted againſt the Calviniſts, that JESUS CHRIST ought not to be either adored or invoked, and that the Lord's Supper or Euchariſt, in what manner ſoever we there receive the Body of Jeſus Chriſt, doth not at all conduce to the good of the Communicants. I have elſewhere mention'd (n) the particular Opinions imputed to this Miniſter. It is eaſie to perceive that he only taught that JESUS CHRIST's Humanity, being a Creature, ought neither to be adored nor invoked; but this doth not ſignifie that JESUS CHRIST (o) both God and Man, ought not to be adored, and invoked. If Peter Richer had embraced the Opinions which Mr. Maimbourg charges on him, Calvin had cauſed him to be ignominiouſly depoſed: Nor am I ſure that he would not have been forced to undergo a more rigorous puniſhment; for he would have been looked on as a wretched Anti-Trinitarian; but we know he was reſpected as a worthy Miniſter of the Goſpel after (p) his return from Braſil. Obſerve that Gaultier the Jeſuit doth not charge him with this monſtrous Opinion concerning the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper which Maimbourg ſpeaks of. The 3d. Falſity is his ſaying (q) that continuing to preach his Blaſphemies Villegaignon gave him the Lye. The Author whom he (r) cites, ſaith expreſly that the Lye which was given, only regarded the Miniſters condemnation of thoſe Superſtitions which the Papiſts have (s) added to Baptiſm.

The Miniſter who anſwered Maimbourg, ſhould have cenſured this part of his Hiſtory of Calviniſm thus; but inſtead of handling him in this manner, he hath amuſed himſelf with obſerving, 1. That (t) Admiral de Coligni caſt his Eyes on Villegaignon in order to ſend him to prepare a retreat in America for the Proteſtants. 2. That Villegaignon promiſed to grant them liberty of Conſcience. 3. That after having kept his Word for ſome time, he hanged, drowned, and threw into the Sea all thoſe who would not follow his Apoſtacy. 4. That he confined others to a moving Priſon, which was an old rotten Ship, without Proviſions and Arms, to which he ſent as many of the Reformed as he could ſtow there. The firſt of theſe four things is contradicted by Beza, and John de Leri, who aſſure us that Villegaignon was the firſt that made this Overture to the Admiral. They alſo affirm that he promiſed to endeavour, to the utmoſt of his power, the advancement of the Kingdom of God in that Country, and that he would publickly declare himſelf a good Proteſtant. This confutes the ſecond particular, according to which Villegaignon is a Catholick who promiſes to tolerate the Proteſtants. The Third is a Lye, which as juſtly at leaſt deſerves to be condemned as thoſe of Maimbourg; for it appears by John de Leri's Relation, 1. That Villegaignon puniſhed with Death only (u) three Proteſtants, who return'd into his Iſland after the departure of the Genevois. 2. That he (x) neither durſt nor could hinder the Miniſters from preaching nor uſe any Authority (y) with reſpect to the Genevois. 3. That if he was cruel or barbarous, it was either

(b) Nicol. Antonius, Biblioth. Scriptor. Hiſp. tom. 1. pag. 267.
(c) It was tranſlated into French and Printed at Paris in 1643. in 4. Id. ib.
(d) It was Printed at Paris in 1643. Id. ibid.
(e) In the 2d tome pag. 105.
(f) Maimbourg, Hiſt. du Calviniſme B. 2. p. 100. Dutch Edit.
(g) Du Verdier, Biblioth. Franc. pag. 909.
(h) La Croix du Maine, Biblioth. Franc. pag. 342.
(i) Jean de Leri, Hiſt. d'un voiage fait au Breſil ch. 6. pag. m. 58.
(k) Maim. ubi ſupra pag. 103.
(l) Beza, Hiſt. eccleſ. B. 2. pag. 160.
(m) Maim. ibid.
(n) In the Remark C. of the Article Richer.
(o) See the Paſſage which I have produced out of Mr. Saurin in the Remark C. of the Article Richer.
(p) See the Remark A of that Article.
(q) Maim. ubi ſupra pag. 104.
(r) Beza ubi ſupra.
(s) That is, their mixing Salt and Oil with Water. See John de Leri ubi ſupra pag. 73.
(t) Jurieu, Apolog. pour la Reformat. tom. 1. p. 552.
(u) See the Remark E.
(x) Leri, ubi ſupra pag. 82.
(y) See the Remark

knowing that Admiral de Colligni favoured the Reformed Religion, he gave him to underſtand that his Deſign was to advance the Kingdom of God in that Country, and procure a Refuge for the Faithful who were perſecuted in France. The Admiral with his accuſtomed Prudence concealed this excellent Motive from Henry II. and only repreſenting this Enterprize on the ſide of the Advantages it might bring to this Realm, obtained two large Ships well equipped for Villegaignon, beſides the Sum of ten Thouſand Livres †. This Knight embarked α the 15th of July 1555, and in November following arrived β at the Mouth of the River Ganabara, in the 23d Degree of South Latitude. He endeavoured to Plant his Colony in the firm Land, γ but ſeveral Reaſons engaged him to retire into an Iſle which he called A Colligni in honour of the Admiral. He appear'd extraordinary Zealous δ for the Reformed Religion, for moſt of thoſe who followed him were Proteſtants, who made this Voyage on no other account than the hopes which he had given them of carrying on the Work of God, and procuring for themſelves that Liberty of Conſcience which Henry II. deprived them of. He wrote to ζ the Church of Geneva by the returning Ships, to deſire ſome Miniſters and other Perſons, who might ſucceſsfully labour in the Inſtruction of the Savages. His Letter being read, η they firſt of all gave thanks to God for the amplification of Chriſt's Kingdom in ſuch a diſtant Country, and afterwards choſe two Miniſters, Peter Richier, and William Chartier, who with ſome other Perſons Proper for his Intentions were ſent to him. They θ departed from Geneva the 10th of September 1556, and embarked at Honfleur ι the 19th of November of the ſame Year, and κ Landed in the Iſland of Colligni the 10th of March 1657. Richier preached the ſame Day, and Villegaignon heard him λ ſhewing ſome Marks of an extraordinary Zeal. Some days after, the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was celebrated, and he was obſerved to Communicate very devoutly, after he had recited two long μ Prayers, ſo fervent that no Miniſter could have dictated better. It was however perceiv'd that all this was but appearance, and that he only deſir'd to act the Controverſiſt; for he and one Conta who had ſtudied in the Sorbonne, fell a diſputing concerning the Real Preſence. They maintain'd ν that though Tranſubſtantiation and Conſubſtantiation were abſurd Doctrines, it was nevertheleſs true, that the Body of JESUS CHRIST was included in the Signs of the Euchariſt. It was agreed ξ that this Diſpute ſhould be referred to the Deciſion of the German and French Churches, and that Chartier the Miniſter ſhould be ſent into Europe to conſult them. Villegaignon engaged to ſubmit to this Deciſion, and (C) particularly to the Opinion of ο John Calvin, for whom he pretended a great reſpect. He contrived * new Cavils, when the Adminiſtration of the Sacrament came on the ſecond time, and at the Expiration of ſome Days, publickly declared that he had changed his Opinion, and without expecting the Anſwer which he had ſent Chartier the Miniſter to France in queſt of, he declared that Calvin was a wicked Heretick ‖. From that time † they gave the Sacrament by Night unknown to him, and ſome told him that they would no longer depend on him. They were thoſe who followed the two Miniſters of Geneva. He was not ſtrong enough to force them to obey his Orders, and therefore contented himſelf

‡ Id. ib. pag. [illegible]

α Id. ib. [illegible]

β [illegible]

γ Id. ib. [illegible]

δ Id. ib. [illegible]

ζ Id. ib. [illegible]

η [illegible]

δ Leri, ubi ſupra, chap. 7. p. 83.

ε Leri ib. ch. 6. & ſeq.

ζ Id. ib. pag. 4.

η Ibid. pag. 5.

θ Ibid. pag. 7.

ι Ibid. pag. 8.

κ Ibid. chap. 6. p. 55.

λ See the Article Richer.

μ You'll find 'em at length in ξ Leri, pag 69. & ſeq.

ο Id. ib. pag. 69.

§ Beza ubi ſupra pag. 160.

ο Leri ubi ſupra pag. 68.

* Id. ib. pag. 71.

‖ Id. ib. p. 76.

† Ibid. pag. 82.

(a) either towards the Savages or his Domeſticks, or thoſe who violated his Laws; Religion had no hand in this. The 4th is no leſs falſe than the precedent, ſince John de Leri averrs, (b) that he and the others who returned into France in this old Ship, treated with the (c) Maſter thereof for the expences of their Paſſage, without Villegaignon's interpoſing in the leaſt, and that when they were out of his Iſland and Juriſdiction. Compare with this the Remark D towards the end. Beſides, this Adverſary of Maimbourg hath ill gloſſed this Paſſage: He eaſily rid himſelf of all the Proteſtants, who would not follow his Example. This is plainly enough to confeſs, ſaith he, that he was their cruel Executioner. But we ſhall ſee hereafter that (d) John de Leri acknowledges, that during the time the Genevois ſtaid in the Iſle of Coligny, no French Man was put to death, and that after their departure, Villegaignon cauſed only three (e) Proteſtants to be put to death. Theſe were part of thoſe five, who after they had Embarked with Richer, John de Leri, &c. choſe rather to return to Braſil than continue their Voyage. But ſince Villegaignon ſpared the Lives of the two others, it ſeems probable either that theſe three did not ſuffer Death barely for their Religion, or that the remaining two apoſtatized, which no Author that I know of has mention'd. No Body can ſay that I ſet up for a Defender of Villegaignon; have not I related whatever John de Leri hath ſaid againſt him? But the Laws of Hiſtory will by no means ſuffer me to be ſilent concerning Falſities Publiſhed againſt any perſon whatſoever.

Farther, if the Subject were not too ſerious and Melancholy, could one read without Laughing, that a Man cauſed ALL thoſe to be put to death who would not follow the Example of his Apoſtacy, and put the reſt on board of a Veſſel? Who ſays all, excepts no body. To make ſenſe of theſe words, the reſt ſhould have apoſtatized as well as he, than which nothing is more falſe; as the ſequel of this Author's Diſcourſe ſufficiently proves. We need ſay no more of this Author than that he wrote with a great deal of precipitancy, and without knowing what he ſaid the greateſt part of the time.

(C) Particularly to the Opinion of John Calvin, for whom he pretended a great reſpect.] Calvin wrote a Letter to him by the two Miniſters who were ſent to him. Villegaignon anſwered him in Latin, (f) and not only informed him at large of his condition in general, but particularly wrote to him with his own hand of what follows. "I add the advice which you "have given me by your Letters, uſing my utmoſt en"deavours not to depart from it in the leaſt. For "indeed I am fully perſuaded, that no way can be "more holy, juſt and perfect. Wherefore we have cau"ſed your Letters to be read in the Aſſembly of our "Council, and after that Regiſtred, in order that "if we ſhould ever turn out of the right way, we may "be recalled by the reading of them, and redreſs that "Error." John de Leri adds: (g) Nicolas Carmeau who was the Bearer of theſe Letters ——— taking leave of us told me, that Villegagnon had commanded him to ſay by word of Mouth to Calvin, that he begged of him to believe that to perpetuate the Memory of the Counſel he had given him, he would cauſe it to be engraven on Copper. I have frequently heard him, ſays John de Leri, "(h) reiterate the following Expreſſion: Mr. Calvin is "one of the moſt Learned Men ſince the time of the "Apoſtles; nor have I read any Doctor, who in my Opi"nion, hath more purely explain'd the Holy Scrip"ture." Theodorus Beza (i) tells us that Villegaignon cauſed thoſe Letters which came from Geneva to be Regiſter'd in the Rolls of his Imaginary Realm. He is miſtaken in the Date of Villegaignon's Anſwer, which he

(a) Leri ib. p. 77. & ſeq. item p. 85.

(b) Id. ib. chap. 6. pag. 84. & ch. 21. pag. 339.

(c) He was not a Native of Bretagne, as Beza ſays ubi ſupra pag. 160. he was born at Havre de Grace.

(d) In the Remark H. at the end.

(e) See the Remark E.

(f) Leri ubi ſupra chap. 6. pag. 68.

(g) Id. ib. pag. 69.

(h) Id. ib. pag. 68.

(i) Beza ubi ſupra pag. 159.

himſelf with Commanding them to leave his Iſland. They could with Impunity have diſobeyed (D) him, but they thought it more proper to return. And † accordingly they imbarked the 4th of January 1558, and arrived at Port de Blavet the 26 of May * following. The Horrible Miſery and ſcarcity of Proviſions which they endured during this Voyage is deſcribed by John de Leri, who, being one of them, publiſhed a Relation of it. Villegaignon, who as ſome Writers ſay, (E) was the cauſe of this Famine, was Guilty of a much more Villanous deſign againſt them, which they happily eſcaped. He alſo afterwards returned into France, without taking any care ‖ of his Fort de Colligni, which the Portugueze ſeized, and tranſported the Artillery to Lisbon. At his return he engaged in a vehement Paper War againſt the (F) Proteſtants. They alſo on the other ſide wrote againſt him in ſuch a manner as did not much turn to his Advantage. He dyed ‡ in a Malteſe Commandery near St. John de Nemours, and managed his Affairs ſo ill, as well during his ſickneſs as before, and was ſo ſet againſt his Relations, that they reaped no Advantage from his Eſtate, neither in his life nor after his Death. Some of his Adverſaries he fixes on the 14th of February 1557, inſtead of the (c) laſt of March; and ſince he had juſt told us, that the Genevois arrived the 7th of March 1557, it was eaſy for him to ſee that the Anſwer to the Letters which they brought with them could not be dated the laſt of February 1557. I only obſerve this in order to diſcover the Errors and Confuſions into which the greateſt Authors and the beſt Correctors ſometimes fall. Thoſe of the lower Rank are not ſo ſubject to them; nevertheleſs I am very much afraid that ſome of them will be found in this Dictionary.

(D) They could with Impunity have diſobeyed him but they thought it more proper to return.] The Genevois having ſignifyed to him that (*) ſince he rejected the Goſpel, they were not willing to continue any longer in his Service, he cauſed the two Goblets of Meal of Roots, which was dayly diſtributed to them, to be withheld. They were very glad of this refuſal, becauſe it intirely rid them of any Subjection to him. If he had been ſtrongeſt, and if part of his People, and even ſome of the chief, had not taken their part, He had endeavoured without Doubt to ſubdue them by force. He deſigned one day to put John de Leri and another in Irons, under pretence that, notwithſtanding his order, they went out of the Iſland without his leave. He pretended to be Ignorant that his Lieutenant had permitted this Voyage. (a) They plainly declared that they would not ſuffer it, after which he grew milder. The chief of their Reaſons was that they had made known to him, that ſince he had broken his promiſe of maintaining the Exerciſe of the Evangelical Religion, they could no longer depend on him ——— The chief of his People being of our Religion, ſaith John de Leri (b), and conſequently diſſatisfied with him on account of his Apoſtacy; if we had not been apprehenſive that the Admiral, who under the King's Authority (as I ſaid in the beginning) had ſent him, and was as yet ignorant of his Carriage, might have taken it ill, ſome of us would very fain have thrown him into the Sea, that his Fleſh and brawny Shoulders might have ſerved as Food for the Fiſh. (c) About the end of October, he told them that he would no longer bear with them, and commanded them to depart his Iſland. It is indeed true, adds John de Leri (d), That if we had pleaſed we were able to have driven him out our ſelves: But as well to deprive him of any juſt reaſon of Complaint againſt us, as becauſe France and other Nations, knowing that we came hither only to enjoy the free uſe of the Goſpel, we would not caſt any Scandal upon it, we choſe rather to Obey Villegaignon, and without any farther Conteſt quit the Place to him.

From all which we may conclude, that a certain Author whom I have already Cenſured, was not very well informed, when he tells us that Villegaignon (e) ſhut them up in a floating Priſon, and that they preferred Embarking in a Leaky Veſſel on the moſt Treacherous of the four Elements, to ſtaying any longer expoſed to the Fury of this Mercileſs Tyger, who was more faithleſs than the Sea.

(E) Villegaignon, who as ſome Writers ſay, was the cauſe of this Famine, was guilty of a much more Villanous deſign againſt them.] Theodorus Beza (f) aſſures us that he ſo managed it, that the Maſter of the Veſſel had not one fourth part of the Proviſions neceſſary for his Voyage, hoping by this means that they would Die of Hunger and other Miſeries, before they arrived at their intended Port. Mr. Jurieu avers (g) the ſame thing, but John de Leri ſaith nothing of it: And he certainly was as well acquainted with this Affair as any Perſon, and much better than any other not concerned in it, and he was not likely to ſpare Villegaignon. As for the other Perfidiouſneſs, let us ſee how he relates it: "(h) Villegaignon not only ſent us our Licenſe to depart, Signed by himſelf; but alſo wrote to the Maſter of the Ship, to Advertiſe him that he ſhould make no difficulty of carrying us on his Account: For, ſaid he, (fraudently) as I was very glad of their Arrival, hoping to have met with what I aimed at; ſo ſince we cannot agree together, I am content that they return. So that under this fair pretext he had contrived a moſt Villanous Piece of Treachery; for having given the Maſter of the Veſſel a little Cheſt, covered with oiled Cloth in the Sea faſhion, and filled with Letters to ſeveral Perſons, he had amongſt them put in a formal Proceſs or Accuſation againſt us, recommended to the firſt Judge to whoſe Hands it ſhould come in France, with direction to ſtop and burn us as Hereticks, which he ſaid we were." The Divine Providence turned this infamous Treachery to the advantage of thoſe good Men: For their Leader (i) being acquainted with ſeveral of the Juſtitiary Officers of Bretagne, who were favourably enclined to the Religion which we profeſſed, gave them the Cheſt which contained the Letters and Accuſation, who after they ſaw the Contents of it were ſo far from treating us according to Villegaignon's deſire, that on the contrary they entertained us as well as they poſſibly could, and kindly offered to ſupply the wants of thoſe of our Company who were Neceſſitous, and lent Money to our Conductor, and ſeveral others. Here I ought to take notice of the three Proteſtant Martyrs whom Villegaignon put to Death. Five of the Genevois after the firſt danger of Shipwrack (k) choſe rather to return to Braſil in a Bark which was given them, than to ſtay in the Veſſel. With a great deal of difficulty they regained the Coaſt of America, and Villegaignon cauſed three of them to be Drowned on account of their Religion. Some very creditable Eye-witneſſes of this Fact, (l) put the Confeſſion of theſe Martyrs, and the whole Proceedings of Villegaignon in Writing, which John de Leri (m) having received the ſame Year 1558, ſent to John Creſpin a Printer, who inſerted it in his fifth Book of Martyrs.

(F) Paper War ——— againſt the Proteſtants. They alſo wrote againſt him.] Of which Du Verdier Vau-Privas gives me the following Catalogue: (n) An Anſwer to the Remonſtrances made to the Queen Mother, Printed at Paris in the Year 1561, in 4°. The controverted Propoſitions betwixt the Chevalier de Villegaignon, and John Calvin, concerning the Truth of the Holy Euchariſt, Paris 1562. in 4°. The Chevalier de Villegaignon's Anſwer to John Calvin's Reſolution concerning the Sacraments. Paris 1562. An Anſwer to the Libels and publick Calumnies againſt him, firſt Printed: At Paris, and afterwards at Lyons in the Year 1561. De Cœna controverſia Phil. Melancbth. judicio: at Paris 1561. in 4°. Liber ad articulos Calvinianos: at Venice 1565. De conſecratione myſtici ſacramenti, & duplici Chriſti oblatione adverſus Vannium Lutherologiæ profeſſorem: De Judaici paſchatis implemento adverſus Calvinologos: De poculo ſanguinis Chriſti, & introitu in ſancta ſanctorum

† Leri, [illegible]

* Idem, chap. 22. pag. 377.

‖ [illegible]

‡ Leri ubi ſupra pag. [illegible]

(c) Leri ubi ſupra pag. 57.

* Ibid. pag. 80.

(a) Ibid. pag. 81.

(b) Id. ib. pag. 82.

(c) Ibid. pag. 83.

(d) Ibid. pag. 84.

(e) Jurieu ubi ſupra pa. 553.

(f) Beza ubi ſupra pag. 160.

(g) Jurieu ibid.

(h) Leri chap. [illegible] pag. [illegible]

(i) Idem chap. 22. pag. 377.

(k) Idem chap. 21. pag. 346.

(l) Idem chap. 22. pag. 379.

(m) Ibid. pag. 380. See alſo Beza ubi ſupra pag. 161.

(n) Du Verdier, Bibl. Franc. pag. [illegible]

Adverſaries have owned (G) that he did not debauch with any of the Female Savages of America: An Elogy which ſeveral Governors in that Country have no pretence to. I ſhall obſerve ſome faults in (H) Thevet.

VILLENA

fuſilorum adverſus Regem; at Paris 1563. His Adverſaries of the Reformed Religion, continues du Verdier, wrote Defamatory Libels againſt him, of which were La ſuffiſance de Maiſtre Colas Durant, Alias Eſpouſette de ſes Armoiries, and ſeveral others. See the Article Richer.

I have ſeen only three of his Books, viz. Ad articulos Calvinianæ, de ſacramento Euchariſtiæ, traditionis ab ejus Miniſtris in Francia Antarctica evulgata Reſponſiones, per Nicolaum Villegagnonem Equitem Rhodium, ad Eccleſiam Chriſtianam: Printed at Paris by Andrew Wechel, 1560. in 4°. De Cœna controverſiæ Philippi Melanchthonis judicia: Printed at Paris by the ſame Wechel, 1561 in 4°. The Chevalier de Villegaignon's Paraphraſe on Mr. Calvin's Reſolution concerning the Sacraments: Printed at Paris by Wechel, in 1561. in 4°. All theſe three Books are extraordinary well Printed.

(G) That he did not Debauch with any of the Female Savages.] "(a) Not to conceal any more what redounds to his Praiſe than what tends to his Diſcredit, I ſhall by the way inform you that certain Normans who eſcaped Shipwrack, long before he came into that Country, living very Impiouſly, and committing all manner of Lewdneſs with the Female Savages, (by whom I knew ſome had Children four or five Years old,) in order to ſuppreſs this Abuſe and prevent it for the Future, Villegaignon, with advice of his Council, prohibited any profeſſed Chriſtians Habitation with the Female Savages on pain of Death. But if any of them were Converted and Baptized, the Marrying of them was hereby freely permitted.——— (b) As this Law was doubly founded on the word of God, it was alſo ſo well obſerved, that Villegaignon's People and ours religiouſly and ſtrictly abſtained from any ſuch Pollution; and tho' ſince my return I heard that he was guilty of a Lewdneſs of that nature, I bear him Witneſs that he was not ſuſpected to be ſo whilſt I was there. And further, he ſo ſtrictly obſerved this Ordinance, that it was not without the moſt preſſing Inſtances of ſeveral of his chiefeſt Favourites, that he ſo far mitigated the Puniſhment of an Interpreter, who had committed this Crime with a Female Savage whom he had formerly Debauched, as to get him tied by the Leg and condemn him to Slavery; for Villegaignon would have had him Hanged. And as far as I know of him, he was very ſtrict in this particular, as well with regard to himſelf as others, and was really to be commended for it." I have cited this long Paſſage to make way for two Remarks: Firſt, that we ought to be very cautious how we give credit to ill Reports of Men. How many are there who believe what hath been ſaid of Villegaignon's Impurities, and nevertheleſs he is acquitted of them by the Evidence of a Perſon, who very far from ſparing him, would have been fond of uttering all the diſadvantageous Truths againſt him. My ſecond Obſervation is that there is no Paſſion either more Incorrigible or Brutal than that of Uncleanneſs. All Chriſtians know that the Law of God forbids their impure Commerce with Infidel Women: And they are Educated in Principles which inſpire Horrour at the thoughts of ſuch an Intercourſe. Humane Laws, which puniſh this Crime, fortify the Impreſſions of Education. And yet to what degrees of Impurity hath not the Laſciviouſneſs of the diſcoverers of the new World tranſported them? Could the ſhocking Deformity and Barbarity of the Savages, ever reſtrain Men from this Crime, tho' prohibited by Divine and Humane Laws? Let's go no farther than John de Leri's Relation. Are we not there informed that ſome Normans eſcaping a Shipwrack, gave themſelves over to this Vice, and obliged Villegaignon to make a Law in order to puniſh this Crime with Death, which could not yet prevent the Commiſſion of it by this Interpreter. If we conſult other Relations we ſhall find the ſame Puniſhment was requiſite to prevent Men from defiling themſelves with certain Amphibious Animals, which in ſome ſort reſemble Women. A horrible Depravation, an incorrigible Paſſion, which hurries Men on to the Commiſſion of the Sin againſt Nature, and Beſtiality (c); and prompts to a Laſcivious Commerce with dead Bodies. Herodotus (d) informs us, that after it was diſcovered that one of the Embalmers of dead Bodies, had Defiled himſelf with a Woman a little while after her Death, they kept the (e) Corps of Beautiful Women three or four Days before they truſted them in the hands of thoſe Men.

(H) Some faults in Thevet.] Let us firſt of all lay down this Foundation. In the Year 1558 a Book was Printed Entituled, les Singularitez de l'Amerique digeſted into order by Mr. de la Porte, according to the Memoirs of Brother Andrew Thevet. By which it plainly appears that (f) Thevet arrived at Cape de Frie on the 10th of November 1555. and four Days after at the River of Ganabara, from whence he departed the 31ſt of January following in order to go for France. From which it follows that he is in the wrong when he avers in the 21. Book of his Coſmography, Printed in 1575. that the Factiouſneſs of four Miniſters of the new Religion, the Chief of which was Richier, raiſed a Sedition, which expoſed ſome of the Mutineers to capital Puniſhment, that the reſt, and namely Richier eſcaped, and that the Savages irritated by this Tragedy, deſigned to put the remainder to Death. He reckons himſelf amongſt thoſe who were in this danger: We narrowly eſcaped their Revenging it on us, ſaith he. He tells us in another place (h) that he quitted the Enterpriſe of Converting the Natives, as well becauſe he was not well verſed in their Language, as on account that the Calviniſt Miniſters undertook this Charge, envying my deſign, ſays he. Theſe two Paſſages ſhew that he pretends to have been there whilſt the Geneva Miniſters were there. But it is a notorious Falſity. For they did not Arrive there till March 1557. and he left that place the 31 of January 1556. and he himſelf refutes thoſe who would have us believe that he made a Second Voyage; to which purpoſe liſten to his own Words: I very much wonder what excited Calvin to tax me in his Apology Printed at Geneva, with being one of the Principal abetters of the Death of theſe ſaid Miniſters whom the Sieur de Villegaignon cauſed to be thrown into the Sea, ſince that was done three Years or thereabouts after my return into France, as appears by my Book of the Rarities, &c. which is a ſufficient Evidence in point of time, beſides ſeveral other of my Writings. He confeſſes therefore that from the 31. of January to the time that Villegaignon cauſed ſome Hereticks to be drowned he was abſent from that Country. Conſequently he was not there, during the Sojournment of the Genevois there, which was from March 1557. till towards the end of the Year. His own words diſcover therefore that he was, and was not there. Not to take notice of his other Falſities, it is not true that thoſe whom Villegaignon cauſed to be drowned were Miniſters, nor that there were above two Miniſters ſent from Geneva or any other place. I ſhall only obſerve, the better to convict his Impoſtures, that the Sedition he ſpeaks of preceded the Arrival of Peter Richier, and that Richier was the firſt Miniſter who ever ſaw Villegaignon in his Iſle of Colligni. The proof of all which is drawn from the Letter which the ſaid Villegaignon wrote to Calvin on the 31 of March 1557. In which he declares (i) that Richier and his Brethren found him reduced to that extremity that he was obliged alternatively to perform the Offices of Magiſtrate and Miniſter, which, adds he, put me in great anguiſh; for the Example of King Uzziah was ſufficient to deterr me from this Practice. He there relates the conſpiracy formed againſt him, and how the Authors of it were diſcovered and puniſhed.

John de Leri (k) made a good uſe of thoſe Arguments againſt Thevet, and proved that during the ſtay

(a) John de Leri chap. 6. pag. 71.

(b) Ibid. pag. 72.

(e) Τὄτο δὲ ποιεῦσι ἕνεκα τοῦδε, ἵνα μή σφι οἱ ταριχευταὶ μίσγωνται τῇσι γυναιξὶ· ἁλῶναι γάρ τινα φασὶ μισγόμενον νεκρῷ προσφάτῳ γυναικός. κατειπεῖν δὲ τὸν ὁμότεχνον. Ea de caussa facientes, ne cum feminis iſti ſalitores concumbant. Deprehenſum enim quendam aiunt coeuntem cum recenti cadavere muliebri, delatumque ab ejuſdem artificii ſocio. Id. Ibid.

(f) See John de Leri's preface: He quotes the 1. 24. 25. and 60. Chapters of thoſe Singularities.

(g) Thevet, Coſmographie univerſelle B. 21. fol. 909.

(h) Id. ib. chap. 8. fol. 925.

(i) Villegaignon's letter to Calvin apud. John de Leri in præfat.

(k) Leri in his Preface.

VILLENA, a Marquiſate (A) on the Confines of new Caſtile and of the Kingdoms of Murcia and Valencia, did belong to Don John Emanuel § the moſt potent Lord in Spain next to the King in the XIV. Century. He had a Daughter, who in the Year 1350. ‖ Married Don Henry Count de Tranſtamare, natural ſon of Don Alfonſo the XI. King of Caſtile. The Count becoming King of Caſtile by the depoſition of Don Pedro the Cruel β in the Year 1336. gave the Marquiſate of Villena to Don Alfonſo of Arragon γ Count of Denia, and Nephew to the King of Arragon. This New Marquis of Villena grew very great. King John the firſt being deſirous to make a Conſtable in his Kingdom of Caſtile, as there was one in France, and another in Arragon, Created that Dignity in the Year 1382. and conferred it on this Marquis δ. And by his laſt Will, in caſe he ſhould die during the Minority of his Son, the Government of the Young King was intruſted to this Conſtable in Conjunction with ſome other Lords ζ. He dyed in the Year 1390. and his Son Don Henry the III being ſcarce θ eleven Years of Age, Tutors were to be choſen for him, and a Council was requiſite to be appointed in order to govern the Realm. Several difficulties were diſcovered in the King's Will, wherefore it was not obſerved; but our Marquis of Villena was one of thoſe to whom the Regency was intruſted *. He was then ‡ in Arragon, and becauſe he Adhered to the Malecontents, and demanded the Execution of the deceaſed King's Teſtament, he was deprived of the Charge of Conſtable of Caſtile †. The reſtauration of which he demanded of King Henry the III. at Illeſca, Anno 1393. the firſt time he had the Honour ♦ to congratulate him; and was promiſed it, provided he would accompany the King to Caſtile; but excuſing himſelf from that, he never recovered that Dignity β, but receiv'd alſo other ill treatments (B). He was Created Duke of Gandia by the King of Arragon in 1399 γ. and had two Sons δ who Married two Aunts ζ of Don Henry III. King of Caſtile. One of which was the Father of a Marquis of VILLENA, who was a lover of Sciences, and (C) paſſed for an Egregious Magician. This Marquiſate Anno 1445. was ſtay of the Miniſters and their Companions of Geneva, there was neither any Sedition, nor Conſpiracy at Colligni, nor any French Man killed there. To confound times is a great Fault, but to make uſe of theſe confuſions to calumniate the Innocent is yet a much greater. Both which Thevet is Guilty of.

(A) Villena a Marquiſate on the confines of new Caſtile.] Mr. Baudrand (a) ſaith that Villena, the chief place of the Territory of that Name, caput agri cognominis, is in the Kingdom of Murcia: But having juſt now conſulted a Map of Sanſon Printed in 1663. I there find Villena placed in New Caſtile. Mr. du Puy in his Hiſtory of the Favourites relates, that in the reign of John the II. King of Caſtile, and during the continuance of his great Favour to Alvaro de Luna, the Prince Don Henry of Arragon in the Year 1420. Married (b) the Infanta Catherine Siſter to that King, on whom was beſtowed the Marquiſate of Villena, which was erected into a Dutchy. I believe this erection became null, becauſe I find by the ſame Mr. du Puy (c) that Pacheco the Favourite of Don Henry Son of John the Second, was made Marquis of Villena about the Year 1445. Mariana and other Hiſtorians don't give this Pacheco or his Son any other Title than that of Marquis of Villena.

(B) Receiv'd alſo other ill Treatments.] I ſhall ſet down the Words of Mayerne Turquet: (d) "The "Marquis having cleared himſelf to the King "of whatſoever was alledged againſt him, and Ad"vanced ſeveral excuſes why he did not come to "Court, requeſted the reſtauration of his Office "of Conſtable of Caſtile, of which he had been "deprived by his Majeſty's Tutors, in order to "make room for D. Pedro Count of Tranſtamara "in Prejudice of his Honour and Dignity: To "which the King made a tender and Gracious "Anſwer, aſſuring him that he would take all "juſt and equitable Care of his Affairs: After "which he deſired him to go with him into old "Caſtile, from which the Marquis excuſed him"ſelf, alledging that he was not come thither "with a proper Equipage to ſerve his Ma"jeſty as he deſired, but if he pleaſed to Enable "him he would very willingly return to his Ser"vice. He then returned to his Seat ſomewhat "diſguſted at King Henry, who took no care of "the reſtauration of his Office of Conſtable of "Caſtile, but ſometime afterwards, by Advice of "the Arch-Biſhop of Toledo, deprived him of the "Title of Marquis of Villena, by reaſon it ſeemed "unſafe and diſadvantageous to the State of Caſtile "that a Marquiſate bordering on a Foreign Realm, "ſhould remain in the hands of a Gentleman "who was ſo engag'd, and nearly allied to the "King and Kingdom of Arragon as the Marquis "Alfonſo.

He had two Sons —— one of which was —— Father of the Marquis of VILLENA —— an Egregious Magician.] One of the two Sons of the firſt Marquis of Villena was Alfonſo, and the other Peter. Their Wives Dowries were paid to the Engliſh in Ranſom for their Father, and in order to releaſe Alfonſo who was hoſtage on that Account. This Alfonſo (e) cauſed himſelf to be divorced, not being able to ſuffer the Publick Lewdneſs of his Wife. His Brother Peter was killed in a Battle. The King Don Henry taking the Wives of theſe Brothers under his Protection, and reſenting their refuſal of reſtoring their Dowry, ſeized all their Lands except the Caſtles of Villena and Almanſa, which enabled by their ſituation and an Arragoneſe Garriſon, held out againſt him (f). Peter of Aragon the Marquis of Villena's Son, left a Son known by the Name of Henry de VILLENA, who ſtudied very hard, and wrote ſome very learned Books tho' in a very Barbarous ſtyle: (g) Petrus ad Aliubarrotam ceciderat, ejus Henrici pater, cui à Villena cognomentum fuit, eruditionis tantum ſtudium, ut magica etiam ſacra, carminaque caluiſſe fama ſit. Extant ingenii monimenta: In quibus multa reconditaque eruditio eſt, elegantia parum quippe affectata, ſed horrida, & cum Hiſpana lingua Latinam miſcentis. He died at Madrid in 1434. having conſtantly ſtruggled with the injuries of Fortune even to his old Age, (*) ſuch as were the loſs of his State and Dignity. It was believed of him that his too great Zeal after knowledge, engaged him in Magick: His Books by the King's order were ſubmitted to the Examination of Brother Lopez de Barrientos, a Dominican, who was Preceptor to the Prince of Aſturia; and the greateſt part of them were Burned: Which diſguſted ſeveral Perſons who urged, that a Library which had been collected at ſuch a great expence as his, might without any danger have been preſerved for the uſe of the Learned. The Dominican publiſhed a

§ [illegible]

‖ Id. ib. [illegible]

β Id. ib. pag. [illegible]

γ Mariana de rebus Hiſpaniæ lib. [illegible] cap. 7. pag. m. [illegible] δ Id. ib. 18. cap 5. pag. 143.

ζ Mayerne Turquet liv. 17. pag. [illegible] θ Id. ib. pag. 564.

* Id. ib. pag. 766.

‡ Mariana ib. cap. 15. pag. 165.

[illegible] ſtood of the Son, and not of the Father

δ Idem cap. 8. pag. 158.

ζ They were two Natural Daughters of Don Henry II.

(a) Baudr. geograph. Tom. 2. pag. 383.

(b) Peter du Puy, Hiſtoire des Favoris p. m. 146. Du Chaintreau ſays the ſame thing in his Hiſtory of D. John II. King of Caſtile, pag. 19. of the Paris Edition 1640.

(c) Id. ib: pag. 229.

(d) Mayerne Turquet, Hiſt. d'Eſpagne B. 17. pag. 786.

(e) Alfonſi conjugium diremptum ob male tectas uxoris libidines. Mariana ubi infra.

(f) Taken from Mariana lib. 19. cap. 8. p. 158.

(g) Id. ib.

(*) Mariana lib. 20. cap 6. pag. 221. ſays that in order to be made great Maſter of the order of Calatrava he divorced his Wife Mary Albornos, who was very rich, and yielded to King Don Henry the Marquiſate of Villena and other Lands, and that the Knights of the Order Created another great Maſter, who was Confirmed by the Pope about the Year 1413. after a conteſtation that laſted Six Years. Henricus, adds Mariana, in tantis litteris tantaque eruditione parum ſibi ſapuiſſe viſus eſt, repetitoque conjugio egenus vitæ reliquum exegit.

was given to ζ John Pacheco the Favourite of Prince Henry, Son of John the II. King of Caſtile. The Son of this Pacheco having endeavoured to make the Kingdom of Caſtile devolve on the Portugueze by the Marriage of the King of Portugal with the pretended Daughter of King Henry the IV. thereby expoſed himſelf to great troubles. His own Vaſſals of the Marquiſate of Villena favoured the King of Arragon's Forces: The Caſtle of Villena was taken, * and by that means the Marquiſate was re-united to the Crown in 1475, with a reſolution never to alienate it.

VINAY (ALEXANDER DE) Miniſter of the Reformed Church of Annonai publiſhed a Book (Z) in 1626. and in the Epiſtle Dedicatory he obſerved that a Famous ‖ Prelate about 30 Years before had Printed that the City of Annonai was older in Hereſy than Geneva.

VIRET (PETER) a Proteſtant Miniſter, Born at Orbe a ſmall Town ‡ in the Canton of Bern in the Year 1511. He ſtudied at Paris where he became acquainted with Farel, whoſe Fellow Labourer he was afterwards in the Eſtabliſhment of the Reformation in ſeveral Towns of Switzerland *. He went with him to Geneva in † 1534, and ſtrenuouſly ſeconded him in whatever was requiſite for the Abolition of Popery. The City of Lauſanne having Embraced the Reformation in 1536. Peter Viret was called to exerciſe the Miniſterial Function there. In which he acquitted himſelf ſo well, that he acquired the Love and Eſteem of the Inhabitants. Which appeared by the difficulty which they made of lending him to the Church of Geneva β for ſix Months, when the Abſence of Calvin made that Church ardently deſire the Preſence of Viret. To make this the more Intelligible, I ought to mention that Calvin being reſolved to return to Geneva, from whence he had been γ Baniſhed, could not come back at the deſired time, being engaged to go δ to the Conferences at Ratisbonne. During this time ζ Viret very profitably ſerved the Church of Geneva. Calvin being Re-united to his Flock, η paſſionately deſired Viret for his Collegue, but had not that Satisfaction. Viret was recalled to Lauſanne, where he to Admiration diſcharged all the Duties of his Office, until the θ Proteſtants of France by their Entreaties obtained him for the Church of (A) Lions. Which he ſerved very Faithfully in the midſt of a thouſand difficulties, it being in the time of Civil Wars, and the Plague κ. He was obliged to quit Lions when Charles IX. by an Edict Interpretative of the Peace concluded in March 1563. prohibited his Proteſtant Subjects the having any Miniſters Born out of the Realm λ. Viret then Retired to Orange, from whence the Queen of Navarre

‡ In the Country of Vaud.

* Melch. Adam. in vitis Theol. exter. pag. 120, 121.

† Spanhemius in Geneva reſtituta pag. 59.

β Leti, Hiſtoria Genevrina tom. 3. pag. 70.

γ In the Year 1538.

δ In the Year 1541.

ζ Leti, ib. See alſo Beza in vita Calvini ad ann. 1541.

η See the Remark E.

θ Melch. Adam. ubi ſupra pag. 121.

κ Id. ib.

λ The true and entire Hiſtory of the Troubles, B. 1. fol. 6. verſo ad ann. 1564.

a Defenſe of his Conduct alledging the King's pleaſure for his Apology. Mariana relates this Fact in beautiful Expreſſions: (a) Henricus Villena Madriti, ubi Rex erat, extinctus eſt, amiſſas opes, atque ampliſſimos honores ablatos, injuriamque fortunæ honeſtis ſolatiis ad extremam ſenectutem toleravit, tanto eruditionis ſtudio, ut ne a magicis quidem ſacris abſtinuiſſe feratur. Libri juſſu Regis Lupo Barriento Dominicano, Henricique Principis magiſtro examinandi ſunt traditi, quorum parte combuſta, multorum vituperationem incurrit, libros exiſtimantium magno comparatos, eruditorum uſibus ſine periculo noxaque ſervari debuiſſe. Regiam ille de ſcripto conceptâ defenſione, voluntatem excuſavit, cui repugnare fas non eſſet. Mayerne Turquet ſuppoſes that only the Magical Manuſcripts of the Marquis's own Compoſure were Burned, and farther he ſays, that even all of them were not committed to the Flames (b). But if he had been at the pains of Examining Mariana, he had been more exact, and would have informed us that the greateſt part of this Lord's Library was Burned. How abſurd is it to pretend that part of his Magical Books were ſpared? It is ſcarce poſſible to commit a ſingle Fault alone. This Hiſtorian having miſtaken the Queſtion, hath made an improper uſe of a Reſtrictive Clauſe: And being not able to Err conſequently, has committed a double Error. There goes a Pleaſant Story in Spain relating to this Marquis, of which I am informed by Reading the Relation of the differences betwixt Don John of Auſtria, and the Jeſuit Nitard. This Jeſuite Publiſhed a Manifeſto, to which an Anſwer was made in which the Author feigns, (c) "That the Marquis of Villena accompanied with Don Pedro the Cruel, and the Ghoſt of Pedro Hernandes, three Perſons very well known, were come from the other World on purpoſe to refute him with the greater Liberty." I need not ſay any thing of the Speech aſcribed to Don Pedro: I ſhall only ſet down the beginning of what the Second Actor ſays. (d) "The other Old Man beginning told him, for my part, my Lord, I am the Marquis of Villena, who rendred my ſelf Famous in the World by Aſtrology, and the Invention of the Bottle, into which it is reported I cauſed my ſelf to be put peace-meal, in order to diſcover the Events of Future Ages through the Glaſs, and what ſhould happen at this preſent time; and indeed it is ſo, for it was impoſſible that a Man of my Quality and Humour ſhould forbear being broke in pieces to ſee the preſent Events, the Subverſion of this Monarchy by a Private Man. ——— It is true I cauſed my ſelf to be cut to pieces, I cannot conceal it, to ſee a Man Born in Germany, where the Laws are ſo different from ours, become the Arbitrator of our Faith. I cauſed my ſelf to be cut to pieces, out of Curioſity to ſee a Queen, who ſhou'd have Governed Spain according to our Laws, chooſe for her Director, &c.

(Z) Publiſhed a Book in 1626.] It was Printed at Geneva, and contains 634 Pages in 8. and is Entituled, The particulars of the Conference held at Annonay, from the 10*th of* December 1625. to the 25*th of* February 1626. betwixt Alexander de Vinay Miniſter of God's Word, and John Francis Martinecourt Jeſuit, concerning the Opinion of the Fathers, on the ſufficiency of the Scripture, and on the Eucbariſt. To which is added, a Continuation of both Articles, and a Treatiſe of Purgatory by the ſaid Vinay. I could not find this Jeſuit in Alegambe's Bibliotheque, which makes me think that he gave no Relation of this Diſpute. Yet it was cuſtomary for each Party to Publiſh a Relation of a Diſputation, and to attribute the Victory to his own ſide.

(A) By their Entreaties obtained him for the Church of Lions.] Melchior Adam hath here left a Gap, which ought to be ſupplied. He did not know that Viret ſerved the Church of Niſmes, and afterwards that of Mompellier, before he went to be Miniſter of Lions. Of all which we are informed by Viret himſelf in an Epiſtle Dedicatory, dated from Lions the 7th of December 1563. He there acquaints us, (e) That two Years before that, he fell into a Diſeaſe, which brought him ſo Low, that he thought

(e) Viret, Epiſtle Dedicatory of the 1. Volume of his Inſtruction Chreſtienne;

varre ſent for him to Bearn †. He there (B) render'd his Talents very valuable, and died there in 1571. He was a * little Man, and of a weak Conſtitution, which was yet impaired by the Blows (C) he received from a Prieſt, and the Poiſon which was put into his Victuals: But he had a great ſhare of Learning, accompanied with a charming Eloquence. He Publiſhed a vaſt number thought he had nothing to expell but the Grave——— that God had, as it were, plucked him by the Hair of the Head from amongſt the People, with whom he had paſſed the greateſt part of his life. "I know very well, adds he, that my Lords, and alſo my Brothers and Companions, and all the Church of which God had appointed me Miniſter, would not eaſily have conſented to my departure, and ſent me away, if they had not ſeen and known the neceſſity to which the Lord had expoſed me, and choſen rather that I ſhould ſerve in another place for the edification of the Church as weak as I was, than make an unprofitable ſtay amongſt them, without being able to ſerve either one Church or the other, as I deſired to do——— This is the Method by which the Lord drew me from that Church which I had reaſon to love, as if he had taken me by the Hand, in order to lead me faint, and trembling with weakneſs and half dead, and bring me to you (a) who are the firſt in Languedoc, with whom I reſided after my departure from Geneva." He very much praiſes his good reception at Nimes, tho' I looked, continues he, like a dry Skeleton covered with Skin, who had brought my Bones to be buried there: inſomuch that even thoſe who were not of our Religion, but very contrary to it, pitied me, crying out, wherefore doth this poor Man come into this Country? Doth he come for any thing elſe than to die? Beſides which, I have heard that the firſt time I aſcended the Pulpit, ſeveral ſeeing me in that condition, feared that I ſhould faint before I had finiſhed the Sermon.

Here are ſome things which I cannot comprehend nor explain; and perhaps Viret did not deſire they ſhould be manifeſt. He ſaith that he could no longer ſerve his old Church, which was the only Reaſon why his Superiors gave him leave to depart. That Reaſon could not be the ſtate to which his Diſtemper had reduced him; for notwithſtanding that, he was able to ſerve the Church of Nimes. We might conjecture that this Church was ſmaller than that of Lauſanne or Geneva, and that the ſame Perſon who was not ſtrong enough to preach in a large Church, might yet be able to perform that Function to a ſmall Auditory. But this Conjecture is ſcarce ſatisfactory.

His Epiſtle Dedicatory to the 2d Tome of his Chriſtian Inſtruction, is a Proof that he was afterwards Miniſter of the Church of Montpellier. This Epiſtle is dated at Lions the 12 of December 1563, and addreſſed to that Church as a grateful Acknowledgment of the Favours he had receiv'd from them during the exerciſe of his Miniſterial Function there; and he takes notice of it as a Happineſs that ſeveral of the Phyſicians and Surgeons of Montpellier were Proteſtants. Of which amongſt others, he mentions the Phyſick Profeſſors, Rondellet, Saporta, and their Aſſociates, Joubert, Feynes, Trial; and Michael Herouart, a famous Chirurgeon. I inſert this particular, becauſe it is unknown to ſeveral who are very well acquainted with the Merit of thoſe Illuſtrious Profeſſors.

In the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of the (b) Reformed Churches of France, we find a very excellent Letter of Viret written from Nimes the 15th of January (c) 1562, to the Miniſters of Languedoc aſſembled in the Colloquy of Montpellier, in which he exhorts them to comply with the deſire of the Court. By both the Epiſtles Dedicatory which I have cited, it appears that he was no Trumpet of Sedition; but rather of a peaceable and moderate temper, who always diſcouraged Violence and popular Commotions, to the utmoſt of his power. The ſame Hiſtory informs us, (d) that he went to Montpellier to recover his Health, and began the exerciſe of his Miniſtry there, the Edict of January having been Publiſh'd the 7th of February 1562. So that Paſquier is certainly miſtaken when he ſaith that (e) Viret preached at Paris towards the end of the Year 1561.

(B) To Bearn. He there render'd his Talents very valuable, and dyed there.] He taught at Orthez, as (f) Melchior Adam obſerves. Some ſay (g) he died there, but Moreri and ſeveral others avert that he died at Pau: And very few Authors there are who tell us, that he was for ſome time impriſon'd in that Country. D'Aubigne is the only one who informs me of it. He ſaith (h) that the Governor of a Town which the Proteſtants took by Aſſault in 1569, was diſcharged from his impriſonment on promiſe that he ſhould ranſom Peter Viret a Miniſter, who was Priſoner in Bearn. What is certainly to be depended on, is that this Miniſter ended his days in the Territories of the Queen of Navarre, and conſequently there is a Falſity in the following words of Mr. Ancillon. (i) Viret——— taught for ſome time at Ortez, from whence he returned to Lauſanne, where he Publiſh'd Books enough to make a ſmall Library. Moſt of his Works were Publiſhed before he went into Bearn, and therefore Mr. Ancillon would be miſtaken, tho' he were in the right as to Viret's return to Lauſanne.

(C) By the Blows which he received from a Prieſt, and the Poiſon which was put into his Victuals.] He was ſo violently beaten by a Prieſt, who treacherouſly attacked him, that he was left for dead on the ſpot (k). In the punning Ages, one would have been apt to ſay, that this Prieſt did not know how to form any other Argument than thoſe in Ferio, and in Barbara. If he was unjuſt in having recourſe to ſuch means to prevent Innovations, he was not leſs imprudent in giving over beating before he was ſure that the Miniſter could never eſcape with life. On ſuch occaſions the Maxim, nunquam tentabis ut non perficias, nothing ought to be attempted which cannot be accompliſh'd, ought to be well remember'd. The ſame Conſequences were drawn from an unfiniſhed Aſſaſſination, againſt the Church of Rome, which would have been inferred from a compleated one. All thoſe who were capable of going by this Rule, a Cauſe muſt be very bad, whoſe Defenders murder thoſe who attack it, drew the ſame Concluſions from their Miniſters being confuted by the Blows of a Cudgel or the Fiſt. Wherefore the Prieſt who beat Viret, did as much miſchief to his Cauſe by raiſing prejudices againſt it as if he had killed him; and by not killing him he left his Cauſe expoſed to great dangers. For Viret armed with reſentment more vigorouſly endeavour'd the deſtruction of Popery, and took very effectual meaſures to that purpoſe. He enquired into the Abſurdities of their Errors, and compiled in French, ſeveral diverting Books filled with railleries on that head. Theſe ſort of Writings are of all others the moſt dangerous that can be Publiſhed; ſo that if we conſider only the Intereſt of that Prieſt, he had done very well not to believe the Death of Viret, without unqueſtionable Proofs. The Certificate of two Chirurgeons perhaps would not have been too much.

But to come to the Poiſon. Some ſay, (l) it was given to Viret by a Servant of a Canon of Geneva; others charge this Crime on a Woman ſuborned for that end by the Canons. However it be, the Life of this good Miniſter was endangered by it, and it is ſaid that this ill action compleated the ruin of the Roman Catholick Cauſe at Geneva. And indeed at a critical time when both Parties were almoſt equally ſtrong, nothing could more contribute to turn the Balance in favour of the Reformed. A wavering People full of ſuſpicions, will ſcarce ever find fault with this Argument: If theſe People maintain'd the Cauſe of God, they would never make uſe of infamous ways in order to deſtroy their Adverſaries. The Author whom I'm going to quote, adds, that there was a current report, that the Prieſts had reſolved to cauſe all the Reformed to be kill'd at once by Poyſoning the Bread which they uſed at the Lord's Supper. I am fully perſuaded that a Report of this nature, whether true or falſe, might have a more forcible effect on the Minds of a great many People, than a hundred demonſtrative Reaſons.

Cum

---

† Melch. Adam. ib.

* Id. ib.

(a) He directs his Speech to the Reformed Church of Nimes.

(b) In the 5th Book, pag. 886. & ſeq.

(c) There is 1557. in Beza's Hiſtory of the Reformed Churches of France, which is a fault of the Preſs.

(d) Ibid. pag. 888.

(e) Paſquier's Letters, B. 4. pag. 201.

ber of (D) Books. He was pretty well verſed in the Knowledge of the Pagan Authors. Which appears by a Work † he publiſhed at Geneva in 1560, Entituled: Of true and falſe Religion, concerning lawful and unlawful Vows and Oaths, and eſpecially the Vows of perpetual Continence, Anathema and Execration, the Sacrifices of Human Victims, and Excommunication in all Religions. Item, of the Jewiſh, Pagan, Turkiſh and Popiſh Monkery, and the Corporal as well as Spiritual Sacrifices to Moloch.

† [illegible]

(a) [illegible] Genevæ [illegible]

(a) Cum præterea venefica quædam, è Breſſa contermina vicinia oriunda, quæ nigros ſuccos verbi divini Miniſtris tollendis miſcuerat, P. Vireti lethali morbo in ſcelere deprehenſa, ſed ad id flagitii à Canonico immiſſam fateretur, mirum quantum omnium animi à Papiſtarum artium inſtitoribus fuerint averſi, præſertim cum in vulgus innoteſceret, à ſacrificulo deliberatum de inficiendis ſymbolis ſacro, Cœnæ Dominicæ celebrandæ deſtinatis, quo Evangelici omnes facili opera in ſacratiſſimo ſuæ Religionis actu, ad generum Cereris non ſicca morte vel deſcenderent, vel deducerentur. Cujus flagitii, quod ne Thetis quidem ipſa univerſis ſuis undis abluerit, ſola cogitatio ingenti horrore & indignatione omnium animos confudit. Experimentis ad genus aliud compluribus compertum, omnes Clericorum machinas ad ſubruendam Evangelii inſtaurati ſtructuram comparatas, occulta Dei directione in ſummum ejus incrementum ceſſiſſe. The concluſion of this paſſage is very judicious; the ill conduct of the Romiſh Clergy hath been a very ſucceſsful Inſtrument for the increaſe of the Proteſtants. The Church of Rome could not have been attacked at a more favourable opportunity: Her Clergy were very ignorant and very vicious, and on the contrary thoſe who preached up a Reformation, were moſt of them Eloquent and Learned, and more or leſs acquainted with the Hebrew and Greek Tongues; by virtue of which they got the better of the Prieſts in almoſt all Diſputes. The Prieſts were not able to hold up againſt Diſputants, who frighted them with the Original Languages of Holy Writ, and who eaſily made it appear that the Religious Practices, to which the People were ſubjected, were not preſcribed by the Scripture. Two or three Sermons of theſe Miniſters in ſome Pariſhes, ſerved to convert half the Inhabitants. And what ſhould hinder it? Would the Romaniſts have offer'd Reaſon againſt Reaſon? But was it poſſible for an ignorant Prieſt or Monk to ſucceed againſt Viret, or Farel? Not in the leaſt. They were then obliged to have recourſe to violent meaſures, to Poiſoning, Aſſaſſination, and other deteſtable means, which fully confirmed that a Cauſe which defended it ſelf in this manner, was not of God.

Mr. Leti informs us, that the Name of her that poiſon'd Viret was Mary Navau; that ſhe was born at Bourg in Breſſe; that at the ſolicitation of ſome Eccleſiaſticks, who promiſed her a good Reward, ſhe fled to Geneva on pretence of being perſecuted for her Religion, and acting the devout part, ſhe very effectually inſinuated her ſelf into the good Opinion of Farel, Viret and Saunier, the three Geneva Miniſters; by which means ſhe found an opportunity of poiſoning the Diſh of Soop when Farel's two Collegues dined with him; that Farel and Saunier diſliking this Soop did not eat of it, as Viret did, who was very well pleaſed with it, and immediately found the effects of the Poyſon; that this Woman was impriſon'd on ſuſpicion, and that without being put to the Torture, ſhe accuſed a Canon, and having confeſſed the whole Crime, was hanged on the 22d of April 1535. As alſo that the Canon, out of reſpect to his Family, was only baniſhed (b).

(D) He Publiſhed (c) a vaſt number of Books.] I have already ſaid, that he ridicul'd the adverſe Party, and putting out an air of Rallery and Humour, he examined their Ritual and Ceremonial; in a word, he engaged the Church of Rome rather on the Practices ſhe permits in her Prieſts and Monks, than on her Deciſions in her Oecumenical Councils. This was to attack her weakeſt ſide, for in our days thoſe (d) who laboured with the greateſt addreſs to defend her, have requeſted us to diſtinguiſh betwixt what the Councils preſcribe as an Article of Faith, and what is not obligatory, or is perhaps an abuſe. I ſhall here cite a long paſſage of Verheiden. (e) Sic ut Eccleſia Lugdunenſis frequentiſſima, aliæque vicinarum [illegible]rum, ob egregiam operam quam præſtitit in promovendo Dei Verbo, hunc virum [illegible], ſcriptaque tempori tum ingenio eſſe Papiſmum exercentibus ſumma voluptate perlegerint. Is autem Viretus erat, qui Myſticam illam Papiſtarum Theologiam cognitam habebat: quam variis libris explicans lectori riſum ſæpe movet, propter mira illa miracula & ridicula quæ continet. Ethnicam præterea Theologiam cum ex prophanis Scriptoribus hauſiſſet, eamdem cum Papiſtarum Sacris ita contulit, tamquam hæc Romana Sacra Parallela eſſent Veterumque Romanorum horrendæ Idololatriæ plene reſponderent. Forte inter ſinceriores Theologos nullus fuit, qui myſticum illud Romani Jovis Regnum ita aperuit & perluſtravit atque hic Viretus, quod vel uno illo Centone (ut alia multa mittam de Theatrica Miſſæ Saltatione,) ex veteribus Poetis conſarcinato, probari poteſt: qui lectorem, præcipue in Poetis verſatum, novo genere voluptatis (ut apud Belgas decantatum illud Apiarium Romanum) perfundit & recreat.

We ought not to fancy that all this Author's Works are of the Character I have mention'd, nor that amongſt thoſe which are, any of them are tainted with Buffoonry. He always obſerved a wiſe Moderation. Obſerve, that he did not confine himſelf to the Superſtitions only, a very fit Subject for rallery, but very ſeriouſly, and with all due gravity engaged the impious and the Unbelivers. To this purpoſe I ſhall cite a long paſſage in the Epiſtle Dedicatory to the 2d Tome of his Chriſtian Inſtruction, where we are informed that the multitude of Unbelievers determined him to turn his Arms againſt Deiſm. "(f) There are ſeveral who "profeſs to believe that there is a certain Deity or "God, as the Turks and Jews do: But as for JESUS CHRIST, and all the Doctrine teſtified by "the Evangeliſts and Apoſtles, they take them for "Fables and Dreams——— It is much more, or at "leaſt as difficult to deal with theſe People as with the "Turks. For they have entertain'd ſome Opinions "concerning Religion, which are more extravagant "than thoſe of the Turks, or any other Infidels. I hear "that ſome of this Band call themſelves Deiſts, a new "word in oppoſition to that of Atheiſts. For as the "word Atheiſt ſignifies one that is without or denies "God, ſo they would hereby ſignifie, that they are "not without God, becauſe they believe a Deity, "which they alſo acknowledge for Creator of "Heaven and Earth, as well as the Turks: But as for "JESUS CHRIST they do not know who he is, "nor do they believe in him or his Doctrine." Theſe Deiſts of which we ſpeak, adds Viret, ridicule all Religion, "Tho' they accommodate themſelves "to the Religion of thoſe with whom they are oblig'd to live, out of complaiſance or fear. "Some amongſt them have a ſort of Notion "of the Immortality of the Soul; others agree "with the Epicureans on that as well as on the Divine "Providence, with regard to Mankind: They think "he doth not intermeddle with Human Affairs, and "that they are either govern'd by Fortune, or by the "Prudence and Folly of Men, according as things "happen. I am ſtruck with horror, when I think "that there are ſuch Monſters amongſt thoſe "who bear the Name of Chriſtians. But my "Horror is redoubled, when I conſider that ſeveral of thoſe who make profeſſion of good Learning and Human Philoſophy, and are alſo at the "ſame time frequently eſteemed the moſt Learned, "moſt acute and ſubtil Genius's, are not only "infected with this execrable Atheiſm, but alſo "profeſs it, teach it, and poiſon ſeveral Perſons "with this Venom. Wherefore we live in a time "when we are in danger of having more difficulty in the Engagement of theſe Monſters, than of the "ſuperſtitious and Idolaters, if God doth not, which "I hope he will, prevent it. For amongſt the "preſent differences in Religion, ſeveral very much "abuſe the liberty given them of chuſing which "of the two different Religions they will adhere

AT WHAT time the DEISTS began to be talked of.

(b) Taken from Leti's hiſtoria Genevrina tom. 1. pag. 541, 542.

(c) You'll find the Catalogue of 'em in Geſner's Epitome, in Melchior Adam ubi ſupra pag. 122. & in Verheiden ubi infra pag. 120, 121.

(d) The Biſhop of Condom, in his Expoſition de la doctrine Catholique.

(e) Verheiden, in præſt. theolog. effigiebus pag. 119, 120.

(f) Viret, Epiſt. dedicat. of the 2d Volume of his Chriſtian Inſtruction. It was Printed in 1563.

Moloch. His Article in Mr. Moreri (E) is Confused, and false in several Places.

VIRGIL, in Latin Publius Virgilius Maro, the most excellent of all the Antient Roman Poets, flourished in Augustus's time. He was Born on the 15th of October, in the Year of Rome 683, in a Village † not far from Mantua. He spent * his first Years at Cremona, after which he made some stay at Milan, and then went to Naples, where he very strenuously applied himself to the study of the Latin and Greek Literature, as he did afterwards to the Mathematicks and Physick. Some Authors say, that he was far from being chast in his Youth; others on the contrary, assure us that he was so modest, so reserved and regular in his Words and Deportment, that the Inhabitants of Naples gave him a Sir-name, (A) derived from Virginity. Which affords me Matter for a very long Remark, and

"to. For several are of neither, and indeed live "without any Religion. And if those who have "no good Opinion of any Religion, would con"tent themselves to perish alone in their Error "and Atheism, without infecting or corrupting o"thers by their ill Discourses and Examples, and "leading them into the same perdition with them"selves, this Evil would not be so deplorable as it "is. For this Reason in revising my Christian "Instruction formerly Printed, I have very much in"larged it, especially on the head of the Creation of "the World, and the Divine Providence towards all "Creatures, and particularly Man, for two Rea"sons. First, because the Holy Ghost frequently "in Holy Writ, proposes this Visible World, as "the great Book of Nature, and of true natural The"ology, and all the Creatures as Preachers, and uni"versal Witnesses of God their Creator, and of his "Works and Glory——The other Reason, which "moved me to treat of these Subjects so amply, is "the present Atheism and its Professors: Of "which I have already spoken.

(E) In Mr. Moreri is confused and false in several places.] 1. It is false that Viret and Farel joyned with Calvin in order to preach up their Novelties at Geneva, and drive out the Catholicks in 1535. Calvin did not go to Geneva till 1536. 2. Moreri relates, that when Calvin departed for the conference at Worms, Viret was called to preach at Geneva, whereby he gives us clearly to understand, that Calvin departed from Geneva. But that is false. He had been at Strasburg two or three Years, when he went to those Conferences. 3. It is ridiculous to bestow the Title of Preference on Viret's Vocation, for the People of Geneva had recourse to Viret only, because they could not oblige Calvin to return home before the holding of the Conferences. This shews us that Moreri was persuaded that Calvin went from Geneva at that time; for his Sense runs thus; that this Minister was very sorry that he was deputed to the Conferences, and that during his absence, Viret should perform the Ministerial Function. 4. It is very false that Calvin testified a displeasure at the calling of Viret. 5. It is very false that he managed it so well that they sent back his Competitor. 6. It is very false (a) that the People of Lausanne had much ado to receive Viret. Calvin was so far from being desirous that his pretended Competitor should be sent back to Lausanne, that on the contrary he made pressing efforts to retain him at Geneva. Melchior Adam, one of the Authors whom Moreri cites, clearly testifies (b) it. The same is attested by (c) Theodorus Beza, and we have a literal proof of this under Calvin's own Hand, to which purpose see what he writ to Farel: (d) Quod bene vertat Deus, hic retentus sum ut volebam: superest ut Viretum quoque mecum retineam, quem a me avelli nullo modo patiar. Tua quoque omniumque fratrum partes me hic adjuvare, nisi vultis me frustra excruciari, ac sine commodo esse miserrimum. I shall by the way observe a Mistake of Mr. Hofman. He saith that Viret being Minister at Lausanne in 1535, was call'd to Geneva: Than which nothing is more false. He was Minister at Geneva in 1534, and before he was at Lausanne.

(A) A Sirname derived from Virginity.] The Life of Virgil ascribed to Donatus, informs us that he was very sober (e), but that he was reported to be inclin'd to the unnatural Sin; that unbiassed Persons gave no credit to this Rumor; that they believed he had no other Affection for Youth, than what resulted from his intention of instructing them; that his lying with Plotia Hieria was also talked of; but that he frequently related that he always refused a share in that Mistress which Varius offer'd him. (f) Vulgatum est consuevisse eum cum Plotia Hieria. Sed Asconius Pedianus affirmat ipsum postea minoribus natu narrare solitum, & invitatum quidem se a Vario ad communionem mulieris, verum se pertinacissime recusasse. The following words are very remarkable, for they affirm, not as a Report, but as a certain Truth, that the Inhabitants of Naples gave him the Siraame of Virginal, by reason of the purity of his Words and Manners. Cetera sane vita & ore & animo tam probum fuisse CONSTAT, ut Neapoli Parthenias vulgo appellaretur. Here is an express indication of his Modesty. He preferred living retir'd in the Country, to residing at Rome where he was admired. He seldom went thither, and so little affected appearing there, that observing himself to be follow'd and shewed, he ran into the first House he found open. (g) Si quando Romæ, quo rarissime commeabat, viseretur in publico, sectantes demonstrantesque se subterfugere solitum in proximum tectum. What is certain, is that in his Youth he wrote several lascivious Verses. Which is not to be doubted, since (h) Pliny who had likewise done so, justifies himself by many great Examples, and namely by that of Virgil. (i) Nec vero moleste fero hanc esse de moribus meis existimationem, ut qui nesciunt talia doctissimos, gravissimos, sanctissimos homines scriptitasse, me scribere mirentur. Ab illis autem quibus notum est quos quantosque auctores sequar facile impetrari posse confido ut——An ego verear—— ne me non satis deceat quod decuit M. Tullium, Caium Calvum.—— Neronem transeo, quamvis sciam, non corrumpi in deterius, quæ aliquando etiam a malis; sed honesta manere, quæ sæpius a bonis fiunt. Inter quos vel præcipue numerandus est P. Virgilius, Corn. Nepos, & prius Ennius, Acciusque, non quidem hi Senatores, sed sanctitas morum non distat ordinibus. The Writer of this Poet's Life makes him the Author of the Priapeia, and some Learned Men (k) will have this piece, which is still extant under this Name, to be really Virgil's: But it is more reasonable to believe it a Collection of Poems by several Authors. We have seen above (l) that Ausonius alledges Virgil's Example in his Justification; but it is a little surprizing that he only mentions some Passages of his Georgicks, and Æneids; for those places are scarce proper for his purpose: (m) Quid etiam Partheniam dictum causæ pudoris? qui octavo Æneidos, quum describeret coitum Veneris atque Vulcani, αἰσχροσεμνίαν decenter immiscuit. Quid in tertio Georgicorum de summissis in gregem maritis, nonne obscœnam significationem honesta verborum translatione velavit? Et si quid in nostro joco aliquorum hominum severitas vestita condemnat, de Virgilio accersitum sciat. He had better have imitated Pliny the younger, who without Contradiction aimed at some particular small Poems, in which Virgil expressed himself too licentiously on wanton Subjects. The passage of the Æneids which Ausonius points at, contains nothing too bold for those times: Those who censured it deserve rather the Title of Captious than Critical Writers: And 'tis very observable, that part of those who did not intirely approve it, bestow'd great Elogies on the Poet, as Aulus Gellius informs us. (n) Annianus poëta & plerique cum eo ejusdem Musæ viri summis assiduisque laudibus hos Virgilii versus ferebant; quibus Vulcanum & Venerem junctos mixtosque jure conjugii, rem lege naturæ operiendam, verecunda quadam tralatione verborum quum ostenderet:

(e) Cibi vinique minimi: fama est eum libidinis pronioris in pueros fuisse. Sed boni ita eum pueros amasse putaverunt, ut Socrates Alcibiadem. Donatus in vita Virgilii.

† Called Andes See Eusebius in vita Virgilii. * [illegible] Donatus ibid. Du Verdier Vau-Privas.

(a) They could hardly be prevailed upon to send him to Geneva for half a Year.

(b) Revera Calvinus omnem quidem movit lapidem ut ne Vireto spoliaretur, quo sublato ecclesiam salvam retinere se posse negabat: sed Viretus apud suos Lausanenses agere maluit. Melch. Adam. ubi supra. pag. 121. See also pag. 73.

(c) Beza in vita Calvini ad ann. 1541.

(d) Calvin. Ep. 50. That Letter is dated the 16*th of* September 1543. but this Date seems to be false; it should be 1541. for it were an absurd thing that Calvin writing to a Minister of Neufchatel, should tell him as a piece of News that he was return'd to Geneva, two Years after his arrival.

(f) Id. ib.

(g) Id. ib.

(h) Plin. Pliny the younger.

(i) Plinius epist. 3. lib. 5.

(k) Joannes Maria Catanæus is one of 'em. See his Commentary upon Pliny the younger, pag. 290.

(l) In the Article Vayer.

(m) Ausonius in Centone nuptiali, sub finem p.m. 119.

(n) Aulus Gellius. Lib. 9. cap. 10.

and a very Natural Opportunity of refuting an Obſervation, which we find in [illegible] tenuiſſima atque, [illegible] & [illegible]

——— Ea verba locutus
Optatos dedit amplexus; placidumque petivit
Conjugis infuſus gremio per membra ſoporem.

Mirae autem difficile eſſe arbitrabantur in illuſimili re dicenda verbo uti ita atque altero brevi tenui, que cum ſigno [illegible] ——— Ea verba & tam cohortibus ac tamen non praetermiſit, ſed pura honeſtaque verba venerandum [illegible] puto ſ. certum neminem quemquam alium dixiſſe. Let us ſee how he hath cenſured a much angrier Critick. (a) Annæus Cornutus, homo ſane pleraque alia non indoctus neque imprudens, in ſecundo tamen librorum, quos de figuris ſententiarum compoſuit, egregiam totius iſtius verecundiæ laudem inſulſa nimis & odioſa ſcrutatione violavit. Nam quum genus hoc figuræ probaſſet, & ſatis circumſpecte factas eſſe verſus dixiſſet: membra tamen, inquit, paulo incautius nominavit. The Gravity and Modeſty which reign throughout the Æneids are indeed admirable. Was it poſſible for any to have been Shorter than Virgil, on the Cave where Æneas and Dido Conſummated their Marriage? His Bucolicks are not ſo modeſt; he there relates very Criminal paſſions, but that is no proof that he was tainted with them. The paſſion for Boys was not leſs common in the Pagan times than that for Girls, ſo that a Writer of Eclogues might make his Shepherds talk according to this curſed Faſhion, as we at preſent make the Heroes and Heroines of Romances ſpeak; that is to ſay, without its being a ſign that he related his own adventures, or appoved the paſſions he mention'd. Our beſt French Romances have been compoſed for a long time by Maids or Married Women. Would it be reaſonable to ſay that they write the Hiſtory of their own Amours, or that they approve their Heroines ſuffering themſelves to be ſo ſenſibly affected with the motions of Love (b)? Is it not certain that they may write theſe Books only to diſcover their Wit, and their Art of Painting the Paſſions, and repreſenting Characters? We may ſuppoſe the ſame thing in favour of Virgil, ſince on other accounts we have reaſon to believe him endowed with a great ſhare of Virtue. I own that ſeveral Stories run which are not very much to his reputation; but thoſe who relate them repreſent them only as reports, whilſt they aſſure us as a certain truth that his modeſty and probity were very extraordinary. Beſides the ſtories already related, we are told (c) that Varus the Tragick Poet Married a very Learned Woman, who lay with Virgil, to whom he gave a Tragedy of his compoſure, which ſhe impoſed on her Huſband as her own, and that Varus recited it as his performance. It is farther added that Virgil obſcurely hints this Adventure in three Verſes of his third Eclogue.

An mihi cantando victus non redderet ille,
Quem mea carminibus meruiſſet fiſtula, caprum?
Si neſcis, meus ille caper fuit.

But Servius rejects this as a thing which no body had ſpoken of, and which was repugnant to the Nature of the Eclogue. Superfluam volunt eſſe allegoriam, dicentes rem nuſquam lectam de Virgilio ——— Melius ſimpliciter accipimus: refutandæ enim ſunt allegoriæ in bucolico certamine: niſi, ut ſupra diximus, ex aliqua agrorum perditorum neceſſitate deſcendunt (d). And it plainly enough appears to be a vain Imagination of ſome perverſe Genius's, who hunt after Allegories and Myſteries every where, and are never pleaſed with any thing which is Natural. The moſt forcible Objection againſt Virgil would be to repreſent him as the Author of ſome Priapeia. But that Reaſon alone is of no great weight againſt his Manners; for as there are Men of Honour and Virtue, who read obſcene Books without any ill deſign, ſo there are ſuch who may compoſe laſcivious Verſes without corrupting their mind. It is reported that St. Chryſoſtome frequently read Ariſtophanes, and it is certain that St. Hierome often read Plautus. See the Remark B in the Article Longus, and the Epiſtle Dedicatory to Scioppius's Notes in Priapeia. Should we dare preſume to rank Joſeph Scaliger, Janus Douza, Daniel Heinſius, and the Preſident Mainard amongſt the Debauchees, [illegible] as Reaſons that the firſt wrote Notes on the Priapeia and Catullus; that the Second very accurately commented on (e) Petronius; that the third publiſhed ſome laſcivious Verſes; and that the fourth wrote ſome (f) Priapeia? When we believe it impoſſible for another to touch ſuch things without being infected, we too plainly diſcover the weak efforts which we find our ſelves capable of making againſt ſuch objects. In iis, quæ turpicula & laſcivicula ſunt, ille qui, ut ait Ariſtoteles, bona inſtitutione præmunitus eſt, offendere nequit; Adeo ut, mallicula iſta, qui vel una tali & altera lectione verberantur, & ad nequitiam abducuntur, ſua ſibi culpa & in Venerem prurœdine, perire videantur. Haud ſecus, ac ſi terribili objecta re timidus expaveſcat, fortis non afficiatur (g). This makes me Remember a thought of Moliere. His Tartuffe, being juſt ready to hearken to a young Woman, pulls out a Handkerchief and ſays;

(h) Ah! mon Dieu, je vous prie,
Avant que de parler, prenez-moy ce mouchoir.
. . . .
Couvrez ce ſein, que je ne ſçaurois voir.
Par de pareils objets les ames ſont bleſſées,
Et cela fait venir de coupables penſées.

But obſerve the young Woman's anſwer:

Vous eſtes donc bien tendre à la tentation:
Et la chair, ſur vos ſens, fait grande impreſſion?
Certes, je ne ſçai pas quelle chaleur vous monte:
Mais a convoiter, moy, je ne ſuis point ſi prompte,
Et je vous verrois nu du haut juſques en bas,
Que toute voſtre peau ne me tenteroit pas.

There may be ſome Poets, Caſuiſts, and Criticks, hardened in the ſame manner againſt thoſe Dangerous Objects, which others cannot read with impunity. Lipſius proteſts that the reading of Petronius affected only his mind, and left no more traces in his Heart, than a Boat does on a River. (i) Vidiſtin, quidquam venuſtius, argutius (Petronio) poſt natas Muſas? Non ego: abeſſet tantum nuda illa nequitia; qua tamen nihil offendor. Joci me delectant, urbanitas capit: cetera nec in animo nec in moribus meis magis labem relinquunt; quam olim in flumine veſtigium, cymba. Ut vina appoſita vinoſum movent; invinium, ut antiqui loquebantur, non movent: ſic iſta animum jam ante improbum fortaſſe incitent; caſto & caſtigato non adhærent. If this be true, I dare averr that he might have made Verſes or compoſed Narratives according to the Model of this Romance, and preſerved his mind pure and untainted. Be pleaſed to apply this, poſitis ponendis, to the Poetical Amuſements of Virgil, which ſerved as an Apology for Pliny the Younger.

I ought not to forget the Biſhop of Avranches's Ingenious conjecture concerning the Name of Parthenias given to Virgil. Having obſerved that this appellation was perhaps beſtowed on him, becauſe it was believed of him as well as of Homer, that he was Born of a Virgin, he adds, that it is more probable that the name of Virgilius was confounded with that of Virginius; that is, in effect to ſay that the Inhabitants of Naples being neither acquainted with the Etymology, nor ſenſe of Virgilius, and very well knowing the import of Virginius, imagined that this Poet's Name was Virginius, a word which Anſwers to the Greek Word Parthenias. (k) Cur Virgilius Neapolitanis dictus ſit Parthenias, cauſam hanc eſſe ſuſpicari quis poſſit; non quod virginali eſſet modeſtia, ut vulgo fertur, ſed quod virgine natum, perinde ut Homerum, credi voluerint. Probabile ſane hoc eſt; ſed ne quid diſſimulem, longe eſt probabilius ac ſimillimum veri, ſic dictum eſſe a Græcis, pro eo quod Romana lingua appellatum eum putabant Virginium, non Virgilium, cum ignorarent nominis hujus ſignificationem & Originem, a Virgulis, hoc eſt, ramis ſeu ſurculis, petitam; unde & virgeta Ciceroni dicuntur arborum ſeminaria; prioris vero nominis vim notionemque probe callerent.

(a) [illegible] Annæus Cornutus [illegible] Vir[illegible] Vene[illegible]

(b) Nor [illegible] I don't pretend to deny that ſome of thoſe Women who write Romances have had amorous intrigues.

(c) Ajunt hoc, Varum tragicorum ſcriptorem habuiſſe uxorem litteratiſſimam, cum qua Virgilius adulterium fecit: cui etiam dedit ſcriptam tragœdiam, quam illa marito dedit tanquam a ſe ſcriptam. Hanc recitavit pro ſuo Varus: quam rem Virgilius dicit per allegoriam. Nam tragœdiæ præmium caper fuerat. Servius in Virgil, Ecl. 3. v. 20.

(d) Id. ib.

(e) Daniel præter quod Petronium in omni ſua parte [illegible] more cultiſſimum, ſi rebus turpiſſimum illuſtravit, tum etiam verborum laſcivia ſuperare eumdem ſtatuit, & non infeliciter, ut opinor, aſſecutus eſt. Scioppius epiſt. dedicat. Priapeior. See alſo what he ſays in his Notes upon the Prologue.

(f) Menagiana, pag. 32. of the 1. Dutch Edition.

(g) Scioppius, epiſt dedicat. Priapeior. pag. 3.

(h) Moliere, in his Impoſteur, act. 3. ſcene 2. p. m. 52. tome 4. of the Amſterdam Edition 1679.

(i) Lipſius. epiſtolic. quæſtion. lib. 3. epiſt. 2. ad Petr. Pithœum.

(k) Petrus Daniel Huetius. Alnetan. quæſt. lib. 2. cap. 15. pag. 239. edit Lipſ. 1692.

Mr.

in the (A △) Anti-Baillet. Thoſe who tell us that his Eclogues were Admired by (B) Cicero, are miſtaken. He did not envy his Neighbours Glory, and diſcovered ſuch a large Share of good Nature and Civility, that the other Poets, who (C) continually envied one another, almoſt unanimouſly agreed in their great Value and tenderneſs for him. Thoſe who ſaid that a ſecret jealouſy prevented his ever mentioning Homer, and occaſioned his preferring a leſs known

---

Mr. des Maizeaux hath been pleaſed to communicate to me ſome Obſervations on the Article of Virgil, amongſt which there are ſome wherein he oppoſes this whole paſſage of Mr. Huet, and gives a contrary Account of the ſir Name Parthenias. I had willingly made uſe of his communications, if I had not thought that I ought to ſtay for the New Obſervations, which I know he hath ſent me, and I have not yet received.

(A △) Of refuting an Obſervation which we find in the Anti-Baillet.] M. Menage pretends that there are Numerous Obſcenities in Virgil. His Eclogues, ſaith he (a), "are full of lewdneſs. Novimus & qui te, tranſverſa tuentibus hirco, &c. Formoſum Paſtor Corydon ardebat Alexin. He viciouſly lov'd this Alexis, as Apuleius informs us in the following paſſage of his Apology: Quanto modeſtius tandem Mantuanus Poeta, qui itidem ut ego, puerum amici Pollionis Bucolico ludicro laudans, & abſtinens nominum, ſeſe quidem Corydonem, puerum verò Alexin vocat. But Apuleius miſtook when he ſaid that Alexis was Pollio's Minion: He was indeed Mecænas's Darling, as we are informed from the 56 Epigram of the VIII. Book of Martial." Mr. Menage had no Reaſon to infer from this paſſage of Apuleius that Virgil was enamoured on Alexis; for on the contrary, from thence I ſhall prove that he was not, and that ſo much of his Eclogue as relates to this particular was a meer piece of wit. Apuleius's accuſers beſides other Crimes objected againſt him ſeveral amorous Verſes on Boys, which he diſguiſed under feigned Names. He replies (b) that it was cuſtomary to alter the Name of the Beloved object. Which he proves by ſeveral Examples, and diſlikes the Conduct of (c) Lucilius, who did not make uſe of that diſguiſe. To which he oppoſes Virgil's modeſty, who, ſays he, praiſing, as I have done, his Friend's Minion, made uſe of Fictitious Names, &c. If he had pretended that this Eclogue of Virgil expreſſed the real amorous Sentiments of its Author, he had directly owned that he was guilty of the ſame Crime, and inſtead of refuting his Accuſers, had acknowledged the juſtice of their Accuſation. But nothing can be more abſurd than to ſuppoſe him Guilty of this Blunder. Let us then ſay that he declares that this Eclogue of Virgil was only a witty Amuſement, in which his Affections were not in the leaſt engaged. And it is what he ſays with reſpect to the Poems for which he was proſecuted. He is ſurprized that any Perſon ſhould preſume to Summon him before the Judges on this occaſion. Making Verſes, ſays he, by way of diverſion, is no indication of Manners. The guilty do not uſually boaſt of their Crimes: but thoſe who publiſh Amours, are not engaged in them, and ſuch efforts are only Poetical Fictions. (d) Sed ſumne ego ineptus, qui hæc etiam in judicio? an vos potius calumnioſi, qui etiam hæc in accuſatione? quaſi ullum ſpecimen morum ſit, verſibus ludere. Catullum ita reſpondentem malevolis non legiſtis?

> Nam caſtum eſſe decet pium poetam
> Ipſum, verſiculos nihil neceſſe eſt.

Divus Hadrianus, cum Voconii amici ſui poetæ tumulum verſibus muneraretur, ita ſcripſit:

> Laſcivus verſu, mente pudicus eras.

Quod nunquam ita dixiſſet, ſi forent lepidiora carmina argumentum impudicitiæ habenda——— Cujus (Platonis) verſus, quos nunc percenſui, tanto ſanctiores ſunt quanto apertiores: tanto pudicius compoſiti, quanto ſimplicius profeſſi. Namque hæc & id genus omnia diſſimulare & occultare, peccantis: profiteri & promulgare, ludentis eſt. Quippe natura, vox innocentiæ, ſilentium maleficio diſtributa. Theſe Maxims of Apuleius are diſputable, and it may reaſonably be ſaid, that he ought to have reſtrained them, and that they are very liable to exception; but what I aſſert againſt the Author of the Anti-Baillet, that Apuleius's Words clearly ſignify that Virgil did not ſing his own Amours, is beyond contradiction.

(B) That his Eclogues were admired by Cicero, are miſtaken.] Donatus's Words are (e): Bucolica eo ſucceſſu edidit, ut in ſcena quoque per cantores crebra pronuntiatione recitarentur. At cum Cicero quoſdam verſus audiſſet, & ſtatim acri judicio intellexiſſet non communi vena editos, juſſit ab initio totam eclogam recitari: quam cum accurate pernotaſſet, in fine ait: Magnæ ſpes altera Romæ, quaſi ipſe linguæ Latinæ ſpes prima fuiſſet, & Maro futurus eſſet ſecunda. Quæ verba poſtea Æneidi ipſe inſeruit. Here is an Error in Chronology; for it is certain that Virgil did not write his Eclogues, till after the Triumvirate of Octavius, Marc Antony and Lepidus, during which, as the World is ſufficiently informed, Cicero was cruelly Maſſacred. I dont claim this diſcovery as mine; Father Vavaſſeur long ſince refuted (f) the compilers of Virgil's Life on this head. He alſo refuted Servius, (g) who tells us that the 6th Eclogue being recited by the Author himſelf was received with great Applauſe, and afterwards ſung on the Stage by the Curteſan Cytheris or Lycoris, and that Cicero one of the Audience was ſurprized to a very great degree, and asked who was the Author of it.

CLAUDIUS du Verdier took notice of this Fault of Servius in a Book which he publiſhed (h), in 1586. Peter Ramus had before confuted the ſame miſtake, which Father Vavaſſor confutes. Hinc Donatus affirmat, ſed chronologia repugnat: quatuor enim aut quinque annis antea jam Cicero triumvirali proſcriptione perierat, are Peter Ramus's Words in his Life of Virgil, before his Lectiones on the Bucolicks. To which Words he very properly adds a paſſage in a Dialogue aſcribed to Tacitus; Which teſtifies, that all the People roſe up, at the recital of ſome Verſes of our Virgil on the Theatre, and that he being accidentally there was ſaluted and Honoured like the Emperor himſelf: (i) Malo ſecurum & ſecretum VIRGILII ſeceſſum, in quo tamen neque apud divum Auguſtum gratia caruit, neque apud populum Romanum notitia. Teſtes Auguſti epiſtolæ, teſtis ipſe populus, qui auditis in theatro verſibus Virgilii, ſurrexit univerſus, & forte præſentem ſpectantemque Virgilium veneratus eſt, ſic quaſi Auguſtum.

(C) The other Poets ——— almoſt unanimouſly agreed in their great value and tenderneſs for him.] This is a great Elogy, which commands my Admiration more than the Beauty of his Works, or the Excellency of his Muſe. His exceeded all the Poets, and yet they loved him. Certainly nothing can be more extraordinary than this; and if the Author who relates it had not prepared the way by deſcribing Virgil's Character, he never could have prevailed on us to believe it. He repreſents him endowed with a great deal of goodneſs, he ſays that he was extreamly careful to cultivate honeſt and learned Men, and to acknowledge their Merit, without either envying or blaming any Perſon. He was poſſeſſed of nothing which he did not Communicate to his Friends: A fine Thought in another's Writings pleaſed him as well as if he had been the Author of it; and he was never concerned at being robbed of the Glory of his performances, or that another owned and reaped the Advantage of them. This is his Picture drawn by Aſconius Pedianus. (k) Refert etiam Pedianus (l) benignum, cultoremque omnium bonorum atque eruditorum fuiſſe, & uſque adeo invidiæ expertem, ut ſi quid erudite dictum inſpiceret alterius, non minus gauderet, ac ſi ſuum fuiſſet: neminem vituperare, laudare bonos: ea humanitate eſſe, ut, niſi perverſus maxime, quiſque illum non diligeret modo, ſed amaret. Nihil proprii habere videbatur. Ejus bibliotheca non minus

(a) Menage, Anti-Baillet, tome [illegible] pag. 219.

(b) Apuleius in apologia, p. m. 279.

(c) C. Lucilium, quamquam ſit Iambicus, tamen improbarim, quod Gentium & Macedonem pueros directis nominibus carmine ſuo proſtituerit. Id. ibid.

(d) Id. ib. pag. 280.

(e) [illegible] Donatus [illegible] Author of Virgil's life [illegible] Name.

(f) Vavaſſor de ludicra dictione, pag. 172. & ſeq.

(g) Servius in Eclogam 6. v. 11.

(h) [illegible] in [illegible] antiquos [illegible] centio.

(i) Tacit. de orator. cap. 13.

(k) Donat. ubi ſupra.

(l) In libro quem contra obtrectatores Virgilii ſcripſit. Id. ibid.

known Poet before him, are Guilty of a (C △) great Absurdity. He was none of those Authors who are easily pleased with their own productions; he Corrected and revised his Verses with (D) an extreme Severity; and we are told that his Æneid, which we look upon as a finished Piece, was very short of perfection in his Opinion, and that he earnestly desired (D△) it might be burnt, because he had not been able to put his last Hand to it. He [illegible] poterat, [illegible] antiquum sæpe usurpabat, τὰ τῶν φίλων κοινὰ, hoc est, communia amicorum esse omnia ——— Gloriæ vero adeo contemptor fuit, cum quidam versus ejus sibi adscriberent, eaque ut docti haberentur, non modo ægre non ferebat, immo voluptati id illi erat. After which are we not prepared to allow the probability of the following Words of the Author: Quare novus omnes Poetas ita æquales habuit, ut cum inter se plurimum invidia arderent, illum una omnes colerent? Perhaps it may be asked why the Text of this Remark is not conform to the Latin; I having inserted the exception almost, which is not in the Latin Words. To which I answer that I had just Reason to make use of that Limitation, since immediately after I find in my Author, that the Poets Anser and Cornificius were Virgil's Enemies. 'Tis he then who is to be Blamed for having twice successively said omnes, instead of fere omnes. And he is the more blameable, since he could not but know that Virgil had above two Enemies. Bavius and Mævius (a) hated him, so that here are four Poets against him. An Anonymous Author is said to have censured (b) his Eclogues, and Carbilius Pictor his Æneids; besides we are told that one Herennius collected his Faults, and Perilius Faustinus detected his Plagiarisms (c). And it ought indeed to be owned that this great Poet was exposed to the Criticisms of his Contemporaries, since Asconius Pedianus (d) wrote a Book in his Defence. And if he had not been thus exposed, it ought to be registred amongst the greatest Miracles that ever were; (e) Urit enim fulgore suo qui, &c.

(C △) That a secret jealousy prevented his ever mentioning Homer—— are Guilty of a great absurdity.] Virgil supposes in his description of Æneas's descent into Hell, that the Sibyl desirous to know where Anchises was inquired of Musæus, the most illustrious of all the Poets, and of all the choice Men, who had an Apartment in the retreat of the Blessed.

Hic (f) manus, ob patriam pugnando vulnera passi;
Quique sacerdotes casti, dùm vita manebat,
Quique pii vates, & Phœbo digna locuti,
Inventas aut qui vitam excoluere per artes,
Quique sui memores alios fecere merendo:
Omnibus his niveâ cinguntur tempora vittâ.
Quos circumfusos sic est, effata Sibylla:
(Musæum ante omnes: medium nam plurima turba Hunc habet, atque humeris exstantem suspicit altis.)
Dicite felices animæ, tuque optime vates,
Quæ regio Anchisen, quis habet locus?

Which Mr. de Segrais renders thus:

Le front ceint de bandeaux en ce lieu de delices,
Sont les Prêtres exempts des souilleures des vices,
Ceux qui pour leur païs sont morts aux champs de Mars,
Ceux que rendit fameux l'invention des arts,
Les Poëtes divins, dont la celeste flâme
A montré qu'Apollon illuminoit leur ame;
Tous ces nobles esprits, dont les faits genereux
Affranchirent leur nom de l'oubli tenebreux.
A ces esprits épars la Sibylle s'adresse,
A Musée entre tous; car dans la foule épaisse,
Par son port éminent il domine sur eux.
Dites heureux esprits, & toi Chantre fameux,
Quels lieux sont habitez par le celebre Anchise?

This French Translator of Virgil makes the following excellent Remark: (g) “ Some Commentators ask why Virgil does Musæus the Honour to place him in the Elysian Fields, and to address the Sibyl's Words to him, rather than to Homer. I once observed a Company of very Learned Men, almost unanimously agree, that Virgil ought indeed to have bestowed this Honour on Homer, but that his jealousy of him prevented it. I did not at that time reflect on it, and yet nothing is more Ridiculous than this, and the answer to this Objection is obvious, which is, that Virgil had been Guilty of a horrible Fault in giving this Commission to Homer in Æneas's life time, since he was not born till a long time after. Wherefore to Answer the Sibyl, this wise Poet has chosen Musæus who being Orpheus's Disciple was much Antienter than Homer, for he lived about the time of the Trojan War it self. 'Tis scarce credible that the Elder Scaliger should be so much mistaken as he is, when he takes Musæus, the Author of the small Poem of Leander and Hero, who as many Learned Men believe was later than Virgil himself, for this Antient Musæus; and that he should affirm, to shew how much this Poet was Superior to Homer, that it was for that Reason that Virgil preferred him to Homer in the Honour which he did him in the Elysian Fields, without ever thinking how impertinent it would have been to place Homer in Hell before the Death of Æneas, Ulysses, and so many Heroes whose Adventures and exploits he sung. If Homer had lived during the Trojan War he had never chosen it for the Subject of his Poem; and he must have dispatched his Iliads and Odysses very hastily in Seven Years, in order to be ready to hold this Dialogue with the Sibyl. But it is plainly proved that he did not live till long after; and as no Reason obliged Virgil to be Guilty of this Error in Chronology, and it being impossible for him to be Ignorant of it, he therefore avoided such a gross Fault: Which would in a Word make Homer dye before he was Born. On the Contrary if he could handsomely have mentioned him, he would very willingly have done him that Honour, nothing appearing in his Character as I have observed in my Preface, unworthy of a generous Mind.”

The Learned Turnebus (h) who mentions this Objection against Virgil, hath not Answered it; whence it ought to be concluded that the most Learned Men do not always think of what should most naturally and necessarily occur to their Minds, when they are writing on a Subject.

(D) He revised his Verses with an extreme severity.] He Spent three Years on his Eclogues; seven on his Georgicks and eleven or twelve on his Æneids (i). In compiling the Second of these three Works, he Dictated several Verses in the Morning, and spent the rest of the day in Correcting them, that is to say reducing them to a small Number. He compared himself to a she Bear, which licks her Cubs into Shape. (k) Cum Georgica scriberet, traditur quotidie meditatos mane plurimos versus dictare solitum, ac per totum diem retractando ad paucissimos redigere, non absurde carmen se ursæ more parere dicentem, & lambendo demum effingere. Aulus Gellius informs us of the same. (l) Amici familiaresque P. Vergilii in his, quæ de ingenio moribusque ejus memoriæ tradiderunt, dicere eum solitum ferunt, parere se versus more atque ritu ursino: namque, ut illa bestia fœtum ederet ineffigiatum informemque, lambendoque id postea, quod ita edidisset, conformaret & fingeret; proinde ingenii quoque sui partus recentes rudi esse facie & imperfecta: sed deinceps tractando colendoque reddere iis se oris & vultus lineamenta. Hoc virum judicii subtilissimi ingenue atque vere dixisse res, inquit, judicium facit: nam, quæ reliquit perfecta expolitaque, quibusque imposuit census atque delectus sui supremam manum, omni poeticæ venustatis laude florent: sed quæ procrastinata sunt ab eo ut post recenserentur, & absolvi, quoniam mors præverterat, nequiverunt, nequaquam poetarum elegantissimi nomine atque judicio digna sunt.

(D △) That he earnestly desired his Æneid might be burnt, because he had not been able to put his last hand to it.] This is affirmed in his life ascribed

(a) See Servius upon the 3. Verse of the 3. Eclogue, Qui Bavium non odit amet tua carmina Mævi.

(b) Prolatis Bucolicis Numitorius quidam rescripsit Antibucolica, duas modo eclogas, sed insulsissime παρῳδήσας. Donatus ubi supra.

(c) Id. ib.

(d) Id. ib.

(e) Horat. epist. 1. lib. 2. v. 13.

(f) Virgil. Æneid. lib. 6. v. 660.

(g) Segrais, Remarks upon the 6. Book of the Æneid, pag. 164. & seq. Amsterd. 1700.

(h) Turneb Adversar. lib. 28. cap. 36. pag. m. 631. col. 1.

(i) Donat. ubi supra.

(k) Id. ib.

(l) A. Gellius, lib. 17. cap. 10. p. m. 459.

He deſigned a three Years retirement * in order to poliſh it; after which he intended to apply the remainder of his Life ſolely to Philoſophical Studies; but he died in the interim at Brunduſium (D △△) the 22 of September, 734. His Corps purſuant to his order † was tranſported to Naples. The ‡ Emperor was infinitely pleaſed with his Poems. Nothing is more Ridiculous than the Stories of his Magick (E), and the pretended Wonders which he ſhewed the Neapolitans,

* Donatus ubi ſupra.

† Id. ibid.

‡ See the Remark (3), Number IV.

cribed to Donatus. See the Remark G hereafter (a). This Life is a piece which contains a great many Falſities, wherefore it would be very excuſable (b) to call this a lye, if other Authors had not mention'd it alſo; but ſince Pliny, Aulus Gellius, and Macrobius have ſaid it, we may ſafely allow the Fact, without any danger of paſſing for too credulous. Pliny's Words are: (c) Divus Auguſtus carmina Virgilii cremari contra teſtamenti ejus verecundiam vetuit; majuſque ita vati teſtimonium contigit quam ſi ipſe ſua probaviſſet. Aulus Gellius immediately after the Words, cited in the preceding Remark goes on thus: (d) Itaque cum morbo oppreſſus adventare mortem videret; petivit oravitque à ſuis amiciſſimis impenſe, ut Æneida, quam nondum ſatis elimaſſet, adolerent. See Macrobius in the 24. Chap. of the 1 Book of his Saturnalia.

(D △△) He died—— at Brunduſium the 22. of September 734.] Father la Rue ſaith in 735, and that he was Born in 684. I have followed their Chronology, who have placed his Birth in 683, and his Death in 734. They agree with Father la Rue in the Conſulſhips of Virgil's Birth and Death, but not in the Years of thoſe Conſulſhips. The like variations run through almoſt all Parts of the Antient Conſular faſti. This diverſity is of no great Conſequence. They all make Virgil live the ſame Number of Years. The following is a difference of another Nature. Pliny ſeems to have placed his Death in the Year 740. (e) Hac, ſaith he, Virgilii vatis ætate incognita à cujus obitu XC. aguntur anni. When Pliny wrote the Epiſtle Dedicatory to his Work, Titus had been but ſix times Conſul; he therefore wrote it before the Year 832. which (f) was that of the 7. Conſulate of Titus, and it is probable that he wrote it in 830. under the Sixth Conſulate of this Son of Veſpaſian, and that having reviſed his Work, he inſerted that date throughout. Now he reckons but 90 Years from the Death of Virgil, which therefore ſhould be plac'd in the Year 740. Obſerve that on ſuch occaſions he generally aims at an exact Supputation not contenting himſelf with an even Number. Notwithſtanding which I believe that in this place he made uſe of an even Number, or rather that he Compiled the 14. Book of his Natural Hiſtory (g) in the Year 825. when in a literal ſenſe it was Ninety Years ſince Virgil's Death. In reviſing his Work he propoſed to reduce all the particular dates which he had uſed to that of his reviſal, but probably forgot to alter the date of the 14. Book, and left the Number XC. Thoſe who have Corrected their own Writings will bear Witneſs, that notwithſtanding all their Attention ſeveral things have eſcap'd them, which obſtruct the perfect uniformity of a large Book.

But tho we ſhould ſuppoſe that there were really but 90 intervening Years betwixt the Death of Virgil and Titus's 6. Conſulate; and that thoſe who fix his Death in the Year of Rome 735, ought to ſtand Corrected by this paſſage of Pliny, where it is determin'd to the Year 740. we could not help diſcovering a groſs Error in Triſtan's Commentaries. This Antiquarian (h) imagines that at the time of Caius Cæſar's Expedition againſt the Parthians, Virgil teſtifies that he finiſhed his Georgicks; for 'tis our Caius Cæſar whom he certainly mentions in theſe Verſes towards the end of the laſt Book of that Work,

Hæc ſuper arvorum cultu, pecorumque canebam,
Et ſuper arboribus: Cæſar dum magnus ad altum
Fulminat Euphratem bello, victorque volentes
Per populos dat jura, viamque affectat Olympo.

And not Auguſtus, as it hath been hitherto thought: For it ought to be Conſider'd, that Auguſtus was not in this War, but Caius (i) his Nephew and adopted Son, who forced Phraates King of the Parthians to reſign Armenia to the Romans. If this Author had been at the Trouble of Chronological Tables, he would have found that the Conſulate under which Virgil's Death is placed, is too widely diſtant from the time of Caius Cæſar's Expedition, to Countenance any ſuppoſition that this great Poet was compoſing his Georgicks during the ſaid Caius Cæſar's War with the Parthians. His Expedition happened in, or about the Year of Rome 752. If after that Virgil had wrote his Æneids, he muſt then have lived at leaſt till the Year 765. which doth not want a refutation. I ſhall only ſay that Cardinal Noris (k) alledges the Common Opinion concerning Virgil's dying in 734. againſt Triſtan.

(E) Of his magick and the pretended prodigies which he ſhewed the Neapolitans.] I think it was in the Year 1625. that a Book was publiſhed under the Title of, A new deciſion concerning what hath been ſaid and written for and againſt the Book of the curious knowledge of the Wits of this Age. Virgil is there accuſed (l) of having been a Celebrated Enchanter, and Necromancer as well as having performed innumerable Wonders by the aſſiſtance of Magick. This was tranſcribed verbatim from the Book, which the Sieur de l'Ancre publiſhed againſt the unbelief of Sorcery. Which induced Mr. Naudé to write an Apology for all thoſe great perſonages, which were falſly ſuſpected of Magick. He upbraids Boden and de Lancre, who put Virgil into the Number of Magicians, with the (m) unreaſonableneſs of their Copying the Falſity from the moſt Scandalous Writings of certain Authors, who were the very Sink and Sediment of the moſt Barbarous Writers —— This Phœnix of Latin Poeſy, continues he, is not accuſed of that Magick and Poetical Fury, which by the Perfection of his Works Charmed all the politeſt Wits —— but of the Superſtitious and Criminal Magick, of which this Ornament of Parnaſſus had never been ſuſpected, by a leſs degree of impudence than that unbounded one of theſe Muſhrooms and Fabuliſts, for which I cannot tell whether they or the two Modern Authors and ſome others, quos fama obſcura recondit, are more blameable, who are ſo riaicuouſly credulous as to admit ſuch Cheats as legal Evidence of a Calumny, which turns much more to their prejudice than to that of Virgil —— (n) There is indeed Reaſon to Wonder at thoſe, who at preſent make uſe of the lyes and Fabulous Inventions of Seven or Eight Slaves to Barbarouſneſs, and the Opinions of the Populace, in order to draw this Poet's Name into their Catalogue of Magicians, and relate a Thouſand Stories, which if true, would only cauſe him to be eſteemed one of the moſt expert that ever was in that Art. After which he retracts what had ſaid (o), that we were beholden for all thoſe Fables to Helinandus the Monk. He took it on Geſner's Authority that this good Monk Flouriſhed in the Year 1069. but being convinced (p) that he lived about 1209, I am, adds he, obliged (q) to confeſs ingenuouſly that I was miſtaken, and that the firſt Author of all theſe idle fancies, was in my Opinion that Gervaſius, who Theodorick à Niem (1) ſaith was Chancellour to the Emperor Otho the III. to whom he preſented his Book Entituled Ocia Imperatois, which is really ſo ſtuffed with abſurdities and Fables, as I Remember to have already obſerved, that I can hardly perſuade my ſelf that he was in his ſenſes when he wrote it. This Author relates: (r) "That Virgil "made a Copper Fly, which for the Space of Eight "Years remained on one of the Gates of Naples, "to which he had fixed it, and prevented any "Fly entring the City; where he alſo Built a Market Houſe in which Fleſh never Stank or putrified; "that on one of the Gates of the ſaid City he "placed two large Stone Statues, one of which he "called Merry and Beautiful, and the other Melancholy and Hideous; that theſe Statues were "of that Vertue, that any Perſon entring the "Town by the Side where the firſt was, was "Bleſſed with a Happy Succeſs in all his Affairs, "whilſt he who came in on the ſide of the Gate "where the other was fixed, found himſelf "Unfortunate in all his Endeavours, and that every "thing

(a) Number IV.

(b) Corrected for it. See Virgil's life written by Father la Rue and prefixed to the Commentary in uſum Delphini.

(c) Plinius lib. 7. cap. 30. pag. m. 51.

(d) Aulus Gellius ubi ſupra.

(e) Plinius lib. 14. cap. 1. pag. m. 114.

(f) Others ſay it was the 831. Thoſe, for example who place the Death of Virgil in the Year 734.

(g) I ſuppoſe here that the Year in which Virgil died, is not the 734. as I have put it in the text of this Article, but the Year 735.

(h) Triſtan comment. hiſtor. tom. 1. pag. 137.

(i) Triſtan ſhould have ſaid his Grand Son. He did not conſider that the Word nepos ſpoken of Caius with reſpect to Auguſtus, does not ſignify nephew.

(k) Noris Cenotaph. Piſan. pag. 110.

(l) In the preface to the Apologie des grands hommes ſoupçonnez de Magie.

(m) Naudé Apologie des grans hommes, chap. 21. pag. 615. Paris 1625, in 8.

(n) Id. ibid. pag. 619.

(o) In the 1. Chapter pag. 17.

(p) He ſays pag. 611. that he found in the Lives of the Famous Monks of Citeaux, that Vincentius Bellovacenſis in his Speculum makes him live in 1029.

(1) Lib. de Schiſmate, cap. 19. & 20.

(q) Naudé ibid.

(r) Naudé ibid. pag.

Neapolitans. The Versions of, and the Commentaries on his Works are † innumerable, Those who have disguised him in Burlesque Verse, have moved the Choler of some " thing cross'd his Intention; that he caused a " Brass Statue with a Trumpet in its Mouth to be " erected on a high Mountain near the City of Naples, which sounded so loud when the North Wind " blew, that the Fire and Smoak of Vulcan's Forges, " which are at present to be seen near Pozzuoli, were " driven towards the Sea, without any damage to " the inhabitants; that it was he who caused the Baths " of Calanura di petra lapina & anuso di Pierna, to " be made, with the beautiful inscriptions in Gold " Letters, which were after broken and defaced by " the Physicians of Salerno, who were displeased " that by them the People were instructed what " Disease each Bath would cure; that he prevented " any Person being injured in the wonderful Grotto " cut out in Mount Pausilippo in the way to " Naples; and lastly that he made a publick Fire, at " which every person was free to warm himself, near " which he placed a Brass Archer with his Arrow " fixed, and his Bow bent, and this inscription, whoever " strikes me, I let fly my Arrow; that it afterwards " happened that a Mad-man struck the Archer, " who did not fail to shoot his Arrow directly into " the Fire, which immediately went out. Let us now take a view of the Transcribers and Improvers of these ridiculous Fables. (a) " All these Absurdities were first transcribed from this Author by Helinandus Monk of Fresmont, in his " Universal (1)Chronicle, and afterwards by Alexander " Neckam an English Benedictin Monk, who relates " some of the fore-mention'd Stories in his " Book of the Nature and Property of Things; " besides which, he adds, that Naples being afflicted " with a Contagious, and infinite number of Horse-" Leeches, was deliver'd from that Plague instantly, " upon Virgil's throwing a Golden Horse-Leech into " a Well; and that he had encompassed his " House and Garden, in which it never rained, " with an immovable Air, that served instead of a " Wall, and that he there made a Bridge of Brass, " by means of which he transported himself whither " he pleased; that he also built a miraculous " Belfrey, which, tho' of Stone, moved in just proportion " to the Vibrations of the enclosed Bell; " that he made the Statues, called the Salvation of " Rome, which were watched Night and Day by " the Priests, because as soon as any Nation " design'd a Revolt, and to arm against the Roman " Empire, the Statue which by its mark represented " that Nation, and was adored by it, immediately " moved it self, and thereby rung a small Bell " which hung about its Neck, and pointed with its " Finger to the Rebellious Nation, so that its Name " might be seen Written, which the Priest carried " to the Emperor, who immediately prepared an " Army in order to subdue and reduce it to Reason: " which is also carefully observed by an anonymous " Author, who above one hundred and " Twenty years ago, collected the Lives of the " Philosophers and Poets; for when he comes to " Virgil, he with a great assurance tells us, (1) Hic " Philosophia naturali praeditus etiam Necromanticus " fuit, & mira quadam arte hac fecisse narratur: After " which, he recites the above mention'd Stories, " which were afterwards copyed verbatim " from the Latin of this Anonymous Writer, by " Symphorian Champier (2), and Albert of Eib, who " was so weak as to insert them in the second part " of his Margarita Poetica, under the Title of Sentences " and Authorities excerpted from Diogenes " Laertius, and yet not content with them, hath " enlarged them with the Story of a Roman Curtezan, " who having hung up Virgil in a Basket in the middle " of a Tower; he in revenge so extinguish'd all the Fires " in Rome, that it was impossible to light any of " them, any otherwise than by kindling them at " the Privy parts of this Strumpet; and besides the " Fire being so incommunicable, that no one could " light at another's Fire, every person was obliged " to see and visit her: And this fine Story was scarce " Publish'd but one Gratian du Pont thought it " worthy of being inserted in his Controversies " betwixt the Female and Male Sexes, Printed " at Toulouse in 1534, as a very manifest " Proof of the Malice and Malignity of Women: " His Verses shall conclude this long deduction " of Follies.

" Que dirons nous du bon homme Virgil,
" Que on pendit si vers par l'Evangil,
" Dans sa corbeille [illegible]
" Dont tant moqué fut [illegible]
" A luy qui estoit homme de grand honneur,
" Ne fu ce pas un [illegible]
" Helas si fut, car c'estoit dedans Rome,
" Que la pendu demeura le pauvre homme,
" Par sa cautelle & sa deception,
" Un jour qu'on fit grande procession
" Parmy la ville, dont dudit personnage,
" Qui ne s'en rit ne fut estimé sage.

Naudé doth not trouble himself with refuting these Absurdities, but takes some Notice (b) that the Life of Virgil, ascribed to Tiberius Donatus, St. Hierom's Master, says that this great Poet's Father was first Servant, and then Son-in-law to a certain Magus. He answers, that according to Delrio and La Cerda, this Life as handed to us at present, was not written by that Antient Donatus. What we find there concerning Virgil's Father, adds he, (c) sufficeth to determine the piece to be suppositious. It is a very strange Blunder to take the Word Magus, which the best Criticks correct by Magius or Majus, for a Magician. The Authority of Johannes Sarisberiensis, who mentions the brazen Fly which drove all the Flies out of Naples, does not seem of any great force. Tessatus (3) who places Virgil amongst the Practicers of Necromancy, is not a Witness of any credit, since he grounds what he saith on Helinandus's Chronicle. But since the Authors, Naudé goes on, " (d) who have spoke of Virgil's Magick, are so " numerous, that it is impossible to treat of them " particularly one after another, without losing a " great deal of time, and admitting abundance of " Tautologies, I ought to imitate the Civilians, " who take their Authorities per saturam, and " making but one Article of all the rest, to shew, " that tho' Le Loyer (4) mentions his Eccho, (5) Paracelsus " his magical Images and Figures, (6) Helmoldus " his representation of the City of Naples " in a Glass Bottle, (7) Sibylla, and the Author of " the Book intitul'd, the Image of the World, the " Head which he made in order to be informed of " future Events, (8) Petrarch and Theodorick a Niem " (9) the Grotto at Naples which he caused to be " cut out at the request of Augustus, (10) Vigenere " his Alphabet, (11) Trithemius his Book of " Tables and Calculations, to discover the Genius " of all Persons, and Lastly, those who have visited " the Duke of Florence's Cabinet, a Mirrour " said to be that which this great Poet made use " of in Catoptromancy: Yet all these Authorities " are too Modern absurd, and ill grounded to " turn the Scale against the Silence of all the Authors " who lived during the space of a Thousand " Years, who would be inexpressibly to blame, " not to have mention'd or observ'd any of all " those Wonders, if there had really been any such, " since they have taken notice of a great many particulars " of less moment.,, I pass by some Reasons which he alledges, and what he observes as a Fable, That all the Sodomites in the World (e) dyed on the Night of Jesus Christ's Nativity, and that as the famous Civilian (12) Salicet assures us, Virgil was one of 'em. But I ought not to omit what follows. " (f) As for the preceding " Authorities, it ought not to be imagin'd that Petrarch, " Theodorick a Niem, Vigenere and Trithemius " were so imprudent, as scandalously to prostitute " their Credit and Reputation to the Censure " of those that are not easily imposed on by such " Fables; for it is certain that whatever they have " said, was in order to refute them, and give us to " understand that they were not so easy and credulous " as the other Authorss, whom I have cited, " who can never attone for the Fault " which they have committed, of suffering themselves " to be milled by the scandalous and " weak Influences of Hear-says, Street-Ballads, and " the vulgar Opinion of the Inhabitants of Naples, " and ſome (F) Learned Men; and it muſt be confeſt that it is not altogether without Reaſon. Father de la Rue Commentary in uſum Delphini is a very good one, it is preceded by a Life of this Poet, digeſted according to the Order of the Conſulſhips, and adorned with very judicious Remarks. I ſhall find ſome faults in Mr. Moreri (G). I have avoided mentioning a certain Poplar, called Virgil's Tree, which, according to the cuſtom of the Country, was planted when his Mother was deliver'd of him, and was obſerved to grow ſo faſt, that in few Years it equalled much older Poplars. The pregnant and Child-bed Women made it an Object of Religion †. Amongſt Caligula's Follies, are undeniably to be reckoned his Contempt and Hatred of Virgil; he endeavour'd to remove his Writings and Effigies out of all Libraries §, and ventured to ſay that Virgil had neither Wit nor Learning *. The Emperor Alexander Severus judged quite otherwiſe; he called him the Plato of the Poets, and placed his Picture with that of Cicero in the Temple, in which he had placed Achilles and other great Men ‖. Cecilius the Grammarian was the firſt † who made Prælections on the Poems of Virgil, whoſe Contemporary he was.

---

(1) Cap. 103.

(2) Lib. de claris Medicinæ Scriptorib. tract. 2.

(b) Ibid. pag. 622.

(c) Ibid. pag. 622.

(3) Comment. in epist. D. Hieron. ad Paulinum.

(d) Naudé ubi supra, pag. 626.

(4) Book 1. of Spectres chap. 6.

(5) 1 tom. oper. tract. de imaginibus cap. 11.

(6) Lib. 4. Histor. Slavor. cap. 19.

(7) Peregrin. quæst. decade 3. c. 2. quæstiunc. 3.

(8) In itinerario.

(9) Lib. 2. de schismat. cap. 19.

(10) Pag. 330. of his Chiffres.

(11) Antipal. l. 1. cap. 3.

(e) Naudé ibid. pag. 628. 629.

(82) Apud Emanuel. de Moura, lib. de Ensalm. sect. 3. c. 4. numb. 12.

(f) Naudé ibid. pag. 629.

† Acceſſit aliud præſagium: ſiquidem virga populea, more regionis in puerperiis eodem ſtatim loco depacta, ita brevi coaluit, ut multo ante ſatas populos adæquarit. Quæ arbor Virgilii ex eo dicta atque conſecrata eſt, ſumma gravidarum & fetarum religione, ſuſcipientium ibi & ſolventium vota. Donatus ib. initio.

VIRGIL.

"and the circumjacent places, who always aſcribed "every thing to Virgil's Magick, which ſeemed "ſomewhat extraordinary or ſurprizing, and for "which they could not find a better cauſe; as it is "very eaſie to judge from the wonderful Grotto "hewn out of the Mountain Pauſilippo near the City "of Naples, which Strabo (who according to Athenæus, lived in the time of Scipio, and the taking "of Carthage, or, according to Patricius, in Auguſtus's "and Tiberius's time) mentions as very Ancient; "notwithſtanding which, the Peaſants thereabouts "affirm, that it was dug by Virgil at the preſſing "Inſtances of Auguſtus, becauſe the top of the "Mountain under which it is cut, was ſo peſter'd "with Serpents and Dragons, that he muſt be a "very bold Man who ventur'd to croſs it. (a) To conclude, He inquires into the firſt cauſe of this ſuſpicion, and believes he hath found it in the "Mathematical Learning which Virgil acquir'd. "(b) This is what confirmed all the weak and credulous in this erroneous Opinion, which they had "already entertain'd of him by reaſon of his Pharmaceutria, or Eighth Eclogue, where, ſays Apuleius, "he hath Learnedly repreſented, Vittas molles & "verbenas pingues, & thura maſcula, & licia diſcolora, and whatever belongs to Magick; ſo that "he could not avoid being ſuſpected of the practice of it, by thoſe who were hindred by their "Ignorance and the barbarity of their Age, from "knowing that it was Tranſlated verbatim from "Theocritus.

GAFFAREL (c) endeavours to defend the Authority of Gervaſius Tilberienſis, and to anſwer Naudæus; but his efforts are very ridiculous.

(F) Who have diſguized him in Burleſque Verſe, &c.] Scarron hath ſucceeded herein much better than all the reſt; but the Majeſty of this Poem deſerves more reſpect than to be ſo daringly prophaned. Vavaſſeur the Jeſuit complained of it, and obſerved that Italy firſt made way for this liberty: (d) Vide, Balzaci, de iſtorum hominum conſiliis, & inſtituta ratione quid ſentiam, quidve primum venerit in mentem, cum perſonatos aliquot ejuſmodi, & ementitos Virgilios, neque enim hanc ab uno duntaxat contumeliam paſſus eſt, in manus ſumpſi. Mihi viſi ſunt, qui nobiliſſimum & clariſſimum poëtam fœditate interpretationis ſuæ turpârunt, eodem illum modo tractare voluiſſe, quo Didonem tractavit prius, adeoque vices innocentis & calamitoſæ reginæ ulciſci. Ut is enim Didonem Æneæ turpiter indigneque proſtituit, neque ullam rationem habuit vel temporis, cum ab Ænea Dido diſtaret ipſis trecentis annis; vel famæ & exiſtimationis publicæ, quod eadem omnes ætatis ſuæ feminas pudicitiæ laude anteiret: ita iſti nulla ingenuæ artis præſtantia, nulla principis poetæ dignitate deterriti ſunt, quo minus puram & caſtam poëſim, corruptam & adulteratam extruderent in publicum, diffamarent malis dictis ſuis, eique quantum poſſent, petulanter illuderent.——— (e) Quamquam hic ego noſtris hominibus non habeo quid præcipue ſuccenſeam, cum nihil in iſto genere per ſe ac primi, ſed exemplo & imitatione peccarint. Sicut nec ipſi præter ceteros ſuccenſere mihi debent, ſi commune factum, & aliorum potius quam Gallorum, reprehendo. Fecerunt videlicet flagitium antea & Joannes Baptiſta Lallius, cujus Æneis traveſtita mihi caſu nuper occurrit, & alii, ut audio, recentes Itali ſcriptores.

(G) Some Faults in Mr. Moreri.] I. His manner of placing his words in this Sentence, the two firſt Works were written in favour of Mæcenas and Pollio, would make one believe, that his Bucolicks were compoſed in favour of Mæcenas, and his Georgicks in favour of Pollio. But he either deſign'd, or ought to have ſaid the contrary. And if he had poſtponed Mæcenas to Pollio, he had yet been guilty of expreſſing himſelf wrong; for a Perſon who ſhou'd ſay that Virgil's Eclogues and Georgicks were written in favour of Pollio and Mæcenas, would ſpeak (f) illogically, and contrary to the Laws of our Grammar. This Sentence ſignifies that each of thoſe Pieces was written for Pollio and Mæcenas. But that is falſe. In the Dutch Editions this paſſage is alter'd thus: The two firſt Works are full of the praiſes of Mæcenas and Pollio. But this doth not mend the two Faults which I have noted, and introduces a third, ſince it is certain that Mæcenas is not praiſed in the Eclogues, and that he is mention'd in very few places of the Georgicks, and always very ſuccinctly, and ſometimes without any manner of praiſe. Nevertheleſs it ſhould be allowable to ſay, that this Poem was Compos'd in his favour, becauſe it is dedicated to him; and it is to him that the Author addreſſes himſelf in the Firſt and Laſt Book, and in ſeveral other places. I do not deny but that Pollio is praiſed in the Eclogues; but as ſeveral others have a good ſhare in the flattery, what Donatus diſtributes (g) amongſt Four Perſons, ſhould not have been beſtow'd upon one; and I ſhould rather have ſaid, as he doth, that they were compoſed at the inſtigation of Pollio (h). I have ſaid in my firſt Edition of this Book, that Donatus making Virgil to be Twelve Years in compiling the Æneid, Mr. Moreri ſhould not have ſaid Eleven Years: But at this time I renounce my former Cenſure, for ſeveral Editions have it annis undecim, and not annis duodecim (i) as mine hath, which is the Virgil variorum Printed at Leyden in 1680. II. Virgil did not die going to meet Auguſtus as he returned from his Eaſtern Journey. He went into Greece and Aſia in ſearch of a Retirement, in order to be at leiſure to correct his Æneids; and in this Journey, he met Auguſtus at Athens; Auguſtus, I ſay, who return'd from the Eaſt. This determined him to return into Italy with the Emperor: But the Diſeaſe which ſeized him in his Journey (out of curioſity) to Megara, increaſing upon him in his paſſage, he arrived at Brunduſium in ſuch an ill ſtate of health that he died in few days. Thus the Story is told in his Life. III. Since according to Moreri, he was born in the Year of Rome 684, and died in 735, he could not poſſibly live 52 Years. This fault of Moreri is alſo in the Life of Virgil. The Day, and the Conſulſhips of his Birth and Death are noted in it. Thoſe two intervals do not quite make up 51 Years, and Donatus nevertheleſs ſuppoſe that Virgil went into Greece at the age of 52 years. IV. Theſe words: As he was Dying, he ordered that his Æneids ſhould be burned, but Auguſtus preſerved that admirable Poem, and commanded Tucca and Varius to correct it, are very fallacious, and it is very neceſſary they ſhould be rectified. The Fact

---

(a) Ibid. pag. 631.

(b) Ibid.

(c) Gaffarel, Curioſitez inouïes chap. 7. n. 13. pag. m. 169 & ſeq.

(d) Franc. Vavaſſor, De ludicra dictione, pag. 180.

(e) Id. ib. pag 182,

(f) [illegible] all the Articles ought to agree with the Subject. See the Art of Thinking, 2. part, ch. 9.

(g) Cum res Romanas inchoaſſet, offenſus materia & nominum aſperitate, ad Bucolica tranſiit, maxime ut Aſinium Pollionem, Alphenum Varum, & Cornelium Gallum celebraret: quia in diſtributione agrorum, qui poſt Philippenſem victoriam veteranis, triumvirorum juſſu, trans Padum dividebantur, indemnem ſe præſtitiſſent. Donatus ubi ſupra. (h) Bucolica triennio Aſinii Pollionis ſuaſu perfecit. Id. ib. (i) Duodecim is to be found in many other Editions.

is

VIRGIL, Biſhop of Saltzburg in the VIII Century. Mr. Moreri mentions him, but omits a Particular which deſerves to be related. He hath ſaid nothing of the Perſecutions which this Prelate ſuffered for (A) believing the Antipodes. The Court of Rome engaged againſt him, which the Flatterers of the Pope endeavour to elude as much as poſſible; but they cannot help our concluding from thence, the groſs Ignorance of that Age.

VIR-

is thus. Virgil finding the increaſe of his Diſtemper, earneſtly aſked for his Manuſcripts in order to commit his Æneids to the Flames; and becauſe no Body was ſo obliging as to bring them, he order'd by his Teſtament, that they ſhould be burned as an imperfect Work. Tucca and Varius repreſented to him, that Auguſtus would not permit it. Whereupon Virgil bequeathed his Writings to them on condition that they ſhould add nothing to them, and ſhould, if they found any imperfect Verſes, leave them in the ſame Condition. (a) Cum gravari morbo ſe ſentiret, ſcrinia ſæpe & magna inſtantia petivit, crematurus Æneida: quibus negatis, teſtamento comburi juſſit, ut rem inemendatam imperfectamque. Verum Tucca & Varius monuerunt, id Auguſtum non permiſſurum. Tum eidem Vario, ac ſimul Tuccæ, ſcripta ſua ea conditione legavit, ne quid adderent quod a ſe editum non eſſet, & verſus etiam imperfectos, ſi qui erant, relinquerent. So that Auguſtus was no farther the cauſe of the conſervation of this Poem, than that the Author deſiſted from his Reſolution, being told, that this Prince would not ſuffer the execution of it. It redounds to the glory of this great Monarch, that he diſcovered himſelf ſeriouſly intereſted in it, and that he obliged Varius to the punctual performance of the Condition (b) under which the Manuſcript was left to him. What ſhall I ſay concerning thoſe Verſes, which this Emperor wrote on Virgil's intention to burn this excellent Piece? We have but a ſmall Fragment (c) of them. What ſhall I ſay farther of the ardour with which, during the moſt difficult Expeditions, he deſired that this Author would ſend him even the firſt lineaments of his Poem? (d) Auguſtus cum tum forte expeditione Cantabrica abeſſet, & ſupplicibus atque minacibus per jocum literis efflagitaret, ut ſibi de Æneide, ut ipſius verba ſunt, vel prima carminis hypographa, vel quodlibet colon mitteret, negavit ſe facturum Virgilius: cui tamen multo poſt, perfecta demum materia, tres omnino libros recitavit: Secundum videlicet, quartum, & ſextum. I have elſewhere (e) ſpoken of the effect which the recital of his 6th book produced. Which was very great by reaſon of the beauty of the Verſes and of the art of reading which the Author was perfect Maſter of. See the words which inform us that he read his Georgicks to Auguſtus: (f) Georgica, reverſo ab Actiaca victoria Auguſto, atque reficiendarum virium cauſa Atellæ commoranti, per continuum quatriduum legit, ſuſcipiente Mæcenate legendi vicem, quoties interpellaretur ipſe vocis offenſione. Pronunciabat autem maxima cum ſuavitate, & lenociniis miris. Seneca tradidit, Julium Montanum poetam ſolitum dicere, involaturum ſe quædam Virgilio, ſi vocem poſſet, & os, & hypocriſim: eoſdem enim verſus eo pronunciante, bene ſonare: ſine illo, inareſcere, quaſi mutos. It is impoſſible to do a greater ſervice to a piece of Poetry, than to read it well: it removes ſeveral Faults (g), and no Poem is ſo good but an ill Reader may ſpoil it (h). When an Author reads his Play to the Actors, with whom he is about to treat, he is in a wretched Condition, if he doth not read it well. This is what Mr. Chappuzeau obſerves in his French Theatre. Virgil was therefore very happy, having the Talent of making charming Verſes, and of reading them well. Mr. Corneille reſembled him but in one of theſe Excellencies (i). I return to Moreri. His V. Fault is his ſaying that Auguſtus order'd, that whatever was ſuperfluous in the Æneids, ſhould be ſtruck out without adding any thing to it. Is this rightly to underſtand Donatus's ſummatim emendavit? To correct a Book in ſome places, and with reſpect to ſome things, doth it ſignify only to ſtrike out of it what is ſuperfluous? May it not ſignifie that ſome words are inſerted in the place of others? VI. His Virgil, a Roman, and a Comick Poet, is a ſign that he's a blind Tranſcriber. He had read in Voſſius (k) Trajani temporibus fuit Virgilius Romanus, Poeta Comicus, and miſtruſting nothing he imagined this to be the real name of this Poet; but if he had conſulted the Originals, he would have found that Pliny, the Younger, cited by Voſſius, ſpeaks of one Verginius or Virginius, and not of one Virgilius. Beſides, Romanus ought not to be tranſlated as an Epithet denoting his Country, but as the Name of his Family. Mr. Huet hath obſerved this miſtake of Voſſius in Gyraldus, and Glandorpius: (l) Hæc autem nomina duo ſæpe confundi indicat Virginii Romani Poetæ Comici Plinio in Epiſtolis memorati nomen, qui a Lilio Giraldo, Glandorpio, & Voſſio Virgilius appellatur. Mr. Couſin a little miſtakes this Paſſage of the Biſhop of Avranches. We ought not to be ſurprized, ſaith he (m), that theſe two Names have been confounded, ſince ſeveral Learned Men of theſe laſt Ages have called a certain Comick Poet, Virginius Romanus, whom Pliny calls Virgilius Romanus in his Epiſtles. I cannot conclude without obſerving, that when Pliny the Younger beſtows this Elogy on Virginius Romanus, he informs us that the ſame Diſeaſe was obſervable at Rome, which reigns amongſt our modern Wits; for he declares that he was none of thoſe who deſpiſed the preſent time, and admired only the Ancients. (n) Sum ex iis, qui miror antiquos: non tamen, ut quidam, temporum noſtrorum ingenia deſpicio. Neque enim quaſi laſſa & effœta natura, ut nihil jam laudabile pariat. Atque adeo nuper audii Verginium Romanum paucis legentem comœdiam, ad exemplar veteris comœdiæ ſcriptam, tam bene, ut eſſe quandoque poſſit exemplar.

The Paſſage above quoted concerning the reading of the Georgicks to Auguſtus, wants ſome correction. That Prince after the Battle of Actium, in the Year of Rome, 724. return'd into Italy, and met the Senate at Brunduſium, where he ſtay'd 27 Days according to Suetonius, or 30 according to Dion Caſſius, and then went into Aſia, where he ſpent all the Winter in making Preparations for his Expedition to Ægypt. It is not then true, that at his return from the War of Actium, our Poet's Georgicks were read to him at (o) Atella. If he heard them read at this place, it was after the Ægyptian War, and not when he returned to Italy, after the Battle of Actium (p). I borrow this Remark from Father la Rue. I could alledge another Reaſon, which is, that Virgil obſerves at the end of his Georgicks, that he compoſed this Work during Auguſtus's Oriental War; but it may be objected againſt me, that this Poem having coſt Virgil Seven Years labour, (q) nothing hinders but part of it might be read to Auguſtus before he went to attack his Enemy on the Banks of the Nile.

(A) For believing the Antipodes.] He had hardly divulged this Doctrine, but he was accuſed of maintaining that there was another World, and other Men under us, another Sun, and another Moon. Boniface, Archbiſhop of Mentz, immediately took fire at it, and charged his Opinions with impiety. He cenſured Virgil Publickly, and as the Pope's Legate caus'd him to be admoniſh'd, that he ſhould no more corrupt the Purity of the Chriſtian Doctrine. (r) Hoc ita acceptum eſt, quaſi Virgilius alium mundum, alios ſub terrâ homines, alium denique ſolem, atque aliam lunam eſſe aſſereret. Bonifacius hæc velut impia, & Philoſophiæ divinæ repugnantia refutat, Virgilium publice, privatim arguit, ad recantandum has nænias provocat, efflagitatque jure ſuo ut Legatus Germaniæ, ne ille hujuſmodi deliramentis ſinceram & ſimplicem Chriſti ſapientiam polluat atque contaminet. Virgil incenſed at this Affront, complain'd to Utilo Duke of Bavaria, whoſe Favourite he was, and irritated him againſt Boniface, who ſent his Complaints to the Court of Rome, and he wrote to the Pope in ſuch terms as render'd Virgil's Faith ſuſpected. The Pope ſent ſome Deputies to the Duke of Bavaria, and wrote to him,

---

…) Donatus … Sed … …tur in … … Au… …ius Vir… …tare… …quod … …m … …prope… …ius, ad …nnim …ud… …ui, ut …ſit … …ſeret ſi… …tus, ſi… …tum ſuis …tionibus, …qua e… …ur, te… …pere… …ibid.

…) It is in …Life of Virgil. … lib. ib.

…) In the Article Octavia

…) Idem Donatus ibid.

…) See Pliny … Epiſt. 15. … 3.

…) To this may be referred this Epigram of Martial: …is the 38th of the …ſt. Book: Quem recitas meus eſt ô Fidentine, libellus; Sed male cum recitas, incipit eſſe tuus.

…) See the Menagiana, pag. …3. 304. of the …ſt. Dutch Edition.

…) Voſſius de poetis Latinis, pag. …1.

(l) Petrus Daniel Huetius, Alnet. quæſt. ubi ſupra.

(m) Journal des Savans 11. Sept. 1690. pag. 642. Dutch Edit.

(n) Plinius Epiſt. 21. lib. 6. pag. 319. edit. Cellarii Lipſiæ 1693.

(o) A Town of Campania.

(p) Taken from Virgil's Life written by Father la Rue, and prefixed to Virgil in uſum Delphini. M. Des-Maizeaux gave me notice that the Jeſuit had made that Obſervation.

(q) Georgica ſeptennio Neapoli confecit. Donat. ubi ſupra.

(r) Aventinus, Annal. Boiorum lib. 3.

VIRGIL, or VERGIL (Polydore) was born at Urbino in Italy in the XVth Century. He did not want either Capacity or Learning. I take his firſt Book to be a Collection of Proverbs which he Printed in 1498. Before which time none of the Moderns Publiſhed any thing of that nature; wherefore he Boaſted of having (A) preceded Eraſmus, whom he very roughly reproached. His ſecond work that if Virgil was a Prieſt, he ſhould be degraded from his Sacerdotal Function, and ſent to Rome to give an Account of his Conduct. (a) Ipſe (Zacharias Pontifex Maximus) Legatos cum mandatis & litteris ad Utilonem ire jubet, partes ſuas Bonifacio commendat. Virgilium Philoſophum (ſi Sacerdos ſit, inquit, neſcio) à templo Dei & Eccleſia depulſo, Sacerdotio in Concilio abdicato, ſi illam perverſam doctrinam fuerit confeſſus——— Inſuper regulo Boiorum denunciatum eſt, ut Virgilium Romam mittat, ubi Virgilius rationem reddat, ac à Pontifice Rom. examine comprobetur. This is the whole Proceſs in this Affair; we do not find that it went any farther by the Annals: wherefore the raſh careleſneſs of thoſe, who tell us that Pope Zachary Excommunicated and Depoſed a (b) Biſhop for preſuming to aſſert that the Earth is round, and inhabited in all parts of its circumference, is inexcuſable. Kepler, a Roman Catholick Author, is one of theſe: (c) Fuit quidem Virgilius Epiſcopus Saliſburgenſis ab officio depoſitus, quod antipodas eſſe, eſſet auſus aſſerere. Origanus, a Proteſtant, ſaith the ſame thing: (d) Qui ſane Virgilium noſtrum communi calculo damnarunt, à ſacerdotio, templo & Eccleſia depulerunt. But tho' we don't find that the Pope's Menaces were executed, that cannot hinder us from concluding that they are ſcandalous to his Memory, and moſt of all to that of Boniface. It is certain, that Zachary order'd that Virgil ſhould be ſent to him as a Perſon accuſed of dangerous Errors: Nos ſcribentes prædicto Duci (Utiloni) evocatorias de prænominato Virgilio mittimus litteras, ut nobis præſentatus & ſubtili indagatione requiſitus, ſi erroneus fuerit inventus, canonicis decretis condemnetur: qui enim ſeminant dolores, metunt eos. Theſe words are taken out of his Letter to (e) Boniface. In which are alſo theſe following. De perverſa doctrina, quam contra Dominum & animam ſuam locutus eſt (quod ſcilicet alius mundus, & alii homines ſub terra ſint, aliuſque ſol & luna) ſi convictus fuerit ita confiteri, hunc, accito Concilio, Eccleſia pelle, Sacerdotii honore privatum. By which it appears, that he order'd him to be Excommunicated and Degraded from his Prieſthood, if by his Confeſſion he was convicted of having taught that there was another World, and other Men under the Earth, another Sun and another Moon. I am not ignorant that the Doctrine for which he would have this Biſhop to be condemned, was not the bare Hypotheſis of the Antipodes; for it doth not ſuppoſe any different Stars from thoſe which appear in our Horizon: But yet this Doctrine of the Antipodes plainly appears to be one of thoſe, which he judged worthy of the moſt rigorous Puniſhments of the Canon-law. Was not this a Proof of a prodigious Ignorance? was it not an enormous abuſe of the power of the Keys? I am willing to believe that Boniface ſurprized him, and that he falſly repreſented Virgil's Opinions. They had for ſome time been embroiled in a Quarrel in which the jealouſy of Learning and Authority had engaged them; which made Boniface take a wrong view of Virgil's Opinions. And who knows whether he did not give a malicious turn to the Story, by annexing ſeveral (f) Conſequences, which he thought proper to excite Fears? Some will have it that he ſuffer'd himſelf to be deceiv'd by falſe Reports, and that he judged of Virgil's Sentiments, from whatever was ſaid of them by ignorant Relaters, who could not comprehend them. This is the Learned Velſerus's charitable Conjecture. Quod quidam conjecere, ſays he (g), non abnuerim: Virgilium de terræ ſpecie acutius, quam pro vulgi captu, diſputaſſe, globoſam eſſe, & vivere e contraria parte, qui adverſis veſtigiis contra noſtra veſtigia, quos antipodas vocemus. Hos perinde ac nos ſole & luna luſtrari. Ea ignoratione audientium perperam accepta detortaque, longe alio ſenſu ad Bonifacium perlata, offenſionum præbuiſſe ſementem. But this doth not at all excuſe this Archbiſhop: His Ignorance, his precipitation, his temerity in accuſing the Innocent at the Court of Rome, are undeniable recorded Facts againſt him. Velſerus having found no Traces of the conſequence of this Affair, believes that Virgil ſo explained his Opinions, that they ſeemed reaſonable, and that he was reconciled to his accuſer. (h) Diſceptationis exitum non comperio. Fit veriſimile, aut purgaſſe ſe Virgilium Pontifici, ſive coram, ſive per litteras: aut cognitis invidorum utrimque fraudibus——— ultro, quod inter bonos ſolet, in gratiam eſſe reditum. Sane Bonifacius toto deinde (i) ſeptennio ſuperfuit, neque iſtius tamen diſſenſionis præterea veſtigium apparet. I deſire it may be obſerved, that Velſerus doth his utmoſt to ſalve the Honour of the Pope and of thoſe two (k) Saints; and yet he dares not venture ſo far as to affirm that their reconciliation was compleated. He declares that he did not know the iſſue of this Quarrel, but that he thought it probable that Virgil made his peace with Zachary and his Accuſer. It is not unlikely, ſaith he, that the malignity of thoſe who fomented the diſcord by falſe Reports, was detected. Conjectures are allowable in dubious caſes; therefore we have nothing to object againſt Velſerus: but it is unreaſonable to ſet up for a deciding Man in ſuch things, and therefore we have reaſon to complain of an Hiſtory who averrs that (l) by the prudence of the Pope, and the wiſdom of Utilo, the Authors of the Calumny were diſcovered, and that thoſe holy Men incapable of Hatred, contracted a more ſtrict Friendſhip than before. This Hiſtorian is not the only one who hath acted in this manner: A great many of Authors have done the ſame thing; they have converted the Conjectures which they read, into Affirmations; they are like thoſe prating News-mongers, who an Hour after they have read in the Gazette, that preparations are making for ſome Siege, or for the paſſage of a River, report that the Place is inveſted, and the Army is already encamped on the other ſide of the River. The Hiſtorians of the ignorant Ages were perhaps bolder in this particular than thoſe of our times, and if that be true, how many Lies are we obliged to believe? and how ſtrongly do they fortify Hiſtorical Pyrrhoniſm, which daily (m) encreaſes?

(A) Of having preceded Eraſmus, whom he very roughly reproached. I find in the Epiſtle Dedicatory to his Treatiſe de inventoribus rerum, that he declares, that both with reſpect to that Subject, as well as to the Proverbs, he had beaten the Path for all other Authors. (n) Non inficior——— quin poſſit quiſpiam de hac re, velut de proverbiis, quorum libellum proximo anno Guidoni Principi, Urbini Duci inſcripſimus, copioſius tradere. Verum quicunque hoc vel illud poſthac ingredietur iter, quia nos primi ſtadium cucurrimus, is fortaſſe noſtra veſtigia ſequi non gravabitur. If you read Eraſmus's Epiſtles, you will there be informed that Polydore Virgil had ſaid ſeveral harſh things of him in the Preface to the new Edition of his Proverbs: He accuſed him of (o) Vanity and Envy; he call'd him (p) a Plagiary, and took it very ill that he was not mention'd in the Preface to Eraſmus's firſt Edition. He charged him with attempting to rob him of his due Honour. Ubinam eſt iſta veritas quam in præfatione ſcribis procul eminere? quaque fretus boni conſulis quod ego callidus diſſimulator conatus ſum in gloriæ tuæ poſſeſſionem irrepere (q)? Eraſmus juſtified himſelf very clearly in a Letter (r) which he wrote to him in December 1521. See alſo his 12th Letter of the 1ſt Book, pag. 50. He did an action too glorious to be omitted, and ſo exemplary, that it ought to be propoſed to the imitation of all Authors. The Bookſeller at Baſil being about re-printing Polydore Virgil's Book, reſolved to ſuppreſs the Preface becauſe it reflected on Eraſmus. But this great Man would not conſent to it, but order'd him not to leave out any part of it, whatever the import of it was: (s) Vel hinc colligas licet, quam non fuerimus iniqui tuo libro. Frobenium, ut dictum eſt, abhorrentem ab editione perpuli. Præfationem tuam, qua me ſuggillas, ad me miſerant, velut execrandam. Remiſi juſſique, ut bona fide, ſicut abs te fuerat deſcripta, excuderetur: deleverunt mentionem Lei, quam tu de illo ſane quam honorificam facis. Juſſi ut reponerent.

(a) Id. ib.

(b) It appears from Aventinus's Narrative that he was not a Biſhop yet.

(c) Keplerus, epiſt. ante lib. 4. epitom.

(d) Origanus, epiſt. ad Elect. Brandenb.

(e) See Baronius Tom. 9. ad ann. 748.

(f) As his teaching that all Men are not deſcended from Adam, that CHRIST did not die for all Men, &c.

(g) Marcus Velſerus, lib. 5. rerum Boicarum.

epiſt. 3. l. 17. p. 748. (p) Priuſquam hac præfatione res--livoris ſimul & plagii. Id. ib. p. 749. (q) Id. ib. which I have juſt now quoted. (s) Eraſm. ubi ſupra.

Utrum

Work, which Treats of the Inventers of things, was published in (B) 1499. He was sent to England * in the beginning of the XVI. Century, to collect the Papal Tribute, called the Peterpence, in that Kingdom. Where he so well recommended himself, and was so well pleased, that having obtained the dignity of Arch-Deacon of the Cathedral Church of Wells †, he resolved to pass the remainder of his life in England, and quitted his Office of Collector of the Peterpence. He undertook a great Task, in the performance of which he laboured several Years. Which was the History of England. He Dedicated it to Henry the VIII. in 1533. This Book is not (C) much valued by the English. He put his last hand to his (D) Treatise of Prodigies in the Year 1526. He was no very rigid Papist in all (E) particulars; he was not at all disgusted at England on Account of the change of tiorum hæc sunt faventia an non? Two Years after he advised the Author himself to correct it, that there might be no appearance of any jealousy betwixt them. (a) Mihi videris consulte facturus, si primam illam præfationem totam retexas. Primum faciet hoc ad operis commendationem ob novitatem. Deinde faciet ad opinionem utriusque nostrum, quod insunt in illa priore quædam, quibus ego quidem non offendor, sed tamen suspicionem præbent eruditis alicujus inter nos æmulationis. In my Edition of this Treatise of Proverbs (b) there is nothing against Erasmus. This trifling quarrel did not break the thred of their Friendship. See Erasmus's Letter to him (c) in 1526. Observe that Polydore Virgil had formerly made him a Present (d) to buy a Horse. As also that he Dedicated to him (e) his Translation of a piece of Saint Chrysostome in the Year 1528.

* ... the ... B.

† ... the ... mark B.

(B) Was published in 1499.] We shall here make use of a distinction which Vossius omits: He saith (f) that this Tract of Polydore Virgil contains 8 Books, which were first Printed in 1499. But this Account is not exact. For the Author published but three Books at first, whereof the Epistle Dedicatory was dated in that Year. To which he added five in 1517, and Dedicated them to (g) John Matthew Virgil, his Brother, Professor of Philosophy at Padua. So that Sr. Thomas Pope-Blount mistakes when he saith (h) that these 8 Books were Printed at Strasburg in 4° in 1509. Mr. Moreri hath committed the same error as Vossius.

(C) This Book is not much esteemed by the English.] Sr. Henry Savil says of it: (i) Polydorus, ut homo Italus, & in rebus nostris Hospes, & (quod caput est) neque in Republicâ versatus, nec magni alioqui, vel judicii, vel ingenii; pauca ex multis delibans, & falsa plerumque pro veris amplexus, Historiam nobis reliquit, cùm cætera mendosam, tum exiliter sane, & jejune conscriptam. Another English Writer calls him a Malicious Detracter: (k) nominis Britannici gloriam non solum obfuscare, sed etiam Britannos ipsos mendacissimis suis calumniis infamare totis viribus conatur. But there is a complaint against him of a different Nature: Paulus Jovius observes that the French and Scotch charged Polydore Virgil with flattering the English to an excessive degree, (l) Conscripsit Historias rerum Britannicarum, ea fide ut Scotis, & Gallis sæpe reclamantibus, alieno potius arbitrio, quam suo intexuisse multa in gratiam gentis existimetur, quòd in recensendis minorum Ducum nominibus, tanquam gloriæ avidis plurimum indulserit. John Leland hath censured several Faults of Polydore Virgil, as Vossius (m) observes.

(D) To his Treatise of Prodigies.] Which is composed of several Dialogues, wherein he vigorously opposes Divinations. A small part of the Preface dated at London 1526. runs thus: (n) Cujus (Christi) ipse quoque doctrina instructus confidenter veni in certamen cum ariolis, auguribus, haruspicibus, vatibus, sortilegis, quos partim divinis, partim naturalibus debilitatos imo atque adeo devictos rationibus, jacere cum suis pestiferis artibus, videre jam licebit. This is then a Work of a very different Nature from that of Julius Obsequens, which was Enlarged by Lycosthenes. (o) We are told of an Edition at London in 1526. but Gesner knew nothing of it; for he mentions only that of Basil, Printed by Bebelius, in 1531. I have the Basil Edition in 1545 8° per Mich. Isingrinum. To which are prefixed (p) three other Tracts of Polydore Virgil; the Epistle Dedicatory Written by him is dated at London in 1543.

(E) He was no very rigid Papist in all particulars.] He approved the Marriage of the Clergy, and Condemn'd Image Worship. To which purpose I shall here Cite at large what John Bale saith of him, which affords me a proof of what I have already (q) promised. (r) Ob insignem in omni bonarum literarum genere eruditionem, Wellensis (s) Ecclesiæ Archidiaconus postmodum factus, priori Officio Pontifici resignato, constituit Romam non repetere, sed deinceps in nostrâ permanere Insulâ. Et licet in plerisque scriptis suis veræ Religioni superstitionem prætulerit, pie nihilominus Christianorum Ministrorum conjugia defendebat, pieque statuarum cultum damnabat, cum quibusdam aliis Romanensium Rabbinorum imposturis. Quòd antiquitati Britannicæ in Anglorum Historiâ, quam par est, iniquior sit, ex veterum illius Gentis Chronicorum & Historicorum ignoratione provenit. Quòd præterea Reges aliquot ab impietate pios, & alios è diverso ab ipsâ æquitate iniquos etiam promulgaverit, communi ante agnitam veritatem per Dei verbum, errori ac cæcitati imputandum esse judico—— Erat certè Polydorus ob erudita illa de Rerum Inventoribus, Sacrorum Ritibus & Prodigiis Opuscula, ab ipsis etiam piis suspiciendus. The Tract de inventoribus rerum contains several things which the Inquisition disliked, wherefore they approved of no Edition but that which Gregory the XIII caused to be Printed at Rome in 1576. which was purged of all those passages which displeased the Inquisitors. And as for the other Editions they order'd the blotting out of several passages (t). The Spanish Index expresly Commands the expunging of Polydore Virgil's reflection on Saint Peter's not permitting the Centurion to kiss his Feet. And indeed it contains a very sharp Censure on the Pride of the Ecclesiasticks; the Words are: (v) Pater mansuetudinis plenus id fieri non est passus, qui elevans eum sibi ad pedes jacentem, dixit: Surge, & ego ipse homo sum. O vocem memorabilem, atque salutarem, si bene multi hodie sese quoque homines tantum esse perpenderent, qui propterea quòd sacerdotio præditi sint, planè se reliquorum mortalium, longè post hominum memoriam imperiosissimos dominos præbent, non communes patres, uti fieri deberet. But this Author did not take the same Liberty with respect to the Popes; for on the contrary he justifies and commends the Custom of kissing their Feet. And yet some Writers cite him as disapproving it. (w) "Non "possum, quin addam, quæ hac de re occurrunt apud "Polydorum Virgilium, hominem Papistam, de rerum "invent: lib. IV. cap. 13. Romani Pontifices, in"quit, deosculandos pedes exhibendi morem a Christo "se accepisse contendunt. At Christus non Magda"lenæ osculandos pedes obtulit; sed sponte peccata "fatentem, & suam misericordiam non solo amplexu "genuum, ut ethnici, sed etiam osculo pedum implo"rantem, ejus consolandæ causâ admisit: hoc ipsum ho"noris genus alioquin non minus repudiaturus, etsi sibi "re verâ debitum, quam appellationem Magistri boni. "Sic quoque Petrus Cornelium centurionem ad genua "procidentem manu sua sublevavit, SURGE, in"quit, HOMO SUM TIBI SIMILIS: tantum "absfuit ut osculandos pedes exhibuerit. Decipimur specie "recti, & sæpe cum Caligula pedes protendimus, dum "Christi humilitatem vel spernimus, vel fucato conser"vandæ Apostolicæ autoritatis titulo extenuare labora"mus." This is a Remonstrant Minister who cites of Religion under the Kings Henry the VIII and Edward the VI. He did not desire to leave that Kingdom in the Year 1550. (F) on any other Account than that his Age required a warmer and more Southern Climate. He obtained leave to depart, and was permitted to receive the Revenue of his Benefices during his absence. It is reported that he dyed * at Urbino in 1555. He is accused of having burnt several (G) Manuscripts in order to prevent the discovery of the Faults of his History of England. It was Printed (H) several times, which shews that the World was more imposed on in that Age than they are at present, or else more addicted to study; since an impression of the best Historians in Folio will hardly go off at this time.

(a) Idem epist. 45. lib. 20. pag. 1007.

(b) ... is of ... Treat. ... from the prefa... of the Author.

(c) To the 25. of the 21. Book.

(d) Id. ep... l. ... pag. 1093.

(e) Idem opusculum (Chrysostomi Monachum) in Anglia vertit Virgilius Polydorus satis felicior, mihi dicatum. Exemplum est autem Lutetiæ. Id. epist. ... 25. pag. 1355.

(f) Vossius de hist. Latinis pag. 673.

(g) That Epistle Dedicatory is dated from London the 5. of December 1517.

(h) Pope Blount, cens. au... pag.

(i) Henri- Savi- præ- ad re- An- glic. scriptores apud Pope Blount censf. Author. pag. 451. (k) Humfred. Lhuyd in descript. Angl. apud Pope Blount ib. pag. 451. (l) Paulus Jovius elog. c. 135. pag. 279. (m) Vossius supra pag. 679. (n) Polyd. Virgilius præf. ad Franciscum Mariam Urbini Ducem. (o) Vossius ubi supra pag. 678.

(p) De patientia & ejus fructu libri II. de vita perfecta liber I. de veritate & mendacio lib. I.

(q) In the Margin of the Text of the Article.

(r) Joan. Balæus, de scriptor. Britann. centur. 13. apud Pope Blount ubi supra pag. 451.

(s) These Words of Paul Jovius ubi supra, Is ab Henrico Rege fortunis adauctus flamenque Londini creatus, are fallacious; they seem to imply that he was of Canon London.

(t) See the Index librorum prohibit. & expurg. pag. 85c. & seq. edit. 1667. in fol.

(v) Polyd. Virgilius de inventor. rerum lib. 4. cap. 13. pag. m. 290.

(w) Anton. Borremans. variar. lect. pag. 167.

VITELLIO,

Polydore Virgil's Words in this manner, having assured us in his Preface, that excepting only twice or thrice, hath always examin'd the passages which he cites. This passage of Polydore Virgil must then be one of the two or three, for there is an enormous difference betwixt what he really says and what this Minister ascribes to him. Consult Mr. Crenius (a) who hath very exactly Corrected this mistake, and compared the two places together, that just now cited, and the other as it really is in Polydore Virgil in the Strasburg Edition Printed 1606. in 8°. I have Consulted my Edition which is that of Lyons apud hæredes Seb. Gryphii 1558 in 8°. and I find that the Words exactly agree with those alledged by Mr. Crenius. I have also Consulted the French version of Polydore Virgil published by Francis de Belleforest at Paris in 1582. and I find that he made use of an Original which was exactly the same with my Latin one. I cannot therefore be sufficiently surprized at the prodigious Depravations which are crept into the Quotations of this place.

A certain Author assures us that Polydore Virgil died in the Year 1562. and that in Lippomanus's judgment the Tract de inventoribus rerum is a wretched Book (b). Mors etiam Polidori Virgilii contigit Stasse (1), ubi natus erat. Multa scripsit, sed non omnes docti ea existimant. Imperitissimum vocat eum & vanitatis redarguit doctissimus Lindanus (2), atque hominis hujus scripto, quod de rerum inventoribus finxit, nihil extare nostrâ ætate in lucem editum, pluribus, quod scateat magis, aut futilibus perfuat compilatis. It is certain that it did not please the Bigots.

(F) He did not desire to leave that Kingdom in the Year 1550. on any other Account than that his Age ——— He obtained.] This I take from the History of the Reformation of England: (c) Polydore Virgil after having lived almost Forty Years in England, asked leave to go and end his days, a little nearer the Sun, He being very old. Which was granted him, on the 2. of June, and in consideration of the Services, which it was thought he had done to the Publick, by his History, he was allowed during his absence to hold the Arch-Deaconry of Wells and the Prebend of Nenninton. Mr de Larrey (d) relates the same thing, but adds a marginal Note, by which we are informed that (e) Harmer saith, it was in 1551. that Polydore Virgil retired, and then he adds: (f) " Perhaps some " regard was had to his moderate Behaviour, in the " Reformation which Henry the VIII began, and Edward had carried on. For as much an Italian " as he was, he did not engage with any of the " Defenders of the See of Rome, but subscribed " the Resolutions which were taken in the Assemblies, in Favour of the King's Supremacy. "

The Author, who criticized Dr. Burnet about the time of Polydore Virgil's retreat, might have criticized him upon another point: For if that Italian Author did not leave England before the Year 1550. he had been near 50. Years in that Country. He was sent thither by Pope Alexander VI. after he had published his Book de Inventoribus rerum. But that Book came out in 1499. and that Pope departed this life in the Year 1503. and we know that in 1505. Polydore began to Write his History of England at the request of King Henry VII. The result of all * these Facts is, that he was sent into England about the beginning of the XVI. Century.

(G) Of having burnt several Manuscripts in order to prevent.] To this purpose read the following small particulars. (g) Quem (Polydorum) ne aliquando intelligerentur errores, fama pervebuit, atque etiam cognitum & compertum certò est, tot historias nostras veteres & Manuscripta immani scelere igni commendasse, quot ne plaustrum quidem posset capere atque sustinere, arbitratus, ut credo, se ejus generis omnes solum habuisse, aut veritum sibi vitio dari, quod secutus legem jampridem librorum veterum castigatoribus datam (ut ipse de se ait in præfatione in Gildam) nonnulla resecuerit, quæ Scriptores prodiderunt. Supersunt tamen Deo volente quamplurimi omnis generis, & illis Polydori multò pleniores & perfectiores. La Popeliniere tells the same Story; which I shall give you in his own Words without leaving out any of them, for if I should leave out any, they would be such as ought to be known. (h) " Polydore Virgil a Native of Urbino in Italy, (i) " was sent for appointed by Henry the VIII. to " set the English History in a true light, which he " digested into twenty six Books. They are more " valuable because the English have scarce any Ancient Authors left to have recourse to in case of " doubts or Ignorance with respect to any considerable Event (he after he had finished having caused all those to be Burned which by the King's " Authority and the assistance of his Friends he could " possibly come at,) than for the truth, care or judiciousness of his performances. Our French " tell us the same thing of P. Æmilius his Neighbour and Contemporary, and of several others " who greedy of equal Fame with Plato and Aristotle, Burned, as they did, several Books after " having extracted the Quintessence of them, in " order to make up Books which they afterwards " published under their own Names.

(H) It was Printed several times] I have already said that the date of the Epistle Dedicatory is (k) 1533. And I doubt not but that mentioned by Gesner to be Printed at Basil by Bebelius in 1534. in Folio, was the first Edition. The Author revised his Work and Corrected several places in the 2. Edition which was in 1536. I make use of that of Basil apud Mich. Isingrinium in 1556 in Folio, which contains but 26 Books. But I find in the Epitome of Gesner (l), that this History in 27 Books ab auctore recogniti ad amussim expoliti, was Printed by Isingrinius, and afterward by Thomas Guerin in Folio in 1570. I wish the Year of Isingrinius's Edition had been observed, and I cannot believe that it contains 27 Books, since that which Thysius (m) published at Leyden in 1649 contains no more than 26 and doubtless Thysius followed the best and most compleat of all the foregoing Editions. However it be, the 26 Book of this History end with the Death of Henry the VII. Wherefore I can scarce apprehend the Author who accuses our Virgil of having falsified the Relation of Affairs concerning the Reign of Henry the VIII. in order to insinuate himself into the favour of Queen Mary, when it is certain that he left England before there was any probability that Mary would come to the Crown. It is also certain that his History Printed (n) at Basil one Year after his Death, contains but 26 Books, which reach no farther than the Death of Henry the VII. And therefore the following passage is somewhat obscure to me. (o) Maxime erravit Polydorus in describendis temporibus Henrici VIII. Nam præter quod linguæ nostratis prorsus ignarus, plurima eorum temporum nescire habuit necesse: plurima etiam, ut Mariæ Reginæ gratiam promptius demereri posset, scripsisse, non sine causa perhibetur. Priorum verò temporum, eadem non est suspicio. Besides it is propable that Polydore Virgil did not stay so long at London, being during that time employed in preparing his History, without Learning English. At the worst it was less difficult for him to be acquainted with the Reign of Henry the VIII. than with those of the preceding Kings. Wherefore then would he have

* Thevet, Elog. of the illustr. men tom. [illegible] pag. [illegible]

(a) Crenius animadv. philol. & hist. part. 1. pag. 8 & 9.

(b) [illegible] Romualdo in [illegible] Chronici Alemani pag. 356.

(1) In the Town of Urbino in the [illegible] d'Ancona.

(2) [illegible]

(c) Burnet, Hist. of the reformation of England 2. part. Book 1. ad ann. 1550.

(d) De Larrey, Hist. d'Anglet. tom. 1. pag. 682. ad ann. 1550.

(e) In an English Book against Dr. Burnet's History of the Reformation.

(f) De Larrey ibid. pag. 683.

* They are to be found in the Epistle Dedicatory of the Book de inventoribus rerum of the Basil Edition 1521. apud Joan. Frobenium in fol. See the Trevoux Journal, January and February. 1702. art. 30. of the Amsterdam Edition.

(g) Joh. Caius de antiquit. Cantab. lib. 1. p. 52. apud Pope Blount ubi supra pag. 451, 452.

(h) La Popeliniere, Hist. des histoires Book [illegible] pag. [illegible]

(i) He was not sent for out of Italy by Henry VIII. But the Pope sent him into England to raise what went by the Name of St. Peter's pence.

(k) In the Month of August.

(l) pag. 703.

(m) In 8.

(n) [illegible]

(o) Wheare, de Meth. leg. histor. sect. 32. apud Pope Blount ubi supra pag. [illegible]

VITELLIO, or VITELLO, Author of a Treatiſe of Opticks, which is eſteem'd, lived, (A) after the middle of the XIII. Century. Some Authors ſay that he was Born in Germany, but (B) others make him a Polander. It is very probable that he compiled his Book in (C) Italy. The Edition which Frederick Riſnerus procured in 1572. is incomparably better than that of Noremberg in 1535. I have below cited the Praiſes (D) which he beſtowed on the labours of Vitellio. Mr. Konig knew of no other Edition than that of Noremberg, which he believed to be publiſhed by the Author † himſelf.

VIVIANI (VINCENTIO) a noble Florentine, Diſciple to Galileo, and a great Mathematician, who in 1659. publiſhed a Book Entituled, De maximis & minimis geometrica divinatio in quintum Conicorum Apollonii Pergæi. His Opinions in point of Religion were very bad; for he believed § the neceſſity of all things, the Nullity of Evil, and the participation of the univerſal Soul, as he owned to Mr. Monconys. Conſult the Italia regnante of Mr. Leti, pag. 411. of the third part.

ULEFELD, or ULFELD (JAMES) a Daniſh Gentleman, and a Senator of that Kingdom, was ſent Ambaſſador to the Court of Muſcovy in 1578. by Frederick II. King of Denmark. He wrote a Relation of his Voyage, and gave it to a Bookſeller at Leyden to Print, who ſo neglected it, that it fell into the Hands of a Grocer, and had been uſed to wrap up Sugar, &c. if Goldaſt had not bought it. He cauſed it to be Printed at Francfort in 1608. with the Title of Hodœporicum Ruthenicum Jacobi, Nobilis Dani, and in 1627. with the ſame Title (A) and the Addition of Ulfeldii, after Jacobi. This James Ulfeld publiſhed * a Daniſh Tranſlation of David Chytræus's Treatiſe of the four laſt things, Death, Judgment, Heaven and Hell. He alſo wrote the Hiſtory of ſome of the Kings of Denmark, but it was never Printed ||. Goldaſt ‡ acknowledges that he was not very elegant, but he ſaith that he judged of things with great prudence.

ULEFELD,

† Vitellis opticam edi curavit, Norimb. An. 1535. Konig. pag. 845.

§ Monconys, Voiages, 1. part, p. 130. of ann. 1646. Lyons 1665.

* At Copenhagen in the Year 1592.

|| Taken from Mollerus hypomnem. ad Albertum Bartholinum de ſcriptis Danorum pag. 255, 256.

‡ In epiſt. dedicat. apud Mollerum ib. pag. 255.

---

have been leſs acquainted with this Reign than with the others?

(A) Lived after the middle of the XIII Century.] Which appears by his Dedicating his Book to Brother William de Morbeta, who wrote a Treatiſe of Geomancy in 1269. This date was expreſſed by the Author himſelf, as Frederick Riſnerus (a) who had a Manuſcript of that Tract, informs us. Whence we ought to conclude that Tranſletter (b) miſtook in placing Vitellio in the tenth Century. Eraſmus Reinhold, Gauric, Peucer, Blancanus, Voſſius &c. agree in placing him after the middle of the XIII. Century.

(B) That he was Born in Germany ——— others make him a Polander.] The laſt is the true Opinion, for in the 74th Theoreme of the 10th Book of Vitellio we find theſe Words: (c) In noſtra terra, ſcilicet Poloniæ habitabili, &c. In the Title of his Book, the Sir-Name of filius Polonorum & Thuringorum, is given to him; which according to Riſnerus ſignifies, that (d) his Father was a Polander, or a Thuringian, or that his Mother was a Polander or a Thuringian. Regiomontanus in his Preface to Alfragan expreſſes himſelf thus, (e) Vitellio autem noſter Thuringus, which is to pretend that Thuringia was Vitellio's Country.

(C) Very probable that he compiled his Book in Italy] See the proofs of this Fact which Riſnerus hath Collected. (f) Quædam ſunt in Opticis nota Vitellonem in Italiam veniſſe. Italiaque bibliothecis adjutum fuiſſe. Etenim Vitello ipſe de ſe teſtis eſt lib. 10. theor. 42. ſe primum omnium in Italia ad Cubalum (qui locus eſt inter Paduam & Vincentiam) contemplatione aquæ tenuiſſimæ ac limpidiſſimæ ad Opticas artes incenſum atque inflammatum eſſe: harum enim formarum intuitu (ait) & mirabili tranſmutatione primum nos amor hujus ſtudii allexit: & lib 10. theor. 67. ubi ſcribit ex iride, quam in aqua è ſcopulo Viterbio proximo vehementius præcipitata ſæpenumero vidiſſet, pleraſque iridis affectiones & proprietates ſibi animadverſas & obſervatas eſſe: illud (inquit) nobis principium cogitationis fuit, ut præſenti negotio ſtudium applicaremus. At quòd Vitello in Italia, quòd Romæ cum cæteris liberalibus honeſtiſque ſtudiis, tum verò Opticis operam navarit, majus fortaſſe argumentum videatur, quod Guilielmo de Morbeta (qui tum Romani Pontificis pœnitentiarium, ut appellant, Romæ agebat) ſuaſore & hortatore, ut ipſe in proœmio teſtatur, optica primum conſcribenda ſuſceperit, eidemque abſoluta poſtea nuncuparit.

(D) The praiſes which Riſnerus beſtowed on Vitellio.] The paſſage which I am about to Tranſcribe informs us that Vitellio wrote other Books beſides his Opticks: (g) Quid & quantum viribus ingenii perfecerit, præclara ejus monimenta ſempiterno teſtimonio erunt: non ſolum in Phyſiologicis, quæ citat lib. 5. theor. 18. and lib. 10. theor. 80. in libris de ordine entium: de elementatis concluſionibus, qui nominantur in præfatione, & lib. 1. theor. 28. in libris de ſcientia motuum cœleſtium, quæ allegat lib. 10. theor. 53. ſed multò maximè in decem libris Opticis: quos ut ex Alhazeno imprimis, deinde è Græcorum authorum fontibus hauſerit, certè mirandis acceſſionibus amplificavit. Alhazeni, Euclidis, Ptolemæi axiomata, hypotheſes, theoremata omnia collegit; id laboris infiniti fuit. Sed ex Apollonio, Theodoſio, Menelao, Theone, Pappo, Proclo, & aliis firmamenta permultarum demonſtrationum ſingulari judicio reperivit: ſingulari ordine maximè naturali per ſua genera, ſpecieſque Opticam, Catoptricam, Meſopticam diſpoſuit, artemque totam mirabiliter abſolvit. Quid plura? Si artis opifex atque author habendus ſit, qui arti formam, animamque dedit: Vitello jure optimo Opticæ artis autor habeatur. It appears by this that Vitellio's Glory was not that of invention, but that of digeſting borrowed matters.

(A) With the ſame Title and the Addition of Ulfeldii after Jacobi.] He did not know the Author's Name, till after the firſt Edition, when Claudius Chriſtopher Lyſchander a Daniſh Divine acquainted him that the Author of this Voyage to Muſcovy was of the Noble Family of Ulfeld; that he was very Learned, Rich, and a Senator of the Kingdom; but that he fell into diſgrace for Treating concerning ſome Affair without the King's conſent; that his two Sons Magnus and James were in a Flouriſhing Condition, and that James who was a Senator, was Ambaſſadour at the Hague in the Year 1608 (h). I believe this is the ſame who was promoted to the Dignity of Chancellor of Denmark (i) in 1610. and died the 25th of June 1630. I alſo believe that the Count Ulfeld of whom I ſpeak in the following Article, was the Son of this Chancellor. Obſerve that the ſame Lyſchander in another Letter (k) informs Goldaſt, that the two Sons of the Author of the Hodœporicum Ruthenicum had ſeen the Book. Whence I conclude that the Author was not then alive.

Obſerve

(a) Federicus Riſnerus præfat. in Vitellonis opticam p. m. 162. præmiſſ. epiſt. & orationum Petri Rami.

(b) In epiſtola Optic. Vitellonis præpoſita.

(c) See Riſnerus ubi ſupra pag. 162.

(d) Ibid.

(e) See Riſnerus ib. p. 163.

(f) Id. ib.

(g) Riſnerus ubi ſupra pag. 164.

(h) Taken from the 219. Letter of the collection of Letters written to Goldaſt, Printed in 1688.]

(i) See Mollerus hypomn. ad Alb. Barthol. de ſcriptis Danorum pag. 255.

(k) 'Tis the 260. of the above mention'd collection;

ULEFELD, or ULFELD (CORNIFIDS, or CORFITS) Grand-Son † to the foregoing, was one of the greateſt Genius's of the XVII. Century; and if he had not tarniſhed his Reputation for want of Fidelity to his Sovereign, he might juſtly have been reckoned amongſt the greateſt Men. Chriſtian IV. King of Denmark made him || Viceroy of Norway, high Steward of his Realms, and heaped on him all the Graces that a (A) Favourite could hope for. He choſe him for his Son in Law, by Marrying him to Elenor his Natural (B) Daughter. This Son in Law of the King was his Embaſſador in France in 1647. Frederick III. the Son and Succeſſor of Chriſtian IV. could not bear the Spirit and Conduct of Count Ulefeld; he obſerved too much Ambition in him, and it was ſcarce poſſible for the King to avoid reſenting the vigorous Zeal of the Count for maintaining the Privileges of (C) the Nobility at his acceſſion to the Throne. However, the high Steward was ſent Embaſſadour to Holland in 1649. in order * to make a Treaty there concerning the paſſage of the Sound; and his Negotiation not happening to pleaſe at home, he grew diſguſted, and kept his Chamber above ſix (D) Months on pretence of Sickneſs. He was accuſed in 1651. of having attempted to poiſon (E) the King †, but the

† I don't affirm it; I only believe it.

|| Sorbiere's Relation of England, p. 147.

* Sorbiere ibid. pag. 149.

† Parival's Hiſt. du Siecle de fer, Tom. 1. pag. 490.

Obſerve that Mr. Konig is utterly in the wrong concerning our James Ulfeld. (a) He makes him the Author of an Embaſſy to Poland written in the Year 1627. By which he is Guilty of two Faults: for James was dead at the time of the Publication of the firſt Edition in 1608. and his Book is not a Relation of an Embaſſy to Poland. But as he on one hand aſcribes a Relation to him which he did not write, on the other he robs him of the Hodœporicum Ruthenicum, to beſtow it on an imaginary Perſon called (b) James Danus; that is, Mr. Konig miſtakes Danus, which here is a National epithet given to the Writer of this Hodœporicum by Goldaſt, for the Sir-Name of an Author. Mr. Mollerus (c) hath noted almoſt all theſe miſtakes of Mr. Konig.

(A) That a Favourite could hope for.] The Hiſtorical Novel which I ſhall hereafter cite informs me that he became the Favourite of Chriſtian the IV. not only on Account of his Merit, but by the Intereſt of his Father, who was great Chancellor and governed the Kingdom. This high Chancellor was deſcended from one of the firſt and moſt Ancient Houſes of the Realm, which was ſolely Honoured with the Dignity of Count by a grant from the Emperor. Cornifix Ulfeld was the tenth Son: The manner how he came to be known by his Father, who thought for a long time that he was loſt, is romantick. See the Hiſtorical Novel. I can't tell whether it is poſſible to reconcile what has been juſt now related concerning the Dignity of Count, with a little Latin (d) Book which ſays that Cornifix Ulfeld flying for Refuge to Chriſtina Queen of Sweden, and having lent her great Sums of Money, acquired her Protection and Favour, and the Title of Count.

(B) His natural Daughter.] (e) " The King
" after the Death of the Queen became enamour-
" ed on a Beautiful Lady whoſe Name was Chriſti-
" na, of the Ancient Family of Monck, and not be" ing able to obtain any Favour from her, Married
" her with all the Formalities requiſite to a lawful " Marriage, in the preſence of the Court and Se" nate; but one Clauſe of the Contract was, that " the Children which ſhould proceed from this " Marriage ſhould not be Princes, but obliged to " content themſelves with the Quality of Counts of " Sleſwick and Holſtein, of which dignity they
" ſhould bear the Name and Arms. " This Prince attempted to divorce her for certain things ſhe had done out of Jealouſy: The cauſe lay before the Senate. Annibal Seeſted pleaded the King's cauſe; and the Count of Ulfeld pleaded for the Queen, and carried the cauſe (f). The Latin Book which I have cited ſays that ſhe was actually divorced, and that the King afterwards grew in Love (g) with the Bed-Chamber Lady (h) to his divorced Queen, and had a Son and a Daughter by her. The Son called Ulricus Chriſtian Guldenleeuw bore Arms under the King of Spain, and did wonders at Copenhagen when it was beſieged by the Swedes. The Daughter was Married to Claudius Alfeld a Gentleman of Holſtein. The ſame Book informs us that the Reaſon why the King hated his Wife, and loved her Bed-Chamber Lady, was becauſe ſhe diſcovered to him that the Queen deſigned to Poiſon him: Which was revenged on this accuſer after her Death; for Count Ulefeld would not permit the celebration of her Funeral, but ſent her out of Town at Night to be Buried in the Burying place of the Poor. She ſurvived the King but few days, dying with Melancholy, as is (i) reported.

(C) For maintaining the Privileges of the Nobility.] An Author whom I have cited (k) ſaith that the mildneſs of Chriſtian IV. —— " and the " Charms of Peace, made the Nobility and People " neglect many Privileges which they propoſed to " re-eſtabliſh in full force, when " they elected Frederick III. and that the high Steward was obliged by his poſt —— to hold out ſtoutly; for he repreſented all the Nobility of the Realm, and had a Negative Voice in Council: So that as nothing could paſs without his Conſent, the ſtyle of the Placarts ran, and the Ordinances were notified as made by the King and the high Steward. He adds (l) as a conjecture, that beſides the intereſt, which Count Ulefeld ". had
" in ſupporting the Privileges of that Body, he
" alſo conſidered thoſe of his own Family, and " the Enmity betwixt the Children of the Royal " Family, by Reaſon of the inequality of their " Rank, and of the Jealouſy which the late King's
" paſſion for the Counteſs Eleonor had ſown. " The Author of the Hiſtorical Novel, notwithſtanding the part of a Panegyriſt and Apologiſt which he all along acts, ſtill owns, that the Count at his Wife's perſuaſion had ſome thoughts of cauſing himſelf to be elected King after the Death of Chriſtian IV. and that he made ſome attempts that way: But finding his meaſures broken, he dexterouſly turned the courſe of Affairs, and promoted the Election of Prince Frederick on ſuch Conditions as would allow him to Share the Authority with him, under pretext of preſerving the privileges of the Nobility, of which as high Steward he was chief.

(D) Kept his Chamber above ſix Months.] Sorbiere calls this a Fault, for at Court, ſaith he (m), no Man ought ever to quit an advantageous poſt, nor retire on any pretext whatſoever; he ought not to loſe the track of Buſineſs, nor uſe People to go on without him, much leſs give them the Advantage of his abſence. But his blaming this Conduct, did not hinder him from taking his part ſo zealouſly, that his Daniſh Majeſty's Embaſſador complained of it at the Court of France. The Conſequence of which was that Sorbiere was baniſhed to Nantes. This Author had formerly Dedicated a Book to (n) Count Ulefeld, for which he had doubtleſs received a good reward; which engaged him to inſert in his Voyage an Epiſode in Juſtification of this Lord. He was not well informed of all the particulars of this cauſe; the detention of the Count in the Iſland of Bornholm, and the Liberty granted him to go and live in the Iſle of Funen, were unknown to Sorbiere.

(E) Of having attempted to Poiſon the King.] The Author

(a) Konig. bibl. pag. 811.

(b) Konig ib. p. 235.

(c) Mollerus ubi ſupra pag. 255.

(d) It is intitled Machinationum Cornificii Ulefeldii ſuccincta narratio.

(e) An Hiſtorical Novel, intituled Le Comte d'Ulfeld, Printed at Paris in 1677.

(f) Ibid.

(g) Fuit hæc Chriſtinæ cujus ſupra meminimus à cubiculis; quumque Regi revelaſſet ipſi à Domina ſua venenum parari, Rex illam, REPUDIATA Chriſtina, ejus loco amavit.

(h) Her Name was Wibicha.

(i) Et Mulier, [illegible]

(k) Sorbiere Relat. d'Angleterre pag. m. 14[illegible]

(l) Id. ib. pag. 15[illegible]

(m) Id. ib. pag. 15[illegible]

(n) The French Tranſlation of Hobbes's Treatiſe de Cive, 164[illegible] the Woman who accuſed him (F) not being able to make good her Accuſation, was beheaded. Which yet did not hinder his ſecretly retiring with his Wife and Children out of the Kingdom, and going to Sweden, where he was extraordinary well receiv'd by Queen (G) Chriſtina. He diſcover'd a great deal of Ardour for the Service of Sweden, which would not have been criminal, if he had not endeavour'd it to the prejudice of his Country. His Counſels were wonderfully advantageous to Charles (H) Guſtavus; and it is inexpreſſible how effectually the politick Machinations which he practiſed, advanced that Prince's Conqueſts in Denmark. He was one of the Commiſſioners at the Treaty of Roſchild, as he would have been afterwards at Copenhagen, if the French (I) Ambaſſador had not entreated the King

Author of the Hiſtorical Novel, pretends that a Woman, named Dina, was ſuborned to declare that the Count and Counteſs of Ulefelt had ſollicited her to poiſon the King, the Queen, and all the Royal Family; and that the Count ſo judiciouſly defended himſelf in full Council, that Dina, and Captain Weller who had introduced her, were fully convicted of bearing falſe Witneſs, and condemned, ſhe to be beheaded, and he to perpetual baniſhment; which Sentences were executed. If this Relation be compared with that of a (a) Modern Hiſtorian, who tells us, That one Colonel Valter was alſo ſuſpected, who having defended his Innocence, cauſed the ſaid Count Ulefelt to be ſummoned; but inſtead of appearing before his Majeſty, he privily retired with his Wife, and went into Holland, and from thence afterwards into Sweden: If I ſay, ſuch a Compariſon were made, one would be apt to think that this Hiſtorian had confounded the Story. He ſeems to hint that the Count and the Colonel were both ſuſpected of the ſame Crime; but that is not true. The Hiſtorical Novel doth not ſay that the Count firſt retired into Holland; it ſays that he would have gone into Poland, but that being informed at Dantzick that the King of Poland refuſed him his leave, he went into Sweden. The Latin Book makes him firſt retire to Amſterdam, and afterwards to Sweden, and adds, that at Stralſund, he publiſhed an Apology for his Conduct; and that after the Abdication of Chriſtina, he went to live in Pomerania.

(F) The Woman who accuſed him.] Her Name was Dina; ſhe was a beautiful Woman, and by Profeſſion a Lady of pleaſure, for ſhe declared before the Judges, that ſhe had had a Child by Count Ulefelt. The little Latin Tract relates theſe particulars differently from Parival, in the following manner. Dina waited on the Count by means of a private Stair-caſe, and lay with him unknown to the Counteſs. Early one Morning the Counteſs entred her Husband's Chamber, and ſhewed him a Poyſon which Sperlingius a Phyſician had prepared (b). They mutually concerted the means to give it to the King. Dina heard all this Diſcourſe, being hid in the Bed, in order to avoid being ſurpriz'd by the Counteſs. She imparted this Story to a (c) Colonel, on whom ſhe frequently beſtow'd her Favours; wherefore he muſt needs make his Court with it to the King his Maſter, who cauſed Dina to be brought before him, from whom he heard all the particulars. The Judges examined her, before whom ſhe owned the ſame thing, and particularly confeſſed that ſhe had a Child by the Count; but when the thing came before the Council of State, where the Count himſelf defended his own Cauſe, Dina retracted all ſhe had ſaid, was declared guilty of Calumny, and condemned to loſe her Head; which was afterwards placed upon a Pole without the City (d). It is highly probable that ſhe was ſuborned; for would he not have been more ſtupid than a brute Beaſt, to have talked of ſuch a dangerous Affair when he knew it was within the hearing of a Whore? It is indeed the Prerogative of Sovereigns, which allows them to give ſerious attention to the Depoſitions of a Whore, when their Lives are concern'd; and it is true, that theſe ſort of Creatures have ſometimes revealed Conſpiracies (e). It is juſt that Monarchs ſhould enjoy this Prerogative, for the Publick good is preferable to the obſervations of Formalities; and conſequently we ought not to be ſhocked at the ſight of 20 or 30 Conſpirators cut into Quarters on the Evidence of their Accomplices, tho' the Accuſers loaded with Riches and Rewards, are ſometimes greater Criminals than the Accuſed, and have by numerous Artifices engaged the latter in the Conſpiracy. The Whore, ſay ſome, ought to be chaſtiſed, but the Bawd who accuſed her ought to ſhare in her Puniſhment. I anſwer that this Maxim ſhould not be extended to privileged Caſes, ſuch as the puniſhing of State Crimes. Salus Populi ſuprema lex eſto.

(G) Extraordinary well received by Queen Chriſtina.] To this purpoſe Mr. de Wicquefort relates two remarkable Stories. I ſhall content my ſelf with hinting at one of them. It is an Artifice (f) by which that Queen ſo far impoſed on the Daniſh Ambaſſador, as to gain an opportunity for Ulefeld to ſay all he could for his juſtification in his preſence: but the other Story I ſhall relate without curtailing it. (g) The Daniſh Ambaſſador, to prove that Ulefeld was unworthy of Chriſtina's protection, one day told that Queen that the High Steward had converted to his own uſe the ſum of five and twenty thouſand Crowns, which the King his Maſter had order'd him to remit for the King of England in his neceſſity. The Queen reply'd, that if the High Steward aſſured her, that he had cauſed that ſum to be paid to the King of England, ſhe would believe it; and that if the latter denyed it ſhe would ſay he lyed; and that if a dozen of ſuch Kings as he ſhould affirm it, ſhe would ſay that they all twelve lyed. And ſince the King of Denmark would not re-eſtabliſh the High-Steward in the poſſeſſion of his Eſtate, ſhe would give him ſo much that he ſhould not repent his loſs in Denmark. The Daniſh Ambaſſador boldly reply'd, that her Majeſty might, if ſhe pleaſed, give him the half of her Realm without his Maſter's ſaying any thing againſt it; but that would not prevent his taking Ulefeld for the moſt Infamous and Perfidious of all men. This happened in 1654. Mr. de Wicquefort doth not cite his Author; but I find he took this from Mr. Chanut's Memoirs, where theſe two Stories are told with more circumſtances neceſſary to be known, than thoſe in Mr. de Wicquefort's Book. We are informed of ſeveral other particulars relating to Count Ulefeld in thoſe Memoirs. (h)

(H) Wonderfully advantageous to Charles Guſtavus.] See pag. 98, 99. of the Chevalier de Terlon's Memoirs; and in pag. 151. are theſe remarkable words. "Count Ulefeld, who knew the Humour "of the Nation, adviſed the King of Sweden re"ligiouſly to preſerve the People of Schonen in the "Privileges which they enjoyed under the King "of Denmark. This was good advice, and per"haps if it had been followed this Second War "had been more ſucceſsful. This Gentleman "had before told us, That the King of Swe"den was very angry when he heard that theſe "Privileges were violated: But that the diſplea"ſure which he ſhewed did him no ſervice at Co"penhagen, where it was only taken for a Bait to "induce them to ſurrender that City."

(I) If the French Ambaſſador had not entreated the King to Name another.] The relation of this Story with a few more Circumſtances will not be diſagreeable. "(i) The Marſhal and Duke of "Grammont, and Mr. de Lyonne, who were "then at Francfort your Majeſty's Ambaſſadors ex"traordinary, and Plenipotentiaries for the Ele"ction of the Emperor, wrote to me to diſſuade "the King of Sweden from nominating Count "Ulefeld for the Negotiations of Copenhagen, as "he had been for thoſe of Roſchild. To which this "Prince was willing to conſent, when I urged "that he would be pleaſed not to give the King of "Denmark the uneaſineſs of ſeeing one of his diſ"affected Subjects treat for his Enemies in the "very

---

(a) Parival, Tom. [illegible] pag. [illegible]

(b) In [illegible] Otto[illegible] Sperlingii, M. D. [illegible] Regis Daniæ Friderici III. tentati veneficii ſuſpicione [illegible] Corfitz Ulefelt, [illegible] Patriæ Regnique [illegible] vent, quo de Relatione [illegible] Anno 1661. publicata videri poteſt, nec non [illegible] dem (Ulefeldi) Apologia Relationi oppoſita, Annoque ſequenti 1662. Stralſundiæ edita, cui cauſas ſubjunxit, quæ neceſſitatem [illegible] impoſuerunt & allegarunt, ut ad tempus Daniæ excederet. Yuchim de [illegible] pag. 4[illegible]

(c) George Walter.

(d) Ex Machinat. ſuccincta relat.

(e) Fulvia, for inſtance, who diſcovered that of Catilina, apud Salluſtium.

(f) De l'Ambaſſadeur & de ſes fonctions, tom. 2. pag. 141. See Chanut's Memoirs, tom. 3. from pag. 342. to pag. 349 Dutch Edition. The Author of the Hiſtorical Novel relates this quite otherwiſe, and to the Ambaſſador's confuſion.

(g) Wicquefort ibid. pag. 171. See Chanut's Memoirs tom. 3. from pag. 292. to pag. 295.

(h) See the 3d Tome, pag. 74, 97, 98, 100, 420, 240, 364.

(i) Memoirs de Terlon, pag. 1[illegible]

King to name another. At laſt he fell into diſgrace (K) with the Swedes, who cauſed him to be put in Priſon. Whence he * had come out in a glorious manner, if he had not been ſo impatient, and given credit to ſome Reports that the Swedes deſigned to bring him to his Tryal. Theſe were falſe Reports; for they had given their word to the French Ambaſſador that he ſhould be ſet at liberty. The Ambaſſador had written about it becauſe the King of Denmark demanded that Count, † as being included in the Treaty. The impreſſions which this falſe Rumour wrought on the Mind of the Priſoner, were the cauſe why he try'd ſeveral Expedients to deceive his Guards, in which (L) he ſucceeded; he eſcaped out of the Priſon of Malmoe, and went to Copenhagen, without having obtained the remiſſion of all that he had done againſt his Prince. His Counteſs came thither ſome time after, when Frederick III. who had very cunningly diſſembled his deſign of ſecuring their Perſons, cauſed them both to be Arreſted, and ſent them to the Iſle of Bornholm; but out of his Clemency, he permitted them to live in the Iſland of Funen, after the receipt of a Letter * which the Count wrote to him. In which he acknowledged his Crimes, and only implored the Mercy of his Sovereign, to whom for the future he promiſed abſolute Submiſſion. Some time after he was permitted to travel out of the Kingdom; he went to the Spaw-waters ‖, from thence to Paris incognito, and afterwards to Bruges, where he reſolved to winter with his Family; but he was oblig'd

" very City of his Reſidence, and brave his Sovereign in his Misfortune; what I ſaid to the " King of Sweden engaged him to ſubſtitute the " Sieur Cyet inſtead of the Count. „

(K) Into Diſgrace with the Swedes.] Some Authors report, (a) That the Swedes to rid themſelves of Count Ulefeld, whoſe great Abilities they feared, and withal not being able to recompence his good Services, accuſed him of Treaſon, in order to ſeize his great Riches. The Author who ſpeaks thus, had been ſaying that the Swedes had condemned this Count to a perpetual Impriſonment; and therefore he muſt needs have been ignorant of his incluſion in the Treaty of Peace; ſee the Text of this Article. Now amongſt the things of which he was deprived by the King of Sweden, we muſt not forget the Library which (b) formerly belonged to Sepheldt, a Daniſh Senator. The King of Sweden found it in the Caſtle of Reinſtedt, of which this Senator, who was Count Ulefeld's mortal Enemy, was Governor, and preſented it to the Count, who at the entreaty of the Chevalier de Terlon, was willing to reſtore it to the Senator for ſix thouſand Crowns. The Senator would not give that Sum, tho' his Library was valued at fifty thouſand Crowns, on account of the great number of very rare Manuſcripts and Curioſities which it contained. On his refuſal, Count Ulefeld cauſed it to be removed to Schonen, and after his confinement it was ſeized by the King and tranſported to Stockholm.

(L) He ſucceeded.] The Circumſtances of this Fact being very ſingular, I ſhall be particular in the relation of it. (c) " Count Ulefeld was a " Man of great Abilities, and very much conſidered in Denmark, and he was very ſenſible of it, " ſince he ventur'd to go to Copenhagen, without " knowing before-hand whether his Sovereign " would be pleaſed with it. The Priſoner, from " the day of his Confinement, ſo naturally acted " the Mute, and ſeemed ſo inſenſible of all the " Injuries done him, that it was impoſſible to draw " one word from him, when examined to draw " up his Indictment; and the methods he took " to deceive his Guards, who were always near " the Bed in which he pretended to be ſick, are almoſt incredible. And yet he himſelf made the " Cloaths in which he eſcaped to Copenhagen, which " was his Ruin; for if purſuant to what I cauſed to be ſaid to him, he had relyed on the " goodneſs of the King of Sweden for his Liberty, " he had avoided the diſgrace which fell on him; " and his Eſtate in Sweden had not been confiſcated, as well as that which belonged to him in " Denmark was afterwards. „ The Hiſtorical Novel aſſures us, 1. That by the Treaty of Rotſchild, the Count obtained a general Amneſty, and was to be re-inſtated in his Places and Eſtate. 2 That the King of Sweden having granted him leave to defend himſelf publickly before the Senate at Malmoe, and his indiſpoſition not permitting him to appear, his Counteſs Eleonora pleaded for him ſo ſtrenuouſly, (d) and with ſo much Eloquence, that the Judges pronounced Sentence of Abſolution. 3. That the King of Sweden confirmed this Sentence, and that Annibal Seſted his ſecret Enemy, made him afraid of a more cloſe confinement, and adviſed him to endeavour by all means to eſcape. I ought not to omit that according to the ſmall Latin Book, the Count's diſgrace happened after the death of Charles Guſtavus. It was after that King's death that the Count with ſome Senators of Malmoe, endeavoured to reſtore Schonen to the Danes. The ſame Book alſo ſaith, that he feigned himſelf affected with a Palſie on the Tongue during his Confinement. In cuſtodiam traditus eſt in qua quamdiu fuit, hemiplexiae morbum & vitiatam loquelam raro patientiae exemplo ſimulaſſe dicitur (e). This confirms what the Chevalier de Terlon relates, and what follows confirms another particular of which he informs us. Jam in eo fuit (Ulefeldius) intercedente apud Regem Sueciae Chriſtianiſſimi Regis legato, ſi unicum tantum octiduum diutius in cuſtodia ſe continuiſſet, ut libertati reſtitueretur. Quin literae quarum beneficio dimittendus eſſet à Regina matre Hedwiga Eleonora filii tutrice ac proceribus regni ſubſcripta eodem quo evaſerat momento, & hinc paulo ſerius allata circumferebantur (f).

I ſhall clear this as much as poſſible by Mr. Puffendorf's account of this Affair. He informs us that the Stratagem which Annibal Seſted made uſe of to prevent the Count's Re-eſtabliſhment in Sweden, and enjoyment of his Eſtate, was to perſuade the King of Denmark, his Maſter, who was ſending him into Sweden, to give him Orders to recommend the Count's Caſe to the Senators. Which he imagined would render him the more ſuſpected, becauſe he was accuſed of a Traiterous Plot in favour of the King of Denmark; ſo that no better means could have been imagined to make him appear Guilty, than the interceſſion of that King. This Stratagem of Seſted fell to the Ground. The Swedes took no notice of it, and were not willing to examine things rigorouſly after the War was ended, and after the King's death they declared Ulefeld acquitted. Then his Enemy had recourſe to another Stratagem; he went to Count Brahe and deſir'd that the Senate's Sentence of Abſolution might not be publiſhed, but put into his Hands in order to endear himſelf to (g) his Brother-in-law. But as ſoon as he had the Sentence in his poſſeſſion, impoſing on the Chevalier de Terlon (h) and Mr. Sidney (i), he made them believe, that the Senate of Sweden had condemned Ulefeld, and entreated them to give him immediately notice of it, that he might think of ſome ways of eſcaping the execution of the Sentence. The Letters which they wrote to him produced the effect that Seſted expected. The Priſoner eſcaped and went to Copenhagen, where he loſt that Liberty which he had juſt recovered (k). Mr Seſted ſeems to me to have run a bold riſque; for if theſe two Ambaſſadors whom he deceived, had diſcovered what he told 'em, vices, the Swediſh Senators would have known his malicious obliged to quit that place. His Son killed (M) Colonel Wolf. His Wife who retired to London, and quitted that City privately, was ſeized at Dover, and carried to Copenhagen, where we are told a horrid Conſpiracy was pretended to be diſcovered, (N) which he had formed againſt his Prince. And accordingly Sentence paſſed againſt him at Copenhagen, on the 24th of July 1663, by which, as Convicted of High Treaſon, he was condemned to Death. Which Sentence was executed in Effigie. They made a waxen Figure repreſenting him, which was carried on a Sledge to the publick place, where the Executioner cut off his Hand and his Head, and divided the Body into four Quarters, which were carried to the four Corners of the City ‖. Of which News the Count was informed at Bruges, and † departed the next day for (O) Baſil, where he lived Four or Five Months unknown, and almoſt always ſick. He left that Place, being informed that ſearch was made after him in order to take him; and tho' very ill, at Night he went into a ſmall Bark on the Rhine, in order to go to Briſac; but had ſcarce advanc'd two Leagues before the piercing Cold kill'd him. He was 60 years of age or thereabouts, and left three Sons, the eldeſt of which turned Roman Catholick, and lived with the Queen of Sweden. The ſecond became Knight of Malta; and the third, who was one of the handſomeſt and moſt Learned Gentlemen in Europe, lived in England. I have extracted the Account of theſe laſt Facts from an Hiſtorical Novel, Entituled, Le Comte d'Ulfeld, Printed at Paris in 1677, and Dedicated to the Duke of Montauſier, by an Author who calls himſelf Bourſeau de la Valette; from which I might have extracted a thouſand curious things; but I was afraid of confounding (P) Hiſtory with Romance. I have nevertheleſs made uſe of that Book in my Remarks. The Count is alſo frequently mention'd in (Q) Charles Ogier's Travels. The Counteſs his Widow died the 16th of March 1698. She could make Verſes, and ſhe has left a piece, which perhaps will be Printed *.

---

* Memoires du Chevalier de Terlon, pag. 301. Dutch Edition, see the Remark K.

† Memoires de Terlon ib.

* That Letter is dated the 8th of October, 1661. and is to be found in [illegible] tom. 1. p. 510.

‖ [illegible]

(a) See Varival. tom. 4. pag. 206. but it should be pag. 210.

(b) Memoires du Chev. de Terlon, pag. 105, 106.

(c) Memoires du Chevalier de Terlon. pag. 303. He had said pag. 99. that the Count had a vaſt Eſtate, a great Intereſt with the Nobility, and beſides, a great deal of Wit, and that he was one of the greateſt Men in the Kingdom.

(d) Her Speech may be ſeen in the Hiſtorical Novel.

(e) Machinat. ſuccinct. narrat. p. 28.

(f) Ibid. pag. [illegible]

(g) Count Ulefeld.

(h) The French Ambaſſador.

(i) The English Ambaſſador.

(k) Taken from Puffendorf in the life of Charles Guſtavus, lib. 6. n. 52. See the [illegible] Eruditorum, [illegible] pag. [illegible] as ſick in France, and made a noiſe about it: and conſequently he would have loſt his Reputation. Obſerve that it is impoſſible to reconcile the Relations of the Chevalier de Terlon and Mr. Puffendorf: One of them is certainly falſe.

ULYS-

(M) Colonel Wolf.] A modern Hiſtorian (a) whom I have already cited, ſaith, that Colonel Wolf being in a Coach with his Wife, Count Ulefeld's Son came cloſe to him, and ſaluted him very courteouſly, and at the ſame time ſtabbed him to the Heart with a Dagger at the inſtant that he was telling his Wife, who it was that ſo cloſely approached him. The Aſſaſſin was ſo fortunate as to eſcape. The Colonel being Governor of the Iſle of Bornholm, had not ſo ſtrictly guarded Count Ulefeld, but he found an opportunity to eſcape; but he was ſeized juſt as he was embarking, and cloſely confined to a Priſon, very much below a Man of his Quality (b): And no compaſſionate regard was had to him, for fear he ſhould once more eſcape. This was the cauſe of the hatred which the Count and his Family had conceived againſt the Colonel.

(N) A horrid Conſpiracy.] It is related (c) that the Elector of Brandenburg acquainted King Frederick III. that Count Ulefeld had writ to him, That if he would lend him a vigorous aſſiſting hand, he would dethrone the King and his Heirs, and cauſe the Crown to devolve on his head. For, ſaid he, I have ſo many of the Clergy and Laity, who will declare on my ſide, that it will render this Enterprize eaſie. The Sentence of Death pronounced againſt him, mentions their having Proofs of this; but this Elector is not therein named.

(O) For Baſil.] According to the ſmall Latin Tract, he there pretended to be Governor to three Dutch Gentlemen, and was not known till one of his Sons had a Quarrel with a Zurich Captain. He had his Three Sons and a Daughter with him, his Lady was in Priſon at Copenhagen. When he found himſelf diſcovered he embarked on the Rhine alone, and died on board in February 1664. not far from Newburg. The Boat-men carried him to a Convent near that place, whither his Sons came with the utmoſt expedition, in order to ſave the Jewels he had about him, and cauſed him to be buried under a tree in the middle of a Field.

(P) Of confounding Hiſtory with Romance.] Tho' the Author of the Hiſtorical Novel aſſures us, That all there is very true, and that he hath written nothing but what he had from the information of the moſt able and unintereſted Perſons, I cannot yet help believing that there are ſome Romantick embelliſhments in that Work. The Counteſs Eleonora owned (d) that her Story ſavoured very much of a Romance: He who heard her ſay this, having related ſomething of that Hiſtory, adds, that (†) with ſome Epiſodes, might be a very fit Subject for a Romance. And doubtleſs, the Author of the Hiſtorical Novel formed himſelf on that Idea. I will not throughly examin the Facts, which this Author always turns to the Advantage of his Hero, and ſometimes (e) ſo roughly aginſt the Perſon of King Frederick, that he a thouſand times more than Sorbiere, deſerved the Complaints of the Daniſh Ambaſſador at the Court of France: But I may probably be allowed to take for a Romantick Thought, that ſeverity ſufficient to make the boldeſt Man tremble, with which the Count was looked on when he made his firſt Declaration of love to the Counteſs Eleonora, to whom, ſaith the Author, the name of Love appeared ſo ſtrange, that ſhe formed a diſmal Idea of it. I do not make the ſame judgment of the Count's exclamation, when born down with Misfortune, he cry'd out, O God! when wilt thou ceaſe to afflict me? Nature is too viſible here, this looks like a true Hiſtory, whilſt the other looks like invention only. The Propoſal of an under Match or of a diſhonourable Love, might have occaſioned this terrible menacing Severity; but the Count, a perſon richly endowed with all the Perfections of Body and Mind, and one of the beſt Matches the Counteſs could ever hope for, courted her in order to marriage. Whence then could proceed this thundring ſeverity which our Author mentions but from the imaginary Territories of Romances? where (f) a Declaration of Love is followed by an immediate reſentiment, which appears by our Bluſhes (as Moliere put into the Mouth of an affected Lady) and which, for a time, baniſhes the Lover from our preſence. But at laſt he pacifies us, and inſenſibly inures us to the Diſcourſe of his tender Paſſion, and extorts from us the conſent which we have much ado to give.

(Q) In Charles Ogier's Travels.] Charles Ogier the worthy Brother of that great Preacher Francis Ogier, travelled to Denmark and Sweden with the Count d'Avaux, Ambaſſador from Lewis XIII. They left Paris on the 11th of July in 1634. The Relation of this Voyage is very curious, and well written. In which amongſt other

(d) Relat. de Sorbiere pag. 146.

(†) Ibid. pag. 153.

(e) In the Memoirs of the Chevalier de Terlon ſome Encomiums are beſtowed upon that Prince, which are directly contrary to the Slanders of the Hiſtorical Novel.

(f) Moliere in his Precieuſes ridicules, act 1. ſc. 4. p. m 14. of the 1ſt. Tome.

ULYSSES, One of the moſt celebrated Generals of the Grecian Army at the Siege of Troy. Mr. Delincourt ‡ hath imparted to me ſo many (A) excellent Memoirs concerning this Hero of the Odyſſes, that I am extremely ſorry that I cannot ſpare the Place which they deſerve. And it being better to ſay nothing on great Subjects, than to ſpeak of them by halves, I have deferred this Article to another time, and am very much concerned that this Learned Man himſelf could not enrich the Publick with this excellent Portraicture of Ulyſſes, as he hath already obliged the World with that of Achilles, of which we have ſeen three Editions.

VOLKELLIUS (John) a Socinian ‡ Miniſter born at Grimma in Miſnia, was one of the moſt Learned of that Sect. Some Letters which Socinus wrote to him are Publiſhed, the firſt of which is dated the 3d of April 1593 *. He wrote one to him ‖ in 1596, upon Volkelius's declaring, that he did not think that Socinus had intirely refuted Francis David's Arguments. He publiſhed in 1613 an Anſwer ‖, and a Reply † to Smiglecius; but his principal Work is that de vera Religione, of which (B) a great many Copies were burnt at Amſterdam by order of the Magiſtrates, the 20th of January 1642. I have ſomething things we find that Count Ulefeld being contracted to the Daughter of the King his Maſter, and being afflicted with an Ulcer in his Thigh, made a very great Scruple of approaching a Lady of the Blood Royal before he was cured. Wherefore he took a Journey into France in order to put himſelf into the Hands of an able Chirurgeon, to whom Mr. d'Avaux recommended him. (a) Ulfeldius crure laborabat inſanabiliter, ex ſententia ſcilicet omnium ſuæ nationis Medicorum, qui tamen anno poſtea, cum ſe ex conſilio Legati noſtri Lutetiam contuliſſet, ab eximio Chirurgo P. Judæo ſanatum eſt. Alter mihi videbatur ille Philoctetes, adeo acutis interdum doloribus cruciabatur: alioquin, cum per benigniorum temporum intervalla, vis mali paululum reſederat, innitebatur baculo. Ceterum tanta hominis virtus ac dignitas fuit, ut dilectiſſimam illi Rex Daniæ Filiam Leonoram deſponderit: at ille tam eximiæ puellæ thalamis cruo putridum inferre reveritus, antequam nuptiæ celebrarentur, operæ pretium duxit, ſi ſe laborioſæ curationis carnificinæ, ac periculis devoveret.

(A) So many excellent Memoirs concerning this Hero of the Odyſſes.] He hath collected whatever hath been ſaid for or againſt the Prince of Ithaca, and hath very methodically digeſted it. It is a Collection of Erudition and Criticiſms, which would ſurprize even thoſe who are beſt verſed in the Antient Greek and Latin Authors. Copiouſneſs and Exactneſs, Sagacity and Method, Memory and Judgment ſhine ſo brightly in this Work, that it is impoſſible to determin which of theſe Excellencies appear in the greateſt Luſtre.

(B) That de vera Religione, of which a great number of Copies were burnt.] It was Printed at Racovia in 1630, after the Author's Death. And the Sect judging it proper that this Work ſhould contain a complete Syſtem of the Socinian Doctrine, and finding it defective in ſome particulars, appointed Crellius to add as a Supplement, his Treatiſe of God and the Divine Attributes. He having executed this Commiſſion; what he wrote made the firſt part of the Work, and is the firſt of the ſix Books which compoſe it. Several are of Opinion that Socinianiſm hath not produced any thing more dangerous than this Volume, and for that reaſon doubtleſs, when Printed at Amſterdam, it was thought very neceſſary to expoſe it to the moſt ſevere Juſtice. (b) The Scout of Amſterdam ſeized 450 Copies which he found in the Bookſeller's hands; and prevailed with the Judges to confiſcate them, and fine the Bookſeller (c); Eight days after which they were publickly burnt. Curcellæus having writ this News to Ruarus the 8th of February 1642, adviſed him on the 12th of April following, that the (d) new Schepens had cancelled the Sentence of their Predeceſſors, and order'd it to be taken out of the Regiſters; inſomuch that the Bookſeller who had not yet paid his Fine, came off with the loſs of his Books only. Notwithſtanding which, he was ſo terrified thereby, that it was thought he would not eaſily be induced to Publiſh any Book of that nature again. Curcellæus paſſionately deſired that ſome able Perſon would write againſt the Proceedings of the Schepens of Amſterdam. (f) Utinam veſtrum aliquis præceps Scabinorum noſtrorum judicium vellet expendere, & iſtos librorum incendiarios peccati ſui coarguere. Si quem noveris ei rei idoneum, urgeat aggrediatur.

The two letters of this Remonſtrant Miniſter, ſincerely written in Confidence to Ruarus, ſhew the Falſity of Mr. Stoupp's conjecture. Read what follows, which I cite from the Copy which Mr. Des Maizeaux has been pleaſed to ſend me, and not as in the 1. Edition, where I inſerted this paſſage exactly as Mr. Arnauld publiſhed it in the 46 page of the 2. part of his Apology for the Catholicks. He hath curtailed and altered ſeveral places, and yet makes uſe of the Italick Character, without taking Notice of any deficiency. Which is not like an exact Author. " (g) The " Socinian Books were very ſcarce till a very few " Years paſt. Thoſe which were publiſhed, were " Printed in very diſtant places, and in ſmall
" Numbers, ſo that they could not be got but
" at a very dear rate, and moſt of them were " not to be come at on any Terms. The States
" General by their goodneſs and ſpecial Favour,
" and a very particular tenderneſs of Conſcience,
" remedied this inconveniency. And to ſatisfy
" the Socinians, and thoſe who were willing to " embrace their Opinions, freely permitted the " Printing at Amſterdam of four of their principal Authors, Viz. Socinus, Crellius, Slichtingius, and Wolzogenius. This Collection of " Socinian Writers in Eight Volumes in Folio
" is at preſent publickly Sold at Amſterdam for one " Hundred Gilders. And but very few Years
" ſince an inconſiderable parcel of theſe Books " would have coſt two Hundred Piſtoles, whereas
" all of 'em may be had at preſent for leſs than " ten. It is indeed true that ſometime ſince a " Socinian Book was burned at Amſterdam, doubtleſs at the interceſſion of Bleau himſelf who " Printed it (b). A few days after this Execution he publickly expoſed the ſame Book " to Sale; and to recommend it to the Buyer,
" and enhance the Price, inſerted in the Title
" Page, that it was the ſame Book which by order " of the States, had been burnt by the Hands of the " common Executioner."

Several particulars of this paſſage are juſtly to be objected againſt. In the I. place Mr. Stoupp ough to have known that the States General don't meddle with the Government of Amſterdam; they are not empowered to permit or prohibit the Bookſellers in the Province of Holland in any particular. II. It is not true that the States General, nor the States of Holland, permitted the Printing of Socinian Books. The Works of the 4 principal Doctors, whereof Mr. Stoupp ſpeaks, were privately Printed; of which ſee the particulars in the Apology (i) for the Religion of the Dutch. III. It is utterly falſe that (l) William Bleau made intereſt for the burning of this Socinian Book:

‡ [illegible] Leyden, Alii Eccleſias [illegible] de bello Jugurthino.

‡ Eccleſiæ Philippovienſis, poſt Smalcium Paſtor, [illegible] Amſterdami. Pag. 95.

(a) Carol. Ogerius in Itinere Danico, p. 67. edit. Pariſ. 1656, in 8vo.

(b) Steph. Curcellæus epiſtola ad Ruarum. In the 86th of the Firſt Century of Ruarus's Letters, p. 407.

(c) Of 1200 Gilders.

(d) See the 87 Letter of the 1ſt. Century of Ruarus's Letters, pag. 408, 409.

(e) Ita illo conſternati eſſe (Cæſii, that is the Sieurs Blaew) ut non facile poſthac ejuſmodi ſint libros excuſuri. Id. p. 409.

ſomething to offer concerning this Fact, which is not exactly repreſented in the Book Intitled La Religion des Hollandois.

VORSTIUS (CONRAD) was born at Cologne the 19. of July 1569. His Father who was a Dyer, had not yet broke off from the Church of Rome; wherefore he cauſed him to be Baptized at his Pariſh Church. Soon after he privately joyned with the Proteſtant Church, to which he brought over his Wife. He had ten Children, and deſigned this Son a Learned Education. He Learned Grammar, and a little Rhetorick at the Village of Bedberdyk, where he ſtaid five Years, after which he went to Duſſeldorp in 1583. where he continued his School Studies, till 1586. He ſpent the following Year at Cologne in Curcellæus's two Letters clearly prove that the Sieurs Bleaw were very Sorry for the burning of Volkelius's Book; and I ſhall borrow ſome freſh evidences of this truth, from the Author who refuted Mr. Stoupp. "(a) It was not William, but John Bleau who Printed it. But how impertinent is it to conjecture that this Bleau entreated the Magiſtrates to burn this Book? If only a Dozen Copies had been burned, it might be ſaid, that your narrow ſuſpicious Soul, might have found ſome excuſable pretext for this Malicious conjecture: But you ought to know that the Officer who had orders to burn this Book, ſeized Mr. Bleau at one of his Friends Houſes, where he then was, and cauſed him to be guarded by ſome Sergeants, whilſt he went directly to the Ware-houſe where he found all the Copies, and cauſed them to be (b) immediately burnt. And half a day was entirely ſpent only in throwing the Books into the Fire, till the Flames had conſumed the whole Number, which redounded to the great damage of Mr. Bleau, beſides he was fined two (c) Thouſand Gilders." IV. It is falſe that a few days or any time after this Publick Execution, the ſame Bookſeller publickly Sold this Book of Volkelius, and that he inſerted in the Title, that it was the ſame Book which had been Condemned publickly to be burnt by the Hands of the common Executioner. The Perſon that furniſhed Mr. Stoupp with Memoirs confounded the Fact, and the whole foundation of this Fable was: That Volkelius's Book was Printed in Dutch at (d) Rotterdam in 1649. and it was in the Title that the Schepens had ordered it to be burned in Holland in 1642. The Apologiſt for the Religion of the Dutch obſerves that (e) one Colom, and not the Sieurs Bleau, put this in the Title; but that this Tranſlation was notwithſtanding prohibited by the States. Mareſius obſerves, that this Additional clauſe in the Title was a bait which the Socinians laid, to promote the Sale of the Book: (f) Quantum præſidii in eo reponant clancularii teterrimæ Hæreſeos emiſſarii & promotores, palam fecerunt ante biennium, illo in Belgicum idioma tranſlato, & quò ad ejus lectionem magis invitarentur homines præpoſterè curioſi, quibus ſolemne niti in vetitum ſemper cupereque negata, præfixo hoc Elogio, quod opus illud eſſet, in Hollant by Schepen vonniſſe gedoemt, openbaerlijck geexecuteert, en met vyer verbrant anno 1642. in Januario. The Synods of Holland did not forget this Addition to the Title in the Remonſtrance which I have mentioned in another place (g): In which they complain'd that ſeveral Socinian Books were Tranſlated into Dutch; and in the laſt place they quoted Volkelius. Denique Crellius de Deo & ejus attributis & Volkelii quinque libri de vera religione: & ad irridendum zelum piorum judicum pro Deo, perverſoſque homines eò magis alliciendum, in frontiſpicio poſuerunt in Hollandia ſententia Scabinorum eum librum damnatum & publice combuſtum eſſe anno 1642. menſe Januario.

Stiat

It is certain that this Book of Volkelius was never Printed by its ſelf in Latin after the burning of it in the Year 1642. But it was Printed intire in the Hydra Socinianiſmi expugnata, publiſhed at (h) Groningen by Samuel Mareſius. This Orthodoxy Profeſſor attempting the Refutation of the Socinian Syſtem, was reſolved to leave no Room to ſuſpect that he had weakened his Adverſary's Arguments. Therefore he Publiſhed them at large without any omiſſion, and ſubjoyned his refutation to the ſame Pages. By which means his Readers had a fair Opportunity of comparing Hereſy and Orthodoxy without any pretence that the Hereſy was not there expreſſed in full force and Vigour. It muſt be owned this is the moſt frank and ingenuous way of anſwering an Adverſary. It ſhews that the Author relies on the goodneſs of his Cauſe, and the ſtrength of his Pen. It prevents all ſuſpicions of partiality; and we have really Reaſon to be jealous on this head in Thouſands and Thouſands of caſes; for it happens but too often that an Author unfairly repreſents the Arguments which he deſigns to confute. He ſeems not to have ſeen what he thinks he is not able to refute; and when he cannot avoid mentioning ſome particulars, he yet omits ſome eſſential terms. In a Word, ſuppoſe as long as you pleaſe that a Controverſiſt acts fairly, you will never be able to perſuade the World, that looſe paſſages which he cites out of the piece he refutes, are an impartial Repreſentation of the ſtrength of that Work, which commonly conſiſts in the connexion of its parts. Wherefore Mareſius took the moſt proper Meaſures in the World by inſerting the whole Book, which was burned, in his Anſwer. He ſilenced the Heretical boaſters, and deprived them of the pretext of Reproaching the true Church with mean ſhifts, or inſulting the Orthodox, as Men who not daring to look their Enemies in the Face, and knowing themſelves unable to make head againſt 'em, implored the aſſiſtance of the Secular Power to reduce to Aſhes a Book whoſe Objections they could not overthrow. Some ill Tongues have ventured to ſay, that this Profeſſor took this Method only in compliance to the Bookſeller, who was abſolute in that caſe, from an Opinion that the text of Volkelius would ſerve to carry off any refutation whatſoever. This is a Malicious Falſity. And it is infinitely more reaſonable to acquieſce in the Reaſons which the Author himſelf alledges. Mihi autem, ſaith he (i), vitio verti non debet quod textum integrum libri neſarii curarim recudendum. Cum enim ſupprimi per hominum curioſitatem & malitiam nequeat, nec in eo voti ſui compos extiterit Ampliſſ. Magiſtratus Amſtellodamenſis, malui illum integrum ſiſtere Lectori, ne crederer ſuffurari velle victoriam, quod nolebat Alexander, & datâ operâ detruncare atque extenuare Adverſarii mei argumenta; Ubi Lector ipſam Beſtiam ſua verba reſonantem audierit, (ut hic adhibeam dictum Æſchinis de oratione Demoſthenis in ſe habita, relatum Hieronymo epiſt. ad Paul. de lib. Divino cap. 2.) & ſimul noſtras ad illam Cenſuras & Annotationes ἀλεξικάκως expenderit, facilius de totius Cauſæ natura & merito judicabit. Oppoſita ſibi mutuò appoſita magis eluceſcunt. Et ſicut vinum dulcius eſt quod prope mandragoras creſcit, & ſuavius olent lilia & roſa quæ juxta capas & allia carpuntur, ſic ex hac antitheſi plus accedet ſuaveolentiæ illi veritati Cauſæ quam ſuſcepi propugnandam. Ita vident Lectores nihil nos metuere nobis ab iſtorum hominum ſtrophis & cavillationibus, quandoquidem eas integras, omnibuſque ſuis veſtitas coloribus, proponimus & expendimus, confiſi bonitati noſtræ cauſæ, & quod eorum Sententias prodidiſſe ſuperaſſe eſt, ut loquitur Hyeronymus ad Cteſiph. He adds that he herein imitated (k) Francis Junius, Sibrandus (l) Lubbertus, Paul (m) Tarnovius, John (n) Junius, (o) Alſtedius, and (p) Biſterfeldius Son in Law to Alſtedius. He repreſents in his Preface to the 2. Tome that he would not be diſpleaſed that the Magiſtrate ſhould make uſe of another ſort of Anſwer, that is, burn the Socinian Syſtem. And as he praiſes the Pious Zeal of the Engliſh, who (q) Condemned the Catechiſm of this Sect to the Flames; ſo he complains of the Toleration which Cromwell allowed theſe Hereticks. He bewails with

(a) Id. ibid. pag. 218.

(b) Curcellæus mentions an interval of 8 days.

(c) Curcellæus ſays only 1200.

(d) Bibl. Antitrinit. pag. 98.

(e) John Ibid. pag. 219.

(f) Samuel Mareſius, præfat. Hydræ Socinianiſmi expugnatæ, tom. 1. Printed at Groningen in 1651.

(g) In the Article Socinus.

(h) The 1. Tome was publiſh'd in 1651. the 2 in 1654. and the 3. which is the laſt, in 1662.

(i) Mareſius, præfat. vol. I. Hydræ Socinianiſmi expugnatæ, fol. (*) [illegible]

(k) In his Defenſio Catholica.

(l) In the refutation of Fauſtus Socinus's Book De Chriſto Servatore.

(m) In the refutation of the ſame Socinus's Book contra Bellarminum & Wickum.

(n) In the refutation of the ſame Socinus's Prælectiones.

(o) In the refutation of the Catechiſm of Racovia.

(p) In the refutation of Crellius's Book de uno Deo & patre.

(q) Quem (Catechiſmum Rakovienſem) olim Anglia ex ſancto & pio zelo publice cremavit, Mareſ. præf. 2. Tome. The word olim makes me think, that he does not mean the Act of Parliament, which condemn'd that Book to be burnt in 1653. See Micrælius's continuation pag. 929.

Saint Laurence's College, where he Learned several things. Two Reasons prevented (A) his taking the degree of Batchelor of Philosophy, and interrupted his Studies. The Poverty of the Family was the cause which engaged them to breed him a Merchant. Pursuant to which he spent two Years in Learning what might be useful to him in Trade, as Arithmetick, the French and Italian Languages. And afterwards he returned to his Studies, and was sent to Herborn in 1589. where Piscator had read Divinity three Years. Vorstius studied under him with great Success, and applied himself to the instruction of some Children of Quality. With some of which he went to Heidelberg in March 1593. where he was created Doctor of Divinity in July 1594. A Year after he went to visit the (B) Academies of Switzerland, and that of Geneva. He read Theological Lectures in the latter, at the instigation of Theodorus Beza, and acquitted himself so well that he was offered a Professor's Chair there; which he would not accept, some Reasons inducing him to return home, for he was offered to be Divinity Professor at * Steinfurt. The Letter of invitation was delivered to him at Geneva in February 1596. He accepted that Preferment, and discharged his Functions in a manner which made him very Famous, and courted by other (C) Academies. In the Year 1605. besides his Professorship, he was made Minister of Steinfurt: And as if those two places had not been sufficient to employ him, he had other Preferments † bestowed on him, whereby,

* Arnold then the Count of Bentheim founded an Academy in that Town.

Tears of Blood the Confusion of England which was become their (a) Metropolis, and that a Catechism containing all their Blasphemies was suffered to be Printed at London. (b) Modo enim ex Anglia allatus est Anglica lingua conscriptus Catechismus duplex, major & minor, Londini publice excusus hoc anno 1654. apud Ja. Cottrel pro Rich. Moone, ad insigne septem stellarum, in Cœmeterio Paulino, authore Johanne Beddle, sive Biddello, Magistro Artium Oxoniensi, editus, uti præ se fert, in eorum gratiam qui mere Christiani nullique sectæ addicti esse volunt, (quamvis nequeant se tales profiteri, quin eo ipso sectam specialem ab aliis omnibus discretam constituant,) & omnes Socinianismi impietates ac blasphemias continet, eructat, propugnat. Having gradually answered Volkelius's Book, he might have laughed at those Sectaries, if they had alledged against him the Reflections which Arnobius made on the request of the Idolaters, that the Senate would prohibit some Books of (c) Cicero, in which the vanity of their false Gods was demonstrated. Refute them, saith Arnobius, if they contain any Impieties, for to forbid the Reading of them, is not to maintain the cause of the Gods, but to be afraid of the Evidence of truth. (d) Cum sciam esse non paucos qui aversentur & fugiant libros de hoc ejus, (Ciceronis) nec in aurem velint admittere lectionem opinionum suarum præsumpta vincentem? cumque alios audiam mussitare indignanter, & dicere: oportere statui per Senatum, aboleantur ut hæc scripta, quibus Christiana religio comprobetur, & vetustatis opprimatur auctoritas? Quinimo si fidituus exploratum vos dicere quicquam de Diis vestris, erroris convincite Ciceronem, temeraria & impia dictitare refellitote, redarguite, comprobate. Nam intercipere scripta, & publicatam velle submergere lectionem, non est Deos defendere, sed veritatis testificationem timere. It is certain that Socinus (e) took Advantage of his Adversaries forbidding the Reading of his Writings.

It must not be forgotten that the English complained of Maresius's accusing their Nation, of Favouring Socinianism, and of their Country's becoming its Metropolis. Read the following passage of John Owen, Doctor of Divinity and then Vice-Chancellor of Oxford: (f) Ille (Maresius) universam gentem nostram, ejusque Gubernatores Socinianismi accusat, & qui viri mos est, horrendos clamores excitat, affirmans hæresin ibi sedem Metropoliticam fixisse &c. De temeritate hujus censuræ & de stupenda ejus ignorantia in statu rerum apud nos gestarum, quas tamen referre, judicare, & condemnare præsumit, scripsi ad ipsum epistolam. Mr. Daillé made use of this complaint of Dr. Owen, when he writ against Maresius. To which Maresius answered that he never received (g) this Doctor's Letter, and that he was very well pleased to hear that things were not in that State in England that they had been. This he tells us in a Preface written in April 1658. But it is to be observed that the Preface to the Second Tome of the Anti Volkelius is dated the 12th of August 1654.

(a) Sacerdotium cessit —— videtur nunc in vicina Anglia sedem sibi metropolitanam fixisse. Maresius præf. 2. Tom. Hydra Socinianismi.

(b) Id. ib.

(c) Doubtless Cicero's Books de natura Deorum.

(d) Arnobius lib. 3. p. m. 103.

(e) See the Nouv. de la Rep. des lettres, for July 1685. art. 9.

(f) Joan. Owenus in vindic. Evangel. contra Socin Anglice, præfat. pag. 4. apud Dallæum in vindiciis Apologiæ pag. 434.

(g) Maresius in prolegom. epicrisis theologiæ.

(A) Two Reasons prevented.] One was that he would not betray his Conscience, by swearing that he would submit to the decisions of the last Council; the other was that it was designed to withdraw him from his studies in order to breed him a Merchant, by Reason of the ill posture of the Affairs of his Family. (h) Instabat tempus promotionis ejusdem ad Baccalaureatum, & magisterium philosophiæ, sed quæ fieri non poterat nisi pro more solenniter juraret in decreta Concilii Tridentini; itaque honorem illum licet ejus potiri posset & forte vellet, tamen cum & conscientiæ propter illud juramentum obstaret, & jam parentum res magis ac magis inclinarent, repudiavit, & deliberatum est de studiis ipsius abrumpendis, ipsoque mercaturæ addicendo.

(B) He went to visit the Academies of Switzerland.] (i) He twice maintained publick Theses at Basil; 1. de Sacramentis; 2. de causis salutis. He was preparing a 3. disputation against Socinus, de Christo Servatore; but hastening his Journey he did not finish it, but left the Original with Grynæus, and receiv'd it back again when he returned by Basil. The first Work ascribed to him is a Collection of these sort of Theses containing above 20, defended at several times, beginning with the Year 1594. He placed first in this Collection, his Theses de Sancta Trinitate, hoc est, de Deo Patre, Filio & Spiritu sancto, and the Theses de persona & officio Christi; which he some time after made use of as an Apology against those who accused him of Socinianising in these two Points; and to stop the Mouth of Calumniators, he Reprinted these two disputations apart (k) in 1612. We shall find by the following Remarks that he was soon suspected of that Heresy.

(C) And Courted by other Academies.] Mr. du Plessis Mornai and the Church of Saumur wrote to him in July 1602. to intreat his acceptance of the Theological Professor's Chair in the Academy, which they had newly erected in that place. Vorstius gave no Positive Answer: But the Count of Bentheim resolved to retain him, answered Mr. du Plessis, and the Affair stopt there. (l) In 1606. Maurice Landgrave of Hesse offered Vorstius the place of Divinity professor at Marpurg, and after having several times writ to him he sent a Coach and a Trumpet (m) for him, that the Professor might make a commodious and Honourable Journey. The Count of Bentheim would not give leave for his departure; Vorstius's Relations desired him not to remove; so that this

(i) Marcus Gualther. ubi infra.

(h) Marcus Gualtherus, in oratione de vita & obitu Conradi Vorstii.

(l) See Marcus Gualtherus in oratione de vita & obitu Conradi Vorstii. I cannot Note the Pages; for the Printer has not Numbered them.

(k) Quas postmodum Apologiæ vicem esse voluit, cum maligne quidam Tribunitii stentores ipsum traducere inciperent, quasi hæretice de duobus illis capitibus sentientem aut docentem. Ideoque anno 1612 denuo & seorsim excudi curavit, ad os calumniæ obturandum. Id. ibid. pag. I 3. (l) Ibid. pag. I 3. (m) Misso præter diversas literas singularis honoris causa tubicine & rheda qua illuc veheretur. Ib. verso.

as it was but reaſonable, his Salary was increaſed. He was invited to Leyden to ſucceed Arminius in the Year 1610, and after one Years irreſolute conſideration (D) he accepted that, and with his Family removed to Leyden, Imployment having the moſt Authentick Teſtimonials of (E) Orthodoxy, and of a good as well as prudent Conduct; but he met with inſurmountable Difficulties. The Miniſters who maintained the old Doctrine of Calvin in oppoſition to the Arminians, were perſuaded that if Vorſtius, who was not of their Opinion, ſhould be Profeſſor at Leyden, he would do an irreparable injury to their Cauſe. Wherefore they warmly repreſented the danger; they accuſed him of an infinite Number of Hereſies which they back'd by the concurrence of Foreign Univerſities, from which they obtained this invitation proved as ineffectual as that of Saumur. If the Call to Leyden had ſucceeded no better, it is very probable that Vorſtius had died with an Orthodox Character; for it ought to be obſerved that the Suſpicions raiſed againſt him before 1599 were ſufficiently quaſhed by his Conduct in the Palatinate. And doubtleſs Mr. du Pleſſis Mornai would not have had him at Saumur, if he had not been throughly convinced of his Innocence. Nor could he be ignorant of what was done at Heidelberg. The Count of Bentheim being informed that his Divine was ſuſpected, deſired to have that Affair cleared; and therefore he gave Vorſtius order to go immediately and purge himſelf of that Accuſation at the Univerſity which had Created him Doctor, and convince them of his Orthodoxy. Vorſtius accordingly went to Heidelberg (a) where he gave an Account of his Faith and returned home perfectly juſtified. The Faculty of Divinity admitted him ad oſculum pacis, and gave him teſſeram hoſpitalitatis, having told him that he was to blame for Advancing certain aſſertions which favoured the Socinians, and having made him promiſe, that for the future he would abſtain from the uſe of any ſuſpicious Expreſſions. He was alſo obliged to proteſt that he abhorred Socinus's Opinions, and that he was heartily ſorry (b) that the heat of Youth had drawn him into Expreſſions which ſeemed to Favour that Heretick, and ſhock the Doctrine of the Reformed Churches. This happened the 26th of September 1599. This Inſtrument is in the life of David Pareus: Where alſo appears the following Relation, which will not be diſagreeable to thoſe who are fond of being acquainted with a great many particulars concerning the lives of Learned Men. (c) Non ita pridem ſupremos in S. Theologia honores, ſive Doctoratum Facultas Theologica contulerat Viro Clariſſimo Domino CONRADO VORSTIO Colonienſi, qui poſtea à D. PAREO ob ſingularem eruditionem, diſputandi acumen, & docendi εὐμεθοδίαν, commendatus fuit ad Profeſſionem Theologicam in nova Schola Steinfurtenſi, Illuſtri & Generoſo Comiti D. ARNOLDO, Comiti in Bentheim, &c. In qua cum aliquandiu Orthodoxam doctrinam cum magna laude propoſuiſſet, abreptus tandem ingenii ἀγχινοίᾳ aut καινοτομίᾳ docendi, animum applicuit ad lectionem nefarii libri FAUSTI SOCINI de Servatore: immo & authoris amicitiam aſſectavit ac coluit. Hinc cothurnos corrumpendi receptam doctrinam, de lytro & ſatisfactione JESU-CHRISTI, ſubdole excogitavit, quos & Diſputationibus tam publicis quam privatis in Scholis habitis λάθρᾳ tanquam ὕπουλον venenum turbavit. Sed fraus diu latere non potuit ſagaciores Theologos, qui fermentum illud odorati, magno conatu & zelo hominem monuerunt, ut reſipiſceret: juxta illud: Retundat me juſtus: benignitas erit: & corripiat me: unguentum erit præſtantiſſimum. Quin & ipſe Generoſus Dn. Comes, admonitus à viris gravibus, Doctorem ſuum ſerio hortatus fuit, ut in gratiam rediret cum Eccleſiis & fratribus, quos ſua καινοδοξίᾳ magno totius Eccleſiæ ſcandalo non ceſſaret offendere: nec ante ad munus docendi in ſua ſchola rediret, quam Teſtimonium Ὀρθοδοξίας auferret, ab iis præſertim, qui publicam docendi facultatem in Academia ei juſſent largiti.

(D) After one Years irreſolute Conſideration he accepted that Imployment.] Nothing was wanting in this Invitation: It had been approved by the States of Holland, and by Prince Maurice, who alſo ordered the Deputies, one of which was his own Miniſter, to preſs Vorſtius to the utmoſt, to come and ſerve the Univerſity of Leyden (d). But I believe without the earneſt and violent Sollicitations of the Arminians, Vorſtius had never embarked in that boiſterous Sea. He was beloved and Honoured at Steinfurt, he there enjoyed a perfect eaſe, and had a very great Reputation, and at the State of the Controverſies betwixt Arminius and Gomarus then was, he doubtleſs foreſaw the many Oppoſitions which he was like to meet with in Holland. They tempted him, if I am not miſtaken, with the Glory of ſupporting a Party, which the Death of Arminius had weaken'd. To which were added the Motives drawn from Conſcience: It was repreſented to him that he would one day be obliged to Account for the ill uſe of his Talents, if the Love of eaſe made him loſe ſuch a favourable Opportunity of Eſtabliſhing the Truth where it had already taken root. However, it was his ill Stars made him leave the County of Bentheim, and tranſported him to Holland, where being toſſed betwixt a Thouſand Shoals and Rocks, he at laſt was miſerably Shipwrack'd, and loſt both his Reputation and Fortune, being ſubjected to the laſh of both Secular and Eccleſiaſtical Tribunals. This was an Argument againſt Arminianiſm; this was what would oblige one to acknowledge the fatality of Events. His Panegyriſt affords me this thought. Vir optimus, ſaith he (e), jam litium Theologicarum quæ in Belgio inter Eccleſiaſticos exortæ erant, gnarus & ob eas non temere tam duram provinciam capiendam ratus, non quidem prorſus quod offerebatur repudiavit, ſed toto nihilominus pene anno aſſenſum ſuſpendit. Itaque eo magis quod tenſo ac tenaci quodam germaniſſimæ benevolentiæ vinculo alligatus à ſuis ægerrime avelli poſſet, certatim contra admonentibus omnibus ut decus illud Scholæ novellæ retineretur: ſed currebant jam propinqua viri FATA, quæ ipſum quoque communi & immeritæ cladi involvendum DESTINAVERANT. If Vorſtius had continued quiet at Steinfurt, the Errors of his Treatiſe de Deo had not ſignified much, and he had eaſily recovered that falſe ſtep: But the queſtion being whether he ſhould teach Theology at Leyden or not, that is, whether the growing Party ſhould top the other, nothing was to be pardoned in him; his Treatiſe de Deo grew worſe than the Alcoran. This parallel is not of my Invention; I found it in the Author juſt now cited. Reipſa comperimus, ſaith he (f), vehementius & acerbius librum iſtum oppugnaſſe quam unquam quiſquam Chriſtianorum Mahumedis Alcoranum, aut recutitorum Talmudica deliria invaſit. Neque unquam Lucianus, Porphyrius, Julianus, Libanius aut quiſquis ſimili in Chriſtianos maledicentia fuit, tam crude & barbare exceptus a veteribus ſcriptoribus, qui tamen etiam habebant acetum in pectore, atque hic Noſter ab infrunitis adverſariis ſuis male mulctatus ob ſerium & ſolidum illud ſcriptum. We ſhall obſerve in the Remark O the prejudice which the Arminians did their Cauſe by calling in Vorſtius.

(E) The moſt Authentick teſtimonials of Orthodoxy.] His Hiſtory expreſſes the Teſtimonials which the Counts of Bentheim gave him, and that with which the Academy of Steinfurt preſented him. I ſhall only cite a very ſmall part of the Elogies which thoſe teſtimonials beſtow upon him. (g) Poſt exceſſum nominati pientiſſimi Domini parentis noſtri hactenus fidelem ipſius operam, vitam irreprehenſibilem, Chriſtianam & puram doctrinam atque inſtitutionem, & inde conſecutam propagationem & ædificationem Eccleſiæ & Scholæ reipſa experti ſumus. This is taken out of the teſtimonials of the Counts; as the following is from that of the Academy. Publice & ſancte teſtamur ——— Conradum Vorſtium ——— ita ſe probaſſe ut ——— in hac Republica inculpatum obtained Evidences againſt his Doctrine; they (F) alarmed the Religious Zeal of King James and engaged him to recommend the excluſion of ſuch a Heretick, to the Republick of Holland. Upon which (G) there were ſeveral proceedings againſt him, which grew to ſuch a warmth, that Vorſtius was obliged proviſionally to renounce the Exerciſe of his Employment, and leave Leyden, in order to expect elſewhere a definitive Sentence concerning this diſpute. He retired to ipſum [illegible] curſum ſexdecim circiter annorum continuorum tum in Eccleſia docendo, tum in ſchola [illegible] interpretando, publice privatimque diſputando, juventutem in orthodoxa religione erudiendo ita peregiſſe, ut pietate erga Deum, probitate & dilectione erga proximum nihil prius, nihilque antiquius habuerit. Et ut paucis multa comprehendamus, virum Deo piiſque omnibus placentem, orthodoxo Theologo & Profeſſore dignum egerit. He obtained the like teſtimonial Letters from the Council of the City, and the Conſiſtory, which the Hiſtorian doth not produce; but contents himſelf for Brevity ſake with ſaying that they contain the ſame thing in Subſtance. Adderem hic totidem præterea alia, unum Senatus oppidani, alterum Conſiſtorii (uti nunc vocant) Steinfurtenſis, niſi & plane idem prioribus iſta dicerent, & mihi brevitatis ſtudium aurem velleret. It ought to be Remarked that Vorſtius obtained all theſe Teſtimonials after the Printing of his Terrible Tract de Deo, which raiſed ſuch a cry in Holland againſt his Impieties, Blaſphemies and Atheiſm. (a) Ab his Theonibus prope nihil aliud audire cogeretur quam innumeras & uno libro non dicendas calumnias, dicteria, convicia, ſcommata, punctiones, nempe de ejus impietate, blaſphemiis, mendaciis, perjurio, de ſtupore, inſcitia, & præcipue de hæreſibus (ſi DEO placet) Pelagianis, Arianis, Socinianis, Serveti, Enjedini, Oſtorodi, Papiſticis, & —— Turcicis, Judaicis, Paganis, Atheis. I ſay once again that if he had contented himſelf with the College of Steinfurt for his whole life, it is highly probable that he had died with the Reputation of an Orthodox Divine.

(e) Idem, pag. ſequenti.

(f) Ibid. fol. M 2.

(g) Ibid. fol. F.

Tergou

(F) Alarmed the Religious Zeal of King James.] This was a War agreeable to his Genius, in which he intereſted himſelf more vigorouſly, than in that of the King of Bohemia his Son in Law, and bravely cauſed Vorſtius's Book to be burned. I mean that de Deo. Of which ſeveral Copies were ſacrificed to the Flames in London, Oxford and Cambridge. The King was hunting when the Book was brought to him: And he run through it ſo diligently, that in the ſpace of an Hour he diſpatched away a Catalogue of Hereſies, which he had found in that piece, to his Reſident at the Hague; and ordered him to notify to the States, how much he deteſted thoſe Hereſies, and thoſe who would tolerate them. The States Anſwered that if Vorſtius was Guilty of the Errors Charged on him they would not defend him. This anſwer was not at all Satisfactory to the King of England. But he wrote a Letter dated the 6 of October 1611. to the States, earneſtly exhorting them to baniſh him, tho' at the ſame time he ſhould deny the Errors laid to his Charge; for if he owned, and was convicted of them, his Majeſty did not (b) doubt in the leaſt, but that he ought to be burned. He declared that if vigorous attempts are not made in order to extirpate of this growing Atheiſm, he will publickly proteſt againſt thoſe Abominations, and ſeparate from the Union of ſuch falſe and Heretical Churches, and as Defender of the Faith, he will exhort all other reformed Churches to enter into general conſults, in order to extinguiſh, and baniſh to Hell thoſe Abominable Hereſies lately ſprung up, and particularly he will interdict any of his Subjects the frequenting ſuch an infectious place as the Univerſity of Leyden. Vorſtius was inſtalled at Leyden before the Letter of King James was delivered to the States. Wherefore the Engliſh Envoy, at the preſentation of it, made a very vehement Speech againſt his Inſtallation, and threatned the United Provinces with the Enmity of the King his Maſter, if they tolerated Vorſtius. He was anſwered that this Profeſſor had receiv'd Orders to deſiſt from the exerciſe of his Function, till he had anſwered the Accuſations againſt him; and that this affair wou'd be examin'd before the States of Holland in February next. The Ambaſſador very little ſatisfied with this Anſwer, made another Speech to proteſt againſt thoſe proceedings, and threatned the States not only with the enmity, but alſo with the Pen of King (c) James. He was anſwered as before, and told that the States were certain that his Majeſty would be content with the proceedings of the States of Holland. Notwithſtanding this Anſwer this Prince publiſhed a Book, in which he gave the World an Account of his Conduct, and the Reaſons of it, and very zealouſly argued againſt Vorſtius. Who publiſhed a ſmall Anſwer to the Extracts which this Monarch had communicated to the States out of the Book de Deo. This he Dedicated to the States the 15. of December 1611. This anſwer is written with all due deference and reſpect to King James.

All theſe Dates ſerve to convict Spondanus of Error, who relates in 1610. (d) that King James incenſed at the Protection which the States General granted Vorſtius, whoſe Books he had cauſed to be burned, threatned that if they did not baniſh him, he would expoſe them all the World over as ſupporters of Apoſtates, and convert his Alliance with them into immortal hatred; and that the States ſurprized at theſe menaces, tho' with great regret, permitted Vorſtius to depart. Spondanus adds that Vorſtius was Honoured like an Apoſtle in the ſeveral places where he lived, after the States had ſent him away. This Author is not guilty of meer Anachroniſms, for after the States of Holland had diſmiſt Vorſtius, he concealed himſelf and was expoſed to a Thouſand Dangers and Ignominies. (e)

(G) Upon which there were ſeveral proceedings againſt him.] Mark Gualtherus has omitted ſome Facts, which ought to have been an eſſential part in the Hiſtory of his Heroe. He ought to have told us that the Gomariſts having oppoſed the invitation of Vorſtius, the States of Holland ordered them to produce their Reaſons for it. There were then ſix Contra-Remonſtrant Miniſters, who in the Famous (f) conference of the Hague propoſed their grievances againſt Vorſtius the 29 of April 1611. They accuſed him of ſeveral Socinian Doctrines and affirmed that his Book de Deo, favour'd more of an Atheiſt than of a Divine. The States deſired that they would make good their Accuſations againſt Vorſtius to his Face in their preſence. This was done in preſence of ſix Miniſters which each party had deputed, and of the Curators of the Univerſity of Leyden. And when Vorſtius had been heard, the States determined that nothing ſhould hinder his being Profeſſor, as it was intended (g). So that tho' the Contra-Remonſtrant Miniſters rejected his anſwers, Vorſtius had Triumphed, if an unhappy Accident had not thwarted him. Which is the Second thing the Hiſtorian ought to have related. Some of Vorſtius's Diſciples publiſhed in Frieſland a ſmall Tract de officio Chriſtiani hominis, containing ſeveral Antitrinitarian Doctrines, which was publickly burnt: Some of thoſe who cauſed it to be Printed were diſcovered, and ſeveral Letters which were publiſhed were found upon them, containing a great many Elogies on Vorſtius, and ſeveral ſuſpicious things relating to ſeveral other Divines. Thoſe who publiſhed theſe Letters added a Warning to all Reformed Churches to give them an Alarm. A ſtrict Scrutiny was made into all Vorſtius's Books, into what he had Dictated in the Chair, and into his Manuſcripts, in order to find matter to charge him with. The States of Frieſland adviſed thoſe of Holland and the Curators of the Univerſity of Leyden of all this. It was therefore neceſſary that Vorſtius ſhould ſolemnly clear himſelf, and declare that tho' he had writ ſometimes to the Poliſh Socinians, he was very far from being of their Opinion; and that whatever he did

(a) Ibid. fol. M 3.

(b) But if this wretched Vorſtius ſhould deny or uſe any Equivocation about the Blaſphemous points of hereſy and Atheiſm which he has already publiſh'd, it might perhaps move you to ſpare his Perſon, and not to burn him, tho' no heretick did ever deſerve it more than he, which we leave to your Chriſtian prudence. But on Account of any Vindication or denial of his to ſuffer him to live and dogmatize among you, is ſo abominable a thing that we are ſure it will never enter into the thoughts of any of you. King James's Letter in the Mercure François tom. 2. pag. 460. édit. of Cologne.

(c) [illegible]

(d) Num. 12.

(e) See the Remark K.

(f) Compoſed of ſix Calviniſt, and as many Arminian Miniſters.

(g) See the Book intitled Pacificatorium diſſidii Belgii, per Salomonem Theodotum, pag. 61. & ſeq.

Tergou about May 1611, where he lived quiet (H) till 1619, when he was forced to leave Holland; For the Synod of Dort having (I) declared him unworthy of the Profeſſor's Chair, the States of the Province deprived him of that Employment, and condemned him to a perpetual Baniſhment. I do not certainly know whither he went; but he continu'd conceal'd for the ſpace of two Years, and his Life was did was only to inform himſelf better of their Opinions, and that he did the ſame to the Jeſuits, to whom he never ſcrupled to write. He delivered the Profeſſion of his Faith ſigned by himſelf, concerning the Myſtery of the Trinity, and the Divinity of CHRIST; and on the 22d of May 1612, he pronounced an Apologetical Oration before the States of Holland (a). We ſhall ſee that all this engaged him in the publication of ſeveral Books.

(H) He lived quiet at Tergou.] Which appears by the Teſtimonial of the Magiſtrates of that City, dated the 20th of July 1619, which certifies, that for the ſpace of 7 Years and three Months that he lived there, (b) he behaved himſelf like an honeſt and good Man. His Hiſtorian producing this Certificate, obſerves, that the Magiſtrates who gave it, were of the Modern Eſtabliſhment, that is, vigorous Opponents of the Arminians. Let us here obſerve two Faults of which Paul Freherus is guilty. He ſaith (c) that Vorſtius removed to Holland, and finding the Troubles there increaſe every Day, actually reſigned his Profeſſorſhip, and retir'd to Steinfurt, till the Magiſtrates decided the difference. This is his firſt Error; for Tergou, and not Steinfurt, was the firſt place of retreat which he choſe. Freherus adds, that becauſe Vorſtius ſucceeded Arminius, he had ſeveral conſiderable Diſputes to maintain againſt Gomarus. This is another Miſtake; for this hints, that beſides, and after the differences which obliged Vorſtius to retire, he had ſome particular Quarrels with Gomarus. But this is doubly falſe: For he had no difference with Gomarus (d) who retired into Zealand, becauſe he would not have him for his Collegue; and if there had been any Diſputes betwixt them, they muſt doubtleſs have been the ſame which forced him to retire to Tergou:

(I) For the Synod of Dort having declared him unworthy of the Profeſſor's Chair.] His Hiſtorian odiouſly exaggerates this Circumſtance; he tells us, that they condemned Vorſtius without any regard to his Petition to be heard, before he was ſentenced. And there is ſo much rancour and ill Language in this part of his Hiſtory, that I am not willing to ſoil my Paper with it; and I ſhall cite only what is a meer Narrative, or what is ſo cloſely annexed to it, that to omit it would be to obſcure the reſt. And if I cite any diſagreeable expreſſions, they ſhall be thoſe which have the leaſt harſhneſs. Procurante-- Bogermanno effectum eſt ut Vorſtius abſens inauditusque condemnatus & Profeſſoris titulo ac honore indignus declaratus ſit——— ut cujus doctrina in Eccleſiis & Scholis reformatis nequaquam toleranda, ſed cum deteſtatione penitus eliminanda atque extirpanda eſſet. Non obſtante quod tam ſerio rogatu per literas ambierit ut Synodus ipſum audire, errorum ac hæreſum (quas clamabant) legitime ac liquidè ex verbo Dei convincere, & Chriſtiana lenitate rectiora docere vellet. Cujus equidem judicii ac ſententiæ damnatoriæ, quam nihil aliud quam caſſa invidia conflavit, & Vorſtii ad cœtum iſtum epiſtolæ ſatis ſeriæ & prolixæ, ſi vel minimam adhuc honeſti ſanguinis guttam habent, ſacroſancti ſcilicet Concilii illius togatos patres æternum pudere debet. Maxime cum tam probas colloquii conditiones, itemque alia pro veritate adverſus hæreticos præſtanda afferret. Sed viri hujus linguam ac legitimam cum eo diſputationem pejus iſti lucifugæ formidabant, quam fullo ululam. Thus Vorſtius's Friends accounted it a Glorious thing for him that the Synod would not hear his defence: They pretended that the Synod was terribly afraid of his Wit, of the force of his Eloquence, and of the weight of his Reaſons; in ſhort, that they feared to be overcome in a Diſpute. But now let us ſee what this Hiſtorian ſaith concerning the Sentence of the States of the Province. “ Poſt hunc ſacri fulminis fragorem, alia Vorſtium & “ immitior tempeſtas, quod neceſſum erat, excepit. “ Mox enim à promulgata Flaminum ſententia in juſ- “ [illegible] “ immiſit Vorſtii flammam in hoc [illegible] “ tantum vertente Synodi Dordracenæ Vorſtius “ functionibus ſuis in Academia Leydenſi movetur, “ ſalariumque ſuum deinceps ducere et percipere “ vetatur. Præterea Hollandia & Weſtfriſia ei “ interdicitur, illique intra ſex ſeptimanas excedere “ jubetur, & in eam non redire ſub pœna arbitra- “ rii illi, ut perturbatori publicæ pacis, irrogandæ. “ Scilicet quia judicatum eſſet ejus in iſto tractu “ commorationem Reip. damnoſam eſſe.„

Several Perſons having given it as their Opinion, that I ought to cite the expreſs terms of the Synodical condemnation of Vorſtius, I ſhall here inſert part of them. “ (e) The moſt Illuſtrious and “ Mighty States General, having by their Noble and Honourable Deputies, enjoyned this “ Synod to declare ſummarily their Opinion concerning the Theology, or Doctrine contained “ in the Writings of Conrad Vorſtius, Doctor of “ Divinity; and likewiſe whether it may be ſafely “ taught, to the edification and advantage of the Re- “ formed Churches, or whether the toleration of it “ can conſiſt with true Piety: This venerable “ Synod, after having in the fear of God, well and “ duly conſider'd and examined all things, hath, “ and doth unanimouſly by theſe preſents declare, “ that the ſaid Conrad Vorſtius, in his laſt Tracts, “ namely in that concerning God and his At- “ tributes, beſides defending the Errors of the five “ Articles, which are rejected by this Synod, hath “ partly called in queſtion not only one or two “ Articles of the Chriſtian and Reformed Religion, “ but alſo doubts of ſeveral of the Principal of them, “ for example, the following; That of the Tri- “ nity——— (f) and that he partly affirms and “ lays down ſeveral Aſſertions, which are wholly and “ diametrically oppoſite to the Truth which God “ hath revealed to us in the Holy Scriptures, and “ to the Confeſſions of all the Reformed Churches. “ ———Beſides which, in ſeveral places he has “ dangerouſly enervated and weakened the chief “ and ſtrongeſt Arguments, which the venerable Antiquity and the Modern Doctors of the “ Reformed Church, have juſtly drawn from the “ Word of God, and made uſe of to eſtabliſh and “ maintain the Orthodox Doctrine, eſpecially “ the Eternal Divinity of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, “ without either producing or ſubſtituting any others “ in their room to prove more powerfully, and ſupport the Doctrine which he oppoſes. That he “ induſtriouſly advances, and to the utmoſt “ of his power urges ſeveral Sophiſms, and “ vain Arguments, which intangle and obſcure “ Truth, without ever endeavouring to reſolve “ them, but leaves them as they are, that they may “ the more eaſily be fixed in the Minds of his “ Readers; whence clearly appears his ſubtil De- “ ſign of preparing the way, and clandeſtinely o- “ pening a Gate, in order to inſtill the Wicked and “ Impious Hereſies of Socinus and others; and “ conſequently to ſeduce and deceive the World, “ under the ſpecious pretext of a ſearch after Truth. “ That in vain and to no effect, he has hitherto “ diſguiſed and varniſhed his Opinions, with ſeveral impertinent Diſtinctions, frivolous Excuſes, mi- “ ſerable ſubterfuges, deceitful and fraudulent “ Diſſimulations and Gloſſes. Wherefore the pre- “ poſterous and inordinate liberty which he makes “ uſe of to diſpute and queſtion the moſt impor- “ tant Articles of the Chriſtian Religion; and the “ wavering, dubious and uncertain way of inſtruction “ which he practiſes, are very dangerous and pernici- “ ous to the Church, and by no means decorous “ and agreeable to ſuch ſacred and ſublime Sub- “ jects, and conſequently unworthy of an Or- “ thodox Profeſſor——— (g) And declares “ the ſaid Conrad Vorſtius ——— utterly un- “ worthy and wholly deprived of the Employment “ and Title of Profeſſor or Doctor of the Reformed

“ Churches

(a) Ex eodem Præfatione [illegible] &c. & ſeq.

(b) Vide in eo [illegible] [illegible] honeſte, probe, modeſte, & ad exemplum, [illegible] quam [illegible] quod ad mores & vitam ejus [illegible], obſervavimus vel audivimus. Apud Marcum Gualtherum.

(c) Theatr. virorum illuſtrium pag. 354.

(d) See the Life of Gomarus among thoſe of the Profeſſors of Groningen, pag. [illegible].

(e) Acts of the Synod of Dort, Seſſion [illegible], pag. [illegible], tranſlated by Richard John de Nerée, Printed at Leyden 1624, in 4to.

(f) Ibid. pag. 587.

(g) Ibid. pag 590.

was more than once in danger (K), there being ſeveral Perſons who tranſported by a furious Zeal, thought that a Man of his Character ought not to be ſuffered to live. At laſt a Duke of Holſtein having gathered together the ſcatter'd Remnants of the Arminians, and aſſigned them a Place in his Dominions, in order to build a Town, Vorſtius found ſome ſecurity and repoſe: For he retired into that Country in June 1622. But he fell ſick ſhortly after, and died at Tonningen on the 29th of September following. He diſcovered very ſignal Marks of a pious reſignation to the Divine Will in his laſt Minutes; and we are told that he was always very devout, and (L) very fervent in Prayer †. His Corps was carried to Friderickſtadt, the new Arminian City, where he was decently buried. He publiſhed (M) ſeveral Books as well againſt the Roman Catholicks as againſt his Proteſtant Adverſaries. The Diſputes raiſed againſt him, were doubtleſs intermixed with a great deal of Paſſion; but after all, thoſe who ſuſpected him to be very ſtrongly † Taken from the Oration de Vita & obitu Conradi Vorſtii, pronounced at Frederickſtadt by Mark Gualtherus, and Printed in 1624. in 4to.

" Churches. Finally, this Synodical Aſſembly ſe" riouſly and earneſtly petition the Illuſtrious and " Mighty States-General, by virtue of their " Sovereign Authority, that they would be pleaſ-
" ed to remove from the Reformed Churches,
" that ſcandalous and common Stumblingblock,
" and to take care for the future, that the " Churches of the Low-Countries may not be pol" luted and defiled with ſuch pernicious Principles,
" Hereſies and Blaſphemies, and to that end uſe all
" neceſſary prudence and caution intirely to ſuppreſs
" all the Writings of the ſaid Vorſtius, and of thoſe
" who are tainted with the ſame Leaven." Vorſtius wrote a very well turned Anſwer to this Synodical Sentence: It is Printed at large in the Book which I (a) cite.

(K) And his Life was more than once in danger.] Several Perſons made it their buſineſs to find out his Lodgings, in order to diſcover them to his Enemies. Wherefore he was frequently forced to change his Habitation, and to be continually provided with a Ladder at his Window, in caſe his Door was broke open; and ſometimes that precaution proved inſufficient to ſecure him, by reaſon that the Houſe was wholly ſurrounded with armed Men; which affrighted ſeveral from harbouring him. I will not warrant the Truth of all this: But I relate it from Gualtherus's Words which are: (b) Ut ut quietem & ſecuritatem aliquam in iſto ſuo latibulo ſperaret, tamen fieri non potuit quin ſingulis pene diebus & noctibus centenis mortibus enecaretur, cum turpiſſimi proditores (genus (1) hominum publico exitio repertum) jugem operam darent uti virum latitantem inveſtigare, extrahere, in manus perſecutorum tradere, & nefario indicii præmio exhilarari poſſent. Quoties iſtic domum mutaſſe, quoties noctes inſomnes ex metu jamjam irruentium duxiſſe, quoties ſcalas feneſtris foris applicatas ad ſubitum effugium habuiſſe putatis? Quoties in extrema conſternatione arbitramini conſtitum fuiſſe, cum non raro omnes cum domibus ſuis recipere negarent periculi timore? Cum Thraſones mariti & anticam & poſticam cum ſclopetis onerati obſervarent ædium quibus tegi putaretur? In tantis anguſtiis biennium circiter aſſumpſit. It was then that he had much reaſon to wiſh for the Epitaph, which a Poet that was one of his Friends, ſuppoſed that he deſired ſeveral Years before.

At (c) vos poſteritas tumulo hæc inſcribite verba,
Poſthuma fortunæ ſigna futura meæ.
Nulla Reformata mihi pars dilectior unquam,
Nulla Reformata pars minus æqua mihi.

Here is room for a conſiderable Obſervation on the ill effects of a Religious Zeal: It removes all remorſe for Crimes committed, and diſables a Man from making uſe of the ſole way of obtaining pardon of God for his Sins, which is only to be expected by Repentance. Thoſe who deſign'd to beat, rob, or aſſaſſinate Vorſtius, to throw him into a Dungeon, or load him with invectives, thought they did a very good action, and an acceptable ſervice to God: They were not therefore touch'd with any remorſe, and thereby induc'd to apply to the Divine Mercy; but died in their impenitence. This is a Precipice which ought to be carefully conſider'd whenever the Minds of the Populace are inflamed againſt erroneous Doctors.

(L) And very fervent in Prayer.] His Panegyriſt ſays very ſurprizing things concerning his Patience, in the midſt of the Invectives, which were ſhower'd on his head. (d) Poſſem, auditores, ad ſingulas iſtius patientiæ ſeu ſpecies ſeu proprietates vivæ exempla proferre, maxime ad devoratas cum patientia nulli lingua dicenda opprobria, zelotarum, hoſtium inſolentias, dicteria, ſcommata, convicia, calumnias quas a primo vigore atque fieri furoris Corybantum in Belgio ab aliquot annis libenter & bono ex aſſuetudine ſtomacho concoxit, propter conſcientiam & cæleſtem veritatem, tam a devotis illis religioſi ordinis capitibus, quam a promiſcua populi fece, & quibuſdam thraſonibus qui ſe Martis pullos & Bellonæ filios, feſtivo Herculis elogio ornare ſolent, poſſem, inquam, hujus rei vivas & vera & admiranda exempla vobis referre, niſi me tempus, &c. He adds that he was often found on his Knees in the exerciſe of Prayer. Quam multos eſſe eos putatis qui illum inter precandum humi in genua abjectum, & in conclavi alicubi ſolum de improviſo non ſemel oppreſſerunt? There is no Chriſtian Virtue, in which he is not repreſented to excell; but above all we are told he made a pious end. To which purpoſe conſult not only our Gualtherus, but alſo a Letter which the Author of Vorſtius's Funeral Oration (e) wrote to one of his Friends, which is amongſt thoſe of the Arminians, pag. 684, in Folio.

(M) He Publiſhed ſeveral Books.] Of which I have already mention'd two, one of which is a Collection of ſeveral Theological Theſes, and the other the famous and pernicious Tract (f) de Deo, ſeu diſputationes decem de natura & attributis Dei, diverſo tempore Steinfurti publicè habitæ. Before this Book appeared, he Publiſhed his Idea ſeu brevis ſynopſis totius ſacræ Theologiæ: A Book of Prayers in the German Language: His Diſputations de cauſis deſerendi Romani Papatus: His Index errorum Eccleſiæ Romanæ, ſubjecto cuique capiti Antidoto: His German Treatiſe of Indulgences: His Teſſaradecas Anti-Piſtoriana, ſeu reſponſio ad librum Johannis Piſtorii de quatuordecim articulis in religione controverſis: His Apology pro Eccleſiis Orthodoxis contra Jeſuitas, and his antapodixes de tribus primis fidei articulis, ſive contrariæ demonſtrationes tres quibus totidem Jeſuiticæ apodixes a B. D. adverſus apologiam emiſſæ confutantur. In the Year 1610. came out his Anti Bellarminus contractus, ſeu brevis refutatio quatuor tomorum Bellarmini. His other Works were written after his removal to Holland, and relate to the Arminian Diſputes, or rather, his Book de Deo. Many Writers appeared againſt him, whom he oppoſed, as well as he could for ſome time: But he was at laſt forced to give way to the number, and he grew weary of continually repeating the ſame things. The Frieſlanders were his moſt violent Enemies, as Bogerman Miniſter of Leeuwarden, and Sibrandus Lubbertus, Divinity Profeſſor at Franeker. Againſt the latter he wrote Catalogus errorum Sibrandi: paræneſis ad Sibrandum: & ſcholia apodictica ad Commentarios Sibrandi. Not to mention his Exegeſis Apologetica pro tractatu de eodem, which he Publiſhed in 1611. Nor his Prodromus adverſus criminationes quorundam fratrum, nor the Plenius reſponſum ad eaſdem illas criminationes: But I ſhall ſay ſomething of his Diſpute with Piſcator. It contains 1. Paraſceve

(a) Epiſtolæ Eccleſiaſticæ & Theologicæ præſtantium ac eruditorum virorum pag. 588. & ſeq. edit. 1684. 'Tis the ſame Book which I call ſometimes barely the Letters of the Arminians.

(b) Ubi ſupra pag. N.

(1) Tacit.

(c) Theſe four Verſes are the concluſion of an Epigram containing 8 Diſticks at the end of an Elogy upon Vorſtius in the Book intitl'd, Illuſtrium Hollandiæ & Weſt-Friſiæ Ordinum alma Academia Leidenſis, Printed at Leyden in the Year 1614. The ſix fore-going Verſes are:

Nunc fratrum in me verſa cohors, & prodiga zeli
Æmula civili prelia Marte gerit.
Nec calamo ſtant bella virum: depoſcitur ipſis
Victima, & inſontis ſupplicium fidei.
Sed mediis erecta malis mens conſcia recti,
Freta Deo, nulli ſuccubat invidiæ.

(d) Gualtherus ubi ſupra.

(e) The Oration was made in Dutch by John Grevius. See the Letters of the Arminians, pag. 684.

(f) Printed at Steinfurt in 1610.

ſtrongly inclined to Socinianiſm (N), were not much in the wrong; and perhaps he had made publick profeſſion of that Doctrine, if he had not followed the Maxim * which the Roman Catholicks alledge againſt the Reformers: That when we are convinced the Church wants reforming, we ought to continue in the Communion of it, the more ſucceſsfully to eradicate its Errors. He very much prejudiced the Arminian (O) Party. The Engliſh Deputies at the Synod of Dort reſponſio ad amicam collationem cum Joanne Piſcatore, ſuper notis hujus ad loca quaedam ex illius tractatu de Deo & exegeſi apologetica pridem excerpta. 2. Amica collatio cum eodem Piſcatore. 3. Amica duplicatio una cum appendice ſive paralipomenis ad tripartitam reſponſionem apologeticam Piſcatoris. 4. Examen tractatus Piſcatoris de divina praedeſtinatione. He did not make any Anſwer to Sopingius a Frieſland Miniſter, nor to Bokerus a Miniſter in North-Holland; but he took other meaſures with Matthew Slade, an Engliſh Man, who let looſe at him with a terrible fury. He Printed an Anſwer to him at Tergow in 1611. This Slade was Rector of the publick School at Amſterdam, and took Pen in hand in defence of his Sovereign the King of England, who deſired the States to Baniſh Vorſtius. It was impoſſible for any Book to be written more angrily, one only excepted, which indeed was more outragious, and publiſhed by another of that Prince's Subjects; I mean George Egliſem, a Scotch Phyſician who lived at the Hague, and wrote Criſis & hypocriſis Vorſtiani reſponſi, where in a juridical manner he accuſed him to the States of Atheiſm, Paganiſm, Judaiſm, Turciſm, Hereſy, Schiſm and Ignorance (a). He ſent him ſeveral Challenges to appear and defend himſelf; and addreſſing himſelf to the States, (b) he tells them that he requeſts and expects a ſtrict Examination to be made, and that either Vorſtius or his Accuſers ſhould be puniſhed. This was to come cloſe to the point, and nothing can be more juſt, than ſuch an Alternative: And nevertheleſs nothing is more rare than to ſee Calumniators on the head of Hereſy and Impiety, brought to condign Puniſhment. It being thought ſufficient to abſolve the Innocent, and inſtead of puniſhing the Accuſer according to Lex Talionis, he is ſometimes thanked for his great great Zeal, or at moſt advertiſed that he ought not to have gone ſo far. However this Phyſician made very fair Propoſals, but he was ſure that he ran no riſk, how abſurd and contradictory ſoever his Accuſation might be found: For King James's Menaces to the Republick of the United Provinces, if they protected Vorſtius, entirely rid his Accuſers of all manner of fear. It is not therefore ſurprizing that Vorſtius ſuffered the Challenges of this Scotch man to fall to the Ground; he might eaſily have confounded him in three words. It had been ſufficient for him to have barely ſaid, You accuſe me of Atheiſm; but according to your own words my Doctrine is Judaical, Mahometan, and Heretical; and the Light it ſelf is not more clear, than it is that the Jews, Mahometans, and Hereticks are not Atheiſts; whence it plainly appears by the expreſs terms of your Accuſation, that I am innocent of Atheiſm; and if you make good your Charge of Hereſy, I ought to be depriv'd of the Profeſſor's Chair, but Lex Talionis directs that you ſhould be put to death. But the Scotch Man would have ridiculed an Anſwer of this nature, and without being aſhamed of his Calumnies, have relied on his impunity, and conſequently would have ſufficiently triumphed if he had only convicted his Adverſary of Hereſy. There are ſeveral poſthumous works of Vorſtius, ſome Commentaries on the Scripture, &c. See the Antitrinitarian Bibliotheque (c).

(N) To be very ſtrongly inclined to Socinianiſm.] The Socinians offered him a Theological Profeſſor's Chair in the Year 1601, and deputed Jerome Moſcorovius to treat with him on that Affair (d). This I own is no convincing proof of his Socinianiſm, and his Apology on this Account appears in a Letter to Uyttenbogard (e). But what can be offered againſt Sandius, who aſſures (f) us, that having for ſome time been dubious whether he ſhould rank Vorſtius among the Unitarians, he was no longer in ſuſpence after he had ſeen the Confeſſion ſigned by Vorſtius on his Death-bed: In qua, ſaith he, haud obſcure prodit quae ejus de Deo ac Chriſto Domino fuerit ſententia. He adds, that Vorſtius cauſing Fauſtus Socinus's Tract de Authoritate Sacrae Scripturae to be Printed, prefixed a Preface of his own, and he aſcribes to him the Book intitl'd Compendiolum Doctrinae Socinianorum, which Cloppenburg refuted, and aſcribed to Oſtorodus and Voidovius. But none of theſe Evidences are of any force beſides his own Confeſſion of Faith, written and ſigned by himſelf on his Death-bed.

It muſt indeed be owned that a Writing of this nature very ſtrongly confirms the ſuſpicion which had ſo long prevailed concerning him: But yet this doth not deprive us of the liberty of Conjecturing, that the Oppoſitions and Diſgraces which he ſuffered, might compleat what a too inquiſitive and innovating Genius had began. I mean that perhaps the accuſing him of this Hereſy, and treating him ill on that ſcore, perverted him to Socinianiſm; and that he would have been cured of theſe particular Whimſies, if he had found an honourable repoſe in the Reformed Church. For nothing in the World ſo naturally diſguſts a Man againſt Orthodoxy, as Perſecution on that account. And I am of Opinion that what but too commonly happens in caſes of Friendſhip and Fidelity, is alſo very frequent in that of Hereſy. Which is, that we (g) teach People to be falſe when we ſuſpect them to be ſo. A jealous Huſband often draws on himſelf the Diſgrace which he might have prevented by a conduct free from all umbrage of ſuſpicion. And this is all the advantage which ſeveral clamorous People get, who when any difficulties are propoſed to them, or a Perſon ſomewhat differs from their Opinion, cannot ſee it without raiſing virulent Suſpicions of their Neighbours, and endeavouring to render them ſuſpected by the whole World; and are the cauſe of their becoming what indeed they never were. Several cauſes produce this Change: It would be more advantageous and leſs ſcandalous not to proceed to a rupture. But there are ſome junctures wherein Clamours againſt ſuſpected Perſons prove very ſerviceable to a cauſe. It is when under the ſpecious diſguiſe of Friendſhip, and aſſiſted by a great Reputation, they endeavour to pervert every body. How difficult is it to lay down good Rules, when the very ſame Conduct proves ſometimes pernicious, and ſometimes advantageous!

(O) He very much prejudiced the Arminian Party.] The obtaining of Vorſtius to ſucceed Arminius in the Profeſſor's Chair, at Leyden, was believed to be a Maſter-ſtroke of that Party, and yet on the contrary nothing redounded more to the Advantage of the Enemies of the Remonſtrants. Vorſtius gave them ſuch a handle by his new way of dogmatizing on the Divine Attributes, and made it ſo eaſie to raiſe publick Suſpicions about him, that his Adverſaries were not at much trouble to render him odious. After this it was not in the leaſt difficult to Perſons who wanted neither Zeal, Tongues, nor Pens, to caſt on the whole Arminian Party, all the Odium raiſed againſt this Profeſſor; in order to which, not much more was neceſſary than to urge the preſſing Inſtances made by Arminius's Friends to get this Man to Leyden. Thus Divine Providence is continually pleaſed to confound Humane Prudence: What we toil at the moſt indefatigably, as the moſt ſubſtantial of all our Hopes, moſt frequently proves our Ruin. We ought to obſerve that when Arminius's Friends caſt their Eyes on the Profeſſor of Steinfurt, they believed him (b) intirely clear of the Socinian Hereſy: But was it eaſie to convince prepoſſeſſed Perſons, or to prevent the very ſame People, urging the contrary? I am of Opinion that what I have ſeveral times heard repeated is probable

---

* See his Letter to Parrot among thoſe of the Arminians, pag. 305. edit. in fol.

nodo Lublinenſi, vocare Vorſtium ad gymnaſium Luclavi- m regendum. (e) 'Tis the 623d, in the Folio Edition of the Letters of the Arminians, p. 927. (f) Ibid.

(g) Fidelem ſi putaveris facies. Nam multi fallere docuerunt dum timent falli, & aliis jus peccandi ſuſpicando fecerunt. Seneca epiſt. 3.

(b) As appears from the Letter which Uytenbogard writ to him the 24th of June 1611. See the 164. Letter of the Arminians in the Edition of 1684.

Dort were the (OΔ) principal Promoters of the Proſcription of this Profeſſor. Their Maſter's Glory and the Reputation of his Learning were concerned in it.

VORSTIUS (William Henry) Son to the former, was Miniſter of the Arminian Congre-bable enough; that Arminius and the Doctors of his Opinion had done a great ſervice to their Cauſe, if they had kept a profound ſilence. Their five Articles are of an inſinuating nature; and the Calviniſts as well as the Lutherans would inſenſibly have grown Arminians, if Nature only had been left to work. The Ancient Church was not of St. Auguſtin's Opinion. That Father was the occaſion of its embracing that Doctrine, which is at preſent called Calviniſm; but it is inſenſibly return'd to its priſtine ſtate. And if the Doctrine of Predeſtination and its Conſequences are vigorouſly maintain'd by thoſe of the Reformed Party, it is becauſe Diſputes have occaſion'd two Factions, and a Schiſm which is yet in being. The Church of England which lookt upon her ſelf as a ſeparate Body, and diſingaged from that in which this Schiſm was formed, was not prepoſſeſſed with the flaming Zeal which this Diſpute raiſed in the Minds of the Contra-Remonſtrants; whence it is that by ſlow degrees they have inclined to moderate Hypotheſes, which are very different from Calviniſm: The ſame would have happened in Holland, if Arminius had not formed a Party. This is what I have frequently heard from very judicious Men; I do not pretend to examin whether they are in the right.

I ſhall only obſerve, that to aſſert that the Arminian Diſputes have not raiſed numerous Diſorders amongſt the Engliſh Divines, would be to aver a Miſtake; for the time hath been, when the Favourers of that ſide ſuffered Perſecution in that Kingdom. Mr. Des Maizeaux has communicated to me ſeveral curious Particulars on this Head, which he has extracted from ſeveral Engliſh Books, and perhaps I ſhall publiſh 'em in the Supplement to this Dictionary. We ought not then to imagin that the Church of England hath been exempt from Conteſts on the ſubject of Grace; no, ſhe hath had her ſhare of that Controverſy, and even before the Synod of Dort. But two things muſt indeed be owned, one of which is, that before that time the Engliſh Divines enjoyed a greater liberty of rejecting Calvin's Hypotheſis concerning Predeſtination, and the extinction of Free-will, than thoſe of other Countries: The other is, that after the re-eſtabliſhment of Epiſcopacy, under Charles II. the Controverſies on theſe Points made no great noiſe in Great Britain; nor were there any great Quarrels concerning them, and 'tis to this favourable opportunity which this Calm afforded, that the growing and ſpreading of Arminius's Hypotheſis is to be aſcribed. Thoſe who reliſhed his Opinions, forbore diſturbing others with it, and this ſort of Moderation leſſened their Zeal for the Synod of Dort. The following Citation will confirm the former of theſe Obſervations, and inform us what was ſaid at Oxford at a ſolemn time, by a Profeſſor of Divinity in the preſence of a numerous Aſſembly: (a) Quæ ſit in Anglia Calvini authoritas, dicam. Anno 1608. Menſe Julio, in publicis comitiis, ut vocant, quæ quotannis ſemel in florentiſſimis iſtius regni Academiis, quibus neſcio an in toto terrarum orbe poſſint eſſe antiquiores, & Collegiorum numero, amplitudine, & ſtructuræ magnificentiâ præſtantiores, habentur, ac tum ſollennis in omnibus facultatibus promotio celebratur, quæ res ibi maxime viſu digna eſt: Oxoniæ, Doctor Olandus, Theologus, & Promotor tum deſignatus, hoc de Calvino judicium teſtimoniumque ex altâ cathedrâ, in mille hominum præſentia, proferebat: Calvinus vir fuit doctus, ſed non ſcripſit in omnibus Catholicè: item paulo poſt: Calvini ſententia de Deo peccati authore neque defendi, neque excuſari poteſt: quia ille aperte Catholicorum nudam permiſſionem deridet, & efficacis Dei voluntatis cum peccato concurſum introducit.

(a) Petrus Cudſemius de deſperata Calvini cauſa pag. 125. 126.

AN ENCOMIUM on the Univerſities of England.

(OΔ) The Engliſh Deputies at the Synod of Dort, were the principal Promoters of the proſcription of Vorſtius.] Here are ſome particulars on this Subject. A Report being ſpread that this Profeſſor would be ſummon'd to appear before the Synod, one of the Engliſh Deputies wrote to King James's Ambaſſador at the Hague, and earneſtly preſſed him to make uſe of his Intereſt with the Prince of Orange, and Count William, that this proceeding might not retard the proſcription of Vorſtius. He ſuggeſted to him the Expedient that was to be made uſe of to that purpoſe, which was to adviſe thoſe two Princes not to ſuffer the Synod to engage in the diſcuſſion of any Points with that Divine, or receive any Explications of his Opinions from him. This would have occaſion'd the loſs of too much time. The Engliſh Deputy deſir'd that the Aſſembly ſhould declare that all who compoſed it, had read and condemned Vorſtius's Book, and that nothing remained for him but to retract his Opinions, and aſk pardon of God and his Church there aſſembled. He alſo farther adviſed, that in caſe Vorſtius retracted, and asked ſuch a Pardon, he ſhould be acknowledged for a Brother; but otherwiſe the Synodical Aſſembly ſhould puniſh him at pleaſure. This Deputy alſo deſired that the Synod would publickly Excommunicate Vorſtius; and all theſe particulars he recommended to King James's Ambaſſador. Having but imperfectly repreſented the Contents of the Letter, I ſhall ſubjoin the expreſs words of it. (b) Spargitur hic rumor de Vorſtio citando, & Feſtus Hommius heſterna veſpera mihi dixit, ſe ea de re tecum fuiſſe loquutum. Si itaque, tua apud Principem Arauſionenſem & Comitem Gulielmum gratia nobis in ejus cauſa opus erit, alioqui non minus diu, quam Remonſtrantes, Synodum detinebit. Spero te, Vir Illuſtris, illis hoc conſilium daturum; ſi Vorſtius tempus petit tradendi apologiam ac elucidationem de duriis loquendi modis in ipſius libro de Deo, ac velit rationibus convinci, ſuorumque argumentorum confutatione, quod brevi fieri non poterit, ne Synodus de iis rebus cum illo loquatur: ſed ut plane dicat, omnes, qui ſunt in Synodo, legiſſe ipſius librum, ac multa in eo inveniſſe, quæ proxime ad blaſphemiam accedunt, & ſine dubio Eccleſiam Reformatam valde offendunt: explicationem rerum, quas nemo in quæſtionem vocat, non eſſe ſatisfactionem: itaque ſe omnino cupere, ut illas retractet & palinodiam canat, Deumque veniam roget, & Eccleſiam Dei ibi congregatam, cui eo libro ſcandalum dederat. Si hoc facit, cum noſtrum fecimus; ſin minus, Synodus hominem pro libitu caſtiget. Velim eum aliis in exemplum palam a Synodo excommunicari. Harum ſimiliumque rerum curam tibi potiſſimum committimus, ut rite dirigantur. The Preſident of the Synod having ask'd the Engliſh Deputies whether they approved that Vorſtius ſhould be cited to appear in the Aſſembly, and what the King of England's Pleaſure was in that caſe; they anſwered that they ought to conſult his Ambaſſador on that head, and that it looked very ill to condemn a Man without hearing him: they added that to avoid Delays, (c) Vorſtius ought not to be permitted to defend himſelf, or Explain his Blaſphemous Propoſitions; and that he ought not to be anſwer'd any otherwiſe than by Yes or No, nor aſk'd any queſtion but whether he was ready to abjure. Afterwards when the Suffrages were Collected for the Condemning of Vorſtius, They declared him unworthy the Name and Office of an Orthodox Profeſſor, and deſired that his Book de Deo ſhould be burnt, and read the Decree which condemned that Work to the Flames in England. (d) Se itaque non modo ipſum Vorſtium Orthodoxi Profeſſoris munere ac nomine indignum judicare, ſed etiam perſuadere, ne hujuſmodi ejus libri in bibliopoliis proſtare permittantur: Denique rogare, ut in exemplum, & in ſancti, Dei cauſa, zeli teſtimonium, Vorſtii de Deo tractatus ſummi Magiſtratus juſſu, aut Synodi decreto eadem munito, palam ſolenniterque flammis abſumatur: ſimulque hujuſmodi infamis holocauſti ſpecimen, a Britannis coram Synodo legitur authenticum, Procancellarii Cantabrigienſis ſigillo munitum, decretum xxi. Septembris 1611. Cujus vi, etiam Sereniſſimi Regis noſtri judicio præeunte, publice flammis ultricibus expurgatus eſt liber prædictus: ejuſdemque decreti Cantabrigienſis exemplar inter SYNODI acta relatum.

From

Congregation at Warmond in Holland. He wrote ſome Books (P) which have been Printed †. Mr. Chevreau || cites him on a very curious particular.

VOSSIUS. The Learned Men of this Name, afford with ſuch an Ample Field of matter, that the few ſheets which I have left, will not allow me Room to digeſt it. Wherefore I refer it to another time, together with the Memorial Communicated to me, which contains a Confutation of what is ſaid againſt Iſaac Voſſius in Moreri's Dictionary.

URCEUS (ANTONY CODRUS) One of the moſt Learned, and moſt Unfortunate Men of the XV. Century, was an (A) Italian. He was ſo nearly touched with the loſs of his Manuſcripts, that he not only (B) uttered execrable Blaſphemies, but alſo like a Savage retired to the Woods, and all Humane Society became inſupportable to him. It is reported that in his laſt Moments he acknowledged his Sin, and devoutly implored (C) the Mercy of God. Some ſay that he was killed (D) by Aſſaſſins. His Works Printed at Baſil in 1540. conſiſt of Orations, Letters and Poems. His life was Written by Bartholomæus Bononienſis, He doubted the Immortality of the (D Δ) Soul.

URGULANIA,

from this and ſeveral other places the continual Correſpondence betwixt the Synod and the Court plainly appears. The Arminians loudly complained of this Sympathy betwixt the two Empires, the Civil and Eccleſiaſtical Power, and of this concord betwixt the Royalty and the Prieſthood, on which they frequently ſay that as large a Book might be made as that of (a) M. de Marca. But how can it be helped? Such is the condition of Humane things, that without the concurrence of the two Powers (b), it is ſcarce poſſible to ſucceed in affairs of this kind. This redounds to the Advantage of a good cauſe in certain Countries, and prejudices it in others. Patience!

(P) He wrote ſome Books which have been Printed.] The following Catalogue of them appears in the Bibliotheque of the Antitrinitarians: (c) Diſceptatio de Verbo vel Sermone Dei, cujus creberrima fit mentio apud Paraphraſtas Chaldæos, Jonathan, Onkelos, & Thargum Hieroſolymitanum. Irenepoli apud hæredes Jacobi Laringhii, 1643, 8. Idem Belgice, ib. 1649. 4. Tranſtulit & notis illuſtravit Maimonidis conſtitutiones de Fundamentis Legis. Editæ ea ſunt Amſtel. apud Blavios, a 1638. 4. Item Chronologiam ſacram profanam Rab. David Ganz. & Pirke ſeu capitula R. Elieſer. Edita hæc ſunt Lugd. Bat. 1634. 4. I take the Book Intituled Biblia Parvula, which was Printed in 1700. to be written by our William Henry Vorſtius. In the Leipſick Journal (d) it is aſcribed to him, and 'tis obſerved that it was refuted by the Biſhop of Bath and Wells, and more fully ſtill by Mr. Edward, Profeſſor at Hamburg. See the Remark A in the Article Rittangelius, and Mr. Bernard's (e) Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres.

(A) Was an Italian.] Of Revenna, if we may believe Pierius Valerianus (f); but Geſner (g) citing Bartholomæus Bononienſis ſays he was Born in the Year 1446. at Herberia a little Town in the Territory of Reggio, 7 Miles diſtant from Modena. Leander Alberti ſays likewiſe that he was Born in that place, which is commonly call'd Verberia.

(B) Uttered execrable Blaſphemies, but alſo like a Savage retired.] He loſt what he had prepared for the Preſs in the following manner. He lived at Forli, in an Apartment of the Palace. His Chamber was ſo dark as to require a Candle at Noon-day. And happening to go out and leave it burning, his Papers took Fire, and his Library was immediately reduced to Aſhes. As ſoon as he heard this ill News he run in a diſtracted manner to the Palace, and ſtopping at his Chamber Door cried out, JESUS CHRIST what great Crime have I been Guilty of? Which of your followers have I ever offended, that you Treat me ſo Cruelly? Obſerve what I ſay, I ſpeak deliberately and with a Compoſed mind. If by Chance I addreſs my ſelf to you when at the point of Death, do not hear me, for I have reſolved to paſs my Eternity in Hell. (h) Quodnam ego tantum ſcelus concepi Chriſte, quem ego tuorum unquam læſi, ut ita inexpiabili in me odio debaccheris? Audi ea (pergebat ad quoddam converſus ſimulachrum) quæ tibi mentis compos & ex animo dicam. Si forte cum ad ultimum vitæ finem pervenero ſupplex accedam ad Te opem oratum, neve audias neve inter tuos accipias oro; cum infernis diis in æternum vitam agere decrevi. Thoſe who heard theſe Blaſphemies endeavoured to comfort him, but utterly in vain: He left the Town and run to a Foreſt. (i) Alio inſuper ira & indignatio hominem oppreſſerat, ut extra portam urbis egreſſus, amentia ſecuta non ante impoſuerit, quam in vaſtum ſeſe nemus proripuiſſet, ingemuitque cum moleſtia ibi totos dies tranſegiſſet.

(C) That he devoutly implored the Mercy of God.] The Author whom I cite mentions our Urceus's Prayer. (k) Ultima tandem aliquando appropinquante hora miſer ille oculis ac manibus ad cœlum ſublatis; Qui cœlum incolis, (exclamavit) fer quæſo opem peccatori, noli me, qui tuum in ſinum confugio ſupplicem rejicere. Si unquam peccantem hominem voti reum feciſti, ſic mihi extrema oranti dextram ab alto porrigas oro. After having uttered theſe Words, he ſaw a tall Man with a Torch in each Hand and Trembling all over his Body. Aſtoniſhed at this viſion he ſprung out of his Bed, and asked the Apparition what he did there at ſuch an unſeaſonable Hour and conjured him not to do him any Miſchief. (l) Ad hunc modum ſe animamque ſuam DEO commendans, quendam conſpexit ingentis ſtaturæ virum, capite raſo, barba ad terram uſque promiſſa, ardentibus oculis, faces utraque geſtantem manu, ac toto corpore tremebundum, quo viſo in hæc a pavore dictata verba erupit: Quiſnam tu es, qui ſolus furiali habitu ea noctis parte, qua mortales ſomno premuntur, deambulas, noli ad me qui DEI amicus ſum infeſtus accedere, effare quid quæras, quo ire pergis? Hæc cum dixiſſet, e ſtrato proſiluit, quaſi illum in ſe irruentem vitaturus. My Author breaks off here; he did not know whether Urceus periſhed (m) upon this occaſion or not: Which makes me ſuſpect that he as well as my ſelf wanted the Tract of Bartholomæus Bononienſis and only picked up ſeveral Scraps which others had cited before him; for it is not at all probable that our Codrus's Hiſtorian ſhould leave his Reader in ſuſpence concerning the Conſequences of this Accident. But be it as it will, Spizelius ſwayed by a charitable Principle judges very favourably of the State of this Learned Man's Soul, in conſideration of his laſt exhortation to his Diſciples. He recites it, and it ſpeaks a Man who had a true ſenſe of the fear of God, and of the Vanity of the World.

(D) That he was killed by Aſſaſſins.] Pierius Valerianus who hath not forgot him in his Catalogue of unfortunate Learned Men, expreſſes himſelf thus concerning him: (n) Codrus autem Urceus Ravennas multæ, variæque doctrinæ vir, eruditiſſimis pleriſque ſcriptis, quæ nunc edita ſunt, omnibus innotuit. Is quoque ſanguinaria peremptus eſt morte, ab adverſæ factionis latronibus fœdiſſime trucidatus.

(D Δ) He doubted the Immortality of the Soul.] His Friends asked him what he thought of it, he replyed that he did not know what would become of him after Death, or whether the Soul exiſts

after

---

† Ex Biblioth. Antitrinit. Pag. 141.

|| In the Tome of the Chevræana pa. ... of the Dutch Edition.

(c) Biblioth. Antitrin. pag. 141.

(d) Mens. Decemb. 1700. Pag. 143.

(e) For the month of August 1699. pag. 214. and for September 1699. Pag. 359.

(f) In his work in the Remark D.

(g) Geſner in Epitom. Biblioth. fol.

(h) Spizelius in Felice Litterato pag. 12. He cites Barthol. Bononienſis in vita Codri.

(i) Id. Spizelius ib. pag. 13.

(k) Id. ib.

(l) Id. ib.

(m) Utrum extremum hoc evaſerit periculum, & poſt tantam tempeſtatem in perpetuæ felicitatis portum ſit delatus, dicere non habemus. Id. ibid. pag. 14.

(n) Pierius Valerianus de Literatorum infelicitate, lib. 1. pag. 21, 22.

URGULANIA, a Roman Lady, Favourite of the Empreſs Livia. Her intereſt with that Empreſs rendred her extremely inſolent, in ſo much † that ſhe refuſed to appear before the Senate in order to give Evidence: The Prætor waited on her to interrogate her, and a greater deference was paid to her than to the Veſtal (A) Virgins, who were obliged to come to the Bar, when they gave Teſtimony. But Urgulania's great Intereſt and haughty Demeanor did not prevent Lucius Piſo's ſuing her for Debt in the Year of Rome 769. She refuſed to appear, and applied for Refuge to the Emperor. But the Plaintiff could not be perſuaded to ſtop his proceedings by the Remonſtrances of his Relations, nor by all the Complaints of Livia, that it was a Violation of the reſpect due to her; and Tiberius would no farther interpoſe in this proceſs, than by promiſing his Mother to Sollicite the Judges in Favour of the Defendant: So that the Suit was no otherwiſe ended than by Livia's cauſing Piſo to be paid his demanded Sum. Urgulania was ſtill alive in the Year 777. when her Grand-Son Plautius Silvanus the Prætor was accuſed of the Murther of his Wife; for we find in Tacitus * that there being no hopes that the Criminal ſhould eſcape Condemnation, ſhe ſent him a Dagger, which he being unable to uſe, cauſed his Veins to be opened.

† Tacitus, Annal. lib. 2. cap. 34.

* Id. lib. 4. cap. 22.

URGULANILLA, Grand Daughter of the (B) preceding Lady was Married to the Emperor Claudius β before he became Emperor. He had two (C) Children by her, and divorced her γ on Account of her reputed Incontinence, and on ſuſpicion of Murther.

β Sueton. in Claudio cap. 26.

γ Ob libidinum probra & homicidii ſuſpicionem. Id. ibid.

URRACA, Daughter and Heireſs of Alfonſo VI. King of Leon and Caſtile was firſt Married to Raymond of Burgundy ‖, whoſe Widow ſhe became in the Year 1108. She afterwards Married Don Alfonſo King of Arragon and Navarre ╪ in 1106. This ‖ Mayerne Turquet, Hiſt. d'Eſpagne B. 8. pag. m. 311.

╪ Mariana de rebus Hiſp. lib. 10. cap. [illegible], pag. m. [illegible].

after this Life or not. But he was not in doubt concerning the Doctrines commonly aſſerted about Hell, but poſitively affirmed that they were meer Tales invented to terrify Mankind. Spizelius mentions alſo this particular. Cum ejuſdem, ſaith he (a), de animæ mortalitate opinione peſtilens ſidus olim infelicem illum Codrum Urceum [cujus tragœdiam ſupra memoravimus] afflaſſet, parum abfuit, quin & ipſe in atheiſmi voraginem fuerit præcipitatus. Rogantibus enim amicis, quid de immortalitate animæ ſentiret? neſcire ſe reſpondebat, quid poſt mortem de ſe futurum eſſet, viveretne animus, ſive anima, an interiret una cum corpore, quæque de inferis homines prædicarent, anilia quædam terriculamenta eſſe dicebat: hinc ipſi amariſſimo epigrammate poſt fata etiam fuit exprobatum, quod non velle de Chriſto, inferis, animarumque immortalitate ſentiendo, latentis atheiſmi ſui haud obſcura documenta dediſſet.

(A) A greater deference was paid to her than to the Veſtal Virgins.] To which purpoſe Tacitus ſaith, (b) Urgulaniæ potentia adeo nimia civitati erat, ut teſtis in cauſſa quadam quæ apud Senatum qui do- tractabatur, venire dedignaretur: miſſus eſt prætor mi interrogaret, cum Virgines Veſtales in foro & judicio audiri, quotiens teſtimonium dicerent, vetus mos fuerit. M. du Boulai had no Reaſon to take Urgulania for a Veſtal. The Veſtal Urgulania's deſpiſing the Summons, of the Senate (ſaith he,) to give Evidence in a cauſe depending before them was unpreſidented; and that Court was obliged to ſend the Prætor to her Houſe to examine her. As Cornelius Tacitus (whoſe Words are worth reciting) informs us lib. 2. (c). After which he cites the paſſage which I have quoted above: Which if he had read with due attention, he would have been ſatisfied that Urgulania was no Veſtal; he would I ſay have been convinced of it without having any occaſion to conſult the other paſſage of Tacitus, which ſhews that ſhe was the Grandmother of a Roman Prætor, who was accuſed of killing his ſecond Wife. This ſuppoſes an Old Age worthy that Hiſtorian's Obſervation, (for the very earlieſt time that a Veſtal Virgin was permitted to Marry was at the Age of 37.) and doth not very well agree with Mr. du Boulai's Obſervation (d) that few Veſtals Married after thirty Years Obſervance of their Vow, and thoſe that did proved very unhappy. A Favourite, who had as potent an Intereſt as Urgulania, who ſhould have been Married after having been a Veſtal, would have been an illuſtrious Inſtance of good Fortune. I can eaſily believe that this Author never ſaw the paſſage of Tacitus any where elſe than in Tiraquellus's (e) Commentaries on Alexander ab Alexandro, where being ſeparated from the thred of the Narration it may make one believe Urgulania was a Veſtal Virgin.

(B) Grand Daughter of the preceding Lady.] According to the of Opinion Reineſius, a Perſon who ſtudied the Roman Families as much as any other in the World. He ſaith (f) that Urgulania, Livia's Favourite, was the Wife of Marcus Plautius the Son of Aulus Plautius, who was Tribune of the People in the Year of Rome 698. That Marcus Plautius Silvanus the Son of Marcus Plautius and Urgulania was Conſul in the Year 752. and honoured with the Triumphal Ornaments in 762. That Plautius Silvanus the Son of that Conſul was Prætor of Rome in the Year 777. and that he had a Siſter who was our Urgulanilla, and two Brothers viz. Publius Plautius Pulcher, and Titus Plautius Silvanus Ælianus, who was Conſul in 799. and afterwards again in Veſpaſian's time. There is yet extant a very long (g) inſcription expreſſing the Offices and Actions of this Titus Plautius, and particularly his Conſulſhip in Veſpaſian's Reign. Notwithſtanding which Lipſius (h) has been ſo inadvertent as to apply this inſcription to that Plautius Silvanus who killed himſelf in the Year of Rome 777. and was Urgulania's Grandſon. It is obſervable that in my Edition of Lipſius's (i) Tacitus, the Text hath it Urgulania, and it is Virgulania in the Commentary, aud the Commentator obſerves that the Sir-Name Virgulanius was appropriated to the Plautian Family, which he proves by an inſcription, and Suetonius's Authority, who, ſaith he, calls one of the Emperor Claudius's Wives Plautia Virgulanilla. But all the Authors who produce this inſcription, expreſs the Name to be Urgulanius: Whence then can it proceed that Lipſius alledges it to prove his Virgulanius? I believe I may venture to ſay that the Printers are intirely Innocent of this Blunder, and that Lipſius not perfectly remembring the Word Urgulania thought that Tacitus ſaid Virgulania, and Continued this firſt Error throughout. He had done much better, not to have written proper Names without-book, but to have kept the Original before his Eyes. And if we that are Authors would always be ſo prudent as to diſtruſt our Memory, and only rely on an exact view, our Writings would be more accurate.

Our Urgulanilla perhaps owed her Name to its being a Diminutive of that of Urgulania her Grand-Mother.

(C) He had two Children by her.] A Son and a Daugh-

(a) Spizelius ubi ſupra pag. 174. 175. He cites Barth. Bottonient. in Codri Urcei vita.

(b) Tacit. Annal. lib. 2. cap. 34.

(c) Du Boulay, Threſor des Antiquitez Romaines, pag. 306.

(d) Du Boulai ib. pag. 318.

(e) In lib. 5. Genial. dier. cap. 12. p. 109. edit. Lugd. Batavor. 1673. where inſtead of Cornelius Tacitus, there is Conelius Celſus.

(f) Reineſius epiſt. 57. ad Rupertum pag. 106.

(g) It is to be ſeen in Glandorp. Onom. pag. 683. & in Rickius in Tacitum pag. [illegible].

(h) Lipſ. in Tacit. Annal. lib. 4. pag. m. 200.

(i) That of Geneva 1619. in 8.

This Marriage proved the cauſe of the re-union of almoſt all the Chriſtian Kingdoms of Spain under one Sovereign; for after the Death of † Don Alfonſo VI. King of Leon, Caſtile and Toledo, &c. theſe Realms fell into the Hands of Don Alfonſo King of Arragon and Navarre; they devolved on him I ſay by Virtue of his Marrying Urraca. The Lords of Caſtile were againſt that Marriage || wherefore the King did not go to Claim his Queen's ſucceſſion, without a good Number of Troops in order to reduce the Caſtilians to Reaſon in caſe of neceſſity. The Preparatives for his journey and other things retarded his taking poſſeſſion: but in the interim he increaſed the Splendor and Magnificence of his Court, (A) and connived at the Scandalous Conduct of Urraca. He β went along with her to Caſtile, and met with no manner of reſiſtance; nevertheleſs he Acted like a Man who very well knew how to provide (B) againſt all Events, and was ſoon obliged to Remedy the ill effects of his Queen's Ambition, who would have deſtroyed a great Lord as a Puniſhment γ for having given the Title of King of Caſtile to the King her Husband. She grew ſo diſſolute that he was forced to Confine her to the Fortreſs of Caſtellar; from whence ſhe finding ways to eſcape, retired into Caſtile, and endeavoured to annul her Marriage. The Arch-Biſhop of Toledo, and ſeveral other Prelates aſſiſted her in that Attempt, for which they were ſeverely puniſhed by the King. The great Lords and States of Caſtile oppoſed this Divorce, and by ſubmiſſive means brought Urraca to the King her Husband in Arragon, and he accordingly Graciouſly received her; but as ſhe continued her Vicious courſe of Life, and daily more and more forgot her own and the Honour of her Houſe, he at laſt cauſed her to be conveyed to Soria, and baniſhed her for ever from him δ. After which her party applyed themſelves more vigorouſly than ever to diſſolve the Marriage. She alledged not only the common excuſe on like Occaſions, that ſhe was Married againſt her Conſent, but that her near Relation to Don Alfonſo rendred her Marriage with him unlawful *. Application was made to the Pope, who committed this Affair to Don ‡ Diego Gelmirio, Biſhop of Compoſtella. And it Terminated in a rupture of the Marriage. Some Hiſtorians praiſe Alfonſo for that having put away (C) Urraca, he at the ſame time renounced all Authority Daughter. The former was Named Druſus, and dyed before Fourteen, by a very odd Accident: For throwing up a Pear into the Air in order to catch it in his Mouth, it accordingly fell in and choaked him. He was Contracted to one of Sejanus's Daughters, notwithſtanding which the ſame Sejanus was reported to have cauſed him to be killed (a). So true it is that a hundred times more Crimes than they are Guilty of are commonly imputed to Favourites. (b) But Suetonius rejects this impertinent Accuſation. Claudia the Daughter of Claudius and Urgulanilla was Born before the expiration of five Months after her Mother's Divorce: And the late Husband acknowledged her at firſt, but not long after his mind altered, and he cauſed her to be expoſed Naked at her Mother's door; on pretence that Boter his enfranchiſed Slave was the true Father of this Child. Mr. Chevreau miſtook Suetonius's Words quamvis ante quintum menſem divortii natam, in believing they ſignified (c) tho' ſhe was Born five Months before their Divorce. He ſeems to intend a Criticiſm on Reineſius, (d) for ſaying that Plautia Urgulanilla, was Claudius's firſt Wife; but indeed here is no room for Cenſure, for Lepida and Medullina were only Contracted, but not Married to Claudius. Wherefore Mr. Chevreau deſerves to be blamed for not obſerving Suetonius's diſtinction. He beſtows ſix Wives on that Emperor, when Suetonius allows him but (e) four, and two Contracted Ladies, quatuor uxores & duas ſponſas.

(A) He increaſed the ſplendor and magnificence of his Court, and connived at the Scandalous Conduct of Urraca.] Both theſe things were Natural Conſequences of the Inheritance which this Princeſs brought with her. Two or three Kingdoms left her by her Father were very well worth the concealing a reſentment at her ill deportment. Mariana's Words plainly ſignify that the tide of Urraca's lewdneſs run very high. (f) Præterea varia Aragonii regni negotia diſtinebant (Alfonſum) ne novam & ampliſſimam cerneret hæreditatem. Cuncta tamen ad novi imperii decorem compoſita, dilatæ voluptates, diſſimulatæ Reginæ libidines: quæ non ſine ſugillatione majeſtatis nimium in levitatem atque turpitudinem incubuerat.

(B) He acted like a Man who very well knew how to provide againſt all Events.] " (g) As ſoon " as ever he had ſet Foot in Caſtile he began to " Conſider what might happen, if his Queen " ſhould dye without Iſſue by him; wherefore he " put the Principal Places and ſtrongeſt Forts into " the hands of Navarreſe and Arragonian Governors and Captains, to the end that if he " ſhould be obliged to quit the Realms of Caſtile, " Leon, Toledo, and their dependances, he might " in ſome meaſure keep thoſe People, in awe and evacuate them on Honourable and Advantageous " Terms: This Practice ſomewhat diſguſted the " Caſtilian Lords. He alſo knew his Wife Urraca " to be Proud, ungrateful, inconſtant and libidinous; wherefore like a conſiderate Man he fortified himſelf againſt whatever Events Time might " produce. This Woman on a trivial Occaſion, " conceived a moſt inveterate hatred againſt the " Count D. Pedro Anſures, Lord of Valladolid, " who had Educated her, as well as preſerved " and protected her Realm after the Death of her " Father; it was only becauſe in the Letters which " he wrote to the King her Husband, and to her, " in order to advertiſe them to come and take " poſſeſſion of their heritage, he gave her Husband the Title of King of Caſtile. For this " Reaſon ſhe undertook to deprive him of his " Eſtate at Valladolid and other places; but the " King immediately re-eſtabliſhed him, and the " better to ſecure him from the rage of this Woman, he ſent him to Arragon, with Donna Elo his " Lady, intruſting to them the Government of the " Young Count of Urgel his Nephew. "

(C) Some Hiſtorians praiſe Alfonſo for that having put away Urraca, he at the ſame time renounced—— but they contradict themſelves.] Don Alfonſo, ſaith Mayerne (h), " baniſhed Urraca for ever from his " Converſation. Notwithſtanding which he retained ſeveral ſtrong places in Caſtile, without " being very deſirous of the Government or Adminiſtration of that Kingdom. It is certain " that this King's Courage was very great, and " plainly ſhewed that he put a higher Value on " Virtue and Honour, than on Terreſtrial Goods, " he giving up ſuch ample Territories as thoſe of " Caſtile, Leon, Toledo, and others which Urraca " brought him. „ This Hiſtorian in the ſame Page begins to relate Don Alfonſo's reſentment againſt thoſe who had reſtored to Urraca the Towns and Fortreſſes which he had in Caſtile. This reſentment we find in the ſame Hiſtory to be one of the Motives, which engaged him to make War againſt the

---

† In the Year 1109.

|| Id. Ib. [illegible] pag. [illegible]

β Mayerne [illegible]

γ [illegible]

δ [illegible]

* Id. Ib.

‡ Id. Ib. [illegible]

(a) Sueton. in Claudio cap. 27.

(b) Quo magis miror fuiſſe qui traderent fraude a Sejano necatum. Id. ib.

(c) Chevreau, Hiſt. du monde Tom. 2. pag. 1[illegible]. Dutch Edit. 1687. & pag. 202. 203. Dutch Edit. 1698.

(d) Reineſ. ubi ſupra pag. 109.

(e) Sueton. ib. cap. 26.

(f) Mariana de rebus Hiſpaniæ lib. 1[illegible]. cap. [illegible] 4. pag. m. 419.

(g) Mayerne Turquet, Hiſt. d'Eſpagne l. 9. p. 336.

(h) Id. ib. pag. 3[illegible].

Authority over the Kingdom of Castile, but they sensibly contradict themselves by relating several Facts, which make it appear that he did his utmost to keep that Authority. He Fought Battles to maintain it, and gave his Enemies the Trouble of Forcing him to a Restitution of the places which he detained, † even after the Castilians had elected Alphonsus Raymond of Burgundy, Urraca's Son by her first Husband, for their King * in the Year 1122. They made this Choice when they found that § the Queen continued to give up her self to the most Scandalous Amours, and also Countenanced the Tyrannical Government of her Favourite. Her own Son was necessitated to proclaim War against her, and to besiege her in the Castle of Leon; out of which difficulties she no otherwise extricated her self than by a promise to Renounce her Dominions, and reduce her self to a private life with a pension suitable to her Dignity γ. The Year of her Death is not certainly known; ‖ some say that she died about 1124 in Child-Bed lying in of a (D) Bastard; others tell us that her Death was a Punishment of a Sacrilegious Crime. She had a Sister who might very well have disputed with her the pre-eminence (E) in boundless lewdness, and

† In the Memoirs c.

* Id. ib. pag. 335.

§ Id. ib.

γ Id. ib. pag. 344.

‖ Septimo decimo circiter anno a morte patris. Mariana ubi supra cap. 8. pag. 335. See chap. 14. p. 337. Remarks that she died in the Year 1126.

the Castilians. It appears from Mayerne's Words, that Urraca's lewdness is assigned as another cause of the War; (a) "From that time Donna "Urraca continued her Immoralities; for re-assu-"ming her former design of a divorce, she ob-"tained it by the Authority of Pope Paschal "——— So that finding her self without any "check, and no restraint laid upon her lust, she "loosely indulged it to an exorbitant degree. "She gave up her self to a Familiar and un-"chast Conversation with Count Gomez de Candes-"pina, who formerly pretended to be her Hus-"band, and had by her a Son, of whom she was "delivered clandestinely or by stealth, whence he "was Named Don Fernando Hurtado, or stolen; "from whom the House of the Hurtado's, an illustri-"ous Family in Spain is said to be descended. "Tho' some doubt the truth of this, yet it is cer-"tain that the Count Don Gomez, in a short time "had the Sole Government of the Kingdom, and "intirely disposed of the Affairs of War and Peace "at his Arbitrary Will and Pleasure, and enjoy-"ed the same Privacies with the Queen, as if he "had really been her Husband. Notwithstanding "which Don Pedro de Lara another Gallant——— "so far insinuated himself into the Queen's favour, "that he soon became one of her darling Minions, "of whom Count Gomez proved very Jealous. "The dissolute and lascivious deportment of Donna "Urraca, was so universally and publickly known "that King Alfonso excited by a just indignation as "well on that Account as by reason the of mentioned "Divorce, resolved to enter Castile with a great Army "putting all to Fire and Sword that he met in his "way, being irritated as well by the Impurities of "the Queen as the base pusillanimity of the Castili-"ans, who tamely obeyed her: He bore them a "grudge, because they had restored to her the "places which he had entrusted to their keeping. "The Queen's two Amorous Darlings Don Gomez "and Don Pedro took the Field against him with the "Forces of Castile and Leon, and meeting the "Royal Army, composed of Navarrese and Ara-"gonians, they came to a close Engagement near "Candespina, not far from Sepulveda. Don Pedro "who led the Van was first charged," and immediately Fled (b) and retired to the Queen at Burgos, carrying the News of the defeat which he was not at leisure to see. Don Gomez her other Paramour was killed in the Field of Battle. The Victorious Alfonso Penetrated as far as Galicia, (c) making a merciless slaughter and devastations wherever his Army passed. He obtained a Second Victory betwixt Leon and Astorga, and Forced Alfonso Raimundo, Urraca's Son, to save himself by Flight into Portugal. The Queen being deposed, the King her Son (d) thought of the Recovery of the Castilian fortresses, which his Father in Law Don Alfonso King of Navarre kept from him. Accordingly he raised a great Army: Alfonso did the like, (e) and entred the Kingdom of Castile, when the Prelates of both Kingdoms foreseeing the Impendent Miseries which were inevitable, if these two potent Princes should once make War, earnestly endeavoured to negotiate a peace betwixt them; and their Attempts were so successful as to engage the new King of Castile, to address himself by way of request to the King of Navarre and Arragon, in order to obtain his Cities and Castles. By which means he gained part of his demands; but Alfonso would not restore the Countries situated betwixt Villorado & Calahorra, nor the Provinces of Guipuscoa & Alava, &c. Pretending that they ought to be reunited to Navarre, and that they were usurped by Don Alfonso the VI. King of Castile.

Hath not the Historian who relates all these particulars a very good Assurance, when he avers that Urraca's Husband scorned to detain the Patrimony of the Wife he had divorced? What follows is another Error of the like Nature. An Author whom I here cite, blames Don Alfonso for divorcing Urraca, (f) "and by that means depriving "himself of the possession of three Kingdoms. For "tho' the History of Spain praises him for hav-"ing preferred his Honour to those three great "Realms, I cannot help thinking that if on one "side it be taken for a generous Action, on the "other it must pass for very weak and impolitical, "as was that of Lewis the VII King of France, "who lived at the same time, and who by divorcing "his Wife Eleonora, sowed the Seeds of a perpe-"tual War in his Kingdom." This Comparison betwixt Don Alfonso and Lewis the VII. is not just; for the French King intirely dispossessed himself of the Territories of his repudiated Queen, and very exactly acted according to Marcus Aurelius's Maxime: But Don Alfonso did not at all follow that Rule, and is on that Account censured by one of the best Spanish Historians. (g) Alfonsus Aragonius eo (h) nuncio perculsus repudio facto, Reginam Soria dimittit, in cujus urbis arce custodia rursus mancipata erat: imperandi tamen dulcedine illectus dotalem ditionem non deponit. Id iniquum esse omnibus videbatur.

(D) Some say that she died——— in Child-Bed lying in of a Bastard; others tell us that it was a Punishment of a Sacrilegious Crime.] She (i), "took up her residence in Saint Vincent's Church, "being very strictly guarded: Notwithstanding "which it is reported that she one day went to the "Church, Dedicated to St. Isidore of Leon, in order "to seize the Treasures, which her Father and "Grand-Father had given to that place, and that "as she was carrying off her Prey, being just going "out, and having Advanced one Foot out of the "Church, her Intrails burst out: A just Punish-"ment for the Adulteries of which she had been "Guilty, and the Murthers which they occasioned, "to the Injury and Dishonour of the Royal Fa-"milies, and all the Christian part of Spain, as "well as for her Sacrilege. Others say that she "died in the Castle of Saldania in the delivery of "a Bastard Child." Mariana mentions both these Opinions, and agrees to this Queen's being the Eternal ignominy of Spain: (k) Pudicitiam sane dum vixit haud satis honeste habuit, in Saldania arce ex partu extinctam ferunt. æternum Hispaniæ dedecus. alii Legione affirmant, cum thesauros D. Isidori compilasset, quos auferre nefas erat, in ipso templi limine ruptis visceribus, manifesta numinis vindicta expirasse.

(E) A Sister who might have disputed with her the pre-eminence in boundless lewdness.] This was Theresa the Bastard Daughter of Don Alfonso the VI. who bestowed her in Marriage on a French Lord in acknowledgment of the Services he had done him

(a) Id. ib. pag. 331.

(b) Id. ib.

(c) Id. ib.

(d) Id. ib. pag. 344.

(e) Id. ib. pag. 345.

and brought a Load of Evils on Portugal. After this, I am surprized that the Name of Urraca should ever be given to the Infanta's of Castile, but I do not wonder that the French Ambassadors who were sent ‡ for one of the Daughters of Don Alfonso IX. whom he had promised their Master, chose the less beautiful, whose Name was Blanche, and could not bear the very mention of her Sister, because named Urraca. They undoubtedly looked on her Name as a scandalous one, after the vicious Life of the Queen, the subject of this Article.

URSINUS * (Zachary) one of the most celebrated Reformed Divines of the Sixteenth Century, was Born at Breslaw, the Capital City of Silesia, on the 18th ‖ of July 1534. After he had made a considerable Progress in Learning for his Age him in his Wars against the Moors. This Lord according to some Writers was Henry of Lorrain, but others call him Henry of Burgundy. And the latter are divided whether he was descended from the Dukes, or the Earls of Burgundy. One party avers that (a) he was Son to Henry Duke of Burgundy, and Grand-Son to Robert of France, the I. of that Name Duke of Burgundy, and that he was consequently a Prince of the Royal Blood of France; and the other side will have him to be (b) the Earl of Burgundy's Son, and Brother to Pope Calixtus II. However it was, this valiant Lord render'd himself so considerable, that Don Alfonso VI. King of Castile Marrying him to his Daughter Theresa, (c) gave him those parts of Portugal which he had conquer'd from the Moors, with the Title of Hereditary Earl, for him and his legitimate Successors, proceeding from the Marriage, and also promised to add to these Lordships the Conquests which he should for the future make on the Moors, with the same successive and hereditary Right.——— on condition that he and his Heirs should acknowledge the Kings of Leon for their Sovereign Lords, and hold the said Lands of them in Fealty and Homage. Theresa was a Widow (d) in the Year 1112, and Mother of three Children, one Son and two Daughters. (e) Soon after which, she married a second time to ——— Bermund Paez de Transtamara, and after she had lived some time with him, she eloped from him, excited thereto by a prevailing (f) Lust, or some other damnable occasion, and married Don Fernando Paez de Transtamara, Brother to the Husband she left. On the other side, Don (g) Bermund being thus left, as if he design'd to emulate his Countess's Incest, married her eldest Daughter Donna Teresa Henriquez, Sister to Don Alfonso Henriquez. These scandalous inter-marriages were contracted amongst Christians, in the infancy of the House of Portugal——— But the young Earl Alfonso Henriquez being extremely afflicted at these exorbitances, and besides finding himself despised, rejected and disgraced, and that the Adulterous and incestuous Don Fernand assumed the Title of Earl of Portugal, on account of his Wife, he raised an Army against him——— (h) Pursuing him as a Tyrant and incestuous Adulterer, and their Forces engaged near Guymaranes, where Alfonso was beaten, by his falling too rashly on the Enemy.——— Having afterwards recruited, and rallied their Forces, they fought a second Battle, which proved more successful to Don Alfonso: For Don Fernando's Army was utterly routed and scatter'd, he and the Countess Don Alfonso's Mother were taken and confined to a strong Prison:——— And this was the Fruit which these two lewd Sisters, Daughters of King Alfonso VI. reaped in reward of their Lust, and almost at the same time. Theresa was treated very roughly by Earl Alfonso Henriquez her Son. (i) "She found a way "to discover her sufferings to Don Alfonso Raimondo "King of Castile, her Nephew, and petitioned him "to espouse her cause, and deliver her from her "present confinement, in reward of which she offered to settle the Earldom of Portugal on him. "King Alfonso desirous to re-unite that Country "to his Territories, came in Person with an Army, in order to deliver this Lady, perfectly forgetting that the Earl had assisted him in his Wars, "against his Mother Donna Urraca, Queen of Castile and Leon; but he was beaten and wounded "in the foot. After he was cured, he re-enter'd Portugal, and besieged the City of Guimaranes, in which the Earl himself was shut up. "This "Siege proved very tedious, and if the Attacks "were brisk on one side, the Defence was brave "on the other; insomuch that they both grew "weary of it. Egas Nunnez went from the "Town, under the shelter of a safe Conduct, and "made Proposals of Peace, which was concluded on "condition that the Earl of Portugal should be "obliged to come into the other's Kingdom and take "an Oath of Allegiance to him as his Sovereign. "Upon which he drew off his Army, and marched to Toledo, without remembring his Aunt's Interest, on whose account he undertook the Expedition, being struck with horror at her detestable "course of Life, or perhaps engaged to this Enterprise by Ambition only.

Tho' this Story supplies sufficient matter for numerous Reflections, I shall yet offer only a few. The First of which is,

I. That most Authors who write Lives, chuse for their Subjects Illustrious Personages; and if some of them intermix ill Men with the good, it is because they are resolved to give a perfect History of an intire Order or Class of Men. I don't know any Author which hath attempted to write the Lives of great Criminals only. There is no want of Elogies on Illustrious Women; all Libraries swarm with them; but I question whether there ever yet appeared a particular Collection of those Women who were a scandal to their Sex and Country. It is a copious Subject which deserves an Author's pains, and it might be handled in Plutarch's manner: I mean, that as this famous Writer chose the most Illustrious Romans and Grecians in order to parallel them; in like manner the Queens and Princesses of different Nations might be compared together. I have mention'd in another place, the comparison which the English made betwixt Mary Steward, Queen of Scots, and Joan Queen of Naples. And abundance of this kind might easily be made. Our Urraca might be compared to the Heiress of Guienne, or Margaret de Valois, Wife of Henry IV. But the most exact Parallel that could be found for her, would be that of her Sister Theresa. They were both very lewd; the Tyranny which both their Paramours exercised, was owing to them, as well as a thousand Civil and Foreign Hostilities thereby occasioned, and they were both degraded and poisoned by their own Sons.

II. This confirms what I have already said of the Disorders which those Countries are exposed to, where the Salique Law doth not obtain, and concerning the pernicious consequences of the lewd Inclinations of a Female Sovereign. Urraca impatiently resented her Subjects acknowledging her Husband's Authority: That she had her Paramours was obvious to the whole World: the Husband was obliged to put a stop to this inordinate Licentiousness; this he could not do without making room for Factions, which occasioned a War. The Castilians disgusted at him and their Urraca's Paramour, turned to the Rising-Sun, and set up the Son in order to turn his own Mother out of the Throne; and he fully complied with their Design. Which is a plain indication of what Importance it is for a Queen to avoid all publick Impurities; for if she once grows shameless, no bounds can restrain her. She will place her Affection on despicable Objects; she will not have any regard to Merit in her Choice, nor value any thing besides the Beauty and Vigour of a young Coxcomb, who will scandalize her Reputation, and occasion a hundred Pretexts for a Civil War; and besides, become so insolent as to affront his Mistress, (k) and render his Assassination necessary. She will not consider the regular Example which she owes to her Children,

---

‡ [illegible]

* This Name is a Translation of the German word Beer, which was the name of his Family, and signifies a Bear.

‖ Freherus says the 29th of June, tho' he follows the same Author as I do. Bucholcer says also the 29th of June.

(a) See [illegible] Histoire de la maison royale pag. [illegible]

(c) See Louis Gollut, Memoires Historiques de la Franche Comté pag. 305, 306.

(d) Mayerne ubi supra lib. 8. pag. 112.

(e) Idem lib. 9. pag. 319.

(e) Id. ib.

(f) Campion ubi supra pag. 134. expresses it thus: Which (Bermund Paes) not pleasing her according to her Mind, that mad and lewd Woman left him to marry his Brother Ferdinando Paes de Transtamara.

(g) Mayerne ib.

(h) Id. ib. pag. 343.

(i) Id. ib. pag. 347.

(k) Campion ubi supra pag. 135, 136.

Age, he was ſent to Wittemberg in (A) 1550. Where he ſtudied ſeven Years; and his Father not being rich, he was aſſiſted by publick and private Contributions, and he had alſo recourſe to Tutorage. He ſo cloſely followed his Studies, that at Wittemberg he acquired an extenſive Knowledge, as well in Poeſy (B) and the Languages, as in Philoſophy and Divinity. Melanchthon, the Ornament of that Univerſity, conceived a very particular eſteem and affection for him. Urſinus accompanied him in the year 1557, to the Conference of Worms, from whence he went to Geneva, and afterwards to Paris, where he ſtayed ſome time in order to learn French, and perfect himſelf in the Hebrew under the Learned John Mercerus. He had ſcarce returned to Melanchthon at Wittemberg, when he received ſome Letters from the Magiſtrates of Breſlaw in September 1558. containing their Offer of the Maſterſhip of their School. Which he accepted, and ſo worthily acquitted himſelf in that Poſt, that he had continued in it as long as he pleaſed, if he had not been made uneaſie by the Perſecution which the Miniſters raiſed againſt him, they having diſcovered that he was no very good Lutheran. In effect, when he explained Melanchthon's Book de examine Ordinandorum ad Miniſterium; he ſo treated the Subject de Cœna Domini, that he gave occaſion to the Demagogues (ſo the Author of his † Life calls them) to term him Sacramentarian. He juſtified himſelf, writing down his Sentiments concerning Baptiſm and the Lord's Supper: But this attempt for the Reſtoration of Peace proving ineffectual, Urſinus who hated theſe ſorts of quarrels, choſe rather to go away than to endure them; purſuant to which, he obtained an honourable diſmiſſion of the Magiſtrates, and it being impoſſible for him to retire to his dear Tutor Melanchthon, who had been lately dead in April 1560. He went to Zurich, where Martyr, Bullinger, Simler, Geſner, and ſeveral other great Men treated him with the utmoſt Friendſhip. He was ſoon removed from thence by the Univerſity of Heidelberg, which then wanted a Learned Man. He reached that City in September 1561, and was eſtabliſhed in the College of the Sapience in order to the Inſtruction of the Students. He † Ibi ſtatim Urſinus Sacramentarius a Demagogis preſſimatus, et adverſarios expertus eſt quos prius amicos & fautores habuerat. Melch. in vitis Theol. pag. 531.

Children, nor that an untimely Succeſſion may dethrone Her and crown the Heir. In one word, it is a Chain of Ignominy and Confuſion.

III. It is an aggravation of Urraca's Crimes, that ſhe not only careleſly expoſed them publickly, but alſo that ſhe was Married to an Illuſtrious Monarch. He was ſir-nam'd (a) El Batallador, the Battle-Fighter, by reaſon that he had fought 29 Battles, and been victorious in all of them, two only excepted. He was King of Arragon and Navarre, wholly independent of Urraca, which render'd his Condition equal to that of this Queen. Notwithſtanding all which, he did not eſcape the Matrimonial Diſgrace. So true it is that the perſonal Bravery of a Husband is not ſufficient to avert this Storm.

IV. Laſtly, I obſerve that Don Alfonſo Raimundo King of Caſtile, who had dethroned his Mother Urraca, and kept her in Priſon, yet engaged in a War in favour of his Aunt the Counteſs of Portugal, who was treated in the ſame manner by Don Alfonſo Henriquez her Son. This Aunt promiſed the King of Caſtile to declare him her Heir to the prejudice of her Son. (b) Doloris illa impatientia Alfonſum Caſtellæ Regem eo nomine ſeptimum, ut propinquæ, miſeræ & captivæ matri opem ferat, per literas obteſtatur adverſus impios filii conatus. Navatæ operæ mercedem, Portugaliæ principatum pollicetur Alfonſo filio, pro eo ac par erat, abdicato. Annuit ille ſive ambitione dominandi corruptus, ſive materteræ calamitatem miſeratus: validoque exercitu conflato in Portugaliæ fines irruit. There needed no more to invite him into Portugal with Sword in hand, and it is very probable, that amongſt other Pretexts, he urged that of his Aunt being diſpoſſeſſed and oppreſſed by an unnatural Son: For where are the Men who are aſhamed to condemn in another what they do themſelves? Don Alfonſo Henriquez might very juſtly have defended himſelf by an Argument ad hominem, and returned an Anſwer like that, which it is ſuppoſed that Lameck's Wives return'd to Adam.

Obſerve, that Mr. Lequien de la Neufville doth not ſay any thing poſitive of this Tereſa's Amours. His words do not in the leaſt hinder her being thought a chaſt Lady; for this looſe and general expreſſion (c) She thought of nothing but dying more boldly than ſhe had lived, does not denote any Galantry. The conduct of a Woman may be very oppoſite to holineſs, without being ſtained with any laſcivious Crimes. He poſitively aſſures us, that Alfonſo, King of Caſtile, took the Field——(d) on pretence of delivering the Princeſs. He places himſelf among thoſe who did not believe her a Baſtard, and ſaith that (e) Theodorus Godefroy evidently proves, that Don Henry her Husband, was great Grandſon to Robert the devout, King of France. Father Anſelme, who eſpouſes the ſame Opinion, refers us to Godefroy's Tract concerning the Original of the Kings of Portugal, Printed in 1624. I have not this Edition, but if it affords no ſtronger Proofs than that Printed in 1612, which I have juſt now examined, I dare venture to ſay, that Learned Hiſtoriographer doth not evidently prove this genealogical Aſſertion.

(A) He was ſent to Wittemberg in 1550.] Melchior Adam is guilty of two Contradictions in one Page (f). The Firſt, That Urſinus was ſent to the Univerſity of Wittemberg at the age of 16; the ſecond, That he entred Wittemberg on the firſt of May, 1552. One of which particulars muſt neceſſarily be falſe, ſince the ſame Author informs us, that Urſinus was born on the 18th of July in 1534. I reject the Second, tho' the Author hath not expreſſed the Year 1552 in numbers, but in Words at length. Ingreſſus eſt Wittembergam anno quinquageſimo ſecundo, Kalendis Maii. The Reaſon why I reject it, is becauſe he tells us alſo in the ſame page, that Urſinus having ſtudied above two Years at Wittemberg, left it on account of the Plague, and went firſt to Torgaw, whither Melanchthon was then retired, and afterwards to Breſlaw, carrying with him an advantageous Teſtimonial from Melanchthon, which Melchior Adam cites at large, and this Inſtrument is dated on St. James's Day in 1552. He alſo mentions another, wherein the ſame Melanchthon on the firſt of October 1557, poſitively ſaith that Urſinus had been about ſeven years at Wittemberg. I have therefore reaſon to place his going thither in the year 1550, and to have more regard to the Evidences that Melchior Adam hath furniſhed me with againſt himſelf than to his Text itſelf. We may very well infer from hence, that he did not much examine what he compiled. He hath confounded Urſinus's ſecond Journey with the firſt; and Freberus, without either examining or rectifying any thing, barely ſaith that Urſinus went to Wittemberg in 1552. He cites the Epitaph wrong, the year lxxxii is inſerted inſtead of lxxxiii, and the 11th of March inſtead of the 6th. At this rate how can one rely upon the Printed Copies of Inſcriptions?

(B) As well in Poeſy.] Urſinus in his younger Years muſt needs have diſtinguiſhed himſelf in that particular; for I obſerve that Melanchthon in his two

(a) See the Remark P△ of the Article Elizabeth.

(b) Goſſut. ubi ſupra pag. 341.

(c) Mariana ubi ſupra pag. 433.

(d) Lequien de la Neufville, Hiſt. generale de Portugal Tom. 1. pag. 84. Paris 1700.

(f) Ibid.

(g) Ibid.

He alſo attempted to preach, but finding himſelf (C) ſcarce fit for the exerciſe of that Function, he quitted all thoughts of it. If he was deficient in that Talent, what was therein wanting, was made up to the laſt degree by his Qualifications for a Profeſſor; for he had a lively Genius, a rich ſtock of Knowledge, and a happy dexterity in the expoſition of his Subject. Wherefore keeping in the Preferment he already enjoyed, he was, beſides, made Profeſſor of the Common Places of Divinity. In order to which, the Statutes of the Univerſity rendred it neceſſary for him to commence Doctor of Divinity, which he did ſolemnly on the 25th of Auguſt in 1562, and continued in the diſcharge of this Poſt till 1568. He compoſed the Palatinate Chatechiſm, and by order of the Elector Palatin Frederick III. wrote an Apology for it againſt the Clamours which Flacius Illyricus, Heſhuſius, and ſeveral other rigid Lutherans publiſhed in 1563, on account of that Work. The Elector finding himſelf not only expoſed to the Complaints of ſome Lutheran Divines, but alſo to thoſe of ſome Princes, as if he had eſtabliſhed a Doctrine concerning the Eucharist, condemned by the Augsburg Confeſſion, was for that Reaſon obliged to cauſe to be Printed an Expoſition of the true Doctrine concerning the Sacraments; which was written by our Urſinus, who, the following Year, appeared at the † Conference at Maulbrun, where he boldly oppoſed the Doctrine of Ubiquity. He afterwards wrote on that Subject, and againſt ſeveral other of the Lutheran Opinions. The Project and Statutes which he drew up in order to the eſtabliſhment of ſeveral Schools, and other ſervices he did that Elector, raiſed him ſo high in that Prince's eſteem, that obſerving that he was reſolved to accept of the Divinity Profeſſor's Chair at Lauſanne in 1571. He wrote a long Letter to him with his own Hand, urging ſeveral Reaſons to diſſuade him from it. The death of that Prince happening in 1577, occaſioned a great Revolution in the Palatinate; for his Son Lewis would not ſuffer any Miniſter there that was not a Lutheran. Urſinus, and the Students whom he Educated in the College of the Sapience, were obliged to depart *. He retired to Neuſtadt, to be Profeſſor of Divinity in the Illuſtrious School or Academy which Prince Caſimir the Son of Frederick III. erected there at that time. he began to read there on the 26th of May 1578. And he there taught Logick in his Chamber, and alſo publiſhed ſeveral Books; and was preparing for the compoſition of ſeveral others, when his Health which had been impaired by ſeveral violent and great Indiſpoſitions ariſing from his incredible application to ſtudy, at laſt entirely ſunk under the weight of a tedious Diſtemper, of which he died at Neuſtadt on the 6th of March 1583, in the 49th Year of his Age. His Works were collected after his death, by the care of his only Son, who was a Miniſter, and of David Pareus, and Quirinus Reuterus his Pupils. To the laſt of which we owe their Publication in three Volumes. Urſinus was laborious (D), modeſt, and apt to be || angry. And as for readineſs in anſwering Objections, he did not think he ought to aim at it; but ſo contrived the matter, that if an Explanation of any thing was ever demanded of him, it was done in Writing at the end of his Lecture, and he anſwered the next day β. We have elſewhere ſeen how fatiguing he found the direction of a College.

† That is in the year 1564.

* See above in the Text.

|| Fuit tamen [illegible], ut ſit in ejuſmodi ingeniis. Melchior Adam ibid.

β Taken from Melchior Adam, who wrote Urſinus's life from the Funeral Oration, which Francis Junius, Profeſſor of Divinity at Neuſtadt, ſpoke there, and from another Speech of Quirinus Reuterus.

URSI-

---

two Teſtimonials ſeems chiefly to value him on that Head; to back which, in the firſt of them he gives in Evidence his publiſhed Greek and Latin Verſes. (a) Cum extent Latina & Græca Carmina Zachariæ Urſini Uratiſlavienſis eruditè ſcripta, prudentes & docti viri lectis illis ſuo judicio probabunt ingenium, ſtudia, & voluntatem ejus, &c. Urſinus was then but 18 Years of age. He Publiſhed in 1560 a Collection of Epigrams which he dedicated to John Friſius, in whoſe Houſe he lodged at Zurich.

(a) Melch. Adam in vitis Theol. German. pag. 540.

(C) He alſo attempted to Preach.] Thuanus was miſled by falſe Relations, when he declared (b) that the Proteſtants of the Dioceſe of Cologne, aſſembled in 1582, to hear Zachary Urſinus, a Preacher whom Prince John Caſimir had ſent them. Urſinus gave over preaching after a few eſſays, with which he himſelf was not pleaſed. Nor did he ſtir from Neuſtadt after he was eſtabliſh'd there. Beſides which, he was ſo broken and infirm in 1582, that he was by no means capable of that Collen Miſſion. It was John Stibelius who went to that Country with Prince John Caſimir, as his Miniſter. Philip Pareus his Nephew (c) has obſerved this Miſtake of Thuanus, and informs us at the ſame time, that this John Stibelius was afterwards Chaplain to the Court of Heidelberg, and Counſellor to the Prince, and that he died in the year 1595, being the firſt Miniſter at Creutznac. It is apparent that it was the Authority of Thuanus, which moved John (d) Latus, to repreſent Urſinus as one of the Reformers of the Electorate of Cologne Hofman following Latus, makes him labour in this part of the Lord's Vineyard. I ſay, following Latus; for beſides, that he refers to him, he could not herein have been miſled by Moreri, who hath not ſaid any thing of Urſinus, (miſplaced under the Name of Zachary,) unleſs that he was a Sileſian, and a Profeſſor at Heidelberg, who left behind him a great many Works. He cites Geſner's Bibliotheque, which ſaith nothing of this Author. He ought to have quoted the Epitome of that Bibliotheque. Several Authors have committed the ſame Miſtake.

(b) Thuan. hiſtor. lib. 76.

(c) In vita David. Parei, p. m. 29. He calls Thuanus, Auguſtinus, inſtead of Auguſtus.

(d) Compend. hiſtor. pag. m. 488.

(D) Urſinus was laborious.] To be informed of which, we need only take a view of the Inſcription which he cauſed to be affixed to his Cloſet Door: it runs thus:

Amice, (e) quiſquis huc venis
Aut agito paucis, aut abi,
Aut me laborantem adjuva.

Which made him paſs for an ill-natur'd (f) Man.

It is obſervable, that Aldus Manutius, before him made uſe of a like Inſcription. "(g) Nothing was "more uneaſie to him than unprofitable Viſits, "which obliged him to loſe his time—— to ſecure himſelf from which, in a civil manner, he "cauſed to be writ over his Cloſet door the following words: Quiſquis es, rogat te Aldus etiam "atque etiam, ut ſi quid eſt quod a ſe velis, perpaucis agas, deinde actutum abeas, niſi tanquam Hercules veteris ſuppoſiturus humeros: ſemper enim erit "quod & tu agas, & quotquot huc attulerint pedes. "Which words that Learned Greek Profeſſor,

and

(e) Melch. Adam, ubi ſupra.

(f) See what Junius ſays about this in Urſinus's Funeral Oration.

(g) Chevillier, Origine de l'imprimerie de Paris pag 234. He quotes James Zwinger in the Theatrum vitæ humanæ at Baſil 1604. pag. 3713.

URSINUS (John) a French Phyſician, who flouriſhed in the XVI. Century, wrote ſome Medicinal (Y) Tracts in Latin Verſe, and a Commentary [a] on Cato's Diſtichs. He is highly extolled by Stephen (Z) Roybaſius Tulinus.

URSUS (Nicolas Raimarus) Author of ſeveral Aſtronomical Tracts, was born at Henſtede in * Dithmarſen. He was a Swineherd in his youth, and did not begin to learn to read before the age of Eighteen, when he diligently ſpent all his ſpare Hours from keeping the Hogs, in learning to Write and Read. After which, he apply'd himſelf to the Study of the Learned Languages; and being endowed with a ſtrong Genius, ſoon made a conſiderable progreſs in the Latin and Greek Tongues. He alſo learned French, the † Mathematicks, Aſtronomy, and the other parts of Philoſophy, for the moſt part (A) without the aſſiſtance of any Maſter. Afterwards, leaving his own Country, he maintained himſelf by the Inſtruction of Youth; which he practiſed in Denmark, in the Year 1584, and on the Frontiers of Pomerania and Poland in 1585. In which laſt place, he invented a new Aſtronomical Syſtem, not very different from that of Tycho Brahe. He communicated it the next Year to the Landgrave of Heſſe, whence aroſe a violent Conteſt betwixt him (B) and Tycho Brahe. In which our Raimarus diſcovered that he ſtill retained the Manners of his Primitive Occupation; for he let looſe in ſuch a brutiſh manner againſt Tycho, that he expoſed himſelf to a (C) Criminal Proceſs. He read private Mathematical Lectures at Strasburg in 1588, and in 1589, and alſo Publiſhed a Book. After which, he was called by his Imperial Majeſty, to teach the Mathematicks at Prague. From whence he ſilenty retired a See the Remark Z.

* Part of the Dutchy of Holſtein.

† Juſtus Byrgius, Engineer to Philip and Maurice Landgraves of Heſſe, taught him Mathematicks and Aſtronomy.

---

and afterwards Printer at Baſil, John Oporin, had them from him and put 'em on the Door of his Study.

(Y) Several Medicinal Tracts in Latin Verſe.] He then deſerved what he hath not, a Place in the Catalogue of Poetical Phyſicians, Publiſhed by Bartholinus. His Proſopopæia animalium aliquot, is a Poem in Hexameter and Pentamer Verſe, in which he mentions ſeveral particulars, concerning the Nature and Quality of Animals, more eſpecially as they belong to Phyſick. This Book was Printed at Vienne in Dauphiné in 1541 in 4to, with the Scholia of James Olveir a Phyſician. And in the ſame City and Year (a) was Printed his Elegia de peſte eaque medicina parte quæ in victus ratione conſiſtit.

(Z) Highly extolled by Stephen Roybeſius Tulinus.] His words (cited by Reineſius, run thus. (b) Is eſt etenim, quo cum ſi congreſſus fueris, nihil ignotum homini eſſe putes. Mirus Poeta, eximius & bene fortunatus Medicus, Philoſophus ſummus, Orator facundus. Quorum documentum locupletiſſimum præſtant quæ de re medica carmine ſcripſit, eruditiſſima Comm. in Catonis libellum, Eclogus elegans de moribus, & alia plura quæ ſub ejus nomine circumferuntur.

(A) Without the Aſſiſtance of any Maſter.] By a peculiar felicity, he made but one leap from the Plow to the Republick of Learning: and was not like others, oblig'd to ſerve an Apprentiſhip in the Schools. (c) Aliaſque ſcientias Philoſophicas, brevi, & pleraſque quidem αὐτοδίδακτος, ſibi reddidit familiares. Scholas enim, uti ipſe in Libro (d) paulo ante laudato, Ruſticum ſe vocans Dithmarſum, teſtatur, uti ſus hortum percurrit, & vix a limine ſalutavit, ſed a Stiva illico, ſingulari quodam fato ac genio, in Remp. literariam irrupit. This is an undeniable proof of a great Wit. His Works afford ſeveral Marks of his haſty Studies; and his Learning was as ill digeſted as his Style was uncorrect: (e) Homo certe fuit admodum ingenioſus, & in Antiquorum etiam lectione verſatus, ſed doctrina indigeſta, Styli haud ſatis caſtigati, & vere, quod Naſonis de Ennio eſt Judicium, Ingenio maximus, Arte rudis.

(B) A violent Conteſt betwixt him and Tycho Brahe.] Tycho Brahe accuſed him of Plagiariſm. Urſus, ſaid he, coming with his Maſter into my Cloſet, ſaw the Scheme of my Syſtem on a piece of Paper, and not long after arrogated the Invention to himſelf: (f) Cum menſe Septembri verſaretur apud ipſum nobilis vir Ericus Langius, quidam illius famulus nomine Nicolaus Raymarus, Dithmarſus, delineatam hypotheſin quampiam in charta obiter vidit, ac ſibi quaſi a ſe in angulo Poloniæ quodam excogitatam arrogans, illam ut ſuam biennio poſt apud Landgravium venditavit; ubi & impudenter in Tychonem deblaterans repreſſus a Rothmanno fuit. Upon this charge, the Accuſed in a Book which he publiſhed at Prague, de Aſtronomicis Hypotheſibus, outragiouſly abuſed Tycho Brahe, who was ſtruck to the quick with this ill uſage. Gaſſendus gives us the particulars of this Story. "Quia ſuperiore anno Raimarus Urſus, ille "Dithmarſus, Librum Pragæ ediderat de Aſtronomicis Hypotheſibus, in quo Rothmannum quidem, & Reſlinum variis probris onerat, ſed Tychonem innumeris, occaſione eorum, quæ de ſe in Epiſtolis ejus legerat: ideo, cum ejuſmodi Liber ad Tychonis manus recens perveniſſet, iſthac occaſione ipſius literis inſeruit, Vidiſti procul dubio Plagiarii mei, impuri illius Urſi, maledicentiſſimum ſcriptum in quo præter alia innumera convitia, meo, & meorum honori non parcit. Ego quidem refutatione illum indignum cenſeo, cum omneis modeſtiæ limites, imo honeſtatis longe tranſcenderit: efficiam tamen, ut non impune ferat (g)." These are Tycho's words in a Letter to Longiomontanus. But more on this head in the following Remark.

(C) He expoſed himſelf to a Criminal proceſs.] In Tycho Brahe's Funeral Oration, we are told that a Man of Senſe and Learning, but utterly void of either Religion or Virtue, was not content to arrogate the Aſtronomical Inventions of this great Man to himſelf, but alſo barbarouſly injured his Reputation with black Calumnies: The Orator adds, that if his Death had not put a ſtop to the Proſecution commenced againſt him upon that account, he had been ſeverely puniſh'd. This is ſaid of our Raimarus. (k) Ante annos pauculos, quidam ingenioſus, & doctus, ſed abſque religione, & virtute homo, ſatyricum, & famoſum contra præſtantiſſimum hunc virum divulgavit ſcriptum, quale in hoc genere non vidit antiquitas, nec fortaſſis ſpectatura eſt unquam poſteritas. Non ſat fuerat infamatori illi plagium committere litterarum, & TYCHONIS Hypotheſin, Uraniburgi repertam, falſarie pro proprio invento venditare; niſi etiam Virum avitis generis, ſummæ eruditionis, inculpatiſſimæ vitæ, cum tota ipſius honeſtiſſima familia, ſexcentis contumeliis, & totidem mendaciis, apud alios, ſi non deformatum, ſuſpectum ſaltem reddidiſſet. Et profecto jure actum cum hoc fuiſſet, velut etiam jam agi cœptum fuerat, niſi mors feram illam ſingulari beneficio affeciſſet, & pœnæ ſubduxiſſet commeritiſſimæ. Gaſſendus quotes a fragment of a Letter, by which it appears that Tycho Brahe deſigned to proſecute his Adverſary. His own words, which inform us that Raimarus Urſus eſcaped from Prague, run thus: (i) Cæterum ne fera iſta Dithmarſica, nimis efferа, & bruta, ut aliqua ſubjungam, licet indigna ſit, cujus recordetur, ſcias iſtam ante aliquot ſeptimanas, prout nuper reſcivi,

(a) Epit. biblioth. Geſneri. pag. 509.

(b) Reineſius epiſt. 41 ad. Daumium pag. 118.

(c) Mollerus, Iſagogue ad hiſtoriam Cherſoneſi Cimbricæ, pag. 629.

(d) The Syſtemate mundi.

(e) Mollerus ibid.

(f) Gaſſendus in vita Tychon. lib. 2. pag. m. 411. ad ann. 1584. See alſo lib. 3. pag 428.

(g) [illegible]

(k) Joan Jeſſenius, in Orat. funebri Tychon. Brahei, apud Gaſſendum appendice vitæ Tychonis, pag. 4

(i) Tycho Brahe, epiſt. ad Longomontanum, apud Gaſſendum vita Tychonis, lib. 6. pag retired to avoid the preſence of Tycho Brahe, in 1598. and dyed ſometime after †. Voſſius doth not ſo much as mention him: I have inſerted (D) the Titles of his Works.

USHER (HENRY) Arch-Biſhop of Armagh, and Primate of Ireland in the beginning of the XVII. Century, ſpent a great deal of time in the Compoſition of a Book againſt Cardinal Bellarmin; but we are told that his Wife Forced the Sheets from him, and threw them into the Fire, on pretence of the great inequality of the Match betwixt a Man charged with Children, and domeſtick affairs, and a Perſon utterly void of all Cares. The Author who relates this, (A) and who is indeed very much ſuſpected, adds that Todd Biſhop of Down being diſguſted at his Wife, and deſirous to Divorce her, petitioned this Primate's Repudiatory Letters, but could not obtain them. He conjectures that the ſole Reaſon of this Arch-Biſhop's refuſal was the fear of diſpleaſing his Lady, who would have been very uneaſy at any thing which tended to introduce the diſannulling of Marriages, by Reaſon ſhe might her ſelf at ſome time or other be in danger of falling under the like inconvenience. All are free to believe this but I will not undertake for the Truth of this, which indeed I relate for no other Reaſon than to make way for the Examination of a falſe Suggeſtion of (B) Father Garaſſe. Obſerve that whilſt this Henry Usher was only ArchDeacon of Dublin, he was twice deputed to Queen Elizabeth, firſt on an Affair relating to St. Patrick's ‡ Church, and afterwards for the Foundation of the Univerſity of Dublin. In both which Negotiations he was ſucceſsful *.

† Taken from John Mollerus's Book intituled Iſagoge ad Hiſtoriam Cherſoneſi Cimbricæ Printed at Hamburg in the Year 1691. pag. 618, 619. parte 2. He quotes for moſt of thoſe things Ant. Heimreichius in Catalogo Autorum Chronico Dithmarſico præfixo.

‡ The Cathedral of Dublin.

* Taken from the life of James Usher in collectione [illegible] pag. 7[illegible].

USSERIUS

reſpect Pragâ ſe ſubduxiſſe, ſive male ſibi conſcia, & quod juſtas pœnas per leges formidaret; ſive quid aliud ſinu ſuo latenter more ſuo ruminans. Sed inveſtiganda tamen ſuo tempore per otium, atque in jus pertrahenda, & punienda, quod etiam optimi quique Pragæ ſuadent. For the better Information concerning the Character of this quondam Swineherd, I add that he had raiſed a report (a) that Rothmannus was dead of a Scandalous diſtemper. Rothmannus appeared very zealous on Tycho Brahe's ſide, when he ſaw that Urſus Calumniated him at the Court of Heſſe. After which time they became utter Enemies, and interchangeably treated each other with the utmoſt Violence (b). Fuerat ille quoque Rothmanno ea propter infenſus, quod Caſſelis tranſiens & Tychonem conviciis proſcindens repreſſus ab eo vehementer fuiſſet (c).

(D) The Titles of his Works.] He publiſhed his fundamentum Aſtronomicum (d) in 1589. at Stanburg at the expence of his Pupils. His Book de Aſtronomicis hypotheſibus ſeu de ſyſtemate mundi was Printed at Prague in 1597 as was alſo Aſtronomicarum hypotheſium a ſe inventarum Vindicatio & defenſio: Item problemata totius proceſſus aſtronomicæ obſervationis ſeu rationis obſervandi τὰ φαινόμενα. The Oxford Catalogue mentions our Raimarus's Tetragoniſmus Circuli expeditiori ſtructura productus per Pet. Crugerum, Printed at Leipſick 1607. in 4°. Mr. Konig (e) aſcribes to him a Book de doctrina ſinuum & triangulorum, Printed in 1588. Mr. Mollerus (f) ſays that he never ſaw the Book de civitatibus in Dithmarſia Hanſeaticis, Printed at Leipſick in 1563. and Fathered on Raimarus Urſus by Albert Bartholin and Lipenius, and doubts whether any ſuch Work was ever publiſhed, by Reaſon that there is not one Town in the whole Province of Dithmarſen which ever engaged in the Hanſeatick Confederacy: Impoſitum illis eſſe à catalogis, quos frequenter exſcribunt, proletariis, conjecto (g). I don't know whether he carefully obſerved Bartholin's Words, which run thus: (h) Nicolaus Reimers. De civitatibus Henſaticis in Dithmarſia, Geodeſia Rantzoviana. Lipſ. 1583. in 4°. Who can certainly conclude from hence that he ſpeaks of our Raimarus Urſus? Is it not more probable that he did not mean him? He was no Dane, nor Author in Denmark; and therefore it is not probable that Bartholin ſhould put him into his Catalogue. Nor is it true that Bartholin ſays that this Book was Printed at Leipſick in 1563.

(A) The Author who relates this, and who is indeed very much ſuſpected, adds.] The Narrative which Henry Fitz Simon an Iriſh Jeſuit gives us, runs thus: (i) Toddus pſeudo Epiſcopus Dunenſis in Ibernia, ſuam conjugem ſeu verius ſcortipeti ſui —— eam voluit repudiare. Acceſſit primo ſymmiſtam ſuum (ut loquuntur) totius Iberniæ Primatem, Henricum Uſherum; libellum ab eo repudii acriter efflagitans. Nimirum fruſtra, apud virum integerrimum ſcilicet, & apprime uxoris (quæ illi viribus ſuis quam tenuiſſimis impar onus exantlanti, nempe multorum annorum elucubrationes contra Bellarminum, extorſit, tradiditque Vulcano, quod iniqua futura eſſet, ut ajebat, concertatio, inter hominem prolibus & domeſticis curis gravatum, & hominem omnis ſecularis ſolicitudinis expertem) imperio, ac voluntati, obnoxium. Diſplicuiſſet autem matronæ gravi (abdominis centum pondio) divortii Miniſtralis cauſaria præterſio, per quam ipſa forte brevi, technis id genus Miniſtralibus, conjugali toro diſcluderetur.

(B) For the Examination of a falſe Suggeſtion of Father Garaſſe.] That Author's ſtyle is ſo well known that the Burleſque paſſages in the following quotation will not appear very ſurpriſing (k). "The "Miniſters (ſaith he) as Humphredus tells us in the "Second part of his Jeſuitiſm, accuſe the Jeſuits "of Magick by reaſon of their Learning. No "wonder (ſay they) that the Jeſuits are Learned "ſince they are all Magicians, and Learn all they "know by Diabolical aſſiſtance —— (l) Let them "Remember the Story of an Eminent Roman Citizen, who was accuſed that by his Sorcery he "attracted the Marrow and Subſtance of the adjoyning Lands, by Reaſon that he had always a "much richer Crop than any of his Neighbours: "In his juſtification he produced his Oxen in good "caſe, his Ploughs in good repair, and his Children "well fed, and offered no other defence to the "Judges than, Gentlemen, theſe are the Charms I make uſe of, Hæc ſunt veneficia mea, Quirites, nor can I "further produce my ſweats, my waking nights "and toilſome days. I ſay the ſame to the Calviniſt and Lutheran Miniſters; the Jeſuits are "not embarraſſed with the Family Cares of the "Miniſters, they are not clogged with the long "train of a Wife and a whole neſt of Miniſterial "Brats; their Nocturnal reſt is not broken with "the Cries of ten or a Dozen Chits, nor are they "interrupted in the day time with the Cares of "maintaining fifteen or ſixteen craving famiſhed "Children; any more than they are diverted by "Uſury, Luxury and Pleaſures. Hæc ſunt eorum veneficia. Theſe are their Magical Charms, of "which I would willingly prepare an Amulet to "hang about the Miniſters Necks. I Remember "to have read in Conſtantin Baſſus's Geoponicks in "the 14. Book pag. 380, that an Honeſt Coun-

---

(a) Rumorem ſparſerat fuiſſe ipſum pudendis morbo quibus [illegible] pridem infectum, & tandem confectum, Gaſſend. ibid.

(b) The following Words were Written by Rothmannus in 1586. Plura ſcribere tam præſertim de impuro nebulone Nicolao Raymaro Urſo Dithmarſo, qui ſuperiori anno ſpurcitiam Excellentiam typographicam literarum collectionem & ordinationem, ut opinor, exercuit. Gaſſend. ibid. (c) Id. ib. (d) Mollerus ubi ſupra. (e) Bibliotheca vet. & nova at the Word Urſus. He ſpeaks of him as of another Writer under the Word Reimarus, and he mentions one Nicolas Reimarus, who Writ Theatrum temporis in fol. (f) Ibid. pag. 517. (g) Ibid. pag. 628. (h) Alb. Bartholinus, de Scriptis Danorum, pag. 109.

(i) Henric. Fitz Simon Britannomach. Miniſtrorum lib. 3. cap. 6. p. 348.

(k) Garaſſe, Recherche des recherches d'Eſtienne Paſquier pag. 973. 974.

(l) Id. ib. pag. 976. & ſeq.

USHER (JAMES) Nephew to the former, and Arch-Bishop of Armagh, was one of the most illustrious Prelates of the XVII. Century, as well with regard to his great Piety and other Virtues, as his profound Learning. He was Born at Dublin on the 4th of January 1580. and was taught to Read by two Aunts, tho' they were Born Blind: Which is very particular. He made

"ry Man wished to be informed of a Charm to prevent the Cats, Rats, and Snakes ever infesting his Pigeon-House, and was answered by an anonymous Author, that he knew a very efficacious one to keep out the Cats and Rats. I, said he, carefully shut your Pigeon-house door. II. Open the Windows as little as you can. III. Keep your Walls tight and whole. IV. Stop up the chinks of the Door, and I will engage neither Cat nor Rat shall enter your Pigeon house. Accordingly I can oblige the Calvinist Ministers with a good Charm, that they may be as Learned as the Jesuits. 1. Let 'em discharge themselves of their Wives, and the brawls of a Family. 2. Let 'em spend less time in combing their Hair, tricking themselves up, and setting their Starched Bands and Ruffs. 3. Let 'em more seriously apply themselves to the Study of the Gospel than of Rabelais, which concerns namely the Ministers Du Moulin. 4. Let Chamier, Potter, Bonnet, Baronius, and other Ministers not fill themselves with such Loads of Wine and Meat, in order to keep their Minds more free and unclogged ——— If they take and make use of this Amulet, and are endowed with as good Capacities, I promise that they will become as Learned as the Jesuits."

Before I reflect on this passage I shall look back to the Original of the cited Story of the Roman Citizen, who was accused of Fertilizing his Land by Sorcery. It is related by Pliny C. Furius Cresinus, saith he (a), e servitute liberatus, cum in parvo admodum agello largiores multo fructus perciperet, quam ex amplissimis vicinitas, in invidia magna erat, ceu fruges alienas pelliceret veneficiis. Quamobrem a Sp. Albino curuli die dicta, metuens damnationem, cum in suffragium tribus oporteret ire, instrumentum rusticum omne in forum attulit, & adduxit filiam validam, atque (ut ait Piso) bene curatam ac vestitam, ferramenta egregie facta, graves ligones, vomeres ponderosos, boves saturos. Postea dixit: Veneficia mea, Quirites, hæc sunt: nec possum vobis ostendere, aut in forum adducere lucubrationes meas, vigiliasque, & sudores. Omnium sententiis absolutus itaque est. He doth not mention the time when this happened; but we guess at it at large, by reason that it is very well known that Spurius Albinus here expressed was Consul in the Year of Rome 568.

You must take Notice by the by that the Ancient Romans were so fully persuaded that there were Magick Charms which could remove the Fruits of the Earth from one place to another; that the Laws of the 12 Tables Established a great Punishment against those pretended inchanters. Mr. Gravina, who to his polite literature has added the knowledge of the Law, very justly laughs at this Childish Error. Sequitur, says he (b), frugum incantatio; cum enim veteres illi omnium bonarum artium & disciplinarum rudes putarent fruges, Carminibus magicis vel averti posse vel traduci (ut enim Tibullus ait, Carmen vicinis fruges traducit ab agris.)

ideo decemviri pro sua puerili ac ridicula superstitione sanxerunt, ut qui fruges excantassit, sive Carminibus magicis crescere prohibuerit, aut segetem alienam pellexerit, Cereri sacer esset.

WHETHER single Men Study better and Publish more good Books than Married Men.

The Reflections which I design on Garasse's Words will not at all concern his Calumnies or Ridiculous Hyperbole's; I leave them to himself, and fix only on that which may in general confirm the Maxim or Principle of Henry Usher the Primate of Ireland's Wife. That Woman supposed that an Author who had Children was not able to hold up against a Monk: This Maxim indeed appears somewhat probable in the Theory, but is numerous false in the Practice; for it is easy to prove by rous Examples, that several Persons who have been clogged with the Cares of a Family have been very great Authors, whether we consider the Quality or the quantity of their productions. And if Garasse had writ judiciously, he would not have brought into play, Peter du Moulin and Daniel Chamier, two Ministers who were very well able to overthrow what he designed to establish. They were both Married and had Children, and yet wrote very good Books, and Gloriously disputed viva voce, and in their Writings with the best Controversists of the Romish party. And the examples of several other Ministers may be added to these two. So that the Primate's Lady's Maxim is so often Contradicted and refuted by experience, that it ought not ever to pass into a Rule. For whatever is liable to so many exceptions doth not in the least deserve that Name, and whoever would hence draw up a Rule or Aphorism, is necessarily obliged to make use of this Limitation, all other particulars being exactly equal, an Author disengaged from all domestick Affairs will exceed one clogg'd with a Wife and Children. But who can suppose this Equality, or where is it to be found? Compare an unmarried and a married Writer together as long as you please, and if you find that the one hath not less Wit, Judgment or Memory than the other, you will yet perceive that they are not perfectly alike in other particulars. The Married Man may prove more studious and robust, and thereby make good the distractions occasioned by a Thousand petty domestick Cares. He applies himself to study with more ardor after he hath expedited the Affairs of his Family; the strength of his Constitution and Head allow him to study till midnight, and by that means to retrieve the lost Hours of the Day. He is obliged to go abroad twice or thrice in the Morning, and as often in the afternoon, but he returns to his Closet as soon as he can and studies with the greater ardency, because he knows that he hath been and shall be interrupted. And four or five Hours of such a close study are very well worth seven or eight of the common languid and listless Labours of those People, who have abundance of leisure. They study at their ease, without pressing or fatiguing themselves, and rest from time to time; nor are they so sollicitous to avoid the Idle spending of several Hours: Besides If they did not rest themselves, their March may aptly be Compared to that of a Messenger, who without ever halting continually moves on his dull pace, but doth not reach the Goal sooner than he, who after frequently stopping, mends his pace and sets up a run. The latter is a lively Image of the Studies of an Active Author, whose domestick cares frequently divert him from them.

Tho' some Authors, who are free from avocations of this Nature, study very hard, you will find on the other side that they want the Natural endowments which others have, their frail constitution forcing them to rest. They find themselves exhausted, and are necessitated to keep from their Studies till a long repose hath recruited their lost Spirits. If they do not lie under by this inconveniency, there are others which fall in their way, perhaps the want of Books. A Thousand real obstacles may be supposed which break in upon the equality, and compensate the disadvantage of the interruptions: Wherefore Garasse and Henry Usher's Wife Advanced a very uncertain Maxim. Tho' it is still true, that it may be said of some Authors, that they had shone brighter if they had lived single, or that they would not have published so many excellent Books, if they had been embarrassed with a Family. And we may also averr, that several Persons Buried in obscurity had become very Learned, if they had lived without a Wife, Mistress, Children or Law suits.

It is observable that the Monks have not so much leisure as is imagined; the Quire and the Breviary rob the studious of a great deal of time; and if any made ſuch an Expeditious Progreſs in the Sciences, that at the Age of Eighteen he was (C) able to diſpute with a Famous Jeſuit, who like a Modern Goliath defyed the Proteſtants. He was ordained Prieſt in the Year 1601, tho', under the Age preſcribed by the Canons. He was choſen Divinity Profeſſor at Dublin about the Year 1607, and exerciſed that Imployment for the ſpace of thirteen Years. He choſe Bellarmin's Controverſies for the Subject of his Prelections. He was conſecrated Biſhop of Meath in 1620, and Arch-Biſhop of Armagh in 1624 *. He very vigorouſly oppoſed the deſign of the Lord Falkland Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (D) to permit the Papiſts the Publick Exerciſe of their Religion, provided they would pay the neceſſary Sums for the ſubſiſtence of the Forces. He went to England in 1640. and never returned to Ireland, being hindred from it by the Civil Wars, which reduced him to a Melancholy Condition. He dyed at Rygate in Surrey on the 21. of March 1655. His Wife the Daughter of Luke Challoner Doctor of Divinity died 18 Months before him, having been Married to him the ſpace of 40 Years; he had one Daughter who Married Timothy Tyrrel Eſquire Governour of Cardiff in Wales. This Article would have been much longer, and contained more particulars concerning the Merit and the Works of this great Man, if I had not known that there is in Moreri and yet more at large in the ſecond Volume of † the Bibliotheque Univerſelle, a good Abridgment of his Life.

(a) Plinius lib. 18. cap. 6. pag. m. 448. Note that chapter 4. of the 14. Book p. m. 155. he says that the Grammarian Palæmon, whose Vineyards were very fruitful, was suspected of witchcraft. litteris ejus altioribus contra id pigra vicinitate sibi patrocinante. His Neighbours excused their laziness upon that account.

(b) I Vincentius gravina in specimine prisci Juris pag. 53. opusculorum Rome 1696. 12°.

USSON.

---

any of them diſtinguiſhes himſelf by Learning or Piety, he is loaded with Confeſſions. He cannot exempt himſelf from the Direction of Conſciences, which frequently draws him from his Cloſet; he is obliged to give audience to a Thouſand Devotees, whoſe ſcruples often are very ridiculous and very odd. Bellarmin had not ſo much time as the Arch-Biſhop of Armagh's Lady imagined. I find in a Tract publiſhed in 1625. that (a), " Cardinal Bellarmin of " Pious Memory frequently ſaid to the moſt illuſ- " trious Cardinal de la Roche-foucault, Monſignore " veramente ci ſono troppo Chriſtiani al mondo. I " aſſure you that I am crowded with People, and " viſits; and muſt own that there ſeems to me to " be too many Chriſtians in the World. "

(C) At the Age of eighteen he was able to diſpute with a Famous Jeſuit.] This Jeſuit was the ſame Henry Fitz Simon, whom I have cited in the preceding Article. He was kept Priſoner in the Caſtle of Dublin, but his Confinement did not hinder his Challenging all the Proteſtant Clergy to diſpute with him, and fiercely engaging to maintain what they took for the weakeſt part of the Romiſh Religion, and to attack what they thought the ſtrongeſt part of the Proteſtant Doctrine. Donec ego, ſaith he (b), cauſæ bonitate ſuffultus, defendere quicquid inter nos infirmiſſimum, vel impugnare quicquid inter ipſos tutiſſimum reputant, in me reciperem. James Uſher whilſt yet beardleſs adventured to enter the liſts with this Veteran Champion, and we are aſſured that he vanquiſhed him. (c) Cum Henrico Simondio Jeſuita, poſcente ſibi dari adverſarios in caſtro Dublinenſi de arce cauſæ ſuæ (ſcil. Antichriſto) ſæpius ita conflixit, imberbis juvenis cum veterano milite, ut & provocationis eum ſuæ pœniteret, & ſatis antagoniſtarum in uno hoc octodenario tyrone experiretur. Ipſum audite Jeſuitam in præfatione libri ſui quem de Britannomachia miniſtrorum placuit inſcribere. Prodiit quidem ſemel, (inquit) octodenarius præcocis ſapientiæ juvenis, de abſtruſiſſimis rebus Theologicis, cum adhuc Philoſophica ſtudia non eſſet emenſus, nec ephebis egreſſus, diſputandi avidus, &c. Quem poſtea cum adoleverat Acatholicorum doctiſſimum idem ille pronunciabat, amplum ſane & inſolitum ex id genus adverſarii ore teſtimonium. Pray obſerve the et cetera at the end of the Citation out of the Jeſuit's Preface, and do not imagin that his remaining Words were omitted only becauſe they were Foreign to the Subject; for they were only ſuppreſſed becauſe they are incompatible with what was ſaid juſt before. The whole paſſage of Fitz Simon runs thus (d): Sed neque in ſpeculis eminentem videre, neque in caſtris, clauſtriſque Stentoria ut agnoſcunt voce provocantem, exaudire voluerunt. Prodiit quidem ſemel in ſumma vocis vultuſque trepidatione, octodenarius precocis ſapientia (non tamen malæ, ut videbatur indolis) juvenis, neſcio an auræ popularis cupidior, ſaltem de abſtruſiſſimis rebus Theologicis cum adhuc philoſophica ſtudia non eſſet emenſus, nec Ephebis egreſſus, diſputandi avidus. Hunc autem juſſi ſuorum calculos adferre, quibus pugil ſeu agoniſta idoneus renuntiaretur, & vel cum ipſo diſputationem ita initurum. Sed ſicut ipſi eum minime tanto honore dignati ſunt, ita me viciſſim ſua deinceps præſentia dignatus ipſe non fuit. The Jeſuit aſſures us that he asked this Scholar, who trembling came to diſpute with him, Are you Authorized by your Superiors? and that he offered, if he was, to enter the liſts with him; but that the young Man not being Honoured with any ſuch Commiſſion could produce no Credentials, and never came again. And yet it is averred in the life of Uſher which I have already cited, that he frequently and triumphantly diſputed with this Jeſuit. And we read in another life of this Arch-Biſhop, that he engaged in this diſputation with the conſent of the whole Univerſity, and that at the Second conference he overthrew and ſo ſilenced his Antagoniſt, that after that time, he never was bold enough to engage again, tho' provoked to it: (e) Communi Academiæ conſenſu placuit Uſſerium, qui tum non niſi Artium Baccalaureus 18 aut 19 ætatis annum agebat, cum ipſo committere: qui utut ab initio ab antagoniſta ſuo fere pro puero ac deſpectui haberetur, poſt unum tamen alterumque colloquium adeo præſidentiam ejus perdomuit, ut ad incitas ſe, certe ad ſilentium redactum mox agnoſceret, nec ulterius confligere, ne provocatus quidem auderet. Either the Jeſuit's Relation or that of the Authors of Uſher's life muſt of neceſſity contain ſome Falſities.

(D) He very vigorouſly oppoſed the deſign of the Lord Falkland —— to permit the Papiſts the publick exerciſe of their Religion.] The Lord Falkland propoſed this to the Parliament of Ireland in the Year 1626. Arch-Biſhop Uſher who knew how fatal this would be to Ireland, aſſembled all the Biſhops of his Province, and drew up a Remonſtrance which they all ſigned. It contained a particular Declaration that conſidering the Falſity of the Principles and Worſhip of the Papiſts, it would be a great Sin to permit the Exerciſe of ſuch a Religion. The Writing which they ſigned was Read in the Pulpit, and put a ſtop to the toleration which the Lord Lieutenant deſigned to procure. All this is particularly related in this Latin paſſage: Reverendiſſimus Primas facile perſpiciens ea res quam fatalis Hiberniæ futura eſſet, omnes ditionis ſuæ Epiſcopos convocavit, qui ejuſmodi indulgentiæ impietatem, ſubſcriptis nominibus, unanimi conſenſu in hanc fere ſententiam teſtati ſunt. Quod quum Papiſtarum religio ſuperſtitioſa eſſet ac idololatrica, fides erronea ac hæretica, Eccleſia utriuſque reſpectu Apoſtatica, liberum iis religionis ſuæ exercitium liberamque fidei ſuæ ac doctrinæ profeſſionem indulgere grave peccatum foret: tum quod hac ratione omnium Papiſmi ſuperſtitionum, idololatriarum, hæreſium, ac uno verbo abominationum ejus omnium, quin & perditionis omnium, quotquot in illius apoſtaſiæ culpa & reatu nos (aiunt) involveret, tum vero etiam quoniam hoc facere pecuniæ gratia nil aliud foret quam religionem venum exponere, imo & animas pretio prodere quas ſalvator noſter Jeſus Chriſtus precioſo ſuo ſanguine redimere non dubitavit. Deum propterea veritatis comprecantes, ut vellet omnes, qui cum imperio erant, zelo Dei * Taken from his Life in the Collins Batchelors.

---

† From pag. 179 to page 314 in the Extract of Uſher's Letters, to which his Life written by Mr. Parr has been prefixed. Another life of Uſher came out ſince, as you may ſee in the Nouvelles de la Republique des lettres for January 1721. pag.

(b) Hen. Fitz Simon epiſt. dedicat. Britanno. mach. Miniſtrorum.

(d) Fitz Simon in præfat. Britannom. pag. 4.

(e) Acta erudit. Lipſ. 1687. pag. 115. in the Extract of Uſher's life written by Mr. Parr. Note that Saldenus de libris pag. 368. going, as I think, upon this paſſage of the Acta Eruditorum, does ſo far exaggerate the thing as to ſay that the Jeſuit himſelf owned he had no more to ſay. Faſtidioſam viri præſidentiam ita perdomuit, ut ad novum provocatus conflictum, declinavit, cum non tantum, ſed & ad ἀχαμυθίαν redactum ſe eſſe ipſe confeſſus ſit.

USSON, in Latin β UCIO, or UXO, a ſmall Town in Auvergne a Leagu diſtant from the River γ Allier, and ſix from Clermont, formerly dependent on the || County of Brive. The Caſtle of Uſſon is very ſtrong by Reaſon ‡ of its Situation on a high Rock naturally cut into round Pillars. Nothing hath cauſed this Place to be ſo much talked of as the long reſidence of Margaret de Valois Wife of Henry the IV. She lived there ſeveral Years, not in order to do penance for her paſt lewdneſs (A), but to plunge her ſelf the deeper into her (B) Impurities; Notwithſtanding β Hadr. Valeſius notit. Galliar. pag. 588.

γ Baudrand, Geograph. tom. 2. pag. 365.

|| Valeſ. ibid.

‡ Coulon, Rivieres de France 1. part. pag. 265.

Dei gloria & veræ religionis propagandæ ſtudio imbuere & contra Papiſmum, Superſtitionem, ac Idololatriam omnem fortes eos reddere, zelo affectos, & animis quam maxime obfirmatos. Epiſcopi duodecim omnino erant qui huic proteſtationi ſubſcripſerant; quam Downhamus Derrienſis Epiſcopus, cum poſtea coram Falklandio & concilio prædicaret, media concione publice recitavit; quin & Reverendiſſimus Primas eandem proximo die Dominico coram eiſdem inter concionandum comprobavit; una innuens quam gravis ira Dei ob talem animorum propenſionem et genti impenderet. Unde tandem effectum eſt ut alia conſilia deflecterent (a). It is obſervable that Arch-Biſhop Uſher and his Dioceſans acted on the higheſt Principles of the Enemies to toleration; for they did not, like moderate Adverſaries, ground their Declaration on political Reaſons, but only on the Nature of Worſhip in the Roman Communion, without ſo much as ever mentioning its perſecuting Spirit, the ſole Reaſon urged by the very Favourers of toleration for not tolerating the Papiſts.

(a) Bateſ. vita Uſſerii ubi ſupra pag. 242.

(A) For her paſt lewdneſs.] Part of which I have elſewhere mention'd from a Book which introduces Henry IV. relating the ill Conduct of his Wife. The reſt of the Narrative runs thus (b): "Time ——— provided her with ſeveral Servants; la Molle one of which to her great grief, on an accuſation of being concerned in a conſpiracy with which the Marſhals de Montmorency and de Coſſe were charged, left his Head Accompanied with that of Coconas at Saint Jean en Greve, where they did not continue time enough to putrify, nor were long expoſed to publick view; for the night following, my good Wife, and Madam de Nevers her Companion, Coconas's faithful Lover, cauſed them to be ſtole away, and carrying them off in their Coaches, buried them with their own Hands in St. Martin's Chappel under Montmartre; and this Death of la Molle drew ſhowers of Tears from his Miſtreſs, who ſighed and ſung her paſſionate reſentment in Favour of him under the Name of Hyacinthus, notwithſtanding the frequent and Nocturnal Conſolations of Saint Luc, who afterwards came often incognito and diſguiſed to Nerac, till Buſſy made her forget the loſs, tho' he was reported to be more Valiant and Stout amongſt the Men than amongſt the Women, by Reaſon of a ſort of Cholick which generally ſeized him at midnight. She being diſguſted excited her appetite with variety of Sauces, and took up with M. de Mayenne a jolly bulky Fellow, as voluptuous as her ſelf; after which they remained very good Friends on all Occaſions, tho' not without a reſentment for ſome time on Account of a Letter written to Mrs. Vitry, in which he promiſed to prefer the Sun to the Moon—— To her former Lovers ſucceeded at ſeveral times, (for their great Number will excuſe my miſplacing them) that good Fellow the Viſcount de Turenne, who like the reſt ſhe ſoon diſmiſt, finding him diſproportionate in ſome part or other: She compared him to empty Clouds which have nothing but a bare ſuperficial Appearance. The Melancholy Lover at the brink of deſpair, after his farewell melting in Tears, had deſtroyed himſelf in a diſtant region, if I who knew the ſecret, and for the good of the Churches pretended ignorance of it, had not expreſly enjoyned my Chaſt Wife to recall him: Which ſhe did very much againſt her Stomach, proudly wiſhing that ſome Blockhead might break his Neck on her Account. But theſe Fools are grown ſcarce ſince they are laught at; for to eat ones Hat-feather in a rage like la Lole, and to throw an Ink Bottle at the Ladies Eyes, as Clermont d'Amboiſe did in Anger, are ſilly Frenzies and jealouſies which were but too common amongſt us, and which I knew and clearly ſaw conſenting to my own diſhonour, and giving them by my patience the courage and opportunity of offending. She knows it very well, as do ſeveral of you who have aſſiſted her in her diverſions; nor was I ſo Blind in an Affair ſo apparent as not to perceive as well as others, that Clermont frequently kiſſed her in her Petticoat only, at her Chamber Door, when in the Evening I either playing or walking in the Hall with my Nobility gave him opportunity to get into her Bed—— (c) Her Beauty drew to me crowds of Gentlemen, and her good Nature retained them: Nor was there any well-born Spark or handſome Fellow, who once in his life had not been an Humble Servant to the Queen of Navarre, who never denyed any, but like the Poors Box received the Offerings of all comers." Add to this the paſſage cited from the ſame Book in the Article of this Queen.

(b) Divorce ſatyrique p.m. 191.

(B) But to plunge her ſelf the deeper in her Impurities.] The paſſages laſt cited carry out Margaret no farther than Auvergne. Let us then farther hearken to the Author who introduces Henry IV. ſpeaking. (d) "The King her Brother hearing of her flight, ſaid aloud in preſence of all thoſe who then ſaw him at Dinner, the Gaſcoon Sparks being inſufficient to Satiate the Queen of Navarre, ſhe is gone in queſt of the Muleteers and Tinkers of Auvergne ——— This proſtitute being arrived at Carlat, where ſhe long continued, not only without Canopy or Bed of State, but even without a ſufficient Number of Shifts for every day, began to caſt her Eyes about and to conſider to which of her Domeſticks ſhe ſhould proſtitute her Honour; and not to be idle, ſhe pitched upon her Cook, being tired with the impatient expectation of Duras whom ſhe had ſent to the King of Spain for Money, tho' her Confident fearing ſhe might deprive her of her own Lover, continually inculcated the Conſtancy and Merit of the abſent Gentleman. But her inſatiate deſire like the ravenous appetite of a Blood-hound, which enfeebles one that is not continually ſatisfied, could not bear this delay, nor that of Saint Vincent, who was gon home to avoid expences. She took up with the wretched Aubiac, whom ſhe raiſed from her Stables to her Chamber, and cauſed him to ride her, till her Belly became plump and ſwelled like a Bladder, and in due time diſgorged a Boy, by the help of a Midwife, whom this Spark's Mother out of pure Love to her Son brought thither, and by the aſſiſtance of Dr. du May a Phyſitian, who beſides the exerciſe of his profeſſion in curing her of an Impoſtume in her back ſide, ſerved her alſo in conveying this Young Prince Lyſander wretchedly ſwadled, to his Nurſe in the Neighbouring Village of Eſcoubiac; which was done ſo ſoon after his Birth, that the Cold he endured by the way utterly prevented his ever hearing or ſpeaking: Which Imperfections deprived him of the Love and care of his own Mother, who forgetting the pleaſure of Impregnation, for a long time ſuffered him to tend Geeſe in Gaſcogne, where Mrs. d'Aubiac his Grandmother (as long as ſhe lived) kept him from ſtarving, and after her Gaſilax de Firmaçon her Son in Law, who at preſent ſhews this pledge of the Crown, as a great rarity to all thoſe who come to ſee him at Birac, where he keeps him for a penſion of two Hundred Crowns, which Goute Raquette ſome time ſince goes to Uſſon and Paris in queſt of ——— (e) Aubiac, a wretched Copper noſed Fellow red haired and more ſpeckled than a Trout, when he conſulted his Glaſs, could never have promiſed himſelf to be one ſtanding which ſhe hath met with ſome Panegyriſts, who compared this Caſtle, as it was the place of her Reſidence, to the Mountain where JESUS CHRIST was Transfigured. To the end that her Conſolation might be Perfect, ſaith * one of them, ſhe deſired to ſee the Court of Henry the Great —— and to leave her dear Uſſon, which had Defended her for the ſpace of Twenty Years, during which time ſhe rendred that ſtrong Caſtle of Auvergne a Tabor by her Devotion, a Libanus by her Solitude, an Olympus by her Muſes, and a Caucaſus on account of her Afflictions. It would have favoured much leſs of Calumny to have compared that place with the Iſland of Caprea, Tiberius's Retreat, than it favours of Flattery to compare it to a place of

" one day found in Bed with a Daughter of France, " as he was at Carlat, by Madam de (a) Marie, who " hit on this Noble Adventure by a too early good " Morrow to the Queen according to her Cuſtom, " which officious Compliment ſhe yet paid for with " the Death of her Huſband, whom this Virtuous " Princeſs, perfectly acquainted with her own Coun" try Potions, cauſed to be Poiſoned in hopes that " being delivered from this obſtacle, and aſſiſted by " the Soldiers which Romes, d'Aubiac's Couſin, was " gone to raiſe in Gaſcogne, ſhe ſhould make her ſelf " abſolute Miſtreſs of the place, and ungratefully " wreſt it out of their Hands who had generouſly " received and protected her . . . . (b) The Guard " being reinforced and her Gaſcon Auxiliaries diſ" covered, ſhe was familiarly adviſed to leave that " place, and take another lodging. Which through" ly terrified ſhe did at that inſtant, departing with " the ſame precipitancy and confuſion, with which " ſhe came thither, and after Travelling ſome days " ſhe reached Ivoi the Palace of the Queen her Mo" ther; where ſhe was ſcarce arrived but by the " King's Command ſhe was by the Marquis de Canil" lac beſieged and taken with her Paramour, who " was found naſtily hid under ſeveral Ordures " without either Beard or Hair, his Miſtreſs having " ſo Diſguiſed him with her own Ciſars in order " to ſave him. ——— Canillac ——— (c) pre" ferring a Brutiſh Pleaſure to the Faith which " he owed to his Maſter, Danced after the Pipe, " and ſuffered himſelf to be carried away by the " Artifices of his Priſoner, and forgetting his Du" ty, as well as quitting all Pretentions to the " making of his Fortune, he became Enamoured of " the Queen, and ſo very Jealous that he Sacri" ficed poor Aubiac to his Suſpicions, cauſing his " Indictment to be drawn up by Lugoly, and after" wards had him Hanged at Aigueperſe, at which time " inſtead of conſidering his Salvation and the ſtate " of his Soul, he kiſſed a blue Velvet Muff which " he had yet remaining of the Benefactions of " his Lady. ——— Canillac having rather Exe" cuted his Jealouſy than my Vengeance on this " Criminal, did not fail to caſt Glances at her, " and the little Gentleman began to grow ex" traordinary careful of his Dreſs, inſomuch, that " in a little time, from as great a Sloven as " my ſelf, he was as nicely ſet out as an Amorous " Country Eſquire: But at length what did his " Dreſs avail him? His inconſtant Fair one, whoſe " Levity he propoſed to keep under Lock and " Key, encloſed within the inexpugnable Fortreſs " of Uſſon, would become Miſtreſs and indulge her " Appetite to the higheſt with its uſual Variety: " To compaſs which, knowing by Experience the " Power of Voluptuous Deſires, ſhe feigns to re" turn Love for Love; and yields to the impor" tunity of ſeveral Addreſſes, after which ſhe ſo " wrought on and influenced her Guardian, that " at laſt by her Artificial Careſſes ſhe obtained " her Liberty, by endearing Promiſes that the " Favours which hitherto ſhe ſeemed to grant " but ſparingly and by force, ſhould be prodigally " beſtowed out of choice, when ſhe came to be " free and abſolute Miſtreſs of Uſſon. She delu" ded her Spark in that manner; for the Gar" riſon had ſcarce voided the place, before ſhe " filled it with her own Creatures, whilſt the eaſy " Marquis retired to Saint Cirque to gather his " Apples; and ſhe proved ſo Ungrateful to this " Servant of hers, that ſhe could not endure even " the bare Naming of him: Being aſſured of a " large Troop of Luſty-Fellows, ſhe then reſol" ved to follow her own Will, and eſtabliſh " an Empire of Pleaſure within this Rock, " where ſecurely Encloſed by three Walls, and " all the great Gates being Walled, God, and " all France know what Delicious Games were " played and practiſed there for the ſpace of twen" ty Years. Aretin's Name and his Holy Wo" man are nothing to it. It is indeed true that " inſtead of the Gallants, who formerly uſed to " Sweeten her Life, ſhe was obliged for want of " better to make uſe of her Domeſticks, Se" cretaries, Chanters, and others, whom " ſhe endeared to her by the force of Pre" ſents, whoſe Families and Names equally un" known to their very Neighbours, are conſe" quently unworthy of my Remembrance, except " only the Famous Pominy, the Son of a Tinker " in Auvergne, who being taken from the " Cathedral Church, where he was one of " the Singing Boys, being diſtinguiſhed from " his Equals by a fine Voice, was preferred " to this Queen's Muſick, and at laſt from the " Chappel to the Chamber, and from the Cham" ber to the Cloſet, becoming her Secretary —— " (d) It was upon his account that the Bedſteads " of her Ladies at Uſſon, were raiſed ſo high, " that ſhe might ſee under them without ſtoop" ing, and not be obliged to crawl on all four " in ſearch of him: It was he whom ſhe often " look'd for behind the Hangings, expecting to find " him there, and it was in too eager queſt of " him that ſhe frequently hurt her Face, by run" ning it againſt the Walls and Doors.

I omit whatever concerns the Amours which the Author (e) pretends ſhe was engaged in at Paris, after ſhe left Uſſon. But it will not be improper to caſt our Eyes on a paſſage of Hilarion de Coſte, which as to ſeveral Facts, may ſerve for a Confirmation of the Narrative we find in the Divorce Satirique. (f) " She left Agen in the " Habit of a plain Citizen's Wife, riding on " Horſe-Back behind Lignerac, on whom ſhe be" ſtowed the Name of Knight of the Fine-Flower, " and fled the whole Night, enduring a Fatigue " which tried her Courage at the Peril of her " Health. De Marſes came to meet her on the " Frontiers, accompanied with One Hundred Gen" tlemen, and Lodging her at his Manſion-Houſe " of Carlat, returned to Agen in order to ſecure " her Jewels, and the ſcattered remains of her " Retinue: And after the expiration of eighteen " Months, his Death occaſioned her leaving that " place, and taking up her Station at Ybois, a Pa" lace belonging to the Queen her Mother, where " ſhe was Arreſted. The Thunder of the King's " Rage, threatning her every where ſpared " the Sacred Lillies, which ſurrounded her Head, " but put one of her Servants to an Ignominious " Death at Aigueperſe. The Marquis de Canillac " conveyed her to, and Impriſoned her at Uſſon; " but ſoon after this Nobly Deſcended Lord, be" came the Captive of his Priſoner: He thought " he had Triumphed over her, and the ſole view " of her Hands, whiter than Ivory, vanquiſhed " him; after which he lived on nothing elſe but " the favour of the Victorious Eyes of his Charm" ing Captive. But the King's Threats, the fear " of Death, the apprehenſion of deſtroying his " Fortune, and of the ruin of his Houſe, made " deeper Impreſſions in his Mind than any other " Conſideration, and forced him to uſe ri" gorous and ſevere Commands againſt her. The " Protection of God, her own Prudence and " Addreſs, together with the ſeaſonable aſſiſtance of " the Duke of Guiſe, ſo happily ſnatched her from " the ſhadows of Death, that at the very inſtant " when ſhe expected to Die a Captive, ſhe found " her ſelf ſecure to Reign free in that ſtrong " Place,

* Hilarion de Coſte, Elog. des Dames illuſtres tom. 2. pag. 306.

(a) The Author [illegible]

(b) Ibid. pag. [illegible]

(c) Ibid. pag. 203.

(d) Ibid. pag. 205.

(e) Ibid. pag. 210. & ſeq.

(f) Hilar. de Coſte, Elog. des Dames illuſtr. tom. 2. p. 301, 302.

of Devotion, and a Holy Temple of God, as (C) another Panegyriſt does. If this Lady's Lewdneſs were only mentioned in the Divorce Satyrique, or in ſome other Libel, we might juſtly ſuſpect the Truth of it; but ſince Celebrated Hiſtorians (D) are not ſilent on this Head, we ought to believe the truth of the Fact.

"Place, from whence ſhe diſlodged them, who "had fixed her there, and convinced them that "Virtue and Valour make no diſtinction of Sexes. You may ſee that this Monk owns every particular which he poſſibly can, without blaming her.

(C) Compare the Caſtle of Uſſon——to a Holy Temple of God, as another Panegyriſt does.] This Author was John Darnalt the King's Attorney in the Preſidial of Agen. A ſcrap of his Elogy on this Queen runs thus. It is very true, ſaith he, (a) "That her Majeſty, ſince ſhe is in "that (b) Place, moſt ſtrictly obſerves a very "Laudable Cuſtom. After having moderately Re"created her ſelf with the Exerciſe of the Muſes, "ſhe ſpends the greateſt part of her time retired in "her Chappel, offering up Zealous and Fervent "Prayers to God, and Communicating once or "twice each Week. Is not this, ſtella inſedere & conſiſtere ſunt! Oh Phœnix! who by extending "your Wings, elevate the Eyes of your Under"ſtanding to the great bright Caeleſtial Star, by "the Light of which you See, Live, and Re"vive in it. Oh Phœnix! who are daily Born a"gain out of your own Aſhes, Flaming and "Conſuming your ſelf in the Divine Love. Great "Princeſs and Queen, who have neither Motion, "Life nor Light, beſides that which you receive "from this Primitive Light. You live a Life "different from that of Mankind. We read that "the bright and noble Souls of the Elyſian Fields, "before they made their laſt Flight

"Illuc, unde negant redire quemquam,

"to the Seat of perfect Bliſs, and uninterrupted "Eternal Joy and Delight,

"Fortunatorum nemorum, ſedeſque beatas,

"were for a time purifyed in a clear Air, and freed "from all manner of Corruption. So this moſt "noble Royal Soul retired to the Elyſian Caſtle "of Huſſon, and before her entrance into the "Glory of the Heavens, was willing to make "neighbouring approaches to them, and began "to take her Flight that way. Having learned "the exerciſe of the Contemplative Life, and "how to ſeparate her Bleſſed Soul, from her "moſt Perfect Body, in order to Die well. For "according to Plato τὸ μελέτημα αὐτὸ τοῦτο ἐστὶ "τῶν φιλοσόφων, λύσις καὶ χωρισμὸς ψυχῆς ἀπὸ "τοῦ σώματος (1). It is the Study of a Wiſe "Man to diſentangle and ſeparate the Soul from "the Body. She is Jupiter's Divine Eagle, which "Contemplates and looks with a fixed Eye, "from an Exalted Place near the Heavens, the "ſolary Rays of the Divine Goodneſs and Provi"dence.——(c) Thou Rock of Huſſon, the "Honour and Wonder of Auvergne, whoſe Snow "melts by the Eyes, or more properly by the "Rays of this almoſt adorable Terreſtrial Deity! "Thou Rock on which the Light perpetually "Shines, where the Day never fails, but the Rays "of the Royal Preſence are perpetually Reſplen"dant, and illuminate that Place and the Circum"jacent Region!——(d) Fair Star of Eu"rope, which is fixed at, and never ſtirs from "Huſſon! Huſſon the Royal Reſidence of the laſt "Race——of Valois——(e) Pious and Re"ligious Habitation, thou Holy Temple of God, "which ſerveſt not as an inviolable Sanctuary, or "Altar of Refuge, but like Righteous Noah's Ark, "as Her Majeſty's retreat from the Inundations "and Ravages of France.——(f) I cannot "yet leave Huſſon, that Mountain Crowned with "this Royal Caſtle, that Holy Hermitage, and "devout Monaſtery where Her Majeſty ſequeſtred "her ſelf to Study and Meditation. Thou Rock "art an evidence of the Voluntary, moſt Lau"dable and Religious Solitude of this Princeſs; "a Place which for the Tranſcendent Harmony "of its Muſick, and the Melodious Songs of the "fineſt Voices in France, ſeems the only Terre"ſtrial Paradiſe, and here her Majeſty taſtes that "Contentment and Eaſe of Mind, which the "Bleſſed Enjoy in the other World."

(a) John d'Arnalt, Antiquitez d'Agen chap. 25. fol. 125. verſo.

(b) That is, In Uſſon Caſtle.

(1) In Phædone.

(c) Id. ib. fol. 125. verſo.

(d) Id. ib. fol. 126.

(e) Id. ib. verſo.

(f) Id. ib. fol. 127.

Obſerve that Mr. de Perefixe (g) ſtrongly tells us, that Margaret voluntarily ſhut up her ſelf in the Caſtle of Uſſon.

(D) Celebrated Hiſtorians are not ſilent on this Head.] I have mention'd in another place of this Dictionary what D'Aubigné ſays of it, not in a Satyr, but in his Univerſal Hiſtory. I have alſo quoted a Paſſage out of Mezeray, and the Reader has been told that Varillas relates the ſame things. But I ſhall further quote a more credible Hiſtorian in this particular, by reaſon he was devoted to Catherine de Medicis, and conſequently not at all inclined to excuſe the Conduct of the King of Navarre. I mean Davila, who acknowledges that this Prince did in a manner Divorce his Conſort, by reaſon of her ſcandalous Reputation of Unchaſtity. And he alſo owns that in her Retreat ſhe led a looſe Life: (h) Moveva lo grandemente il riſpetto della Reina Margherita ſua moglie, perche havendola per la fama delle ſue impudicitie, come repudiata, & eſſendoſi lei ritirata in Overnia a certi ſuoi caſtelli a vivere con liberta molto licentioſa, vedeva neceſſariamente, ò convenire riceverla di nuovo all' unione del ſuo matrimonio, ò non poter mai ſtare in ſincera amicitia, & in intera confidenza con la ſuocera, e col cognato. He repeats almoſt the ſame thing in another place of his Book: (i) La quale (Reina Margherita) havendo abbandonata ſe ſteſſa a vita licentioſa per riſpetto de' riſentimenti del marito, ſi era fuggita da lui, ma per comando per ordine ſuo, e per commiſſione del Rè ſuo fratello, ella fu poſta nel caſtello di Carlat in Overnia come prigione, e di la dopò qualche tempo trasferita al Uſſone nella medeſima Provincia ſotto alla cuſtodia del Marcheſe di Canigliac; il quale come ſi diceva, fatto prigione della ſua prigioniera l'haveva riposta in liberta, onde ella trattenendoſi in alcune ſue caſtella pur in Overnia, e continuando l'isteſſo modo di vita, era di grandiſſimo oſtacolo alle convenientie, che tra il marito, & il fratello poteſſero contrattarſi.

There are ſome Faults in this Relation of Davila. I. It is not true that Queen Margaret retired to Auvergne in order to live Licentiouſly. She lived every where in the ſame manner, and ſhe would have found her account better at Agen whither ſhe fled, than in Auvergne whither ſhe retired. It is indeed true that the fear of (k) being Seized at Agen was the cauſe of her departure thence, and if ſhe ſheltered her ſelf rather in Auvergne than in any other place, it was not owing to her pure Choice, but pure Neceſſity. Lignerac, her Guide, had no other place proper for Refuge. II. It is not true that ſhe retired into ſome Caſtles belonging to her. III. Nor is it true that ſhe was Impriſoned at Carlat by order of her Husband, and by a Commiſſion of Henry III. Her Conductor's Brother purſuant to her own deſire received her. I am apt to think that afterwards the Governor of the Place received Order (l) to be anſwerable for his Gueſt, and Secure her; but this doth not excuſe Davila. IV. It is falſe, that being ſet at Liberty by the Marquis de Canillac, ſhe retired to her own Seat. V. One of theſe Paſſages of Davila is refuted by the other; for if ſhe retired to her Seat when ſhe Broke with her Husband, as we are told in the firſt Paſſage, what is averred in the ſecond, that ſhe did not retreat thither till after ſhe was ſet at Liberty by the Marquis de Canillac, is not true. Mr. de Beauvais Nangis (m) hath Cenſured no other but this laſt of Davila's Errors, and hath given his Approbation to all the reſt. But theſe ſmall Miſtakes are no juſt Reaſons againſt our believing this Famous Hiſtorian, when he tells us that Henry III. and Catherine de Medicis conſulted to annul the King of Navarre's Marriage, and abandon

Fact. Scipio Du Pleix hath been (E) moſt particular in it: For which he was blamed, and juſtified himſelf: (F) I ſhall examine whether the Marſhal de Baſſompierre's Reſentment is juſt. However, we may ſay that the makers of Elogies are much leſs to be excuſed, ſince they have intirely ſuppreſſed the abandon Margaret as unworthy of being acknowledged of their Blood. (a) Deliberarono finalmente, che non era da tener più conto della perſona di Margherita, reſaſi da ſe ſteſſa poco degna d'eſſer da loro riconoſciuta, nè per ſorella, nè per figliuola, e che, poiche la diſpenſa difettoſa ottenuta dal Pontefice al tempo del ſuo matrimonio, porgeva cauſa, e preteſto a poterlo diſciogliere, ſi doveſſe fare queſto divortio, e dar per moglie al Re di Navarra Chriſtiana figliuola del Duca di Lorena. The Ambaſſador Busbequius, whoſe Authority is as good as that of an Hiſtorian, in a Letter written from Paris to his Imperial Majeſty, dated the 25th of Auguſt, in the Year 1583. expreſſes himſelf thus: (b) Rex ſororem ſuam, Reginam Navarræ, palam multis audientibus graviter increpuit, quòd vitam degeret turpem, & flagitiis contaminatam. Commemorat memoriter mœchorum introductiones, quibus illa conſuevisſet. Etiam puerum ſine mariti opera natum objectavit, eaque omnia ſuis temporibus, & reliquis rebus ita notata, ut ipſe interfuiſſe videretur, & Reginam ea magis confiteri puderet, quàm confutare poſſet. Finis orationis fuit, ut eam ſtatim Lutetiâ migrare juberet, urbemque ſuâ contagione liberaret. Sic, illa, collectis raptim ſarcinis, die ſequenti, non modò ſine ullo proſequentium officio, ſed ſine juſto etiam famulitio, Lutetiâ exceſſit. You ſee here that Henry III. not only particularized the Circumſtances of his Siſter's Adulteries, but alſo charged her with being delivered of a Baſtard. The Author adds, that after this Reprimand, Chanvalon, a very handſome young Gentleman (c), who paſſed for one of Margaret's Favourite Gallants, retired into Germany. (d) He had loſt the favour of the Duke of Alençon, on account of ſome Letters which he wrote from Antwerp, but according to others for bragging of the Favours of a great Lady. Read Varillas's Words: (e) "The Lord above all thoſe in the Kingdom, "who made the moſt regular Court to Queen "Margaret, was James de Harlay-Chanvalon, who "had formerly followed the Duke of Anjou into "Flanders, where he gave ſeveral Marks of his Valour on ſeveral occaſions. This Duke frequently "received him at his Table: But he not being ſo diſcreet as he ſhould have been, one Day dropping "ſome boaſting Expreſſions concerning the good Fortune, which his Beauty and good Mien (ſaid he) had "obtained from one of the greateſt Ladies of the "Court of France; the Duke of Anjou hearing him, "Baniſhed him from his Table and the Low-Countries, and it was but one Year ſince Chanvalon "was returned from thence. Being not very welcome to the King, becauſe the Favourites did "not look kindly upon thoſe who had declared "for the Duke of Anjou; he applied himſelf to "the Service of the Queen of Navarre, from which "the Favourites took occaſion to publiſh that "Love was the ſole cauſe of it. And as nothing "could be ſaid of the King's Siſter ſo ſcandalous but he believed it; he gave ſo much Credit "to this Report that he Baniſhed Chanvalon from "her, without taking care to cover this with ſome "Pretence that it might not reflect upon her. It "alſo appears that the King publickly complained "to his Siſter of her living with Chanvalon. But now let us turn our Eyes to the Relation of Du Pleix the Hiſtorian: And we ſhall find amongſt other particulars that Chanvalon had a Child by Queen Margaret.

(E) Scipio Du Pleix hath been moſt particular in it] I ſhall collect together what this Author hath diſperſed in ſeveral places: (f) "The King "of Navarre———made Love to the Maids of Queen Margaret his Wife, which ſhe ſuffered the "more patiently, by reaſon her Huſband did not "Comptrol her Actions: Tho' ſhe complains in "her Memoirs, that her Maids had done her "ill Offices with reſpect to him. But this ſhe "ſays in order to cover the Sins which ſhe had "been Guilty of againſt the Laws of Marriage. "Written words cannot Bluſh; but I ſhould Bluſh "whilſt Writing, if I ſhould ſet down "what I have heard her ſay ſeriouſly about it. "She was certainly a Princeſs enriched with excellent and perfectly Royal Endowments; but "ſhe had alſo great Weakneſſes, as well as ſome "ill Habits. Perhaps I may ſpeak of it more "largely in the Reign of Henry the Great, when "my ſubject will oblige me more particularly to "it, tho' with Regret, having had the Honour to "belong to her Houſhold for ſix Years, and to "be always favourably Treated by that Illuſtrious "Princeſs." What follows ſtrikes with Horrour. (g) "Henry III. treated his Siſters with fraternal "Tenderneſs, but at laſt hated Margaret Queen of "Navarre, as well becauſe ſhe did not live honeſtly "with her Huſband, as by reaſon ſhe was a continual "Accomplice in all the Conſpiracies of the Duke of "Alençon. Notwithſtanding which he always ſhewed himſelf more indulgent to Pardon than ſevere to Puniſh them, till Margaret (either in "Jeſt or Earneſt) let fall an Inceſtuous Expreſſion "to Queen Louiſe his Majeſty's Wife. Upon which "this good King finding himſelf touched in a "particular, which moſt ſenſibly affects generous "Souls, never after looked favourably on that "Brother, or that Incorrigible Siſter. The perfectly Chaſt and Virtuous Princeſs Louiſe hearing "this infamous diſcourſe of her Siſter-in-Law, "ſuddainly ſtopped her Mouth, by very Modeſtly ſaying as tho' ſhe did not take it ſeriouſly, "Pray Siſter rally more agreeably. But yet dreading the Artifices of her Malice, ſhe related the "Immodeſty of her Siſter to the King, which "very ſenſibly Incenſed him againſt her and his "Brother, and he Loved Louiſe the more tenderly for it." When Du-Pleix ſums up the Reaſons which Henry IV. had to ſue for a diſſolution of his Marriage, he expreſſes himſelf thus: (h) "The VI. Nullity was Founded on the Manners of Queen Margaret, which were equally inſupportable and manifeſt to the whole World; "yet he did not urge this in order to obtain her "conſent to the Diſſolution and Annulling of "their Marriage. But the Pope and the Sacred "Conſiſtory being ſufficiently informed of it, did "highly commend the Goodneſs of the King, who "being able to Convict, and cauſe her juſtly to "be Puniſhed, (as ſome of his Council adviſed) "choſe rather to endeavour the liberty of a ſecond Marriage another way." What follows is a very good Supplement to the ſixth Nullity: (i) "Henry the Great was twice Married: "Firſt to Margaret of France, a Match which "ſeemed very advantageous to the poſture of "his Affairs, if it had been as Agreeable to him "as Honourable. For he knew ſhe had elſewhere fixed her Amorous Affection, and had "no Paſſion for him.——— Notwithſtanding "which he Loved her, and bore with thoſe Actions in her, which when known, are inſupportable to all Huſbands. He had no Iſſue by "her; but during her Elopement ſhe had two "Sons: One by the Sieur de Chanvalon, who is "yet alive, and is a Capucin that goes by the "Name of Father Ange: The other, who is Dead, "ſhe had by the Sieur d'Aubiac, and I knew them "both. The notoriouſneſs of the thing obliges "me againſt my Will to mention this: It is, "beſides, a ſhining Proof of the goodneſs of this "moſt Illuſtrious Monarch; who from hence "could have drawn an invincible Reaſon to have "rid himſelf of her by the Hands of Juſtice, according to the Advice of ſeveral of his Council: But he choſe rather to break the Marriage without any Effuſion of Blood by the evident Nullities above mentioned.

I omit what he ſaith, (k) that ſhe maintained a more than fraternal Correſpondence with the Duke of Alençon her Brother.

(F) For which he was Blamed, and Juſtified himſelf: We ſhall examine whether the Marſhal de Baſſompierre's Reſentment is Juſt] Du Pleix being to ſpeak of Queen Margaret's return to the Court, doth not

V v v v v

(a) [illegible]

(b) [illegible] Imperat. [illegible]

(c) Chanvalonius [illegible]

(d) Id. ib.

(e) Varillas, Hiſt. de Henri III. Book 7. pag. m. 231, 232.

(f) Du-pleix, Hiſt. de Henri III. ad ann. 157[illegible]. pag. 70.

(g) Id. ib. ſub fin. pag. [illegible], [illegible].

(h) Id. Hiſt. de Henri IV. ad ann. 1599. pag. 264.

(i) Id. ib. ſub fin. pag. 411, 412.

(k) Id. Hiſt. de Henri III. pag. 23.

the curious paſſages of the Life of this Queen, in order to crown her with the moſt magnificent Praiſes, that can poſſibly be beſtowed on a moſt illuſtrious Princeſs.

not Treat her in an obliging Manner, and yet owns, (a) That ſhe was pleaſed that he ſhould have the honour to be one of her ſervants in ordinary in quality of Maſter of the Requeſts, with a handſom Salary; and notwithſtanding, adds he, that ſhe was very much addicted to Change, I always was very well with her: which being very well known to ſeveral Perſons, ſome have been the more ſurprized that I have ſpoken boldly of her Irregularities in the Reign of Henry III., as I ſhall alſo in this I am now writing. But for my part, I wonder more that any Man of Judgment could not diſcern that what I have done was grounded upon juſt and neceſſary Conſiderations, without its being neceſſary for me to expreſs them. I ſhall place her Elogy after her death, and I ſhall with truth ſay ſome ſtrange and ſurpriſing things. He accordingly diſcharged his promiſe, when he came to mention the death of Margaret, under the year 1615. Some paſſages of his Diſcourſe run thus: (b) "All the World repreſenting her as a Goddeſs, ſhe in a manner fancied her ſelf to be ſo; and during her whole life was very much pleaſed with the Name of Venus Urania, or the Celeſtial Venus, as well to hint that ſhe partaked of the Divinity as to diſtinguiſh her Love from that of the Vulgar. For in order to keep it up, ſhe formed her ſelf upon different Rules from thoſe common to other Women. Affecting above all the exerciſe of her Mind rather than of her Body, and her common expreſſion was: Would you ceaſe to love, poſſeſs the beloved Object. I could on this account compile a more excellent and ſurprizing Romance than any written in former Ages: But I am engaged in more ſerious Affairs——— The Perſecution and Menaces of her Brother (c); the terrible apprehenſions ſhe conceived, that her Crimes would oblige her Husband to attempt upon her life, and the ſolitude in which ſhe lived for twenty Years, ſo diſcompoſed her Mind, that ſhe grew extremely miſtruſtful of every body: So that her continual Fear made her (d) Hypocondriack. This weakneſs at firſt appeared only by certain Objects which fell under the cognizance of her Domeſticks; but after her laſt Journey to the Court it was but too much divulged, ſhe her ſelf diſcovering it to every Body——— * She having as many amorous Addreſſes made to her as he (†) made to other Women, they agreed very ill. She hath thrown all the Ordure that ſhe could at that great King in her Memoirs, and which are Publiſhed, therefore I have been obliged to repreſent her ſuch as ſhe was in this Hiſtory. For I am not here writing Panegyricks of Princes and Princeſſes, but a true Hiſtory, which ought to expreſs their Virtues, and not conceal their Vices, that their Succeſſors, by a fear of the like Stain in their Memory, may be excited to imitate their glorious Actions, and avoid their Faults. Beſides, on political Reaſons it was requiſite to obſerve that her Baſtards were born during her Divorce and ſeparation from the King: By reaſon that they might otherwiſe paſs for legitimate: Since his Majeſty never would puniſh the Monk as an Impoſtor, who for ſo long a time hath been, and is produced as Queen Margaret's Son. I am neceſſitated to declare this for the ſatisfaction of thoſe, who have charged this important Story with detraction.„ After this he adds ſeveral Elogies of this Queen.

The Marſhal de Baſſompierre hath made the following Obſervation on that Paſſage, which charges her with having had two Baſtards: „ Infamous Viper, who by thy Calumnies haſt torn the Entrails of her that gave thee life! Thou Worm, which gnaweſt the ſame fleſh that begot thee! Thou mad Dog, who biteſt thy own Maſter, what moved thee to injure a poor Princeſs after her Death, who cheriſhed thee during her Life? Is it the Intereſt of the late King, who, to his own prejudice, choſe rather to retard the diſannulling his Marriage with her, than utter one ſingle word to her diſadvantage, and tho' he could not keep her any longer his Wife with the Intereſt of his State, yet always honoured her as Queen, loved her as his Siſter, beſtowed large Penſions on her, and made her immenſe Preſents? Is it Truth which obliges thee to it, thou who haſt given the Title of a Hiſtory to this Book filled with Fables, and ſtuffed with Calumnies and Scurrilities? What a Scandal haſt thou caſt upon France, by publiſhing to the whole World, and leaving recorded to Poſterity, ſuch infamous Stories of one of the moſt noble Princeſſes of the Royal Blood, which perhaps are falſe, or at moſt, were only known to very few? Is a private man allowed, under the name of an Hiſtorian, to publiſh the Faults of another, to ſpot and defame the Royal Race, and defile the Memory of the dead? If any attempt had been made to force thee, tho' but lightly to ſcandalize that poor Princeſs, (who kept thee from ſtarving) tho' thou ſhouldeſt rather have ſuffered Martyrdom than yield to it; whereas on the contrary, without any conſtraint or the leaſt invitation, thou haſt hunted after, and deviſed even improper and unreaſonable opportunities to ſay ſuch execrable things of her, that no Chriſtian can utter, or hear without horrour. No, no, there are Wheels and Executioners to puniſh thee ſeverely in this World, and a Divine Juſtice in the other, to inflict eternal torments upon thee for thy infinite Crimes (e).„ Laying aſide abuſive Reflections, we find ſcarce any thing elſe in this Sentence of Condemnation, but that Du Pleix ought not to have defamed a Princeſs, whoſe Domeſtick he had been, nor publiſh'd ſuch private Events as diſhonoured the Royal Family. It is perfectly unneceſſary for me to examin the laſt of theſe Objections. Du Pleix himſelf hath ſatisfactorily anſwered it in one of the Paſſages which I have already cited; and it doth not appear that Baſſompierre ever refuted that part of his Defence. Wherefore let us only ſtop at the firſt Objection.

All acquainted with the Laws of Hiſtory are agreed that every Hiſtorian, who deſigns the faithful diſcharge of his Function, ought intirely to diſpoſſeſs himſelf of the Spirit of Flattery, and Calumny, and put on as much as poſſible, ſuch a Stoical Temper, as is out of the reach of any diſturbance from Paſſion, and inſenſible to all other Intereſts. He ought only to be concerned for the intereſt of Truth, to which his Duty obliges him to ſacrifice the Reſentment of an Injury, the remembrance of a Benefit, and even the love of his Country. He ought to forget that he was born in a certain Country, that he was bred up in the Communion of any Church, that he is indebted for the making his Fortune to ſuch and ſuch, and that ſuch or ſuch are his Relations or Friends. An Hiſtorian as ſuch, like Melchiſedeck, is without Father, without Mother, and without Pedigree. If he be asked of what Country are you? He ought to anſwer, I am neither a French Man, nor a German, nor an Engliſh man, nor a Spaniard, &c. I am an Inhabitant of the World, neither engaged in the ſervice of the Emperor, or of the King of France, but only in that of Truth: She is my ſole Queen, (f) and I have taken no Oath of Allegiance to any beſides her: I am her ſworn Knight, and the Collar of the Order which I wear, is the ſame Ornament worn by the (g) chief Juſtice, and the high Prieſt of the Egyptians. All that he gives to the Love of his Country, is taken from the Attributes of Hiſtory, and by how much he ſheweth himſelf a good Subject, by ſo much he proportionally declines toward an ill Hiſtorian.

> Dum (h) patriam laudat, damnat dum Poggius hoſtem;
> Nec malus eſt civis, nec bonus hiſtoricus.

So that the cruel Reproaches, which Mr. de Baſſompierre grounds on the Sallaries and Poſts which Du Pleix

CONSIDERATIONS upon the Duties of an Hiſtorian.

(a) Id. hiſt. de Henry IV. ad. an. 1605. pag. 91.

(b) Id. hiſt. de Louis XIII. pag. 57.

(c) That is, Henry III.

(*) Id. ib. pag. 54.

(†) That is, the King of Navarre.

(d) In the Divorce Satyrique, pag. 208. Henry IV. is brought in ſpeaking thus. Tho' I pity her, I cannot ſometimes forbear laughing at the extravagant jealouſies, and mad tranſports which frequently prompt her to ſlight what ſhe ſees, and to believe what is falſe; looking ſometimes for her Ruffians in every part of the Houſe, tho' ſhe knows they are ſomewhere elſe; and ſometimes when ſhe ſees and hears 'em, ſhe Fancies they are other Men in their ſhape, who deſign to deceive and do her Miſchief. And pag. 210. She has brought her ſelf to that paſs, that ſhe cannot abide that any body ſhould cough, laugh, or ſpeak with a low Voice in her preſence: She is grown ſo ſuſpicious and miſtruſtful, that ſhe thinks every body ſpeaks of her doings.

(e) Baſſompierre Obſervat. ſur Du-Pleix pag. 171. & ſeq. See ſor alſo pag. 181, & ſeq.

(f) Tuus ô regina quid optes Explorare labor, mihi juſſa capeſſere fas eſt. Virg. Æn. lib. 1. v. 76.

(g) [illegible] Circa collum imaginem ex ſapphiro gemma confectam geſtabat: quæ vocabatur Veritas. Ælian. var. hiſtor. lib. 14. cap. 34.

(h) Sannazar. apud Jovium, Elog. cap. 10. pag. m. 31.

Princeſſes. She was thus praiſed (G) by reaſon of her Liberalities to the Monaſteries, the moſt ſure and infallible means to cover a multitude of Sins. If ſhe diverted her ſelf very agreeably at the Caſtle of Uſſon, ſhe alſo ſuffered ſeveral Troubles there. ‖ " From the Terraſs of that Caſtle, ſhe ſaw her Friends cut in " pieces, and the Count de Randan, their Chief, a Lord of the Houſe of Rochefou-
" cand killed on the ſame day that the King her Huſband triumphed over her " Enemies at Yvry: And tho' this Place fears nothing but Heaven, it being " impoſſible for any thing but the Sun to enter it by force, and its triple En-
" cloſure ſlighting the efforts of the Aſſailants, like a Rock bearing off the Billows

‖ Id. ib. pag. [illegible]

Pleix enjoyed under Queen Margaret, are unjuſt; for Du Pleix the Hiſtoriographer was not obliged to diſcharge the Obligations of Du Pleix this Queens Domeſtick. It was neither proper for him as an Hiſtorian, to acknowledge a good office, or revenge an Injury: His ſole Obligation was to repreſent things as they really were, without any favourable regard to his Friends, or prejudice to his Enemies. He had the ſame ſtrict engagements to Truth, as the Judges have to Juſtice; and therefore ſince it would be highly unreaſonable to reproach a Counſellor of Parliament, to have occaſion'd his Benefactor's loſs of an ill Cauſe, we ſhould be equally in the wrong to complain of Du Pleix, on pretence that he hath Publiſhed defamatory Truths of a Princeſs under whom he was employed. It is to betray an ignorance of the true bounds of things, to maintain, that Gratitude extends even to the diſpoſal of thoſe things which are none of our own; I mean, that to acquit our ſelves of our Obligations, we ſhould make uſe of what belongs to others. If you will acknowledge the good Offices done you, do it at your own Expence, and not at that of your Neighbour. Such an one is the cauſe of your growing rich, that you enjoy the Poſt of Maſter of the Requeſts, or Preſident, &c. Aſſiſt him with your Purſe in his Indigence, but be not an Inſtrument to carry an unjuſt Cauſe for him; for if you carry it for him, your Gratitude is a downright Robbery, and an infraction of the moſt eſſential Duties. You are the Miniſter of Juſtice, and nothing can permit your violation of it; you ought not, as a Judge, to acknowledge the Benefits, which you formerly received when Steward or Tutor. The application of all this to a Publick Miniſter of Truth, an Hiſtoriographer, is not very difficult.

If during the proſecution of a Criminal Indictment againſt Magaret de Valor, Du Pleix had refuſed to give Evidence againſt her, or endured the Torture rather than reveal the Adulteries of this Lady, whoſe Domeſtick he was, he had deſerved Elogies; and his Silence in this caſe had been an hundred times more commendable than an ingenuous Confeſſion: But whilſt compiling the Hiſtory of France, he was diſengaged from all Domeſtick Obligations, and might publickly declare what he ought not to have done to the Commiſſioers appointed to draw up her Indictment. I own that he defamed a Princeſs of the Blood; that if out of fear of caſting ſome ſcandal on the Royal Family, he had been oblig'd to ſilence, it muſt thence be concluded alſo, that an Hiſtorian ought never to mention any of the Rebellions and Conſpiracies of the Princes of the Blood; and for inſtance, the Spaniſh Hiſtorians ought never to have ſpoken of the Combinations of Don Carlos, nor of the Puniſhment which was the conſequence of them. But as this is abſurd, it follows that Mr. de Baſſompierre hath unjuſtly cenſured the Conduct of Du Pleix. His other Obſervations are much better; for it cannot be denied that he hath detected an almoſt infinite number of Faults. If I am anſwer'd that the Rebellions of Princes are publick Facts, and conſequently ought not to be ſilently paſſed over by an Hiſtorian; I reply, that Queen Margaret's Amours were, in their kind, as publickly known as the frequent relapſes of the (a) Duke of Orleans. All the Court was perfectly informed of the Reprimand which ſhe received from the King her Brother, who amongſt other things charged her with having a Baſtard. All the Ambaſſadors knew it, and undoubtedly wrote the News to their reſpective Maſters. All France was acquainted with the Affront which the ſame King cauſed to be offered to Margaret in a publick Road; and the Conſequences of this Affront were blazed abroad by the Complaints of the King of Navarre. In a word, to ſay in an Hiſtory what Du Pleix hath publiſhed concerning the intrigues of the Queen of Navarre, was not to reveal any Private Memoirs. And you may if you pleaſe obſerve, that certain Reaſons of State, which he mentions, obliged him to ſpeak of them. Which is a good juſtification. I deſire you would alſo obſerve that ſeveral have cenſured his inſerting theſe events in his Work, but have not affirmed, that they were meer Lyes. See the Margin (b). On the contrary, they never ventured farther than to ſay that the Veil of Diſcretion ought to have been drawn over them. Wherefore ſince he had no occaſion to juſtifie himſelf on any other account than taking the liberty of publiſhing Truths of this nature, and ſince after that juſtification, he left all theſe paſſages in his Works, ſo that they were not only printed but reprinted with Licenſe; we may conclude, that theſe Facts ought to paſs as undoubted Truths; for if they were Calumnies, the Author would have been obliged to retract and leave them out in the ſecond Edition.

We may ſay that he hath contributed more than any body elſe to fix the certainty of theſe Facts. The Sieur d'Aubigne's Satyrs did not amount to a ſufficient and authentick Evidence; but when they appear confirmed by the publick Atteſtation of an Hiſtorian, who was a domeſtick Servant to this Queen, there is no longer room for doubt. The Hiſtorian lived at the time of the Events, and was Servant to this Princeſs: He hath not deprived her of the glory which ſhe deſerved on other accounts; he was not blamed for calumniating, but for not ſparing her; and never retracted or ſuppreſt in a new Edition what he had ſaid in the firſt. So that the ſilence of a thouſand and a thouſand Authors, and the Elogies beſtowed on her Memory may at pleaſure be alledged, but can never ſhake the truth of the Fact; for we ought to take notice that even her Flatterers never preſumed to averr that ſhe was an Example of Chaſtity, but contented themſelves with ſilence on this Head. If they had affirmed that ſhe was always very chaſte, they would have formed a ſort of Faction and Schiſm in the Hiſtorical World, and fomented in it that Pyrrhoniſm which is already but too epidemical on other accounts: A diſorder whoſe propagation is principally owing to the different accounts of things (c) at the very time of the Events. A Lye is commonly ſuppoſed poſterior to the Truth; but this is not certain with reſpect to Relations; for it but too frequently happens that the falſe precede the true; and that the true and falſe ſtart at the very ſame inſtant, and ſo run through future Ages under the auſpicious Authority of Traditions of equal age. Obſerve what Tacitus ſaith (d) on occaſion of a very remarkable event, which at firſt was variouſly repreſented.

It was foretold, that Truth would not be ſtifled by the artifices of mercenary Pens and Tongues. (e) " Thoſe, who in hopes of her liberality, praiſe
" her in their Sermons, dedicate Books to, or write
" Elogies on her, do in vain beſtow on her " Qualities to which ſhe hath no pretence; for true
" Tradition, which in ſpite of them will be imme" morially preſerved from Father to Son, will " plainly prove them Lyars, and as full of Avarice
" and Flattery, as ſhe is an Enemy to Vir" tue." This Prediction is verify'd by the event, for which we are not a little indebted to Du-Pleix.

(G) She was thus praiſed by reaſon of her Liberalities to the Monaſteries.] Hilarion de Coſte, a

(a) Brother to Lewis XIII.

(b) Baſſompierre pag. [illegible] of his Journal of his Life, ſays, that in 1606. Queen Margaret loſt the Sieur Sollendat her Lover, who had been killed by a Gentleman called Charmond.

(c) See my Diſſertation concerning defamatory Libels.

(d) Is finis fuit ulciſcendi Germanici morte, non modo apud illos homines qui tum agebant, etiam ſecutis temporibus vario rumore jactata, adeo maxima quæque ambigua ſunt, dum alii quoquo modo audita pro compertis habent, alii vera in contrarium vertunt. & gliſcit utrumque poſteritate. Tacit. Annal. lib. 3. cap. 19.

(e) Divorce ſatyrique pag. 212.

“ lows and Surges, yet Neceſſity got into it and obliged her, in order to avoid its Affronts, to pawn her Jewels at Venice, to melt down her Plate, and to have nothing free but the Air, hoping but very little, and fearing every thing: For all round about her was in flame and Confuſion. ” I ſhall conclude with this paſſage of Brantome †: The Caſtle of Uſſon is a very ſtrong place, that ſeems impregnable, which that cunning and crafty King Lewis the XI. partly made ſo on purpoſe to lodge his Priſoners, and keep them much ſecurer there then at Loches, Bois de Vincennes, or Luſignan.

UTINO

Minime ſpeaks thus of the Charities of this Princeſs: (a) “ At the four moſt ſolemn Feſtivals, and on her Birth-day, ſhe gave with her own hand one hundred Gold Crowns, and as many Loaves to an hundred poor People. She annually maintained one hundred and eleven perſons, and forty Engliſh, Scotch and Iriſh Prieſts, beſides the Alms ſhe daily diſtributed at her Palace, and going from Maſs, as well to Strangers, as to the modeſt uncraving poor. She alſo contributed ſeveral Sums to the building of ſeveral Churches and Monaſteries. She built and founded the Jeſuits College at Agen, and the Convent of the Reformed Auguſtins near her Palace, near the Suburbs of St. Germain des Prez at Paris. None of the Mendicant Orders ever eſcaped her Annual Bounty; amongſt others the Carmelites, Auguſtins, Cordeliers, Jacobins, the Jeſuits of St. Lewis, the Ave-Mary Nuns, the Bernardins the Capuchins, Recollects, and Minimes of Nigeon. In the latter years of her life, building all her hopes on God, ſhe daily heard three Maſſes, one high and two low; ſhe communicated three times every Week, on Tueſday, Friday, and Saturday; every Saturday ſhe viſited the low Chappel of our Lady in St. Victor's Church, and the Hoſpitals in the Holy Week, and never gave leſs than three or four Thouſand Blankets, beſides frequently a conſiderable Sum for the Marriage of poor Girls. ” Scipio Du Pleix (b) relates the ſame, but he adds a Reflection which makes a vaſt difference betwixt this Narrative and that of the Minime. If ſhe, ſaith he (c), “ ſuffered her ſelf to to be drawn away by ſenſuality in her Youth, amongſt ſo many pernicious opportunities as happen in the lives of Princes, and the Allurements of the Court, yet having renounced them in order to return to God, and having redeemed her Sins, by large Charities, who can doubt but that the Prayers of ſo many Religious Perſons, and the Bleſſings of the People have opened the Heavens for her Soul, and made way for her reception amongſt the Bleſſed Angels, conſidering withal that more eſpecially towards the end of her days ſhe prepared and diſpoſed her ſelf for it with a truly Chriſtian Contrition and Reſolution. ” The Minime took great care not to intermix his Relations with ſomething of this Nature: We find nothing there which tends to inſinuate that Margaret had any occaſion to buy off the Sins of her Youth by ſo many Alms; and Omiſſions like this are indeed unſufferable. Generally ſpeaking we cannot complain of his placing her amongſt the Illuſtrious Ladies; but his ranking her equally and without any diſtinction, with thoſe whoſe Virtue always remained untainted, is what cannot be excuſed. He ought at leaſt to have divided his Work into three Claſſes, one for the Ladies of perpetual and unſpotted Virtue, one for thoſe unjuſtly ſlandered, and another for thoſe whoſe good qualities compenſated their Vices, and who in their wiſe Old Age expiated the Sins of their Youth. No Body would have been offended to have found Margaret in this laſt Claſs, nor taken it amiſs that the Monks out of gratitude for her Alms, ſhould made her ſhine amongſt the Illuſtrious Penitents, and celebrate her Wiſdom, Learning, and the remainder of her good Qualities. We ought to do juſtice to every Body, and even to beſtow thoſe praiſes upon Curtezans, which they deſerve when they have diſtinguiſhed themſelves by ſeveral Virtues, of which there are (d) ſome Examples. We are not Ignorant of the Nullity of her Alms, by reaſon they were given at the Expence of others and the ruin of her Creditors. (e) Have you ever obſerved any of her Lovers, (Henry IV. is introduced ſpeaking) a few excepted, grow rich by her Liberality? But you ſee the Priſons full of thoſe whom ſhe hath impoveriſhed —— I know very well that at my expence ſhe gives the tenth of all her Rents and Penſions quarterly to Monaſteries and Convents: But ſhe withholds the Salary of her domeſticks, (which I very much commiſerate) and of thoſe who for the whole Year have obliged her with their commodities as well as their labour. If any ſhould ſcruple to give credit to this paſſage on pretext that it is taken out of a defamatory Libel, he needs only conſult the Hiſtory of Henry the Great, written by Mr. de Perefixe, who died Arch-Biſhop of Paris. Where he will find (f) that the Palace which Queen Margaret built near the Pre-aux-Clercs was ſold to pay her debts —— that ſhe was liberal to prodigality, very pompous and magnificent; but [illegible] it was to pay debts. “ Which is undoubtedly one of the greateſt Faults in a Prince, by reaſon that nothing is ſo diametrically oppoſite to Juſtice, of which he ought to be the Protector and Pattern. ” This Teſtimony agrees with that of Mezerai, and yet one would be apt to excuſe the Panegyriſts who have ſo extolled this Queen's Alms, if like Du Pleix they had related the whole matter of Fact; and one would not require from them a profound ſearch into the circumſtances of her Liberalities to the Poor and the Monaſteries.

I ſay again that the Minime Hilarion de Coſte ought to have obſerved in his Book, what Robert d'Arbriſſel did in his Monaſteries, one of which was appointed for Women of good Reputation, and the other for thoſe who had quitted their ill courſes. That mixture is very Scandalous which in the ſame Book preſents us with the Elogies of Anne of Bretagne, and Iſabella Clara Eugenia, together with thoſe of Bona Sforza and our Margaret de Valois. To which I add that it is a medley which naturally Encourages thoſe to give up themſelves to Vice, whom an Ambition of being one day placed amongſt the Illuſtrious Ladies, might perhaps keep in the Right way. Nothing is more pernicious than equally to extoll and Honour looſe and Virtuous Women. This Minime had been leſs to blame, if his praiſes had been reduced to the particular deſcription of any ſingle Action; but he hath couched them ſo as to take in the Hiſtorical ſeries of the Queen's whole life. He mention'd whatever he found excellent, and forgot nothing but what was ill. I make this reflection only to make it appear that I never pretended that all theſe, who have mentioned either the Learning or Charities of Queen Margaret, ought alſo to have taken notice of her Faults. This never entred into my thoughts, nor do I in the leaſt diſlike Stephen Paſquier's contenting himſelf with hinting what he Condemned in general (g), and particularly enlarging on what he admired in her: for he did not attempt a Hiſtory or an Hiſtorical Elogy. See what he ſaith of the meals of this Princeſs. “ Tho' Dinners and Suppers are chiefly Deſigned for the nouriſhment of the Body, yet ſhe more highly valuing the Aliment of the mind, has commonly four Men near her, to whom ſhe firſt propoſes what propoſition ſhe pleaſes for their examination, frequently overthrowing their Arguments and never reſenting their Criticiſms provided they be grounded on good and ſolid Reaſons. Thus ſhe nouriſhes her mind and feeds her Body with all Sobriety, and after theſe Learned Men have ended their diſcourſe, not to abate any part of her Royalty, then follows a band of Violins, after that a Conſort of Vocal Muſick, and laſtly of Lutes, which play ſucceſſively in Emulation of each other (h). ”

Give me leave to obſerve by the by that this Queen and all other Ladies who imitate her, perhaps

---

† Brantome, Memoires des Dames illuſtres pag. m. 251.

(a) Hilarion de Coſte ubi ſupra pag. 308, 309. See alſo Paſquier p. m. 761. of the 2d Tome of his Letters.

(b) Du Pleix, Hiſt. de Louis XIII. pag. 54. 55.

(c) Id. ib. pag. 55.

(d) See Chap. 25. of the 3. Book Miſcellanearum obſervationum written by Peter Petit a Pariſh Phyſician and Printed at Utrecht in 1682.

(e) Divorce ſatyrique pag. 213.

UTINO (LEONARD DE) a Jacobin Monk, who Flouriſhed in the XV Century, and was a great Preacher. His Sermons on the Saints were one of the earlieſt productions of the Preſs, being Printed in 1446 †. And his remaining Works were alſo Printed before the end (A) of the ſame Century. It was probably he, who complained that the Confeſſions which the Women made at the (B) Confeſſion Chair, were defective in ſome things.

VULCANIUS * (BONAVENTURA) was Born at Bruges on the 30. of June 1538. He made ſuch Expeditious Advances in polite literature, that at the Age of 21. Cardinal Francis de Mendoza § fixed on him by Reaſon of his Learning, to be his Secretary and Library-Keeper, and gave him ſome of the Greek Fathers to Tranſlate into Latin. He returned from Spain to the Low Countries, after an abſence of Eleven Years, and finding his Country embroiled in Confuſions, went to Cologne, and from thence to Baſil and Geneva, publiſhing in each of theſe Cities a Book of his Compoſure. Being returned home he was Nominated Profeſſor of the Greek Tongue in the Univerſity of Leyden in 1578. and three Years after began the Exerciſe of that Imployment. Which he ſupplyed for the ſpace of 32 Years γ, and died at Leyden (A) on the 9th of October 1614.

haps more perniciouſly injure the World, by their extreme aſſiduity in Convents and Churches, than if they Scandalouſly purſued a Courſe of impenitence. They are immortalized by an Hundred forced artificial Eloges, which never mention any of their former Sins. Is not this to cauſe thoſe who live in Impurity to hope for an unſpotted Fame and expect to be loaded with Honour, if in their decayed and deformed Age they turn devout? Wherefore ſhould they not hope for this Glory after ſo many examples before their Eyes? For it is the common courſe of looſe Women to turn devout when no longer able to Charm. They are then very conſtant Auditors of the Sermon and Maſs, and very liberal to Convents; whence 'tis believed they ſhall find the way to Paradiſe, and conſequently Young Ladies may flatter themſelves that their Debaucheries will not deprive them either of Humane Glory, which the applauſes of Monks procure for the dead, or Eternal Happineſs. What is more pernicious than this Security? What can poſſibly let looſe the Reins of corrupt Nature to a greater degree? The Ladies would be terrified at the Apprehenſions of an infamous Character in future Ages, and the Torments of Hell, if they ſaw that all or almoſt all the Wanton continue hardned in their Crimes till Death. This fear would prove a Bridle and a coercive wiſe Leſſon, and by this means the Damnation of ſome few would prove a Remedy againſt the Incontinence and a means of the Salvation of a great Number. If in every Age there were but one lewd Woman, that turned devout in her Old Age, ſhe alone would no more inſpire a Spirit of Security, than the good Thief, (a) ſhe could only drive away Deſpair. But when the Number of theſe Magdalens (b) Mounts High, they univerſally occaſion Confidence and Obduration, ſo that one may ſay, that indirectly and contrary to their Intention they are the firmeſt Pillars of the Empire of Venus, even when they themſelves are retired out of it. What Glorious Arms would they afford the Prieſts and Confeſſors if being become the laughing ſtock and execration of the whole Town, when grown grey under Venus's Yoak, and following their Old Trade with all the ridiculous impertinences which attend the Conjunction of Wrinkles and Coquettery, they ſhould at laſt dye blaſpheming or in deſpair; ſo that their rejection of the Sacraments ſhould cauſe their Corps to be dragged on a hurdle to lie unburied! Such a diſmal Spactacle would ſerve for a Bug-Bear. Little Father Andrew would have frequently taken occaſion from thence to cry out in his Sermons, the ſame Fate attends you.

A Famous Author (c) in a Letter dated the 23d. of June 1678. ſaith, that the diſeaſe of which Madam M dyed made him do penance, and that ſhe was one of thoſe mention'd in the Goſpel, who were as well payed for the laſt hour, as thoſe who engaged in the Morning. Father Bourdalouë (d) affirmed that this Lady diſcovered a great ſhare of Chriſtian Reſolution at her Death. This is what edifies the publick, but yet lays a ſnare for Sinners. It is obſervable that we are taught by ſome that thoſe have a greater Intereſt in the Favour of God, who extricate themſelves out of great Sins, than if they had never fallen into them. This is another ſnare. The Biſhop of Meaux clears this, after having advanced (e) that when we ſee in the Goſpel (1) the loſt Sheep preferred by the Good Shepherd to all the reſt of the Flock, when we read of the Happy return of the Prodigal Son and the tranſports of a tender Father which rejoyce the whole Family; We are tempted to believe that Repentance is preferred to Innocence it ſelf, and that the returning Prodigal receives greater Favours than the Eldeſt Son who never ſtrayed from his Father's houſe. See the remainder in the Author himſelf.

(A) Before the end of the ſame Century.] His Treatiſe of Common Places was Printed at Ulm in 1478. His Lent and Dominical Sermons were Printed at Lyons in 1495. See the Epitome of Geſner's Bibliotheque pag. 543.

(B) That the Confeſſions, which the Women made at the Confeſſion Chair, were defective.] James Olivier Licentiate of the Civil and Canon Law, ſays (f) that the Learned de Utino obſerves that Womens Confeſſions "are commonly deficient in three particulars, which they very ſeldom or never confeſs; "Luxurioufneſs and the Vanity of Cloaths, believing it to be due to their Sex; Lewdneſs in thought "or deed, according to the eſſence of the Sin or its "circumſtances, either by ſhame or cuſtom; and immoderate Loquacity, which is not free from Mortal "or Venial Sin, for which an Account muſt be "given before God, even of idle Words." I do not aſſert this for a Truth, but only ſay that it is very probable that the Author here cited is the Monk I am ſpeaking of.

(A) He died at Leyden on the 9. of October in 1614.] I am obliged to the Athenæ (g) Belgicæ for the particular day of this date, which I believe right (*), tho' the date of the Year is falſe, for it is not true that Vulcanius died in 1610. as it is ſaid there. Mr. Konig follows this Error. Meurſius, Valerius Andreas, and Mr. Moreri after them are miſtaken in placing the Death of Vulcanius in 1615. Ghilini who hath only Paraphraſed, and wrongly Tranſlated Swertius, hath exceeded the Fault of his Original, by making it 1600. inſtead of 1610. (h), and yet he tells us that Vulcanius Born according to him and the Truth on the 30 of June in 1538. lived above 70 Years. This is not the ſole Blunder he is guilty of: He tells us beſides that (i) Cardinal Francis de Mendoza was Biſhop of Bruges, and that Vulcanius having been Profeſſor of the Greek Tongue in Flanders for three Years went to Lyons, and obtained the ſame Imployment in that Univerſity, which he exerciſed for 32 Years (k) to the great ſatisfaction of the French. It is not neceſſary to tell the Reader that inſtead of Burgos a City of Spain, he hath put Bruges in Flanders, and that inſtead of Leyden, he hath clapt in Lyons, where there never was an Univerſity. He did not underſtand at all theſe Words of Swertius:

---

† [illegible] in his A[illegible] pud Konig Biblioth. vet. & nova, pag. 4[illegible].

* He [illegible] of [illegible] Family [illegible]

§ He was Biſhop of Burgos.

γ Taken [illegible]

(1) [illegible] on the effect of many old devout Women, who have been lewd in their Youth.

(a) Unus eſt ne deſperes, ſolus eſt ne confidas, ſays a Father of the Church ſpeaking of the good thief.

(b) I mean ſuch Women as are falſe or true Converts.

(c) Buſſi Rabutin, letter 106. of the 1. tome pag. 257. Dutch Edit.

(d) Ibid. Letter 107. pag. 258.

(e) Biſhop of Meaux, Oraiſon funebre de la Reine Marie Thereſe pag. 66. Dutch Edit.

(1) Luke 15. 4. 10.

(f) James Olivier, Alphabet de l'imperfection & malice des femmes, letter G. p. 97. edit. of Rouen 1658.

(g) Swert. Ath. Belg. pag. 162.

* Mr. Drelincourt a Phyſician at Leyden and a worthy Son of the Profeſſor, has been pleaſant at my requeſt to make ſeveral inquiries concerning the time of Vulcanius's death, and has found in the Records of the Town-Houſe that he was buried in St. Peter's Church the 13. of October 1614.

(h) Ghilini teatro parte 2. pag. 49.

(i) Id. ib. pag. 48.

(k) Con intera ſodisfazione de Franceſi. Ibid.

1614. after having published || ſeveral Works which diſcovered his erudition. He promiſed (B) an Edition of Saint Cyril's Works. His Funeral Oration (C) raiſed the Murmurs of ſome Criticks. Ghilini hath committed a great many † Faults.

|| You'll find the Titles of ſome of 'em in Moreri, and all of 'em in Meurſius, Ibid. pag. 407, 408, & in Valerius Andreas Bibl. Belg. pag. 116, 117.

† There are only two Faults in the [illegible]

W.

WECHEL (CHRISTIAN) a Famous Printer at Paris before the middle of the XVI. Century. He was ſo correct in his Editions, that the Errata ‡ of a Book in Folio did not ſometimes contain above two Faults. Thoſe who tell us that he firſt began to Print in Greek (A Δ) in 1538. are miſtaken. There are ſome Hebrew Books which he Printed || in 1533. By the Catalogue of the Books which came from his Preſs before 1548. It appears that he was a diligent Man, and that he Printed a great many Books. This Catalogue is at the beginning of the thirteenth Book of Geſner's Pandects, with a very obliging Epiſtle Dedicatory. I mean by this that Geſner Dedicated his thirteenth Book to him. He was proſecuted * in 1534. for ſelling a Book of Eraſmus De eſu interdicto carnium, which was cenſured by the Faculty of Divines. Some Authors ſay that he became Poor, by a particular curſe of God, which fell on him, for Printing (A) an impious Book. Andrew WECHEL his

‡ See the Remark A.

|| [illegible] Printed [illegible]

* Id. ib. pag. 355.

tius: (a) Lugdunum Batavorum iter faceret, à Curatoribus Academiæ Profeſſor linguæ Græcæ deſignatus eſt anno Domini M. D. LXXVIII. Triennio demum poſt Lugdunum venit, & Profeſſionem ſuſcepit. Since he is miſtaken in ſuch particulars as theſe, we ought to be believe that on an Hundred more dangerous occaſions he hath corrupted the Authors which he Paraphraſed.

(a) Swert. ubi ſupra pag. 161.

(B) He promiſed an Edition of Saint Cyril's Works.] Of which Scultetus gives a curious Account, ſpeaking of the Learned Men he viſited at Leyden in 1612. (b) Quem (Bonaventuram Vulcanium) ſenem admodum ſellæ affixum, & manibus pedibuſque captum inveni. Promiſerat ille triginta quatuor annis antè, editionem omnium operum Græcorum Cyrilli hactenus a multis deſideratam: hanc cum fruſtra hactenus ſingulis propemodum nundinis expectaſſem, & jam coram hominis ætatem valetudinemque perditam conſiderarem, petii ab eo, ut Cyrillum Græcum fidei meæ concrederet: me non ſolùm operam daturum, ut ex ipſius voto ille in vulgus exiret, ſed etiam de Codicis precio ipſi ſatisfacturum: At ille gratiis pro officio actis, tantum adhuc virium ſibi ſupereſſe ajebat, ut ipſemet promiſſo ſe exſolvere poſſit; uſque adeò verum eſt, Neminem eſſe tam ſenem, qui, non dico diem, ſed annos ſupervivere ſe poſſe, ſperet. Quanquam erat non nemo in Angliâ, qui Bonaventuram de tanti theſauri poſſeſſione magnificè potiùs ſe jactaſſe, quam verè gloriatum fuiſſe, affirmaret. Obſerve that Vulcanius began to Tranſlate St. Cyril, to aſſiſt (c) Cardinal de Mendoza, who was writing a Tract de naturali noſtra per dignam Euchariſtiæ ſumptionem cum Chriſto unione.

(b) Abrah. Scultetus narrat. hiſtor. pag. 55.

(c) Meurſ. Athenæ Bat. pag. 103.

(C) His Funeral Oration raiſed the Murmurs of ſome Criticks.] They found Fault with Cunæus who made it, for not mentioning that the deceaſed when dying recommended himſelf to the Merits of Jeſus Chriſt, and ſuch like things. Cunæus juſtified himſelf by declaring that he could not have ſaid ſo without incurring the Guilt of an Officious lye. It is very well known, added he, that the good old Man fell into a paſſion againſt thoſe who exhorted him to prepare for Death, and that he never was obſerved to comfort himſelf by the Maxims of Piety. I ſhall inſert Cunæus's whole Letter; it was never Printed, and it will not be unacceptable to the Reader. A Friend of mine Tranſcribed it exactly from the Original, and did me the Favour to communicate to me his tranſcript. I know who hath the Orignal.

Ampliſſimo Viro Rumoldo Hogerbetio Petrus
Cunæus S. D.

Vir Ampliſſime. Ante dies aliquot rogatu Mag. Rectoris, & Senatus Academici laudavi Bonaventuram Vulcanium funebri oratione, in qua reprehendi quædam audio ab ineptis. Et jam perlatus Hagam rumor eſt. Ego non decrevi orationem publicare, neque enim tanti eſt. Sed tamen animi cauſa ſcripſi brevem diſſertatiunculam quam legi a vobis cupio, uti intelligatis quam frigida & febriculoſa ſint, quæ illi culpavere. Præcipue illud exagitatum eſt de Lipſio & Eraſmo. De Lipſio crimen diluit ſatis ſolidè: Eraſmum autem ita defendi ut ſub illius perſona cauſam ipſe meam egerim. Etiam illud culpavere quod de Chriſti merito locutus non ſum. Sed multæ cauſſæ fuere cur hæc & alia multa omiſerim. Novimus nos, novere cæteri Vulcanium qui familiariter cum illo vixerunt. Sane quoties aliquis hominem extrema ſenectute ad mortis meditationem hortaretur, vehementer iraſcebatur ille. Sermones vero de Chriſto aut de pietate, adeo nunquam ex ſene audivimus, ut ſæpe mirati ſimus quibus ille cogitationibus feſſam ætatem ſolari ſoleret. Itaque laudo in funere ea quæ cunctis eruditis litteratiſque communia. Cætera omiſi, ne viderer ſcenæ inſervire. Sermones de Chriſto non ſunt gladii Delphici qui omnibus aptari poſſint. Et profecto qui hæc indignantur relegandi ſunt ad D. Heinſii orationes quibus nobiliſſ. Douzam & Scaligerum laudavit. Eadem enim illi objici poſſunt atque etiam objecta fuerunt. Vale Ampliſſime Senator Lugdun. Batav. Kal. Nov. CIↃ IↃC XIV

If any one objects that I ought not to have reveal'd this great imperfection of Vulcanius he muſt be ignorant that the publick hath long ſince been informed of it; to which purpoſe ſee what we find in the Scaligerana: (d) Vulcanius's Religion is that of Dice and Cards; he knows not what Religion he is of, nor is he acquainted with the difference of Religions ——— Vulcanius pretends to be one of our Communion, but he doth not know what Religion is.

(d) [illegible] voce Vulcanius p. 255.

(A Δ) Thoſe who tell us that he firſt began to Print in Greek in 1538. are miſtaken.] I had mention'd this Epoch and confirmed it by citing the 256 Page of Mr. Chevillier's Tract of the Original of Printing at Paris; but I have been informed by Mr. Van Dale that he has ſome Greek Books Printed at Paris by Chriſtian Wechel in the Year 1530 and 1531. Of which Number are Hermogenes περὶ εὑρέσεων τόμοι τέσσαρες in 4. and Lucian's Dialogues of the Gods. Theſe two Books are in Greek only, and came out in 1530. Of this Number are alſo the ſame Hermogenes περὶ μεθόδου δεινότητος, & περὶ ἰδεῶν τόμοι δύο, Printed in Greek alone in 1531. I here return Thanks to Mr. Van Dale for diſcovering to me Mr. Chevillier's miſtake.

(A) For Printing an impious Book.] Here is my Evidence. (e) "In the Year 1530 after the diſmal "and prodigious lewdneſſes related by our Hiſtorians and Doctor Cochleus in ſeveral places, a"roſe this abortive of Hell, who wrote a Book "againſt the Divine Juſtice in Favour of unbap"tized deceaſed Infants, of which God be thanked, "there is no more at preſent remaining than the "bare Title in Geſner's Bibliotheque; and ſeveral "have wiſely obſerved that the ruin of Chriſtian "Wechel and his labours was inflicted on him as a "Puniſhment for his Preſſes and Characters be"ing employed in ſuch an infamous Work. It "was this unhappy anonymous Author, who un"der the borrowed Name of Antony Cornelius, traced

(e) Garaſſe, Somme theologique p. [illegible]

" traced out the first Lineaments of this Atheistical Monster, which by little and little, like a venomous Serpent, is grown up, and by intricate Meanders crawled in amongst us ". That the Reader may know more exactly what this Book was, I am obliged to recite what Father Garasse saith of it in another place of the same piece. (a) " The second Objection is not couched in such elegant terms as the first, but is incomparably worse and more impious than that of Symmachus, and is taken out of that cursed anonymous Author, who took the Name of Antonius Cornelius, and composed a Latin Discourse against the distributive Justice of the Creator, espousing the Cause of Infants deceased before Baptism, and pleading pro and con, with Texts and formal Allegations of the Law, by which he condemned the Divine Justice, and called its proceeding, Unjust, Wicked, and Inhuman——— Time, the last and most incorruptible Judge of our performances, hath discovered the impiety of this wretched Book; for Christian Wechel who Printed it, saw his Riches moulder away before his Eyes, without being able to stop the course of his Ruin; and God be thanked, the Book is so vanished, that there is not a single Copy to be found in Libraries, and at present, nothing but the Title is left of that infamous and abominable Work.

Several things make me doubt of the principal parts of this Story. 1. Father Garasse cites no Authority, and avers a Fact which is false, viz. that the Title of this impious Book is preserved in Gesner's Bibliotheque. It is certain that there is no such Person mentioned there as Antony Cornelius, and that he whom we find in the Epitome of that Work of Gesner, is not mentioned as the Author of the Tract, of which I am speaking. 2. If Christian Wechel had Printed a Book of this nature in 1530. had he been left undisturbed? Would he not have been more prosecuted for this attempt, than for selling a Book of Erasmus, whose only blemish was that of being censured as a (b) suspicious piece? Would this Printer have been suffered to flourish in Paris from 1530, to 1548. at least? I express my self with this restriction, because I have not been able to carry him farther than that Year, in which I find that Conrad Gesner dedicated a Book to him (c), and represents him in full prosperity in the City of Paris. 3. Andrew Wechel his Son so distinguished himself amongst the Printers and Booksellers of Paris, that it is not at all probable that his Father's Estate was so miserably impaired. 4. Lastly, it is not perfectly agreed what that accursed Book which ruin'd him was; for some aver it to be that de tribus impostoribus, a meer non-existent Chimerical Book, (d) if we may believe those who are best able to give an Account of things of this kind. (e), Christus Dominus——— impostor atque adeo mendax & planus audivit non modo a Celso——— sed etiam ab impio & immemorando homine, imo Dæmone corporato, cujus opus de tribus Magnis Impostoribus, Mose Christo, Mahumete, exitiale fuisse Wechelo, insigni alias Typographo, sed ejus libri pestifero attactu funditus everso, referunt qui legerunt, digni fide testes. Mihi incestare oculos tam infandæ scriptionis lectione, ad ingens scelus videtur pertinere. By these four Remarks I do not pretend to deny all Father Garasse's Relation; I only call in question, Wechel's suffering such terrible effects of the Divine wrath, for having printed a Book in 1530, and don't believe that the Dissertation concerning the Punishment of Infants, was so impious as he represents it. As for the rest I agree with him, that there was a Book entituled, Querela infantium in limbo clausorum adversus divinum judicium, ab Ant. (f) Cornelio J. V. Lic. If we rely upon the Title, it was printed at Paris by Christian Wechel, in 1531. in 4to. There are two Copies (g) of it in the Archbishop of Rheims's Library. Without having read this Tract, I conjecture that it is not impious, and that it is like that of Bartolus de Saxoferrato, and that of Jacobus de Ancharana. The first of these Civilians is Author of a piece intitl'd, Processus Sathanæ contra D. Virginem coram Judice Jesu: And the other of a Treatise call'd Processus Luciferi contra Jesum coram Judice Salomone. They introduce the Devil engaging in a Law-suit, observing the Formalities of the Bar, and consequently urging all his Reasons. Is it possible to represent him speaking without making him utter impieties? And yet these two Books are not impious. Every thing ends in the confusion of the Plaintiff.

Since the first Edition of this Dictionary, I have read the Book in question (h). The entire Title of which runs thus: Exactissima infantium in limbo clausorum querela adversus divinum judicium apud æquum judicem proposita. Apologia divini judicii contra querelam infantium. Infantium ad apologiam divini judicii responsio. Æqui judicis super hac re sententia. Autore Antonio Cornelio juris utriusque Licentiato Doctiss. Lutetiæ apud Christianum Wechelum in vico Jacobæo sub scuto Basiliensi, anno M. D. XXXI. mense Januario. This Tract about 70 pages in 4to, was dedicated by the Author to Antony du Bourg (i) Lieutenant Civil at Paris, and (k) President of the Council of Louise of Savoy, Mother of Francis the I. The Epistle Dedicatory is very short, and precedes a Preface which is a little longer, and dated at Paris the 2d of January 1531. Antony Cornelius acknowledges his great Obligations to the Person to whom he dedicates his Book, and that he undertook that performance at the request of one of his Friends, who knew that he had dreamed that the Infants detained in limbo, complain of being disinherited contrary to the Law Plautius, which lays down that neminem ex facto alterius exhæredari posse. He declares that their Complaints (l) are ill grounded. Where is then the Impiety? Doth it consist in his citing some Passages of the Scripture, and of the Civil and Canon-Laws which favour the Infants Cause? Does he not alledge some that are contrary to them? and at last, after their reply, doth not he bring in the following definitive Sentence? Pensitatis diligentissime in utramque partem legibus, censeo infantes injuste de divino judicio queri per lex. in c. regenerante de consec. dist. iiii. fallit dicit lex. & fallitur qui parvulos non baptisatos prædicat in condemnatione non futuros, cum dicat Apostolus ob unius delictum omnes homines damnari.

A REFLECTION upon the Complaints of some Persons against those, who represent the Objections of the Libertins with all their force.

Thus we see with what temerity Father Garasse mentions Antony Cornelius's Book. Who can be sufficiently surprized at his Blunder? Perhaps some may reply to me that the Infants Objections are carried too far, and that it makes the Faith of their Advocate suspected. I should not vouchsafe an Answer to this Scruple, if I was not sensible, that it is in the Mouths of an infinite number of People, and objected against those who, without any disguise, fairly represent the Arguments of Hereticks or Libertins. Give me leave to answer those Gentlemen with this Question: If you were obliged to examin some of the Controversies in agitation betwixt the Faithful and the Infidels, would you to the utmost of your knowledge, represent whatever the last could urge with the greatest force in favour of their Opinions? Or would you designedly weaken their Arguments, that your Readers might meet with nothing to render the Victory dubious? You will undoubtedly answer me, that you would do the first of these two things, and that the second is a Fraud utterly unworthy of a Man of Honour, and much less excusable in a Servant of God. Wherefore then are you surprized to see the Objections of the Impious represented with all the force which natural Reason gives them? You say you would do it your self, if you were to refute them, and you agree that swerving from this Rule, is to incur the Guilt of an ignominious Fraud. Learn then not to take all those for Prevaricators, who fairly shew the beautiful side of their Adversaries Cause; and if they are obliged to confess that nothing but the Scripture can furnish Arms against certain Objections of the Impious, and that they recur to it as to the immovable Foundation of their Faith, be very well contented with their Conduct; for otherwise, the World will be apt to distrust you, and to suppose that you endeavour to triumph by the assistance of a train his Son (B) was alſo a very extraordinary Printer. He retired from † Paris to Francfort; ſome Writers ſay, that it was * after the Paris Maſſacre. See the Remark B.

(a) Ib. pag. [illegible]

(b) Cum libellum Erasmi de esu carnium, ab Academia Parisiensi tanquam suspectum reprobatum, Christianus Wechelus vendendum exposuisset. Chevillier, Orig. de l'Imprimerie, pag. 353.

(c) The 13th Book of his Pandects.

(d) See the Article Aretin (Peter) Remark F.

(e) Theophilus Raynaud, Hoplotheca, sect. 2. serie 2. cap. 14. pag. 259, 260.

(f) See Bibliotheca Telleriana, p. 160. He is there called Cornelius, pag. 422. and in the Index.

(g) What Garasse affirms is not therefore true, that it is wholly lost.

(h) Mr. Bourdelot has been pleased to lend it me from Paris.

(i) Antonio Burgo judici civili apud Parisienses.

(k) Præsidi sacri Consistorii illustriss. D. Lodovicæ Galliarum gubernatricis.

(l) Non quod dubitem pueros illos justa pœna condemnatos. Anton. Cornelius in præfat.

WEIDNERUS (Paul) a Jewiſh Phyſician in the XVI. Century, who was invited from Udine a City in Italy, to practiſe Phyſick in Carinthia, where he ſtayed ſix Years, receiving a very handſom Penſion from the Publick. During this time he conceived ſome Doubts concerning his Religion, which obliged him to compare the Old and the New Teſtament together, and diligently to examin the Expoſitions of the Rabbins; and being convinced by this courſe of reading that JESUS CHRIST is the Meſſias, he reſolved to embrace the Chriſtian Faith. Notwithſtanding which, he wavered for about the ſpace of one Year after this full ‖ Coviction, and carefully

---

train of Military Stratagems, which are inconſiſtent with the Goſpel.

Not long ſince, I diſcovered one of the Cauſes, which prompt a great many People to ſuſpect thoſe of Libertiniſm, who propoſe the Libertines Objections with their full force. A very honeſt and truly religious Man, a few days ago, mentioning ſome Writers, whoſe Zeal for the good Cauſe is known to the whole World, told me; you don't find the Enemies of Truth offering any thing conſiderable in their Books, the Objections of the Infidels are offered in few words in their Works, and they are amply and victoriouſly refuted: but in ſuch and ſuch Writers who do not paſs for great Zealots, they appear very prolix and more formidable than the Anſwer. In anſwer to this, I made uſe of the ſame Queſtion as above. Did thoſe zealous Writers know all that appears in the leſs zealous Authors, or were they ignorant of it? If the latter, they are not to be praiſed for their Silence, nor for their Victory. But if the firſt, they deſerve a ſevere Cenſure, as being guilty of a pious Fraud, which Truth ought never to ſtand in need of; and I am very ſure that they dare not own that they have ſtifled the leaſt particular, which might be aſſiſtant to the beautiful appearance of their Enemies Objections. Wherein then doth their Zeal ſurpaſs the leſs devout Writer, whom you was ſpeaking of? They ſaid all they could in favour of their Adverſary before they anſwer'd him; hath the leſs zealous Author done more?

(B) Andrew WECHEL, his Son, was alſo a very extraordinary Printer] I have read in the Hiſtory of (a) Printing. Firſt, That he was obliged to retire to Francfort, under the protection of the Count of Hanaw, on account of his Religion about the Year 1573. In the ſecond place, that his Son John who was married to one of the Daughters of (b) Jerome Drouart, Bookſeller at Paris, going to Francfort with his Father, carried with him half the Impreſſion of Polybii opera Gr. Lat. cum notis Casauboni in folio in 1609. Which is the reaſon why ſome Copies of Polybius are to be ſeen with his Name to 'em, tho' it be the ſame Edition with that of Paris. Thidly, That Andrew Wechel dyed at Francfort towards the end of the Year 1600. In the Fourth place, That his Son John printed alſo in the ſaid City of Francfort in 1583. and afterwards Diodori Siculi Biblioth. Hiſtoriæ Gr. Lat. in 1604. and other Books which procured him the Reputation of one of the moſt able Printers and Bookſellers of his time. On the firſt of theſe four things I obſerve, that Francfort being a Republick, not in the leaſt depending on the Counts of Hanaw, it is not at all likely that Andrew Wechel ſhould, in that City, have put himſelf under the Protection of thoſe Counts. Perhaps the time is here confounded, at leaſt it is very certain that Wechel's Heirs kept Printing-Houſes at Hanaw towards the beginning of the XVII. Century, and it was then that they put themſelves under the protection of the Count of Hanau. On the 2d Head I obſerve that Caſaubon was not yet 15 years old, when John Wechel retired with his Father to Francfort towards the year 1573. Wherefore it is impoſſible that this Printer ſhould have carried with him half the Impreſſion of Caſaubon's Polybius. On the 3d. I obſerve that Andrew Weckel died the firſt of November in 1581, as may be inferred from the Preface which John Opſopæus his Corrector prefixed to Peter Ramus his Commentaries on ſome of Cicero's Orations Printed at Francfort apud hæredes Andreæ Wecheli in 1582. To conclude, I ſay on the 4th Head, that his Heirs who continued the Printing Trade, were Claudius Marni, and John Aubri: which plainly ſhews, that John Wechel was not what the Author of the Hiſtory of Printing repreſents him. The Edition of Diodorus Siculus in 1604, was Printed by Claudius Marni, and the Sons of John Aubri.

Obſerve that Opſopæus (c) ſpeaking of the Heirs of Andrew Wechel, mentions only Claudius Marni, and John Aubri, the Sons in Law of that Printer; which obliges me to renounce the Opinion I once was of, that John Wechel was the Son of Andrew. An Epiſtle of Frederick Sylburgius, dated the 20th of June (d) in 1587, informs me, that he did not lodge in the Houſe of John Wechel, but with John Aubri. After whoſe death, the Names of his Sons appeared in the Title Pages of Books, joined with that of Claudius Marni, with whom they had ſeveral Diſputes. (e) Aubriani rationes reddi ſibi a Marnio volunt, & hæreditatem prorſus dividi; adeo ut aliquoties officina claudi debuerit, quam alias inter has occupationes ad calculos ſedere quiete nequeant. It is certain, that what was called typos Wechelianos, or typographiam Wechelianam, was under the direction of the Marni's and the Aubri's. During which time John Wechel Printed apart. I have, amongſt other Books Printed by him, the Paraphraſe and Scholia of Monlorius in Ariſtotelis analyticorum priorum, ſeu de ratiocinatione libros duos, together with the ſame Monlorius's Tract De Entelechia, & de Univerſis, Francofurti in officina typographica Joannis Wecheli 1593.

There is a groſs error in the French Tranſlation of Bongars's Letters; there we find the following Words: I have writ to Wechel's Man to take great care of them which anſwer to this Latin, (f) commendavi eas Aubrio Wecheliano. And theſe: I have ordered one of Wechel's Men to ſend you the Tract which you deſire, for (g) libellum de Morbinis juſſu meo mittet ad te Marnius Wechelianus. Bongars wrote this in 1597, and his Tranſlator hath made him ſpeak as if Wechel had been alive then, not knowing that the Original expreſſed the Names of his Sons-in-Law.

To Conlcude, I have very good reaſons to believe, that Andrew Wechel left France before the Maſſacre. I find in Melchior Adam, that Lawrence Zincgref was very uneaſie at Paris in 1569. on account of Money remitted to him, which was intercepted in Wechel's Hands. He adds that Wechel was baniſhed the Kingdom, that all his Effects were confiſcated, and that the greateſt part of his Books being Proteſtant, were ſeized and carried away from his Shop, in order to be publickly burnt. (h) Multa hoc in itinere perpeſſus eſt indigna (Zincgrefius) tum propter alia incommoda, tum propter rei pecuniariæ penuriam: cum inter peregrinos agens a patre nihil acciperet: & illa, quæ ex principum liberalitate, nec non ſecretò a matre tranſmiſſa fuerant, interciperentur apud Wechelium, Bibliopolam notiſſimum; quippe cujus bona omnia confiſcata fuerant, ipſo regni limitibus proſcripto, reliquiſque ut plurimum Proteſtantium libris ab officinâ illius, Lutetiæ publicè combuſtis. Zincgref agreed with the Wechels to take in payment ſeveral of the Books (i), which

(a) Written by John de la Caille, and Printed at Paris in 1689.

(b) The Author ſays pag. 208. that it is an Error, and that this Jerom was never married.

(f) Bongarſ. epiſt. 163. pag. m. 580. (g) Idem epiſt. 575. (h) Melch. Adam. in vit. Juriſ. conſ. pag. 431. (i) Wechelianis tranſigere, proque pecuniâ ſibi debita libros nullos, quos clam adhuc illi ſervarant, ac confiſcatoribus Regiis ſubduxerant, ſumere coactus fuit. Id. ibid.

carefully concealed his Thoughts, not (Z) being ignorant of the Dangers to which he ſhould expoſe himſelf, if he let the Jews know the ſtate of his ſoul; but at laſt the Intereſt of his Salvation, prevailed on the conſideration of the Fleſh. And leaving Carinthia, he removed to Vienna, where together with his Wife and four Children he was Baptiſed in St. Stephen's Church, on the 15th of Auguſt 155*. He was made Hebrew Profeſſor in the Univerſity of Vienna, and Publiſhed ſomething concerning the Motives of his Converſion, and to Refute Judaiſm ||.

WESALIA, (John de) a Doctor of Divinity in the XVth Century, who was very ill treated by the Inquiſition in Germany, for having taught ſome Doctrines which diſguſted the Catholicks. It is pretended that his (A) Converſation with ſome Jews diſordered his Head, and occaſioned his falling into ſeveral Extravagancies. He was a famous Preacher, which the Monks, eſpecially the Thomiſts, did not love, and accordingly they were the principal Authors of the Perſecutions which he ſuffered. They accuſed him for certain Propoſitions which they had heard him deliver in the Pulpit; and * conſtrained the Archbiſhop of Mentz which they had ſaved from the Inquiſition. He afterwards received ſome other Money, and went to Orleans, where he was admitted Doctor of the Civil Law in 1570. (a) All theſe things happened before the Paris Maſſacre.

Notwithſtanding all this, it is moſt certain that Andrew Wechel was at Paris on this Cruel Day. He fled into Germany in the year 1569, when thoſe Troubles were brought on him which Melchior Adam relates, in which he had periſhed (b) if the Preſident de Harlai had not done him good ſervice. He returned to Paris, and re-eſtabliſhed his Printing-houſe there, in the (c) beginning of June 1571. He himſelf (d) relates the danger in which he was the Night of the Maſſacre, and how he was ſaved by Hubert Languet, who lodged in his Houſe. He teſtifies his gratitude to him in the Epiſtle Dedicatory of Albert Krantzius's Vandalia.

(Z) Not being ignorant of the dangers to which he ſhould expoſe himſelf.] To be firmly perſuaded that a Religion is true, to reſolve to profeſs it, and ſuffer a great many Conflicts of Mind before the execution of ſuch a Reſolution, are not incompatible things. Wherefore we ought not to charge Weidnerus with inſincerity. There are very few Deſigns, the execution of which is more perplexed than that of the change of Religion; for not to mention other Obſtacles, don't we know that we ſhall thereby anger the Perſons whom we love and reſpect moſt? Don't we know that we ſhall become odious and Infamous to our Relations? I ſay infamous, by reaſon that all Nations are uſed to fix an infamous Idea on any Man's quitting his Religion. They are not contented with calling him a Revolted, an Apoſtate, but he muſt alſo be called a Renegade (e). They aver, that his revolt is an ignominious Blemiſh to his Family, and I have ſeen a devout Woman who ſaid very ſeriouſly, that ſhe had rather ſee her Siſters common Whores, than go to Maſs. Theſe hideous Notions are neceſſary to the temporal good of a Communion, whence it proceeds that they are fomented. A Caſuiſt will not think it ill for a Father to turn his Sons out of doors if they apoſtatize, or that in the like caſe, one Brother ſhould never ſee the other, and a Man ſhould abhor his Wife, or a Woman abhor her Husband. The Proteſtants charge this ſort of Perſecution on the Catholicks, who alſo (f) on their ſide, reproach the Proteſtants for it. However, it is certain that this Cuſtom very frequently ſerves as a Scare-crow to thoſe who are perſuaded, that they ought to quit the Church in which they have been educated. Here follows a paſſage of Mr. Arnauld on this Head. The deſign of changing ones Religion carries with it ſomething ſtupendous, ſaith he (g), and even thoſe who are fully reſolved to execute it, can hardly bring themſelves to it——— I know that a young Lady, the Daughter of a very zealous Huguenot concealed her being a Catholick for ſeven years from her Father; and during that whole ſpace of time, ſhe accompanied him to the Sermon and Service, only abſtaining from the Sacrament, out of fear that he ſhould die for grief at the news of it. She cauſed me to be conſulted in this caſe, and being informed that I did not approve of the diſſimulation, ſhe reſolved, tho' with a great deal of difficulty, to diſcover her ſelf———There may be alſo ſome, as it was in Saint Auguſtin's time, who are throughly convinced of the truth of the Catholick Religion, but cannot break the Bonds of cuſtom which drags them to the Proteſtant Aſſemblies, nor expoſe themſelves to the reproach which they fear from their Relations and Friends, on account of their change, unleſs ſome other Reaſon of Human Conſideration, contrary to thoſe which I have mention'd, counterballances them, and hindering the impreſſion which they make on their Minds, enables them to follow the more eaſily the Truth of which they are convinced. There are ſome Communities, which believe themſelves ſo much diſgraced by the Apoſtacy of a Monk of Merit, and are ſo afraid that it ſhould prove a fatal Scandal to the Faith of the weak, as well as too great a ſubject of Triumph to the contrary Party, that they would leave no means unattempted againſt any Perſon who diſcovers the leaſt deſign to deſert them. The Jews are of the ſame nature. Would they not have murthered Spinoza? And did they not attempt to deſtroy our Weidnerus after his Converſion? Porro, ſaith he (h), ſimulatque res celari amplius non potuit, protinus a meis ſecundum carnem non mediocria propter fidei Chriſtianæ ſuſpicionem exſpectare pericula cogebar, quæ proh dolor! in hunc uſque diem mihi intentari video & experior. Let us not forget a very terrible ſort of Perſecution againſt thoſe, who change their Religion. They are loaded with defamatory Libels; their whole lives are ſtrictly examined; and if any blemiſhes can be found, they are repreſented to the Publick with all manner of Artifice in the moſt hyperbolical manner. The leaſt ſlips of Youth are never forgiven them. If they have written any private Letters in confidence to their Friends, which may injure their Reputation, they are publiſhed. In a word, for the intereſt of the Cauſe, and to diſcredit the Authority of the Change, no ſcruple is made to enhaunce to a gigantick bulk thoſe very things, which would never have deprived them of the Eſteem and Affection of any one Perſon in the World, provided they had not changed their Religion.

(A) His Converſation with ſome Jews.] The Plague having obliged him to leave Mentz, he retired to Worms, where he frequented the Jews company, as a Rabbi converted to Chriſtianity, informed Orthuinus Gratius. This Rabbi (i) was Victor de Carben, who embraced the Chriſtian Faith in the Year 1515. being 42 years of age, and became a Prieſt, and died at the age of 92. He wrote ſome Tracts in honour of the Bleſſed Virgin and the Church, which Orthuinus Gratius turned into Latin. Is Victor quum Achillice adhuc valeret, mibi ſæpius retulit prætactum Johannem Weſalienſem è Moguntia ob peſtis metum Wormaciam ſe contuliſſe, atque ibidem cum Judæis Chriſti inimicis frequentem habuiſſe converſationem, cumque ab illis deceptum in putidam errorum ſentinam corruiſſe (k). There is no manner of appearance of Truth in this Story; for the Doctrines, for which John de Weſalia was condemned by the Inquiſition, did not at all favour of Judaiſm.

|| Taken from the Epiſtle Dedicatory to the Emperor Ferdinand, prefixed to [illegible] Printed at Vienna, in the Year 1559. See John Henichius Profeſſor of Divinity at Rinteln, [illegible] Religionis Chriſtianæ pag. 365, & ſeq.

* See the Remark B.

(a) Id. ib. pag. 422.

(b) Languet. epiſt. ad Camerarium patrem, p. 10.

(c) Id. epiſt. 55. ad eundem, pag. 164.

(d) In the Epiſtle dedicatory of Albert Krantzius's Vandalia Printed at Francfort 1575.

(e) That name was used among the Proteſtants in ſome Places of France, to denote thoſe who turn'd Papiſts.

(f) See M. Bruey's Book intituled, Reponſe aux plaintes des Proteſtans. It is mention'd in the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres for the Year 1686. See the 879th pag. of thoſe Nouvelles.

(g) Arnauld, Apologie pour les Catholiques 2. part, chap. 12. pag. 240. 241.

(h) Weidnerus, epiſt. dedicat. ad Ferdinandum.

(i) Orthuinus Gratius, in Faſciculo rerum expetend. & fugiendar. p. 325. edit. Londin. 1690.

(k) Id. ib.

Mentz to proceed against him. That Prelate unwilling (B) to expose himself once more to the indignation of the Court of Rome, convoked an Assembly of Doctors in 1479. John de Wesalia, who was then a Prisoner in the Convent of the Cordeliers at Mentz, was interrogated by John Elten the Inquisitor, who was President of this Assembly. He answer'd in the Negative, to most of the Questions put to him, and seemed a little to evade some others. Wherefore on the next day, the Inquisitor declared (C) with a great deal of Eloquence, that he ought to be interrogated once more. His Answers were much the same with those of the fore-going day; but he suffered the confusion of being convicted out of his (D) own Writings, of having taught Principles which he had denied in answering the Inquisitor. He submitted to the Punishment imposed on him, which was to retract before all the People. His Books were burnt, but some Doctors thought that this (E) Venerable Old Man was used too severely, and that Monkish Passion had a great share in this Affair †. He was confined to perpetual Penance in a Monastery of Augustins, where he died soon after *. The Protestants have placed him in their List of the Witnesses of Truth; which I am not surprized at, for he was condemned for several Doctrines which they have since taught. What (F) Coeffeteau offers in Answer to this, hath no manner of Solidity. Wesalia taught at ‖ Erford. Consult the Article WESTPHALUS (John).

WESSE-

(B) To expose himself once more to the indignation of the Court of Rome.] The liberty which he had taken of condemning the Avarice of that Court had been fatal to him, and was the cause that not only he was deprived of his Archbishoprick, but Mentz was destroyed. The following Passage expresses his Name and Family; (a) Reverendissimus præsul Moguntinus Dietherus Isenburgius misit literas ad Universitatem Heidelbergensem & Coloniensem instigantibus, imo cogentibus Thomistis quibusdam: veritus ne denuo ab episcopatu ejiceretur jussu Romani Pontificis, quod commeruerat ante levibus verbis Romanorum in vendendo palliis notata avaritia. Et minabantur ei Romani præsulis iram, quam pridem non tam ipse fuerat expertus, quam tota Moguntia & capta & direpta, ac à victoribus nullum non contumeliarum genus passa. Unde ferunt Pium Pontificem ad Moguntiæ mentionem semper ingemuisse, quod jus suum tam insigni damno vindicasset. We ought not to be surprized that the Agents of the Inquisition, are so greedy of rendring People suspicious, and amplifying things by malicious interpretations; for those who find themselves suspected, are afraid of losing their Posts if they have any, and break out into a thousand Violences, in order to take off the ill impressions concerning them already made. The Inquisitors do very well know that their odious Slanders will produce this effect; wherefore they never make any scruple of Calumny. To how many People may justly be applied this saying of Horace, (b) You design to silence Envy by forsaking Virtue?

(C) On the next day, the Inquisitor declared with a great deal of Eloquence.] Those who shall read his Speech on that occasion, need not be advertised that I here speak ironically. (c) Adducto Johanne de Wesalia, dixit Inquisitor: Tria jam futura in hoc actu. Primum quia M. Johannes hesterna die non satis resolutus ad certos responderit articulos, iterum sibi illis proponendos esse, ut luculenter & clare, plus masticando, responderet: deinde ad quosdam alios articulos heri non auditos quid sentiat, respondere deberet: tertio relegi debere omnes articulos principaliores cum responsionibus, ut audiatur si adhuc in illis velit persistere aut ab illis resilire.

(D) Of being convicted out of his own Writings.] This poor Man broken by Age and Diseases, was not able to express his Thoughts before such a dreadful Tribunal, and perhaps did not remember all that he had written. The Inquisitors clearly foresaw his negative Plea; and for that reason were not content with binding him by the most solemn Oaths, (d) but first of all were resolved to be possessed of all his Papers. (e) Conclusum quod M. N. Wesalia jusjurandum facere deberet, quod præsentare & tradere vellet omnes tractatus, opera, scripta sua qualiacunque quæ condidisset, ut per proprios sermones vinceretur——— Adjungebatur quod doctores Heidelbergenses cum tribus aliis, scilicet Naeno, decano Sancti Victoris, & quodam alio perspicerent tractatus ejus, errores excerperent, dearticularent. Whence it was very easie to convict him of those points which he improperly denied. (f) Dum certas propositiones negasset se scripsisse, tractatus sui propria manu inscripti ei præsentabantur, quam revera literam esse suam non valuit negare.

(E) Was used too severely, and that Monkish Passion, &c.] 'Tis testified by the Anonymous Author of the Verbal Process; who was present during the whole proceedings. Dempto solo articulo, saith he (g), de processione Spiritus Sancti in aliis videtur non ita gravi censura fuisse castigandus, si induciæ datæ fuissent, si consultores ei fuissent adhibiti, si non omnes uno solo dempto, fuissent de via realium. Et nisi forsitan impetus quidam irrepsisset in religiosos triumphandi de seculari, & præsertim de eo qui illorum Thomam peculiariter non coluerat, forsitan poterat cum eo mitius, humanius, & clementius benigniusque actum & processum fuisse. Deum testor qui omnia novit hunc processum qui cum eo servatus fuit usque ad revocationem & librorum suorum exustionem, vehementissime displicuisse Magistro Engelino de Brunsuico, maximo Theologo, & Magistro Joanni Keisersbergio, duobus utique viris cum doctis, tum integris. Præcipue Magistro Engelino visum fuit nimis præcipitanter cum tanto viro actum esse. Immo non verebatur asserere multos articulos ejus, & majorem partem posse sustineri. Nec obticuit de simultate Thomistarum contra Modernos, & de gaudio triumphandi religiosorum contra seculares. He adds, That the Devil sowed the Tares of division betwixt the Divines and Philosophers, and so alienated their Minds, that if any person denied the reality of Universals, he was immediately thought to have sinned against the Holy Ghost, and to be guilty of a mortal Sin against God, Christianity, Justice, and the State. Can this Blindness proceed from any other cause but the Devil, who, in order to pervert us from all that is good, indears us to vain speculations, which neither inspire Devotion towards God, nor Charity towards ones Neighbour? Unde (h) hæc cæcitas mentis ni a diabolo? Qui ne utiliora, ne honestiora, ne moribus, virtutibus & saluti animarum conducentia discamus, phantasias nostras illudit, & trahit ad res minus salutares, & ad gelidas harum intentionum speculationes, quibus neque ad Deum devoti reddimur, neque ad proximi dilectionem inflammamur. This Reflection is very just, and sufficient to mortify not only the Realists and Nominalists, but also other Factions.

(F) What Coeffeteau offers in answer.] Du Plessis Mornai did not forget to say that (i) John de Vesalia, Doctor and Preacher at Worms, was accused before the Inquisitors of having maintained, That the Prelates had no Authority to institute new Laws in the Church, but to persuade the Faithful to observe the Gospel Precepts (k), &c.

Coeffeteau

---

† Taken from [illegible] m & fugiendarum, pag. 325 & seq. edit. Lovaniensi. [illegible]

* Trithemius in Chronico

(a) Auctor [illegible] Magistralis ac Thomistici [illegible] Joh. de Wesalia, apud Orthuinum Gratium ibid. pag. 327.

(b) Invidiam placare paras virtute relicta. Horat. Sat. 3. lib. 2. vers. 13.

(c) Auctor Exam. Magistral. apud Orth. Gratium, pag. 330.

(d) Mandavit eidem Johanni (Inquisitor) sub poena obedientiæ, in virtute Sancti Spiritus, sub poena excommunicationis latæ sententiæ (à quo nemo habeat ipsum absolvere nisi solus Papa, vel ipse Inquisitor, nisi in articulo mortis) ut diceret plane verba veritatis super interrogandis de sua fide, sine ambagibus, sine verborum sophisticatione. Ib. pag. 328. They made him declare that by virtue of that Oath, he thought himself bound to speak the Truth even against himself; and that if he failed in it, he would incur the Punishment of Excommunication, and commit a mortal Sin.

(e) Idem Auctor Examinis apud eumdem pag. 327.

WESSELUS (JOHN) one of the moſt Learned Men of the XV. Century, was Born at Groningen about the Year (A) 1419. and loſing his Father and Mother in his infancy, was Educated by the care of a good Lady, who having an only Son cauſed him to ſtudy with him. She ſent them both to Zwol, where there was a College, which was more eſteemed than that of Groningen. It was a Society of Regular Prieſts of St. Jerome, where Youth were inſtructed. All theſe that were Educated there were ſhaven like Prieſts and wore the Religious Habit; but when they quitted the College they were free to wear what Habit they pleaſed. So that tho' Weſſelus wore the Cowl whilſt he ſtudied at Zwol, yet there is no Reaſon to infer from thence that he was a Monk, ſince it is certain that (B) he never engaged in a Monaſtical life. It is indeed true that in his Youngeſt Years he had ſome thoughts which tended that way, but he refrained them as ſoon as he perceived that ſort of life charged with ſome ſhocking Superſtitions, and at laſt the Inclination wore off. As his great natural Parts were attended with an incredible Application to ſtudy, he made a conſiderable Progreſs in Learning at Zwol, and publickly inſtructed others there. He left that City in order to continue his ſtudies at Cologne, where he improved to ſuch a degree of Learning as not only rendred him highly admired, but ſuſpected of Heterodoxy. He conſulted the Coeffeteau having in a different manner repreſented the Opinions of this Man, ſuch, ſaith he (a), as the Proteſtants themſelves relate them, exclaims thus, “(b) Theſe are the extravagancies of the Preacher of Worms, amongſt which du Pleſſis hath left out thoſe, which he found contrary as well to his own as the Catholick Doctrine; Namely the Article of the proceeding of the Holy Spirit from the perſon of the Son as well as the Father, which the Latin Church always aſſerted againſt the Greek. And it is certain that thoſe whom du Pleſſis alledges, who ſupported him againſt the Thomiſts, own'd that he erred in this Article; and as to moſt of the other Points, he denied the aſſertion of ſome, and endeavoured to explain others. But afterwards he publickly recanted in the Church Yard at Mentz in preſence of the Arch-Biſhop and ſeveral eminent Doctors of the Univerſities of Mentz, Cologne, and Heidelberg; beſides which according to Trithemius, his Books and Writings were committed to the Flames, and he in perpetual penance confined in an Auguſtin Monaſtery, where he dyed ſoon after. Thus it appears what the Saumur Witneſſes are. The Reader will remember that the Proteſtant Author, from whom we have cited the heads of his Doctrine, hath couched them according to his particular fancy, in order to make them look leſs odious and more plauſible. Trithemius adds that he aſſerted that there was not, nor never had been any ſuch thing as Original Sin, and that Children were not conceived in Original Sin. He alſo relates the other Articles quite differently from the Proteſtant, who hath perverted the Abbot of Urſperg's Chronicle, from whence thoſe who furniſhed du Pleſſis with them, made their extracts.” Rivet replyed in favour of du Pleſſis, that it is true that John de Weſalia (c) agreed with the Greek Church on the Article of the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, but that in his other Propoſitions to the Number of 23. he taxed the ſame Errors which the Proteſtants have charged, and this according to the enumeration, and relation not of a Proteſtant, as Coeffeteau falſely avers, but of a bigotted (d) Papiſt who uſes the following expreſſions, impios Waldenſes, impiorem Weſalienſem, impiiſſimum Wiclefum, to ſhew that he did not at all favour of Proteſtantiſm, and ſpeaking of this Poor Old Man he reproaches him with Childiſh dotage. In general, Rivet was in the right, for John de Weſalia's Propoſitions cited by du Pleſſis are in a Book of Orthuinus Gratius a very good Papiſt; but he was in the wrong to charge Coeffeteau with pretending here that Orthuinus was a Proteſtant. Coeffeteau did not cite the Faſciculus rerum expetendarum, but only the Continuator of the Abbot of Urſperg. It is at page 1188. and 1189. that he ſays that the Author of the Faſciculus rerum expetendarum was a Proteſtant and a Lutheran. Rivet (e) had a great deal of Reaſon to correct him here.

Obſerve by the by that the Author of the Prejugez legitimes contre le Papiſme hath been cenſured for alledging the Abbot of Urſperg's Continuator in evidence. He hath been told (f) that it is very well known that the Publiſher of this Work was Cratomelius of Schleſtad, one of Melancthon's Pupils. I believe the Cenſurer meant Crato Mylius, for that is the Name of the Bookſeller who publiſhed in 1573. the Abbot of Urſperg's Chronicle Corrected and continued by Gaſpar Hedion Miniſter of Strasburg. See the Epitome (g) of Geſner's Bibliotheque, and the firſt Tome of the (h) Obſervationes ſelectæ Printed at Hall in 1700.

(A) Was Born at Groningen about the Year 1419.] Others (i) place his Birth about the Year 1400. But it is probable that they are miſtaken, ſince two Authors of Frieſland ſay that he died in 1489. at 70 Years of Age (k). If we believe Geldenhaur, he lived above 90 Years, and his ſight remained ſo good to the laſt that he never made uſe of Spectacles either to write or Read: (l) Geldenhaurius nonageſimum eum annum ſuperaſſe narrat, integro viſu & auditu, ita ut nunquam perſpicillis uſus ſit, minutiſſimaſque literas & commode legeret, & pulchre ipſe pingeret. Hardenbergius doth not confirm this, but on the contrary ſaith that Weſſelus, having never had good Eyes, they grew ſo weak in his old Age, that the continual blunders occaſioned by his bad ſight, in Reading the Scripture before the Monks, rendred him the jeſt of his Auditors. (m) At quod ad viſum, Hardenbergius hebetiuſculum eum fuiſſe, & ſenio quoque caligare oculis cœpiſſe tradit, ut cum ſemper die Cœnæ Dominicæ in Cœtu Fratrum veſperi pro collatione, ut illi vocant, legeret ſermonem Domini in Cœna habitum a cap. Joh. 13. uſque ad 18. frequenter a textu aberrans a Monachis ridéretur. As for the Age beſtowed on him by Geldenhaur, it is thus refuted (n): Quod vero ad ætatem, Suffridus Petri & Regnerus Prædinius, quibus ut Friſiis & in Urbe hac verſatis rectius conſtare potuit, undeſeptuaginta annos vixiſſe affirmant, natum 1419. mortuum 1489. The Regiſters of the Church where Weſſelus was Buried expreſs the Year of his Death, but not that of his Age: Which if they had preſerved we ſhould have been more certain of Goldenhaur's or Suffridus's Error (o). Sepultus Groningæ, in Monaſterio, quod Spiritualium Virginum dicitur, in ipſo templi choro, non longe a ſummo altari. In libro memoriali templi illius hæc leguntur. Anno Domini 1489 obiit Venerabilis Magiſter Weſſelus Hermanni, egregius Doctor Sacræ Theologiæ, & in Latinâ, & Græcâ, & Hebræâ linguis multùm eruditus, & in tota Philoſophia quaſi univerſalis.

(B) That he never engaged in a Monaſtical life.] This is averred and frequently (p) repeated in the Tract from whence I have extracted this Article: Beſides which we are there aſſured that he conſtantly reſiſted the importunities of the General of the Cordeliers, who preſſed him to aſſume the Habit of that order (q): Is cùm eſſet eruditus & eruditorum fautor, ad ſe attraxit Weſſelum, tùm ut in diſputationibus, quarum avidiſſimus erat, & quotidiano exercitio ejus opera uteretur; tum verò ut ſuo ordinis monachum eum poſtea faceret, a quo tamen Weſſelus abhorrebat. Sed uſus præſenti fortunâ in familiam ſe ipſius dedit. Notwithſtanding which a Learned

---

(a) Reponſe au Myſtere d'iniquité pag. 1214.

(b) Ibid. pag. 1215.

(c) Rivet, Remarques ſur la Reponſe au Myſtere d'iniquité, 2. part. p. 631.

(d) That is to ſay Orthuinus Gratius. See what he ſaith of John de Weſalia above Remark A. [illegible] pag. 631.

(f) Critiques des Prejugez pag. 256.

(g) At the Word [illegible] des.

(h) At page 575.

(i) As Hardenbergius, Seckendorf, Altingius &c. See Seckendorf's Hiſtory of Lutheraniſm lib. 1. p. 226.

(k) Vita Weſſeli in libro cui titulus effigies & vitæ profeſſorum Academiæ Groningæ & Omlandiæ pag. 12. 13. & 24.

(l) Ibid. pag. 24.

(m) Ibid.

(n) Ibid.

(o) Ibid.

(p) Cucullum monaſticum ſive Franciſcanorum ſive alius ordinis nunquam induit. Ibid. pag. 13. Rogatus quare non ſaltem primam tonſuram aſſumeret? dixit ſe non metuere patibulum quanto quidem tempore mentis maneret compos. Ib pag. 14.

(q) Ibid. Pag. 17.

the Originals, and there found many difficulties and Arguments by ſtarting of which he puzzled and ſuprized his Maſters. Beſides he was by no means ſatisfied with their Anſwers, * that Ariſtotle, Saint Thomas, and the Seraphical Doctor, &c. had ſaid this or that; and becauſe he applyed himſelf much to the ſtudy of the Platonick Philoſophy, he thereby fell into a Contempt of that of Ariſtotle, which rendred him very diſagreable to the Scholaſtick Profeſſors. He frequently croſſed the Rhine, to go to the Monaſtery of || Duyts in order to Read the Works of the Abbot Rupert, of whom he was a great admirer. He was urged to go to Heidelberg, to Read Divinity Lectures there, and followed that Advice; but the Directors of the Univerſity alledged that he was incapable of the Divinity Profeſſor's Chair, by Reaſon that he was not yet promoted to the (C) Degree of Doctor; and when he requeſted that Degree, he was anſwered that the Canons did not allow the Admiſſion of Lay-Men to that Academical degree. So that being reſolved againſt the taking of Orders, he contented himſelf with Reading Philoſophical Lectures: After which he returned to Cologne, from whence he went to Louvain, and having ſpent ſome time in hearing the Lectures of the Theological Profeſſors there, he went to Paris. And the Philoſophical Controverſies being then very hot betwixt the Realiſts, Formaliſts, and Nominaliſts; he endeavoured to convert the Principal Heads of the Formaliſts, by bringing them over to the Sect of the Realiſts; and afterwards, he himſelf went over to the Formaliſts, and not finding that Sect more in the right than the other, he embraced the Opinions of the Nominaliſts. Some Authors ſay, that he travelled to Greece and the (D) Levant, in order to ſucceed the better in Learning the Greek and Hebrew Languages. However it be, the Reputation which he acquired, procured him the particular eſteem of Francis della Rovere, General of the Minor Fryers, in whoſe intereſt he engaged. And if he was thereby a Witneſs of ſeveral blamable Actions, amongſt other Motives he was

* See the Remark (B).

|| Situated over againſt Cologne, Rupert, who is called Abbas Tuitienſis, was Abbot of that Monaſtery.

---

ed Man hath given out that Weſſelus was a Cordelier, in the following Words. (a) Wherefore Lewis XI. commanded John Boucart Biſhop of Avranches to take care of this reform, who being aſſiſted by a Cordelier whoſe Name was Weſelus Gransfortius of Groningen, who by his Voyages in the Levant had acquired a perfect acquaintance with Ariſtotle and all the good Greek Authors in each Science, aſſembled all the Principal Heads, and Members of the Univerſity, and with their concurrence and good Advice, drew up and publiſhed an Edict againſt the Nominaliſts, which we ſhall inſert intire at the end of this Chapter, as a Monument not yet Printed, very Advantageous to our Lewis the XI.

(a) Naudé in his Additions to the Hiſtory of Lewis XI p. 193.

(C) That he was not yet promoted to the degree of Doctor.] This Objection furniſhes us with an invincible Refutation of the report of ſome Writers, that our Weſſelus acquired ſuch a vaſt ſtock of erudition in the Univerſity of Cologne, that he was made Doctor of Divinity, Law and Phyſick there. (b) Geldenhaurius refert magno & aſſiduo & vix credibili labore hoc eum adſecutum eſſe, ut non ſolum Theologicæ Majeſtatis lauream mereretur, ſed etiam Juriconſultis & Medicis Doctoribus annumeraretur: adeoque ſummis in omnibus Facultatibus titulis fuit ornatus; ut vulgò quidem perhibetur. Mihi tamen vix veriſimile videtur. Si enim jam tum triplici laureâ inſignitus fuiſſet Weſſelus, quæ ratio fuerit, quod poſtea admiſſus non fuerit ab Heidelbergenſibus, nullam aliam ob cauſſam, quam quod titulo Doctoris diſtitueretur. Pro exaggeranda ergo Weſſeli viri incomparabilis eruditione hanc de tribus titulis fabulam, & plura alia, jactatam jam olim fuiſſe credo.

(b) Vita Weſſeli pag. 14.

(D) That he Travelled into Greece and the Levant.] We have ſeen Naudæus affirming it above. Others pretend that the Name of Baſilius given him by ſeveral Authors, was beſtowed upon him by Beſſarion. They tell us that Beſſarion coming acquainted with our Weſſelus in Greece, at firſt by changing the U into B called him Baſſelus, and afterwards Baſilius. The Author already cited rejects theſe Traditions, and doubts whether Weſſelus ever was in Greece. His Words are: (c) Hardenbergius pro Weſſelo Baſilium dictum ait, quod elegantiorum hominum auribus Weſſeli nomen nimis durum & veluti barbarum videretur: vel quod alterum quodammodo Baſilium magnum judicarent; vel quod Beſſarion Cardinalis Græcus, quo ibi amiciſſimo uſus, ſuum B per noſtrum B quam V exprimere maluerit, atque pro Weſſelo Baſſelum, ac mox Baſilium cœperit vocare. Quamvis vix videatur veriſimile aut in Græcia unquam fuiſſe Weſſelum, aut in ea familiariter uſum fuiſſe Beſſarione: cum enim hic teſte Jovio jam anno 1434. in Italia vixerit, atque anno 1439. ab Eugenio Papa creatus ſit Cardinalis, debuerit Weſſelus ante annum XV. ætatis in Græciam ad Beſſarionem abiiſſe: quod a vero abhorret. A little farther he brings in Weſſelus boaſting of his Travels in Greece: (d) In diſputationibus Theologicis magnos titulos Doctorum contemnebat, ſolis Divinis literis firmiter adhærens. Quare ſiquis forte inter diſputandum, ut fieri ſolet, ei objiceret, hoc dicit Doctor Sanctus; hoc Seraphicus &c. ipſe reſpondere ſolebat; Thomas fuit Doctor, quid tum poſtea? Et ego Doctor ſum. Thomas vix latine intellexit, & unilinguis fuit. Ego trium principalium linguarum mediocrem peritiam aſſecutus ſum. Thomas vix umbram Ariſtotelicam vidit: Ego Ariſtotelem Græcum IN IPSA GRÆCIA DIDICI. But in the ſame Page he looks upon this Voyage as a Fiction: (e) Poſtea in Græciam abiiſſe creditur; at ſi quis cogitet eo tempore non ſolum literas in Græcia jacuiſſe, ſed totam quoque regionem bello arſiſſe, & hoc confictum fuiſſe cognoſcet. Id de Petro de Aliaco quoque relatum eſt, quod Græce exacte ſciret, per decennium in Græcia vixiſſe; quamvis certum ſit nunquam Italiâ exceſſiſſe. Let us alſo take a view of his reflection on Weſſelus's Anſwer to a Scholar, who put a queſtion to him: Stay till I return from Egypt a ſecond time, when your difficulty ſhall be ſolved. My Author imagines that by Egypt he myſtically meant Rome (f). In Ægyptum quoque profectus creditur Weſſelus noſter, perſuaſus omnes libros Solomonis, & totam illam glorioſam Bibliothecam Judæorum ibi adhuc ſervari: ſed reverſus ſolebat dicere; fruſtra profectionem abſolvi. Judæi enim totam bibliothecam ſuam perdere maluerunt, quam legere quod confiteri noluerunt. Quamvis ego ratione habitâ belli, quo eo tempore totus Oriens flagrabat, exiſtimarim Weſſelum nunquam profectionem in Ægyptum inſtituiſſe, ſed intellexiſſe Ægyptum myſticam, ſive Romanam, juxta ſtylum Sp. Sancti, atque Cantero ſignificare voluiſſe, ſe nunquam Romam rediturum eſſe. Joannes Canterus, quem ipſe inſtituerat, & præter alia artem Raimundi Lullii eum docuerat, aliquando curioſiorem quæſtionem ei propoſuit: ad quem Weſſelus: Expecta donec ſecundò ex Ægypto rediero: tunc reſpondebo tibi; deridens curioſitatem Canteri. All this ſerves to ſhew us that the life of Weſſelus is little known, and that ſeveral falſities are reported concerning this Illuſtrious Man. A Modern Author aſſures us that he went to the River Euphrates on purpoſe to ſee Ezekiel's Tomb, and the Ancient Library

of

(c) Ibid. pag. 12.

(d) Ibid. pag. 14.

(e) Ibid. pag. 12.

(f) Ibid. pag. 21.

was induced to it in expectation of going to Basil (E) at the time of the Council, where he did not doubt but his Master would be present. And his hopes were not vain. For he saw that Council, and made himself known to the Learned Men; he was also consulted, and admired by several publick disputes. He returned to Paris with Francis della Rovere, his Patron, and some Authors say he was persecuted even to (F) Banishment. His Master being created Pope under the Name of Sixtus IV. continued his favour to him, and offered him all sorts of Preferments; but he only asked a Copy of the Bible (G) in Hebrew and Greek, which he obtained. He left Rome and returned into his Native Country, where he got the affection and esteem of all Men. He died at Groningen on the 4th of October in 1489. He was perplexed with some doubts concerning the Christian Religion (H) during his last sickness, but they at last entirely vanished of the Jews an evident sign of the contagious Evil which perpetuates Falsities. Let us hear this Modern (a) "The Rabbi Benjamin maintains that "the Prophet Ezekiel's Tomb on the River Euphrates, and the Library of the first and second "Temple were to be seen in his time, nevertheless the Sieur Wessel of Groningen and many "other great Men, who went to that Country on "purpose to see that Tomb and that Library, have "unanimously reported that neither of them were to "be found. I went thither in vain, says the "Sieur Wessel, since the Jews have rather chosen to "lose all their Books, than to read what they will "not confess.

---

(E) In expectation of going to Basil at the time of the Council.] The Author, whom I have abridged in the Text of this Article, ought to be censured here. He saith that Wesselus having intrigued for the Formalists in their disputes with the Realists and Nominalists, at last sided with the Nominalists. These things happened, continues he, at the time of the Council of Basil, when Wesselus was already become a Domestick to Pope Nicolas V. by the Recommendation of Francis della Rovere General of the Cordeliers, who was afterwards, Sixtus IV. and who founded the Vatican Library. (b) Erant hæc sub id tempus, quo Concilium Basileense celebrabatur. Ipse autem jam pervenerat propter celeberrimam famam & incredibilem eruditionem in omni genere disciplinarum & artium in familiam Nicolai V. Pontificis Maximi, operâ Francisci a Ruvere, Generalis ministri Fratrum Minorum, qui postea Papa creatus Sixtus IV. vocatus est, primusque fundamenta jecit celebratissimæ illius Bibliothecæ, quæ a loco vulgo Vaticana vocatur ——— (c) ——— in qua (familia Fr. a Ruvere) multa digna & indigna, quædam etiam pia, sed pleraque impia vidit & expertus est. Obduruit tamen, ut per illum in notitiam omnium doctorum virorum magis magisque perveniret, & liberius sine periculo disputare posset, simulque nancisci liberam occasionem admonendi hominis de vitandis idololatricis superstitionibus & apertis obscœnitatibus monasticis: maximè verò, ut via aperiretur, quâ pervenire posset in Synodum Basileensem, in quam sciebat Franciscum, utpote totius Ordinis Supremum, vocatum iri, quod & contigit. Nam paulò post eò profectus est, & operâ Domini sui in Doctissimi cujusque notitiam pervenit, & ad multa consilia adhibitus est, & publicè aliquoties auditus disputare cum summa omnium admiratione. There are several mistakes contained in these Words. I. The Council of Basil began in the Year 1431. and ended properly speaking in 1443. and therefore since the Author whom I am censuring supposes 1419 to be the Year of Wesselus his Birth, he cannot with any Colour of Reason say that this Doctor was very much admired at Basil during the Session of that Council. Observe that according to him, Wesselus's Journey to Basil was posterior to his long residence at Cologne, to his Journey to Heidelberg, to his return to Cologne, to his Journey to Louvain, as well as to Paris, to all his Intrigues in Favour of the Formalists against the Realists, and lastly to his turning Nominalist. If you should suppose that our Wesselus was not at Basil before the concluding Year of the Council, it were still true mention'd that he had done what I have just now before the Age of 24 Years; which cannot be said without a great absurdity, and nothing can be more false. II. Nicolas the fifth was not elected Pope before 1447. and consequently was not in the Pontifical Chair, during the Session of the Council of Basil. That Pope (d) is said to be the Founder of the Vatican Library. It is true that others ascribe the Glory of that Foundation to Sixtus IV. But it not being impossible that both may be in the right in several respects, I do not charge what our Author says on that head as a Fault. III. It is false that Francis della Rovere sate in the Council of Basil as General of the Cordeliers. He was Born in 1414. He run through his course of study by the Age of 22. and taught afterwards publickly for several Years before he was made Assistant to the General of his Order, who was succeeded by three Generals before Francis della Rovere attained to that dignity (e). Whence it plainly appears that it is impossible he should have been possessed of that Post during the Session of the Council of Basil, the conclusion of which happened in 1441. or as others will have it in 1443.

(F) That he was persecuted even to Banishment.] This particular is very uncertain: Hardenbergius declares that he never heard any thing of it from any of Wesselus's acquaintance. (f) Cum Domino suo Francisco, Generali ministro, reversus est Lutetiam ubi mala expertus est, multa etiam passus, ita ut quidam scribant, illum Scholâ aut Urbe pulsum esse propter reprehensas superstitiones: quod tamen Hardenbergius a nemine unquam sibi auditum eorum ait, qui cum illo domesticè versati sunt. Et certum est, illum plus minus sedecim annos Parisiis versatum esse, & cum Domino suo, jam in Papam electo, unà Romam profectum. Unde non videtur verisimile, Papam & eundem Monachum & quidem Minoritanum monachum, passurum eum fuisse, si a Scholâ Theologica Parisiensi proscriptus fuisset antea. Fieri potuit, quod postea illuc reversus pulsus sit. Observe that the Edict of Lewis XI. against the Nominalists is dated (g) the 1. of March 1473. Wherefore if it was true that Wesselus had been Assistant to John Bouchart (h) Bishop of Avranches in the Preliminaries of that Edict, he would have been a very considerable Man in France, even during the Papacy of Sixtus IV.

(G) He only asked a Copy of the Bible.] The Pope thinking this a very Ridiculous request, replyed, why don't you rather ask a Miter or something like it? Because I have no need of any such thing answered Wesselus. He chose the good part, but he exposed himself to the railleries of the Worldlings. (i) Respondit Sixtus; Hæc nobis curæ erunt, tu pro te aliquid pete. Rogo ergo, inquit Wesselus, ut mihi detis ex Bibliotheca Vaticana Græca & Hebræa Biblia. Ea, inquit Sixtus, tibi dabuntur: Sed tu stulte, quare non petis Episcopatum aliquem aut simile quidpiam? Respondit Wesselus, quia iis non indigeo. Hæc ipsa Ebræa Biblia diu hæserunt Groningæ, apud virgines Spirituales, eorumque adhuc hodie quædam fragmina supersunt. Others say that it was Nicolas V. of whom he asked this Present. (k) Tantò eum promovendarum litterarum Hebraicarum studio flagrasse accepimus, ut, cùm Romam profectus Nicolao Pontifici gratissimus esset, isque amplissima Wesselo munera offerret, his omnibus repudiatis unicum modò petierit & obtinuerit, Biblia Hebræa MSS. sibi ut liceret e Bibliotheca Vaticana in Belgium asportare.

(H) With some doubts concerning the Christian Religion.] These sorts of doubts more rarely occur in a Death-Bed than in the Vigour of Youth. Wherefore

(a) [illegible]

(b) Vita Wesseli pag. 17.

(c) That is wanting here is to be found above in the Remark B.

(d) See Father Jacob, Traité des bibliothèques pag. 24. Lomeier, de bibliothecis pag. 291. & seq.

(e) Taken from a Manuscript Memorial imparted by a Person whom I caused to be consulted.

(f) Vita Wesseli inter vitas Profess. Groning. pag. 17.

(g) See Naudé ubi supra pag. 223.

(h) See Naudé's Words in the Remark B.

(i) Vita Wesseli ubi supra pag. 18. This is mention'd as a thing which Wesselus had frequently related.

(k) Valer. Andreas bibl. Belg. pag. 349.

the Originals, and there found many difficulties and Arguments by ſtarting of which he puzzled and ſurprized his Maſters. Beſides he was by no means ſatisfied with their Anſwers, * that Ariſtotle, Saint Thomas, and the Seraphick Doctor, &c. had ſaid this or that; and becauſe he applyed himſelf much to the ſtudy of the Platoniſk Philoſophy, he thereby fell into a Contempt of that of Ariſtotle, which rendred him very diſagreeable to the Scholaſtick Profeſſors. He frequently croſſed the Rhine, to go to the Monaſtery of || Duytz, in order to Read the Works of the Abbot Rupert, of whom he was a great admirer. He was urged to go to Heidelberg, to Read Divinity Lectures there, and followed that Advice; but the Directors of the Univerſity alledged that he was uncapable of the Divinity Profeſſor's Chair, by Reaſon that he was not yet promoted to the (C) Degree of Doctor; and when he requeſted that Degree, he was anſwered that the Canons did not allow the Admiſſion of Lay-Men to that Academical degree. So that being reſolved againſt the taking of Orders, he contented himſelf with Reading Philoſophical Lectures: After which he returned to Cologne, from whence he went to Louvain, and having ſpent ſome time in hearing the Lectures of the Theological Profeſſors there, he went to Paris. And the Philoſophical Controverſies being then very hot betwixt the Realiſts, Formaliſts, and Nominaliſts; he endeavoured to convert the Principal Heads of the Formaliſts, by bringing them over to the Sect of the Realiſts; and afterwards, he himſelf went over to the Formaliſts, and not finding that Sect more in the right than the other, he embraced the Opinions of the Nominaliſts. Some Authors ſay, that he travelled to Greece and the (D) Levant, in order to ſucceed the better in Learning the Greek and Hebrew Languages. However it be, the Reputation which he acquired, procured him the particular eſteem of Francis della Rovere, General of the Minor Fryers, in whoſe intereſt he engaged. And if he was thereby a Witneſs of ſeveral blamable Actions, amongſt other Motives he was

* See the Remark (B).

|| Situated over againſt Cologne. Rupert, who is call'd Abbas Tuitienſis, was Abbot of that Monaſtery.

---

ed Man hath given out that Weſſelus was a Cordelier, in the following Words. (a) Wherefore Lewis XI. commanded John Boucart Biſhop of Avranches to take care of this reform, who being aſſiſted by a Cordelier whoſe Name was Weſelus Gransfortius of Groningen, who by his Voyages in the Levant had acquired a perfect acquaintance with Ariſtotle and all the good Greek Authors in each Science, aſſembled all the Principal Heads, and Members of the Univerſity, and with their concurrence and good Advice, drew up and publiſhed an Edict againſt the Nominaliſts, which we ſhall inſert intire at the end of this Chapter, as a Monument not yet Printed, very Advantageous to our Lewis the XI.

(a) Naudé in his Additions to the Hiſtory of Lewis XI p. 193.

(C) That he was not yet promoted to the degree of Doctor.] This Objection furniſhes us with an invincible Refutation of the report of ſome Writers, that our Weſſelus acquired ſuch a vaſt ſtock of erudition in the Univerſity of Cologne, that he was made Doctor of Divinity, Law and Phyſick there. (b) Geldenhaurius refert magno & aſſiduo & vix credibili labore hoc eum adſecutum eſſe, ut non ſolum Theologicæ Majeſtatis lauream mereretur, ſed etiam Juriſconſultis & Medicis Doctoribus annumeraretur: adeoque ſummis in omnibus Facultatibus titulis fuit ornatus; ut vulgò quidem perhibetur. Mihi tamen vix veriſimile videtur. Si enim jam tum triplici laureâ inſignitus fuiſſet Weſſelus, quæ ratio fuerit, quod poſtea admiſſus non fuerit ab Heidelbergenſibus, nullam aliam ob cauſſam, quam quod titulo Doctoris diſtitueretur. Pro exaggeranda ergo Weſſeli viri incomparabilis eruditione hanc de tribus titulis fabulam, & plura alia, jactatam jam olim fuiſſe credo.

(b) Vita Weſſeli pag. 14.

(D) That he Travelled into Greece and the Levant.] We have ſeen Naudæus affirming it above. Others pretend that the Name of Baſilius given him by ſeveral Authors, was beſtowed upon him by Beſſarion. They tell us that Beſſarion coming acquainted with our Weſſelus in Greece, at firſt by changing the U into B called him Beſſelus, and afterwards Baſilius. The Author already cited rejects theſe Traditions, and doubts whether Weſſelus ever was in Greece. His Words are: (c) Hardenbergius pro Weſſelo Baſilium dictum ait, quod elegantiorum hominum auribus Weſſeli nomen nimis durum & veluti barbarum videretur: vel quod alterum quodammodo Baſilium magnum judicarent; vel quod Beſſarion Cardinalis Græcus, quo ibi amiciſſimo uſus, ſuum B per noſtrum B quam V exprimere maluerit, atque pro Weſſelo Beſſelum, ac mox Baſilium cœperit vocare. Quamvis vix videatur veriſimile aut in Græcia unquam fuiſſe Weſſelum, aut in ea familiariter uſum fuiſſe Beſſarione: cùm enim hic teſte Jovio jam anno 1434. in Italia vixerit, atque anno 1439. ab Eugenio Papa creatus ſit Cardinalis, debuerit Weſſelus ante annum XV. ætatis in Græciam ad Beſſarionem abiiſſe: quod a vero abhorret. A little farther he brings in Weſſelus boaſting of his Travels in Greece: (d) In diſputationibus Theologicis magnos titulos Doctorum contemnebat, ſolis Divinis literis firmiter adhærens. Quare ſiquis forte inter diſputandum, ut fieri ſolet, ei objiceret, hoc dicit Doctor Sanctus; hoc Seraphicus &c. ipſe reſpondere ſolebat: Thomas fuit Doctor, quid tum poſtea? Et ego Doctor ſum. Thomas vix latinè intellexit, & unilinguis fuit. Ego trium principalium linguarum mediocrem peritiam aſſecutus ſum. Thomas vix umbram Ariſtotelicam vidit: Ego Ariſtotelem Græcum IN IPSA GRÆCIA DIDICI. But in the ſame Page he looks upon this Voyage as a Fiction: (e) Poſtea in Græciam abiiſſe creditur; at ſi quis cogitet eo tempore non ſolum literas in Græcia jacuiſſe, ſed totam quoque regionem bello arſiſſe, & hoc confictum fuiſſe cognoſcet. Ita de Petro de Aliaco quoque relatum eſt, quod Græcè exactè ſciret, per decennium in Græcia vixiſſe; quamvis certum ſit nunquam Italiâ exceſſiſſe. Let us alſo take a view of his reflection on Weſſelus's Anſwer to a Scholar, who put a queſtion to him: Stay till I return from Egypt a ſecond time, when your difficulty ſhall be ſolved. My Author imagines that by Egypt he myſtically meant Rome (f). In Ægyptum quoque profectus creditur Weſſelus noſter, perſuaſus omnes libros Solomonis, & totam illam glorioſam Bibliothecam Judæorum ibi adhuc ſervari: ſed reverſus ſolebat dicere; fruſtra profectionem abſolvi. Judæi enim totam bibliothecam ſuam perdere maluerunt, quam legere quod confiteri noluerunt. Quamvis ego ratione habitâ belli, quo eo tempore totus Oriens flagrabat, exiſtimarim Weſſelum nunquam profectionem in Ægyptum inſtituiſſe, ſed intellexiſſe Egyptum myſticam, ſive Romanam, juxta ſtylum Sp. Sancti, atque Cantero ſignificare voluiſſe, ſe nunquam Romam rediturum eſſe. Joannes Canterus, quem ipſe inſtituerat, & præter alia artem Raimundi Lullii eum docuerat, aliquando curioſiorem quæſtionem ei propoſuit: ad quem Weſſelus: Expecta donec ſecundò ex Ægypto rediero: tunc reſpondebo tibi; deridens curioſitatem Canteri. All this ſerves to ſhew us that the life of Weſſelus is little known, and that ſeveral falſities are reported concerning this Illuſtrious Man. A Modern Author aſſures us that he went to the River Euphrates on purpoſe to ſee Ezekiel's Tomb, and the Ancient Library

of

(c) Ibid. pag. 12.

(d) Ibid. pag. 14, 15.

(e) Ibid. pag. 15.

(f) Ibid. pag. 22, 23.

was induced to it in expectation of going to Basil (E) at the time of the Council, where he did not doubt but his Master would be present. And his hopes were not vain. For he saw that Council, and made himself known to the Learned Men; he was also consulted, and admired in several publick Disputes. He returned to Rome with Francis della Rovere, his Patron, and some Authors say he was persecuted even to (F) Banishment. His Mecænas being elected Pope under the Name of Sixtus IV. continued his favour to him, and offered him all sorts of Preferments; but he only asked a Copy of the Bible (G) in Hebrew and Greek, which he obtained. He left Rome and returned into his Native Country, where he got the affection and esteem of all Men. He died at Groningen on the 4th of October in 1489. He was perplexed with some doubts concerning the Christian Religion (H) during his last sickness, but they at last entirely vanished of the Jews an evident sign of the contagious Evil which perpetuates Falsities. Let us hear this Modern (a) "The Rabbi Benjamin maintains that "the Prophet Ezekiel's Tomb on the River Euphrates, and the Library of the first and second "Temple were to be seen in his time, nevertheless the Sieur Wessel of Groningen and many "other great Men, who went to that Country on "purpose to see that Tomb and that Library, have "unanimously reported that neither of them were to "be found. I went thither in vain, says the "Sieur Wessel, since the Jews have rather chosen to "lose all their Books, than to read what they will "not confess.

(E) In expectation of going to Basil at the time of the Council.] The Author, whom I have abridged in the Text of this Article, ought to be censured here. He saith that Wesselus having intrigued for the Formalists in their disputes with the Realists and Nominalists, at last sided with the Nominalists. These things happened, continues he, at the time of the Council of Basil, when Wesselus was already become a Domestick to Pope Nicolas V. by the Recommendation of Francis della Rovere General of the Cordeliers, who was afterwards, Sixtus IV. and who founded the Vatican Library. (b) Erant hæc sub id tempus, quo Concilium Basileense celebrabatur. Ipse autem jam pervenerat propter celeberrimam famam & incredibilem eruditionem in omni genere disciplinarum & artium in familiam Nicolai V. Pontificis Maximi, operâ Francisci a Ruvere, Generalis ministri Fratrum Minorum, qui postea Papa creatus Sixtus IV. vocatus est, primusque fundamenta jecit celebratissimæ illius Bibliothecæ, quæ a loco vulgo Vaticana vocatur ——— (c) ——— in qua (familia Fr. a Ruvere) multa digna & indigna, quædam etiam pia, sed pleraque impia vidit & expertus est. Obduravit tamen, ut per illum in notitiam omnium doctorum virorum magis magisque perveniret, & liberius sine periculo disputare posset, simulque nancisci liberam occasionem admonendi hominis de vitandis idololatricis superstitionibus & apertis obscœnitatibus monasticis; maxime vero, ut via aperiretur, qua pervenire posset in Synodum Basileensem, in quam sciebat Franciscum, utpote totius Ordinis Supremum, vocatum iri, quod & contigit. Nam paulò post eò profectus est, & operâ Domini sui in Doctissimi cujusque notitiam pervenit, & ad multa consilia adhibitus est, & publice aliquoties auditus disputare cum summa omnium admiratione. There are several mistakes contained in these Words. I. The Council of Basil began in the Year 1431. and ended properly speaking in 1443. and therefore since the Author whom I am censuring supposes 1419 to be the Year of Wesselus his Birth, he cannot with any Colour of Reason say that this Doctor was very much admired at Basil during the Session of that Council. Observe that according to him, Wesselus's Journey to Basil was posterior to his long residence at Cologne, to his Journey to Heidelberg, to his return to Cologne, to his Journey to Louvain, as well as to Paris, to all his Intrigues in Favour of the Formalists against the Realists, and lastly to his turning Nominalist. If you should suppose that our Wesselus was not at Basil before the concluding Year of the Council, it were still true mention'd that he had done what I have just now before the Age of 24 Years; which cannot be said without a great absurdity, and nothing can be more false. II. Nicolas the fifth was not elected Pope before 1447. and consequently was not in the Pontifical Chair, during the Session of the Council of Basil. That Pope (d) is said to be the Founder of the Vatican Library. It is true that others ascribe the Glory of that Foundation to Sixtus IV. But it not being impossible that both may be in the right in several respects, I do not charge what our Author says on that head as a Fault. III. It is false that Francis della Rovere sate in the Council of Basil as General of the Cordeliers. He was Born in 1414. He run through his course of study by the Age of 22. and taught afterwards publickly for several Years before he was made Assistant to the General of his Order, who was succeeded by three Generals before Francis della Rovere attained to that dignity (e). Whence it plainly appears that it is impossible he should have been possessed of that Post during the Session of the Council of Basil, the conclusion of which happened in 1441. or as others will have it in 1443.

(F) That he was persecuted even to Banishment.] This particular is very uncertain: Hardenbergius declares that he never heard any thing of it from any of Wesselus's acquaintance. (f) Cum Domino suo Francisco, Generali ministro, reversus est Lutetiam ubi mala expertus est, multa etiam passus, ita ut quidam scribant, illum Scholâ aut Urbe pulsum esse propter reprehensas superstitiones: quod tamen Hardenbergius a nemine unquam sibi auditum eorum ait, qui cum illo domestice versati sunt. Et certum est, illum plus minus sedecim annos Parisiis versatum esse, & cum Domino suo, jam in Papam electo, una Romam profectum. Unde non videtur verisimile, Papam & eundem Monachum & quidem Minoritanum monachum, passurum eum fuisse, si a Scholâ Theologica Parisiensi proscriptus fuisset antea. Fieri potuit, quod postea illuc reversus pulsus sit. Observe that the Edict of Lewis XI. against the Nominalists is dated (g) the 1. of March 1473. Wherefore if it was true that Wesselus had been Assistant to John Bouchart (h) Bishop of Avranches in the Preliminaries of that Edict, he wou'd have been a very considerable Man in France, even during the Papacy of Sixtus IV.

(G) He only asked a Copy of the Bible.] The Pope thinking this a very Ridiculous request, replyed, why don't you rather ask a Miter or something like it? Because I have no need of any such thing answered Wesselus. He chose the good part, but he exposed himself to the railleries of the Worldlings. (i) Respondit Sixtus; Hæc nobis curæ erunt, tu pro te aliquid pete. Rogo ergo, inquit Wesselus, ut mihi detis ex Bibliotheca Vaticana Græca & Hebræa Biblia. Ea, inquit Sixtus, tibi dabuntur: Sed tu stulte, quare non petis Episcopatum aliquem aut simile quidpiam? Respondit Wesselus, quia tis non indigeo. Hæc ipsa Ebræa Biblia diu servarunt Groningæ, apud virgines Spirituales, eorumque adhuc hodie quædam fragmina supersunt. Others say that it was Nicolas V. of whom he asked this Present. (k) Tantò eum promovendarum litterarum Hebraicarum studio flagrasse accepimus, ut, cùm Romam profectus Nicolao Pontifici gratissimus esset, isque amplissima Wesselo munera offerret, his omnibus repudiatis unicum modò petierit & obtinuerit, Biblia Hebræa MSS. sibi ut liceret è Bibliotheca Vaticana in Belgium asportare.

(H) With some doubts concerning the Christian Religion.] These sorts of doubts more rarely occur in a Death-Bed than in the Vigour of Youth. Wherefore

(a) Ga[illegible] [illegible]

(b) Vita Wesseli pag. 19.

(c) This anonymus here is to be found shown in the Remark B.

(d) See Father Jacob, Traité des bibliotheques pag. 4. Lomeier, de bibliothecis pag. 96. & seq.

(e) Taken from a Manuscript Memorial imparted by a Person whom I caused to be consulted.

(f) Vita Wesseli inter viros Profess. Groning. pag. 17.

(g) See Naudé ubi supra pag. 223.

(h) See Naudé's Words in the Remark B.

(i) Vita Wesseli ubi supra pag. 18. This is mention'd as a thing which Wesselus had frequently related.

(k) Valer. Andreas bibl. Belg. pag. 349.

vaniſhed away §. It is beyond queſtion that his Opinions (I) were in ſeveral particulars oppoſite to thoſe of Rome, and he was not unjuſtly called Luther's Fore-runner. I muſt not omit in this place that he is cited under different Names (K). Part of his Writings are (L) loſt.

WESTPHALUS (JOHN) an imaginary perſon, who Moreri tells us was ſo Named becauſe Born in Weſtphalia. He adds, that he was a Lutheran Heretick, "Who about the Year 1533. began to Preach Abominable Erroneous Doctrines; particularly that the Holy Scripture doth not ſay that the Holy Ghoſt proceeds from the Son; that the Church hath erred, and ſeveral other Impoſtures worthy of Hell, from whence they proceeded." He cites Prateolus V. Weſt. Gautier in Chron. But we ſhall prove (A) all this to be meerly Chimerical. Not Wherefore for the rarity of the thing, I ſhall ſet down the whole Narration. (a) Rogatus in morbum, qui etiam vitæ ipſi finem attulit, cum amicus quidam inviſeret, atque valeret interrogaret: Reſpondit, ſe pro ſua ætate & morbi moleſtia utcunque valere; ſed unum admodum moleſtum ſibi eſſe, quod variis cogitationibus et argumentationibus circumactus de veritate Chriſtianæ religionis ſubdubitare inciperet. Miſertus ejus ille, ac hortari ægrum cœpit, ut omnes cogitationes ſuas in Chriſtum Servatorem unicum rejiceret. Sed cum hujuſmodi admonitionem et moleſtiam eſſe ſenſiſſet, triſtis tum abiit. Atque poſt unam vel alteram horam reverſum ad ſe cum Weſſelus vidiſſet, alacri animo, & quantum valetudo ſinebat exſultans dixit; Gratias ago Deo, omnes illæ vanæ diſputationes abierunt: & nihil ſcio, niſi Jeſum & hunc crucifixum. Et in hac confeſſione animam DEO reddidit.

(I) His Opinions were oppoſite to thoſe of Rome.] See the Catalogus teſtium veritatis, and conſult alſo le Myſtere d'Iniquité where you will find theſe Words: "(b) At the ſame time tho' ſomewhat younger lived Doctor Weſelus of Groningen, called the light of this World, who by one of his Epiſtles diſcovers that after the Inquiſitors had Condemned John de Weſalia, he expected that they would fall upon him, and ſaith that he defended his Opinions at Paris and Rome, which were oppoſite to ſeveral Articles of the Church of Rome; and that ſome even of the Court had approved of them: And it is plainly to be collected from his Writings that they were very little different from the Confeſſion of the Vaudois. Likewiſe in his Book concerning Subjects and Superiors, he aſſerts that the Pope may err, and that when he doth ſo he ought to be reſiſted; that by his Simony and ill Adminiſtration, he clearly enough diſcovers that he neither regards God, nor the Salvation of his Church; that his Commands are no farther Obligatory than they are conſiſtent with the Word of God; that his Excommunications are leſs to be feared than thoſe of any good and Learned Man: whence the Council of Conſtance regarded John Gerſon more than John XXIII. and good Men St. Bernard more than Pope Eugenius. His works are ſeverally Printed at Leipſick, Antwerp and Baſil." It is obſerved in his life that he had been overwhelmed by the Tempeſt which bore down John de Weſalia in 1479. if David of Burgundy Biſhop of Utrecht, his good Patron had not ſupported him. (c) Quibus (fratribus prædicatorii ordinis hæreticæ pravitatis inquiſitoribus) non minus quam coævus & amicus Joannes Weſalienſis jam anno 1479. ſuccubuiſſet, niſi Epiſcopi Ultrajectini Davidis de Burgundia (cui non quidem Medicus erat Weſſelus, ut multi perperam tradiderunt, ſed dilectus Civis) autoritas eum protexiſſet. To all theſe may be added the Words of Luther, which I have cited in the Article of Sixtus IV. and Mr. Seckendorf's Extracts (d) of Weſſel's Works.

(K) He is cited under different Names.] In the Collection of the Groningen Profeſſors, his life begins thus: Weſſelus Groningenſis——— diverſis alias & nominibus inſignitus, & elogiis celebratus. In Chronici Urſpergenſis Paralipomenis Magiſter Joannes Weſſelus Groningenſis nominatur. In libro memoriali templi Groningani quo ſepultus Weſſelus Hermanni, Phlantiko (qui ad annos plures fuit Archiater Davidis Burgundi Epiſcopi Ultrajectini) Weſſelus Goſvoerti, Alberto Hardenbergio Goeſvort, Gelenbauſio Granſfortius vocatur. Rodolphus Agricola in epiſtolis ad Reuchlinum, aliique, Baſilium vel Baſilium Phriſium eum inſigniunt. Quarum appellationum diverſitas, Friſiorum nominum non ignaro, facile cognoſcetur, quo fonte promanarit. Nempe Joannis nomen ei proprium ex ſacro baptiſmate videtur, Hermanni a patre, Weſſeli ab avi nominibus adſcitum, quod poſtremum in Græcia, (ut vulgo creditum) aut potius ſupra ſentium Græcorum lingua imbutus, ad ipſius ſonum vel ipſe inflexit, vel deinceps ab aliis admiſit, ut Baſilius diceretur (e)——— Goſvoetti autem ſeu Goeſfortii, aut Granſfortii cognomen, dialecto illius Weſtphalicæ hoc Germanicæ inferiorum videtur ſignans (Weſtphalis enim Goos vel Goes eſt, quæ Germanis olim teſte Plinio 10. 22. hodieque Ganſa) ſuſpicari liceat inde ei obveniſſe, quod majores forte ex vicina Weſtphalia (ut multæ aliæ honeſtæ hujus Urbis familiæ) huc commigraſſent, quum illud nomen villæ non procul Hamona, hodieque maneat. Cætera appellationes Patriam teſtentur.

(L) Part of the Writings are loſt.] (f) He made ſeveral Collections out of the Works of the Abbot Rupert, and ſeveral others, to which he added his own Reflections. And theſe Rhapſodies ſwelled to ſuch an unweildy Bulk under his Pen that he called them mare magnum. Several of them were preſerved in the Monaſtery of Mount Saint Agnes, but the ſending of the Manuſcript to ſeveral Learned Men of Holland and Zealand, occaſion'd the intire loſs of it. After the Death of Weſſelus (g) the Monks and ſome other Perſons burnt all the Manuſcripts which they found in his Cloſet. (h) And whatever eſcaped the Flames was Printed at Groningen in 1614. and at Amſterdam in 1617. Valerius Andreas (i) quotes theſe two Editions, but inſtead of telling us that the firſt was at Groningen, he ſaith it was at Arnheim. But poſſibly he might find Arnhemii in the Title of his Copy without the Book being ever Printed there, by Reaſon that it is Cuſtomary amongſt Bookſellers to allow a correſpondent, who buys of them a certain Number of Copies, to inſert his Name in the Title Page as well as he who Printed them. And it is probable that the Groningen Bookſeller allowed that of Arnheim this Liberty. This Cuſtom very frequently impoſes on the Bibliographers, and occaſions their unneceſſary multiplication of Editions.

I ought not to forget that ſeveral Tracts of our Weſſelus appeared in Print before the Compleat Edition of His Works in 1614. Some were publiſhed at Leipſick in 1522. with the Title of farrago rerum theologicarum, and a Preface by Martin Luther, and Reprinted at Baſil in 1523. by Adam Petri, &c.

(A) All this to be meerly Chimerical.] I cannot accuſe Mr. Moreri of having cited Prateolus falſely; for that Writer doth indeed (k) aver that John Weſtphalus ſeu de Weſtphalia ſuperiore, a German Doctor of Divinity, was very much infected with the Hereſy of Martin Luther, and that his Books were Burnt at Mentz in the time of Charles Vth, and of Pope Clement VII. about the Year 1533. He mentions 17 erroneous Tenets of the ſame Man, and then concludes with theſe Words: Hi ergo ſunt articuli, qui (authore Bernardo de Luxemburgo ſacrarum literarum profeſſore, Ordinis Prædicatorii, in ſuo Catalogo hæreticorum) per fratrem Gevardum de Elben inquiſitorem fidei, & patrem Jacobum Sprenger, doctores itidem ſacræ paginæ, ejuſdem Ordinis Prædicatorii, conventus Colonienſis, ex Joannis de Weſtphalia libris excerpti ſunt. He directs us

---

§ Taken from his life among thoſe of the Profeſſors of Groningen pag. 18. & ſeq.

(a) Vita Weſſeli ubi ſupra pag. 14.

(b) Du Pleſſis Mornai, Myſtere d'iniquité p. 569. See alſo pag. 572, 573.

(c) Vita Weſſeli ubi ſupra pag. 21, 22.

(d) Seckend. hiſt. Lutheran. lib. 1. p. 226. & ſeq.

(e) [illegible] the ſame [illegible] of the Remark D.

(f) Vita Weſſeli pag. [illegible]

(g) Ibid. pag. 17.

(h) Ibid. Conſult alſo Geſner's Bibliotheque.

(i) Val. Andr. bibl. Belg. pag. 849.

(k) In Catalogo hæret. voce Joannes Weſtphalus, pag. m. 239.

Not but that there was one John de WESTPHALIA; but he was a Printer, (Z) who ſettled at Louvain in the Year 1475.

WESTPHALUS (Joachim) a Lutheran Miniſter in the XVI Century, Born at (A) Hamburg in the year 1510. He was Teacher of the ſecond Claſs of St. John's College in that City; after which he was Miniſter of St. Catherine's Church there alſo from the year 1541. (B) to 1571; from which time to the 16th of January 1574, which was the Day of his death, he was Superintendant of the Churches. There being a very great Diſcord between the Miniſters of Hamburg, ſome of them being moderate, and the other rigid Lutherans; Weſtphalus was the moſt zealous of the latter Party †. He was violent (C) even to Brutality. The Lutherans themſelves own that he ſhewed (D) too great an Animoſity. CALVIN, when he wrote againſt him, ſufficiently adapted his Style * to that of his Adverſary; but it is ſaid that he did not reproch as to the Book whence he had this; which is the Catalogue of Hereticks compiled by Brother Bernard of Luxemburg, a Dominican Monk. But upon conſulting this Catalogue I found that Prateolus hath changed Joannes de Weſalia into Joannes de Weſphalia; for it is Joannes de Weſalia (a) ſuperiore, to whom Bernard of Luxemburg aſcribes the 17 Hereſies which Prateolus charges on Joannes Weſtphalus, ſeu de Weſtphalia ſuperiore. I cannot apprehend what ground Prateolus, or thoſe who have copied him, had for ſo many Alterations as they have made in Names and Times. The Dominican Monk obſerves that John de Weſalia's Books (b) were Burnt at Mentz during the Reign of the Emperor Frederick III. and mentions this Fact ſix Years at leaſt (c) before the Year 1521.

Mr. Moreri hath not been leſs faithful in his Citation of Father Gaultier; for it is certain that this Jeſuit (d) placed Johannes Weſtphalus amongſt the Hereticks of the XVI. Century, and made him a Lutheran, juridically convicted of ſeveral Errors, by his own Confeſſion, about the Year 1533. He cites Prateolus ex Bernardo Lutzemburgo. Thus we ſee how theſe Authors copy one another without taking the pains to look back ſo much as two ſteps. This Jeſuit ſtops at Prateolus, without ſo much as conſulting the Author whom he cites.

Mr. Moreri hath of his own head ventured to ſay, that his pretended John Weſtphalus was ſo named from his being of Weſtphalia. The two Authors whom he cites have not made this Obſervation, and I am ſure that he found it no where. Prateolus groundleſly believed that Weſtphalia was divided into higher and lower. But indeed we ought not to be ſurprized that Moreri fell into this Snare, ſince Theophilus Raynaud, tho' a Man of ſo much reading, alſo fell into it before him. He tells us on Prateolus his Authority, that John Weſtphalus the Lutheran was the only Perſon that ever doubted that JESUS CHRIST was nailed to the Croſs. (e) De hac (clavifixione) nemo dubitavit, præter unum quendam haud dubie cum ea effutiret, hilariorem, è Lutheri caula, Joannem Weſtphalum, ut ex eo refert Prateolus eo verbo artic. damnato 17. In which words are two Faults: 1. John Weſtphalus is an imaginary Perſon. 2. Suppoſe that he really had exiſted, and been a Lutheran, he would not have been either the only or the firſt Man who raiſed this doubt; for it was one of the Errors objected againſt John de Weſtphalia, in his proſecution for Hereſy in 1479. Item prædicavit publice in Ser. de paſſione Chriſti, crucifixerunt eum, quis ſcit an funiculo ipſum alligaverunt, aut clavis crucifixerunt. They are Bernard of Luxemburg's Words (f): And in the Examen Magiſtrale Doctoris Joannis de Weſalia, inſerted in the Faſciculus rerum expetendarum & fugiendarum of Orthuinus Gratius, we find the following words: (g) Viceſimo quinto (interrogatus) an prædicaverit publice populo dubium eſſe an Chriſtus fuiſſet funibus Cruci alligatus, aut clavo affixus. Fatetur ſe dixiſſe, quod non habeatur in Evangelio paſſionis an clavis ſit affixus, an funibus: Credit tamen quod clavis.

(Z) A Printer who ſettled at Louvain in the year 1475.] To which purpoſe let us examin theſe words of Gabriel Naudé: (h) The firſt that I know of, who Printed in the Low-Countries was Joannes de Weſtphalia, who ſettled at Louvain, and began the exerciſe of this Art on Ariſtotle's Ethicks. Revius' Hiſtory of Deventer affords nothing which really amounts to a Refutation of this; for tho' we find there (i) that Richard Paſroed, or Paſraet, a Native of Cologne, and Printer at Deventer, Publiſhed there the Doctrinale altum, ſeu liber parabolarum Alani metrice deſcriptus in 1449. one cannot believe it, conſidering that this Book is the 12th in Revius's Catalogue of the Books Printed by Paſroed. The two firſt are without any date: The third is dated in 1477. The Fourth, which is the Golden Legend, in 1479. and the following to the 11th are dated from 1480 to 1494. How then is it probable that the Twelfth ſhould be of 1449? it is doubtleſs a Typographical Error.

(A) Born at Hamburg.] Thoſe who ſay that he was called Weſtphalus becauſe a Native of Weſtphalia, are miſtaken. Mr. Moreri is guilty of this Error; which he copied from Mr. Teiſſier, (k) who had it from a German Lutheran, I mean Quenſtedt, as appears by his Citation (l). Mr. Mollerus (m) when he cenſures Mr. Teiſſier for this Fault, ſpares Quenſtedt.

(B) From the Year 1541.] Mr. Seckendorf (n) tells us that Weſtphalus was invited from Wittemberg to Hamburg in 1542. in order to ſucceed Kempius in the Paſtoral office of St. Catherine's Church, and that afterwards he ſucceeded Æpinus in the office of Superintendant. Mr. Mollerus (o) who places the beginning of his Miniſtry in 1541. and of his Superintendency in 1571, ſeems the more credible Author. How could he then ſucceed Æpinus, who died (p) in 1553?

(C) Violent even to Brutality.] The Divines of the Confeſſion of Geneva beſtowed that Encomium upon him. One of them ſaith that he was fitter to dreſs Beaſts of Burthen, than to adminiſter the Sacraments. " (q) H. Bullingerus hominem illum vocat vere Weſtphalum, id eſt, craſſum. Theod. autem Bibliander, hominem ineptum & importunum, qui rectius in agris farragines jumentis colligeret ac miſceret, quam ſacroſancta myſteria unionis ac fidei Chriſtianæ, & ſalutis humanæ ſacramenta tractaret. "] Bibliander alludes to a Book which Weſtphalus publiſhed in 1552, entitled, Farrago Confuſanearum & inter ſe diſſidentium de S. Cœna opinionum, ex Sacramentariorum libris congeſta. It is thought that this Book kindled again the Sacramentary War, which ſeemed extinct, ſince the death of Luther. (r) Belli Euchariſtici Lutheri obitu ſopiti acrius denuo inſtaurandi claſſicum A. 1552. ipſum ceciniſſe, edita adverſus Calvinum Farragine confuſanearum &c. è Pontificiis (1) Laur. Surius, ex Calvinianis (2) J. Sleidanus, (3) J. Sturmius, (4) Caſp. Peucerus, (5) Lud. Lavaterus, & (6) Rud. Hoſpinianus uno ore clamitant. The Author whom I quote, (s) relates what Altingius and Hoornbeeck have ſaid of Weſtphalus. " Ab Henr. Altingo Lutheranis, accenſetur immoderatis, furioſis & blaſphemis, ab Hoornbeckio autem animi inflati & αὐτογνώμονος inſimulatur. "

(D) The Lutherans themſelves own that he ſhewed too

Lutzemburgus in Catal. hæreticorum. (c) I expreſs my ſelf thus, becauſe I have only ſeen the Third Edition of his Book, which is that of the Year 1527. I believe he ſpeaks of John de Weſalia in the fore-going Editions; but I am not ſure (d) In Tabula Chronographica, pag. m. 757. (e) Th. Raynaud. de Stigmat. ſect. 1. cap. 5. pag. m. 108. (f) Ubi ſupra. (g) Faſcic. rerum expetendarum & fugiendarum pag. 330.

(h) [illegible] ent. pag. 114.

(i) Addit. to the Hiſt. extracted out of Thuanus, Part. 1. p. 54.

(l) Ex quinct. Quenſt. de patr. illuſtr. viror.

(m) Moller. Iſagog. ad hiſtor. Cherſoneſ. Cimbricæ, parte 3. pag. 579.

(n) Hiſtor. Lutheran. lib. 1. pag. 245. litera i.

(o) Ubi ſupra p. 579.

(p) Id. ib.

(q) Id. ib. pag. 581. He quotes the 54. and 23. Letters of Gabema's Collection. Upon examination, I find his Quotation to be right.

(r) Mollerus ibid. pag. 580.

(s) In Comm. hiſtorico ad an. 1552. pag. 604.

(2) Lib. 26. Com. de ſtatu relig. & reip. p. m. 780.

(3) In Anti-Pappo ſecundo, pag. 128, 129, 180. & in Anti-Pappo tertio, pag. 241. 242. (4) In Narrat. hiſtorica Controv. Sacramentariæ, apud Schluſſelb. l. 2. Theol. Calv. p. m. 192, 193. (5) In Hiſt. Sacram. pag. 119. (6) In Dedic. Concordiæ diſcordis. (t) Moller. ib. p. 581.

proach him with the Character of a (E) Drunkard. Beza was ſurprized, and not without reaſon, that Weſtphalus publiſhed in Print, that Calvin's Mother was a (F) Prieſt's Concubine. He ſtrenuouſly refuted this Calumny. What is ſaid by ſome that this Lutheran Doctor was the Inventer of the Ubiquitarian (G) Opinion, is not true. In order to judge of his Character, it is ſufficient to remember, ſo great an Animoſity.] I ſhall quote Mr. Mollerus. (3) Theologus celebris quidem, ſed famam (a) Joach. Weſtphali, permagni nominis Adverſarios, quos ſcriptis provocabat, adeptus. Zelus illius, & ſummus, in impugnandis Calvinianis, Crypto-Calvinianis, Synergiſtis, Adiaphoriſtis, Majoriſtis, atque Heterodoxis aliis, vehementia, Theologis etiam aliquot genuinè Lutheranis, & in his Sim. Sulcero, Prof. Baſilienſi (5), in exceſſu viſa peccare, plurimis in Germania controverſiis ſacris vel anſam præbuit, vel fomitem ſuppeditavit.

(E) That he did not reproach him with the Character of a Drunkard.] The proof of which, that I am about to alledge, informs us that Weſtphalus accuſed Calvin of Gluttony. (b) Uſus eſt aliquoties Calvinus, circa eum edendi modum oppugnans ab abſurdo, vocabulo voracitatis & ingurgitationis. Quid tu ad hæc, Weſtphale? Admodum, inquit, religioſe & reverenter loquitur Calvinus, ex crudo ſuo ſtomacho eructans voracitatem & ingurgitationem. Nempe Calvinum bene noſti, ut video: quem tota hæc civitas teſtari poteſt tam parvam ſui rationem habere in cibo & potu, ut in eo interdum amicis non leviter peccare videatur. Quum te de temulentia reprehenſum a Calvino ægre patereris, reſpondit Calvinus id quod res eſt, ſeſe de ſpiritus temulentia loquutum: & cur ad iſtam verborum aſperitatem adductus eſſet copioſe declaravit. But we ſhall ſee what Calvin himſelf offered in anſwer to this, and I'll give the Hiſtory of this diſpute.

There was, for ſome time, a miſunderſtanding betwixt the Church of Zurich and Calvin, about the Doctrine of the Euchariſt; but it ceaſed in the year 1549. and both ſides agreed on a treaty of Peace, which contained 26 Articles, and was called conſenſio mutua in re ſacramentaria (c). The rigid Lutherans were offended at this Agreement, and publiſh'd ſeveral Libels againſt it: And it was on this occaſion that Weſtphalus wrote the Book, whoſe Title I have mention'd in the Remark C. Calvin thought himſelf obliged to ſilence all theſe Clamours, by publiſhing an Expoſition of his Concordate. Which he did in the Year 1554, by a little Tract in which he fell very ſeverely upon Weſtphalus, without naming him. But he did not keep within that compaſs two years after, when he refuted that Adverſary's (d) Anſwer, nor in 1557, when he inſcribed another Treatiſe to him; for he named him in both theſe Books. Afterwards he gave him up to his reprobate ſenſe, and threatned him with it in the Title of the laſt Book (e). But now let us examin the grounds of the Complaint concerning Drunkenneſs. Indocti & temulenti homines dum Sacramentarium bellum inſtaurant, primis librorum paginis audacter jactant pro tota Saxonia & vicinis regionibus ſe pugnare. This period of (f) Calvin induced Weſtphalus to complain, that he in particular and the Germans, were charged with Drunkenneſs. To which Calvin anſwer'd, that he did not in the leaſt ſpeak of a vinous ebriety, but of another metaphorical Drunkenneſs mention'd by the Prophet Iſaiah. (g) Quia fortè verius eſt, ne ſi ſolus ipſe læſus foret, paucos inveniret privati doloris ſocios, totam gentem ſuam ad commune prælium incitat, ac ſi Germanis omnibus vulgatum temulentiæ probrum a me objectum foret. Si ita eſſet, ne ipſe quidem mihi vellem ignoſci. Sed notanda eſt quam mox addit probatio. Crimine hoc, inquit, ſemel atque iterum me perſtringit. Quaſi vero ſi bibulus eſt, ſine compotoribus inebriari nequeat. Quamquam ne hic de nihilo anxius ſit, ſciat non indictum fuiſſe prælium ſuis poculis, ſciat de alia temulentia me loquutum eſſe, quam Propheta Iſaias dicit non eſſe a vino. He renew'd the ſame Apology at the end of his laſt Admonition. (h) Weſtphalum dixiſſe hominem temulentum vocare contigerat, non ut bibacitatem illi objicerem, ſicuti interpretatur [illegible] ſed potius Prophetice ebrium eſſe dixi, & non a vino, qui ſtupore aut vertigine correpti, [illegible] Quod privatim de uno homine dictum eſt, ad totam Gentem trahit [illegible] I am apt to think that this Explanation did not ſatisfy Weſtphalus; and indeed it leaves behind it ſeveral great Suſpicions. Beſides it is very viſible that Calvin expreſſes himſelf in ſuch Words as ſhew that he was not ſorry it ſhould be believed that he juſtly charged this Vice on his Adverſary, tho' he proteſts that he meant another Vice. He doth not deny the having treated him roughly, but affirms that his vehemency is reaſonable, and juſtifies himſelf by the Example of God. (i) Sicubi vehementius in eum invectus, pro veſtra prudentia & æquitate, quibus me ſtimulis adegerit expendite ——— Quid mihi hic reſiduum fuit, niſi ut malo nodo aptarem durum cuneum, ne ſibi in ſua vecordia nimis placeret? Equidem ſi homines illos mollire poſſe ſpes eſſet, non recuſarem demiſſus ac ſupplex Eccleſiæ pacem redimere. Sed quo feratur ipſorum violentia, omnibus ſatis notum eſt. Itaque meam in iſta duritie tractanda auſteritatem (1) Dei quoque exemplum excuſat, qui ſe pronuntiat non modo inclementius acturum cum præfractis, ſed contra eos præfractum fore. That is according to the French Edition of that Tract of Calvin. “(i) If in ſome places I have dealt too roughly with him and expreſſed my ſelf in too ſharp Terms, be pleaſed according to your prudence and equitable Diſcretion to conſider what ſharp Weapons he hath pointed againſt me, to conſtrain me to it ——— What cou'd I do, in this caſe, but act according to the Proverb, which preſcribes a ſevere Driver for a Headſtrong Aſs, that he might not grow too fond of his Fury? Indeed if there were any hopes of mollifying theſe Men, I would not refuſe to make humble Supplications to them, in order to Redeem the Peace of the Church. But it appears to all Men whither their extravagant Impetuoſity tends. So that if I have been very ſevere in the handling of ſuch a ſtrange obſtinate People, I am excuſed by the Example of God himſelf, who declares not only that he will treat the froward without tenderneſs, but ſhew himſelf froward to them.”

(F) Was a Prieſt's Concubine.] A little after the Words of Theodorus Beza, which I have already cited, we find theſe. Quid amplius? Ingerit, inquit, Calvinus voces auribus & oculis, meretricibus convenientes: quas fortaſſe didicit a matre ſua Pontificii ſacrificuli concubina. Itane verò nugator? honeſtiſſimam matronam jam olim defunctam, & ejus viri matrem, cui quantum debeat Chriſtiana Eccleſia tot ſuſcepti labores teſtantur, & gratioribus futuris poſteris (ut confido) teſtabuntur, tuis vere meretriciis probris aſſicere maluiſti quam animo tuo morem non gerere? Sed continebo ipſe me, & quid nos potius quam quid te deceat, ſpectabo. Calvinum & honeſto loco & integerrima famæ parentibus natum, & in nobiliſſima familia a pueritia educatum ſi teſtibus probare oporteret, nos non unum aliquem teſtem, ſed integram civitatem Noviodunenſem citare poſſumus. Itaque de hoc refutando convitio minime laboramus.

(G) Was the inventor of the Ubiquitarian Opinion.] George Hornius affirms it, but Mr. Mollerus refutes it by the Teſtimony of Hoſpinian, who acknowledges that Weſtphalus and Heſhuſius, otherwiſe good Lutherans, oppoſed the new Opinion concerning the Ubiquity which Brentius and Smidelin Advanced (k). The Biſhop of Meaux is therefore miſtaken when in his Hiſtoire des Variations (l) under the Year 1558 he ſaith that the great diſpute at that time

(4) Ibid. pag. 179.
(5) In præfationibus de orbe habitabili pag. 16.

(a) In Epiſt. ad Joh. Marbachium A. 1558. ſcripta v. Joh. Fechtii ſupplem. H. E. Sec. XVI. P. II. n. 63. p. 82.

(b) Beza, de Cœna Domini, contra Weſtphalum, Oper. t. 1. p. 257.

(c) See the Volume of Calvin's Tracts, p. m. 752.

(d) That Refutation is intitl'd, Secunda defenſio piæ & orthodoxæ de Sacramentis fidei, adverſus Joachimi Weſtphali calumnias.

(e) Ultima admonitio Joannis Calvini ad Joachimum Weſtphalum, cui niſi obtemperet, eo modo poſthac habendus erit, quo pertinaces hæreticos haberi jubet Paulus.

(f) It is at pag. 756. of the Vol. of his Tracts.

(g) Calvin 2. Defenſ. de Sacramentis, pag. 768. Tractat. Theolog.

her, that he ridiculed (H) all the Proteſtant Martyrs who did not with the Lutherans believe Impanation. The Arguments, which he once uſed againſt the Miniſters of the Geneva Confeſſion, were very (I) ridiculous.

WICELIUS (George) a pretty good Divine of the XVI Century, was born at Fuld in 1501. He entred young into a Monaſtery †, but was not there long, before he not only renounced the Monaſtical life, but the Roman Catholick Religion, and turned Lutheran. He had not the gift of perſeverance, for he returned to the Romiſh Communion. He was not able to digeſt the Diviſions which he ſaw ſpring up amongſt the Reformers, and the perſonal Perſecutions raiſed againſt him: But what ſide ſoever he was of, he never believed that Marriage ought to be forbidden to * Prieſts. We may then eaſily imagin that he married whilſt he was a Proteſtant; but it is falſe that he had ſucceſſively (A) ſeveral Wives. He contented himſelf with his firſt Marriage, tho' he was perſuaded ‖ that it was impoſſible to live or die well in Celibacy; and it ſeems, that even when a Lutheran, he diſliked Bigamy. He embraced the Proteſtant Religion at the age of Thirty, (B) or Thirty one Years, and became Miniſter of a Church, from which he ſays that he was ſeparated by a cruel Perſecution. Juſtus Jonas was one of his moſt violent Antagoniſts; but Luther on the contrary wrote in his favour, and removed the Storms raiſed againſt him by ſeveral a Accuſations of State time amongſt the Lutherans was concerning the Ubiquity, which Weſtphalus, James Andrew Smidelin, David Chytræus and others eſtabliſhed with all their might.

(H) He ridiculed all the Proteſtant Martyrs who.] Beza laſhes him on this Account with the utmoſt Severity. (a) Ut tuam pietatem orbi teſtere, in martyres jocare qui apud Gallos & alias gentes quotidie crudeliſſimam & ignominioſiſſimam mortem perpetiuntur. Extant enim eorum aliquot confeſſiones, quæ tibi non ſatisfaciunt. Atqui ut tibi non ſatisfaciant, an ideo digni erant quibus etiam mortuis inſultares? Nam certe pro Chriſti nomine ingreſſi ſunt flammas, quas haud ſatis ſcio an tu vel uno digito velles attingere. Quod ſi negotium Cœnæ Domini nonniſi ex parte cognoverunt (demus enim id Weſtphalo, ac ne nobis quidem ſingula eorum dicta ac facta ſatisfaciunt) an idcirco non fuerunt victimæ Deo gratæ, quum ad extremum uſque halitum omnes idolomanias ſint execrati, & Chriſtum ut verum Filium Dei & unicum noſtrum per fidem σωτῆρα ſint amplexi? Compare the Article (b) Hutterus with this.

(I) The Arguments which he once uſed —— were very ridiculous.] Laſcus and Micronius, Miniſters of the Flemiſh Church at London, being forced to leave that Country, endeavoured to eſtabliſh themſelves and their Flock in the Territories of the King of Denmark; (c) but the Lutherans oppoſed it, and even for ſome time refuſed an amicable Conference with them, urging that it was wholly unneceſſary, ſince neither the King nor they had any ſcruples concerning the truth of the Doctrine eſtabliſhed in Denmark. But at laſt they condeſcended to a Conference, and urged that the Calviniſts rejected plain Texts of Scripture; for, ſaid they, what can be clearer than theſe words, this is my body? Beſides this they told them, you follow neither Luther nor the Saxon Churches, and are condemned by the Confeſſion of Augsburg; and in a word, you teach a Doctrine which is not conform to the prevailing Opinion of Denmark. They were anſwered, that the Word of God, and not what Luther taught, or the Kingdom of Denmark approved of, was the Rule of Faith. This and ſeveral other ſuch like Anſwers proved uſeleſs to the Flemiſh Refugees, and they were conſtrained to retire out of the Kingdom in the midſt of Winter (d). Micronius ſome time after conferred, at Hambourg, with Joachim Weſtphalus, who immediately urged the conſent of the Saxon Churches as an invincible Argument. They, ſaid he, have condemned Zwinglius's Opinion; it is therefore falſe, and ought to be rejected. Micronius replyed, that if the truth of an Opinion ought to be determined by the conſent of the Churches, the Papal Cauſe would be triumphant. Weſtphalus anſwered, that the Saxon Churches were the Church of God; and when the other urged that the true Church was not confined to any certain place, and that there was no Church but what might poſſibly err, as was allowed by Luther, he affirmed that the import of Luther's words was not that the Church of JESUS CHRIST might be miſtaken, but that the Popiſh Church might. Micronius continually inſiſted upon this Maxim, That the Holy Scripture is the ſole rule of Faith; which did not prevent Weſtphalus's anſwering him: It follows from your Arguments, that his Daniſh Majeſty, and the Senate of our City who have decreed againſt you, ſhould be guilty of a great fault: Conſider that you are condemned by a Diet of Augsburg (e). Si dubia adhuc eſſet noſtra doctrina, graviter peccaſſet ſenatus noſter, & sereniſſimus Daniæ Rex, qui adverſum vos decreta tulerunt.--Contra veſtram doctrinam Comitiis Auguſtanis pronunciatum eſt (f). Micronius (g) did not fail to reply, that by ſuch Arguments as theſe Popery would perfectly carry the Cauſe. We have here a proof of the natural Inclination of all Parties, to make uſe of the ſhort way of Power, and convert their Adverſaries Errors into State Crimes. Dare you charge the Magiſtracy of Hamburg, and the King of Denmark who have condemned you, with Injuſtice? If Weſtphalus had remembred that there are great numbers of Papiſts in the World, and had he but uſed his Reaſon a little, would he have talked at this rate?

(A) That he had ſucceſſively ſeveral Wives.] His Life inſerted in the 2d. Tome of the Faſciculus rerum expetendarum, confutes Cornelius Loos, who ſaid that Wicelius having loſt his firſt Wife, married a ſecond, then a third, and after that others. Adoleſcens Monaſticen amplectitur, a quo vitæ inſtituto mox reſiluit, uxorem duxit, qua defuncta, alteram, & hac, tertiam, & (ut ferunt) plures. Serarius accuſes him of having left the Lutherans on account of their Diviſions, and of having retained ſome of their Opinions, but more eſpecially thoſe relating to Marriage; that in order to remain a married Prieſt, he endeavoured to obtain Orders from a Biſhop of the Greek Church; that being willing to ſerve two Maſters, he was true to neither of them; that he was diſobedient to the Canons of the Latin Church, by uniting Marriage to the Prieſthood, and to thoſe of the Greek Communion, by marrying more than once. (h) Georgium Wicelium lego primis adoleſcentiæ annis ad monaſticum ſeſe ſtatum applicuiſſe: Sed poſtea carnis Lutherique philtris dementatum uxorem quæſiſſe; magnoque apud Lutheranos, propter aliquam eruditionis, linguarumque peritiæ opinionem, loco fuiſſe: Ab illis tamen cùm nova, neque cum Eccleſiaſtica antiquitatis norma ſatis conſentanea fingi ac refingi quotidie cerneret, variiſque illos & acerbis inter ſe opinionibus diſſidere, pedem retulit: ſed ita ut proprii neſcio quâ cerebri pertinacia ei quam par eſſet diutius glutinatiuſque adhæſerit, in uxoria præſertim re: cui ſervire ſimulque ſacerdos eſſe cùm vellet, dicitur Græcum neſcio ubi Epiſcopum, ut ab eo conſecraretur, quæſiſſe. Sicque eum quodam veluti probro & riſu Græcum audiebat Sacerdos. Ac ſellis ſedere duabus dum voluit, utraque decidit. Neque enim Latinus ſacerdos bonus fuit, qui ad nuptias tranſiit: Neque ſacerdos Græcus bonus, qui ad ſecundas & tertias, imò, ut quidam ferunt, etiam ad plures: Sed prole parum felici, ut Moguntiæ eſt notum.

(B) At the age of 30 or 31 Years.] Paul Freherus, in his Theatrum contradicts Thomas James in this particular; for we find there, that Wicelius went to ſtudy at Wittemberg, about the Year 1521. that afterwards he became the Leader of the Rebels in que pie vivere, neque bene mori, citra uxorem. Wicel. Conf. reſponſ. Joniæ, pag. [illegible] a Juſtus Jonas excitavit Principes adverſus eum, ſeditionario facto conjectus eſt in laqueum, neque longe fuit a laqueo præfocatore: ſed Lutherus pro eo ſcripſit.

---

(e) Taken from the ſame Letter of Voſſius, p. 50.

(f) Voſſius ib. col. 2.

(g) Similibus argumentis facile omnes vicerit Papa. Ib.

(h) Nic. Serarius in Moguntia, lib. 1. cap. 40. apud Miræum de Scriptor. ſæculi xvi. pag. 23

State Crimes. It is said that his return into the Pale of the Roman Church procured him, but very slowly the post he deserved. He was exposed to several Disgraces before he was so much as barely Beneficed; but at last he became Counsellor to the Emperor Ferdinand and Maximilian. His Principal Character was that of being earnestly desirous of a Re-union in the state of Christianity; to accomplish which, he would willingly have abolished several things (C) practised in the Church of Rome, tho', after his return to that Church, he continued in her Bosom till his Death. Cassander the Conciliator took his reconciling Spirit from our Wicelius. Masius, Ferus the Cordelier, and Bishop John Pflug who was for the Interim, were also his particular Friends. By which we may judge of his Inclinations, but much better by his Writings, his Via Regia, his Methodus Concordiæ, &c. He wrote a prodigious number of Books, most of which were in the German Language, and afterwards translated into Latin, and several times Printed. He died at Mentz in 1573, and was interred in St. Ignatius's Church. He left one Son, named (as well as himself) George, who published several Books: Wherefore to avoid confusion, the Father is distinguished by the addition Major, or Senior. This is what I thought my self obliged to extract out of the Life of † Wicelius, which is inserted in the Appendix to the ‖ Fasciculus rerum expetendarum. From whence I have taken the body of this Article and the Citations, without any correction, referring Criticisms to the Remarks. The Author of this Life was a very Learned Man; but give me leave to say that he might, and ought to have been much more exact in the writing of it.

WICKAM (William) Bishop of Winchester, born at Wickam in the County of Southampton in the year 1324. He laid the Grammatical foundation of his Studies at Winchester, learning besides, the Elements of Geometry, Arithmetick and Logick, as well as the French Tongue. After which he was sent to Oxford, where he became a sedulous Auditor of the Mathematical Lectures of Lewis Carletan, and of the Prælections of William Dorach, Professor of the Civil Law. He stayed six Years in that University, and had continued much longer, (being highly valued by the most Learned Men there) if his Patron Nicolas Wedal *, by King Edward III. then made Lord Lieutenant of the County of Southampton, had not obliged him to reside with him, in order to advise with, and make him his Secretary. For which Employ he could not have chosen a fitter Person, he being both in speaking and writing one of the most Polite Genius's of that Age. From this Post, within the compass of three Years, he was by William Edington, Bishop of Winchester, and Lord Treasurer of England, chosen to be his Secretary. King Edward observing him in that Prelate's Palace, could not help owning that he discover'd a Majestick Air in him, upon which, receiving a great Character of him from Nicolas Wedal, and Bishop Edington, he engaged him in his Service. Encouraged by this Wickam made his Court to this great Monarch with the utmost assiduity, and with equal address, acquitted himself of the Commissions entrusted to him: Besides, he answer'd so pertinently to several a Political Questions which the King put to him, that the Idea of his Merit which that Prince had conceived, daily increased. And understanding Geometry and Architecture, he was made Surveyor of the King's Buildings, to which Post was joined that of Grand Forester. It was he who had the direction of the Building of Windsor Castle, which King Edward order'd to be built in that Town, the Place of his Birth, where he had, at once, the Kings of France and Scotland his Prisoners. And being resolved to erect a magnificent Monument of his Victories, he preferred this to all other places: He caused all the Ancient Buildings to be demolished, and ordered a new and most magnificent Structure to be Erected. The intire care of this being reposed in Wickam, he acquitted himself of it with the utmost Honour, and took up but three Years to finish the whole. His Enemies gave so malicious a turn to an Inscription (A) which he placed in that Palace, that they exposed him to the King's Displeasure; but he soon remove that Storm, and made it contribute to the increase of his Interest with that Prince.

After

† There is an Edition of it (‖) Printed at London in 1690.

* He was Lord of the Village of Wickam.

a Quas ejus ingenium altius exploraret multas illi illustres quæstiones quæ statum ac summam rerum concernerent de bello suscipiendo vel deponendo, de conditionibus pacis ineundæ, de ærariis rationibus amplificandis, ac industria proponere solebat, quibus Wicamus extempore ita ornate & prudenter tum verbis tum sententiis respondisse fertur, ut Rex præsenti ejus ingenio & peracutis responsis mirifice oblectaretur. Histor. descript. vitæ Wicami. p. 22.

Thuringia; that he was taken and condemned to die, but that he obtained Mercy by the intercession of Pontanus, Chancellor of Saxony; that Luther setled him in the Ministry in a Village called Nimeck, near Wittemberg; that in 1531 he was imprisoned by Order of the Elector John Frederick, and by the advice of Melancthon, by reason that he opposed the Divinity of JESUS CHRIST; that not long after, he was Banished the Elector's Territories; that he (a) retired to Leipsick, where Duke George protected him; that not long after he turned Papist, and in 1534 wrote against Luther's Book de bonis Operibus; that after the death of that Duke, he was driven from Leipsick, spent the remainder of his Life at Mentz and Cologne, turning a bitter Enemy to the Lutherans, and that he died in 1563. As to the last particulars, Freherus's Theatrum wants correction; for the Appendix to the Fasciculus rerum expetendarum, affords incontestable Proofs, that Wicelius would have sacrificed several things to an accommodation with the Lutherans, and that he was still alive in 1564. And what is yet more, one of his Tracts inserted in this Appendix pag. 750, is dated on the 10th of August 1575. And yet pag. 787. Cornelius Loos is allowed to be in the right, in placing the death of Wicelius in 1573. (b) Molanus and (c) Serarius place his death in the same year 1573.

(a) Molanus ubi infra, saith, that he returned to the Romish Communion in 1532.

(C) Several things practised in the Church of Rome.] A Specimen of it extracted out of his Books, may be seen in the Appendix to Faciculus rerum expetendarum.

See also the 2d. Vol. (d) of John Wolfius's lectiones memorabiles. Wicelius's Letters Printed at Leipsick in 1537. contain as many Invectives against the Canonists and Scholastick Divines as the Lutherans. There is just reason to wonder (e) that the Inquisition did not fulminate against these works: This confirms what hath been said of him (f) that his Conduct was not uniform.

(A) So malicious a turn to an Inscription which he placed in that Palace.] The Words were, This

After his entring into Holy Orders, he was immediately preſented with ſeveral Rich Benefices by the Liberality of that Monarch, who not thinking theſe Donatives ſufficient, made him Principal Secretary of State, and Keeper of the Privy Seal. Whilſt he continued in theſe Poſts, and with the greateſt Conduct diſcharged all his Offices, he was promoted to the See of Wincheſter in the Room of Biſhop Edington in the Year 1367. Not long after which he was made Lord High Chancellor, and afterwards Preſident of the Privy Council. In a Word, made Wickam, which admitting of the double Interpretation of Wickam made this or this made Wickam, his Enemies interpreted it in the firſt ſenſe, and poſſeſſed the King that the Surveyor of that Edifice inſolently arrogated the Glory of it to himſelf. (a) Non deerant quidam invidi & malevoli qui Regi in aures inſuſurrarent Wicamum tam magnificæ ſtructuræ honorem ſibi arroganter vendicaſſe, adeoque in nomen ſuum in interiori quodam pariete arcis Windeſoriæ inſculptum regalis ædificii titulum nominatim trajeciſſe. Upon which the King being very much incenſed, charged Wickam with that Crime, but was ſoon appeaſed and laughed at it when he heard his Defence. Wickam anſwered with a ſmiling Air, that his Accuſers muſt either be very Malicious or very Ignorant of Grammar, ſince the true ſenſe of the Inſcription was this: I am the Creature of this Palace, it is that which hath procured me the Favour of my Prince, and raiſed me from a low to a high ſtate. It is proper to inſert the Hiſtorian's own Expreſſions here: (b) Cum autem Rex ſtomacharetur & iracunde Wicamo crimen objiceret, quod delatum erat, ille vultu non triſti aut conſternato, ſed hilari ac jucundo reſpondit, aut ſtultum hominem inſcitia Grammaticæ, aut calumniatorem malitioſa caſuum inverſione illam criminationem inſtituiſſe. Neque enim Rex ſereniſſime (inquit) ego hanc Arcem, ſed hæc Arx me quantus quantus ſum effecit, hoc eſt, me in laude ac gratia apud tuam majeſtatem poſuit, atque ab humili conditione ad tantas fortunas & dignitates evexit. Quod reſponſum tam factum ac Wicamo dignum (erat enim verum ſpecimen humanitatis, venuſtatis ac leporis) non ſolum omnem iracundiæ acerbitatem Regi abſterſit, verum etiam lætitiam in ejus animo tum commotionem ſuavem jucunditatis in corpore excitavit. I ſhould be loth to ſwear that Wickam had no Eye on the Equivocal ſenſe of this Inſcription. But that King Edward's Anger expreſſed on this occaſion may not paſs for an uncommon weakneſs, I ſhall mention ſome particulars concerning the Nicety and Jealouſy which Sovereign Princes have diſcovered in parallel caſes.

Pericles his Magnificence in the Conſtruction of publick Edifices at Athens is very well known. " (c) " Now when the Orators who ſided with Thucydides and were of his Party, were at one time " bawling (as their Cuſtom was) againſt Pericles, as one who ſquander'd away the publick " Stock in idle Expences, and made havock of the " State-revenues, he ſtarting up in the open Aſ" ſembly put the queſtion to the People, whe" ther they thought that what he he had laid out " was too much; and they ſaying, Too much " of all Conſcience. Well then! ſaid he, ſince 'tis ſo, " let not the Coſt and Charge go upon your Account " but upon mine: And accordingly I will make the " Inſcription upon the Temples and other publick " Buildings in mine own Name. When therefore " they heard him ſay this, whether it were out " of a ſurpriſe to ſee the greatneſs of his Spirit, " or out of emulation that they envy'd him the " Glory of the Works and reſolv'd to go ſhares " with him, they cried aloud, bidding him to ſpend " on and lay out o'God's Name, what he thought " fit out of the publick Purſe, and to ſpare no " Coſt, 'till all were finiſhed."

When Pauſanias King of the Lacedemonians Conſecrated a Golden Tripod to the Temple of Delphi, he cauſed to be inſcribed on it that under his Conduct the Perſians were beaten at the Battle of Platæa. The Lacedemonians not being able to ſuffer this vanity, cauſed the inſcription to be raſed, and the Name of the Towns which had furniſht the Victorious Troops to be inſerted inſtead of it, as we are informed by Cornelius Nepos. (d) Qua victoria elatus plurima miſcere cœpit, & majora concupiſcere. Sed primum in eo eſt reprehenſus, quod ex præda tripodem aureum Delphis poſuiſſet, epigrammate ſcripto, in quo erat hæc ſententia: SUO DUCTU BARBAROS, APUD PLATÆAS ESSE DELETOS, EJUSQUE VICTORIÆ ERGO APOLLINI DONUM DEDISSE. Hos verſus Lacedæmonii exſculpſerunt, neque aliud ſcripſerunt, quam nomina earum civitatum, quarum auxilio Perſæ erant victi. As haughty as Alexander was, and however jealous of the diviſion of his Glory, he yet made uſe of an Inſcription (e) which admitted the Greeks to a part of the Honour of Triumphing. This was after the Battel of Granicus; when he had occaſion for their further Aſſiſtance, and conſequently was afraid to irritate them by omitting their Names in the Monuments of his Victories, and hoped to indear them to him by mentioning them (f). He deſired to appropriate the whole Inſcription of the Temple of Diana to himſelf, and offered to defray the Expence of the whole Edifice; but the Inhabitants of Epheſus would not conſent to it, and not daring directly to refuſe him this Honour, they had recourſe to a Flattering Shift, which extricated them out of this Affair. They told him that it was not proper for one God to raiſe Monuments to another. (g) Scripſit Epheſiis, ſe omnes ſumptus qui in id ædificium facti eſſent, reſtituturum; quique porro requirerentur, præbiturum de ſuo, ita tamen ut ipſius nomen inſtaurato operi inſcriberetur. Idque deprecati ſunt Epheſii. quo tempore, quia Alexandro petenti aliquid denegare arduum erat, legatus eorum ad adulationem confugit, qua maxime expugnabilem noverat, dixitque dedecere culmen ipſius, ſi diis aliquid conſecraret, quum ipſe deus eſſet. nam cum honorem ab hominibus haberi potiori naturæ. Ea gloriæ contentio inter maximum regem, & unam civitatem fuit. obtinuerunt Epheſii; & maluerunt ingenti pecunia carere, quam inſtaurati templi titulo regi cedere. The Thebans doubtleſs were not put to ſuch a great Trouble, when a Curtezan offered to rebuild their Walls on the ſame Condition. If what Athenæus ſays be true, it is certain that they boldly rejected the offer. (h) Ἐπλούτει δὲ σφόδρα ἡ φρύνη ϗ ὑπισχνεῖτο τειχιεῖν τὰς Θήβας, ἐὰν ἐπιγράψωσι Θηβαῖοι, ΑΛΕΞΑΝΔΡΟΣ ΜΕΝ ΚΑΤΕΣΚΑΨΕΝ, ΑΝΕΣΤΗΣΕ ΔΕ ΦΡΥΝΗ Η ΕΤΑΙΡΑ, ὡς ἱστορεῖ Καλλίστρατος ἐν τῷ περὶ ἑταιρῶν. Phryne uſque adeò dives, erat ut Thebarum mœnia extructuram ſe polliceretur, ſi adſcriberetur, ALEXANDRUM DIRUISSE, PHRYNEN VERO SCORTUM REFECISSE, ut ait Calliſtratus libro De ſcortis. But before I conclude, I ſhall relate a Stratagem full as good as that of Wickam. The Architect who built Pharus, engraved his own Name on a ſtone, and that of the King on the Lime which covered it. The Trick was not diſcovered during his life, nor was he conſequently expoſed to any manner of danger on that Account, no Perſon being able to accuſe him to the King as a Robber of his Glory; but he expected after the Expiration of ſeveral Years that the Name written in the Lime would crumble away, and none would remain viſible beſides his own, which he had fixed in a much more durable ſubſtance than Lime. The following Citation acquaints us with the Name of this Architect (i) Οἰκοδομήσας γὰρ τὸ ἔργον, ἔνδοθεν μὲν κατὰ τῶν λίθων τὸ αὑτοῦ ὄνομα ἐπέγραψεν. ἐπιχρίσας δὲ τιτάνῳ, ϗ ἐπικαλύψας, ἐπέγραψε τοὔνομα τοῦ τότε βασιλεύοντος, εἰδὼς ὅπερ ϗ ἐγένετο, πάνυ ὀλίγου χρόνου συνεκπεσούμενα μετὰ

(a) [illegible]

(b) Id. ib. pag. 18.

(c) Plutarch, in the life of Pericles.

Pericles his brave Reply when accuſed for waſting publick Monies.

(d) Cornelius Nepos in Pauſania pag. m. [illegible]

(e) Καὶ μέρος δὲ τῆς νίκης τοῖς Ἕλλησι κοιν — κοινῇ τοῖς ἄλλοις λαφύροις ἐκέλευσεν ἐπιγράψαι φιλοτιμοτάτην ἐπιγραφήν, ΑΛΕΞΑΝΔΡΟΣ Ο ΦΙΛΙΠΠΟΥ ΚΑΙ ΟΙ ΕΛΛΗΝΕΣ, ΠΛΗΝ ΛΑΚΕΔΑΙΜΟΝΙΩΝ, ΑΠΟ ΤΩΝ ΒΑΡΒΑΡΩΝ ΤΩΝ ΤΗΝ ΑΣΙΑΝ ΚΑΤΟΙΚΟΥΝΤΩΝ. Participem autem Græcis victoriam — cæteris manubiis in communi glorioſiſſimum titulum inſcribi juſſit, ALEXANDER PHILIPPI ET GRÆCI, PRÆTER LACEDÆMONIOS, DE BARBARIS ASIATICIS, Plutarchus in Alexandro pag. 673. C.

(f) See Freithemius ſupplem. in Q. Curtium lib. 2. c. 5.

(g) Freinſhemius ſupplem. in Q. Curtium lib. 2. c. 6. n. 33. He quotes Pauſanias lib. 7. & Strabo lib. 14. I have found no ſuch thing in Pauſanias, but only in Strabo lib. 14. p. m. 441.

(h) Athenæus lib. 13. pag. 591. D.

(i) Lucianus de conſcribenda hiſtoria ſub fin. pag. m. 706. tom. 1.

Word, he had ſuch a large ſhare of the King's Favour, that nothing was done (B) without him. In order to diſcharge the Duties impoſed on him by his Spiritual and Temporal Dignities and Poſts, he applyed himſelf on one ſide to regulate his Manners conform to the ſtricteſt Diſcipline, and to eſtabliſh in his Dioceſe (C) a Clergy which led an Exemplary Life, and were able to inſtruct their Pariſhioners: And on the other ſide he omitted nothing that might contribute to the exact and impartial Adminiſtration of Juſtice. Being informed in the Year 1371. that the Great Seal would be taken from him, he prevented the Diſhonour, and ſurrendred it to the King. That Prince returning to England after a very ſucceſsful War with France, found his Treaſury very much Exhauſted. Upon which the Duke of Lancaſter, one of his Sons, at the Head of ſeveral of the Nobility complained of the Eccleſiaſticks at that time having the greateſt part of the high Offices in the Kingdom; they repreſented to the King that it was not the Clergy's Buſineſs to intermeddle with Temporal Affairs, and that it was more proper thoſe places ſhould be filled by the Laity, who would diſcharge them with great fidelity. The King being perſuaded that if he ſlighted theſe Complaints he ſhould diſoblige a potent Faction, and that if he turned out the Eccleſiaſticks, he ſhould draw vaſt Sums from thoſe whom he ſhould call to Account, reſolved on the Alteration. Wherefore our Wickam very ſeaſonably ſurrendred the Seal, and deſired leave to retire to his Dioceſe, which he did not obtain before 1374. The Lay-men being promoted to the important Charges, ſupplyed them ſo ill that the Court was forced to re-inſtate the Eccleſiaſticks. The Duke of Lancaſter was removed from the Helm, but returned to the Adminiſtration, when the Death of the Prince of Wales had thrown the King into a Mortal as well as Languiſhing Diſeaſe. Being now in Power he vehemently declared againſt the Clergy, and left no means unattempted to Ruin our Wickam. He cauſed him to be accuſed of Infidelity to his Prince, and Criminally extorting Money from the Subjects, and forced him to appear at the King's Bench as the Court impowered by Law to take Cognizance of this Affair. He provided Judges to Condemn him, without allowing him the neceſſary time to digeſt his Papers in order to his Defence. Beſides which not being content with depriving him of his Temporalities, he adviſed King Edward to Baniſh him; but that Prince tho' enfeebled in Body and Mind, refuſed it. He Remembred that Wickam was found Innocent of all manner of Extortion five Years before, when all the Eccleſiaſticks were obliged to give an Account of their Adminiſtration of the Treaſury. Wherefore he ſuſpected the Juſtice of the Sentence which Condemned him, and gave Encouraging hopes to thoſe deputed by the Biſhops to him in order to requeſt the Annulling of this Sentence; and at the ſame time ſuſpecting the Duke of Lancaſter to be Guilty of ſome ſiniſter deſign (D), he declared Prince * Richard his Grand-Son his Succeſſor, and reſtored to Wickam whatever the Duke of Lancaſter had deprived him of; and dyed not long after †. King Richard who ſucceeded him was but eleven Years old. Which rendred it very eaſy for the Duke of Lancaſter, Preſident of the Council, to revive the Accuſations againſt our Biſhop of Winchester. They were accordingly reduced to ſeven Heads, and affirmed with very great Aſſurance before the Council by the Accuſers, but the Accuſed ſo ſtrenuouſly refuted them that he was declared Innocent. After which, his noble deſire of applying the Riches which Providence had beſtowed on him, to very good uſes, increaſed more than ever; and not being able to think of any more uſeful Appointment, than that which furniſhed Youth with the means of Learning the Sciences, he founded two Magnificent Colleges

* He was the Son of the Prince of Wales.

† In 1377.

μινὸς τῷ χρίσματι τὰ γράμματα, ἐκφαινόμενον δὲ, Σώστρατος Δεξιφάνης κνίδιος, θεοῖς σωτῆρσιν ὑπὲρ τῶν πλωϊζομένων. Poſtquam igitur hoc opus exædificaſſet, intus in ſaxis ſuum nomen inſcripſit: quo calce illita occultato, nomen ejus qui tum regnavit, ſuperinſcripſit, ratus, id quod etiam evenit, fore ut brevi admodum, literæ illa cum illita calce caderent: hoc verò appareret: Soſtratus Cnidius, Dexiphanis filius, Diis ſervatoribus pro ſalute navigantium.

(B) Nothing was done without him.] The Author I here cite (a) quotes a paſſage of Froiſſard which runs thus, At that time reigned a certain Prieſt called William of Wickam, and this William of Wickam was ſo much in Favour with the King of England, that all things were done by him, and without him nothing was done.

(a) The Author of the hiſtorica deſcriptio p. 32.

(C) A Clergy which —— and were able to inſtruct.] It is not ſufficient for 'em to be either Learned or good Men. Both theſe qualities ought to be united. But in the Age we are ſpeaking of, it was much eaſier to find Prieſts who were neither Learned nor Pious, than to light upon any that were either the one or the other: And tho' the Ignorance of thoſe times was prodigious, yet there were more that were able to inſtruct than that led a good life: And therefore this care of our Wickam proved no ſmall fatigue, ſince he ordered that all Deacons and Prieſts ſhould be obliged to be free from the ſtains of Drunkenneſs and Uncleanneſs. (b) Ante omnia tam Diaconos quam qui ſupra eos collocati ſunt presbyteros ac ſacerdotes ab infami illa ebrietatis & libidinis macula omnino immunes eſſe voluit. Nam quum ipſi ſal terræ, lux mundi ac diſpenſatores myſteriorum Dei crebro in ſcripturis uſurpentur, nimis indignum eſſe dicebat eos vinolentia deformari vel cubilibus & immunditie inquinari, à qua turpitudinis labe & ignominia omnes etiam ex populo (quos Laicos vocant) melioris notæ abhorrerent. This is not the leaſt glorious of his Adminiſtration.

(b) Hiſtor. deſcriptio pag. 34.

(D) Suſpecting the Duke of Lancaſter to be guilty of ſome ſiniſter deſign.] It was thought that the Duke intended (c) to uſurp the Crown, and this ſuſpicion was grounded on the ſecret meaſures which he took with ſome Members of Parliament in order to Engage the Engliſh in Imatation of the French to Enact a Salique Law for the Excluſion of Women from ſucceeding to the Crown of the Realm. But this rendred him odious and very much diſturbed

(c) Vehementiſſima regni appetendi ſuſpicione & invidia laborabat. Ib. p. 5

Colleges (E), the one at Oxford, and the other at Winchester. And whilst he was diligently taking care of whatever could contribute to the compleating these two Noble Establishments, he was recalled to the Court, and by a sort of force obliged to accept of the Dignity of Lord High Chancellor in 1380. He discharged this important Office for three Years, so well that he rendred the Nation Happy; which was the Reason why without the most pressing instances, he could not obtain the King's leave to retire, when he saw the fatal Troubles that were ready to break out, which induced him to desire a retreat in order to shelter himself from the Storm. Being then returned to his Church, he finished the Building of his College at Winchester, and there Built that Sumptuous Cathedral, which equalled or wanted but little of equalling that of St. Paul in London. Besides which he very Liberally disbursed several Sums to the great Advantage of the Publick, and the Poor; all which could not yet prevent his being exposed to imminent Dangers in the Year 1397. when he || and some others were accused of several State Crimes in full Parliament, but he was very Honourably acquitted. And from that time to his Death he continued in a quiet repose in his Diocese, in the exercise of all the Duties of a good Prelate. Nay he was there secure from all those Commotions which violently shook England. He died in the 81 Year of his Age in 1404. Several Scandalous reports were spread against him; amongst others it was said that he revealed a secret delivered in Confession concerning (F) a suppositious Son, and that he made Presents and Promises to King Edward sturbed King Edward (a) now grown more suspicious than ever, and obliged him to declare his Grandson his Successor. Thus runs my Author's Relation. But perhaps it may be asked what the Duke of Lancaster aimed at, since the Establishment of the Salique Law could not prevent the Representation taking place, and consequently he could not get any thing by its Establishment; but he wanted a Law which preferred the Uncles to the Nephews. It may be replyed that not daring to endeavour directly the Exclusion of his Eldest Brother's Son, he began by attempting the introduction of an innovation in the Constitution, which could not easily be suspected to proceed to a farther design: But if he could have gained his end, the Establishment of the Salique Law, he would have found room for other Innovations, and would have requested a Law in preference of the Rights of Uncles to those of Nephews. Mr. Varillas (b) imagines that he designed to Abrogate the Representation, and that on that Account he was an Encourager of Wicliff; but Mr. de Larroque (c) agreeably and solidly refutes this thought.

|| Omnes illos simul ac conspirationis proditionisque læsæ majestatis reos fecit, perinde ac si illi Regem regio imperio ac omnium rerum dominatu despoliare statuissent. Ibid. pag. 109.

(E) He founded two magnificent Colleges.] He had long given very signal Proofs of a Zealous Inclination to relieve the Necessitous. Hospitality, one of the Virtues, which according to Saint Paul (d) ought to shine in an Episcopal Life, was remarkably exemplified in him. He lodged in his House, and all his Life kept 24 Poor People. He received all Strangers with great Humanity; and seven Years before the Foundation of the mentioned Colleges, he began to settle an annual Pension on 50 hopeful Youths, which he caused to study at Oxford (e). These were his Preludes. After which having obtained Patents of leave to Build a College in that City, he laid the first stone of it very early in the Morning on the 5. of March in 1379. and designed it for one Hundred Persons besides Servants. 50 Scholars were to be entertained there, in order to be instructed in the Sciences, and a grave and Learned Man to Govern the College with the Title of Warden. He added ten Chaplains, three Clerks, and sixteen Choristers. This Edifice being finished in seven Years, he himself placed those Hundred Persons (f) in it at three of the Clock in the Morning on the 14 of April 1386. The first thing they did after their Entrance was by a Solemn Publick Prayer to implore the Blessing of God (g). The following Year he founded another College in the Suburbs of Winchester, near the Episcopal Palace. He laid the first stone of this on the 26 of March in 1387. He designed it for 105 Persons besides Servants. These Persons were a Head or Warden, ten Priests, seventy Scholars, an upper and under School-Master, three Chaplains, three Clerks, and sixteen Choristers (h). All these entred the first time at three in the Morning on the 28. of March 1393. (i) The Statutes of these two Colleges are so excellent that they served as a Model for all those, who for the space of two Hundred Years made the like Foundations in Oxford or Cambridge, (k). I must not omit that Wickam provided that this College at Winchester should be a Nursery for that which he founded at Oxford; for he ordered that all the places vacant in the last should be supplyed by a draught from the former. Which is religiously observed to this very day. My Author expresses this part of the Statutes in very significant Words: (l) Quod Collegio suo Oxoniensi quasi fons & seminarium inserviret, ex cujus (ut ita dicam) utero junior alia soboles quotannis nasceretur, & in alterum Collegium decrescentium loco veluti ad Patres literarum ac Senatores immigraret. Est enim hoc illius Collegii Oxoniensis proprium & peculiare, ejusque statutis sancitum ut cum cæterea Collegia Oxoniensia in demortuorum aut discedentium locum ex scholis quibuscunque ascititios cooptare soleant, solum hoc non nisi naturales ex seminario suo Vintoniensi velut ex sua & propria stirpe succrescentes eligat, & electos ad se tanquam ad novam Coloniam suo tempore & loco deducat. Observe that his last Testament and Codicil (m) were very Memorable proofs of his Charity and Liberality.

(F) That he revealed a secret delivered in Confession concerning a suppositious Son.] This is the third of the five Calumnies which my Author undertakes to refute. The two first are that Wickam's Learning was even below a moderate degree, and that he had been a Servant. Our Author refutes this by several Remarks which it is not necessary to Transcribe here; those who are curious to see them may consult the Original (n). But as for the third Scandal I shall give the Substance of the Apology. In order to which let us begin with the Accusation. It is pretended that the Duke of Lancaster's hatred of Wickam was grounded on his divulging that that Duke was not the Son of Edward III. To which they add, that Philippa King Edward's Queen, revealed in Confession to our Bishop of Winchester, that John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaster was the Son of a German, and that she had fraudulently imposed him on the King her Husband instead of a Female Infant she had by him. Farther, that she intreated this Prelate to reveal it to the Nobility of the Realm, in case the Duke, this supposed Son of King Edward, should aspire to the Crown, or prepare to succeed to the true Princes of the Blood according to the Laws. Hence some have taken occasion to charge this Bishop with a Notorious Sacrilege, I mean the non Observation of the Canon Law which forbids the divulging any Secrets delivered in Confession. His Apologist justifies him. 1. By the shining Virtue of the Queen. 2. By the good understanding always preserved betwixt the King and Queen. 3. By the impunity of Wickam. 4. By his Reconciliation to the Duke of Lancaster. 5. By the silence of Historians, and publick Records on this Head. It is impossible, saith our Author, that such a Virtuous Princess should

(a) Qui in senili ætate [illegible] suspicionibus paulo indulgentior esse cœpit ... [illegible] Lancastriæ pater nonnullis videbatur. Ib. p. 54.

(b) Varillas, Histoire du Wicleffianisme pag. 11. & seq.

(c) Larroque, Nouvelles accusations contre Varillas pag. [illegible] & seq.

(d) I Tim. [illegible]

(e) Taken from his Latin description pag. 35.

(f) He had chosen them himself.

(g) Taken from the same Book pag. 101.

(h) Ibid. pag. 102. 103.

(i) Ibid. pag. 104.

(k) Ibid.

(l) Ibid. pag. 102.

(m) Ibid. pag. 112. 113.

(n) Ibid. pag. 116. & seq.

ward's Miſtreſs (G), in order to obtain the Reſtitution of his Epiſcopal Temporalities *. We ought not to forget that he was employed (H) in the Expulſion of Wicliff.

* Taken from a Book intituled, hiſtoriæ deſcriptio complectens vitam ac res geſtas beatiſſimi viri Gulielmi Wicami quondam Vintonienſis Epiſcopi &c. Printed at Oxford in the Year 1690. in 4.

WIDA † (HERMAN DE) Son to William de Wida Count of the Empire, was made Arch-Biſhop of Cologne in 1515, ‖ and long after Elected Biſhop of Paderborn, where he perſecuted the (A) Proteſtants. In the Year 1536. he held a

(a) ſhould have kill'd her own Daughter, in order the better to cover an Abominable Fraud. A King of ſuch a great Spirit would not have left ſuch a Villanous Action of his Wife unpuniſhed: Nor could he be Ignorant of it, ſince it is pretended that it was revealed to the Nobility of the Realm. And if he had not believed it, he would have treated Wickam as the moſt infamous Detractors deſerve; for certainly the whole Royal Family being Diſhonoured by a Report ſo injurious to the Queen, the Calumniator would have been puniſhed. But the Duke of Lancaſter hereby diſgraced more than all the reſt would have brought him to juſtice, and never have been Reconciled to him: and yet it is certain that after King Richard had reconciled them, they continued very well together till the Duke's Death (b), that is about 21 Years. Obſerve alſo that this Story is no where to be found except in the Compilation of a Monk: Recte Harpsfeldus in hiſtoria illud de ſuppoſito Reginæ partu tanquam fictum & commentum rejecit, ac nulibi niſi in Monacho Albanenſi reperiri ſcribit.

(G) Preſents and Promiſes to King Edward's Miſtreſs] This is the fourth Calumny: Our Author indeed refutes it, but by Arguments very far ſhort of the ſtrength of thoſe which he alledges againſt the third. The expreſs Terms of the Accuſation run thus: (d) Regi jam ægroto, ipſaque ſenectute confecto ſemper aderat atque miniſtrabat quædam fœmina Alicia Peers, quæ Regi languido & infirmo obſecuta majorem quam ipſe (e) dux cum Rege iniit gratiam: hanc præſenti mercede & uberiori promiſſa ſpe Wicamus adduxit ut a Rege reſtitui ſibi ablata Epiſcopatus jura tam quæ ante percepta & in fiſco reſervata eſſent, quam omnia prædia procuraret, quod illa invito duce, continuo impetravit. He refutes this. 1. By the hatred which this immodeſt Woman bore to the Biſhops. 2. By the very ſmall confidence which the Corruption of her Manners could allow any Perſon to have in her. 3. By her ſtrict Friendſhip with Wickam's Enemies. 4. By the expreſs Terms of the Letters Patents granted to this Prelate for his re-eſtabliſhment, which contain the Reaſons of it, and declare the conſent of the Duke of Lancaſter, of all the Nobility and all the King's Council: They being ſubſcribed at the bottom, per ipſum Regem & conſilium, by the King and his Council. The Apologiſt's exclamation ought not to be forgotten. (f) O inſignes calumniatores, & chartarum publicarum malicioſos interpretes, qui quod inſtrumenta Regalia per ſanctum Senatum peri aſſerunt, id per impurum ſcortum factitatum prædicant. Nam ſcortum & conſilium iſtis idem ſonat? He thinks it very ſtrange that notwithſtanding this Declaration of King Edward, ſe liberalitate Epiſcopi ex promiſſione in difficultatibus ſuis atque Regni adductum fuiſſe ut ea bona reſtitueret, any ſhould preſume to aſſign the purchaſed good Offices of a Curtezan as the cauſe of this Reſtitution. 5. To conclude, he urges that King Richard after the Flight of Alice Peers (g) confirmed this Reſtitution by the Advice of his Council, in which were preſent the Duke of Lancaſter, the Prelates, Earls, and Barons. I am inclined to believe that this Calumny of which we have juſt now ſeen the Refutation is falſe; but I don't find that it is Attacked by very ſtrong Reaſons. Thouſands of inſtances prove theſe two things: Firſt that thoſe who are proſecuted by a King's Miſtreſs, will apply to her to be re-eſtabliſhed, and endeavour to gain her by dint of Money and promiſes, without ever diſtruſting her on a ſuppoſition that a profeſſed Whore muſt be capable of all ſorts of perfidy; Secondly that the Inſtruments of Reſtauration obtained by the intereſt of a Miſtreſs, run in the ſame ſtyle, with thoſe obtained by very equitable means. A King, who Grants any thing at the Solicitation of his Miſtreſs, may eaſily engage his Council to approve of it; and if he doth not do it, his Miſtreſs her ſelf can gain the chief Councellors: And then the moſt favourable and glorious clauſes are inſerted in the Letters Patents and no part of the uſual Form is omited. To which may be added that there have been ſome Perſons unjuſtly oppreſſed, who have ſolely reſtored themſelves by buying the good Offices of a Miſtreſs. Nor ought we to be ſurprized that after the diſgrace of ſuch a Woman a Confirmation of the Patent was obtained: For that is not at all extraordinary. So that the Arguments of our Author do not ſeem to me to be very ſtrong. But it would indeed have been enough to have laid it upon the Authors of this Calumny to prove it. What is very certain, is that King Edward's Miſtreſs could do every thing with him at that time, and that her power ended only with the life of that Prince. (h) This King was unexpectedly ſurprized by the Loſs of his Speech all at once, ſo that he had only time to expreſs ſome Pious Sentiments, (to which he was exhorted by a Prieſt) by his geſture and Eyes: Which did not happen by Reaſon that he was not long and dangerouſly ill; but the Famous Alice Peers, too really his Miſtreſs, had ſo poſſeſſed him, that no Perſon could have acceſs to ſpeak to him before he himſelf was Speechleſs. Then the diſſolute Harpy having in haſte tore off the Diamond Rings which he wore on his Finger, withdrew, and left him in the Hands of a Chaplain, who could only draw ſome ſigns of penitence from him; which indeed tho' late when ſincere are good; but are rarely ſincere when ſo late.

I ſhall by the by ſay that the 5. Calumny refuted (i) in the above cited Book is that Wickam was Baniſhed, and continued three Years in Exile according to ſome, and ſeven intire Years according to others. But this is utterly falſe, for he never lay under any Sentence of Baniſhment: To which I add farther, that he was never deprived of his Biſhoprick, ſo that the See of Wincheſter was never vacant from 1367 to 1404. Whence it neceſſarily follows that Wicliff was refuſed this Biſhoprick in 1367. if what is pretended by Varillas (k) be true, that his not being able to obtain that Biſhoprick ſo diſguſted him, that it inſpired him with a deſign of ſetting up for a Hereſiarch; but if he was not able to obtain it that Year, one of the Reaſons by which (l) Mr. de Larroque refutes Varillas concerning the conſequences of this pretended refuſal, will become yet more ſpecious.

(H) That he was employed in the expulſion of Wicliff.] My Author touches only accidentally on this particular, when he is proving that our Biſhop of Wincheſter was more Learned than his Detractors imagined. (m) Quid animi fuiſſe putas Richardo Regi quum Wicamum anno Regni ſui ſeptimo una cum Courtneo Cantuarienſi Archiepiſcopo Oxonium contra virum acerrimum Johannem Wickleſum mitteret? An mediocris eruditionis & ingenii eſſe oportebat, qui (quod ille ibi præſtitit) diſſenſientes in religione opiniones conciliaret, & tam celebrem & acutum virum ſuſpectæ fidei redargueret & ex Academiæ finibus exterminaret? Obſerve here a Remarkable particular of which the Jeſuit (n) Maimbourg, Mr. Varillas, nay even Mr. de Larroque as well as ſeveral others have made no manner of mention; viz. that the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury was in Perſon at Oxford with the Biſhop of Wincheſter (o) in 1383. or 1384. in order expell Wicliff from that Univerſity.

(A) He perſecuted the Proteſtants of Paderborn.] I ſhall begin this Article with Father Maimbourg's Words. " (p) After (1) the Death of Eric of " Brunſwick Biſhop of Paderborn, being elected by " the Canons of that Church to ſucceed him, with " a deſign that he ſhould oppoſe the Lutherans " who began to eſtabliſh themſelves there, he performed

(a) Si primo injuſtæ calumniæ auctori credimus, ea quem non peperit, aluit, quam peperit, occidit. Ibid. pag. 123.

(b) Ibid. pag. 121.

(c) Ibid. pag. 124.

(d) Ibid. pag. 125. ex Acwortho in vita Sadburei.

(e) That is, the Duke of Lancaſter.

(f) Ibid. pag. 126.

(g) Quum jam Alicia Peers ſe in fugam cum ſua peſte ac pernicie convertiſſet. Ibid.

a Council, the Regulations of which were highly extolled (B); for being a very good Man, whoſe life was exemplary, he paſſionately deſired the Eſtabliſhment of good order in his Dioceſe. Purſuant to which he was not contented barely to ſettle a good Diſcipline, but alſo intended a Reformation of the Doctrine, and having conſulted Melanchthon, (C) and had ſeveral ſecret Conferences with Bucer, he cauſed the latter to Preach at Bonn, and engaged the former to come thither ſome time after. The Majority of the Canons of Cologne oppoſed this Enterpriſe, and not being able to prevail by the Books which they publiſhed, they had recourſe to the Pope and Emperor. The former “ performed it ſo well that being aſſiſted by his Friends, who together with ſeveral good Troops accompany'd him, he made himſelf Maſter of the City, drove out all the Preachers he found in it, utterly aboliſhed Lutheraniſm there, and prohibited any Perſons profeſſing it on pain of Death.” Mr. Seckendorf obſerves that our Herman (a) was hurried on to this Rigour by the Canons, and his Reſentment againſt the inſolence of the populace, and that notwithſtanding this he gave ſome Proofs of Moderation. For he did not moleſt two Miniſters who had eſcaped out of Priſon, and pardoned ſixteen Citizens who were Condemned to Death. To which Mercy the interceſſion of their Relations and the Executioner's refuſing to behead them contributed very much. (b) Civibus Paderbornenſibus XVI. ad mortem condemnatis gratiam fecit, precibus ſupplicum & adſtantium, immo & carnificis facto ſingulari, motus: Hic enim gladium, quo productos in forum decollare juſſus erat, judicibus publice tradidit, negans, ſe innocentium cruore manus polluturum eſſe.

---

(B) A Council, the Regulations of which were highly extolled.] Let us again cite Maimbourg. “ (c) Being apprehenſive that the Lutherans already ſpread in the (1) neighbouring Provinces, would inſenſibly introduce the Venome of their Hereſy into his Electorate, he in conjunction with his Suffragans held a Council at Cologne, where he made the moſt excellent Canons that could be deſired for the maintainance of Religion in its purity, the re-eſtabliſhment of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline to its Vigour, and the Regulation of the Duties and lives of all true Chriſtians in every Station.” Cardinal Sadolet very much commend to this Council of Cologne, but thought it ſomewhat ſtrange that Purgatory was not mention'd in it. See (d) his Letter to Herman. This Arch-Biſhop was not much afraid that the Lutherans ſhould introduce the Venom of their Hereſy into the Electorate of Cologne: F. Maimbourg was Ignorant of his real Sentiments: Read Mr. Seckendorf, and you will find that this Prelate was already at that juncture more than half a Lutheran. (e) Hermannum jam tum meliora intendiſſe, ex epiſtola MS. Joh. Lumpii, Doct. Colon. quæ inter Heckelianas extat, & d. 6. Oct. hoc anno data eſt, apparet. Scribit enim: Archiepiſcopus nondum audet, quæ ſentit, prodere, ob Monachorum & Theologorum ſuperſtitioſa ſupercilia, quibus adhuc, inſipidum eſt, quod ex eorum non prodit culina, ſperatur tamen finis. Addit: Minoritanum, qui Præſuli a confeſſione & ſacra concione eſt, cucullum ferre adhuc, ſed aliud ſentire: in templo majori concionari aliquem puram Evangelii doctrinam, advolantibus ex vicinis opidulis, etiam ex Haſſiaca ditione procul diſſita, tot millibus ut eos vix capiat Templum.

(C) Having Conſulted Melanchthon, and had ſeveral ſecret Conferences with Bucer, he cauſed.] He deputed Peter Medman to Melanchthon in 1539. and was deſirous that he ſhould come to him immediately, but his Journey was deferred to the Year 1543. Bucer being ſent for by this Arch-Biſhop came to him towards the end of 1541. and after ſeveral Conferences which were very well reliſhed by that Prelate, he went back to Straſburg, from whence he returned to Herman the following Year, and preached publickly at Bonn. He alſo informed the Elector of Saxony and the Landgrave of Heſſe, that this Prelate had very good deſigns which wanted Encouragement, by Reaſon of his Age which made him act timorouſly and ſlowly. Upon which thoſe Princes did not fail to write to him in order to confirm him in his Chriſtian Intentions. He thanked them, and informed them that he had no other aim than the Glory of God, and the Happineſs of his Neighbour. He had before entreated the Elector of Saxony to ſend Melanchthon to him; who accordingly ſet forwards on his Journey about the end of April 1543. and in Conjunction with Bucer drew up a Project of Reformation, which the Arch-Biſhop cauſed to be Read to him, and himſelf carefully examined it (f). Some particulars which did not favour much of Proteſtantiſm were overlooked in this Project to pleaſe him; which obliged Luther to complain of Melanchthon's and Bucer's connivance. The Elector of Saxony was not better pleaſed with this conduct, tho' the Landgrave hinted to him, that he ought not to promiſe himſelf that the work could be perfected all at once (g). We ought to know that the Archbiſhop was deſirous to retain all the Ceremonies which were not impious, and that each Order ſhould preſerve its Privileges: He did not pretend to aboliſh Epiſcopacy. (h) Propoſitum ſcilicet erat Hermanno ut ex Melanchthonis literis colligi poteſt, Chytræus etiam Lib. 16. fol. 460. apertius tradit, ceremonias veteres omnes, quotquot ſine impietate ſervari poſſent, una cum collegiorum dignitate, libertate, prærogativis & juribus omnibus, retinere, ut moderatæ & piæ ordinationis Eccleſiæ Cathedralis exemplum eſſe poſſet: ſed eventus oſtendit, in rebus tantopere corruptis modum difficillime inveniri; quapropter omnis illa cautio inutilis fuit, &, retenta illa pompa, doctrinæ puritati incrementa omnia ſubtracta fuerunt. The Project of Reformation which he Publiſhed, did not at all mention either Luther, or (i) the Pope, and he took care to expreſs himſelf ſo cautiouſly concerning the Lord's Supper, (k) that the Zuinglians could agree to it. Luther (l) was very well pleaſed that his Name was not mentioned, becauſe he very well knew that the bare naming of it would give Offence; but he condemned the other parts of this cautious conduct, and became ſo violently enraged againſt Melanchthon, that perhaps he had never been reconciled to him, if the latter had not laid the Fault on Bucer, and if the Elector of Saxony had not laboured to prevent an open rupture betwixt them. (m) Non latuit Melanchthonem indignatio Lutheri, immo tantopere eum afflixit, ut de deſerenda Wittenberga cogitaret, ſi Luthero inviſus eſſet, aut quod futurum eſſe dicebatur, publice ab illo refutaretur. Sed pia Electoris Saxoniæ providentia & induſtria Pontani placatus eſt Lutherus, & Melanchthonis excuſationem accepit, dicentis, ſe neque caput illud reformationis Colonienſis de ſacra Cœna compoſuiſſe, neque Bucerum celaſſe, quæ in eo deſideraret, hunc tamen admonitionis ſuæ nullam habuiſſe rationem. Sic ira Lutheri vehementius in Bucerum verſa eſt.

This Project of Reformation was Printed at Buſſhoven, if we believe the Preface, and that is all we can know of it; the time of the Impreſſion not being expreſſed. A ſecond Edition appeared at Bonn in 1543, Printed by Laurence Mylius, or Vander Mullen. And a third was Printed the following Year. Theſe three Impreſſions were in the German Language. But the Latin Edition Printed at Bonn, in 1545, by the ſame Mylius, is intitl'd, Noſtra Hermanni, ex gratia Dei Archiepiſcopi Colonienſis & Principis Electoris ſimplex ac pia deliberatio, qua ratione chriſtiana, & in verbo Dei fundata, reformatio doctrinæ, adminiſtrationis divinorum Sacramentorum, ceremoniarum, totiuſque curæ animarum, & aliorum miniſteriorum Eccleſiaſticorum, apud eos, qui noſtræ paſtorali curæ commendati ſunt, tantiſper inſtituenda ſit, donec Dominus dederit conſtitui meliorem, vel per liberam & Chriſtianam Synodum, ſive generalem ſive nationalem, vel per Ordines Imperii Nationis Germanicæ

(a) Ista ... plebs Paderbor- ... pe- ... & ... commi- ... Seckendorf. lib. Luther. lib. 3. pag. 135.

(b) Id. ib. ... Chytræus lib. 9. fol. ... & lib. 15. fol. 391. & seqq.

(c) Maimbourg ubi ſupra.

(1) Concil. Colon. 1. c. 14. Concil. edit. Pariſ.

(d) It is in the 14. Book of Sadolet's Letters pag. 559. edit. Lugd. 1554. in 8.

(e) Seckendorf. ubi ſupra pag. 138, 139.

(f) Taken from Seckendorf ubi ſupra pag. 436.

(g) Non ſatis placebat illa diſſimulatio Electori monito licet a Landgravio quod non omnia ſub initium exacte conſtitui poſſent. Id. ib. pag. 437. n. 8.

(h) Id. ib.

(i) Hermanno ea placuit lenitas qua etiam cavit ne in toto ſcripto aliquid contra Pontificem nominatim ſpargeretur. Id. ib. p. 448. 4.

(k) Id. ib.

(l) Id. ib.

(m) Id. ib.

mer excommunicated and depoſed the Archbiſhop, and was ſo effectually ſeconded by Charles V. that our Prelate was conſtrained (D) to renounce his Dignity in the Year 1547. After which he retired || to his paternal Eſtate, where he died the 13th of Auguſt 1552, being eighty Years old. His Scheme of Reformation was more like * that of England, than that of Germany. Tho' it cannot be denied, that this Archbiſhop was rather a Good than (E) a Learned Man, it may yet be ſaid, that he was not Ignorant. The Error committed in the Supplement to || See the Rem. D.

* See the Remark

ſiæ in Spiritu ſancto congregatos. The Copies of the firſt Edition were kept, as it were, locked up (a) for ſome time, and perhaps the publication had been longer deferred, if all thoſe that were concerned in it had been as Phlegmatick as Herman. The Chapter of Cologne no ſooner diſcover'd that the Copies were ſpread on all ſides, but they cauſed to be Publiſhed in German and Latin, a Book entitled (b) Antididagma, ſeu Chriſtianæ & Catholicæ religionis per Rever. & Illuſt. Dominos Canonicos Metropolitanæ Eccleſiæ Colonienſis propugnatio, adverſus librum quendam univerſis Ordinibus ſeu Statibus Diœceſis ejuſdem nuper Bonnæ titulo Reformationis exhibitum, ac poſtea mutatis quibuſdam, Conſultoriæ deliberationis nomine impreſſum. At the end of the Antididagma is a grave and moderate Diſcourſe of twelve Pages only, intitl'd, Sententia delectorum per venerabile capitulum Eccleſiæ Colonienſis de vocatione Martini Buceri. These were not the only Books that were Publiſhed on each ſide: Mr. Seckendorf (c) informs us, that a Book appeared in Publick, intitl'd, Judicium deputatorum Univerſitatis & ſecundarii Cleri Colonienſis de doctrina & vocatione Martini Buceri, which was aſcribed to Everard Billieus, a Carmelite, and ſo ſtuffed with ſcurrilous Buffooneries, that the Canons of Cologne would not licenſe it; wherefore the firſt Title, Judicium Cleri & Academiæ, was ſtruck out, and the other made uſe of, as we find in one of Melancthon's Epiſtles. (d) Coloniæ liber editus eſt, non tam contra Bucerum, quam contra univerſam doctrinam Eccleſiarum noſtrarum, & contra noſtros Principes. Poeta operis eſt Carmelita ille bene ſaginatus, & Bacchi ac Veneris ſacerdos. Titulum operi fecerunt: Judicium Cleri & Academiæ. Cum autem ſeniores in Collegio quidam Comites vidiſſent, ſcriptum dignius eſſe ſcurris, quam Clero, juſſerunt mutari titulum, ac teſtati ſunt, id opus non probari ſuo Collegio. Addita eſt ergo tituli correctio, pro Clero jubent legi Clerum ſecundarium, nothos videlicet Cleros intelligunt. Petulantiſſime convitiatur doctrinæ & Luthero, & in loco de conjugio ſpurcitie & obſcœnitate verborum utitur, quam vix in lenone ferrent aures mediocrium hominum. Convitia ex Plauti fabulis lecta ſunt, quibus fortaſſe Carmelita ille magis delectatur, quam Pſalmis. (e) Caſpar Gennep tranſlated this Tract into German; and Melancthon publiſhed a Refutation of it. The Appeal which the Chapter of Cologne brought in before the Pope, may paſs for a controverſial Tract (f): The Archbiſhop cauſed it to be refuted. The Chapter cauſed a Programma to be publiſh'd in German, on the 18th of November 1544; and the Archbiſhop oppoſed it by an Anſwer the 13th of December, the ſame year (g). In all probality, the prodigious Superſtition of the City of Cologne, was one of the Obſtacles which ſtifled Herman's deſign. That City ſo vaſtly abounds with Monaſteries, Relicks, and Images, that it may be call'd the Teutonick Rome. (h) Manſit aut reſtituta eſt, de qua Melanchthon quæſtus fuit, populi ſuperſtitio, Coloniæ potiſſimum Agrippinæ Clero, templis, ſacellis, ſtatuis, reliquiis, plus, quam ulla in Germania civitas, repleta, ita ut Romam Teutonicam eſſe dicant.

(a) Taken from Seckendorf. ib. p. [illegible]

(b) The Latin Edition I make uſe of is that of Louvain Printed for Servatius Zaſſenus 1544. in 8vo.

(c) Seckend. ubi ſupra pag. 438.

(d) Melanchthon epiſt. ad Crucigerum. 'Tis the 25 of the 3d. Book. It was written from Bonn in 1543.

(e) Seckend. ubi ſupra.

(f) See Seckendorf. ib. p. 442.

(g) Id. ib.

(h) Id. ib. pag. 448.

(D) To renounce his Dignity.] He was promiſed aſſiſtance in order to oppoſe Force againſt Force, but he choſe rather to comply, in order to ſave his faithful Subjects from the devaſtations of War. Read what follows, and you will find there the Character of a good man: (i) Conſtantiam preſtitebant Ordines, & res ad vim ſpectabat: Sed bonus ſenex Comitibus Manderſcheidio & Nuenario, nobilitatis in Archiepiſcopatu facile primis, ita ſuadentibus obtemperans, tum miſericordia Populi ſui motus, & ne bello vaſtaretur provincia, ultro ceſſit, fidemque & jusjurandum omnibus remiſit. Obiit poſt annos ſex Idibus Auguſti anno 1552, in patria ſua, &, ut Sleidanus loquitur, quietem expetivit, finem habuit. Nam, aut Evangelii propagare doctrinam, & recte conſtituere ſua ditionis Eccleſias, aut privato ſibi vivere licere, non ſemel optaverat: Et ab amicis aliquando monitus, quantum invidiæ ſibi conflaret ex iſta religionis mutatione, reſpondere ſolebat: nihil eſſe, quod inopinanti poſſet accedere, ſeque jam pridem in omnem caſum obfirmaſſe mentem. Eraſmus would have admired this Conduct, he being ſo charmed with a ſaying of Otho, that he thought it very well deſerved the Roman Empire. Otho finding that he could not diſpute the Empire without prolonging the War, choſe rather to die than occaſion its continuation. (k) Cum inter ethnicos etiam hoc animo repertus ſit Otho, ut potius ducerit ſpontanea morte vitam abrumpere, quam imperium tot hominum vita mercari, vir vel ob hoc ipſum dignus imperio, ſi fortuna virtuti faveret. This Thought hath ſomething in it ſo Heroick, that it is Pity ſuch an effeminate Perſon as Otho ſhould diſcover ſo much greatneſs of mind. But his Body and Mind were not of the ſame temper (l): The former was drowned in Effeminacy, but the latter retained a large ſhare of Vigour; I ſpeak of that ſort of force which forms it ſelf on the Ideas of Equity. He always abhorred Civil Wars, and never would have attempted to ſet up againſt Galba, if he had not believed that Affair would terminate without any effuſion of blood. (m) Othonem etiam privatum uſque adeo deteſtatum civilia arma, ut memorante quodam inter epulas de Caſſii Brutique exitu cohorruerit: nec concurſurum cum Galba fuiſſe, niſi confideret ſine bello rem tranſigi poſſe. When he reſolved to kill himſelf, he had a ſufficient number of Forces to have continued the War with juſt hopes of ſucceſs; but becauſe it would have coſt the lives of great numbers of Men, he concluded that it would be to buy the preſervation of a Crown at too dear a rate. This was what Eraſmus thought ſo excellent, having read it in Tacitus and Suetonius. (n) Hunc, inquit, (Otho) animum, hanc virtutem veſtram ultra periculis objicere, nimis grande vitæ meæ pretium puto—— Civile bellum à Vitellio cœpit; & ut de principatu certaremus armis, initium illic fuit: ne pluſquam ſemel certemus, penes me exemplum erit, hinc Othonem poſteritas æſtimet—— An ego tantum Romanæ pubis, tot egregios exercitus, ſterni rurſus, & Reip. eripi patiar? Eraſmus would not have failed to approve the pacifick modeſty of our Herman, had he lived to that time; but I don't think he would have ſaid, that it was leſs ſurprizing in a Biſhop than in a Pagan.

(i) Id. ib. See alſo Beza in iconibus. Non modo, ſays he, conſcientiam tuam liberaſti, ſed teipſum quoque memorabili vi majori ſeculis omnibus exemplo ſuperaſti, quum ultro cedens, paternis bonis contentus, placide Chriſtianeque vivere, quam licet immerito ereptam dignitatem tuorum ſubditorum ſanguine tutari maluiſti.

(k) Eraſm. epiſt. de- dic. Sue- tonii, Dio- nis, Caſ- ſii &c.

(l) Non ... ra Otho- nis mollis & corpo- ri ſimilis animus. Tacit. hiſt. lib. 1. c.

(m) Sue- ton. in O- thone cap. 10.

(n) Tacit. hiſtor. lib. 2. cap. 47. Theſe are Suetoni- us's words, ubi ſupra cap. 9. Moriendi imperium cepit: ut multi nec fruſtra opinantur, magis pu- dore, ne tanto re- rum ho- minum- que peri- culo do- minatio- nem ſibi aſſerere perſeve- raret, quam de- ſperatio- ne ulla, aut diffidentia copiarum.

(E) Rather a good than Learned Man—— he was not ignorant.] Here's another Paſſage of Father Maimbourg: "(o) He was (p) very ignorant, "and utterly unacquainted with what a Prelate "ought to know, even to that degree, that he had "not Latin enough to enable him to ſay Maſs "and read his Breviary. In effect, when the Land-"grave of Heſſe (2), who took him into his Pro-"tection after his perverſion, one day told the Em-"peror, that the only Crime of that Archbiſhop "was his attempting to reform his Church: Alas, "anſwered that Prince, What can that poor ignorant "Man reform, who very hardly underſtands a little "Latin? He never could ſay above three Maſſes in his "life, two of which I have heard, and am witneſs "that he could not even read the Introit. All thoſe "excellent Canons of his Council which are ſo well "expreſſed, were not made by him who knew no-"thing of the matter, but by the celebrated Do-"ctor Gropperus, Archdeacon of the Church of "Cologne, (o) Maim- bourg, ſupra p 265.

(1) Rou Pont. Comm. Sleid. l.

(2) Sleid. l. 17.

in Moreri's Dictionary (F) is one of the moſt enormous that can be detected. In the Paris Moreri of 1699, our Herman's Article † runs according to Maimbourg's words.

WILHEM (David LE-LEU DE) Counſellor in the Council of the Prince of Orange, and in that of Brabant, deſerves to be placed amongſt the Illuſtrious Men of the XVII Century. He was deſcended from a very Noble (A) and Antient Family, and born at Hamburg on the 15th of May, 1588. His Mother who (B) joined to the Nobility of the Blood a large portion of Piety, and Zeal for the Proteſtant Religion, educated him very well; ſhe ſent him to ſtudy at Stade, at ten years of Age, under the direction of very good Tutors: And after he had improved, at Hanau, by the Lectures of John George Crabius, and John Rodolphus Lavaterus, ſhe carried him to the Univerſity of Franeker, where he continued three Years, and in 1611 went from thence to Leyden, where he made great advances in Philoſophy, the Civil Law, and the Oriental Languages, &c. After which, he went to France, and made ſome ſtay in the Academy of Saumur, and afterwards in 1613, went to lodge at Thouars, in the Houſe of the Learned Andrew Rivet, who ſhewed him (C) all the marks of a very particular eſteem, on account amongſt other excellencies of the Theological Learning he had acquired. He improved himſelf very much by his Levantin Voyages to Grand Cairo, Jeruſalem, Alexandria, &c. in the Years, 1617, 1618, 1619. He was very intimate with Cyril Lucaris, and frequently conferred with him concerning the differences betwixt the Greek and Latin Churches. He received ſeveral Letters from * that famous Patriarch, which very well deſerve Printing; and his Heirs promiſe accordingly to publiſh them for the ſatisfaction of the curioſity of the Learned. After his return from

† [illegible]

* See the Remark E.

“ Gropper, who drew them up, and put them in the “ condition we now ſee them in.” It is certain, that Sleidan (a) relates this Diſcourſe betwixt the Emperor and the Landgrave; but he adds, that the Landgrave replied, that this Archbiſhop had very carefully read the German Books, and underſtood Religion. Sed diligenter evolvit libros Germanicos, ait ille, & quod certo novi religionem intelligit. Melanchthon informs us, that this Prelate diſcovered a clear Underſtanding, when the Model of the Reformation was examined in his preſence: (b) Legi ſibi totum librum juſſit, attentiſſime audivit, multis de pleriſque locis graviter diſſeruit, quædam ſuo judicio recte mutavit, interdum noſtras ſententias, re expenſa, ſuæ opinioni prætulit. Huic labori dies ſex tribuit, ac quotidie matutinas horas quatuor continuas. Miratus ſum Senis aſſiduitatem & diligentiam, ac animadverti ſerio hanc rem tantam ab eo agi; quod, quantum referat, intelligis. Et has controverſias, peritus artifex, dijudicat.

(F) The Error committed in the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary is one of the moſt enormous.]. “ It was “ by expreſs order of Herman, that Cardinal John “ Gropper was ſtrangled with his Hatband for endea- “ vouring to oppoſe this new Religion,” are the words of the Supplement (c). It would be very difficult to form probable Conjectures concerning this horrible Falſity, if the Author had not cited Beza; but when we repair to the place which he points at, we find what was the occaſion of his miſtake, and then our ſurprize continues, and what is more, encreaſes. Beza compares our Herman to JESUS CHRIST, and John Gropper to Judas. He pretends that Gropper betrayed his Maſter, and obtained for a Recompence, a ſtring which ſtrangled him, that is to ſay, a Cardinal's Hat. (d) Iu vero haud ſecus quam olim a Juda CHRISTUS a tuo Joanne Groppero proditus quum eſſes, retulit quidem hic quoque proditor ſtipendium peccati mortem Cardinalitii Galeri vinculis ſtrangulatus. It would be infinitely more excuſable to ſay with Father Maimbourg, that Beza (e) childiſhly aiming at Wit, made a wretched dull Jeſt, than to find in of those words an execrable crime of the Archbiſhop of Cologne.

(A) Deſcended from a very Noble and antient family.] Which took place amongſt the Nobility of Artois, and Cambreſis in the year 1096, being, beſides other Eſtates, then poſſeſſed of the Lordſhips and Seats of Banteux, Bantouſel, Wilhem, Contemerle, Froidebize and Aveſne lez Gobert, &c. as appears by a deciſion of the Council of Brabant at Bruſſels, on the 5th of July 1676. George LE-LEU DE WILHEM, the Father of him who makes the Subject of this Article, left Tournay at the beginning of the Troubles about Religion, being himſelf, together with his five Brothers, Out-law'd for having buried their Mother without obſerving the Ceremonies required by the Romiſh Communion. It appears by an Authentick Act of the 22d of December 1565, that their Eſtates were confiſcated; but they endeavour'd to releaſe themſelves from this Act, after the Year 1576, by virtue of the Pacification of Ghent. James LE-LEU DE WILHEM, one of the ſix Brothers, took refuge in England, and firſt married Margaret de Zegre, and his ſecond Wife was Mary de Duyts. By the firſt Lady, beſides other Children, he had Timothy LE-LEU DE WILHEM, born at London the 26th of November 1568, and Lord of Borgeria Finges lez Courtrai. By the Second, he had beſides, others, Michael LE-LEU DE WILHEM, born the 27th of September 1587, who died Counſellor and Schepen of the Hague, and was married at Delft the 25th of May 1614, to Anne de Rechtere Niece to the Secretary Adrian Duyck: (f) His Siſter married M. Dudley Carlton (g), King James his Ambaſſador in Holland (h).

(B) His Mother who joined to the Nobility of the Blood.] Her Name was Gilliette Van Opalſens: ſhe was the Daughter of John Van Opalſens, Eſquire, and of Joan l'Empereur d'Oppyck, Siſter to John l'Empereur d'Oppyck; (i) Lord of Malerit, &c. who was deputed to the Dutcheſs of Parma, Governeſs of the Low Countries, by the City of Tournay, in conjunction with the Confederated Nobility. His Son Antony l'Empereur d'Oppyck was the Father of Conſtantin L'EMPEREUR, born at Bremen in 1591. Profeſſor of Divinity at Leyden, and Counſellor to Prince Maurice, a Perſon very well verſed in the Oriental Tongues, as he hath evinced by ſeveral Books. He was twice married, firſt to Levina de Witt, Daughter of the Lord of Roſenburgh, Counſellor of Amſterdam. Secondly, To Catherine Thyſius of Kynogen. He died in 1648, leaving only one Daughter, Sarah l'Empereur d'Oppyck, who married Mark du Tour, Gentleman to the Prince of Orange, Father to the King of England. He died Counſellor in the court of Brabant. But after this digreſſion juſtly due to the merit of Conſtantin l'Empereur, I return to the Mother of our David Wilhem. She was at Paris on the fatal St. Bartholomew's day, and was ſaved, as it were, by Miracle; her Huſband was then at Rouen, and was alſo preſerved. Her Father, John Van Opalſens, had the ſame good fortune ſome years before. He was condemned to death for his Religion, the Sentence was pronounced; but he eſcaped out of the Priſon of Tournay by the connivance of the Goaler, and fled into England.

(C) Andrew Rivet, who ſhewed him all the marks of a particular eſteem.] To know the mutual Friendſhip

(f) I keep cloſely to the Memorial imparted to the Bookſeller.

(g) Who had by her a Daughter, that is ſtill living (in 1696.) She is the Widow of my Lord Ferers, and Mother of the Counteſs of Aran, Widow of a Son of the Duke of Hamilton, Mother of an only Daughter, who is a very rich heireſs.

(h) Taken from a Memorial imparted to the Bookſeller. Idem dic de pleriſque infra memorandis.

(i) He married the Heireſs of the Houſe of Aigremont, Lady de Malerit, &c.

from this long Voyage, he reſided ſeveral Years with his Brother at Amſterdam (D); but his earneſt deſire of a more perfect Knowledge of the Oriental Tongues, and an Inclination to the Levant, engaged him to make a ſecond Voyage thither in 1625. It is certain, that he travelled like a Learned Man, that is to ſay, he made excellent and curious Obſervations, acquiring beſides an accurate Knowledge of the * Arabick, Perſian, and Chaldaick Tongues. He was met in thoſe Countries by the Learned Golius, (E) who was recommended to him; and they contracted ſuch a cordial and intimate mutual Friendſhip as laſted as long as their Lives. Being returned to Holland about the Year 1631, he raiſed ſuch an eſteem in Frederick Henry, Prince of Orange, as procured him the place of Counſellor in his Highneſs's Council at the Hague. He married a Siſter of the celebrated Mr. de || Zuylichem, a Lady of great (F) parts. He had ſome Children by her, as we ſhall ſee below. The States General having made very conſiderable Conqueſts in the Province of Brabant, by the victorious Arms of Prince Fredrick Henry, augmented the Council of that Province in 1634, beſtowed a place of Counſellor on our Mr. de WILHEM, and made him Superintendant of that Country in 1640. As he loved and underſtood the Sciences and the Liberal Arts, the great Buſineſs, which ſo many Poſts threw on him, never hindred his ſtudying hard, and maintaining (G) an extenſive epiſtolatory Correſpondence with the Learned. He took pleaſure in protecting and ſerving them on all occaſions at the Court and elſewhere. He had a very fine Library, furniſhed with the moſt excellent Books in all Faculties, beſides

* Beſides the former European Languages, which he underſtood in perfection, he could eaſily ſpeak moſt Languages that are now ſpoken in Europe, and Aſia.

|| See his Article.

ſhip which they contracted, and the peculiar value which Mr. Rivet had for him, no more is neceſſary than to caſt our Eyes on the (a) Epiſtle Dedicatory to his Commentary on the Decalogue. He alſo gives a very great character of the Virtue, Learning, Piety, and other excellent Qualities of David Wilhem.

(D) With his Brother at Amſterdam.] That is, with Paul LE LEU DE WILHELM, the Father of David LE LEU DE WILHEM, yet (b) alive, and Preſident of the Schepens, and Receiver of the City of Amſterdam. His Lady is Hildegonda Van Beuningen, Siſter to the late Mr. Conrad Van Beuningen, ſo well known by his Embaſſies.

(E) By the Learned Golius, who was recommended to him.] I have ſeen the Original of the Letter which Mr. Rivet wrote to Mr. de Wilhem, (c) the 29th of October 1625, and from thence extracted theſe words, Servo adhuc tibi literas itineris tui Hieroſolymitani, & eas quas a Patriarcha Alexandrino acceptas mihi communicaſti quas vel tibi, vel ei qui tuo nomine eas petet, reſtituam cùm volueris. Commendatione mea apud te non opus habet Clariſſ. Golius, vir in rara eruditione, rara pietate & modeſtia præditus, noſtro defuncto Erpenio intimus, & mihi tam proprio nomine quam tali neceſſitudine chariſſimus &c. This informs us that Mr. Rivet was, at that time, the Depoſitory of the Patriarch Cyril's Letters to Mr. de Wilhem. He has acquainted the Publick with the correſpondence which his Friend kept up with Cyril; as appears by theſe words which we find in the Epiſtle Dedicatory which I have already alledged. (d) Ex iis (regionibus) etiam ex ipſa Ægypto, quæ tabernaculo Dei inſervirent abſtuliſti non pauca, aliis liberaliter communicaturus, ad communem utilitatem. Inter quæ non minima ſunt, quæ ex intimâ illâ admiſſione cum Reverendiſſ. Cyrillo tum Patriarcha Alexandrino, hauſiſti; cujus communicationis fructus, & ſedulitatis tuæ in eo de rebus noſtris plenius informando utilitatem, ringentibus adverſariis, etiamnum colligimus & percipimus, poſtquam evectus eſt ad ſummam inter Orientales Chriſtianos dignitatem. Quæ argumento ſunt, quanta fuerit in te propagandæ veræ Religionis cura, etiam inter remotiſſimos a nobis.

(F) A Lady of great parts. He had ſome Children by her.] Her Name was Conſtantia Huygens, and ſhe was very well read. M. Deſcartes highly eſteemed her, and voluntarily, as well as with great deference, deſired to know her Opinion on the new Philoſophical Idea's which he had invented. She ſurvived her Huſband about ten Years, and died the firſt of December 1667. very much regretted by all the judicious People of the Hague. M. de Wilhem left behind him three Daughters and one Son, Maurice LE LEU DE WILHEM, at preſent Dean of the Council and Feodal Court of Brabant, at the Hague, who is a very fine Gentleman, enriched with a very great ſtock of Learning and Merit; and his Converſation is attended with a thouſand Charms. I can indeed ſpeak by experience, he being one of the firſt Acquaintance which I had the honour to make at my arrival in Holland. After he had compleated his Studies, he travelled in Italy, France, Germany, Hungary, Sweden, and ſeveral other places, where he render'd himſelf conſiderable to all eminent Perſons. He accompanied Mr. de Zuylichem his Uncle to Orange in 1665, when that Principality was reſtored with all the neceſſary Formalities to its Lawful Sovereign. He then went out Doctor of Law with great applauſe (e). He hath been always very curious, not only in the Antiquities of his own Country, but the Roman alſo. And accordingly, his ſtrong Inclination for that ſtudy interrupted that of the practical part of the Law in 1670. in order to travel a ſecond time in a more advanced age; and having ſtaid ſome Months at Paris, he ſet forward for Italy with Don Franciſco (f) Brancaccio, Nephew to the Cardinal of that name, and in company with Meſſieurs de Grancei, the Sons of the Marſhal of that name. He ſtayed a whole Year at Rome, in order to ſearch into whatever was remarkable in that famous City. Being returned into Holland, he ſtrenuouſly applied himſelf to inquire into the Law of Nations, and the intereſts of the Princes and States of Europe. His Genius prompted him to it, and his Acquaintance with ſeveral Languages furniſhed him with great helps for that ſtudy. In November 1671, he went into Sweden with his Ecellency Mr. de Haren, Ambaſſador from the United Provinces, and was choſen by the States General to take care of their Affairs at that Court (g), when that Ambaſſador was upon his return. Beſides which, the ſame States beſtowed on him the place of Counſellor in the Court of Brabant, in the place of Mr. Fagel, promoted to be their Regiſter. Having acquired a very conſiderable Acquaintance at the Court of Sweden, and ſtanding very well with the Chancelor de la Gardie, and the other Senators of that Kingdom, the States of Holland reſolved in June 1673, to ſend him to that Court, with the Character of Deputy extraordinary of the United Provinces. And the following Year he was twice nominated to the Office of Counſellor of Holland, firſt on the part of the Cities, and afterwards on the part of the Nobility. In 1683, he married the Eldeſt Daughter of Mr. Timmers, Burgomaſter of Rotterdam, who has been Director of the India Company, and ſeveral times Deputy to the Admiralty of the Maes (b).

(G) An extenſive epiſtolary Correſpondence with the Learned.] And above all, with Salmaſius, Heurnius, Rivet, Deſcartes, Heinſius, Voſſius, Junius, Manaſſeh Ben Iſrael, who dedicated his Treatiſe de Creatione

(a) Ad ampliſſimum præſtantiſſimum pietate & multiplici eruditione virum D. Davidem de Wilhem.

(b) I write this in the year 1696.

(c) Who was then at Aleppo.

(d) Andreas Rivetus epiſt. dedicator. commentar. in Decalog. oper. tom. 1. pag. 1223.

(e) See M. Cha bron's Re lation Printed Orange in 1666. p. 161.

(f) He had been Captain Horſe in the ſervi of the King of Spain in the Low Countri (g) By a Reſolu taken 26th. August 1672.

(b) Ta (as to ters of from a Memo impart to the Bookſell sides a large number of ‡ very curious Manuscripts in Arabick, Persian, Chaldaick, &c. The Present of (H) Mummies, Manuscripts, and such other Rarities, which he made to the University of Leyden, is still preserved there as an Ornament. He died of the Stone on the [illegible] of January 1658, having faithfully, and with great application, served three Princes of Orange, namely Frederick Henry, William II. and William Henry, at present, King of England §.

WIMPINA (Conrad) Theological Professor at Francfort on the Oder, in the XVIth Century, was born at Buchen †. He acquired a great repute by his publick as well as private Lectures at Leipsick, in Philosophy, Divinity and Poetry, &c. He had great crowds of Auditors, and at the same time raised the Envy of no small number, who in vain endeavour'd to obscure his Glory; in order to which, not being able to succeed by the sophistical Subtilties which they propos'd to him, and he Learnedly answered, they had recourse to Calumnies and Libels. Upon which he was obliged to appear at the Tribunal of the Archbishop of Magdeburg, where he triumphed over his Enemies. He was in a splendid manner promoted to the degree of Doctor of Divinity: A Cardinal Legate, to whom he harangued in St. Paul's Church at Leipsick, and who admired his Eloquence, caused that Degree to be conferred on him. Wimpina was presented by the whole Faculty of Divinity. The Reputation of this Doctor advanced so high, that the Marquisses of Brandenburg designing to found an University at Francfort on the Oder, made him Offers of a very considerable Salary to be Professor there. He accordingly accepted that Chair, and went thither ‡ to lay the Foundation of that University, where he became Rector of two Colleges, and first Professor of Divinity. He Published (A) several Books ‡. He was one of Luther's (B) Antagonists; and passed for the real Author of * the Theses which appeared under the Name of the Dominican John Tezelius against this Reformer.

WOUWER (John de) One of the Learned Men of the XVI Century, and Author (A) of several Books, was of Hamburg, and the Son of a || Refugee in Germany on account of Religion. He was born on the 10th of March 1574, and having run through the School Studies in his Native Country, was sent to Leyden in 1592, where he spent five Years in an intimate familiarity with the most Learned Men, and even with the great Scaliger. From thence he went to France, where Gestione (a) to him. The Letters which he received from them and several other illustrious Men, lie in heaps amongst the Papers of his Son Mr. de Wilhem, who if he had but leisure to select them, would find great numbers of which he might make a considerable Present to the Commonwealth of Learning.

(H) The Present ——— which he made to the University of Leyden.] Of which here is a publick Testimony: (c) Il mihi silentio non est prætereundum, quod erga hanc nostram Academiam, studiorum tuorum olim promotricem, matrem proinde tuam, liberalem admodum te præbueris: factum est enim id curâ tuâ & ære tuo, ut Theatrum in eâ Anatomicum, tot raris & pretiosis κειμηλίοις, exterorum omnium qui illud invisunt animos in admirationem rapiat; inter quæ eminent duo condita cadavera (Mumias vocant) antiquissima, quæ in Ægypto eruta, & a te redempta, integerrima, te mittente, ad nos pervenerunt.

(A) He Published several Books.] The anonymous Author of the Catalogue of illustrious Men, Published by Joachim John Maderus (d), mentions several Books written by Wimpina, before the Year 1514, but makes no distinction between those already Printed, and those which were not. However the Catalogue of them runs as follows: Editio proprietatum logicalium in commentatione non vulgari libri iv. De erroribus Philosophorum in fide Christiana. De nobilitate cælestium corporum. De eo an animati cæli possint dici. De nobilitate animarum cæli. De fato opus insigne & præclarum. Palillogia de Theologico fastidio. Panegyrici de Christi mirabilitate ac sublimitate. Apologeticus in sacræ Theologiæ defensionem. Apologia secunda contra obtrectationem Theologiæ. Apologia tertia ad Mollerstatinas offensiones & denigrationes S. Theologiæ. Apologia quarta contra Laconismum Mellerstat. pro defensione Theologiæ. Apologia quinta pro repressione errorum Mellerstat. Cribratio in tergiversationes Martini Mollerstat. De ortu, progressu, & fructu S. Theologiæ. Super sententias libri IV. Præcepta coagmentandi rhetoricè orationes. Opus quodlibeticæ disputationis mirum & varium. Orationes & carmina. I don't in the least doubt but this Martin Mellerstat, against whom Wimpina so often drew his Pen, was the same Martin Melrstat of whom our Anonymous Author speaks particularly under number 31, and of whose Works he inserts a Catalogue, amongst which we find no track of his Controversy with Wimpina. This Martin Melrstat bore the Name of his Country which is situated, in Franconia, and taught the Thomists Philosophy at Leipsick, for the space of Twenty Years, with great Reputation; after which, he applied himself to the study of Physick, and being admitted Doctor in that Science, became so famous, that Frederick, Elector of Saxony, chose him for his Physician (e).

What I have further to say of Wimpina is, that his Book de Divinatione is one of his principal Works; but he is charged (f) with stealing it from Picus Mirandula. Which therefore affords us another Author to add to Thomasius his Catalogue of Plagiaries. This Tract de Divinatione was printed with several others of Wimpina, at Cologne in 1531, in Folio. And Three Tomes of the said Author were Published at Francfort on the Oder, in 1528, de Sectis, Erroribus, ac Schismatis, together with the Treatises de Prædestinatione & de Fortuna in Folio.

(B) He was one of Luther's Antagonists.] He was one of the Four (g) Brandenburg Divines who in 1530 refuted the Articles of Faith which Luther had Published, and which served for a Foundation to the Augsburg Confession. He was one of those Divines whom the Catholick Princes brought to the Dyet that year. They chose the most able Disputants (h); and finding that the first Conferences betwixt the Deputies on both sides, did not make way for an Accomodation, and suspecting the Multitude of Disputants, on each side, kept them at a distance from the ways of peace, they reduced the whole number of Divines to three of each side only. Those of the Roman Catholick Party were Eccius, Wimpina, and Cochlæus (i). Whence we may conclude that Mr. Konig is mistaken in placing Conrad Wampina's death in 1529.

(A) Author of several Books.] He Published, with [illegible] David de Wilhem [illegible] e tenebris [illegible] compositum a Lupo Servato Abbate [illegible] [illegible] discipulo, qui vixit [illegible] & mihi communicavit.

|| See the Remark C.

(c) [illegible]

(d) At Helmstad in the year 1660, in 4to.

(e) Ex centuria Scriptor. insignium in lucem edita a Joach. Joh. Madero.

(f) Tot[illegible] clam operæ ex Pico plurima. Mart. del. Rio disq. Magic. l. 4. c. 2. quæst. 7. sect. 2 p. m. 247.

(g) Seckend. hist. Lutheran, lib. 2. pag. 152.

(h) Adducti erant a variis principibus in Comitia pugnacissimi ex adversariis Lutheri Seckendorf ibid. pag. 171. n. 1.

(i) Id. ib. pag. 177. n. 16.

where he acquired the Friendſhip of Claudius du Puy, Francis Pithou, and ſeveral other great Men. He afterwards ſpent two Years in Italy, and was received there in a very engaging manner by ſeveral Prelates and Cardinals. He had alſo acceſs to the Pope, who diſcovered ſeveral Marks of his Affection for him, and offer'd him a very honourable Penſion. Being return'd to Germany, he accepted the Poſt of Counſellor to the Count of Eaſt Frieſland, and was his Envoy at the Hague in the Treaty for the Pacification, of Embden as he was afterwards at the Court of John Adolphus, Duke of Holſtein. Which Prince was ſo charmed with him at the firſt Converſation, that he obliged him to bind himſelf by an Oath, to engage in his Service. And he was accordingly honoured with the dignity of being his Counſellor, and advanced to the Government of Gottorp. But after three Years diſcharging that Office, he fell into a Diſeaſe which waſted him by ſlow degrees, and died on the 30th of March 1612, to the extreme regret of his Maſter, who cauſed him to be pompouſly interr'd in the great Church at Sleſwick ||. He held an Epiſtolary (B) correſpondence with the moſt Learned Men of Holland, and of ſeveral other Countries. He neither wanted Learning, nor other good qualifications; but we are told that his Faults were not leſs than his Virtues *. Being Born a Proteſtant (C) he embraced the Romiſh Religion in Italy; or at leaſt it was reported ſo. He is alſo ranked amongſt the (D) Plagiaries.

He

|| Taken from Henningus Witte in memoria Woweriana page 79. & ſeq. of the memoriæ philoſophorum.

* See the Remark E.

Notes the Works of Sidonius Apollinaris, Petronius, Firmicus de errore profanarum religionum, Minutius Felix, and Apuleius, beſides ſeveral Notes on Tertullian, a Tract de polymathia, a diſſertation de cognitione veterum novi orbis. Dies æſtiva ſeu de Umbra. A Panegyrick on Chriſtian the IV. King of Denmark. We have alſo two Centuries of his Latin Letters, and a Syntagma de Græca & Latina Bibliorum interpretatione (a).

(B) He held an Epiſtolary correſpondence with the moſt Learned.] Which appears by the Collection of his Letters Printed with his Syntagma de Græca & Latina Bibliorum interpretatione. See Mr. Morhof's Opinion of them. (b) Variæ hic inſtitutæ ſunt de multis rebus literariis conſultationes & judicia: nam multa, quæ agitabantur illo tempore inter viros literatos, his in epiſtolis recenſentur. Scriptæ illæ ſunt ad illuſtres ejus temporis viros, Scaligerum, Meurſium, Heinſium, Gruterum, Scriverium & plures alios, cum quibus non niſi erudita tractari poterant. Epiſtolas ejus multas ineditas ſervat illuſtris Gudius, latitant & aliquæ inter MSta Bibliothecæ Hamburgenſis.

(C) Being Born a Proteſtant he embraced the Romiſh Religion in Italy.] Nicolas de Wouwer his Father, (c) a Perſon deſcended from an Ancient Noble Family, left the Low Countries on Account of the perſecution of the Proteſtants there, and ſetled at Hamburg; a manifeſt proof that the Subject of this Article was Born a Proteſtant. Baudius's Letters inform us that he changed his Religion. (d) Illud pro certo habetur, eum Romæ publicitus religionem abjuraſſe, nullo metu qui in virum conſtantem cadere poſſit, ſed contemptu & inſcitia pietatis, vel (quod his potentius eſt apud mentes præcipiti ambitione afflatas) ſpe conſequendæ alicujus opimæ largitionis. Sed, ut audio, eſca elapſa eſt, ſolum hamum retinuit. In the 2. Tome (e) of the Faſciculus rerum expetendarum & fugiendarum, there is a Letter from one (f) Francis Broccard, in which our (g) John de Wouwer is ranked amongſt the Learned Men who having apoſtatized, Favoured the deſigns of the Inquiſition at Rome. But read the Letter which he wrote to Baudius, and you will there find him denying this Abjuration of his Religion; and only owning that he diſliked ſeveral things in the Reformation of Luther and Calvin. (h) Non nego profecto eos, qui religionem reformandam ſuſceperunt, multa, quæ fortaſſe diſſuenda erant, pio ſed improvido zelo tota reſcidiſſe, hoc me ſerio improbare aperte fateor: neque illa ſententia heri aut hodie mihi nata, ſed ex illo tempore quo aliquem veri guſtum ſenſus communis mihi ſuggeſſit, hoc ſi omnes in me improbant, ne iraſcor quidem. Mihi vero ita ſentire liberum erit, & oſtendere ſuam cuique ſponſam eſſe pulchram.

(D) He is ranked amongſt the Plagiaries.] The Learned Mauſſac after telling us that ſince Caſaubon could not put his laſt Hand to his Book of the Studies of the Ancients, he would one day treat of that Subject himſelf if he had leaſure, adds that Wouwer interfered with Caſaubon, without publiſhing any thing but what he had taken from that Critick. It is ſuppoſed that Wouwer appropriated this Rich Treaſure to himſelf when he was at Montpellier with Caſaubon. (i) De Iſaaco Caſaubono loquor, in cujus meſſem falcem injecit Joannes Wouer vir certe ingenii non vulgaris, ſed qui opus imperfectum reliquit, quamvis omne quod edidit à Caſaubono habuerit, dum una cum eo agebat Monſpelii. The Book out of which I cite theſe Words was Printed at Toulouſe in 1615. and that of Wouwer which Mauſſac means is Intituled de polymathia tractatio, and was Printed in (k) 1603. Several reports to the diſadvantage of Wouwer had run abroad before Mauſſac Publiſhed this Accuſation. Wouwer proteſted his Innocence in a Letter (l) which he wrote in 1605. And Baudius to whom it was addreſſed, writ to him in Anſwer that thoſe Rumors were vaniſhed, and that he ought not to aſcribe their riſe to Caſaubon. (m) Refrixit jam ſermo leviſſimorum hominum, qui Polymathian ſuam Plagii ſuſpicione infamabant. Caſaubonus vir melior & candidior eſt, quam ut hujus culpæ inſimulandus eſſe videatur. He ſent him beſides a fragment of a Letter of Caſaubon, by which it appears, that without ever complaining of any Plagiariſm that Learned Critick very much commended Wouwer's Book. See alſo what Baudius wrote (n) to Meſſieurs du Puy the ſame Year; but above all ſee Thomaſius's Preface to the new Edition of the Treatiſe de Polymathia, which ſtrenuouſly refutes Mr. Mauſſac. Mr. Morhof mentions this particular, and cites Schoockius, who ſays that this Reproach of Mauſſac proceeded from envy, and that Voſſius was Guilty of ſtealing from Wouwer. (o) Ex invidiâ profectum hoc Mauſſaci judicium Martinus Schockius Confutatione Fab. Hamel. p. 2. c. 4. exiſtimat. Ex ipſo autem Wouwerio multa cepiſſe, ſuppreſſo ejus nomine, Voſſium etiam Schockius loco laudato, & Joannes Jonſſius lib. 1. deſcrip. Hiſt. Phil. c. 10. p. 49. teſtatur. Scaliger (p) reported the ſame in Converſation which Mauſſac did in Print; and generally called Wouwer a great Plagiary, and retailer of Traſh. Notwithſtanding which he highly Compliments him (q) in his Letters.

Lindenbrock was violently enraged againſt him. He accuſes him of a Thouſand Plagiariſms, particularly in his little Book de umbra. (r) He tells us that Wouwer finding that Tract amongſt Gulielmius's Papers, only alter'd the form of it, and interwove

(a) Taken from Henningus Witte, memor. philoſoph. p. 81, 82.

(b) Morhofius, Polyhiſt. lib. 1. c. 24. pag. 304. He ſays that Edition was publiſh'd at Hamburg in 1608. But how can this be reconciled with what M. Witte ſays ubi ſupra pag. 82. that Elmenhorſt put out that Syntagma in the Year 1618.

(c) Illuſtri Baronum ſtirpe oriundus Id. ib. cap. 1. pag. 7.

(d) Baudius, epiſt. 69. centuriæ 1. p. m. 101. It is dated the 18 of February 1603.

(e) page 875. (f) See concerning this Man the Hiſtory of the Edict of Nantes, tom. 1. p. 374. & ſeq. (g) He is there call'd wrong Johannes Wourenius Amburgenſis. (h) Joh. à Wouwer epiſtola ad Baudium pag. 110. 'Tis the 73 of the 1. Century of Baudius's Letters.

(i) Philippus Jacobus Mauſſacus, notis in Plutarchum de fluviis pag. 149.

(k) The Edition I make uſe of is of that Year, ex bibliopolio Frobeniano. Thomaſius de plagio literario pag. 261. mentions only that of Hamburg 1604.

(l) 'Tis the 7th of the 2. Century of Baudius's Letters in the Leyden Edition 1650.

(m) Baudius, epiſt. 9. centur. 2. p. 16

(n) Monui vos jampridem diſſipatum fuiſſe rumorem de Wouwerio noſtro quaſi plagio domeſtico ſublegerit potiſſimam partem ſuæ polymathiæ. Baudius epiſt. 3. cent. 2. pag. 155. (o) Morhofius, Polyh. lib. 1. c. 1. p. 7. (p) See the Scaligerana at the Word Wouwerius. (q) See Scaliger's Letters. (r) It is intituled dies æſtiva, ſive de umbra Paegnion. It was Printed in 1610. My Edition is that of Oxford 1636 in 12.

He was too vainly fond of (E) Flattery, as appears by his Testamentary Legacy to those who should write a Panegyrick on him, after his Death. Baudius his Epistles to him, are an instance of the little sincerity (F) to be met with in the Compliments usually made to Authors. Some Writers confound our John de Wouwer with another (G) of the same Name, who studied under Lipsius, of whom I shall speak in a Remark.

XENOCRATES

were some Latin Verses which were made by another hand (a) Lindenbrogium Wolfs quondam is semper infensum habuit: superfunt etiam Lindenbrogii tum in Bibliotheca Hamburgensi, tum in Gudiana, Epistolæ, quibus ille acerbe insultat. Vocat illum homo m con latr[illegible] nomine (à barbando.) Multa in illo plagia notat, ac in aliqua epistola hæc de illo habet, ejus de Umbra Tractatum inter plagia recensens: Quem novissime edidit librum tenebricosum umbratilis ille, inter doctissimi optimique viri Jani Gulielmi Chelsas repertum ajunt: in quo id tamen præstitit, quod aliam illi vestem induit, & suo more exoravit. Nam & carmina, quæ passim intermixta, non adulteri hujus fuerunt, sed Scholæ Schlefwicensis Rectoris, viri eruditi & probi, qui etiam nunc vivit, & id aperte fatetur. Epistola hæc scripta est Hamburgi an. 1613. Gravis hæc in illum virum injuria est, & nescio quid acerbitatis sapit. In alia epistola passim in eum invehitur, ac plura ejus plagia notat.

(E) He was too vainly fond of Flattery.] This Testamentary promise took effect; for in hopes of the engaged Sum a parcel of Panegyrists started up, who extolled Wouwer beyond the Sky. But if we had his Life written by Lindenbrock, we should find a great many particulars different from their Relations. (b) Felicior & aliis Eruditis, & ipso Principe suo, Johan. Adolpho, nullos, uti supra (1) monuimus, Encomiastas Posthumos nacto, fuit Joh. Wowerius, Minister Aulæ Gottorp. Primarius. Biographias enim, & Sermones Panegyricos, memoriæ illius sacros, publicarunt Gev. Elmenhorstius, Ad. Olearius, Nic. Johann. Crusius, aliique complures, spe potius Nummi dolosi (Præmii sc. LX. Joachimicorum, quod cuilibet, Laudationem sibi posthumam scripturo, in Tabulis ultimæ Voluntatis Wowerius destinavit,) ipsis affulgente invitati, quam sincero in virum Virtutibus pariter atque Vitiis magnum ducti affectu. Alio haud dubie fine, ut Animo sc. suo, in Wouwerium ob studiorum Æmulationem iniquiori, morem gereret, Vitæ illius Historiam (2) scribere in Animo habuit Frid. Lindebrogius, Civis ipsius, quo rigidiorem Vitiorum ejus Censorem hactenus observavi neminem. The Author of whom I have borrowed these Words, elsewhere observes that Wouwer (c) was a little vain, and frequently talked of himself. Baudius also observed a great presumption in him. Read the following lines: (d) De Wouwerio eadem ad nos fama pervenit, eum id ætatis hominem admiratione doctrinæ (vide & ride ludibria judiciorum) cooptatum in collegium Senatorum sacræ Cæsareæ Majestatis, sed certissimo argumento persuadeor rem ita se (e) non habere, quod cum à reditu suo bis terve scripserit ad Scaligerum, ad Scriverium, ad Franciscum Dousam etiam, cum perhonorifico nostri mentione, tamen ubique miserabiliter insectatur fortunæ suæ malignitatem, nec homo sui ostentator magnificus, quidquam de superbo illo titulo adjicit, quem proculdubio non fuit omissurus, nisi prorsus ab ingenio desciscere vellet. Detepuit jam mucro iracundiæ nostræ adversus eum, quod ex pluribus indiciis apparet eum non tam nocendi animo, quam sui extollendi vanitate solitum detrahere famæ & meritis laudibus amicorum. Dempto certe hoc vitio, multa habet ingenii naturæque dona, quibus supra vulgus sapit, & illustrium virorum amicitiam meretur.

(F) Of the little sincerity to be met with in the compliments usually made to Authors.] Wouwer published a Panegyrick on Christian the IV. King of Denmark in 1603. Upon occasion of which Baudius writing to the Author loads him with praises, but in a Letter to another he speaks of this performance as of a piece full of Faults. What follows will prove the truth of these two particulars: (f) In Dominici Baudii ἀλλοπροσάλλου Epistola ad Wowerium (3) haud parem observet [illegible]. Illic enim non tantum Generosos Wowerii impetus, & ardua felicis Ingenii tentamenta, laudem apud Doctos, Amorem apud Honestos, admirationem apud peritos Rerum Æstimatores, censet Mereri, sed ironice etiam eundem laudat, quod, vividarum & erectarum mentium exemplo, Eloquentiam suam in Panegyrico Præceptiunculis Magistellorum non circumscribat, sed, Artium repagula silenter perrumpens, libero cursu feratur. In Epistola contra ad Corn. Mylium (4). Scaligero [illegible], majori, quam ille, παῤῥησίᾳ, quid in Oratione hac desideret, significat: Affectavit Wowerius, inquit, in Panegyrico sublime & floridum simul genus dicendi. Laudandus ob generosum conatum, etsi interdum languescit, & pellucet nimis Æmulatio Antiquorum. Multa sunt, quæ non Ignavo Lectori placere possunt. Si currum interdum non bene moderatur, magnis tamen excidit ausis. Generosiores Animi, dum vitant humum, sæpe nubes & inania captant. Ætas & posteræ curæ, limabunt, & depascent luxuriem agnatam melioribus Ingeniis. Wouwer himself knew the imperfections of his performance, and made a great many excuses on Account of the hurry he wrote it in, and desired that the World would not judge of his Genius by this Essay. Observe that this Panegyrick was composed on occasion of the Homage which the City of Hamburg paid to his Danish Majesty; but something escaping the Author's Pen which might redound to the prejudice of the Liberties of that City, the Senate prohibited the Sale of it, till the first Pages were corrected (g).

(G) Confound our John de Wouwer with another of the same Name ——— of whom I shall speak.] This other John de (h) WOUWER was Born in 1576. at Antwerp, where he began his studies under the Jesuits, and afterwards went to Louvain, and lived with Lipsius, who had such an affection and high esteem for him, that he Appointed him one of the Executors of his last Will, and recommended the care of his Manuscripts to him alone. This Wouwer having spent three Years in Travelling into France, Spain and Italy, was no sooner returned but he was promoted to the dignity of a Counsellor in his own Country, and afterwards became a Member of both the Councils of the Treasury and War. The Infanta Isabella Clara Eugenia deputed him to Philip IV. King of Spain who dignified him with the Honour of Knighthood. He published some Books, and died on the 23. of September 1635. The World expected from him the publication of two Hundred Epistles written to Lipsius. (i) Father Schottus confounds this Wouwer with that of Hamburg, as Mr. Morhof observes. Duo monenda nobis sunt, saith he (k), in quibus erratum à viris doctis est. Primum est, quod duo confundantur ejus nominis, Antwerpianus & Hamburgensis Polymathiæ Autor. Andreas Schottus hunc Belgam facit in notis ad Proverbia Græca p. 68. sed falso. Lipsius in Epistolâ 8. Kal. Novembr. 1599. ad Antwerpianum illum (l) scripta, utrumque probè distinguit: Janus Wouwerius, inquit, cognominis tuus, si non Gentilis, quam bona tecum fœderatio! Optimum par, nec vel Dii dederint magis ex usu aut Voto. Modestiam & probitatem in eo adolescente semper amavi, & ut vidi primùm (Hamburgi id fuit, ante annos novem) una laudatum illam indolem ivi. Vivat, crescat, & lampada à nobis in hoc cursu jam fessis accipiat: me libeater & judicia tradente. Konig (m) is Guilty of the same mistake, for when he is speaking of our Wouwer, he cites Swertius (n) who mentions only the other. Mr. Mollerus (o) hath collected several mistakes on this head.

(A) He

Morhofii Polyhist. l. 1. c. 21. p. 214.

(d) Baudius epistola 3. centur. 1. p. m 102. 101. This Letter is dated the 11 of February 1603.

(c) Wouwer in a Letter of a later date written to Baudius affirms the truth of it: Me consiliarium Cæsaris electum vera fama fuit. See Baudius's Letters n. 33. cent. 1.

(f) Joh. Mollerus ubi supra parte. 1. p. 187, 188. His Edition of Baudius's Letters does not agree with mine.

(3) Cent. III Ep. 1. p. 490, 491.

(4) Cent. I. n. 66. pag. 157.

(g) See Mollerus ubi supra.

(h) Or rather Vanden Wouwere, according to Valerius Andreas Bibl. Belg. pag. 587.

(i) Taken from Valerius Andreas, ubi supra

(k) Morhof. ubi supra pag. 7. See also Colomies. cap. 2. [illegible]liter.

(l) 'Tis the 41. of the 1. Century ad Belgas.

(m) Konig, bibl. vet. & nova pag. 875.

(n) Page. 487. and the Book he means is Athenæ Belgicæ.

(o) Joh. Mollerus de scriptoribus homonymis pag. 731. & seq.

X.

XENOCRATES, one of the moſt illuſtrious Philoſophers of Antient Greece, was Born at * Chalcedon, and very early placed himſelf under the Direction of Plato, for whom he always retained (A) a profound reſpect, and diſcovered a ſtrict Fidelity to him. He ſtudied under this great Maſter, at the ſame time with Ariſtotle, but was not endowed with the ſame parts; he wanted a ſpur, and the other a Bridle, according to the Judgment of Plato, who farther added, that to place them together would be to Match a Horſe with an Aſs. But if his ‖ ſlow Capacity rendred him far inferior to Ariſtotle, he very much ſurpaſſed him in practical Philoſophy: The Purity of his Manners was ſomewhat extraordinary; his Gravity, Severity, or rather Auſterity were of ſuch a Nature, that a Divine who at preſent ſhould reſemble him would infallibly paſs for a Janſeniſt or a very rigid Man. He had acquired ſuch an abſolute Command of his Paſſions, that a moſt Beautiful Curtezan, who laid (B) that ſhe would ſubdue his Virtue, loſt her Wager, tho' ſhe had the Liberty to Lye by him, which afforded her an opportunity of uſing all her Artifices to Allure him to enjoy her. This is a Triumph as Remarkable as that of Aldhelme, and ſome other canoniſed Saints who have eſcaped untainted from the like Temptations, as we are told. Chaſtity was not the ſole Virtue of this Philoſopher; all the other parts of (C) Temperance ſhone in his Conduct: He Loved neither Pleaſures,

(A) He always retained a profound reſpect for Plato, and diſcovered a ſtrict Fidelity to him.] (a) He Accompanied him in his Voyage to Sicily, and was with him at the Court of Syracuſe. Dionyſius the Tyrant one day in diſcourſe with Plato telling him that ſome body would cut off his Head; no Man ſhall do it, replied Xenocrates (b), before he hath cut off mine. The Tyrant's expreſſion imported the ſame thing (c) as if he had ſaid I will cut off your Head: which gives a great Idea of the Generoſity of Xenocrates. We have already ſeen (d) above what is ſuffered of his Zeal for Plato's Honour when Injuriouſly treated by Ariſtotle. To which I add, that he very patiently bore Plato's Reprimands, and even when by others excited to excuſe himſelf, he made no other Anſwer than this, he treats me ſo for my Advantage. (e) Ξενοκράτης ὁ Χαλκηδόνιος ὑπὸ τοῦ Πλάτωνος εἰς τὸ ἄχαρι (f) σκωπτόμενος, οὐδέποτε ἠγανάκτει ἀλλὰ καὶ πρὸς τὸν παροξύνοντα αὐτὸν ὑπὲρ τούτου, ἵνα τι ἀντείπῃ τῷ Πλάτωνι, οὐδ᾽ ἂν πάνυ ἠρέμα καταπαύσας, τὸν ἄνδρα, ἔφασκεν, ἀλλὰ τοῦτο ἐμοὶ συμφέρει. Xenocrates Chalcedonius, quum a Platone propter mores inurbanos reprehenderetur, nunquam indignatione iraue commotus eſt: ſed & illi, qui ipſum ad reſpondendum Platoni inſtigaret, Hoc, inquit, mihi bonum atque commodum eſt: & prudentiſſime hominis ſententiam impoſuit. But inſtead of this we are told the quite contrary by a Latin Writer: where we find (g) 1. that Plato was told that Xenocrates had ſpoken ill of him. 2. That he would not believe it. 3. That the Accuſer with an Audacious Air asked the Reaſon of his incredulity. 4. That Plato anſwered, it is not to be believed that a Perſon, whom I love ſo well, ſhould not love me alſo. 5. That the Accuſer offered to ſwear it. 6. That Plato would not ſuffer it to go ſo far, but ended the diſpute by the following Words, Xenocrates would not have ſaid that, had he not believed that it was for my Advantage. (h) Poſtremò cùm ad juſjurandum inimicitias ſerentis malignitas confugiſſet; ne de perjurio ejus diſputaret, affirmavit nunquam Xenocratem illa dicturum fuiſſe, niſi ea dici expedire ſibi judicaſſet. This Story in Valerius Maximus ſeems to me to a corruption, or a Tranſpoſition of that which we find in Ælian, and which confirms the Text of this Remark.

(B) A moſt Beautiful Curtezan, who laid that ſhe would ſubdue his Virtue, loſt her Wager.] I mention this elſewhere; but I add here what Valerius Maximus ſaith: (i) Phryne nobile Athenis ſcortum juxta eum (Xenocratem) vino gravem in pervigilio accubuit, pignore cum quibuſdam juvenibus poſito, an temperantiam ejus corrumpere poſſet: Quam nec tactu, nec ſermone aſpernatus, quoad voluerat in ſinu ſuo morari, irritam propoſiti dimiſit. Factum ſapientia imbuti animi abſtinens: ſed meretriculæ quoque dictum perquam facetum, Deridentibus enim ſe adoleſcentibus, quod tam formoſa, tamque elegans non ſenis animum illecebris pellicere non potuiſſet, pactumque victoriæ pretium flagitantibus: de homine ſe cum iis, non de ſtatua pignus poſuiſſe, reſpondit. Poteſtne hæc Xenocratis continentia a quoquam magis vere, magiſque proprie demonſtrari, quam ab ipſa meretricula expreſſa eſt? Phryne pulchritudine ſua, nulla ex parte conſtantiſſimam ejus abſtinentiam labefecit. It appears that this Author ſuppoſes ſeveral particulars which raiſe the Glory of the Victory: It was intire tho' all the circumſtances favoured the Enemy. He will have it that the Curteſan took hold of an opportunity when Xenocrates had drunk to a pitch; and adds that the Philoſopher did not refuſe the careſſes of her hands and Voice, and that Phryne had leave to ſtay with him as long as ſhe pleaſed.

(C) All the other parts of Temperance ſhone in his Conduct.] His being fuddled when Phryne tempted him may be objected againſt this, as well as Athenæus's ſtory. That Author (k) relates that Xenocrates won the Crown of Gold, which the Syracuſan Tyrant promiſed to the Perſon that ſhould firſt drink off a certain Meaſure of Wine. It will be ſaid that a Man, who gets the Prize appointed for the greateſt drinker in the Court of a drunken Prince, is not ſober. But Xenocrates carried off this Prize; therefore he was not Sober. Conſider this expreſſion of Diogenes Laertius: (l) Χρυσῷ στεφάνῳ τιμηθέντα ἐπ᾽ ἄθλῳ πολυποσίας, Corona aurea donatum in PREMIUM LARGIORIS COMPOTATIONIS. Remember alſo that Ælian inſerts Xenocrates in that Chapter, where he gives us a Catalogue of thoſe (m) who loved drinking, and could drink a great deal. The firſt in this Liſt the Syracuſan Tyrant, who promiſed a Golden Crown to him who could drink moſt: (n) Προὔκειτο ἆθλον τῷ πιόντι πλεῖον στέφανος χρυσοῦς, καὶ ἐνίκησε Ξενοκράτης ὁ Χαλκηδόνιος: Præmium ordinatum eſt ei, qui PLUS BIBISSET, aurea corona, quam meritus eſt Xenocrates Chalcedonius. Thus you have the Objection fortify'd with all neceſſary proofs. It would be in vain to Anſwer that Xenocrates was admired on this occaſion (o); for the Hiſtorian who ſaith ſo adds another particular which is really laudable, I mean that the Victor did not keep this Golden Crown, but placed it on a Statue of Mercury as he was going home. He uſed on other days to Crown that Statue with Flowers, but that Evening he fixed on it a Golden Crown. This was a ſign of an uninteresſted mind; this was to ſhew that for the Honour of the Gods he could as eaſily part with what was moſt precious as with a

---

* Diog. Laert. lib. 4. n. 6.

‖ [illegible]

(a) Diog. Laert. lib. 4. n. 6.

(b) Id. ib. n. 11.

(c) See Kuhnius's Notes in Diog. Laert. ad lib. 4. n. 11.

(d) In the Remark E. of the Article Ariſtotle.

(e) Ælian. var. hiſtor. lib. 14. cap. 9.

(f) See Plutarch in vita Marii init. pag. 407.

(g) Valer. Maximus lib. 4. cap. 1. n. 12. in ext. pag. m. 351.

(h) Id. ib.

(i) Val. Max. lib. 4. cap. 3. in ext. n. 3. pag. 370.

Pleaſures, Riches, nor Praiſes ‡. He never could be corrupted by (D) Bribes, and acquired ſuch a great Reputation with Regard to ſincerity and probity, that he was the ſole Perſon whoſe Oath by way of confirmation of matters Teſtimonial was diſpenſed with (E) by the Magiſtrates of Athens. A diſcourſe, which he made about Temperance, ſo moved the moſt diſſolute Debauchee of that Age, that it a Noſegay. If the Objector ſhould be ſo Opinionative as to affirm that Athenæus's meaning is that Xenocrates was admired on this Account, and becauſe he drank more than the reſt, they would be but ſmall gainers: For every thing that is admired is not a good Moral Quality: Several things are admired by Reaſon of their Singularity, and upon this Foot a Philoſopher might be admired for carrying off the Prize from all the Drinkers of Syracuſe. He ſhould have been vanquiſhed; he ought to have avoided ſuch an Engagement; and if he had been Temperate he had never entred theſe Liſts. Let us then ſee whether we can think of any other way of juſtification.

It muſt be owned that ſome very Sober People may be of ſuch a Conſtitution as to drink a great deal without loſing their Reaſon. Socrates, whoſe Sobriety and Auſterity of life are unconteſtable, did not love (a) drinking, and yet when forced by Company, no Body could hold out againſt him; and what was admirable in him was, that he never was indiſpoſed on theſe occaſions, and that there was no difference betwixt Socrates faſting, and at his departure from a Feaſt or the moſt jolly Converſation. If ſuch a Man on ſuch an extraordinary occaſion as that Feſtival, which was celebrated at Syracuſa when Dionyſius the Tyrant promiſed the Golden Crown to the greateſt drinker, made a Tryal of his ſtrength and won the Prize, it ought not to be concluded from thence that he was an intemperate Man. He does not thereby loſe the Character of a ſober Man: This Virtue ought to be conſidered in the ſame manner with other habitual Qualities, which found a Character which is not loſt by any ſingle Act of the oppoſite Quality. Mr. Daille made this Remark when accuſed of calling Mr. Cottiby an extravagant viſionary. Sometimes the want of Attention, replied he, "(b) and frequently an exceſs of paſſion, fixes a fooliſh or extravagant Notion in the mind of a Wiſe Man. But you don't therefore call him a Fool. If you believe Horace, the excellent Homer dreams ſometimes. Will you from thence accuſe Horace of railing at that incomparable Author, whom he elſewhere ſo highly eſteems and admires? Will you ſay that he calls him a ſluggiſh, dull, and ſtupid Poet? No. For theſe Names as well as thoſe of detractor and viſionary are only beſtowed on ſuch as are habituated to thoſe Vices, and not on thoſe from whom ſuch Actions barely eſcape, and that very ſeldom, either through Humane weakneſs, or by the Force of ſome extraordinary cauſe: One ſwallow makes no ſpring, as the Philoſopher (1) hath it on a like occaſion." This is ſufficient to juſtify what I have affirmed concerning Xenocrates.

(a) Charpentier, vie de Socrate p. m. [illegible]

(b) Daillé, Replique a Adam & a Cottiby, part. ch. 3 pag. m. 15.

(1) Ariſt. in his Mor. to Nicom. l. 1. c. 7. towards the end.

I ſhall ſay by the by that (c) two very Learned Criticks are perſuaded, that he was not at Syracuſa when he carried the Prize, and that it was at Athens that he won it. I own indeed that their Opinion is probable, tho' to me it ſeems leſs ſo, than that which I have followed. It is undeniable that Xenocrates was at the Court of Dionyſius, and that he was then very Young. Is it not then more likely that he ſhould indulge himſelf to drink on that occaſion, than in the City where he ſtood upon the Foot of a thorough auſtere Philoſopher?

(c) Kuhnius in Diog. Laert. lib. 4. n. 8. Perizonius in Ælian. var. hiſt. lib. 2. cap. 41. but obſerve that M. Perizonius is not ſo poſitively for this Opinion as the other.

What more Authentick proof can we have of his great Sobriety than the Proverb of the Ancients, Xenocrates's Cheeſe, which they made uſe of to expreſs that a thing laſted a long time? (d) The relator of this particular adds. 1. That when he had pierced a Caſk, it was ſo long before it was empty that the Wine quite loſt its Virtue. 2. That Xenocrates ſeveral times threw away his Proviſions by Reaſon they grew ruſty or muſty; which would not have happened to a leſs frugal Perſon.

(d) Stobæus de continen. & ſobr. ſerm. 15. fol. m. 69.

(D) He never could be corrupted by bribes.] The Macedonian Court by Bribes corrupted a great many Perſons in the Neighbouring Republicks, and when their Preſents were refuſed, they gave to underſtand that they never intended to take any Meaſures prejudicial to the intereſt of their Country. Xenocrates took the ſame courſe. He refuſed King Philip's Preſents; whence that Prince deſpairing to gain him, treated him uncivilly, and did not admit him to the Conferences with the other Ambaſſadors of the Republick of Athens, whom he had ſoftened by Bribes, Feaſting and cajolling. But Xenocrates continued equally inflexible, and preſerving his Integrity inviolable, never appeared at the Audience and Feaſts as his Collegues did. They complained that he did no Service in his Embaſſy, for which he was very near being fined: But he diſcovered the whole ſecret, and advertiſed the Athenians that it was very neceſſary to have a watchful Eye upon the Publick good, ſince the other Ambaſſadors were corrupted by Bribery. This loaded him with double (e) Honour. He would not receive the Money which Antipater ſent (f) him, and when he accepted a ſmall part of the Sum which Alexander's Miniſters brought him, it was only to avoid the diſcovering any contempt for that great Monarch. (g) Xenocrates quum legati ab Alexandro quinquaginta ei talenta attuliſſent, quæ erat pecunia temporibus illis Athenis præſertim maxima, adduxit legatos ad cœnam in Academiam. Iis appoſuit tantum, quod ſatis eſſet, nullo apparatu. Quum poſtridie rogarent eum, cui numerari juberet, quin vos heſterna inquit cœnula non intellexiſtis me pecunia non egere? Quos quum triſtiores vidiſſet, xxx minas accepit, ne aſpernari regis liberalitatem videretur. Obſerve in this Latin paſſage, the conſequence which he drew from the mean Supper with which he Treated Alexander's Envoys. Doth not this, ſaith he, give you to underſtand that I have no need of Money? Another Hiſtorian tells us that (h) having accepted part of the Preſent, he ſent back the reſt to Alexander, Adding, he hath more need of it than I, by Reaſon he ſubſiſts a greater Number of Men than I. Theſe are all excellent Moral Maxims, which point out the true ſource of Avarice, and Contempt of Riches. Let us obſerve that Valerius Maximus, who could not be unacquainted with Cicero's Relation, hath left out a circumſtance, which was not convenient for his purpoſe. He Aimed at a Jingle of Antitheſes and Parallels: He reſolved to connect the Triumph over Phryne to that over Alexander's Money. Having told us that Xenocrates in Phryne's judgment was a Statue; he takes it to be very witty to ſay that this Philoſopher was no leſs a (i) Statue with regard to the Charms of Gold, than thoſe of a Curteſan, and to add (k), that a great Prince would have bought the Affection of a Philoſopher, but the Philoſopher would not ſell it to that great Monarch. All theſe witty turns would have been ſpoiled, if it had been ſaid that Xenocrates took part of the Preſent. Wherefore he ſuppreſſed this circumſtance. This is the Exact Fidelity of this, and ſeveral other Writers; they enlarge or curtail Facts as they find it convenient, in order to adjuſt them to their own Conceptions.

(e) Ex Diog. Laert. ubi ſupra n. 8. & 9.

(f) Id. ib. n. 8.

(g) Cicero Tuſcul. quæſt. lib. 5. fol. m. 277. B.

(h) Diog. Laert. ubi ſupra.

(i) Quid rex Alexander? an divitiis eum quatere potuit? ab illo quoque ſtatuam & quidem æque fruſtra tentatam putes. Valer. Maxim. lib. 4. cap. 3. n. 3. in ext.

(k) Ita rex philoſophi amicitiam emere voluit: Philoſophus regi ſuam vendere noluit. Id. ib.

Father Abram cites a paſſage of Themiſtius, where this Action of Xenocrates is aſcribed to Xenophanes. (l) He ſhould have Corrected that miſtake.

(l) See Abram's commentary in orat. Ciceron. pro Sextio pag. 181.

(E) Whoſe Oath was diſpenſed with —— by the Magiſtrates.] He could not have a greater Honour done him than this. Valerius Maximus is very judicious on this Head: (m) Quantum porro honoris Athenis Xenocrati ſapientia pariter ac ſanctitate claro tributum eſt? Qui cum teſtimonium dicere coactus ad aram acceſſiſſet, ut more civitatis juraret, omnia ſe vere retuliſſe; univerſi judices conſurrexerunt, proclamaruntque ne juſjurandum diceret: Quodque ſibimetipſis poſtmodum dicenda ſententia

(m) Id. lib. 2. cap. ult. in fine pag. m. 234.

It occaſioned his immediate reſolution (F) to renounce his Pleaſures, and apply himſelf to Wiſdom. And this Converſion was ſteady; for the Convert, afterwards, became a very grave Philoſopher. This great Alteration ought not to be attributed to the Charms of Eloquence, but rather to the auſtere gravity of Xenocrates. There was nothing charming, or graceful in his behaviour; but ſolid Gravity and Severity were inſeparable from his Manners; whence it was that Plato frequently adviſed him to ſacrifice to the Graces. This want of Politeneſs ſet off ‡ the glory which he had acquired by his Auſterity. It is not to be wondred that with this dry Genius, he ſhould have been ſo ſtrongly inclined to the Mathematicks, that he would not admit any Scholars ‖ who were ignorant of that Science. We ought more to admire that with this great Character of rigid Severity, he had yet a Heart very ſuſceptible of Compaſſion, not only towards his Neighbour, but alſo towards Beaſts. Of which it is affirmed β he gave numerous Proofs, and particularly this: He hid a Sparrow which flung herſelf upon him in her flight from a Sparrow-Hawk, and releaſed her when the danger was over γ. He recommended δ Polyſperchon, a Man whom he ſcarce knew, and who proved unworthy of his recommendation; which was the cauſe of his being cautioned to examin the Character of People better another time. This Miſtake however ſerves to ſhew his indulgent nature. He compiled ſeveral * Works which are loſt. He did not want leiſure to write, for he loſt ſcarce any time in Viſits, and was very fond of cloſe retirement; he thought (G) much, and was ſeldom ſeen in the Streets, and when he appeared there, the Debauched Youth durſt not ſtay, but turned out of the way to avoid meeting him. He was ζ the

* Ep. Dio. [illegible]

‡ Auctor [illegible] (Reip. [illegible]) qui T. Gracchi conciones perſpicue [illegible] civit, [illegible] Xenocratem quidem, ſeveriſſimum philoſophorum, ob eamque rem ipſam & magnum & clarum fuiſſe. Cicero de Officiis lib. 1. cap. 30. p. m. 110, 111.

tiæ hoc remiſſiori non erant, ſinceritati ejus concedendum exiſtimaverunt. Cicero mentions this in one of his (a) Epiſtles to Atticus.

(F) A Diſcourſe which he made about Temperance occaſioned his immediate reſolution to renounce the Pleaſures.] If a Capucin's Sermon ſhould at this time cauſe ſuch an alteration, the World would acknowledge it to be a particular operation of the Holy Ghoſt, and admire the Influence of a Grace which according to the Janſeniſts, would be efficacious to the higheſt degree; for the Perſon who was prevailed upon by this Diſcourſe, to change his courſe of life, was not an ordinary voluptuous Man, but a Ring-leader in that kind, who gloried in his Debaucheries: His Wife alſo accuſed him before a Court of Juſtice for neglecting her, and brutally debauching with Boys; ſhe brought the Indictment againſt him called (b) malæ tractationis. He was not aſhamed to ſhew his exceſſive ebriety (c) in the great or moſt publick places of Athens, being accompanied with a ſinging Woman and ſeveral players on Inſtruments. He was most frequently drunk when he appeared in the Streets, and his Unchaſtity was not leſs than his Drunkenneſs. He (d) went always well provided with Money, and lodged part of it in ſeveral parts of the City, that he might be ſupplied at all times, and in all places of the City with ſufficient Sums for his Expences, in order to gratify his vicious Appetite. In ſhort, he was the moſt famous Debauchee in Athens. One day when he had drank to a pitch, and, as he was uſed, run through the Streets with his cuſtomary Equipage, and lewd Companions (e), he entred the Auditory of Xenocrates, with deſign to ridicule him, and to play ſome inſolent tricks. At which all the Auditors being enraged; Xenocrates was not at all concerned (f), but more vigorouſly purſued the Diſcourſe which he had begun concerning Temperance. Some Authors ſay, (g) that he was not treating that Subject, but leaving that which he was engaged upon, he turned the Diſcourſe to the Doctrine of this Virtue; on which head he expatiated ſo excellently and gravely, that all of a ſudden he created an affection for Modeſty and Wiſdom in the Mind of this hardened Sinner. Polemo, (for that was the Name of this Drunkard) from that very moment, became a Diſciple of Virtue, and an exact Imitator of (h) the Gravity of Xenocrates, whom he ſucceeded in his Profeſſor's Chair. He ſo utterly gave over Wine, that he drank (i) nothing but Water. The Latin Deſcription of his Converſion which I here copy, is very fine: (k) Perdita luxuriæ Athenis adoleſcens Polemo, neque illecebris tantummodo, ſed etiam ipſa infamia gaudens; cum e convivio non poſt occaſum ſolis, ſed poſt ortum ſurrexiſſet, domumque repeteret, Xenocratis Philoſophi patentem januam vidiſſet: vino gravis, unguentis delibutus, ſerto capite redimito, pellucida veſte amictus, refertam turba doctorum hominum ſcholam ejus intravit. Nec contentus tam deformi introitu, conſedit etiam, ut clariſſimum eloquium, & prudentiſſima præcepta temulentiæ laſciviis eluderet. Orta deinde, ut par erat, omnium indignatione; Xenocrates vultum in eodem habitu continuit, omiſſiſque de quibus diſſerebat, de modeſtia ac temperantia loqui cœpit. Cujus gravitate ſermonis reſipiſcere coactus Polemo, primum coronam capite detractam projecit, paulo poſt brachium intra pallium reduxit, procedente tempore oris convivalis hilaritatem depoſuit; ad ultimum, totam luxuriam exuit, uniuſque orationis ſaluberrima medicina ſanatus, ex infami ganeone maximus philoſophus evaſit. Peregrinatus eſt hujus animus in nequitia, non habitavit. To which may be added theſe lines of Horace.

> (l) Faciaſne, quod olim
> Mutatus Polemon? ponas inſignia morbi,
> Faſciolas, cubital, focalia: potus ut ille
> Dicitur ex collo furtim carpſiſſe coronas,
> Poſtquam eſt impranſi correptus voce magiſtri.

Obſerve that Plutarch (m) aſſures us, that one Book of Xenocrates was ſufficient to convert Polemo.

(G) He thought much, and was ſeldom ſeen in the Streets; and when he appeared there, the debauched Youth durſt not ſtay, but turned out of the way.] To this purpoſe let us cite Diogenes Laertius: (n) Πολλάκις ἑαυτῷ τῆς ἡμέρας διαμελετᾶν, καὶ ὥραν μίαν φασὶν ἀπονέμειν σιωπῇ. Sæpe interdiu meditationi inſerviebat, atque unam ſilentio diſtribuebat horam. The French Tranſlator hath rendred theſe Greek words thus (o): He was ſo well pleaſed with a Solitary Life, that he ſpent the whole day in meditation; but commonly he allowed himſelf one Hour for relaxation. This Verſion ſeems to me to be good, tho' it doth not literally follow the Original. The Latin Tranſlation, tho' more literal, is leſs reaſonable; for it diſtinguiſhes betwixt the time that a Philoſopher meditates, and that in which he doth not ſpeak. But what ſort of diſtinction is that? Are thoſe who meditate obliged to ſpeak? Are they not commonly in a profound ſilence? But we ſhall ſee another place wherein the French Tranſlator (†) is greatly miſtaken: (p) Διῆγέ τε ἐν Ἀκαδημίᾳ τὰ πλεῖστα· καὶ εἴποτε μέλλοι εἰς ἄστυ ἀνιέναι, φασὶ τοὺς θορυβώδεις πάντας καὶ προυνίκους ὑποστέλλειν αὐτοῦ τῇ παρόδῳ. Vixit autem ut plurimum in Academia. Si quando verò ad urbem profecturus eſſet turbas omnes tumultuoſorum ac impudicorum ipſi tranſituro de via decedere ſolitas, ſunt qui tradant. That is, according to Mr. de Fougerolles, he ſpent the greateſt part of his Life in the Academy, without ſcarce ever going out; but if by chance he was willing to go thence

(a) The 15th of the 1ſt. Book. See alſo the ſame Author in orat. pro Balbo pag. m. 637. where he mentions the thing without naming Xenocrates.

(b) Φυγεῖν δίκην Πολέμωνα καὶ δίκην κακώσεως, ὑπὸ τῆς γυναικὸς, ὡς μειρακίοις συνόντα. Et in judicium vocatum Polemonem ab uxore nequitiæ inſimulatum, quod adoleſcentibus congrederetur. Diog. Laert. Ibid. n. 16.

(c) Lucian in bis accuſato pag. m. 321, 323. Tom. 2.

(d) Diog. Laert. ibid.

(e) Origenes ubi infra. (f) Id. ibid. (g) Valer. Maxim. ubi infra. (h) Diog. Laert. ibid. n. 17. & ſeq. Origen. contra Celſum lib. 3, pag. 152. (i) Athen. lib. 2. cap. 6. pag. 44. (k) Valer. Maximus lib. 6. cap. 9. n. 1. in ext. pag. 581, 582.

the Head of the Academy for Twenty five Years; in the ſecond Year of the Olympiad; he ſucceeded, in the Second Year of the 110th Olympiad, Speuſippus, whom Plato had choſen for his Succeſſor. It is ſurprizing that a Philoſopher of ſo much merit ſhould receive ſuch an ill treatment from the Athenians as to be ſold by them (H) becauſe he could not pay the Capitation impoſed upon Strangers. Demetrius Phalereus did a very generous Act in buying Xenocrates, whom he immediately ſet at liberty, and payed the Debt to the Athenians †. This Philoſopher's Theology was wretchedly (I) contemptible, as we ſhall ſee. He lived to the Age of Eighty Four, if we believe || Lucian. * Others tell us that he died in his Eighty ſecond Year, having, through inadvertency, hit his Forehead againſt a Kettle in the Night time.

† Id. Laert. [illegible]

|| Lucian. in Macrobiis pag. m. [illegible]

* Diog. Laert. in fine n. 14. [illegible] hence into the City, it is reported that ſeveral of the Rabble attended him in the way, in order to diſturb him with their impudent Clamours. This is to pervert the Greek Author's Thought, and rob Xenocrates of one of the brighteſt parts of his Glory. The Debauchees dreaded the ſight of ſuch a venerable Man, and durſt not appear before a Perſon of ſuch ſtrict Morals. Is not this a great Encomium on Xenocrates? Doth it not ſurpaſs what was ſaid of Cato, with reſpect to the Floral Games? Add to this, that Paſſage of Plutarch concerning the efficacy of (g) a bare Look of this Philoſopher, and what engaged the Athenians (h) to depute him into Macedonia.

I muſt not forget what Plutarch (c) ſaith, that Xenocrates did not ſtir out of the Academy above once in a year, which he did to honour the Feaſt, that is, to be preſent at the new Tragedies which were acted during the Feaſt of Bacchus.

(H) To be ſold by them——— Demetrius Phalereus bought him——— immediately ſet him at liberty, and paid the debt to the Athenians.] We find all theſe particulars in Diogenes Laertius (o), and I am ſurprized that Plutarch doth not mention them, ſince he ſpeaks of an Adventure ſomewhat like this. " (n) But we are told that Lycurgus the Orator " one day ſeeing the Farmers and Receivers of " Taxes carrying Xenocrates the Philoſopher to Pri- " ſon, for not paying a certain Impoſt laid on " Strangers inhabiting the City of Athens, forcibly " wreſted him out of their hands; and beſides, ſo " vigorouſly proſecuted them, that he obliged them " to pay a Fine for the Injury done to a Perſon " of his Character; and that afterwards, the Phi- " loſopher meeting Lycurgus's Children in the City " told them: I have rewarded your Father for the " ſervice which he did me, by reaſon that on my " account he is extolled every where for what he " hath done to me.,, From theſe words of Plutarch Ancient Athens cannot be blamed, for the cruelties of the Collectors of Impoſts cannot be charged on a whole Nation. They are a ſort of People who act upon particular Maxims which are not approved of, but rather deteſted: they are inexorable People, who have no regard to Wit, Virtue or Learning; and there is no other way to get out of their Hands, than paying down the Money. And ſince the action of Lycurgus was applauded, it is a general indication that the Athenians ought to be cleared upon this occaſion. But as the Story is told by Diogenes Laertius, that Nation cannot be acquitted. What! to permit that a Xenocrates, the Honour and Ornament of the Academy, ſhould be ſo poor as not to be able to pay the Tax levied on Strangers, is a juſt reaſon of reproach, but to ſuffer him to loſe his Liberty, and become a Slave, to be ſold by Auction like a Cappadocian, is an infamous ſcandal to the Athenians. None was ſo generous as to lend or give him the ſmall Sum, which this wretched Tax-gatherer demanded; but they ſuffered him to run the utmoſt risk of ſlavery, and to be actually ſold. How could they be ſure that he ſhould not be bought by ſome Slave-Merchant, who might ſell him again to a Miller? Chance diſpoſed it ſo, that a Gentleman, and a lover of Sciences bought him, and reſtored him his liberty. But he had indeed done much better, if he had prevented his being ſold, by preſenting him with what would have ſatisfi'd the Collectors.

Let us now take notice of another paſſage related by Plutarch. " (d) Phocion——— perceiving " that Xenocrates payed a certain Tribute to the " Republick, which was payed by all Forreign In- " habitants of Athens, would have given him his " Freedom of that City, and enrolled him amongſt " the number of the Citizens; but Xenocrates re- " fuſed it, replying that he would not have any " ſhare in that Freedom of Citizens, to prevent " which, he had been ſent Ambaſſador.,, In order to the perfect underſtanding of this, recourſe ought to be had to the paſſage which I ſhall cite (e) hereafter, relating to the Conditions which Antipater impoſed on the Athenians, when Phocion, Xenocrates, and ſome others were ſent to him as Ambaſſadors from Athens.

(I) This Philoſopher's Theology was wretchedly contemptible.] He acknowledged no other Gods than the ſeven Planets, and the Heaven of the fixed Stars. Which made eight Deities; each Planet being a God, and all the Stars together making but one. See how Cicero rejects this Doctrine: (a) Nec verò ejus (Ariſtotelis) condiſcipulus Xenocrates in hoc genere prudentior eſt, cujus in libris, qui ſunt de natura Deorum, nulla ſpecies divina deſcribitur. Deos enim octo eſſe dicit: quinque eos, qui in ſtellis vagis nominantur: unum, qui ex omnibus ſideribus, quæ infixa cœlo ſunt, ex diſperſis quaſi membris ſimplex ſit putandus Deus: ſeptimum ſolem adjungit, octavumque lunam, qui quo ſenſu beati eſſe poſſint, intelligi non poteſt. This Opinion of Xenocrates will be found abſurd, not only, if examined by the light of Revelation, but if compared with that of Nature alſo; for without the aſſiſtance of the Bible, we conceive diſtinctly, that the Idea of God is neither that of a Species nor of a Genus, and conſequently cannot comprehend any thing under it but an individual Being. It is therefore acting againſt Reaſon, to admit more than one Deity. It is alſo another fault againſt Reaſon, to acknowledge any Gods compoſed of Matter; which is neceſſarily to ſubject them to Imperfection, to limit them with regard to Place and Power, and in a word, to diſtinguiſh them from the moſt infirm Creatures, barely by the difference of more or leſs. How great was the diſparity of our Philoſopher? How unconſequentially he argues? He would have the Moon a diſtinct Deity from all the reſt; he ſaid the ſame of every Planet, but not of each of the fixed Stars, to which he allowed no other Advantage than that of being parts of a Deity. The Objection urged againſt him in the Latin paſſage which I have cited, is juſt, tho' perhaps he might have eluded it, by aſſerting that a Planet is a God, as Socrates is a reaſonable Animal. He is not reaſonable as he is compoſed of Fleſh and Bones, &c. but as poſſeſſed of a Soul which knows and reaſons. The Sun, for example, is not a Deity, conſidered as compoſed of that luminous Matter which imparts its Rays and Heat to the Earth; but as the Seat of an intelligent Power, which occaſions the motion of that vaſt Body. What hinders this Virtue from the enjoyment of Pleaſure and Felicity? This is what may be anſwered to the Objection; but it is a very ill reſolution of the Point: for this intelligent Power not being numerically the ſame with that of the other Planets, will be fixed and concentred in the Sun by a natural neceſſity; and conſequently, will depend on the Matter of the Sun, and follow its State and Alterations, like thoſe Slaves called ſervi glebæ, or glebæ aſcriptitii. We cannot conceive any real happineſs in ſuch a dependance. The Doctrine of the Soul of the World doth not give ſo great a check to right Reaſon as this; it doth not divide the Deity into ſeveral Individuums really ſeparated from one another.

A CONFUTATION of thoſe, who ſaid that each Planet was a God.

Here is, I think, a contradiction in Xenocrates's Doctrine. He took the Planets for Gods, he therefore ſup-

Aaaaa poſed

(e) See the end of the foregoing Remark.

(f) See the Remark L.

(n) [illegible] Diogen. Laert. lib. 4. num. 14.

(o) Plut. in vita Flaminii pag. 375. He relates the ſame thing in the Lives of the ten Orators, pag. 842.

(g) In the Remark L.

(a) Cicero de natura Deorum lib. 1. pag. m. 56.

(d) Plut. in vita Phocion. Pag. 755.

It occaſioned his immediate reſolution (F) to renounce his Pleaſures, and apply himſelf to Wiſdom. And this Converſion was ſteady; for the Convert, afterwards, became a very grave Philoſopher. This great Alteration ought not to be attributed to the Charms of Eloquence, but rather to the auſtere gravity of Xenocrates. There was nothing charming, or graceful in his behaviour, but ſolid Severity and Severity were inſeparable from his Manners; whence it was that Plato frequently adviſed him to ſacrifice to the Graces. This want of Politeneſs ſet off † the glory which he had acquired by his Auſterity. It is not to be wondred that with this dry Genius, he ſhould have been ſo ſtrongly inclined to the Mathematicks, that he would not admit any Scholars ‖ who were ignorant of that Science. We ought more to admire that with this great Character of rigid Severity, he had yet a Heart very ſuſceptible of Compaſſion, not only towards his Neighbour, but alſo towards Beaſts. Of which it is affirmed § he gave numerous Proofs, and particularly this: He hid a Sparrow which flung herſelf upon him in her flight from a Sparrow-Hawk, and releaſed her when the danger was over γ. He recommended δ Polyſperchon, a Man whom he ſcarce knew, and who proved unworthy of his recommendation; which was the cauſe of his being cautioned to examin the Character of People better another time. This Miſtake however ſerves to ſhew his indulgent nature. He compiled ſeveral ε Works which are loſt. He did not want leiſure to write, for he loſt ſcarce any time in Viſits, and was very fond of cloſe retirement; he thought (G) much, and was ſeldom ſeen in the Streets, and when he appeared there, the Debauched Youth durſt not ſtay, but turned out of the way to avoid meeting him. He was ζ the

* Id. ibid. n. 6.

† [illegible] monis; ne Xenocratem quidem, ſeveriſſimum philoſophorum, ob eamque rem ipſam magnum & clarum fuiſſe, Cicero de officiis lib. 1. cap. 30. p. m. 120, 121.

‖ [illegible]

§ [illegible]

γ [illegible]

δ [illegible]

ε [illegible]

ζ [illegible]

---

ne ſuo remiſſiori non erant, ſinceritati ejus concedendum exiſtimarunt. Cicero mentions this in one of his (a) Epiſtles to Atticus.

(F) A Diſcourſe which he made about Temperance.... occaſioned his immediate reſolution to renounce his Pleaſures.] If a Capucin's Sermon ſhould at this time cauſe ſuch an alteration, the World would acknowledge it to be a particular operation of the Holy Ghoſt, and admire the influence of a Grace which according to the Janſeniſts, would be ſo efficacious to the higheſt degree; for the perſon who was prevailed upon by this Diſcourſe, to change his courſe of life, was not an ordinary voluptuous Man, but a Ring-leader in that kind, who gloried in his Debaucheries: His Wife accuſed him before a Court of Juſtice for neglecting her, and brutally debauching with Boys; ſhe brought the Indictment againſt him called (b) malæ tractationis. He was not aſhamed to ſhew his exceſſive ebriety (c) in the great or moſt publick places of Athens, being accompanied with a ſinging Woman and ſeveral players on Inſtruments. He was more frequently drunk when he appeared in the Streets, and his Unchaſtity was not leſs than his Drunkenneſs. He (d) went always well provided with Money, and lodged part of it in ſeveral parts of the City, that he might be ſupplied at all times, and in all places of the City with ſufficient Sums for his Expences, in order to gratify his vicious Appetite. In ſhort, he was the moſt famous Debauchee in Athens. One day when he had drank to a pitch, and, as he was uſed, run through the Streets with his cuſtomary Equipage, and lewd Companions (e), he entred the Auditory of Xenocrates, with deſign to ridicule him, and to play ſome inſolent tricks. At which all the Auditors being enraged; Xenocrates was not at all concerned (f), but more vigorouſly purſued the Diſcourſe which he had begun concerning Temperance. Some Authors ſay, (g) that he was not treating that Subject, but leaving that which he was engaged upon, he turned the Diſcourſe to the Doctrine of this Virtue; on which head he expatiated ſo excellently and gravely, that all of a ſudden he created an affection for Modeſty and Wiſdom in the Mind of this hardened Sinner. Polemo, (for that was the Name of this Drunkard) from that very moment, became a Diſciple of Virtue, and an exact Imitator of (h) the Gravity of Xenocrates, whom he ſucceeded in his Profeſſor's Chair. He ſo utterly gave over Wine, that he drank (i) nothing but Water. The Latin Deſcription of his Converſion which I here copy, is very fine: (k) Perditæ luxuriæ Athenis adoleſcens Polemo, neque illecebris tantummodo, ſed etiam ipſa infamia gaudens; cum e convivio non poſt occaſum ſolis, ſed poſt ortum ſurrexiſſet, domumque repetens, Xenocratis Philoſophi patentem januam vidiſſet: vino gravis, unguentis delibutus, ſertis capite redimito, pellucida veſte amictus, refertam turba doctorum hominum ſcholam ejus intravit. Nec contentus tam deformi introitu, conſedit etiam, ut clariſſimum eloquium, & prudentiſſima præcepta temulentiæ laſciviis eluderet. Orta deinde, ut par erat, omnium indignatione; Xenocrates vultum in eodem habitu continuit, omiſſaque de quibus diſſerebat, de modeſtia ac temperantia loqui cœpit. Cujus gravitate ſermonis reſipiſcere coactus Polemo, primum coronam capite detractam projecit, paulo poſt brachium intra pallium reduxit, procedente tempore oris convivalis hilaritatem depoſuit; ad ultimum, totam luxuriam exuit, uniuſque orationis ſaluberrima medicina ſanatus, ex infami ganeone maximus philoſophus evaſit. Peregrinatus eſt hujus animus in nequitia, non habitavit. To which may be added theſe lines of Horace.

(l) Faciaſne, quod olim
Mutatus Polemon? ponas inſignia morbi,
Faſciolas, cubital, focalia: potus ut ille
Dicitur ex collo furtim carpſiſſe coronas,
Poſtquam eſt impranſi correptus voce magiſtri.

Obſerve that Plutarch (m) aſſures us, that one Book of Xenocrates was ſufficient to convert Polemo.

(G) He thought much, and was ſeldom ſeen in the Streets; and when he appeared there, the debauched Youth durſt not ſtay, but turned out of the way.] To this purpoſe let us cite Diogenes Laertius: (n) Πολλάκις ἑαυτῷ τῆς ἡμέρας διεμελέτα, καὶ ὥραν μίαν φασὶν ἀπένεμε σιωπῇ. Sæpe interdiu meditationi inſerviebat, atque unam ſilentio diſtribuebat horam. The French Tranſlator hath rendred theſe Greek words thus (o): He was ſo well pleaſed with a Solitary Life, that he ſpent the whole day in meditation; but commonly he allowed himſelf one Hour for relaxation. This Verſion ſeems to me to be good, tho' it doth not literally follow the Original. The Latin Tranſlation, tho' more literal, is leſs reaſonable; for it diſtinguiſhes betwixt the time that a Philoſopher meditates, and that in which he doth not ſpeak. But what ſort of diſtinction is that? Are thoſe who meditate obliged to ſpeak? Are they not commonly in a profound ſilence? But we ſhall ſee another place wherein the French Tranſlator (†) is greatly miſtaken: (p) Διῆγέ τε ἐν Ἀκαδημίᾳ τὰ πλεῖστα καὶ εἴποτε μέλλοι εἰς ἄστυ ἀνιέναι, φασὶ τοὺς θορυβώδεις πάντας καὶ προυνίκους ὑποστέλλειν αὐτοῦ τῇ παρόδῳ. Vixit autem ut plurimum in Academia. Si quando verò ad urbem profecturus eſſet turbas omnes tumultuoſorum ac impudicorum ipſi tranſituro de via decedere ſolitas, ſunt qui tradant. That is, according to Mr. de Fougerolles, he ſpent the greateſt part of his Life in the Academy, without ſcarce ever going out; but if by chance he was willing to go thence

(a) The end of the 1ſt Book. See alſo the ſame Author in orat. pro Balbo pag. m. 637. where he mentions the thing without naming Xenocrates.

(b) Φυγεῖν δίκην Πολέμωνα καὶ δίκην κακώσεως, ὑπὸ τῆς γυναικὸς, ὡς μειρακίοις συνόντα. Et in judicium vocatum Polemonem ab uxore nequitiæ inſimulatum, quod adoleſcentibus congrederetur. Diog. Laert. Ibid. n. 16.

(c) Lucian in his accuſ. to pag. m. 321, 323. Tom. 2.

(d) Diog. Laert. ibid.

(e) Origenes ubi infra. (f) Id. ibid. (g) Valer. Maxim. ubi infra. (h) Diog. Laert. ibid. n. 17. & ſeq. Origen. contra Celſum lib. 3, pag. 152. (i) Athen. lib. 2. cap. 6. pag. 44. (k) Valer. Maximus lib. 6. cap. 9. n. 1. in ext. pag. 581, 582.

(l) Horat. Sat. 3. lib. 2. v. 253.

(m) Plut. de diſcrim. adul. & amici pag. 71.

(n) Diog. Laert. ubi ſupra n. 11.

(o) Francis de Fougerolles, Doctor of Phyſick.

(†) His fault is the ſame with that of Oliverius in Valer. Maximum ubi ſupra where he ſays, ſi quando ad urbem proficiſcebatur (Xenocrates) turba omnis impudicorum ejus tranſitum obſervabat, ejus inquietandi gratia.

(p) Id. ib. n. 6.

the Head of the Academy for Twenty five Years; in the ſecond Year of the Olympiad, he ſucceeded, in the ſecond Year of the 110th Olympiad, Speuſippus, whom Plato had choſen for his Succeſſor. It is ſurprizing that a Philoſopher of ſo much merit ſhould receive ſuch an ill treatment from the Athenians as to be ſold by them (H) becauſe he could not pay the Capitation impoſed upon Strangers. Demetrius Phalereus did a very generous Act in buying Xenocrates, whom he immediately ſet at liberty, and payed the Debt to the Athenians †. This Philoſopher's Theology was wretchedly (I) contemptible, as we ſhall ſee. He lived to the Age of Eighty Four, if we believe || Lucian. * Others tell us that he died in his Eighty ſecond Year, having, through inadvertency, hit his Forehead againſt a Kettle in the Night time.

† Id. Laert. ib.

|| Lucian. in Macrobiis pag. m. [illegible] tom. [illegible]

* Diog. Laert. [illegible] thence into the City, it is reported that ſeveral of the Rabble attended him in the way, in order to diſturb him with their impudent Clamours. This is to pervert the Greek Author's Thought, and rob Xenocrates of one of the brighteſt parts of his Glory. The Debauchees dreaded the ſight of ſuch a venerable Man, and durſt not appear before a Perſon of ſuch ſtrict Morals. Is not this a great Encomium on Xenocrates? Doth it not ſurpaſs what was ſaid of Cato, with reſpect to the Floral Games? Add to this, that Paſſage of Plutarch concerning the efficacy of (g) a bare Look of this Philoſopher, and what engaged the Athenians (h) to depute him into Macedonia.

I muſt not forget what Plutarch (c) ſaith, that Xenocrates did not ſtir out of the Academy above once in a year, which he did to honour the Feaſt, that is, to be preſent at the new Tragedies which were acted during the Feaſt of Bacchus.

(g) See the end of the forego- ing Remark.

(h) See Remark L.

(H) To be ſold by them———Demetrius Phalereus bought him———immediately ſet him at liberty, and paid the debt to the Athenians.] We find all theſe particulars in Diogenes Laertius (o), and I am ſurprized that Plutarch doth not mention them, ſince he ſpeaks of an Adventure ſomewhat like this. "(n) But we are told that Lycurgus the Orator "one day ſeeing the Farmers and Receivers of "Taxes carrying Xenocrates the Philoſopher to Pri- "ſon, for not paying a certain Impoſt laid on "Strangers inhabiting the City of Athens, forcibly "wreſted him out of their hands; and beſides, ſo "vigorouſly proſecuted them, that he obliged them "to pay a Fine for the Injury done to a Perſon "of his Character; and that afterwards, the Phi- "loſopher meeting Lycurgus's Children in the City "told them: I have rewarded your Father for the "ſervice which he did me, by reaſon that on my "account he is extolled every where for what he "hath done to me.„ From theſe words of Plutarch Ancient Athens cannot be blamed, for the cruelties of the Collectors of Impoſts cannot be charged on a whole Nation. They are a ſort of People who act upon particular Maxims which are not approved of, but rather deteſted: they are inexorable People, who have no regard to Wit, Virtue or Learning; and there is no other way to get out of their Hands, than paying down the Money. And ſince the action of Lycurgus was applauded, it is a general indication that the Athenians ought to be cleared upon this occaſion. But as the Story is told by Diogenes Laertius, that Nation cannot be acquitted. What! to permit that a Xenocrates, the Honour and Ornament of the Academy, ſhould be ſo poor as not to be able to pay the Tax levied on Strangers, is a juſt reaſon of reproach, but to ſuffer him to loſe his Liberty, and become a Slave, to be ſold by Auction like a Cappadocian, is an infamous ſcandal to the Athenians. None was ſo generous as to lend or give him the ſmall Sum, which this wretched Tax-gatherer demanded; but they ſuffered him to run the utmoſt risk of ſlavery, and to be actually ſold. How could they be ſure that he ſhould not be bought by ſome Slave-Merchant, who might ſell him again to a Miller? Chance diſpoſed it ſo, that a Gentleman, and a lover of Sciences bought him, and reſtored him his liberty. But he had indeed done much better, if he had prevented his being ſold, by preſenting him with what would have ſatisfi'd the Collectors.

(o) [illegible]

(n) Plut. in vita Flaminii pag. 375. [illegible] thing in the Lives of the ten Orators, pag. 842.

Let us now take notice of another paſſage related by Plutarch. "(d) Phocion———perceiving "that Xenocrates payed a certain Tribute to the "Republick, which was payed by all Forreign Inhabitants of Athens, would have given him his "Freedom of that City, and enrolled him amongſt "the number of the Citizens; but Xenocrates re- "fuſed it, replying that he would not have any "ſhare in that Freedom of Citizens, to prevent "which, he had been ſent Ambaſſador.„ In order to the perfect underſtanding of this, recourſe ought to be had to the paſſage which I ſhall cite (e) hereafter, relating to the Conditions which Antipater impoſed on the Athenians, when Phocion, Xenocrates, and ſome others were ſent to him as Ambaſſadors from Athens.

(d) Plut. in vita Phocion. pag. 755.

(e) In the Remark L.

(I) This Philoſopher's Theology was wretchedly contemptible.] He acknowledged no other Gods than the ſeven Planets, and the Heaven of the fixed Stars. Which made eight Deities; each Planet being a God, and all the Stars together making but one. See how Cicero rejects this Doctrine: (a) Nec verò ejus (Ariſtotelis) condiſcipulus Xenocrates in hoc genere prudentior eſt, cujus in libris, qui ſunt de naturâ Deorum, nulla ſpecies divina deſcribitur. Deos enim octo eſſe dicit: quinque eos, qui in ſtellis vagis nominantur: unum, qui ex omnibus ſideribus, quæ infixa cœlo ſunt, ex diſperſis quaſi membris ſimplex ſit putandus Deus: ſeptimum ſolem adjungit, octavumque lunam, qui quo ſenſu beati eſſe poſſint, intelligi non poteſt. This Opinion of Xenocrates will be found abſurd, not only, if examined by the light of Revelation, but if compared with that of Nature alſo; for without the aſſiſtance of the Bible, we conceive diſtinctly, that the Idea of God is neither that of a Species nor of a Genus, and conſequently cannot comprehend any thing under it but an individual Being. It is therefore acting againſt Reaſon, to admit more than one Deity. It is alſo another fault againſt Reaſon, to acknowledge any Gods compoſed of Matter; which is neceſſarily to ſubject them to Imperfection, to limit them with regard to Place and Power, and in a word, to diſtinguiſh them from the moſt infirm Creatures, barely by the difference of more or leſs. How great was the diſparity of our Philoſopher? How unconſequentially he argues? He would have the Moon a diſtinct Deity from all the reſt; he ſaid the ſame of every Planet, but not of each of the fixed Stars, to which he allowed no other Advantage than that of being parts of a Deity. The Objection urged againſt him in the Latin paſſage which I have cited, is juſt, tho' perhaps he might have eluded it, by aſſerting that a Planet is a God, as Socrates is a reaſonable Animal. He is not reaſonable as he is compoſed of Fleſh and Bones, &c. but as poſſeſſed of a Soul which knows and reaſons. The Sun, for example, is not a Deity, conſidered as compoſed of that luminous Matter which imparts its Rays and Heat to the Earth; but as the Seat of an intelligent Power, which occaſions the motion of that vaſt Body. What hinders this Virtue from the enjoyment of Pleaſure and Felicity? This is what may be anſwered to the Objection; but it is a very ill reſolution of the Point: for this intelligent Power not being numerically the ſame with that of the other Planets, will be fixed and concentred in the Sun by a natural neceſſity; and conſequently, will depend on the Matter of the Sun, and follow its State and Alterations, like thoſe Slaves called ſerviglebæ, or glebæ aſcriptitii. We cannot conceive any real happineſs in ſuch a dependance. The Doctrine of the Soul of the World doth not give ſo great a check to right Reaſon as this; it doth not divide the Deity into ſeveral Individuums really ſeparated from one another.

(b) Cicero de natura Deorum lib. 1. pag. m. 56.

A CONFUTATION of thoſe, who ſaid that each Planet was a God.

Here is, I think, a contradiction in Xenocrates's Doctrine. He took the Planets for Gods, he therefore ſup-time *. Some Authors pretend that he lived one Hundred and three (K) Years. He had a share in the Friendship and Esteem || of Alexander the Great, and at his Request wrote a Tract ‡ of the Art of Reigning. He was sent Ambassador more than once (L). It must not be forgotten, that according to his Opinion, the true Philosophers β are the only Persons who voluntarily, and of their own accord, do what others are brought to by the fear of the Laws; and that γ as casting an Eye on one's Neighbour's House, is as great a Sin as setting foot into it. This last Thought condemns the coveting of another's Goods, and posed the Matter of them to be an essential part of the Gods; for it would be absurd to affirm, that Socrates is a Man, and that the Body of Socrates is not essential to that Man. But on the other side, he admitted a distinction betwixt the Gods and certain Genii, which supposes that he did not believe Matter to be a part of the Substance of the Gods. Was this to argue coherently? Let us cite Plutarch, who observes that (a) Pythagoras, Plato, Xenocrates, and Chrysippus, according to the Opinions of the Antient Divines, acknowledged several great Demons, who were neither Gods nor Men, and who "were stronger and more robust than Men, and highly surmounted our Nature in power; but had not the pure and unmixt Divinity, but were Agents compounded of the Corporeal and Spiritual Nature, capable of Pleasure and Pain, and other Passions and Affections which accompany those mutations, discomposing, some more, others less; for there is a diversity and difference in Vice and Virtue amongst Demons, as well as amongst Men——— (b) Plato attributed to the Olympick and Celestial Gods whatever is Right and Odd; and whatever is Left and Even, to the Demons: And Xenocrates held, that the unfortunate Days, and Feasts, where beating, blows, striking of the Stomach, fasting, or any scandalous or filthy Custom obtains, does not appertain to the good Gods, or good Demons; but that there are in the Air some great and mighty Beings, but malicious and ill-natur'd, who find such things done on their account pleasant to them, and when they have obtained them, they cease to do any more Evil to the Persons." A Commentator on Cicero, hath made a Note on this Opinion of Xenocrates. He saith that the Evil Angels, may be very well pleased with the obscene Discourses of Men, and that if any thing was capable of softning them, it were that; but that Fasts, Macerations and Flagellations with which the Penitents endeavour to expiate their Faults, infinitely displease those unfortunate Genii: (c) Longè fallitur Xenocrates, cùm miseros illos Genios mortalium planctu, verberibs, jejuniis, aliisque id genus corporis afflictationibus delectari putat: nihil enim perinde aversantur, atque oderunt, ut voluntaria, & sancta ejusmodi supplicia, quibus debita flagitiis exolvitur pœna, ac Divina Nemesis placatur. At si quo modo leniri possent hostes crudelissimi, non dubium quin malè ominosis obscœnisque vocibus, quæ impurissimorum Geniorum pollutas ad aures jucundissima semper accidunt, sinerent se mulceri. I do not know where the French Translator of Diogenes Laertius took the following words: "(d) Xenocrates——— compared the nature of Triangles with that of Intelligences: For, said he, the Divine Nature is like an equilateral Triangle, the nature of Man like a Triangle unequal on all sides, and that of Demons, like a Triangle with one side unequal, and the other two equal."

I omit Xenocrates's Assertion (e), that the Soul is a self-moving Number; a Definition which was relished by several illustrious Persons (f); but I cannot tell whether we can comprehend it at this time: For, I believe, that the Greeks annexed an Idea to the word ἀριθμὸς, which we do not fix to the word number at present; from whence may proceed the obscurity which we now find in this Definition of the Soul.

Let us observe that the Dominican Doctor who wrote a Letter to Father le Comte concerning the Chinese Ceremonies, was not well informed of the Doctrine of Xenocrates; for after having spoken of the Philosophers who admitted no more (g) than one God, whom they acknowledged to be the Principle and Author of all Beings, a Spirit diffused throughout, who governed all things——— A pure Spirit, the Love and Enjoyment of which rendred Man happy; he adds, that "Xenocrates, Heraclides, and "Theophrastus, Aristotle's Disciples, had the same "Sentiments of the Deity." And yet these are the three Philosophers whom Cicero (h) puts together, when he refutes the erroneous Opinions concerning the Nature of God. I would therefore know why they are all three put together as Orthodox in this Doctor's Letter. Remember that the two former were not Aristotle's Scholars.

(K) Pretend that he lived one Hundred and three Years.] Meursius defends this Opinion. His Reasons are these: (i) Xenocrates was born the first Year of the 91 Olympiad. He began to teach in the second Year of the 110 Olympiad, and taught 25 Years; from whence it must be inferred that he died in the second Year of the 116th Olympiad, at the Age of 102. This is Meursius's Conclusion in the 9th Chapter of the 3. Book of the Athenian Archontes. But in the 12th Chaper of the 4th Book, he computes his Life at 103 Years, and founds his Calculation on the same Facts. He is in the right to conclude, that Xenocrates died the 3d Year of the 116th Olympiad, and reckons better than he did before; but betwixt that and the 1st of the 91st Olympiad, he ought to have found no more than 102 years. Let us come to the main point. I think he ought not to have relyed, as he hath, on the Authority of the Anonymous Author, who described the Olympiads, and placed the birth of Xenocrates in the 1st year of the 91st Olympiad. Two Reasons induce me to believe him deceived. The First is, That Xenocrates was very young when (k) he became Plato's Scholar. But Plato being advanced in years when he began to teach, it could not be possible for Xenocrates to enter his School very young, if he was born the 1st year of the 91st Olympiad, for he would not have been above Twelve years younger than Plato. In the Second place, I observe that he was deputed (l) to Antipater, in the 2d year of the 114th Olympiad: When he would have been 93 years of Age, according to the Computation of the Anonymous Author. But it is not easie to imagin that the Authors who mention'd this Ambassy, should have taken no notice of the extraordinary Age of the Ambassador.

(L) Sent Ambassador more than once.] I have already said that he was one of the Ambassadors whom the Republick of Athens sent to King Philip, the Father of Alexander the Great. "(m) Being also sent on an Embassy to Antipater, for the deliverance of the Prisoners of War taken at the Battle of Lamia, he was by that Prince invited to Supper, to whom he answered in the following words:

O Circe (n), thy Allurements tempt in vain
The Man whose Vertue prudent Thoughts sustain;
For who can come with pleasure to a Feast,
Before he see his Captive Friends releas'd.

"Hinting by these words, that he would never eat, unless he first obtained his Request, meaning the liberty of his Captive Citizens and Friends. The King perceiving the dexterity of the Man, freely condescended to his suit, and immediately set the Prisoners free." Antipater was not so just in the following Juncture. He exacted from the (o) Athenians, that they should send him full power to act as he should think fit, and refer the Conditions of the Treaty of Peace to his Pleasure. "They sent to him Phocion with other Ambassadors, and amongst the rest Xenocrates the Philosopher, the Reputation of whose Prudence and Wisdom was so great and celebrated among the Athenians, that they conceived there could not be any thing of Mankind so brutal and barbarous, or devoid of

---

* Diog. Laert. ubi supra n. 14, & 15.

|| See the Remark D.

‡ Plut. Adv. Colot. circa fin. pag. 1126.

(a) Plut. de Iside & Osiride pag. 360.

(b) Id. ib. pag. 361.

(c) Lescaloperius in Ciceron. de nat. Deor. lib. 1. pag. 57. col. 1.

(d) Fougerolles Additions to the life of Xenocrates, in Diogenes Laertius pag. 260. Note that he adds, "He calculated the number of Syllables, which the Greek Letters can make by their combinations and transpositions, which amounts to 100200000. I don't know where the Translator had read this.

(e) Plut. de procreat. animæ pag. 1012.

(f) Id. ib.

(g) Lettre d'un Docteur de l'Ordre de S. Dominique sur les ceremonies Chinoises pag. 17. Cologne 1700.

(h) Cicero ubi supra.

(i) Meursius de Archont. Athen. lib. 3. cap. 9. pag. 113, 114.

(k) [illegible] A primis ferme annis Platonis auditor fuit. Diogen. Laert. ubi supra n. 6.

(l) See the following Remark.

(m) Diog. Laert. ubi supra. n. 9. 10.

(n) Some Verses of Homer in the 10th. Book of the Odyssee.

(o) Plut. in vita Phocion. pag. 753.

and a prying Humour. He had a very good Maxim for the Education of (M) Children. He is praiſed by Reaſon that the dulneſs of his Capacity did not (N) diſpirit him in the courſe of his ſtudies.

XENOPHANES, a Greek Philoſopher born at Colophon, was a Diſciple of Archelaus, as ſome tell us ‡. According to which Account, he ſhould have been Socrates's Contemporary ζ. Others will have it that he Learned of himſelf all that he a knew, and that he lived at the ſame time with Anaximander. Purſuant to which he muſt have Flouriſhed before Socrates, and about the ſixtieth Olympiad, as Diogenes Laertius avers ‡. He lived (A Δ) very long; for ſome Verſes are cited † in which he declares 1. that his Studies had been applauded in Greece 67 Years. 2. That he began to be Famous at the Age of 25. He wrote ſeveral Poems on Philoſophical Subjects: Beſides ‖ two Thouſand on the Foundation of Colophon, and that of the Colony of * Elea. He had an Opinion concerning [illegible] ‡ Laert. ibid. n. 19.

"of Common Humanity, that even his Mien and Aſpect would not gain upon and create a Reſpect for him: but the contrary happen'd by the Inſolence and Ferity of Antipater's Diſpoſition, who embracing all the reſt of his Companions, paſs'd Xenocrates by, not vouchſafing ſo much as to ſalute him, or take the leaſt Notice of him: Upon which Occaſion Xenocrates ſaid, He was well ſatisfied he uſed him ſo ſurlily, ſince he had the ſame Intentions to the whole City. As ſoon as ever he began to ſpeak, Antipater thwarted and interrupted him, not ſuffering him to proceed, but enjoyned him Silence: But when Phocion had declared the Purport of their Embaſſy, he replied ſhort and peremptorily, he would make a League with the Athenians on theſe Conditions, and no others: That Demoſthenes and Hyperides be delivered up to him: That the ancient way of Raiſing Taxes in the City be obſerved: That they ſhould receive a Gariſon from him into Mynichia: Defray the Charges of the War, and Damages ſuſtain'd, and put themſelves under Contribution for it. As Things ſtood, theſe Terms were judg'd tolerable by the reſt of the Embaſſadors: Xenocrates ſaid, Truly if Antipater reputed them as already Slaves, they were indifferent; but if he conſidered them ſtill as Free, they were inſufferable.

Some will think perhaps that Antipater Treated this Philoſopher thus roughly to Revenge the incivility with which he had received him. For we are told (a) that going to Athens, he made a viſit to Xenocrates, who would not vouchſafe to interrupt his Lecture, nor made him any Anſwer before he had finiſhed it. But as it was very well known to all the World, that this Philoſopher did not affect to appear a Courtier, and that the eſteem which the World had for him was founded on his Philoſophical Gravity, it is not at all probable that Antipater ſhould have reſented his receiving him in manner.

(M) A very good Maxim for the Education of Children.] (b) "For this Reaſon Xenocrates was of Opinion, That Children rather ought to have a Defenſe fitted to their Ears, than Fencers, or Prize-players; becauſe the Ears only of the latter ſuffered by the Blows, but the Morals of the former were hurt and maimed by Words. Not that he thereby recommended Deafneſs, or forbad that they ſhould be ſuffered to hear at all; but adviſing only that Debauchery might be kept out, till better Principles (like ſo many Guardians appointed by Philoſophy) had taken charge of that Part, which is ſo liable to be drawn aſide and corrupted by Diſcourſe.

(N) That the dulneſs of his Capacity did not diſpirit him in the courſe of his ſtudies.] Plutarch made uſe of this Example to Encourage thoſe of ſlow parts. "(c) Therefore all ſuch Sheepiſhneſs and Self-conceit ſet aſide, let us learn to lay up in our minds whatever is uſefully ſaid, enduring to be laugh'd at by ſuch as ſet up for Wits and Railleurs. This Courſe took Cleanthes and Xenocrates, who being ſomewhat ſlower than their Fellows, did not however give over Hearing or Deſpond; but prevented the Jeſts of others, by comparing themſelves to narrow-mouth'd Veſſels and Copper Plates; becauſe, though they received Learning with ſome Difficulty, yet they retained it ſurely." One of theſe two Compariſons hath appeared in one of Moliere's Comedies.

(A Δ) He lived very long; for ſome Verſes are cited.] It appears by thoſe Verſes that he was 92. Years Old when he made them; and becauſe no Reaſon obliges us to believe that he died in a ſhort time after, we may hence the more certainly know the Error of Lucian (d) who allows him to have lived no longer than 91. Years in all. (e) Cenſorinus beſtows on him above one Hundred Years. (f) And Scaliger is inclined to believe that he lived at leaſt one Hundred and four Years. This long life affords means to reconcile thoſe who make him flouriſh (g) in the 56 Olympiad, or the (h) 60. and thoſe who place him under the (i) 40. Olympiad; for we may ſuppoſe that the latter don't point out the time when he flouriſhed, but that of his Birth. Obſerve that even on the Foot of this ſuppoſition, it is not poſſible to reconcile them with thoſe, who tell us that he lived to the time when the Perſians were driven out of Greece. We have ſtill ſome Verſes where it is pretended that he mentions their Flight. (k) Athenæus quotes them. If you underſtand by this, the time when they loſt the Battle of Marathon, it was in the 72. Olympiad. If you underſtand the Battle of Salamis, or that of Platæa, it was in the 75th Olympiad. Suppoſe in the next place not with Caſaubon (l) that he made theſe Verſes 15 or 20. Years after the defeat of the Perſians, but the very Year of that great Event, and you will find it impoſſible for him to have come into the World in the 40. Olympiad, ſince it muſt then be owned that he lived at leaſt 126 Years. What ſhall we then think of a paſſage of Clemens Alexandrinus, which informs us that he was Born in the 40. Olympiad and lived to the time of Darius? (m) Τῆς δ' Ἐλεατικῆς ἀγωγῆς Ξενοφάνης ὁ Κολοφώνιος κατάρχει, ὅν φησι Τίμαιος κατὰ Ἱέρωνα τὸν Σικελίας δυνάστην, καὶ Ἐπίχαρμον τὸν ποιητὴν γεγονέναι. Ἀπολλόδωρος δὲ, κατὰ τὴν τεσσαρακοστὴν Ὀλυμπιάδα γενόμενον, παρατετακέναι ἄχρι τῶν Δαρείου τε καὶ Κύρου χρόνων: Eleaticæ diſciplinæ princeps fuit Xenophanes Colophonius, quem dicit Timæus fuiſſe tempore Hieronis, qui in Sicilia obtinuit dominatum, & Epicharmi Poetæ. Apollodorus autem eum, cùm natus eſſet quadrageſimâ Olympiade, perveniſſe uſque ad tempora Darii & Cyri. Muſt we believe that a miſtake crept into the Greek Text, and that inſtead of Δαρείου we ought to Read Κροίσου? My Anſwer is, there is no neceſſity to be of that Opinion. For a life of one Hundred Years which is allowed to Xenophanes is ſufficient to fill up the ſpace betwixt the 40th Olympiad and the 65th which was the beginning of Darius's Reign. I do not deny that it is a little ſtrange to ſee, that ſuch an excellent Author as Apollodorus ſhould ſay that Xenophanes lived to the time of Darius and Cyrus. It would have been much more regular to have ſaid to the time of Cyrus and Darius, as Mr. Menage (n) obſerves. It is certain beſides that in pointing out the time, the Ancients uſually joyned Cræſus and Cyrus together, which ſerves to ſupport the Correction I have hinted; but at the bottom there is neither any abſurdity or Falſity in Apollodorus's Opinion, that Xenophanes lived from the 40. Olympiad to Darius's time. And yet I ſhould rather chooſe to place his Birth much lower, ſince, according to (o) Timæus, he Flouriſhed in Hiero's time, who did not begin to Reign before the 76. Olympiad. I ſhall take Notice by the

(a) Diog. Laert. ubi ſupra, n. 3.

(b) Plut. de auditione init. pag. 38.

(c) Plut. de auditione pag. 47.

(d) Lucian. in Macrobiis pag. m. 640. tom. 2. oper.

(e) See Scaliger in Euſeb. p. m. 96.

(f) Scalig. ibid.

(g) Euſeb. in Chron. p. m. 127.

(h) Id. ib. pag. 128. Diogen. Laert. lib. 9. n. 20.

(i) Sext. Empir. adverſ. Mathem. pag. 51.

(k) Athen. lib. 2. cap. 13. pag. 54.

(l) Caſaub. in Athen. pag. 110.

(m) Clem. Alexandr. Strom. lib. 1. p. 301. C.

(n) Menag. in Diog. Laert. lib. 9. n. 20.

(o) See the above quoted paſſage of Clemens Alexandrinus.

cerning the Nature of God, very little different from (A) Spinoziſm. He wrote ſome ‡ Verſes againſt Homer and Heſiod on the Follies which they ſung of the Gods. He held a Maxim which Fundamentally ruined and overturned the Pagan Religion, viz. * that it is not leſs impious to aſſert that the Gods were Born than to affirm that they ſhall dye, ſince in each caſe it would be equally true that their exiſtence is not perpetual. This Maxim is very true and not at all Contradictory ‡ [illegible] Laertius, lib. 9. [illegible] See alſo Sextus Empiric. adv. Math. p. 57, 381.

* [illegible] Xenophanes dicebat ſimiliter eſſe impios qui naſci affirmant Deos, & qui mori dicunt. Utroque enim modo contingit, ut non ſint aliquando Dii. Ariſtot. Rhetor. lib. 2. c. 23. p. 446. B.

by the way that I take that Opinion to be ill founded, which affirms him to have been a Diſciple of Archelaus. Which is Lucian's (a) Opinion.

(A) Very little different from Spinoziſm.] If we had all his Works, we ſhould be much better able to underſtand his Syſtem: And if all our knowledge of his Opinions was ſolely owing to ſome ſmall and very obſcure Fragments cited by Cicero, it were impoſſible to avoid confuſion; (b) Xenophanes qui mente adjuncta omne præterea quod eſſet infinitum Deum voluit eſſe, de ipſa mente item reprehendi ut cæteri: de infinitate autem vehementius, in qua nihil neque ſentiens neque conjunctum eſſe poſſit. Theſe Words of Cicero teſtify that Xenophanes taught that the Intellect is God, and that all that is infinite is God. As for the firſt part of this Doctrine, Cicero forbears the Repetition of what he had ſaid before by way of Refutation of thoſe who held the Divinity of the Intellect; and he ſuppoſes that the ſame Refutation falls alſo upon this firſt point of the Opinion of Xenophanes. But with regard to the ſecond part, he lays down what he thinks can refute it; for he obſerves that an Infinite containing nothing ſenſible, nor ever admitting any conjunction, cannot be God. I ſhall not Examine the weakneſs of this Argument, it being wholly unneceſſary: For every Body will clearly apprehend that ſince there is ſomething joint and ſenſible in a Finite Extent as Man is, ſuch things alſo are not incompatible with an Infinite Extent. I eaſily believe that Cicero did not apprehend the Opinion which he mentions; he divides it into two Parts, when perhaps it ought not to be divided. It is more probable that Xenophanes intended to ſay that God was nothing but the infinity of Nature (c) accompanied with an Intellect. It would be very prepoſterous to aſſert on the one hand that every Infinite is God, and on the other that the Humane Intellect is God: This would be to multiply the Deity in a contradictory manner, and to err incoherently. I very well know that the Ancient Philoſophers don't appear to us in the leaſt exact, in the remaining Fragments of their Opinions concerning the Principles of all things: But what particularly obliges me to believe that Xenophanes did not make that diviſion aſcribed to him, is to ſee, that according to the Teſtimony even of Cicero himſelf, he taught that there was but one ſole Being, and that this Being was Immutable, Eternal and the True God: (d) Xenophanes paulo etiam antiquior unum eſſe omnia, neque id eſſe mutabile & id eſſe verum Deum, neque natum uſquam quicquam & ſempiternum conglobata figura (e). This Citation is more diſtinct than what Ariſtotle Relates of Xenophanes's Opinion. (f) Ξενοφάνης δὲ πρῶτος τούτων ἑνίσας (ὁ γὰρ Παρμενίδης τούτου λέγεται μαθητὴς) οὐδὲν διεσαφήνισεν, οὐδὲ τῆς φύσεως τούτων οὐδετέρας ἔοικε θιγεῖν· ἀλλ' εἰς τὸν ὅλον οὐρανὸν ἀποβλέψας, τὸ ἓν εἶναί φησι τὸν θεόν. Xenophanes autem, quanquam prior iſtis, unum poſuerat, (nam Parmenides ejus auditor fuiſſe dicitur) nihil tamen clarum dixit, & neutrius horum naturam attigiſſe videtur: ſed ad totum cœlum reſpiciens, ipſum unum ait eſſe Deum. Theſe Words of Ariſtotle inform us that Xenophanes took up with confuſed Notions, and that he did not Examine in particular whether Unity, belonged to the Deity according to Reaſon, or according to Matter, and that he aſſerted in General what is One is God. Others tell us that he maintained that (g) Nature never had a beginning, and ſhall never have an end, and that ſhe is always like her ſelf; but that he ſpoke of the Gods in the plural Number. It is true (h) indeed that he rejected the common Opinion that the Gods ſtood in need of and commanded one another. Dependance ſeemed to him incompatible with the Divine Nature. He added that the Gods ſaw and heard in General, but not particularly this or that. For ſo I underſtand theſe Words of Euſebius, (i) ἀκούειν δὲ καὶ ὁρᾶν καθόλου καὶ μὴ κατὰ μέρος, in univerſum audire & cernere, non vero per partes. This ſavours of Spinoziſme; for Spinoza affirms that God ſo far as he is a Subſtance is barely endued with thought in general, and that the particular cognizances of every object do not unite in one ſole Mind, in order to repreſent all things to the ſubſtance of God. I own it may be pretended that Xenophanes intended to aſſert that by a ſingle act of the mind God ſees all things, and not every one of them by a particular Idea. He might explain himſelf if he were to return into the World: But he would not be a little puzzled to remove the difficulties propoſed to him concerning his Contradictions, and Incoherencies. He admitted (k) an infinity of invariable Worlds, and four Elements of all things. But to what purpoſe is this infininity of Worlds, ſince he taught that all things were but one Being, and that this ſole and only Being was God? Is not this to ſpeak of the World, like the People who call America the New World, and who give the Name of World to Mankind, and even to a Great Lord's Footmen, &c. (l) He aſſerted that (m) God was a round figure, and yet made him infinite. He ſaid (n) that God did not in any thing reſemble Man, and that he heard and ſaw all things without Reſpiration. A fine exception indeed! Was it neceſſary to expreſs it? If the Deity hath nothing common to Men, is it not Evident, that he is without Lungs and doth not breath? Why did he not alſo at the ſame time except the Eyes, the Ears, and the Face, &c. as well as the Act of Reſpiration? Xenophanes ſpoke more properly in the Verſes which (o) Clemens Alexandrinus cites; for he ſaid no more there than that God is not like Man either in Body or Soul; and that if Brutes could paint, they would repreſent the Deity in the ſhape of their own Species. He continually return'd to his Unity. (p) Σύμπαντά τε εἶναι, νοῦν καὶ φρόνησιν, καὶ ἀΐδιον, ſimulque (Deum) eſſe OMNIA, mentem, prudentiam, æternitatem. All the Eleatick Sect (q) with him believed the Unity of all things, and their Immobility (r): And perhaps I ſhould not be at all miſtaken, if I ſhould venture to ſay, that from thence aroſe the Doctrine ſo much cried up by the Scepticks, I mean that our Senſes deceive us, and that we ought not to rely on their Evidence. For when it was objected againſt thoſe Philoſophers that continually New Generations happen in the World; which ſuppoſes that there are two Principles, one Active and the other Paſſive; or at leaſt that the ſole ſubſtance of Nature is not immutable; they fond no better Expedient to ſolve this Difficulty, than to deny every Generation. They were therefore obliged to aſſert, that Nature continues always the ſame, and that the Variations which we believe ſhe ſuffers are nothing but meer illuſions of our Senſes, and meer appearences. Upon conſulting Euſebius he informs us that Permenides taught that the Univerſe being Eternal and Immovable, and one ſole Being, remained always the ſame with regard to the Reality of things, and that the various Generations were barely founded on a falſe prejudice of the Senſes: (ſ) Ἀΐδιον μὲν γὰρ τὸ πᾶν καὶ ἀκίνητον ἀποφαίνεται, καὶ κατὰ τὴν τῶν πραγμάτων ἀλήθειαν. εἶναι γὰρ αὐτὸ μόνον μονογενές τε καὶ ἀτρεμές. οὐδ' ἀγένητον. γένεσιν δὲ τῶν καθ' ὑπόληψιν ψευδῆ δοκούντων εἶναι. καὶ τὰς αἰσθήσεις ἐκβάλλει ἐκ τῆς ἀληθείας. Etenim ſempiternum eſſe orbem hunc univerſum, omnique motu carere;

(a) Lucian ubi ſupra.

(b) Cicero de natura Deorum, lib. 1. pag. m. 44.

(c) Theſe Words of Minucius Felix pag. m. 151. Xenophanes notum eſt omne infinitum cum mente, Deum tradere, favour my Opinion. Some Philoſophers deprived God of his Underſtanding.

(h) Euſeb. ibid.

(i) Ibi[illegible]

(k) Diog. Laert. lib. 9. in [illegible]

(l) See Furetiere's Dictionary at the Word monde.

(m) Diog. Laert. ib.

(n) Id. ib.

(o) Clem. Alexandr. Strom. lib. 5. p. 601. & ex eo Euſebius ib. lib. 13. cap. 13. pag. 678, 679.

(p) Laert. ibid. See alſo Euſebius, lib. 14. c. 1[illegible] pag. 7[illegible]

(q) Euſeb. ibid.

(r) Id. ib. 14. c. 17.

(ſ) Euſebius ubi ſupra lib. 1. c. 8. 23. C. Plutarch tradictory to the Doctrine of the Incarnation. He believed the Moon (A△△) an inhabited Country, and that it was impoſſible to predict Future ‡ Events; and if the Conjecture of a Learned Critick is well grounded, he aſſerted that in Nature Good exceeds (B) Evil. He is not alone in this Opinion; and 'tis likely that

---

(d) Cicero, Academic. quæſtion. lib. 2. fol. m. 211. D. (e) Conſult Sextus Empiricus. Pyrron. hypotyp. l. 1. c. 33 (f) Ariſtoteles, Metaphyſ. lib. 1. cap. 5. p. m. 648. E. NOTE that another Tract of Ariſtotle, which I quote in the Remark F. teaches us much better the whole Syſtem of Xenophates. (g) Οὔτε γένεσιν, οὔτε φθορὰν ἀπολείπει· ἀλλ' εἶναι λέγει τὸ πᾶν ἀεὶ ὅμοιον. Nullum penitus vel ortum vel interitum relinquit, ſed ſemper ſimile hoc univerſum eſſe ratus. Euſeb. de præparat. Evangel. lib. 1. cap. 8. pag. 23. ex Plutarchi Stromatu.

‡ Cicero de divinat. lib. 1. [illegible]

æterni; ipſiſque (a) naturæ veritatem omnino conſtare defendit ſingularem enim illum & unigenitum, ſtabilem ac quietum, nec certo ullo tempore generatum eſſe; Generationem porro ad ea rejicit, quæ falſa quadam opinione putentur eſſe, adeoque ſenſus omnes e communione veritatis excludit. Let us alſo conſult the ſame Euſebius, if we would ſee a ſolid Refutation of this Subterfuge. Ariſtotle clearly evinced to theſe defenders of immutability, or ingenerability, the Confuſion with which the refuge they had choſen was clogged; for ſince they durſt not deny the Mutation of Appearances, that is, that we do feel the Earth at one time Cold, and Hot at another, it follows that Nature is not immovable; and that ſhe muſt of Neceſſity change in the ſubject which produces, or receives our ſenſations. Senſe is a Paſſion, the Alteration of which ſuppoſes an efficient Cauſe and a Paſſive Principle. And thus your Unity of all things is ruined. Beſides, this Alteration is incompatible with your pretended immobility, or incorruptibility. (b) Εἰ γὰρ πρῶτον ἔστιν ἂν τὸ [illegible] ——— ἔπειτα δὲ ἐν τῷ ὂν ἓν εἶναι, μὴν οὐδὲ ἀκίνητον ἡ γὰρ αἴσθησις ἀλλοίωσις τις κίνησις. Habemus ergo primum id eſſe, quod diverſum vocatur ——— deinde quicquid eſt, non eſſe quid unum. Adde ne immobile quidem illud eſſe, cum ipſa ſentiendi ratio motus quidam ſit. I ſhall touch again on this Subject in the Remark E.

I ſhall obſerve by the by that there is a great deal of probability that the Author of the Art of thinking cenſures Ariſtotle unjuſtly in Favour of Parmenides. It were to be wiſhed, ſaith he (c), " that Ariſtotle who took care to Advertiſe us of this (d) Fault, would with equal caution have avoided it. For it is too Evident that he hath fallen foul upon ſeveral Ancient Philoſophers, by citing their Opinions very unſincerely. He refutes Parmenides and Meliſſus, for having admitted but one Principle of all things, as if they had meant the Principle of which they are compoſed, whereas they meant, the ſole and only Principle from which all things derive their Original, which is God. " The Author of the Art of thinking does Parmenides and Meliſſus a greater Honour than they deſerve. He repreſents their Opinions concerning the Origine of Created Beings as Orthodox; and yet they at beſt want very little of being as impious as thoſe of Spinoza: They acknowledged no difference betwixt the Principle of which all things are compoſed, and that which produced them. They admitted but one ſole being, and yet pretended that all things were Eternal. This is what is imputed to them in Euſebius as we have ſeen above. Ariſtotle doth not charge them with all this in all reſpects: He owns that Permenides teaching on the one ſide that in reality there is but one Being, but that according to Appearance there are ſeveral, accommodated himſelf to Appearance, and ſuppoſed two other Principles, which are Heat and Cold, Fire and Earth: (e) Ἀναγκαζόμενος δ' ἀκολουθεῖν τοῖς φαινομένοις, καὶ τὸ ἓν μὲν κατὰ λόγον, πλείω δὲ κατὰ τὴν αἴσθησιν ὑπολαμβάνων εἶναι, δύο τὰς αἰτίας, καὶ δύο τὰς ἀρχὰς τίθησι πάλιν, θερμὸν καὶ ψυχρὸν, οἷον πῦρ καὶ γῆν λέγων. Τούτων δὲ τὸ μὲν &c. Coactus vero illa, quæ apparent, ſequi, & unum ratione, plura vero ſecundum ſenſum putans eſſe, duas cauſas rurſum, ac duo principia ponit, calidum, & frigidum, velut ignem & terram dicens. Horum autem alterum, &c. It is hard to apprehend by what turn of (f) thought ſuch a great Number of the Ancient Philoſophers could believe that there is but one ſubſtance in the Univerſe. But it is very eaſy to apprehend that this being granted, they were then obliged to aſſert that the Univerſe perpetually continues in the ſame State: For a Being which neceſſarily exiſts, and which alone is all things, muſt of neceſſity be perfectly Immovable. No External Cauſe can change it, nor can it alter itſelf. It hath independently on its own Will exiſtence, and all the Attributes of its Nature. Whatever it hath once, it ought to poſſeſs continually; for what had no Beginning is not liable to Deſtruction. This alſo proves that it cannot acquire any thing new, ſince the production of one new quality would be the deſtruction of ſome other (g). Thus far the Syſtem of Xenophanes and Parmenides runs glibly. But as Experience convinced them that Changes do happen in Nature, ſuch as internally and effectually affect our Minds, tho' they are ſuppoſed to be meer illuſions of the ſenſes, theſe Philoſophers ſhould have acknowledged that they had built upon a falſe ſuppoſition, and ſhou'd have admitted two Principles, one Active and the other Paſſive. This being granted, we may believe that the Active Principle remains always in the ſame ſtate in the midſt of the Continual Variations of Nature (h). Its uniform and invariable Action received on different Subjects, muſt neceſſarily produce all the Viciſſitudes in the World. Don't we ſee that the Motion of the Air, without altering in itſelf, produces different effects, according as it meets with a Mill, a Veſſel, ſcattered Straw, or a heap of Leaves, &c.

(A△△) He believed the Moon an inhabited Country.] As Cicero informs us; and he is not the only Author, who aſcribes this Opinion to him. (i) Habitari ait Xenophanes in Luna, eamque eſſe terram multarum urbium & montium. Lactantius ridicules this Opinion, and repreſents Xenophane believing, not that the Circumference of the Moon was inhabited, but that it contained within its Boſom an Earth, Peopled with a Race of Men. He juſtly blames him for having aſſerted that this Planet is Eighteen times bigger than the Earth: (k) Xenophanes dicentibus mathematicis orbem lunæ duodeviginti partibus majorem eſſe, quam terram, ſtultiſſime credidit. & quod huic levitati fuit conſentaneum, dixit, intra concavum lunæ ſinum eſſe aliam terram, & ibi aliud genus hominum ſimili modo vivere, quo nos in hac terra vivimus. Habent igitur illi lunatici homines alteram lunam, quæ illis nocturnum lumen exhibeat, ſicut hæc exhibet nobis. Et fortaſſe noſter hic orbis alterius inferioris terræ luna ſit. I am not willing to Engage that he has rightly underſtood this Philoſopher's Notion; but ſeveral very great Men of theſe latter Ages would laugh at him for making a jeſt of it. This Opinion of Xenophanes is an Honour to him: It is alſo the Opinion of ſeveral celebrated Mathematicians. See what Dr. Wilkins Biſhop of (l) Cheſter ſaith on this head. His Treatiſe of the World in the Moon was Tranſlated into French by the Sieur de la Montagne, and Printed at Rouën in 1656. in 8°. See alſo Mr. Huygens's Coſmotheoros, of which Mr. Baſnage de Bauval gave us an Extract in his Journal for the Month of May 1698. The Opinions of Xenophanes concerning the motion of the Sun and Moon are very deſpicable. He (m) ſaid that " The Sun is Eclipſed, when extinguiſhed; he gives a farther Account of the Eclipſe of the Sun, which remains for a whole Month, and again of another ſort of Eclipſe which changeth the Day into Night; that there are many Suns and many Moons according as the Earth is diſtinguiſhed by Climates, Circles and Zones. At ſome certain time the Orb of the Sun falling upon ſome diſtrict part of the habitable World, wanders in a Vacuum, and becomes Eclipſed. The ſame perſon affirms, that the Sun proceeding in its motion in the infinite ſpace appears to us to move orbicularly, when truly it receives that Repreſentation from its infinite diſtance from us.

(B) That in Nature Good exceeds Evil.] Diogenes Laertius Accounts amongſt the chief Opinions of Xenophanes (n) τὰ πολλὰ ἥττω νοῦ εἶναι, that moſt things are worſe than, or inferior to the Mind. But it ſeems unworthy of a Philoſopher to talk thus; for the meaneſt Peaſant knows very well, and

(a) This paſſage ſeems to be corrupted. I had rather [illegible]

(b) Euſeb. ubi ſupra l. 14. c. 17. p. 756. D, ex libro 8. Ariſtoclis de Philoſophia.

(c) Art de penſer, 3. part, chap. 18. p. m. 316.

(d) That is, the Sophiſm call'd ignoratio elenchi, to prove a different thing from that in queſtion.

(e) Ariſtoteles, Metaphyſicæ lib. 1. c. 5. p. 648. E. See alſo chap. 3.

(f) I think they were led into this Opinion by this ſuppoſition, that ſince nothing can be produced out of nothing, whatever exiſts has a neceſſary exiſtence, and is therefore Eternal and infinite, and that Infinite can be but one.

(g) From hence we may draw a ſtrong proof that our Souls and matter are not uncreated beings. See the Remark E.

(h) Stabiliſque manens dat cuncta moveri. Boet. conſol. Philoſ. l. 3. metro 9.

(i) Cicero Academ. quæſt. lib. 2. fol. m. 211. C.

(k) Lactant. lib. 3. cap. 23, pag. m. 207.

(l) He Married a Siſter of Cromwell, by whom he had a Daughter, who was Married to Dr. Tillotſon Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury.

(m) Plut. de placitis philoſoph. l. 2. c. 24. pag. 901.

(n) Plurima deteriora mente eſſe. Diogen. Laert. ubi ſupra. 19.

if the queſtion was only about Evil (C) morally conſidered, I don't believe he would find one Opponent. For every Body owns that Good and Honeſt Men are very rare, and no Body needs to be taught, that the Mind of Man is better than Matter, Water or Air, &c. Wherefore we ought to believe that Xenophanes intended to ſay ſomewhat greater. This is the Conjecture of Meric Caſaubon (a). He pretends that this Philoſopher taught that the Divine Mind, which made the World, endeavour'd to endow all Creatures with a ſtate of Perfection; but that having found very ſtrong Obſtacles in Matter, he could not always compaſs his Deſigns; and that on ſome occaſions he was forced to produce evil things. Which is to ſay, that in this conflict he was ſometimes vanquiſhed, but oftner vanquiſher; and that the greateſt part of things were ſubmitted to the Deſires and Power of the Divine Mind, and conſequently ἥσσω τε εἶναι, doth not mean worſe than the Mind but ſubjected to it, and the ſubject of its Triumph. Caſaubon confirms his Conjecture by a paſſage in Plato, where it is ſaid that Neceſſity and the Mind concurred in the production of the World, and that Neceſſity ſuffered her ſelf to be perſuaded to conſent that things for the moſt part ſhould be governed for the beſt: (b) Μεμιγμένη γὰρ οὖν ἡ τοῦδε κόσμου γένεσις ἐξ ἀνάγκης τε καὶ νοῦ συστάσεως ἐγεννήθη· νοῦ δὲ ἀνάγκης ἄρχοντος, τῷ πείθειν αὐτὴν τῶν γιγνομένων τὰ πλεῖστα ἐπὶ τὸ βέλτιστον ἄγειν, ταύτῃ κατὰ ταῦτα (c) δι' ἀνάγκης ἡττωμένης ὑπὸ πειθοῦς ἔμφρονος, οὕτω κατ' ἀρχὰς ξυνίστατο τόδε τὸ πᾶν. Mundi enim hujus generatio ex neceſſitate mentiſque coitu mixta eſt. Nam cum mens neceſſitati dominaretur, propterea quod perſuadendo eam ad optimos ut plurimum rerum eventus induceret, ipſaque hac ratione cedens ſapienti perſuaſioni pareret, mundi hujus exordia conſtiterunt. (d) Caſaubon obſerves that Homer on a particular occaſion having ſaid that Evil exceeds Good, it was converted into a general (e) Maxim; as if univerſally ſpeaking the Miſeries of Humane life overbalanced the Happineſs of it. The ſame Critick obſerves that thoſe who ſpoke of this Subject with the greateſt modeſty, excuſed Providence on Account of the Fatal neceſſity which conſtrained it to open a Gate to ſeveral Evils. Qui parciſſime loquebantur Deum excuſabant qui Bonus non niſi bona in operibus ſuis & omni adminiſtratione ſua propoſuiſſet, ſed materiæ obluctantis vel deficientis neceſſitate coactus, etiam malis non paucis invitus locum reliquiſſet. He adds that Euripides hath ſtrenuouſly refuted the Common Opinion that Evil ſurpaſſes Good, and he cites the beginning of that Confutation.

Ἔλεξε γάρ τις ὡς τὰ χείρονα
Πλείω βροτοῖσίν ἐστι τῶν ἀμεινόνων.
Ἐγὼ δὲ τούτοις ἀντίαν γνώμην ἔχω,
Πλείω τὰ χρηστὰ τῶν κακῶν εἶναι βροτοῖς.

The immediate following Words (f) of Euripides ſeemed to Caſaubon to be written by an inſpired Pen. Pliny differs from this Poet's Opinion; for tho' he doth not determine that it is clearly apparent, that Nature behaves her ſelf to us rather like a cruel Step-mother, than a Tender indulgent Parent, yet he intimates that he is of that Opinion: (g) Principium jure tribuetur homini cujus cauſa videtur cuncta alia genuiſſe natura; magna ſæva mercede contra tanta ſua munera: non ſit ut ſatis æſtimare parens melior homini, an triſtior noverca fuerit. She ſets the Preſents ſhe makes us, ſaith he, at the Price of a Thouſand Afflictions. To this purpoſe he diſplays a long deſcription of Humane Infirmities, and oppoſes them to the Advantages of Animals over Mankind; nor doth he forget the Vices in which Men exceed Brutes: (h) Uni animantium luctus eſt datus, uni luxuria, & quidem innumerabilibus modis, ac per ſingula membra: uni ambitio, uni avaritia, uni immenſa vivendi cupido, uni ſuperſtitio, uni ſepulturæ cura, atque etiam poſt ſe de futuro. Nulli vita fragilior, nulli rerum omnium libido major, nulli pavor confuſior, nulli rabies acrior. Denique cætera animantia in ſuo genere probe degunt: congregari videmus, & ſtare contra diſſimilia: Leonum feritas inter ſe non dimicat: ſerpentium morſus non petit ſerpentes: ne maris quidem belluæ & piſces, niſi in diverſa genera, ſæviunt. At hercule homini plurima ex homine ſunt mala. He doth not forget the reflection which ſeveral have made, (i) that it would be beſt for Man not to be born, or to dye quickly. He affirms in another Book that the greateſt Bleſſing that God beſtowed upon Men amongſt ſo many Pains of life, is the Power of killing themſelves: (k) Nec ſibi poteſt (Deus) mortem conſciſcere, ſi velit, quod homini dedit optimum in tantis vitæ pœnis. He hath enumerated ſeveral of the Follies of Paganiſm, and concluded that of all theſe things there is but one certain, which is, that all things are uncertain, and that Man is the moſt miſerable and vaineſt part of the whole Creation: (l) Quæ ſingula improvidam mortalitatem involvunt, ſolum ut inter iſta certum ſit, nihil eſſe certi, NEC MISERIUS QUIDQUAM HOMINE, AUT SUPERBIUS. Cætera quippe animantium ſola victus cura eſt, in quo ſponte naturæ benignitas ſufficit: uno quidem vel præferendo cunctis bonis, quod de gloria, de pecunia, ambitione, ſuperque de morte non cogitant.

PLAUTUS does ſo naturally expreſs the contrary ſentiment to Euripides's Maxim, that I think my ſelf obliged to Tranſcribe his Words.

Satin' (m) parva res eſt voluptatum in vita, atque in ætate agundæ,
Præquam quod moleſtum'ſt! ita cuique comparatum'ſt in ætate hominum.
Ita Dis eſt placitum, voluptatem ut mœror comes conſequatur:
Quin incommodi plus malique ilico adſit, boni ſi obtigit quid.

Diphilus the Poet ſuppoſed Fortune to oblige us to drink a Liquor compoſed of three Evils, and only one good.

Ὥσπερ (n) κυαθίζουσ' ἐνίοθ' ἡμῖν ἡ τύχη,
Ἓν ἀγαθὸν ἐπιχέασα τρί' ἐπαντλεῖ κακά.
Fortuna nobis, tanquam cyathos expiſcantibus,
Si unum bonum infundat, tria mala affundit.

(C) About Evil morally conſidered.] A Hundred things would offer themſelves to our Obſervation upon the queſtion, Whether Euripides is rather to be believed than Pliny, and ſo many other great Men, who have maintained that the Evils of Humane life ſurpaſs the good things of it. Let us dwell a little upon this Subject, and premiſe that if the Diſpute barely relates to vicious Evil, the thing will ſoon be terminated on Pliny's ſide: For where is the Man who dares maintain that Virtuous Actions are in proportion as ten to ten Thouſand compared with the crimes of Mankind? But in the Second place if the queſtion about Evil concerns only Afflictions, Euripides will find a party. As to the Second point I ſhall refer to the following Remark, and offer ſomething on the firſt.

How deteſtable ſoever the Opinion of two Principles hath always appeared to all (o) Chriſtian Communions, yet it hath not prevented the admitting into Chriſtianity a Subaltern Principle of Moral Evil. For Divines teach us that a great Number of Angels having ſinned, made a party in the Univerſe againſt God. For brevity ſake this party is denoted by the Name of Devil or Dæmon, and he is acknowledged for the cauſe of the Fall of the firſt Man, and for the perpetual Tempter and ſeducer of Mankind. The Devil having declared War againſt God from the Moment of his Fall, hath always continued in his Rebellion. He continually applies himſelf to uſurp the Rights of his Creator and debauch his Subjects, in order to make them Rebels and engage them to ſerve under his Enſigns againſt their common Maſter. He ſucceeded in his firſt hoſtilities with regard to Man: He in the Garden of Eden attacked the Mother of all living, and vanquiſhed her; immediately after which he fell on the Man and defeated him.

Sacred Hiſtory (p) tells us of but one good Man in and that nothing is more Common than thoſe who ſwerve from the Rules of Virtue. But without all doubt, Xenophanes intended to ſpeak of Phyſical Evil; and his ſenſe was, that the Sweets of Life (D) do not equal the bitter Potions which it obliges us

---

(a) Meric. Caſaubon. in hæc verba Diogen. Laertii.

(b) Plato in Timæo, p. m. 1058. D.

(c) Meric Caſaubon reads τῆς ἀνάγκης.

(d) Mericus Caſaubonus ubi ſupra.

(e) Τὰ χείρονα [illegible].

(f) Cætera quæ bene multa talia, quæ θεόπνευστον pectus ſpirare videantur. Mericus Caſaubon.

(g) Plinius lib. 7. init. pag. m. 3.

(h) Id. ib. pag. 5.

(i) [illegible] See the Sentence in Cicero [illegible]

(k) [illegible]

(l) Id. ibid.

(m) Plaut. in Amphitr. act. 2. sc. 2. init. pag. m. 26.

(n) Diphilus apud Stobæum.

(o) For the Marcionites and Manichees do not deſerve to be call'd Chriſtians.

(p) Compare with this Remark G. of the Article [illegible] in Adam's Family, and reduced to one good Man the Family of that good Man, and ſo on in the other Generation to Noah, in whoſe Family we find three Sons whom God ſaved from the Deluge with their Father, Mother, and Wives. Thus at the end of ſixteen hundred fifty ſix Years, all Mankind, except one Family of Eight Perſons, were ſo deeply engaged in the Intereſt of the Devil, that the Enormity of their Crimes render'd it neceſſary to extirpate them. Error and Vice, ſoon after the Deluge, lifted up their Heads in Noah's Family: His Deſcendants plunged themſelves into Idolatry, and all manner of Debaucheries; that is to ſay, the Devil kept his uſurped Power over them. There was no more than one handful of People, confined in Judea, that eſcaped him with reſpect to Orthodoxy; and yet it muſt be owned that the Arms of the good Party were very uncertain with reſpect to that alſo, ſince that very Nation ſuffered it ſelf to be ſeduced to Idolatry from time to time; inſomuch that their Conduct was an alternative of the true and falſe Worſhip. But as for Vice it never ſuffered a real interregnum amongſt the Jews, any more than in other Countries: And conſequently the Devil continually kept one foot in the ſmall Conqueſts which the good party Recovered. There happen'd a happy Revolution at the Birth of JESUS CHRIST: His Miracles, his Goſpel, and his Apoſtles made glorious Conqueſts. Then the Empire of the Devil received a very great Check, and a conſiderable part of the Earth was wreſted out of his Hands; but he was not ſo driven out that he did not preſerve ſeveral Intelligences, and a great many Creatures there; he maintain'd himſelf there by the abominable Hereſies which he ſowed: Vices were never intirely driven out of it, and ſoon after entred into it again, as it were, in triumph. Errors, Schiſms, Diſputes, and Cabals introduced themſelves, together with the fatal train of infamous Paſſions which generally accompany them. The Hereſies, Superſtitions, Violences, Frauds, Extorſions, and Impurities, which have appeared all over the Chriſtian World for ſeveral Ages, are things which I ſhould only be able to deſcribe imperfectly, tho' I was Maſter of more Eloquence than Cicero. What Virgil ſaid (a) is true in a literal ſenſe. Thus whilſt the Devil reigned uninterrupted without the limits of Chriſtendom, he ſo ſucceſsfully diſputed the Ground in Chriſtendom, that the progreſs of his Arms were beyond compariſon, ſuperior to Truth and Virtue. A ſtop was put to them, and he was forced to retire in the XVIth Century; but what he loſt on one ſide, he regained on the other; and what he did not do by Lyes, he effected by the corruption of Manners. There is no ſhelter, no Fortreſs where he does not make Men feel the effects of his power in this particular. Leave the World, ſhut up your ſelf in a Monaſtery; he will follow you, he will bring in Intrigues, Envy, Factions, or, if he can do no worſe, Lewdneſs; this laſt reſource is almoſt infallible, Diaboli virtus in lumbis eſt, ſaith St. Hierome (b). A modern Author affirms, (c) That in thoſe Places where Popery is yet predominant, there is no true piety ——— and that Italy and Spain are places, where there is ſcarce any more true Virtue than in Turky. He ſaith in another Book (d) That it is a notorious and acknowledged Truth, that all the Convents of Spain and Portugal are places of proſtitution and lewdneſs; and that when Chance draws the Curtain, to give us an opportunity of ſeeing what paſſes in the French Monaſteries, we diſcover that they take a little more care of external appearances, but at the bottom are as impure as others. He ſpares the Proteſtants a little; but yet doth not ſtick to ſay, (e) that corruption runs very high amongſt them, and is become general, not only amongſt the Reformed in France, but alſo thoſe of England, the Northern Kingdoms, and the Provinces of Germany; that the Princes and Sovereigns of thoſe places think of nothing but their political Intereſts; that the People are without Piety, and the Paſtors remiſs; that a prodigious indifference for Religion reigns every where generally ſpeaking; that Princes take no care of the Truth; that the Women (f) of England are debauched to the laſt degree, and that the Proteſtant Countries in Germany, are plunged into ſuch a ſink of Debauchery, as debaſes them, and makes 'em brutiſh. If it be ſaid that this Author's deſcriptions are overſtrained, it will nevertheleſs be true, that the corruption of Manners amongſt the Chriſtians is deplorable.

Theſe two things require our Reflection. War prevails at leaſt for as long a tract of time as Peace amongſt the Chriſtians: I confine my ſelf to Chriſtianity, becauſe it is unneceſſary for me to ſpeak of the Infidel Nations; they are continually in the ſervice of the Devil, and ſubject to his Empire; and the Uſurper there is not in the leaſt interrupted. It is undeniable that War is the Devil's time, or, if I may ſo expreſs my ſelf, his turn of reigning; for without mentioning the Violences and Debaucheries committed in it, every body is neceſſarily obliged to profeſs that they will ſuffer no Injuries; it is abſolutely neceſſary to quit the Trade, or revenge an Affront: but this is manifeſtly to withdraw our Allegiance to the Empire of JESUS CHRIST, and deſert to the Enemy. Times of Peace do not ſeem ſo favourable to the Empire of the Devil, and yet they are very much ſo; for as People grow rich (g), they grow more voluptuous, and plunge themſelves deeper in Luxury and Eaſe. My other Remark is more deciſive. The Roman Catholicks and Proteſtants agree, that very few eſcape Damnation. They allow none to be ſaved but only the Orthodox who lead good lives, and repent of their ſins at the point of death. They don't indeed deny but that habitual Sinners may be ſaved, upon a ſincere Death-bed Repentance, but withal maintain that nothing is more rare than ſuch a Repentance. According to which it is plain, that for one Man ſaved, there are perhaps a Million damn'd.

Obſerve that all that I have been ſaying is every day preached. No more is meant by it than (which is alſo my Opinion) that Man is naturally ſo prone to Evil, that except the ſmall number of the Elect, all other Men live and die in the ſervice of the Evil Spirit, and render the Paternal Love of God ineffectual to remedy their Wickedneſs, or bring them to repentance.

(D) That the ſweets of Life do not equal the bitter Potions.] Thoſe who hold the contrary Opinion, chiefly inſiſt upon a parallel betwixt Diſeaſes and Health. There are very few Perſons, whatever Age they be of, but can reckon up, incomparably more days of health than ſickneſs; and there are a great many who in the ſpace of twenty Years have not been afflicted with Diſeaſes that will take up in all 15 days. But this Compariſon is fallacious (h); for Health conſidered alone is rather an indolence, than a ſenſe of pleaſure; it is rather a bare exemption from Evil, than a Good, whilſt Sickneſs is worſe than a privation of pleaſure: It is a poſitive ſtate which plunges the Mind into a Senſe of ſuffering, and loads the Patient with Pain. One (i) judiciouſly ſays, that when Health is alone, it is a Good which is not much perceived, and ſometimes only ſerves to make us the more ardently deſire all other Pleaſures which we cannot have. Let us make uſe of a Compariſon taken from the School-men: They ſay that (k) rare, i. e. porous Bodies contain but very little Matter under a great extent; and that denſe Bodies contain a great quantity of Matter as to ſwallow. Many People are perſuaded it is true, and do not want plauſible

---

(a) Non mihi ſi linguæ centum ſint oraque centum, ferrea vox, omnes ſcelerum comprendere formas —— poſſim. Virgil. Æneid. lib. 6. v. 625.

(b) Montagne, Eſſais, l. 3. chap. 5. p. m. 134.

(c) Jurieu, Vrai Syſteme de l'Egliſe, pag. m. 262.

(d) Eſprit de Mr. Arnaud, tom. 2. pag. 392. (e) See the Abbot Richard, Critique des prejugez de Mr. Jurieu. pag. 134. He quotes the Avis aux Proteſtans de l'Europe.

(f) Id. ib. pag. 258. quoting the ſame Avis aux Proteſtants.

(g) Nunc patimur longæ pacis mala, ſævior armis Luxuria incubuit, victumque ulciſcitur orbem. Juvenal Sat. 6. v. 291.

(h) See the Article Pericles

(i) I think it is Mrs. de Scuderi.

(k) Rarum eſt quod ſub magna dimentione parum continet materiæ: denſum quod ſub parva dimenſione multum continet materiæ.

are couched in a ſmall compaſs. According to this Principle, if one ſhould ſay that there is more matter in three feet of Water than in two thouſand five hundred foot of Air; this is a lively image of ſickneſs and health. Sickneſs reſembles the denſe Bodies, and Health the rare. Health laſts many Years, and yet contains but a ſmall portion of Happineſs. Sickneſs continues but a few days, and yet comprehends a vaſt load of Miſery. If we had a Scale adapted to weigh both a Diſeaſe of 15 days, and the Health of 15 years, we ſhould obſerve the ſame difference that we find in the Balance betwixt a Bag of Feathers and a piece of Lead. In one Scale we ſhould ſee a Body which takes up a great deal of room, and on the other, one which lies in a very ſmall compaſs; and yet one of them is not heavier than the other. Let us then beware of the Illuſion which the extenſion of Health may draw us into, when it is parallell'd with Sickneſs. But you will ſay that Health is conſiderable, not only by reaſon it exempts us from a very great Evil, but alſo by the liberty which it affords us, to taſte a thouſand lively and very ſenſible Pleaſures. I grant all this, but it ought to be farther conſidered, that there being two ſorts of Evils to which we are ſubject, it only ſecures us from one, and leaves us wholly expoſed to the other. We are ſubject to Pain and Sorrow, two ſuch terrible things, that it is not to be decided which is moſt dreadful. The moſt vigorous Health doth not ſecure us from Grief. For Grief flows in upon us through a thouſand and a thouſand Channels, and is of the nature of denſe Bodies. It compriſes a great deal of Matter in a very ſmall volume; Evil is heaped up, crowded and preſſed cloſe in it. One hours Anxiety contains more Evil, than there is Good in ſix or ſeven pleaſant days. The other day I was told of a Man who killed himſelf, after an anxious Melancholy of three or four Weeks. Every Night he laid his Sword under his Bolſter, in hopes that he ſhould have courage enough to end his Life, when darkneſs ſhould increaſe his Grief: But his Reſolution failed for ſeveral Nights ſucceſſively. At laſt, not being able to reſiſt his uneaſineſs, he cut the Veins of his Arm. I aver, that all the Pleaſures which this Man had enjoyed in 30 Years, would not equal the Evils which tormented him the laſt Month of his Life, if both were weighed in the Balance. Look back to my parallel of denſe and rare bodies, and remember this, that the good things of this life are a leſs Good, than the evil things are an Evil. Evils are generally more pure and unmixt than good things; the lively ſenſe of Pleaſure doth not continue long, it immediately grows flat and dull, and is followed with a diſguſt (a). What appeared an exalted good when we did not poſſeſs it, ſcarce touches us in the Enjoyment: So that we acquire with a thouſand Fatigues and Uneaſineſſes, what we poſſeſs with no more than a moderate Pleaſure; and very often the fear of loſing the Good we enjoy, ſurpaſſes all the Pleaſures of the fruition of it.

I have been ſhewed a very fine paſſage of Pliny, which is alſo very proper to confirm the Thoughts which I have juſt now offered. (b) Si verum facere judicium volumus, ac repudiata omni fortunæ ambitione decernere, mortalium nemo (c) eſt felix. Abunde igitur, atque indulgenter fortuna decidit cum eo, qui jure dici non infelix poteſt. Quippe ut alia non ſint, certe, ne laſſeſcat fortuna, metus eſt: quo ſemel recepto, ſolida felicitas non eſt. Quid quod nemo mortalium omnibus horis ſapit? utinamque falſum hoc, & non a vate dictum quam plurimi judicent! Vana mortalitas, & ad circumſcribendum ſeipſam ingenioſa, computat more Thraciæ gentis, quæ calculos colore diſtinctos, pro experimento cujuſque diei in urnam condit, ac ſupremo die ſeparatos dinumerat, atque ita de quoque pronunciat. Quid quod iſte calculi candore illo laudatus dies, originem mali habuit? Quam multos accepta afflixere imperia; quam multos bona perdidere, & ultimis merſere ſuppliciis? iſta nimirum bona, ſi cui inter illa hora in gaudio fuit. Ita eſt profecto, alius de alio judicat dies, & tamen ſupremus de omnibus: Ideoque nullis credendum eſt. Quid quod bona malis paria non ſunt, etiam pari numero; nec lætitia ulla minimo mœrore penſanda? Heu vana & imprudens diligentia! numerus dierum comparatur, ubi quæritur pondus. I find another paſſage which gives a lively image of the ill ſtate of Felicities, I ſpeak of thoſe common to all Men, I mean corporeal Pleaſures. (d) Quid autem de corporis voluptatibus loquar, quarum appetentia quidem plena eſt anxietatis, ſatietas verò pœnitentiæ? Quantos illæ morbos, quam intolerabiles dolores, quaſi quendam fructum nequitiæ fruentium ſolent referre corporibus! —— Triſtes verò eſſe voluptatum exitus, quiſquis reminiſci libidinum ſuarum volet, intelliget——

Habet omnis hoc voluptas,
Stimulis agit fruentes,
Apiumque par volantum,
Ubi grata mella fudit,
Fugit, & nimis tenaci
Ferit icta corda morſu.

Boetius ſuppoſes Philoſophy expreſſing her ſelf thus to him. It appears by this Diſcourſe, that if anxiety precedes the enjoyment of Pleaſures, Diſguſt and Repentance follow cloſe after it. A vaſt number of Authors obſerve this miſerable concomitance, or, to ſpeak more intelligibly, this connexion of Pleaſure and Uneaſineſs. I have cited two (e) in my firſt Edition, and now I add a third, which is Antiphanes.

Ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ δ' ἔν γε τόπῳ, ἔνθα τὸ
Ἡδὺ ἔνεστι, πλησίον που καὶ τὸ λυπηρόν. αἱ γὰρ ἡδοναὶ Οὐκ ἐπὶ σφῶν αὐτῶν ἐμπορεύονται, ἀλλ' ἀκολουθοῦσ' αὐταῖς
Λύπαι καὶ πόνοι.

Id eſt,

At in eodem ipſo, in quo
Jucunditas ineſt, propè ſanè & moleſtia præſto eſt.
Voluptates enim
Non ipſæ ſolæ ingrediuntur, ſed earum comites ſunt
Dolores ac LABORES.

Let us alſo obſerve another Circumſtance. We are not only in fear of loſing what we poſſeſs, but alſo vexed to ſee other People equal or ſurpaſs us, and that others will ſoon be able to come up to us, and afterwards get before us. Obſerve that in order to prove that Good is not ſo perfectly Good, as Evil is Evil, I have made no uſe of this Argument, that it rarely happens that a good uſe is made of the Favours of Fortune, ſo that they do not lead us to great miſeries, that they may be ſaid to be a Grace, (f) and not a Snare; I ſay, I have omitted this Reaſon, becauſe I do not here pretend to conſider the cauſes and occaſions of Good and Evil, but Good and Evil formally taken. It would be to depart from the ſtate of the Queſtion to ſay, that Man afflicts himſelf without cauſe. For it is not our buſineſs here to know whether his Grief is reaſonable or the effect of his weakneſs; but the Queſtion is, to know whether he grieves. That very thing that a Man vexes himſelf without reaſon, and makes himſelf unhappy by his own fault, is an Evil.

We muſt own with Seneca, conſidering the multitude of good things which Nature has imparted to us, and the inexhauſtible Induſtry with which the Wit of Man diverſifies Pleaſures, and diſcovers the ſources of them; that God not contented to provide barely for our Neceſſities, hath beſides furniſhed us with ſuperfluities enough to live deliciouſly. Unde hæc innumerabilia oculos, aures, animum mulcentia? unde illa luxuriam quoque inſtruens copia? Neque enim neceſſitatibus tantummodo noſtris proviſum eſt: uſque in delicias amamur. Tot arbuſta, non uno modo frugifera, tot herbæ ſalutares, tot varietates ciborum, per totum annum digeſtæ, ut inerti quoque fortuita terræ alimenta præberent. Jam animalia omnis generis, alia in ſicco ſolidoque, alia in humido innaſcentia, alia per ſublime dimiſſa: ut omnis rerum naturæ pars tributum aliquod nobis conferret (g). —— (h) Unde iſta palatum tuum ſaporibus exquiſitis ultra ſatietatem laceſſentia? unde hæc

(a) Πάντων μὲν κόρος ἐστὶ καὶ ὕπνου, καὶ φιλότητος, μολπῆς τε γλυκερῆς, καὶ ἀμύμονος ὀρχηθμοῖο. Omnium quidem ſatietas eſt, & ſomni & amoris cantuſque dulcis & egregiæ ſaltationis. Homer. Iliad. lib. 13. v. 636.

(b) Plinius lib. 7. cap. 40. pag. m. 62. Mr. du Rondel has acquainted me with this Paſſage.

(c) Euripides in Medea v. 1228 & 1230. p. m. 327. ſays the ſame thing.

(d) Boe… de C… ſol. … lib. … 3. pr… p. m.

(e) Uſque adeo nulla eſt ſincera voluptas, Sollicitique aliquid lætis intervenit. Ovidius Metam. l. 7. v. 453. Medio de fonte leporum Surgit amari aliquid, quod in ipſis floribus angat. Lucret. lib. 4. v. 1127.

(f) Munera iſta fortunæ putatis? inſidiæ ſunt. Quiſquis noſtrum tutam agere vitam volet, quantum plurimum poteſt iſta viſcata beneficia devitet, in quibus hoc quoque miſerrimi fallimur, habere nos putamus, habemur. Seneca epiſt. 8.

(g) Seneca de beneficiis, lib. 4. c. 5.

(h) … c. 6.

plauſible Reaſons for it, as we ſhall ſee hereafter. And even thoſe who acknowledge [illegible] ille fuit, in quo [illegible] natura? Nonne ſi [illegible] dixit, ——Deus nobis hæc otia fecit

All that Seneca ſaith in this part of his Book de Beneficiis is very true; but doth not Pliny withal aſſure us (a) that Nature makes us buy her Preſents at the price of ſo many ſufferings, that it is dubious whether ſhe deſerves moſt, the Name of a Parent, or Step-mother? To reconcile theſe two Author, we ought to conſider what Divinity teaches us of the Oeconomy of God, as a Father, and as Judge of Mankind. Thoſe two Relations require that Man ſhould be ſenſible of Good and Evil. But the Queſtion is, whether Evil exceeds Good? and upon this Head I am apt to think that we can go no farther than Opinions and Conjectures. A great many ſay, that moſt Perſons, after they are a little advanced in years, grow like la Mothe le Vayer (b), who would not again have paſſed through the ſame Good and Evil which he had felt in his life. If it be ſo, it ought to be believed that every one who keeps a juſt account, finds that the Pleaſures which he enjoys, do not equal the uneaſineſſes and pains with which he is afflicted. I don't alledge that none is content (c) with his condition, for that is no proof that every Man believes himſelf leſs happy than unhappy. Four Afflictions mixed with Twenty Felicities, would be ſufficient to engage a Man to with an alteration of his Condition, I mean ſuch an one as is not charged with any Inconvenience, or at leaſt where he ſhould find but two of them to forty Advantages. On the other ſide, none ought to alledge againſt me what (d) Lactantius ſaith, that Men are ſo nice, that they complain of the leaſt Evil, as if it abſorbed all the good things they enjoy: For it is to no purpoſe to conſider here what the abſolute quantity of Good and Evil diſpenſed to Man, may be in it ſelf; we are only to conſider their relative quality; or to expreſs my ſelf more clearly, we ought to conſider nothing but the feeling of the Mind. A very great Good in it ſelf, which raiſes but a very mean pleaſure, ought not to paſs for more than a moderate Good; but an Evil, tho' very little in it ſelf, which gives an Uneaſineſs, Grief and Pain, that are inſupportable, ought to paſs for a very great Evil: So that to make a Man paſs for leſs happy than unhappy, it is ſufficient that he is afflicted with three Evils for thirty Felicities which he enjoys, if thoſe three Evils, as little in themſelves as you pleaſe, give him more diſturbance than thirty good things, as great in their own nature as you pleaſe, afford him Pleaſure. The Government of a Province is in it ſelf a much greater good than a Ribbon; and yet if a Duke and Peer is ſenſibly touch'd with a greater joy at the receipt of a Ribbon from his Miſtreſs, than in obtaining the Government of a Province from his King; I aver, that a Ribbon is a greater Good to him than the Authority of a Governour. By the ſame Reaſon it is alſo a greater Evil for him to be deprived of this Ribbon, than to be deprived of his Poſt, if he is more griev'd at the loſs of the Ribbon than at that of his Poſt. On which account no Man is able to judge aright, either of the Miſery (e) or Happineſs of his Neighbour. We don't know what another ſenſibly feels, we only know the outward cauſes of Evil and Good: Now theſe Cauſes are not always adequately proportion'd to their effects; thoſe which ſeem to us very ſmall, frequently produce a lively Senſe; and thoſe which appear to us great, very often occaſion but a very faint one. The following words of Tacitus are really an Oracle: (f) Neque mala vel bona quæ vulgus putet: multos qui conflictari adverſis videantur, beatos, ac pleroſque quamquam magnas per opes miſerrimos, ſi illi gravem fortunam conſtanter tolerent, hi proſpera inconſulte utantur. We ought only to extend the ſignification of the Word, inconſulte, ſo that it may comprehend the Diſpoſition of the Temper which makes us receive the Favours of Fortune with inſenſibility or without joy.

All this ſhews that none can determine poſitively whether his Neighbour's Deſtiny be drawn out of Homer's (g) two Veſſels, in ſuch a manner, that the Doſe of Good be as large, or perhaps larger than that of Evil. All that can be ſaid with full certainty, is, that no Man's Fate was ever drawn wholly out of the good Veſſel. To which purpoſe I have an excellent paſſage of Pauſanias to cite; it is the reflection which he made upon hearing that one Aglaus was happy his whole life. (h) [illegible] Quod vero ſcriptis mandarunt Aglaum Pſophidium, (i) ſicuti & Crœſum Lydorum regem, vitam omni fere ætatis tempore beatam egiſſe, id ego ut credam non facile adducor. Nam ut hominem qui levioribus multo, quam alius quiſpiam qui iiſdem vixerit temporibus, incommodis affectus, non difficillime fortaſſe reperias, uti navem adverſis tempeſtatibus minus agitatam; ſic propemodum neminem unquam crediderim perpetuo moleſtiarum & calamitatum immunem fuiſſe; quando neque ulla navis memorari poſſit, quæ ſemper ſecundiſſimis uſa fuerit tempeſtatibus. Nam & Homerus id ſenſiſſe videtur, quo loco duo, bonorum unum, alterum malorum, dolia apud Jovem ſtatuit. Id enim ille ex Delphico Apolline didicerat; qui ipſum & miſerum ſimul, & beatum dixerat, utpote ad utramque vitæ ſortem genitum. As this Aglaus was alive in Crœſus's time, there is no room for any ſurprize that Solon omitted him, (k) when he named to that Monarch three Men who to him ſeemed happy; for he believed that to deſerve that Title, one ought to be ſhelter'd from the inconſtancy of Fortune, and that during life no Man is ſecure from this inconſtancy. If Solon had affirm'd that thoſe three Men, during their Lives, never felt either Grief or Pain, (l) he had been miſtaken, and had contradicted that profound good ſenſe which made him look for Happineſs, not at the Court of Crœſus, but amongſt Men of mean condition.

PRINCES and great Men are not ſo happy as other People.

It is certain that thoſe who would find Perſons, who have had more Happineſs than Uneaſineſs, will rather meet them amongſt (m) the Peaſants, or the meaneſt Handicrafts-men, than amongſt Kings and Princes. Read theſe words of a great Man: (n) "Do you believe then that "Uneaſineſs and the moſt deadly Pains don't hide "themſelves under the Purple, or that a Kingdom "is an univerſal remedy againſt all Evils, a Balm "that aſſwages them, or a Charm which enchants "them? Whereas by the courſe of Divine Provi"dence which knows how to counterpoiſe the moſt "exalted Conditions; this Grandeur which we "admire at a diſtance, as ſomething more than "Humane, is leſs ſenſible to thoſe who are born "in it, or confounds it ſelf in its own Plenty; "and on the contrary, it is attended with a new "ſenſibility for Griefs, whoſe Blow is the hard"er, by reaſon that great Men are leſs prepared "to receive it.„ Theſe are the two Sources of the Unhappineſs of Princes: Their Being continually accuſtomed to the charming ſide of their condition, renders them inſenſible of the Good, and very ſenſible of the Evil. When three pieces of good News and one of bad are brought to them, they ſcarce feel how much felicity there is in the former, but are touched to the quick with the Miſfortune of the latter. Can they then want uneaſineſſes? Are their Proſperities not thwarted by ſome ill Fortune? Read all that Guſtavus Adolphus did in Germany, and you will there find a ſuperiority of Fortune, to be parallel'd with very few Examples; and yet you'll obſerve ſuch great

---

(a) I have quoted his words in the Remark B. See the words of Socrates in the Remark D Δ.

(b) See the Remark F in the Art. Vayer, and what has been ſaid of Cicero in the Art. Tullia, Remark R.

(c) Theſe Verſes of Horace lib. 1 initio Sat. 1. contain a true matter of fact. Qui fit, Mæcenas, ut nemo quam ſibi ſortem Seu ratio dederit, ſeu fors objecerit, illâ contentus vivat? laudet diverſa ſequentes.

(d) I have quoted his words in the Article Tullia.

(e) Felicitas cui præcipua fuerit homini non eſt humani judicii: cum proſperitatem ipſa alius alio modo & ſuopte ingenio quiſque terminet. Plin. lib. 7. cap. 40. p. m. 62.

(f) Tacitus Annal. lib. 6. cap. 22.

(g) See the [illegible] chæus.

(h) Pauſanias lib. 8. pag. 556.

(i) This is not well Tranſlated by Romulus Amaſæus. It ſhould be, tempore Crœſi. This fault has not been mended in the Leipſick Edition, 1696.

(k) Plutarch in Solone, pag. 93.

(l) See above the words of Pauſanias.

(m) See Horace, Epodon Ode 2.

(n) James Benignus Boſſuet, Biſhop of Meaux, Oraiſon funebre de Marie Tereſe d'Autriche, Reine de France, p. 78, 79. Dutch Edition.

ledge; that Nature hath furnished Mankind with an infinity of agreeable conveniencies mixtures of disadvantageous Events, that you will easily believe him to have run through a great deal of Uneasiness (a). Besides, suppose that the Victories obtained in some Provinces, do not concur with the Losses sustained in others, you will have reason to believe that is joy not pure and unmixed. An hundred anxious Reflections disturb it. It is conceived that the attack was made too soon or too late; too many Men are lost, and due advantage was not taken of the disorder of the vanquished, but they were permitted to return from their fright; and by a different conduct it is believed the Victory had been more substantial. How many Generals are there who pass the Nights very ill after intire Victories? They are sensible that they are beholden for them to a lucky Chance, to the fault of the Enemy, and sometimes even to their own faults. They conceive they have not done what they might have done. They are apprehensive of the Comments of the experienced, and of the malicious reflections of their Enemies. In a word, they cannot bear a good Testimony to themselves, nor internally applaud the Elogies bestowed upon them. This disturbs and racks them. Whilst their Consciences are sometimes in a sound Sleep, with regard to the Law of God, they are touched to the very quick with respect to the transgression of some martial Laws, and the non-observation of some Rules which a most expert General would have followed. Observe that the most fortunate Princes either in gaining of Battles, or conquering of Towns, are those, whom the defeat of an Army, or the raising of a Siege afflict the most unmercifully. A long train of Adversities hath hardened others; but they grow almost insensible of good success, and infinitely sensible of the least Disgraces. Augustus is an Example of this. On a thousand occasions he obtained the most important and glorious advantages over his Enemies that he could have wished, and scarce experienced any of the effects of ill Fortune: But the loss of three Legions so horribly afflicted him, that it may be justly said of him, that the Evil he suffered on that account, exceeded the Good which Ten Victories had made him sensible of. Read what follows: (b) Graves ignominias cladesque, saith Suetonius, after having made a long enumeration of the Successes of that Emperor, duas omnino, nec alibi quam in Germania, accepit, Lollianam, & Varianam: Sed Lollianam majoris infamiæ quam detrimenti: Varianam pene exitiabilem, tribus legionibus, cum duce, legatisque, & auxiliis omnibus cæsis. Hac nuntiata, excubias per urbem indixit, ne quis tumultus existeret: & Præsidibus provinciarum propagavit imperium, ut & a peritis & assuetis socii continerentur. Vovit & magnos ludos Jovi Opt. Max. SI REMPUBLICAM IN MELIOREM STATUM VERTISSET: quod factum Cimbrico Marsicoque bello erat. Adeo namque consternatum ferunt, ut per continuos menses barba capilloque summisso, caput interdum foribus illideret, vociferans; Quintili Vare, legiones redde: diemque cladis quotannis mœstum habuerit ac lugubrem. I cannot better prove, than by the Example of Augustus, that we ought not to look for happy People upon the Throne; for, if any Monarch was ever Fortune's Favourite, it was Augustus; and yet the (c) List of his Griefs is so large, that no one will deny, that at least he was sensible of as much Evil as Good. See what I observe concerning (d) Charles V., (e) Queen Elizabeth, (f) Lewis XI. and (g) Lewis XIII. Mr. Silhon saith judiciously, that the (h) whole lives of Ferdinand, Charles V. and Philip II. were nothing but a mixture of Good and Evil; that in them we see Prosperities without number, and Misfortunes without measure; Wounds covered with Lawrels; and Triumphs adorned with Mourning—— Look upon Ferdinand, proud of the reduction of the Kingdom of Granada, and obtaining the Title of Catholick: See him triumph over Naples, and the Fortune of France: Behold, a Caprice gives him Navarre, and Chance guides him to the discovery of an unknown World, and new Riches—— But let us consider the other side of his Life, and turn the Scales. We shall see a Prince ill treated by Fortune, and a Diadem bruised with her Blows. We shall see a Father burying his only Son, and solemnizing the Funeral of his eldest Daughter. A Husband losing a Wife, who had been his Glory, and more the Companion of his Fatigues than of his Bed. A Master forsaken by his Servants and Creatures: An old Man driven from his House, and a Father-in-law despoil'd and stript by his own Son-in-law. Add to this, that he could not bear the Reputation of a great Captain. And this jealousie was not the least of his uneasinesses. See in the Original what Mr. Silhon saith of (i) Charles V. and Philip II. And see what Plutarch relates of a great Prince (k) who was esteemed happy.

So that the Abbot Regnier (l) had reason to say,

Qu'ont ils d'ordinaire,
Qu'ont ils au dessus
Du destin vulgaire
Ceux qu'un sort prospére
Eleve le plus?
Une montre vaine
De grandeur humaine,
Qui marche avec eux,
Des dehors pompeux,
Brillants agreables,
Des soins devorants,
Des biens apparents,
Des maux veritables.
Les grands en un mot
N'ont pas le bon Lot.

The following words of the Count de Bussi struck me the first time that I read them: (m) "When you "and I shall no longer have upon our hands the "expence of the War for our Children, we shall "meet with other troubles in time of Peace; for "in short, we must have some. To which purpose, hear our Friend Comines talking on this "Theme of the Crosses of Human life. No Creature is exempt from Trouble, all eat their Bread in "Pain and Sorrow; our Lord promised it when he "made Man, and hath faithfully performed it to "all sorts of People." If Philip de Comines had been ask'd, do you believe that Monarchs have a larger share in the execution of the Promise of our Lord than other Men? I am throughly persuaded that he would have answered (n) Yes, I BELIEVE it.

What I have just been saying of Kings, may, in proportion, be said of all those whom Providence raises to eminent Posts, and who participate of any sort of Grandeur. Their Lot is a mixture, in which Evil is for the most part predominant. Great Knowledge and a sublime Genius do not exempt Men from this Fatality. No, look rather amongst the most ignorant Rabble, than among Illustrious Learned Men for Happiness: The Glory that surrounds Authors and celebrated Orators, doth not secure them from a thousand Troubles. It exposes them to Envy two several ways: They have Rivals who persecute them, and are jealous, in their turn, of the Praises which others deserve; a Typographical Error gives them more disturbance, than four Letters full of Elogies can afford them Pleasure. The Glory which they have acquired diminishes their Sense of Flattery, and makes 'em more sensible to the privation of it, to Censure and sharing of Fame, &c. Besides, the more Learning they have, the more they know that their Works are imperfect. If they guard themselves against the Weakness of Prejudices, and the irregularities of a hundred mean Passions, and are willing to conform their Language and Conduct to this temper of Mind, they become odious, and must not expect any external Advantages. If they externally conform to the depraved Taste of the World, they reproach themselves a hundred times a day with this ignominious Hypocrisie, and thereby disturb their repose. There are very few who, like Democritus, can know the extravagance of Humours, and divert themselves with it: That Philosopher was Master of this Talent. Read Hippocrates's Letter to Damagetes, and add to it the Paraphrase upon it which an Author

(a) See [illegible] Tilly's Publish some Manifesto against those who blamed him for not preventing the taking of Magdeburg.

(b) Suetonius in Augusto, c. 23.

(c) You'll find it in Pliny, lib. 7. cap. 45.

(d) In the Remark K of his Article.

(e) In the Remark Q of his Article.

(f) In the Remark T of his Article.

(g) In the Remark B of his Article.

(h) Silhon, Ministre d'Etat, B. 2. discours 3. pag. 135. Dutch Edition.

(i) He is in the [illegible] [illegible] Nephew. He was [illegible] some [illegible], wherein he found the Character, [illegible], that a German to Ferdinand.

(k) To Agamemnon. See Plutarch de tranquillitate animi, p. 466. &c. Read the whole Dissertation of la Mothe le Vayer, upon Prosperity in the 8. vol. of his Works.

(l) In a piece of Poetry prefixed to M. Leti's Critique sur les loteries.

(m) Bussi Rabutin's Letters of the 1st part, pag. 25. Dutch Edition.

(n) See the last chapter, and the conclusion of his Memoirs.

veniencies, and appointed all other things for their uſe, conſider Man (D Δ) in another reſpect as an unhappy being. The neceſſity to which ſo many People are reduced, of ſeeking a Remedy againſt their uneaſineſs (D Δ Δ) amongſt forbidden pleaſures, is no ſmall part of the rigorous ſeverity of their Fate. However, we may alledge the Authority of Ariſtotle; for that great Genius, who Philoſophized with ſo much Application, and Penetration, acknowledges that there tine (a) of the XVI. Century publiſhed. He elegantly and particularly unfolds what the Greek Author ſaid in general. He diverted himſelf with this Cenſure, one may perceive that he was vexed, and that if he had been asked,

Quelle (b) humeur ſombre
Fas tu voir a contretems?

he might have ſaid

C'eſt que je ne ſuis point du nombre
Des Auteurs qui ſont contents.

Pauſanias mentions (c) the Oracle which was delivered to Homer, you are happy and unhappy. Apollo could not Anſwer better.

It is time to put an end to theſe Common-places. Give me leave then to conclude them with 4. Remarks. The 1. is, that if we conſider Mankind in General, it ſeems that Xenophanes might have ſaid, that Pain and Grief prevail over Pleaſure. 2. That there are ſome private Perſons, who afford room to preſume, that in this life they taſte much more of Good than Evil. 3. That there are others of whom we may believe that they have a much larger ſhare of Evil than Good. 4. That my Second Propoſition is more eſpecially probable, with reſpect to thoſe who die before their declining Age; and that the third appears chiefly certain in thoſe who arrive to a decrepit Old Age. When Racan (d) ſaid,

Que pour eux ſeulement les Dieux ont fait la gloire,
Et pour nous les plaiſirs.

in Engliſh,

For them alone the Gods have Glory made,
And for us Pleaſures.

Doubtleſs he conſidered only the flower of our Age; it is then that Pleaſures are predominant; and that Good turns the Scale: It is then that the Pagan Nemeſis makes Advances, and gives Credit: She is then willing that Accounts ſhould be given without any Compenſation; but ſhe reimburſes her ſelf in Old Age.

Multa (e) ſenem circumveniunt incommoda, vel quòd
Quærit, & inventis miſer abſtinet, ac timet uti:
Vel quòd res omnes timide gelideque miniſtrat,
Dilator ſpe longus, iners, avidusque futuri:
Difficilis, querulus, laudator temporis acti
Se puero, cenſor caſtigatorque minorum.
Multa ferunt anni venientes commoda ſecum,
Multa recedentes adimunt.

But this Poet hath not ſaid all, nor was it neceſſary for him to touch on the diſadvantage of Old Age which Juvenal diſplays.

Ut (f) vigeant ſenſus animi, ducenda tamen ſunt
Funera natorum, rogus aſpiciendus amatæ
Conjugis, & fratris, plenæque ſororibus urnæ.
Hæc data pœna diu viventibus, ut renovata
Semper clade domus, multis in luctibus, inque
Perpetuo mœrore, & nigra veſte ſeneſcant.

Add to this that Paſſage of Virgil:

Optima (g) quæque dies miſeris mortalibus ævi
Prima fugit: ſubeunt morbi, triſtiſque ſenectus;
Et labor, & duræ rapit inclementia mortis.

OBSERVE that Racan Advances a Maxim which gives the Lye to the greateſt of the Ancient Poets, for ſee what Homer ſaith:

Ὠ'ς (h) γὰρ ἐπεκλώσαντο θεοὶ δειλοῖσι βροτοῖσι.
Ζώειν ἀχνυμένους· αὐτοὶ δέ τ' ἀκηδέες εἰσί
Sic enim fato-tribuunt dii miſeris mortalibus,
Ut vivant triſtes: ipſi verò ſine curis ſunt.

(D Δ) Even thoſe who believe that Nature ——— appointed all other things for their uſe, conſider Man ——— as an unhappy being.] Have we not ſeen above, Pliny, after a Prologue which allows the Superiority to our Species, placing it below all other Animals on Account of ſeveral diſadvantages? Could Seneca, who ſo lively repreſents the Favours which God beſtows upon Men, have denied Pliny's Obſervation? Could Socrates, who ſo advantageouſly deſcribed the Prerogatives of Humane Nature, have denied it? Thou thinkeſt, ſaid he, to a Diſciple, who denied Providence, (i) "That the "Gods take no care of Man, they who have al"lowed him alone the Privilege of going erect, "which affords him a great Advantage in the view "of diſtant things, in conſidering things above at "his Eaſe, and avoiding many inconveniencies. "In the next place, all Animals which go, have "indeed Feet; but they ſerve them for no other "uſe than barely to go: Whereas the Gods beſides "this have given Hands to Man, which render him "the Happieſt Animal in the World. All Ani"mals have Tongues; but there is none "beſides that of Man, that can form Words, "to explain his thoughts, and communicate "them to others. And to ſhew that the Gods "take even care of our Pleaſures, they have not "determined the Seaſon for the Amours of Men, "who may continually enjoy, till their extreme "Old Age, a pleaſure which the Brutes taſte only "at a certain Seaſon of the Year. Laſtly, not con"tented with beſtowing ſo many Advantages on "the Body of Man, they have endowed him with "a Soul, tranſcendently excellent, and ſurpaſſing "all others. For which amongſt the Souls of o"ther Animals is it, that hath any knowledge of "the Eſſence of the Gods, the Works of whoſe "Creation are ſo ſtupendious? Is there any other "Species beſides that of Man that ſerves and adores "them? What Animal like him can defend him"ſelf from Hunger, Thirſt, Cold and Heat? "Which of them like us can find out Remedies a"gainſt Diſeaſes, or exerciſe his ſtrength? Which "of them is ſo capable of Learning, or ſo perfectly "retains the things which he hath ſeen, heard, "or known? In a Word, it is clear that Man is a "God in Compariſon with other living Species, "conſidering the Advantages of Body and Mind, "which he Naturally hath over them." It is very likely that after this Beautiful deſcription, he would have owned the deplorable Condition of Man, if the Scales had been turn'd, if he had been deſired to examine the Matter throughly.

(D Δ Δ) Of ſeeking a Remedy againſt their uneaſineſs amongſt forbidden pleaſures.] Is not this to deliver ones ſelf from a Phyſical Evil by a Moral one? Is not ſuch a Remedy worſe than the Diſeaſe? And is not the Man very miſerable, who can have recourſe to no other refuge than this? It is very certain that a vaſt Number of People find no other Remedy. Domeſtick Brawls, and the ſight of an ill management at home force Men out of Doors to Gaming, or to Drinking at the Tavern. Without which they cannot drive away their Melancholy; and that is the ſole diverſion which they oppoſe againſt uneaſineſs. Some Men deſignedly intoxicate themſelves to avoid the Sorrows of the night, the time when they are moſt uneaſy. They have found their ſleep prevented by them, and their thoughts too cruelly kept intent on their Miſery. Wherefore by the help of Wine they procure a profound ſleep to themſelves. Which is ſo much time ſnatched out of the Hands of ill Fortune; it is to ſecure the moſt formidable part of 24 Hours. Generally ſpeaking Women cannot make uſe of this Buckler againſt Anxiety, and therefore their Condition is more deplorable than that of Men. Whence Medea declares in Euripides that a Woman ill Married is in ſuch a miſerable Condition, that it is better for her to dye than live with her Husband; ſhe cannot like the Men go out of her Houſe in queſt of neceſſary Conſolations.

(e) Horat. de arte poetica, v. 169.

Juvenal. Sat. 10. v. 240.

(g) Virgil. Georgic. lib. 3. v. 66.

(h) Homer. Iliad. lib. 24. v. 525.

(i) Xenoph. de memorab. Socrat. lib. 1.

there is more (D △△△) Evil than Good in Nature, and that for that Reaſon Empedocles diſliked the Hypotheſis of the Unity of a Principle, and firſt began to ſuppoſe two Principles, one of Good, the other of Evil. The Holy Scripture * ſo emphatically repreſents the Miſeries of this life, that it is ſufficient to afford a Demonſtrative Argument on this Controverſy. I wonder that the Rabbin Maimonides, who had a great deal of knowledge and Judgment, and was a pretty good Philoſopher, could (D △△△△) think that he had fully refuted the Doctrine I ſpeak of. There is ſome probability that Xenophanes believed the incomprehenſibility (E) of all things. He gave the Ægyptians good Advice, when he ſaw them lamenting in the Celebration of their Feſtivals. If the Objects of your

* See particularly the Book of Job, and that of the Pſalms in ſeveral places.

Κἂν (a) μὲν τάδ' ἡμῖν ἐκπονουμέναισιν εὖ
Πόσις ξυνοικῇ, μὴ βίᾳ φέρων ζυγόν,
Ζηλωτὸς αἰὼν· εἰ δὲ μὴ, θανεῖν χρεών:
" Ἀνὴρ δ' ὅταν τοῖς ἔνδον ἄχθηται ξυνὼν,
" Ἔξω μολὼν ἔπαυσε καρδίαν ἄσης,
" Ἢ πρὸς φίλον τιν', ἢ πρὸς ἥλικα τραπείς.
" Ἡμῖν δ' ἀνάγκη πρὸς μίαν ψυχὴν βλέπειν.
Et ſi nobis hæc quidem peragentibus bene
Cohabitaverit maritus, non violentum nobis imponens jugum, Beata eſt vita: ſin minus, ſatius eſt mori.
" Vir vero cum dolet propter res domeſticas,
" Foras egreſſus ſedat cordis bilem,
" Converſus aut ad aliquem amicum, aut coætaneum,
" Sed nos oportet ſpectare ad unam animam.

(a) Euripid. in Medea v. 241. p. m. 176.

(D △△△) Ariſtotle—— acknowledges that there is more Evil than Good in Nature, and that for that Reaſon Empedocles—— firſt began to ſuppoſe two Principles.] Before I cite his Words, I ought to obſerve that he gives himſelf the Liberty of unravelling Empedocles's Opinion, and explaining it according to the Spirit, rather than the Letter of it; but after all he takes for granted that Good is the cauſe of all Good, and Evil the cauſe of all Evil. The two Principles of Empedocles, were Amity and Diſcord: (b) Ἐπεὶ δὲ καὶ τἀναντία τοῖς ἀγαθοῖς ἐνόντα ἐφαίνετο ἐν τῇ φύσει, καὶ οὐ μόνον τάξις καὶ τὸ καλὸν, ἀλλ' ἀταξία, καὶ τὸ αἰσχρὸν, καὶ πλείω τὰ κακὰ τῶν ἀγαθῶν, καὶ τὰ φαῦλα τῶν καλῶν· οὕτως ἄλλος τις φιλίαν εἰσήνεγκε, καὶ τὸ νεῖκος ἑκάτερον ἑκατέρων αἴτιον τούτων· εἰ γάρ τις ἀκολουθοίη καὶ λαμβάνοι πρὸς τὴν διάνοιαν, καὶ μὴ πρὸς ἃ ψελλίζεται λέγων Ἐμπεδοκλῆς, εὑρήσει τὴν μὲν φιλίαν εἶναι τῶν ἀγαθῶν, τὸ δὲ νεῖκος τῶν κακῶν· ὥστ' εἴ τις φαίη τρόπον τινὰ καὶ λέγειν, καὶ πρῶτον λέγειν τὸ κακὸν καὶ τὸ ἀγαθὸν ἀρχὰς Ἐμπεδοκλέα, τάχ' ἂν λέγοι καλῶς· εἴπερ τὸ τῶν ἀγαθῶν ἁπάντων αἴτιον, αὐτὸ τὸ ἀγαθόν ἐστι, καὶ τῶν κακῶν τὸ κακόν. Cum autem contraria quoque boni ineſſe naturæ apparerent, nec ſolum ordo, & pulchrum, verum etiam inordinatio, & turpe, pluraque mala, quam bona, & turpia quam pulchra, ideò alius quidam amicitiam introduxit, & contentionem, utrunque utriuſque horum cauſam. Si quis enim ſequatur, & ſecundum ſententiam accipiat, non ſecundum ea, quæ balbutiens Empedocles dixit, inveniet amicitiam quidem bonorum cauſam eſſe, contentionem verò malorum. Quare ſi quis dicat quodam modo dicere, & primum Empedoclem dicere malum, & bonum eſſe principia, fortaſſe bene inquiet: ſiquidem bonorum omnium cauſa, ipſum bonum, ac malorum, ipſum malum eſt. Obſerve that he elſewhere (c) cenſures this Opinion of Empedocles, and that he did not believe any Eternal Principle of Evil; for he affirms (d) that there is nothing but Good in the Eternal beings.

(b) Ariſtoteles Metaphyſ. lib. 1. cap. 4. p. m. 646.

(c) Id. ib. lib. 12. cap. 10. pag. 745.

(d) Id. ib. lib. 9. cap. 9. p. 747.

(D △△△△) I wonder that the Rabbin Maimonides—— could think that he had fully refuted the Doctrine I ſpeak of.] He Confeſſes that the Heathens and even ſome of the Rabbins made Declamations on the ſuperiority of Evil, and he calls them ridiculous and ſenſeleſs Men. Sæpiſſime, ſaith he (e), ſolent in Cordibus hominum imperitorum ejuſmodi Cogitationes exſurgere, ac ſi longè plura eſſent in mundo Mala quam Bona, ita ut in multis Poematis & Canticis Gentilium hæc & ſimilia reperiantur. Miraculi inſtar eſſe quando in tempore Boni aliquid invenitur. Mala autem eſſe multa & perpetua. Atque his Error non ſolum in vulgo obtinuit, verum etiam apud eos, qui ſapientes haberi volunt, & apud ipſum Alraſi in libro illo celebri quem Sepher Elohuth h. e. Theoſophiam nominavit, in quo multa ex deliriis & ſtolidiratibus ſuis congeſſit, è quibus & iſtud eſt, quod plura exiſtunt mala quam bona; eo quòd ſi Comparationem inſtituas inter recreationes & voluptates hominis, quæ tempore tranquillitatis percipit, cum doloribus, Cruciatibus, perturbationibus, defectibus, curis, ſollicitudinibus & afflictionibus, deprehendatur, vitam hominis illorum bonorum reſpectu eſſe vindictam magnam & malum magnum. He ſays that the cauſe (f) of their Extravagant Error is, that they fancy Nature was made only for them, and that they reckon that as nothing which has no Reference to their Perſons, from whence they infer that if any thing goes ill with them, all is amiſs in the Univerſe. He adds, that if we would conſider the ſmallneſs of Man, with reſpect to the Univerſe, we ſhould be ſoon convinced that the ſuperiority of Evil has no place among the Angels or the Celeſtial Bodies, nor among the Elements and the mixt inanimate Beings, nor among ſeveral ſorts of Animals. This Obſervation of Maimonides doth not reach the Mark; for thoſe whom he refutes mean nothing elſe but that Evils among Men ſurpaſs Good things. What doth it avail then to convince them of their Error, to ſay that Evil doth not ſurpaſs Good in the reſt of Nature? All inanimate Bodies are uncapable of Good and Evil; they muſt not therefore be put into the Account when this queſtion is in diſpute: And there is no Body but may maintain, that all in which we place the Order, Beauty and Perfection of the Celeſtial Bodies, &c. being changed, it would be no Evil with reſpect to the Univerſe, tho' Man or ſome other particular Creatures ſhould ſuffer Damage by it. If the Sun and the Planets, had the ſame variation as the Ships, which go to and come from Marſeilles to Naples, ſometimes in fewer and ſometimes in more Days, without any fixed Rule, could not one pretend that with reſpect to the Univerſe it is not an Evil, an imperfection and a diſorder?

(e) Moſes Maimonides in More Nevochim part. 3. cap. 12. p. m. 354, 355.

(f) Cauſ erroris in eſt illius Hominis & omnium ipſius ſociorum eſt quod, &c. Id. ib. pag. 355.

After this Maimonides ſays that the Evils of Mankind may be reduced to three Claſſes: The firſt proceed from Man's having a Body: The Second proceed from Men's Machinations one againſt another: The third are thoſe which a Man brings on himſelf by his own Fault. He makes fine Remarks on all this, but they are Foreign to the queſtion; for the diſpute is not about the cauſe of Man's unhappineſs, but whether it be matter of Fact, that the Evils which he ſuffers ſurpaſs the good things he enjoys. It ſignifies nothing to tell us that we our ſelves are the cauſe of our misfortunes, that we often trouble our ſelves without any Reaſon for it; and that the Pleaſures of life are numberleſs, and ſometimes very long; for all this is uncapable of ſolving the Difficulty. A Grain of Evil, as I may ſay, (g) ſpoils an Hundred Pound of Good; a little piece of Iron hot in the 7 degree, burns more than an Hundred Feet hot in the 4 degree. No Evil is ſmall when it is looked on as great, and nothing troubles an uneaſy Man more than to know, that he has no Reaſon to be uneaſy. There is, ſays Mr. de St. Evremont (h) "a ſort of uneaſineſs of which I cannot imagine "the cauſe; and as one does not know how to find "the true Reaſon of it, I think it very difficult to "allay, or to preſerve one ſelf from it—— This "ſort of uneaſineſs is common to all Men: They "are uneaſineſſes which make us fall out with our "ſelves, and ſhewing us that we have no Reaſon to "be uneaſy, force us in ſpite of Self-Love to confeſs that we are unjuſt and unreaſonable to our "ſelves.

(g) The Sea water, whoſe bitterneſs is intolerable, contains 40 or 42 times more ſalt Particles than Sea

(h) St. Evremont in his Diſcourſe of Vexations and Troubles, him from the Extract of an anonymous Writer, who Criticiz'd that Author. pag. 17 for my Edition (Tom. 4. pag. 4 which is the Dutch one, 169 contains but part of what this Critick mentions.

(E) Xenophanes believed the incomprehenſibility of all things.] Let us begin this Remark with a paſſage of Diogenes Laertius: (i) Φησὶ δὲ Σωτίων πρῶτον αὐτὸν εἰπεῖν ἀκατάληπτα εἶναι τὰ πάντα, πλανώμενος, that is, Sotion, who ſays that Xenophanes

(i) Diog. Laertius lib. 9. n. 20.

your Worship, said he †, are Gods, don't weep: If they are Men, offer no Sacrifices to them. Others tell us that he ‡ made use of this thought, when the Eleates desired to know of him whether they ought to Sacrifice to Leucothea, and shed

‡ Plutarchus de superstit. in fine, pag. 17

ers in the first, who maintained that all things are incomprehensible, is mistaken. We are not satisfied by these Words whether Diogenes Laertius denied that Xenophanes held the incomprehensibility; for he might not deny it, and yet charge Sotion with an Error. This Accusation would be just, if before Xenocrates others taught, that all the Objects of our Minds are beyond our Comprehension. There are a Thousand such places in Diogenes Laertius: they don't redound to his Honour: For an exact Genius would avoid these Ambiguities and Obscurities. I suppose he intended to say (a) that Xenophanes did not teach the incomprehensibility; but at the same time I think he is to blame to speak thus of this Philosopher. For all Appearances engage us to believe that Xenophanes taught, that we could not comprehend any thing in the Nature of things. (b) Plutarch charges him with saying, that our Senses and Reason are fallacious Faculties; and others will have it that he denied the Evidence of sense, in order to conclude that nothing ought to be relied upon but Reason, and they tell us that he was the first Author of this Doctrine. (c) Οἴονται δεῖν τὰς μὲν αἰσθήσεις καὶ τὰς φαντασίας καταβάλλειν, αὐτῷ δὲ μόνον τῷ λόγῳ πιστεύειν. Τοιαῦτα γάρ τινα πρότερον μὲν Ξενοφάνης καὶ Παρμενίδης——— ἔλεγον. Sensus visaque omnia funditus repudianda, rationi uni fidem habendam opinantur. Ac primum quidem Xenophanes, & Parmenides——— in ea sunt doctrina versati. I believe Plutarch represents the System of Xenophanes more faithfully than Aristocles. For I am persuaded that Xenophanes relied no more upon Reason than upon his Senses, upon the following Account. He was the first (d) who Taught that whatever was made is corruptible. He also Taught (e) that all things were but one sole Being; and that this sole Being continued always the same, and could not be Subject to any change. (f) Ὅθεν ἠξίουν ἕν γε τὸ ὂν εἶναι, καὶ τὸ μὴ ὂν ἕτερον εἶναι, μηδὲ γεννᾶσθαί τι, μηδὲ φθείρεσθαι, μηδὲ κινεῖσθαι τὸ παράπαν. Hi quicquid esset, unum duntaxat esse: quod ab eo diversum esset, id non esse: generari nihil, nihil corrumpi, moveri omnino nihil statuebant. But a more exact Account of the Principles of Xenophanes, in their Natural Connexion, runs thus. (g) First of all he affirmed that nothing was made out of nothing, that is, to remove all Ambiguity, that a thing which had not always existed never could exist. From whence he concluded that whatever is, always existed: But, added he, what always existed is Eternal; what is Eternal is infinite; what is infinite, is but one, for if it contained several Beings, one would terminate the other, and it could not then be infinite. Besides, said he, what is but one, is throughout like it self; for if it comprehended any difference, it would not be one, but several Beings. In short, this sole, eternal and infinite Being, ought to be immovable, and immutable; for if it could change its place, there would be something beyond it, and then it would not be infinite: And if it could suffer any alteration without changing of place, something that did not always exist would begin to be produced, and something which had always existed would cease to be. But that is impossible; for every thing which not having eternally existed shou'd begin to exist, must be produced out of nothing, and every thing which never had a Beginning hath a necessary existence; and therefore cannot ever cease to be. These were his Principles, if we believe (h) Aristotle. I don't doubt but they appeared very evident to him, and that he was persuaded he had a Gradation of consequences necessarily drawn from an incontestable Principle. The Orthodox Divines will deny him, that nothing can have a beginning; but would grant him that the Being which never had a beginning is one only, infinite, immovable, and immutable, and that every being, whose existence is necessary, is not obnoxious to destruction. They teach with Reason, that God is not Subject to any Alteration; for if any change should happen to him, he would get, and lose something. What he should acquire would be either distinct from his substance, or a mode Identical with his substance. If it was a distinct being, God could not be a simple being; and what is worse, would be composed of an increated, and, Created Nature (i). If it was a mode Identical with his substance, God could not produce it without producing himself. But as he exists independent of his own Will, and did not give himself his being at the beginning, it follows that he can never do it. Besides, nothing that necessarily exists can ever cease to be: from whence it must of necessity follow, that God never can lose what he once had. But what is called a modification, or ens inhærens in alio, is of such a Nature that it cannot be produced but by the ruin of another Modality; perfectly in the same manner that a New figure is necessarily the Destruction of the Old one. Wherefore if God acquires something new, he must necessarily lose some other thing: for this new Acquisition will not be a substance, but an Accident, or an ens inhærens in alio. Seeing therefore nothing which necessarily exists can cease to exist, it follows that God can never acquire any thing new. Thus the immutability of God is supported by Evident Notions. Xenophanes added to his Maxims the following one, that nothing is made out of nothing; but every Accident produced anew, and distinct from the Divine substance, would be produced out of nothing. Wherefore he was obliged to deny that the Eternal being can acquire any new Mode distinct from its own substance. But he found himself very much perplexed when the Continual Generations in Nature were objected to him. They prove both that the Universe is not one sole Being, and that it contains something mutable, since it actually changes. In order to clear himself of this Objection, he excepted against the Evidence of the Senses; he urged that they deceive us, that it is not true that there happen any Generations in Nature, and that they are but false Appearances. But he was doubtless answered, that the Appearances of the Senses would not change at all, if our Mind continued always the same, and if the Beings without us did not change; and therefore at least, what in us is the passive Subject of perceptions, which you call the fallacies of the Senses, must needs be mutable and variable: Wherefore what you assert that there is no change in the Universe, is not true. I cannot see that he could make any other reply than that our Reason is as fallacious as our Senses, and that every thing is incomprehensible to her. For if when she is founded on Evidence, which is her ne plus ultra, she doth not hit on truth, it is a sign that Truth is a thing incomprehensible, and impenetrable. Now Building upon Evident Notions, I asserted that nothing is made out of nothing; whence it necessarily follows that nothing can begin, and that every thing that once exists, exists always, which evidently proves the immovableness, and immutability of all things; I had, I say, clearly comprehended this, and yet the experience of my Sensations and Passions, convinces me that I ammutable: I have not therefore comprehended any thing with certainty, I have not therefore a Faculty adequately proportioned to Truth. Thus we may suppose him Arguing, and thence we may conclude that the Sect of the Acataleptics (k), and that of the Pyrrhonists, owed their Birth solely to the Principle of the immutable Unity of all things asserted by Xenophanes. I do not affirm, that he was in the right in the consequences just mentioned. The only Reason why I alledge this is to shew that I don't Contradict the Writer of this Philosopher's (l) life without very just Reasons. First I have on my side the Evidence of (m) Sotion, Cicero, Plutarch and some Verses of (n) Xenophanes, which were unknown to (o) Diogenes Laertius. In the Second place I may affirm that Xenophanes held some Principles which as I have just now given several Proofs of it, necessarily engaged shed Tears for her or not. I must not forget that he was banished his Country †, that he retired to Sicily and lived at || Zancle, and Catana, that he * founded the Eleatick Sect, that Parmenides was his Scholar, and that he complained of

---

(a) See below the passage de Sextus Empiricus.

(b) Xenophanes [illegible] omnes sensus fallaces esse, & communiter, atque cum illis ipsam quoque rationem in omnibus criminatur. Plutarch. in Stromatis apud Eusebium præparat. Evangel. lib. 1. c. 8. p. 23. B.

(c) Aristocles, de Philosophia, lib. 8. apud Eusebium ubi supra. lib. 14. cap. 17. p. 756. B.

(d) Πρῶτος ἀπεφήνατο [illegible] Primus definivit omne quod fiat corruptioni obnoxium esse. Diogen. Laert. ubi supra n. 19.

(e) See Plato in Sophista p. m. 170. C.

(f) Aristocles ubi supra, apud Eusebium ubi supra. (g) See Aristotle's Treatise de Xenophane, Zenone & Gorgia, init. in the 1st Tome of his Works pag. 937. Edit of Geneva 1605. (h) Ubi supra.

(i) If he is a being is distinct from another, it is not compounded of it; and therefore a being distinct from any other being is made out of nothing, and consequently Created.

(k) Those, who taught the incomprehensibility.

(l) See what I have said of Diogenes Laertius at the beginning of this Remark.

(m) See the first quotation of this Remark.

(n) See hereafter the passage of Sextus Empiricus.

(o) He quotes the beginning of it in vita Pyrrhonis lib. 9. n. 72.

ed him to assert the Incomprehensibility. But let us here cite the Verses in which he declares his Opinion.

> Καὶ (a) τὸ μὲν οὖν σαφὲς οὔτις ἀνὴρ γένετ' οὐδέ τις ἔσται
> Εἰδὼς ἀμφὶ θεῶν τε, καὶ ἅσσα λέγω περὶ πάντων.
> Εἰ γὰρ καὶ τὰ μάλιστα τύχοι τετελεσμένον εἰπών,
> Αὐτὸς ὅμως οὐκ οἶδε, δόκος δ' ἐπὶ πᾶσι τέτυκται.
> [illegible] nemo vir scit, sed neque sciet unquam
> De Diis & cunctis a me quae dicta fuerunt.
> Namque licet sit perfectum quod dixerit ille,
> Ille tamen nescit, cunctis & opinio in his est.

It is Evident by these Words of Xenophanes, that it is impossible for any Person to arrive at the clear and certain knowledge of the Truth; and that a Man can't know that he has met with it, tho' he shou'd hit on it; He adds, that there is nothing but Opinions within our Reach. Sextus Empiricus ranks him (b) amongst those, who deny a criterium veritatis, a Rule or measure of Truth. I own that he disagrees with those, who (c) place him in the Number of the Acatalepticks; but withal he ascribes to him the Opinion, that we do not comprehend things to that degree of certitude which amounts to Science, and that our determinations never go beyond likelyhood and probability. Is not this really to assert Acatalepticism, or the incomprehensible Nature of things? (d) Φαίνεται μὴ πᾶσαν κατάληψιν ἀναιρεῖν, ἀλλὰ τὴν ἐπιστημονικήν τε καὶ ἀδιάπτωτον, ἀπολείπειν δὲ τὴν δοξαστήν. τοῦτο γὰρ ἐμφαίνει τό, δόκος δ' ἐπὶ πᾶσι τέτυκται. ὥστε κριτήριον γίνεσθαι κατὰ τοῦτον τὸν δοξαστὸν λόγον, τουτέστι τὸν τοῦ εἰκότος, ἀλλὰ μὴ τὸν τοῦ παγίου ἐχόμενον. Videtur non omnem tollere comprehensionem, sed eam quae est ex scientia, & quae non potest aberrare. Relinquit ergo opinabilem; hoc enim indicat illud, cunctis & opinio in his est: quo fit ut ex ejus sententia id quod judicat sit ratio opinabilis, hoc est, ratio ejus quod est probabile, non autem ea quae sequitur id quod est firmum ac stabile. So that I don't see that Mr. Menage (e) was much in the Right to say, that Sextus Empiricus in this place favours Diogenes Laertius against Sotion. And I am the more confirmed in it, because that Learned Commentator says just before that Cicero and Origen are favourable to Sotion. (f) Sotioni assipulatur Cicero in Lucullo: Parmenides, Xenophanes, minus bonis quamquam versibus, sed tamen illis versibus, increpant eorum arrogantium quasi irati, qui, cum sciri nihil possit, audeant se scire dicere. Item Origines in Philosophicis: Οὗτος ἔφη πρῶτος ἀκαταληψίαν εἶναι πάντων, εἰπὼν οὕτως. Εἰ γὰρ καὶ τὰ μάλιστα τύχοι τετελεσμένον εἰπών, Αὐτὸς ὅμως οὐκ οἶδε, δόκος δ' ἐπὶ πᾶσι τέτυκται. As for the particular question whether this Philosopher was the first, who asserted the incomprehensibility, as Sotion affirms, there is more Reason to continue in suspence, since Plato saith that (g) before Xenophanes others believed the Unity of all things; an Opinion which seems not very widely distant from that of the Incomprehensibility. Nothing is finer, than the Verses of Timon recited by Sextus Empiricus (b). I do not know why the Interpreters have not turned that place into Latin.

The Reasons, which led Xenephanes to the Unity of all things, were probably the same which Aristotle ascribes to Melissus and (i) Parmenides. They seem very subtil, tho' according to the Natural Quality of great Genius's, Aristotle hath described them a little Obscurely, by reason he affected Brevity. Those Arguments are doubtless Sophisms, as well as those which may be read (k) above; nevertheless they might have imposed upon the Readers, and I don't know whether Aristotle hath throughly refuted those two Ancient Philosophers. Consult the Jesuits of Coimbra (l), who have represented one of the Reasons of Melissus and Aristotle's Answer in their full force; And you will find that nothing can be weaker than this Answer, and that Melissus is not Guilty of false Argumentation in this Proposition, If every thing, that was made, hath a Principle, that which never was made hath no Principle. This Aristotle assures us is a manifest Paralogism. (m) Ὅτι μὲν οὖν παραλογίζεται Μέλισσος, δῆλον. οἴεται γὰρ εἰληφέναι εἰ τὸ γενόμενον ἀρχὴν ἔχει ἅπαν, ὅτι καὶ τὸ μὴ γενόμενον οὐκ ἔχει. Igitur quod Melissum captiose ratiocinetur manifestum est; sumpsisse enim arbitratur, si quicquid ortum est principium habeat, id non habere, quod ortum non est. But, added Melissus, nothing (n) was made, for if any thing had been made, it would have been produced out of nothing, or from something else: If out of another thing, it must necessarily have pre-existed, which ruins your supposition: if out of nothing, then something might be made out of nothing which is false. This is a demonstrative Argument against Aristotle, who denied Creation properly so called. And as for his distinction betwixt a Principle of Substance, and a Principle of Forms and Qualities; it is insignificant in the Hypothesis of the Impossibility of the Creation: For every substance which never began, and necessarily exists, must be immutable. It wou'd be therefore in vain for you to hunt after the Principles of Generation and Corruption; for there wou'd be none, if all things were Uncreated, as they are according to Aristotle, who never opposed the Axiom, ex nihilo nihil fit. But after owning that this Objection of Melissus, which it is impossible to solve any other way than by the Orthodox Christian hypothesis concerning the Creation, really surpassed all Aristotle's strength, it must also be acknowledged that the other subtilities of Melissus and Parmenides were less puzzling, and when applied to experience, that is, to the variety of things which the Universe exposes to our view, they did not appear any thing but Puerilities.

I observe by the by, that the Jesuit, who Commented on Cicero de Natura Deorum, takes Xenophanes's part against Aristotle somewhat rashly. Dubio procul, saith he (o), exciderit illi (Velleio) convitium illud quod in Xenophanem contorquet Aristoteles lib. primo Metaphysicorum, capite quinto, ubi & obscurum illius, vel ingenium, vel dicendi genus notat, & hominem quasi agrestem magna quadam negligentia despectat, & ab toto Philosophorum senatu relegandum censet. Eam tamen Xenophani de Deo sententiam ascribit quae minime agreste ingenium sapiat: nempe τὸ ἓν εἶναι τὸν Θεόν. id quod est unum, esse Deum: vel ut Theophrastus habet apud Laertium: unum, & universum, & omne esse Deum. This Father is very much to blame for ascribing a reasonable Opinion concerning the Nature of God to Xenophanes: For the Sentiments of that Philosopher on that head are abominably impious, and amount to a more dangerous Spinozism than that which I have refuted in the Article of Spinoza: Spinoza's Hypothesis carries its Preservative along with it, by the mutability or continual corruptibility which he attributes to the Divine Nature with respect to Modalities. This Corruptibility is contradictory to common sense and at once shocks those of mean parts and those of the most exalted Capacities: But the Immutability in all respects attributed to the Infinite and Eternal Being by Xenophanes, is a Principle of the purest Theology; wherefore it is more liable to seduce us in favour of the rest of his Hypothesis. On the other side, the pernicious Fall of this Philosopher may prove more contagious than Spinozism. For not being able to maintain the Post to which his Reason had led him, he fell into a Precipice; and found fault with his Reason which had perplexed him, and thrown him into Nets which he could not break: He accused it of being incapable of comprehending any thing. And indeed several others would be reduced to the like extremities, if they had not recourse to an Assistant superior to Reason. But the Jesuit whom I refute is not wholly to blame: He had just Reason to Censure Aristotle's contempt of Xenophanes's Genius; for tho' a true Greatness of Mind and a solid force of Argumentation would not suffer a Man to sink at this rate, yet it is true that a mean

---

† Diog. Laert. ubi supra n. 18.

|| The same Town with Messana, now Messina.

* Clem. Alex. Strom. [illegible]

(a) Xenophanes apud Sextum Empiricum adversus Mathematicos, pag. 146. 157. 2[illegible]. See also Plutarch de audiend. poet. pag. 17. E.

(b) Ibid. pag. 146.

(c) Ibid. & pag. 156. 157.

(d) Id. ib. pag. 157.

(e) Menagius in Diogen. Laert. lib. 9. n. 20.

(f) Menagius ibid.

(g) Plato, in Sophista pag. 170.

(b) Sextus Empiricus, Pyrrhon. hypotypos. lib. 1. cap. 33. p. 46. edit. Genev. 1621.

(i) Aristoteles, Physicor. lib. 1. cap. 3.

(k) In the Article Stilpo, Remark H.

(l) Conimbricenses in the Paraphrase upon the 3. chapter of the Book of Aristotles's Physicks.

(m) Arist. ubi supra.

(n) See the Conimbricenses ubi supra.

(o) Lescalopier, in Cicero de nat. Deorum. lib. 1. n. 28. pag. 46.

of (F) Poverty. His Answers to a Man with whom he refused to play at Dice, is very worthy of a Philosopher. This Person calling him Coward; Yes, replyed he, I am extremely so, with respect to scandalous actions.

ZABARELLA,

mean capacity, would never have flown so high as Xenophanes, nor have fallen like him. He argued more consequentially than Aristotle, who denying a Creation, admitted an Eternal Matter susceptible of an infinity of Forms. If the Elephants need not fear these Cobwebs, much less need the Flyes. It is not a meanneſs of capacity (a) which makes men doubt (b) that they are not arrived at a juſt certainty: It rather fills them with confidence (c), than inſpires them with diffidence; and we may very well ſay that the Acataleptics, (d) Faciunt ne intelligendo ut nihil intelligant. They fall into the Doctrine of Incomprehenſibility not by an utter Ignorance of things, but by knowing them much better than the greateſt part of the World; tho' they don't know them according to the juſt repreſentation of them. Beſides, there are ſome who direct their Hypotheſis to the glory of God, intimating that the ſenſe of our weakneſs, and the Infinity of God, diſables us from aſpiring to that Knowledge which is a Portion of the Divine Nature. We have ſpoken before of a Poet, who ſaid that the Gods reſerved Glory for themſelves, and Pleaſures for us; but theſe tell us, that God keeps Knowledge to himſelf, and beſtows Opinions on us (e). Which puts me in mind of a thought of Plutarch, that ſeems to me very excellent. Wherefore I ſhall cite it, according to Amiot's Verſion. (f) "Wiſe Men ought to petition for all "good things in their Prayers, but what we ought "moſtly to deſire of them is the knowledge of "themſelves, in as great a degree as is proper "for us; becauſe there is no gift either greater "for Man to receive, or more magnificent and "worthy of the Gods to beſtow than the know"ledge of the Truth. For God gives all other "things to Men which they want, but hath re"ſerved this for himſelf, and accordingly makes "uſe of it: And he is not at all happy in the "poſſeſſion of vaſt quantities of Gold, nor power"ful by holding the Thunder and Lightning in "his Hand, but rather by his Wiſdom and Know"ledge; and this is one of the beſt and wiſeſt "things which Homer (g) ſaid, ſpeaking of Ju"piter and Neptune:

"Both of one Line, both of one Country boaſt;
"But Royal Jove's the Eldeſt, and Knows moſt.

"He affirms that the preference and the prece"dence of Jupiter was more venerable and worthy, "becauſe he was more wiſe and intelligent. And "as for me I am of Opinion, that the Beati"tude and Felicity of Eternal Life, which Jupiter "enjoys, conſiſts in that he is ignorant of no"thing, and that of all things which ever were, none "eſcapes him: And I believe that an Immorta"lity deprived of the Knowledge of all things "which exiſt and were, would not be a life, but "a ſpace of time only. So that we may ſay, "that the deſire of underſtanding Truth is a de"ſire of the Deity, eſpecially the Truth of the "Nature of the Gods: The ſtudy of which Sci"ence, is, as it were, the Profeſſion and beginning "of Religion, and a more holy Work than a "Vow of Chaſtity, or cloiſtering ones ſelf with"in a Temple." Add to this, that the Chriſtians with reſpect to whatever conſtitutes the Character of ſpeculative Chriſtianity, make publick profeſſion of the incomprehenſibility, and look upon theſe as Turks, who refuſe to believe what ſurpaſs the extent of their underſtanding. Such is the Myſtery of the Trinity, which, as Mr. Nicolle owns, (h) "confounds Reaſon, and prompts it to revolt. "If there be any viſible Difficulties, they are thoſe "which are contained in that Myſtery, that three "Perſons really diſtinct have only One and the "ſame Eſſence, and that this Eſſence being the "ſame thing in each Perſon with the Relations "that diſtinguiſh them, may be communicated "without the communication of the Relations "which diſtinguiſh the Perſons. If Human Rea"ſon conſults her ſelf, ſhe will riſe up againſt thoſe "inconceivable Truths. If ſhe pretends to make "uſe of her own Light to penetrate into them, it "will only furniſh her with Arms to engage a"gainſt them. Wherefore in order to believe "them, ſhe ought to blind her ſelf, to ſtifle all "her Ratiocinations, and to depreſs and ſink her "ſelf under the weight of Divine Authority." The Socinians themſelves in ſome reſpects are Acataleptics; they cannot ſay, with any ſincerity, that it is not an incomprehenſible thing, that a Self-exiſtent Nature ſhould be Mutable. Wherefore, in ſome reſpects, their raſhneſs ſurpaſſes that of Xenophanes. The latter ſaid, at laſt, that he did not comprehend either that an Eternal Nature is Mutable, or that it is Immutable; but the former decide it to be Changeable: Whence it follows that a Being which neceſſarily, and from all Eternity Exiſts, (i) is liable to Deſtruction; which is the moſt contrary Notion in the World to our Ideas of things.

I cannot conclude without obſerving two things: One is, that the Evidence of Xenophanes's Principles, with reſpect to the Immutability of what is Eternal, is as conſpicuous as the cleareſt Ideas of our Mind; ſo that it being inconteſtable, on the other hand, by what paſſes within us, that there are Alterations and Changes, the beſt courſe that our Reaſon can take, is to aſſert, that all things had a Beginning, God alone excepted. This is the Doctrine of the Creation; for to pretend to explain the Generations of Nature, by ſuppoſing many Eternal Principles, the action and re-action of which diverſifies what would remain Uniform, if nothing External intervened, is to avoid one Inconvenience, and fall into a much greater. My Second Obſervation is, that the Evidence of Xenophanes's Principles furniſhes us with an excellent Demonſtration againſt Spinoza; for if whatever had no Beginning is Immuttable, Spinoza's God is incapable of any Change: He is not then the immanent cauſe of all the alterations in the (k) Univerſe. Every immanent Cauſe produces ſomething in it ſelf: But that thing is either a Mode Identified with the Subſtance which it modifies, or elſe an abſolute quality, and really diſtinct from its ſubject of Inheſion. If an identified Mode, God cannot produce it; for ſince the Divine Subſtance neceſſarily exiſts, it cannot depend on any efficient Cauſe. If it be a diſtinct quality, God can then create Beings diſtinct from himſelf; and then there is no longer room for Spinoza's Hypotheſis. Add to this, that the production of a Mode or (l) Accident, is the deſtruction of another. Whence it follows, that if God was the immanent cauſe of the changes of Nature, ſome eternal Modalities would have periſhed: For Spinoza cannot, without contradicting himſelf, affirm that what he calls God, had not always Modalities. Examine his diſtinction betwixt Natura naturans and Natura naturata, and you will find a heap of Contradictions in it.

(F) And that he complained of Poverty. I am ſo poor, ſaid he once (m) to Hiero King of Syracuſa, that I am not able to maintain two Servants. How, replyed Hiero, Homer whom you commonly blame and cenſure, tho' dead, maintains above ten Thouſand.

(h) Nicolle, Perpetuité de la Foi, pag. 158, 159. edit. [illegible]

(i) They ſay that God beſtowed upon matter what Form he pleaſed, when he made the World. He therefore deſtroyed the Eternal Form of Matter. Whether this Form was a mode or a diſtinct accident, is of no importance to me: It was a real Being, which ceaſed to be, tho' it had no Beginning, and no efficient cauſe.

(k) Note, that if the Fathers believed what the Miniſter, who wrote the Paſtoral Letters, imputes to them concerning the generation of the Word, their Opinion concerning the mutability of God, had been almoſt as impious as that of Spinoza. See Janua cœlorum reſerata pag. 128. & ſeq. (l) I mean ſuch accidents as are ens inhærens in alio. (m) Plut. in apophth. pag. 175.

Terence ſays this upon another occaſion in his Prologue to the Andria. (e) Diogenes Laertius in Pyrrhone lib. 9 num. 72. reckons Plato among the Scepticks, for ſaying, Τὸ μὲν ἀληθὲς θεοῖς ϗ θεῶν παισὶν ἐγχωρεῖν, τὸν δὲ εἰκότα λόγον ζητεῖν; Se veritatem quidem Diis Deorumque filiis relinquere, id autem quod ſit veriſimile indagare. (f) Plutarch at the beginning of his Treatiſe concerning Iſis and Oſiris. (g) Ἦ μὰν ἀμφοτέροισιν ὁμὸν γένος ἠδ' ἴα πάτρη, ἀλλὰ Ζεὺς πρότερος γεγόνει ϗ πλείονα ᾔδη. Eſt ambobus quidem ſane genus & patria una, Sed Jupiter natu prior erat, & pluraque noverat. Homer. Iliad lib. 13. v. 354.

(A) And

Z.

ZABARELLA, or DE ZABARELLIS (Francis) Archbishop of Florence, and a Cardinal, was one of the most celebrated Canonists of his time. He was Born at Padua, in the Year * 1339. He studied the Canon-Law at Bologna, and taught it at Padua with great applause. That City then subject to Francis Carrara, being attacked by the Venetians in 1406, deputed Zabarella to the King of France to desire his assistance, which he not obtaining, Padua found it self obliged to submit to the Republick of Venice. This Act of submission was very solemn: Zabarella, at the head of Fourteen other Deputies, delivered the Banner of Padua to the Senate in the great Place at Venice, and made an Eloquent (A) Speech on that occasion. Some time after this he went to Florence to teach the Canon-Law, and was there so loved and esteemed, that the Archiepiscopal See becoming vacant, he was chosen to fill it: But this Election proved ineffectual, for the Pope being more diligent, had already bestowed it on another. Zabarella being invited to Rome by Boniface IX, stayed there some time, and gave his Opinion on an important Question proposed to him, concerning the methods of putting a stop to the Schism. He afterwards returned to Padua, and was honoured with several Deputations. He wisely refused the Bishoprick of that City conferred on him, because he would not expose himself to the Indignation of the Senate, who had nominated another to that Dignity. Pope John XXIII, resolving to corroborate himself with Learned Men, obliged him to come to his Court, and gave him the Archbishoprick of Florence. He did not confine his Liberality to that alone, but created him ‡ Cardinal in 1411. He sent him on an Embassy β with another γ Cardinal, and Emanuel Chrysoloras, to the Court of the Emperor Sigismund, who demanded a Council, as well on account of the Bohemian Heresies, as the Anti-Popes. This Pope charged his Ambassadors to chuse such a place for the holding of the Council as should not be suspicious to him. And it is said that he noted several Cities in Writing which he desired, but at the moment of their departure, tore the Paper on which (B) he had written them, and gave them full Power on that Head. Which was the reason that they left it to the choice of his Imperial Majesty. The City of Constance was pitched upon. Francis Zabarella frequently appeared at the Council held there, and advised the Deposition of John XXIII, who was charged with 40 Crimes of a very deep Dye. If the right of Election had been left to the Cardinals, it is highly probable that Zabarella (C) would have succeeded the deposed Pope; but this Right was divided between them

* His Epitaph imports that he died being 90 years of Age in 1417.

‡ He made him Cardinal Deacon (and not Cardinal Priest, as Gesner in Biblioth. fol. 251. asserts) by the Title of St. Cosmo and St. Damian.

β In the year 1413.

γ It was Antony de Chalant. See Spondanus ad ann. 1413. n. 5.

(A) And made an eloquent Speech.] He was not only a learned Civilian, but also a (a) good Orator. He pronounced an Eloquent Oration on the 4th of July 1397, on the Nuptials of Nicolas d'Este with Giliola, the Daughter of Francis Carrari, the second of that Name, Lord of Padua. And seven years after he made a Speech to the Lady Belflora, who married the Son of the same Carrari, when she made her entry into Padua, and was received under a Canopy; I say he made a Speech to her, in the Name of the University (b). He also made the Funeral Orations of Francis Carrari, and Arcuanus Buzackarinus (c).

(a) See Tomasin elog. parte 1. pag. 3.

(b) Taken from Panzirolus, de claris legum interpret. lib. 3. c. 38. pag. m. 443.

(c) Tomasin. elog. parte 1. pag. 10.

(B) At the moment of their departure tore the Paper.] Panzirolus, whom I have faithfully followed in the Text of this Article, ascribes this Alteration of the Pope (d) to Inspiration. But that we may see this passage in its full extent, which is too briefly related by him, I will cite a French Author. (e) It never appeared more clearly, that the Providence of God at once frequently overthrows all the Designs of Humane Prudence, in order to accomplish its own. The Pope, as Leonard Aretin, his Secretary and Confident, assures us, had in appearance given full Power to his Legates to agree with the Emperor on these two (f) Points, as they should think proper; but because on the other hand he would not be at the Emperor's discretion in a City where that Prince was Master; he noted in a private Paper certain Cities of Italy, besides which he very particularly, and peremptorily charged them not to accept of any; and yet when he dismissed them, as he was exhorting them to acquit themselves of their Duty, and being just going to deliver them this Paper, which he had in his hands, he, all of a sudden, changed his Mind; and after having expressed himself in their praise, with the greatest Transports of tenderness and Affection, protesting that he had a full and intire Confidence in their Fidelity; he told them, that contrary to his former resolution, he would not limit their Power, and immediately before their Eyes, tore the Writing, after having shewed it to them. But, he was not long without altering his Mind a second time; for, understanding that his Legates had at last consented, in compliance with Sigismund's Desire, that a general Council should be summoned to assemble on the first of November the following Year at Constance, a City of Germany, subject to the Emperor; he was like to fall into Despair, and a thousand times cursed his Fortune, or rather imprudence, in changing his Resolution so easily, and delivering up himself, as it were, bound Hand and Foot to a Prince who would always have it in his power to put in execution whatever it should please the Council to order against him. But he was obliged to dissemble his Resentment, for fear of rendring himself suspected, &c.

(d) Quod divino impulsu factum esse videtur. Panzir. ib. pag. 445.

(C) Zabarella would have succeeded the deposed Pope, but.] Panzirolus's Relation is not very exact; for it necessarily tends to persuade us, that Zabarella was alive at the time of the entrance into the Conclave for the Election of a Pope. Which is false. The Electors entred (k) on the 8th of November, and Zabarella, according to Panzirolus, died on the 5th, others (l) say on the 6th. So that I find that Tomasin Conforms himself better to the circumstances of time: Zabarella, according to him,

(g) See Maim-bourg ubi supra lib. 6. p. 26

(h) Constantiæ extinctus est anno cis. ccc. xvii. viii Idus Novembris. Tomasin ubi supra pag. 5. Freherus in Theatro pag. 17. has eighty transcribed this for he extinctus est Id. Nov.

(e) Maximbourg, Hist. du grand Schisme d'Occident B. 4. pag. 106. Dutch Edition. He quotes Saint Antoninus Archbishop of Florence part. 3. Tit. 22. (f) That is the time and place of the Council.

them and the other Members of that Council. They were divided into five Classes, each of which nominated six Persons, who, in conjunction with the Cardinals, Elected Otho Colonna Pope, who took the Name of Martin V. This was in the Year 1417. Zabarella died at Constance ‖ on the 5th of November, the same Year ‡. His Funeral was celebrated with great Magnificence; the Emperor and all the Council being present at it: The Funeral Oration was pronounced by Poggius; the Corps was carried to Padua, and interred in the Cathedral Church on the left side of the Altar of the Blessed Virgin. Our Zabarella wrote (D) a great many Books, and deserved the Publick Esteem, as well for (E) his virtuous Life, as his Learning. He appointed for his Heir (F) Bartholomew ZABARELLA his Nephew †, of whom I shall speak in a Remark. I must not forget that amongst his several Scholars, one was Peter Paul Vergerio, who wrote * an excellent and very exact Letter, on the Life and death of his Professor.

ZABARELLA (James) one of the greatest Philosophers of the XVIth Century, was born at Padua on the 5th of September in 1533. Having learned Rhetorick and the Greek Tongue under γ excellent Professors, he applied himself to the study of Logick, and the Mathematicks, in both which he made great Progresses. He extremely delighted in Astrology, and amused himself in drawing a great many Horoscopes, and 'tis reported, that he many times made true Predictions. He acquired a profound Knowledge of Aristotle's Physicks and Ethicks; wherefore we ought not to be surprized that the University of Padua placed him amongst his Professors, in the Year 1564. He taught Logick there for the space of 15 Years, and afterwards Philosophy to the time of his death. He Published several Commentaries on (A) Aristotle, which shwed that his Genius

‖ And not in his own Country as Forsterus affirms Hist. Juris Civil. Rom. lib. 3. c. 37. p. m. 616.

‡ And therefore he did not flourish in the Year 1414, as Gesner affirms in Biblioth. fol. 261.

† Taken from Panzirolus de claris legum interpretibus lib. 3. c. 23. p. m. 443. & seq.

* Panzirol. ib. p. 434. Mr. Teissier says nothing of it in Bibliotheca bibliothecarum.

γ John Faseolus, & Francis Robortellus.

him, would have been made a Pope, by the unanimous consent of the Electors, if Death had not transported him to Heaven. He also tells us that this Cardinal supplied the Pope's place in the Council. (a) Concilio convocato Pontificis vicem gessit. Unde omnium consensu summus Pontifex dictitatus, re quoque ipsa designatus fuisset, ni Deus Opt. Max. ipsum in Cœlum, ibi satius Ecclesiæ suæ profuturum evexisset. Panzirolus missed Doujat (b), who assures us that Zabarella died after the Election of Martin V.

(D) Wrote a great many Books.] Six Volumes of Commentaries on the Decretals and Clementines. One Volume of Counsels. A Volume of Orations and Epistles. A Tract de horis canonicis. De felicitate libri tres. Variæ legum repetitiones, Opuscula de artibus liberalibus. De natura rerum diversarum. Commentarii in naturalem & moralem philosophiam. Historia sui temporis. Acta in Conciliis Pisano & Constantiensi. In vetus & novum Testamentum: De schismate (c). This last Tract did not please the Court of Rome. The Protestants have Published it several times (d) with other pieces of the same nature, in which the jurisdiction of Princes is maintain'd exclusive of submission to the Popes. To which purpose read the following words of Bellarmin: (e) Occasione longissimi schismatis scripsit etiam librum de schismate, in quo sunt aliqua corrigenda: quare in indice librorum probibitorum, liber ejus de schismate cum præfationibus, Argentinæ impressus ab hæreticis, probibitus est, donec corrigatur. Observe that Zabarella is cited under the Name of Cardinal (f) without any Addition.

(E) As well for his virtuous Life.] He not only slept but little, and was extremely careful not to lose any time, but was endowed with a Probity and Chastity which was very particular: Being an Enemy to Luxury, his domestick Affairs were managed with the utmost frugality, in order to diffuse his Wealth abroad amongst the Poor. He never connived at his Neighbours Faults, but always exhorted his Friends and Pupils to a virtuous life. (g) Somni parcissimus, & ne quam temporis jacturam faceret, valde sollicitus. Vir recti animi, suavissimæ consuetudinis, & integerrimæ, castissimæque vitæ fuit, familiares & discipulos ad bonos mores hortari solitus ab ipsis non secus ac pater diligebatur. Domi parcus, foris fortunas inter pauperes dividebat. I believe one of the things which made him thought worthy of the Bishoprick of Padua, was his Charity to the Poor, (h) when Arch-Priest of the Cathedral Church there. I have related the (i) Reason which procur'd him to refuse that Bishoprick. That refusal acquir'd him the admiration of the Paduans, and obliged them to resign to him a very rich Abby which had belonged to some Monks. This he held but a very short time, he soon return'd it to its ancient Possessors, which they with the utmost gratitude acknowledged, and as much as possible perpetuated his Memory, preserving his Sacerdotal Vestments to this day in their Monastery, in several places of which (k) his Arms are set up. It was by reason of (l) his holy Life as well as Learning, that he was chose the Archbishop of Florence, when he was only Professor of the Canon-Law. I have (m) also given the reason why this choice was ineffectual.

(F) Bartholomew ZABARELLA of whom I shall speak.] He was the Son of Andrew Zabarella, Brother to our Francis; and professed the Canon-law at Padua with great applause. He was afterwards called to Rome, where he discover'd a great stock of Learning, as well in his Disputes, as Consultations. He was first raised to the Archbishoprick of Spalato, and then advanced to that of Florence, and at last to the Dignity of Referendary of the Church by Pope Eugenius IV. 'Tis thought he had risen yet higher, if he had not died before he arrived at Old Age in 1445. His Body was carried to Padua, and interred in his Uncle's (n) Tomb. I am surprized that his Name doth not appear in the Epitaph of our Francis, and that instead of it we see Joannes Jacobi viri clarissimi Filius id monumenti ponendum curavit. Panzirolus and Tomasin mention the whole Epitaph; and the last observes, that the Author of the Patavina felicitas, & Swertius (o) have erroneously copied it. The same may also be charged on Panzirolus; for in his Book we read Obiit Constantiæ Mccccviii. which ought to have been Mccccxvii. An infinity of Copists and Printers of Inscriptions are guilty of the like negligence. But to return to our Bartholomew. He died at the Age of 46 Years, on the 12th of August 1445, in the Embassy with which Eugenius IV. honoured him to the Kings of Spain and France. It is affirmed that (p) the Pope design'd to make him a Cardinal.

(A) He Published several Commentaries on Aristotle, which shewed.] He Published some Lo-

(a) Tomasin. elog. parte 1. pag. 5.

(b) Doujat. Prænot. Canonic. pag. 609.

(c) Ex Tomasino ib. pag. 9. See also Oldoini in Athenæo Romano pag. 258.

(d) For instance at Basil, by Oporinus, in 1565. in fol. I make use of this Edition.

(e) Bellarm. de scriptor. Ecclesiast. p. m. 384. (f) Tomas. ib. pag. 5. (g) Panzirolus ubi supra pag. 445.

(h) In Cathedrali Patavina Ecclesia Archipresbyteratus honore insignitus pauperum incommodis mira subveniebat liberalitate. Tomasin. ubi supra pag. 4.

(i) In the Text of this Article.

(k) Id. ib.

(l) Florentiam vocatus jus Canonicum explanavit, ibique ob vitæ SANCTIMONIAM ac doctrinæ præstantiam ab illius Reip. proceribus ad Archiepiscopatus dignitatem conclamatus est. Tomas. ubi supra pag. 3.

(m) In the Text of the Article. (n) Panzir. ubi supra pag. 446, 447. (o) In de Gymnasii- liciis orbis. (p) Taken from Riccobonus in descriptione Patavini apud Freherum in theatro pag. 19.

Genius was capable of unravelling great Difficulties, and comprehending the most obscure Questions. Being very frequently deputed to Venice on important Affairs, he made Speeches to the Senate with great ſucceſs. He refuſed the Offers of Sigiſmund King of Poland, who invited him into his Realm. He died at Padua in October 1589, and was buried in St. Antony's Church, where his Funeral Oration was pronounced by Riccobonus. He bore the Title (B) of Count Palatin. He had by his Marriage with Elizabeth Gavacia, ſix (C) Sons and three Daughters, and Calculated the Nativities of them all. In which I do not know whether he ſucceeded well, and for inſtance, whether he fore-told that the Senate of Venice ſhould give him a thouſand Crowns, as a Portion for the marriage of his youngeſt Daughter †. Authors differ in ſeveral particulars concerning him, which ought not to be matter of Diſpute. Some ſay he was a handſome (D) Man, others, that he was Ugly. Some aſſert, that he had a very active, quick, and ready Wit; others, that he (E) could not reſolve the Objections of his Pupils without asking time to conſider them. He is accuſed of holding ſome (F) impious Tenets, as not believing the Immortality † Taken from James Philip Tomaſini parte 1. elogior. pag. 134. & ſeq.

gical Treatiſes in the Year 1578. In which he amply treated of the Method; and it was believed, eſpecially in Germany, that on that Head he was the beſt Guide that could be had (a). Here is the Elogy beſtowed on the Commentary which he Publiſhed in 1582. (b) Anno 82. edidit illa admirabilia commentaria in poſt. Anal. Ariſtotelis quibus omnibus Græcis, Arabibus, Latinis palmam in hoc divino Ariſtotelici ingenii opere illuſtrando præripuit. Francis Piccolomini his Collegue, and Rival, attacked him on the Doctrine of the Method. Zabarella Publiſhed his Reply in the Year 1584. Imperialis obſerves, that Zabarella was inferior to Francis Piccolomini in (c) the Art of Diſcourſing, but when he took Pen in hand, he exceeded him in the force of Argument: When he had occaſion to ruin his Adverſaries Hypotheſis, he brought a crowd of Reaſons to cruſh them: When he was obliged to maintain his own Opinions, he was very happy, in a clear and intelligible manner of performing it. So that he ſcarce had his equal for deſtroying the adverſe ſide, and defending his own. (d) Neminem facile quis dixerit æquare Zabarellæ Scriptorum venuſtatem atque elegantiam, quibus accedit incredibile argumentandi robur & opinionum firmitas, quo nomine vix alius in evertendis aliorum placitis uberior, in aſtruendis propriis fœlicior unquam eſt habitus. His work de rebus naturalibus libri XXX quibus quæſtiones, quæ ab Ariſtotelis interpretibus hodie tractari ſolent accurate diſcutiuntur, was Printed in 1589. He dedicated it to Pope Sixtus V. the Epiſtle Dedicatory being dated at Padua the firſt of October, the ſame Year. He had before Publiſhed a ſmall Specimen of it in 1586, and Dedicated it to that Pope's Nephew. His Commentaries on the three Books of Ariſtotle de Anima, did not appear till after his death, and were Publiſhed by his Son Francis Zabarella in 1604.

(a) Keckermann. præcognit. logicor. tract. 2. c. 5 p. m. 134.
See Tomaſin elog. parte 1 p. 137.
(b) Id. ib.
(c) See the Remark E.

(d) Imperialis in Muſæo hiſtor. pag. 115.

(B) The Title of Count Palatin.] Which one James Zabarella obtained from the Emperor Maximilian: And his Son Julius was continued in that quality by the Emperor Ferdinand I. who, beſides, entailed the Honour on the Eldeſt Sons of the Family. And accordingly Julius Zabarella his Son bore that Title, and cauſed it to deſcend to our James his Eldeſt Son (e).

(e) Ex Tomaſino elogior. parte 1. pag. 139.

(C) Six Sons and three Daughters.] The Eldeſt of which was Julius, a good Mathematician. You will find in Moreri that he gave up himſelf to Debauchery with Women, to that exceſs, that he contracted a great Weakneſs in his Nerves, which obliged him to keep his Bed five Years before his death (f). Mr. Moreri makes him Author of ſeveral Books, of the moſt conſiderable of which he mentions the Titles; but he is miſtaken, for all thoſe pieces were written by James Zabarella, and not by Julius his Son.

(f) Moreri had this from Mr. Teiſſier's addition to the Elog. Tom. 2. p. m. 124.

(D) Some ſay he was a handſome Man, others, that he was ugly] His Effigies in Tomaſin repreſents his Air to be very agreeable, and admirably confirms theſe words (g) Vultu ſpectabilis: But in Imperialis, the Print of him expreſſes a dull, untractable, and ſordid Look, which very effectually proves the Truth of theſe words, (h) Nec ſubhæſitantis linguæ nota vel TETRICA forte ORIS SPECIES ullas unquam ſuæ gloriæ maculas aſpergere potuerunt. Is it then poſſible, that in things expoſed to the view of the World, Authors ſhould differ as much as White and Black, as well by the ſtrokes of their Pens, as by thoſe of the Painter's Pencil? If the Queſtion was about the Inclinations of the Mind, I ſhould not be ſurprized at this diverſity of Relations, for it is eaſie to fall into contrary Determinations with reſpect to thoſe inviſible Objects, which only diſcover themſelves by equivocal Indications; but the Queſtion relates to the Face: ought it not to be out of Diſpute whether it was handſom or ugly?

(g) Tomaſ. ubi ſupra pag. 138.
(h) Joh. Imperialis in Muſæo hiſtor. pag. 117.

(E) That he had a very active ——— that he could not reſolve.] This is alſo another Subject on which the Hiſtorians ought not to oppoſe one another. They ſhould agree whether Zabarella's Genius acted in a ſprightly or ſluggiſh manner. He was Profeſſor about Twenty five Years in one of the moſt famous Univerſities of Europe. Which gave him a thouſand opportunities of publickly diſcovering whether he wanted conſideration in the reſolution of Doubts, or whether he could reſolve them as ſoon as propoſed. Why then ſhould Tomaſini expreſs himſelf in this manner: (i) Nactus eſt Mercurium feliciter ſtantem, quam ob cauſſam CELERES ingenii motus, & ad quævis excogitanda FACILES ET EXPEDITOS habuit in omni vita; and Imperialis on the contrary tell us? (k) Carpebant in te plurimi memoriæ labem, & quendam in agendis TORPOREM, quibus ad privata vel publica negotia minus reddebaris idoneus: SEGNIOREM te pariter quam ferret ingenii claritas in quæſtionibus inopinate ſolvendis prædicabant, cum te Scholarium Theſibus nonniſi per INTERPOSITAS HORAS reſpondere ſolitum dicerent? Some Pages after, he obſerves that Zabarella ſtuttered, and that his words and deportment were rough and unpoliſhed. (l) In eo præſtitit Jacobo Zabarellæ Collegæ ſuo (Franciſcus Piccolomineus) quod ipſe facilitate quadam dicendi præditus juncta comitati morum ac eximiæ humanitati, alter ſermone durior, blæſus, incomptus, civilibus in ſtudiis inops potius quam redundans.

(i) Tomaſ. ibid.
(k) Imperial. ibid.
(l) Id. ib. pag. 115.

(F) Of holding ſome impious Tenets.] On this Head Mr. Moreri is faulty. He is accuſed by Imperialis, ſaith he (m), of having oppoſed the Doctrine of the Immortality of the Soul, and given ſeveral Marks of Impiety and Atheiſm in his Writings. The laſt part of this Accuſation is not in Imperialis; and if the firſt is, it is not expreſſed as a thing affirmed by that Author, but rather as a very uncertain Rumor, which he in ſome ſort refutes. His words run thus: (n) Præterea impenſius te aliquanto impugnaſſe immortalitatem animæ, deterrimam Alexandreorum ſententiam palam profeſſum: quos tamen de te rumores ut forte ab exulceratis animis excitos, ita vel eluſit poſteritas, vel admirabilis ac prope divina tuarum (o) virtutum fama compenſavit: præaltæ ſiquidem mentis lumen in ſcriptis diffuſum tuis, nullam debet luem temporis nullamque livoris noxam vereri. This Calumny, if I am not miſtaken, was only grounded upon this. There reigned in Italy, and chiefly at Padua, for above an Age, a famous Diſpute about this

(m) The words of Moreri are taken from Mr. Teiſſier ubi ſupra
(n) Imperial. ubi ſupra pag. 117.
(o) See Tomaſini's words at the end of the text of this Article.

Immortality of the Soul; but his Exemplary Life is praised ‡. I shall speak of his Question, whether it was possible to prove the Immortality of the Soul from Aristotle's Principles. Some Professors who were looked upon as Favourers of Alexander Aphrodisiensis defended the Negative. Others maintained the Affirmative. Pomponatius, one Zabarella, Cremoninus, &c. took the first side, whence an Infinity of such Persons as are incapable of using distinctions when they are most necessary, peremptorily charged these Philosophers with teaching the Mortality of the Soul. This is the Sophism, a dicto secundum quid ad dictum simpliciter. In a word, this is an injustice and an iniquity, which superiors ought not to suffer: For there is a prodigious difference betwixt absolutely affirming that the Soul is Mortal, and maintaining that according to the Hypothesis of such a Philosopher, it is impossible to prove that it is not Mortal. See the Article of Pomponatius. The Inquisitors Acted on a Principle of Equity towards Zabarella; for they contented themselves with his Declaration that by the Power of the Divine Grace, he was fully persuaded of the Truth of the Orthodox Opinion, tho' Natural Reason and Aristotle's Principles seemed incapable of forming in him this excellent persuasion. He published a Tract in which he maintained, that the existence of a first Mover separate from the Bodies which compose the Universe could be no otherwise proved than by supposing the Eternity of Motion. Which was to declare that a Christian Philosopher cannot produce any Proofs of the existence of a first Mover, whose Nature is Spiritual; for it is a Doctrine of the Christian Faith, that Motion is not Eternal. Zabarella asserted, that in order to believe this existence which no Natural Reason can demonstrate, the Grace of the Holy Ghost was necessary. The Holy Office found nothing unreasonable in this Assertion, but gave their approbation to this Philosopher's Book. Which emboldned Berigardus to take the Liberty of affirming the same Opinion. It is true he did not do it so bluntly; for he introduced an Interlocutor opposing this Thesis. To which purpose let us cite a pretty long passage out of his Preface: (a) Denique ut constet ea quæ dicuntur in nostro Circulo permissa jam fuisse a S. Officio, libet pauca subjicere, maximè ne cui durum videatur quòd introduco Aristæum defendentem sententiam Jacobi Zabarellæ viri in hoc Lyceo celeberrimi. Hæc sententia libro de Inventione æterni motoris approbato sæpius a S. Officio, docet unicum medium philosopho naturali ad demonstrandum dari primum motorem a materia abjunctum esse motus æternitatem, quæ quia non datur, ut fide divina certi sumus, sequitur primum motorem demonstrari non posse naturaliter, sed ad hoc opus esse Dei contactu peculiari. Neque propterea Zabarella putat eam quam vocat demonstrationem primi motoris ex motu æterno, esse veram demonstrationem, utpote cujus medium falsum est, sed loquitur ex falsis principiis Aristotelis, nempe si verus esset motus æternus, inde solùm ostendi posse primum motorem. Hanc Zabarellæ opinionem jam permissam si tuerer, id fortasse tutò facere possem; verùm contrariam existimo magis esse consentaneam pietati, propterea illi oppono Charilaum qui Circ. II. & XVIII. contendit Deum verum cognosci posse naturaliter, & licet rationes illæ seorsum acceptæ non videantur sufficere ad convincendos pertinaces Epicuræos, ut concludit ultimis verbis, omnibus tamen simul instructis, ait intellectum rectè dispositum posse elevari ad hanc cognitionem naturaliter, sed absque merito gratiæ & gloriæ, ut sic inexcusabiles verè dicantur a Divo Paulo qui contemptis his rationibus ad falsas & irreligiosas opiniones delapsi sunt. Zabarellam tamen sequi videtur Campanella cap. 9. n. 2. ubi ait religionem veram (ac proinde Deum) citra fidem cognosci non posse: quin etiam apud Philosophos plus valere fidem quam rationem.

‡ [illegible] 138.

A REFLEXION upon the consequences from the eternity or the beginning of motion with respect to the existence of God.

In the mean while till I can come at this Tract of Zabarella, which is very hard to be gotten in this Country (b), I shall make one Reflection. I am not satisfied with my Conjectures on this Philosopher's way of Arguing. He asserted that (c) the Consequence is right from the Eternity of Motion, to the existence of a first Spiritual mover, but that a motion which had a beginning is no manner of Proof that there is a first Mover distinct from Matter. In order to Argue thus, it is necessary to suppose it (d) impossible that a Material Principle should Act Eternally, tho' it may be capable of Acting for several Ages. But I don't see on what such an Assertion can be grounded; for if Zabarella grant me that a Material Principle could produce motion, which in Moses's Hypothesis did not begin till six days before Adam, he must then believe that this Principle having being at rest from all Eternity was at last moved by its self, and that it will once return to rest, since its Materiality will never suffer it to do any thing Eternal. But who doth not see the absurdity of this Hypothesis? Every one clearly Apprehends, 1. That all Bodies which have been at rest from Eternity, will for ever continue so, unless drawn from it by some External Power. 2. That all Bodies, which might begin to move and continue in motion as long as the World has lasted according to the Scripture, might also persevere Eternally in that state. 3. That all Bodies which might begin to move one Hundred Ages ago, might have began twenty Thousand Years, a Hundred Thousand Years, &c. sooner; for there is no more Reason to fix the beginning of Motion to one hour than another, unless we have recourse to the good Pleasure of a Spiritual Cause: But if a Body might have began to move before any Term assigned, it would follow that it might have been always in motion, and consequently Motion might have been Eternal without being produced by a cause distinct from Matter. What I have just been saying shews that we may very reasonably conclude the existence of a first Spiritual mover, from the beginning of the motion of Matter, and that we could not make that Conclusion, if we should once grant, that a Motion which began might proceed from a Material cause. And consequently I don't find that Zabarella argues justly on this Head.

Besides, it seems to me much easier to prove, that there is a first Mover distinct from Matter if we take Motion to have had a beginning, than if we suppose it Eternal. Let us suppose that it began, and it will necessarily follow, either that all Bodies began to exist, or that having existed from all Eternity, they remained an Eternity in a state of rest. If all Bodies began to exist, they must necessarily have been produced by a Spiritual cause, which is the first Mover which we are in quest of; for the Spiritual Principal Author of the existence of all Bodies, will also be the Principle of their Motion. And if all Bodies are Eternal, and yet their Motion is not Eternal, it follows that they have not in themselves the motive Virtue; for if they had, they had Moved Eternally. That Virtue is threfore separate from Matter, it is therefore in a Spiritual Subject, which again is the first Mover which we search after. If it be the (e) efficient cause of Bodies, so much the better; for by a stronger Reason it will appear the efficient cause of motion. If it be not their efficient cause, if Matter exists by its self, that will not hinder its being the cause of their motion, since it is visible that a Nature which hath been at rest during an eternity, does not begin to move its self, but must be drawn out of this state of rest by an External Principle. On the other side if we suppose that Motion is eternal, it will be more difficult to maintain that it proceeds from an immaterial cause; for it may be urged that the same necessity whereby Matter hath Eternally existed without (f) being Created, hath made it move eternally without the help of an External Principle, or Spiritual mover. I cannot then comprehend the course which Zabarella steers; for whatever I have thought of on this Head tends rather to make me believe, that he designed to divert himself by broaching a Paradox, than to engage me to think that he suffered himself to be seduced by specious Reasons. Was he afraid it should be urged to him that a Spiritual Mover would not have left Matter in a state void of Action from all eternity, and that therefore the beginning of motion is a Proof that the first Mover

---

(a) Conclus. Berigardus in proœmio Circuli Pisani [illegible] c. 6.

(b) The Scholars are [illegible] would [illegible] of buying their Books and even of enquiring whether they are to be found in a Library.

(c) Thus Berigardus makes him argue.

(d) Berigardus in Circulo [illegible] pag. 5. advances this proposition, Nulla virtus materiata æternum motum ciere potest.

(e) Note that many great Orthodox Philosophers maintain that a Creature may be Eternal.

(f) I suppose that Zabarella argued against some Men, who did not believe the Creation.

of the Treatiſe in which he maintains (G) that the Proof of a God drawn from the exiſtence is not a Spirit? for this Objection is ſtronger againſt thoſe who ſhould maintain the materiality of the firſt Mover. Is it not more difficult to comprehend that a corporeal cauſe ſhould act freely, and begin its Actions at pleaſure, than to apprehend the ſame of a Spiritual Nature?

(G) I ſhall ſpeak of the Treatiſe in which he maintains that the Proof of a God drawn from the exiſtence of a firſt mover is invalid, unleſs we ſuppoſe motion to be Eternal.] All the former part of this Article, and what is contained in the Remark H. was written in the Month of March 1697. I read it over again in Auguſt 1701. in order to ſend it to the Preſs; and whilſt I was peruſing it, I remembered that for two or three Years paſt I had Zabarella's Works by me. I therefore believed that I ought to examine what he ſaith, and compare with that the Conjectures which I made when I had no other Guide than a Citation of Berigardus. This Examination made it appear to me, that my Conjectures do not reach the Mark, and that the ſtate of the Queſtion is different from what I imagined. Notwithſtanding which I have publiſhed them without any Alteration; they may afford matter of Reflection, and ſerve as a Teſtimony of my Ingenuity, and make it appear that I make uſe of no manner of Artifice. There are a great many Authors who on parallel occaſions would have Corrected their Manuſcript, and yet would ſay, This is what we Conjectured before we ſaw the Book, and after we have read it, we have found our Conjectures exactly conform to it. But I deſire to act with more ſincerity, and am willing that the Reader ſhould know the difference betwixt what I determined concerning Zabarella's Book before, and what I ought to ſay after I have read it. Purſuant to which I ſhall inſert a ſhort Analyſis of this Treatiſe.

It is intituled de inventione æterni motoris, and contains but eight Pages and a half in my (a) Edition. The Author's firſt Theſis is, that it is impoſſible to diſcover any otherwiſe than by Motion that there is an immaterial ſubſtance; but he proteſts that he confines himſelf to the knowledge which may be acquired by the light of Nature, and that he excepts Revelation. (b) Hac præmiſſa proteſtatione, nos hac de re ſecundum principia philoſophiæ Ariſt. eſſe loquuturos, & illam tantum ſubſtantiarum a materia abjunctarum notitiam, quam via naturali adipiſcimur, conſideraturos, omiſſa penitus earundem cognitione, quam revelatione divina & lumine ſupernaturali accepimus; veriſſimam illam quidem, ſed Ariſt. cujus dicta interpretanda ſuſcepimus, prorſus abſconditam. He Embraces the Opinion of Averroes, who rejected the other Proofs which Avicenna pretended to find in Ariſtotle's Books, theſe for inſtance: There is a Being dependant on another, therefore there is a firſt Being which doth not depend on any thing whatſoever; for otherwiſe we ſhould be obliged to admit a progreſs in infinitum. But this firſt Being is God, therefore, &c. There is a Perfection and Goodneſs greater than another; there is therefore a Sovereign Perfection and Goodneſs. But the Being which hath this perfection and Goodneſs is God, wherefore there is a God. Averroes Anſwers that all this proves only the exiſtence of a Nature independent of, and more perfect than others, but not its Immateriality. He adds (c) that the Ancient Philoſophers, who admitted nothing but Matter would ſay that this independent and moſt perfect Nature, is nothing elſe but Heaven. Zabarella concludes that in order to come naturally to the Notion of an immaterial Subſtance, we ought to argue thus: Heaven hath an inceſſant Motion; every thing which moves is moved by another; whatever is corporeal is moveable, and there is no Infinite Progreſs betwixt the movers and the things moved; wherefore there is a firſt Mover diſtinct from Matter.

He afterwards enquires whether Motion, whatever it be, affords a proof of the exiſtence of ſuch a Mover, and declares for the Negative; for he concludes, that nothing but the eternity of motion can prove the exiſtence of a Mover ſeparate from Matter. He examines their Opinion who pretend that Ariſtotle (d) maintained, that even Motion which began is able to lead us to the knowledge of a firſt Spiritual mover. This Philoſopher, ſay they, Argued thus: Whatever moves, is moved by another, and there is no ſuch thing as a progreſs in infinitum; wherefore there is a firſt Mover, which is immoveable, and conſequently incorporeal, for if it were a Body, it muſt of neceſſity be moveable. Zabarella Anſwers, that this Argument of Ariſtotle can only lead us to the exiſtence of a mover that is immoveable in no other than a general ſenſe, which may comprize the Souls of Beaſts. Thoſe Souls, continues he, are immoveable ſo far as they are not movable in themſelves, but only by Accident. But tho' they are accidentally moveable, they are call'd the firſt Movers, according to the order eſſential to moving things. (e) Si hunc Ariſtotelis diſcurſum conſideremus, manifeſtum eſt, per eum nos non duci ad alium motorem immobilem, quam late acceptum, qui animas quoque animalium mortalium complectatur; immobiles enim ſunt, quatenus non ſunt per ſe mobiles, quum incorporeæ ſint, ſed tamen ſunt per accidens mobiles: neque per id fit, quin dicantur motores primi juxta ordinem moventium eſſentialem. He adds, that thoſe whom he oppoſes being very ſenſible of the lameneſs of this Argument, have ſupplyed the defect of it, in this manner: Heaven moves; it is therefore moved by ſomething elſe; wherefore there is a firſt immoveable Mover. But is this Mover Eternal, or not? If it be, we have what we look for: The motion of Heaven, be it what it will, be it but of two Days, leads us to the exiſtence of a Deity. But if this Mover is not Eternal, it will one day periſh, wherefore there is ſomething, which will deſtroy it; it is not then the firſt Mover, and we ought to transfer that Character to that Being which ſhall prove it's deſtroyer. Yet we were come ſo far as the firſt Mover, and we Argued on that Hypotheſis: What Abſurdity more ridiculous than to offer in Anſwer what is contradictory to a Suppoſition, of the Truth of which the differing parties agreed? But that thing, which ſhall occaſion ſooner or later the deſtruction of that, which we have conſidered as the firſt immoveable Mover, muſt it not be the firſt Mover? And to be ſo, ought it not to be in ſuch a ſtation as nothing can be above it, which is able to produce any Alteration in it? It is then Eternal, it is then what we were to come to upon our following the Track of Ariſtotle's Argument. But let us hear Zabarella's Anſwer, which turns ſolely on the Solution of the following Dilemma: The firſt Mover is or is not Eternal; If it is, we have gained our point: If it is not, there is then another Mover which can deſtroy it, there is a Mover ſuperior to this firſt Mover. But this is abſurd, and contrary to the ſuppoſition, to which both parties agree. He Anſwers (f) that the firſt Mover which his Adverſaries have hit on is not Eternal, but of the ſame Nature with the Soul of Brutes, that it is the form of Heaven, and that Heaven being compoſed of four Elements oppoſite to each other, had a beginning and ſhall have an end, in like manner with other parts of the World; (g) that from the Deſtruction of Heaven will neceſſarily reſult the Deſtruction of its moving Soul; that it ſhall not periſh by the Act of a firſt Mover; and that therefore tho' it ſhall be deſtroyed it doth not follow from thence that there is a ſuperior Agent or efficient Cauſe above it; it is ſufficient that it be united to a Body naturally corruptible, for the Corruption of that Body neceſſarily draws on the Corruption of the Form or Soul, which in it performed the Functions of a firſt Mover. (h) Quando igitur hi dicunt, ſi primus motor univerſi eſt corruptibilis, ergo non eſt primus, negandum eſt conſequens: ad probationem autem, quum dicunt, corrumpetur à motore priore, hoc quoque eſt negandum; non enim ex eo quod eſt corruptibilis, requiritur motor prior, à quo corrumpatur, ſed quum ſit incorporeus, & forma corporis, ſatis cauſa eſt ad ipſum interimendum corruptibilitas corporis, cujus eſt forma; corpus autem ipſum, quum ſit elementare, a ſuo contrario lædi & interimi poteſt. Whereſore, concludes he,

Motion

(a) That, of Francfort ſumptibus hæredum Lazari Zetzneri 1618. in 4.

(b) Jacobus Zabarella de rebus naturalibus p. m. 253.

(c) Quare illi philoſophi quorum mentionem facit Plato in Sophiſta, qui præter res corporeas & ſenſiles nil aliud exiſtere concedebant, dicerent illud ſummum & optimum, & perfectiſſimum non eſſe niſi Cœlum, nec ullum præter illud dari alium Deum. Id. ibid. pag. 254.

(d) In 8. lib. Phyſic. auſcultationis.

(e) Id. ib. pag. 255.

(f) Id. ib. pag. 256.

(g) Dicam itaque, e interitu Cœli neceſſario fieri ut anima quoque motrix intereat, quia licet hæc contrarium non habeat, tamen ex ſubjecti corporis interitu neceſſitate deficeret, quum ſit forma materialis, qual ſunt animæ animalium animam humanam ſemper excipio. Id. ibid.

(h) Id. i existence of a first Mover, is invalid, unless we suppose Motion to be Eternal. I shall occasionally say that there are more Ambiguities (H) than are imagined in the Controversy of the Eternity of the World.

ZAHURIS

Motion in general proves no more, than the existence of a first immoveable Mover in the same manner as the Souls of Brutes are immoveable; and nothing but an an Eternal Motion can prove an Eternal Mover. (a) Ex motu igitur absolute accepto absque consideratione æternitatis nil aliud ostenditur, quam dari primum motorem universi immobilem eo modo, quo animæ animalium brutorum sunt immobiles, hoc est, non per se mobiles; quod autem nec per se, nec per accidens mobile sit, proinde a materia abjunctus, & impatibilis, & infatigabilis, & sempiternus, ea ratione non ostenditur; quapropter nullum aliud philosopho naturali medium requiritur ad demonstrandum primum motorem æternum, nisi motus æternus; quando enim sumimus motum universi unum & eundem numero æternum esse, statim inferimus, cum ab uno tantum motore totum produci; quare necesse est, motorem illum esse infatigabilem, & sempiternum.

It would not be easy for the Peripateticks to refute Zabarella's Reasons: For he argues ad hominem against them; he makes his Advantage of their Doctrine of substantial Forms, and the motive and Primitive Virtue of the (†) Souls of Brutes. The Moderns who have justly rejected these Principles might confute him without any difficulty, and find nothing knotty in his Objections. Observe by the by how pernicious and dangerous the consequences of the Aristotelian Hypothesis about the internal activity of Forms distinct from Matter may prove. For it is a Principle which admits of almost an infinite Number of first Movers, from whence it is easy to proceed to the rejection of a first Universal Mover, or to assert that it is subject to Death. The Soul of each Man and each Brute is in its kind a first mover. It moves it self, and imprints motion on the Body of which it is the Form. We may in proportion find the same Principle in inanimate Bodies. The Form of ponderous Bodies hath no need of any external Mover to press them towards their Center, nor that of light Bodies to drive them from it; but is it self their first Mover in this respect. Now if this Aristotelian Hypothesis be once admitted, an Universal Mover of the Heavens will be no longer necessary, every Planet will be Moved by its Form, the Heavens and fixed Stars will be moved by theirs, and none of these Movers will be accounted incorruptible, but will be liable to the common destiny of Forms, which cannot subsist after the dissolution of the Matter united to it. Zabarella very clearly apprehending this Consequence asserted that the Soul of the Heavens would one day perish, since the Matter of them was composed of Principles which clash with each other. It is so evident that Matter is changeable, that the Ancient Philosophers who believed that the Genii were not entirely separated from Matter, believed them Mortal, not excepting the greatest of them all. An Evidence of which is Plutarch's Story, (b) the great Pan is dead. If Zabarella has been able to penetrate into the Consequences of the common Doctrine of the Schools, he was not less in the right when he asserted that in order to find a first Eternal Mover, it is necessary to stop at one only cause which produced all Motion. It is an Advantage which we meet with in the Cartesian Philosophy; it ascribes to God all the moving and immediate Power of the Universe, and doth not divide it betwixt the Creator and the Creatures. The multitude of Movers may insensibly lead to the most dangerous Atheism, and from hence doubtless proceeds the Atheism of the Chinese Philosophers (c). They first of all believed a superior, immaterial and Infinite Deity; but attributing great Natural Powers to Bodies, and chiefly to the Celestial ones, they by little and little forgot the immaterial Divinity, and stopped at material Principles. The visible (d) and material Heaven is at present their great God.

Finally, we ought not to be surprized that the Italian Inquisition permitted Zabarella to follow Averroes, in the rejection of some Proofs of the existence of a God. This sort of Liberty is very extensive every where; and provided a Doctor owns that this existence may be proved by other means, they give him leave to confute this or that particular Proof. The Cartesians are not more baffled on any Head, than on Mr. Descartes's Demonstration of the existence of God. He was obliged to Answer a vast Number of Objections. And we every day see the most Orthodox themselves renewing this Dispute. Mr. Werenfels Professor at Basil maintain'd in a Printed Tract that this Argument of Descartes is a meer Paralogism. Mr. Swizer Professor at Zurich Answer'd him; as hath also Mr. Jaquelot a Minister at the Hague, whose Answer is inserted (e) in the Histoire des ouvrages des sçavans. Mr. Brillon a Doctor of the Sorbonne saw this Answer, but not being satisfied with it, he published a Memorial to prove (f) that Descartes's Argument was a Sophism, and not a Demonstration. Father Francis Lami a Benedictin Monk refuted this (g) Memorial. Mr. Jaquelot (h) replyed for himself. Mr. l'Herminier a Doctor of the Sorbonne lately, Published a Book in which he not only rejects Descartes's Demonstrations concerning the existence of God, but also most others. (i) "Of five offered "by St. Thomas, which are also commonly made "use of by Philosophers and Divines, this Doctor "rejects four, and allows only one of them to "be valid against the Atheists. For he looks upon "it as a Paralogism to prove the Deity by any "of the following Reasons. That all that exists "cannot be contingent, and that there must be "some Being which necessarily exists of its self. "That we cannot admit an Infinite Number of "Causes mutually subordinate, and that it is absolutely necessary to acknowledge a first Cause "on which all others are dependent. That Matter cannot move it self, but that a first Incorporeal "Mover must necessarily exist, from which it mediately or immediately received its moving impulse. "That in those Beings which exist, there appearing "several degrees of Perfection, as Goodness, "Beauty, Power, &c. there must undoubtedly exist "a Being supremely perfect, with respect to "which they may be said to be less or more perfect in proportion to their approaching more or "less to its Perfection. After having ranked "these four Demonstrations amongst the Sophisms, "the fifth which Mr. l'Herminier looks upon as "a real Demonstration of the existence of God, "is that drawn from the structure of the Universe "and the manner of its subsistence in such an "excellent order in all its parts, and with such "a constant regularity of their Motions." This is what we find in the Journal of Trevoux, in the Extract of (k) Mr. l'Herminier's Book. 'Tis long since a very Famous (l) Schoolman declared, that all the Proofs which Reason can afford of the existence of God are only Probable. But this Sorbonne Doctor doth not go so far.

(H) More Ambiguities than are imagined in the Controversy of the Eternity of the World.] All Christians (m) are agreed that nothing besides God hath perpetually existed; but several assert that he might have actually created the World as soon as he formed the Decree in order to its production; from whence they conclude, that the World might have existed from all Eternity, since the Decree for its production is undoubtedly Eternal. Several also affirm that it is impossible for a Creature to be Eternal. And each of these parties is stronger in Objections than Solutions. But this Dispute which hath been rendred so tediously long, and difficult, would soon cease, if the Disputants of each side would but explain themselves exactly, and remove the Ambiguities about Eternity. The Question ought to be put thus: It is impossible that God and his Creatures should have always existed together. And then one would not

(a) Id. ib. pag. 257.

(†) [illegible] Omne enim corpus cui motus extrinsecus incidit inanime est. Cui vero intus ex seipso inest, animatum.

(b) Plut. de oracul. defectu pag. 419. See also the Remark I in the Article Chrysippus.

(c) See the Remark R. in the Article Spinoza.

(d) See several Proofs of this in the Apology for the Dominicans Printed at Cologne in 1699. p. 79. & seq.

(e) For May 1701. pag. 193. & seq.

(f) In the Journal des sçavans for the Year 1701.

(g) See the Journal of Trevoux for January and February 1701. pag. 104. & seq. Dutch Edit.

(h) See the Histoire des ouvrages des sçavans for May 1701. pag. 226. & seq.

(i) Journal de Trevoux for May and June. 1701. pag. 317. Dutch Edit.

(k) It is intituled Summa Theologiæ ad usum Scholæ accommodata.

(l) Gabriel Biel in Magistrum Sententiarum distinct 2. quæst 10. art. 3.

(m) Except some Hereticks, who acknowledge the Eternity of Matter.

ZAHURIS, is the Common Name beſtowed on a certain ſort of Men in Spain, who, as it is pretended, are ſo ſharp ſighted, as to ſee Veins of Water, Metals, Treaſures, and Dead Bodies under Ground. Their Eyes are very Red. Martin Del Rio tells us that when he was at Madrid in 1575. he ſaw a little Boy of this ſort. It is Remarkable that tho' this Author is very ready to impute extraordinary effects to the Devils, yet he doth not believe that the Zahuris diſcover ſubterraneous Waters and Metals by any magical pact; but believes that the Vapours diſcover the Water to them, and that they know the Mines by the Herbs which grow in thoſe places. But as for Treaſures and Dead Bodies, he ſaith the Devil ſheweth 'em to them; ſince they can Mark out what Treaſures and Corps they ſee, and are able to do it only on Tueſday, and not ſo boldly take the Negative ſide; for this Term, the Eternity of the World, this Term which ſtartles ſo many People, would not here make any Impreſſion on the Mind. And the better to remove this ſtumbling Block, it ſhould be ſaid that a Creature which had been always coexiſtent with God may not be Eternal, for which this Reaſon ought immediately to be alledged, that the Duration of Creatures is ſucceſſive, and that Eternity is a ſimple Duration which eſſentially excludes the time paſt, and the time to come. By this eſſential difference betwixt the Duration of God, and that of the Creatures, we ſhould put an end to almoſt all the Diſpute, and each party would find their Account in it. We ſhould grant to thoſe who deny that a Creature can be Eternal, that they are in the right, and ſhould not deny that it is impoſſible for God and the Creature to have always exiſted together, ſince it is certain that a Cauſe doth not comprehend in its Idea a priority of Time with reſpect to its Effect, and that this holds more eſpecially true with reſpect to an Omnipotent Cauſe which needs only Will in order to produce actually whatever it pleaſes. Mr. Poiret hath very clearly apprehended the Ambiguities which perplex this Controverſy, and render it in a manner a Diſpute about Words. He judiciouſly obſerves that it is not true that the Creatures would be Eternal, if their exiſtence had no beginning, and tells us that thoſe who affirm it are ignorant of the Eſſence of Eternity. (a) Aſſerentibus (Platoni ut ajunt & Ariſtoteli) mundum exiſtentiæ initio carere, fuit objectum, ſi id ita ſe haberet, mundum igitur æternum fore. Ecce, homines iſti ſibi imaginantur Æternitatem, quaſi eſſet infinitorum momentorum ordo principio atque fine carens, quæ vera æternitatis ignorantia eſt. Falſum eſt, mundum ſtatui æternum ſi dicatur vel ſemper exſtitiſſe, vel non poſſe affirmari in eo eſſe aliquod momentum quod ab alio non fuerit præceſſum: quamvis enim hoc eſſet, nihilominus mundus temporarius eſſet & dependens; neque hoc quicquam Dei Æternitati aut Potentiæ detraheret. Obſerve by the by that this Author doth three things. We have juſt now ſeen the firſt, which is the falſe Conſequence that the World will be Eternal if it never began. In the 2. place he owns that the Arguments commonly alledged againſt thoſe who ſay that the World had no beginning are weak. He excuſes thoſe who not having the light of Revelation, did not believe the beginning of the Univerſe. He tells us that when he was writing that Chapter he was perſuaded that it was not poſſible to hit on any good Reaſons againſt thoſe of that Opinion, tho' he had long ſearched after better Proofs than all thoſe which he had read and found weak. (b) Poſtquam aliorum quæ occurrerunt rationes infirmas deprehenderem, alias diu in mente mea quæſieram, putavi ſepoſita revelatione non poſſe ex lumine naturæ demonſtrari Mundum ſic eſſe, ut prius non fuerit. 3. At laſt he brings a Proof which offered its ſelf to his Mind whilſt writing, he brings it I ſay againſt theſe People. But obſerve that an Objection was ſtarted to him (c), to which he gave an Anſwer (d) which doth not deprive it of its force.

There are other Quibbles which are predominant in this Diſpute. Thoſe who ſay that the Creatures did not always coexiſt with God, are obliged to acknowledge that God exiſted before them. There was therefore ſuch a thing as before, when God exiſted alone; it is not then true that the Duration of God is an indiviſible Point: Time therefore preceded the exiſtence of the Creatures. Theſe Conſequences make thoſe Gentlemen fall Contradictions. For if the Duration of God is indiviſible, and without either Time paſt or Time to come, it follows that Time and the Creatures began together, and if ſo, how can we ſay that God exiſted before the exiſtence of the Creatures? That Phraſe is improper and Contradictory. And the following are no leſs ſo, God might have Created the World ſooner or later than he did Create it, he might have done it one Hundred Thouſand Years ſooner, &c.

It is not obſerved that by making Eternity one indiviſible inſtant, the Hypotheſis of the beginning of the Creatures is weaken'd. How do you prove that the World did not always exiſt? Is it not from the Argument that there was an Infinite Nature which exiſted when the World was not in being? But can the Duration of that Nature ſet Bounds to that of the World? Can it hinder the Duration of the World from extending its ſelf beyond all the particular Beginnings which you would aſſign for it? You ſay that the Creatures want a Point of indiviſible Duration to be without a beginning; for according to you they were only preceded by the Duration of God which is an indiviſible Inſtant. You'll be anſwered, that they did not therefore begin, for if a Stick wanted only one Point (I mean a Mathematical Point) of four Foot, it wou'd certainly have the whole extent of four Foot. This is an Inſtance that may be founded on the Common (e) Definition of the Duration of God, a Definition much more incomprehenſible than the Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation; for if it is impoſſible to conceive that all the Members of a Man ſhould be contained diſtinct from each other within the Compaſs of a Mathematical Point; how ſhall we conceive that a Duration without beginning or ending, and which coexiſts with the ſucceſſive Duration of all Creatures, is comprized in an indiviſible Inſtant (f)?

This Hypotheſis raiſes another Difficulty in favour of thoſe who aſſert that the Creatures had no beginning. If the Decree of the Creation doth not comprehend a particular Moment, it never exiſted without the Creatures; for it ought to be underſtood under this Phraſe, I will have the World to exiſt. It is viſible that by virtue of ſuch a Decree the World muſt have exiſted at the ſame time with this Act of the Will of God. But ſince this Act had no beginning, neither had the World any. Let us ſuppoſe then that the Decree was conceived thus, I will have the World to exiſt in ſuch a Moment. But how can we ſuppoſe that, if the Duration of God is an indiviſible Point? Can this or that Moment be choſen rather than any other in ſuch a Duration? It ſeems therefore, that if the Duration of God is not ſucceſſive, the World could not have a Beginning. This Objection (g) was propoſed to Mr. Poiret in 1679. He returned an Anſwer (h) which no ways removes the Difficulty, and even takes away all ways of doing it; for he ſuppoſeth that it is not poſſible there ſhould be any Moments before the exiſtence of the Creatures: Nay he ſeems to ſuppoſe that the Decree of the Creation was only made at the very Moment that the Creatures exiſted. To this purpoſe let us cite his Words: (i) Nec poterat exiſtere mundus, nec momenta ulla, ſine alio decreto, nempe eo cùm dixit Deus, Volo mundum exiſtere; & tunc, (ut ait Scriptura,) dixit, & facta ſunt, tunc exſtitit extemplo mundus: Et hoc fuit primum ejus momentum, & ante hoc nullum fuit de facto poſſibile momentum; eſtque contradicens concipere ante mundum plura and Fridays. He doth not (A) argue very consequentially on what is related of these People; and all those who cite him (B) have thereby acquired no other Reputation, than that of Ignorance in the Latin Tongue, or of relying on falsified Quotations. Gutierrius, a Spanish Physician, laughs at what is said of the (C) Zaburis.

(a) Petrus Poiret, cogitat. rationales de Deo, anima, & malo lib. 3. cap. 16. n. 9. p. 433. edit. 1685.

(b) Id. ib. pag. 439.

(c) 'Tis to be found at page 674. 675. of that Book of Mr. Poiret.

(d) You'l find it at pag. 678. of the ſame Book.

(f) It is taken from Boetius who ſays lib. 5. de conſol. Philoſ. proſ. 6. p. m. 135. that Eternity is interminabilis vitæ tota ſimul & perfecta poſſeſſio.

(g) The School-Men take great Pains to make this intelligible. See among others Caramuel in his Philoſophia rationalis & realis lib. 7.

(h) It is at page 675. & 676. of his Book.

(i) It is ibidem pag. 68[illegible].

ZANCHIUS, or ZANCHUS (Basil) one of the Learned Men of the XVI Century, was of Bergamo. He took the Habit of a regular Canon, and applied himself with extreme ardour, not only to the study of Philosophy and Theology, but also to Philosophical Learning. The Works we have of his (Y) are Evidences of his Erudition. He acquired such an extensive Knowledge, that he was thought worthy to be Keeper of the Vatican Library. Which Post he discharged with the utmost Reputation, and the satisfaction of the Learned. He died very piously * at Rome in the Year 1560. This is what I have Extracted from Ghilini's Teatro. I am sorry that I cannot find in it the Circumstances of a Particular which I have read elsewhere, I mean that Zanchius labouring under a cruel plura momenta ex quibus unum eligatur ad existentiam primi mundi, cæteris partim sine mundo prætermissis: nam momentum est modus creaturæ qua existentis. For my part, I offer a quite different Supposition, and assure my self that it will solve the difficulty. I suppose that amongst the possible Beings which God knew (a), before he made the Decrees of the Creation, we ought to place a successive duration without Beginning or End; and whose Parts are as distinct from one another, as those of the possible extension which God likewise knew before his Decrees, to be Infinite, according to all the Three Dimensions. He left in the state of possible things, part of this Infinite Duration, and made Decrees for the existence of the other. He chose such a Moment as he thought fit in this Ideal Duration for the first which should exist, and fixed to it the Act by which he decreed the Creation of the World. Which is the Reason why the Eternity of that Act doth not prove that of the World. Thus we see again that the indivisibility of the real Duration of God, doth not prove that the World did not begin. We have also in this Ideal or Possible Duration, the true measure of Time. Others vainly look for it, in the motion of the Heavens. Others yet more whimsically assert, that Time is an Ens rationis, a manner of conceiving things, and that without Motion, or Humane Thought, there would be no such thing as Time. A gross Absurdity: for tho all created Spirits should perish, tho' all Bodies should cease to move, there would be a successive regulated duration in the World, which would answer the possible Duration known to God, and which he would go by, to preserve every thing more or less, and for so many Years. An Extension which remains at rest, requires no less to be created every moment of its duration, than an Extension which moves. The conservation of Creatures is always a continual Creation, whether they move or continue in the same situation. The true measure of the absolute quantity of things, either with respect to Extention or Time, is only to be found in the Ideas of God. Man knows nothing of it; he is only acquainted with relative Magnitude or Littleness. The same space of Time appears to him short or long, according as He diverts himself or is tired. The very Hour which seems short to one, appears long to another.

(A) He doth not argue very consequentially.] For if it be once granted that the Zaburis see dead Bodies and Treasures, there is no reason to pretend that they don't see Veins of Water, and Gold and Silver Mines. Why then doth del Rio grant the one, and deny the other? For he denies it, when he says that they know by the Vapours and Herbs, what lies hidden in a certain place of the Earth. A Knowledge acquired by this sort of Observation, can by no means be termed a Sight. And to argue consequentially on this head, he ought to deny the Facts, or explain them all by the same Hypothesis; for if the Devil is the cause of the two last, he may very well be so of the two former.

(B) Acquired no other Reputation.] One of those who wrote concerning the Wand of James Aymar, alledges (b) Martin del Rio, as an Author who on the Subject of the Zaburis, advanced no higher than natural Causes. But this is apparently false, since of the four Operations of these People, he ascribes two to the Devil. See what that Author makes him say: Del Rio relates that there are certain Men in Spain, commonly called Zahuris, by reason of their sharp sight. He saith that he saw one of them at Madrid in 1575, and that those Zahuris were reputed to see through the thick surface of the Earth, Springs of Water, Treasures, and metallick Mines; and tho' these effects seemed very surprizing, he informs us that he explain'd them naturally, and that several Philosophers referred them to natural Causes. 1. He doth not say that those People (c) are called Zaburis from their sharp sight. 2. This Author suppresses the sight of dead Bodies, which is not less mention'd than the others. 3. Del Rio doth not say that he naturally explained those three Effects; he saith, that with respect to the two first, he persists in the natural Explanation which he had given elsewhere (d); but he attributes the other to the Devil.

(C) Gutierrius—— laughs at what is said of the Zahuris.] He calls them Zabories, and so much the more blames the popular Credulity in this respect, because they suppose these People to be Born on Good-friday, and that they enjoy this miraculous Privilege by virtue of their Birthday. (e) Ex magis isti damnandi, quia ex superstitiosa hominum opinione admittantur putantes tali prærogativa hos impostores donari, quia nati fuerint die illa sacra, humano generi semper fausta ac felici, in qua celebratur apud Catholicos memoria Passionis Domini JESU-Christi, feria inquam sexta Judæorum perfidia crucifixi, & quemadmodum tunc terra commota atque monumentis apertis latitantia, ac sepulta corpora apparuerunt hominibus illa die, sic altera in qua recolitur felix illa memoria si natalis alicui hominum fuerit, illam virtutem videndi potentiæ tribuit, aut donat quæ ad interanea terrarum pertingere possit: Vide quam futile ac irreligiosum commentum.

(Y) The Works we have of his are Witnesses of his Erudition] Ghilini represents him to have throughly studied the Latin Tongue, and acquired as large a stock of Fame thereby, as the most excellent Professors of that Language. (f) S'affaticò molto nell' acquisto della lingua Latina, dalla quale ne conseguì la maggior gloria, che dar si possi al più esquisito professore di così necessaria favella. He perfected, adds he, Marius Galezinus's Dictionary. I believe he should have said that of Marius Nizolius. (g) Assaissimo li devono tutti i studiosi, e devono anco in gran parte riconoscere dal suo infaticabile intelletto la perfezione del fruttuoso Dizionario de Mario Galesino, il quale fu aumentato, e ridotto al termine, che hoggidì si vede; che hà per titolo Verborum latinorum ex variis auctoribus lib. 1. Vanno anco attorno con molta commendazione del suo nome queste altre opere. Dictionarium Poeticum, & Epitheta veterum Poetarum: de horto sophiæ libri duo carmine conscripti: Adnotationes in divinos libros: Quæstiones in libros Regum, & Paralipomenon: Poematum libri octo. To which add Giraldus's words: Est el Perſecution (Z) and Oppreſſion, miſerably ended his days. He was related to || Zanchius, whom I ſhall next mention, and had two Brothers Regular Canons as well as himſelf †.

---

* Taken from Ghilini, Teatro parte 1. pag. 26 & 27.

(a) This word ought to be understood according to our way of apprehending things, or what is call'd in the Schools, Priority of Nature, signum rationis.

(b) See the Mercure Galant for the Month of February 1693. pag. 135.

(c) Norunt Hispaniæ genus hominum quod vocant ZAHURIS, nos Lynceos possumus nuncupare. Mart. del Rio, disq. Magic. l. 1. c. 3. quæst. 4. p. m. 35.

(d) Commentar. in Medeam Senecæ v. 231.

(e) Joan. Lazarus Gutierrius Sepulbedensis, in Academia Pinciana Medicinæ publicus Professor, opusculo de Fascino, dubio 6. num. 16. pag. 143.

(f) Ghilini teatro Tom. 1, pag. 26.

(g) Id. ib.

ZANCHIUS (Jerome) one of the moſt celebrated Proteſtant Divines, was born at (A) Alzano in Italy on the 2d of February 1516. He entred into the Congregation of the Regular Canons of Lateran, at the age of 15, and continued there about 19 Years. He at firſt applied himſelf to the ſtudy of Philoſophy and School-Divinity; but after having heard Peter Martyr's Prælections at Lucca, on the Epiſtle of Saint Paul to the Romans, and the Pſalms, he engaged himſelf in the more profitable ſtudy of the Scripture and Fathers. Every body knows that Peter Martyr, who was a Canon of the ſame Congregation, communicated the Proteſtant Doctrines to ſeveral of his Brethren before he threw off the Monkiſh Habit. The Impreſſions which he made on them were ſo ſtrong, that in the ſpace of one Year, Eighteen of the Fraternity imitated him in the Abjuration of Popery. Our Zanchius was one of them. He left Italy in 1550, and ſtayed ſome time amongſt the Griſons, and afterwards at Geneva, whence he deſigned for London, being invited thither by Peter Martyr, who intended to procure him a Divinity Profeſſor's Chair in England. But finding himſelf intreated by the Scholarchs of Straſburg, to fill the vacant Place of the deceaſed Gaſpar Hedion, Divinity Profeſſor there, he accepted that Employ in 1553, and exerciſed it almoſt Eleven Years, reading now and then ſome Lectures on Ariſtotle. The Univerſity exacted of him the Signing of the Augſburg Confeſſion, but did not obtain it without ſome Limitations which the Scholarchs agreed to. He was admitted one of the Canons of St. Thomas in 1555. He loved (B) Peace, and hated Theological Civil Wars, which nevertheleſs he could not avoid. He was accuſed of Error, he defended himſelf, and this Affair was carried on ſo warmly, that it was reduced to the terms of his voluntarily retiring, or the Scholarchs diſmiſſing him. He did not find his Account in this alternative; wherefore he ſtirred very much to maintain his Poſt. A thouſand Expedients were ſought after, and at laſt that of obliging him to ſign a (C) Formulary; which he did with ſome Reſtrictions: but that did not prevent the triumphing of his Adverſaries, nor hinder their ſpreading

(a) Eſt & Petrus Zanchus Bergamas, qui mutato vitæ inſtituto a Sodalibus Baſilius vocitatus eſt: vivit adhuc, a prima ejus adoleſcentia mihi cognitus Romæ in ſtudiis bonarum literarum verſatus, nec minus in ſacris bene eruditus: plurima ad hanc diem tum ſoluta oratione, tum pedeſtri & carmine perſcripſit, inter quæ Romæ publicata in manus peritorum vagantur duo libri verſu heroico elaborati ad Petr. Bembum Card. qui inſcribuntur Hortus Sophiæ, & præterea alia ſimul impreſſa: extat & laborioſum opus, Sylva vocabulorum ex optimis auctoribus linguæ Latinæ, item Nizolii ex Cicerone Paralipomena.

(Z) Zanchius——labouring under a cruel Perſecution and Oppreſſion, miſerably ended his days.] Paul Manutius deplores his Deſtiny in a Letter to Gambara an intimate Friend of the deceaſed. Baſilii Zanchi, ſaith he (b), poetæ ſummi, hominiſque non vulgariter eruditi, miſerabilis & indigniſſimus interitus hilaritatem mihi prorſus omnem eripuit. quem enim donare ſummis præmiis ob excellentem virtutem; decorare honoribus ob ſingularem integritatem, atque innocentiam æquum fuit; eum tam ignominioſe vexatum, tam acerbè, tam crudeliter extinctum, quis non ferat iniquiſſimè? equidem, ut audivi, etiam dolore tuo vehementer dolui. nam & vixiſtis una ſemper conjunctiſſimè, alter alteri egregiè carus. What follows in this Epiſtle of Manutius, is to be found (c) above; to which I refer you, that you may ſee the Elogies which he beſtows on our Baſil's Verſes.

(A) Born at Alzano in Italy] The difference which Mr. Teiſſier (d) has diſcovered betwixt Melchior Adam and Thuanus, is really no difference. The former, ſaith he, writes that Zanchius was a Native of Alzano, but Thuanus and Verheiden ſay he was born at Bergamo. I own that theſe two laſt Authors give him the Epithet of Bergomas; but ſince it is not leſs proper to thoſe born in the Bergamaſque, than to thoſe that are born in the City of Bergamo, it is by no means juſt to impute to Thuanus and Verheiden the limited ſenſe that is aſcribed to them. We may very well ſuppoſe that they deſign'd to ſay in general, that Zanchius was born in the Province of Bergamo, which being ſo, Melchior Adam differs from them no otherwiſe, than in expreſſing the Native place of this great Divine more particularly: (e) He calls it Alzanum, and ſaith that it is ſituated in the Valley of (f) Seri. But it is beyond diſpute, that Alzanum, and this Valley belong to (g) the Bergamaſque. Mr. Teiſſier is again miſtaken when he ſays that Alzano is a little Town four Leagues diſtant from Venice. If inſtead of four Leagues he had put forty, he needed not have feared ſaying too much. But Melchior Adam deceived him: he had read ſomewhere that our Jerom's Father having received the News of his Father's death, quitted his Studies of the Civil-Law, and married. The care which he was obliged to take of his Siſters, ſuggeſted to him that he ſhould do much better to apply himſelf to his domeſtick Affairs, than to follow the Barr; upon which he left the City, and removed to Alzano four Miles (h) diſtant; which he did (i) like a good Husband, that is, as I think, to ſpend leſs. This is what Melchior Adam found in ſome (k) Book. Upon which he falls to conjecturing, but is not happy in it; he ſays in a (l) Marginal Note, that in his Opinion the City which Zanchius's Father left was Venice. If he had been a good Geographer, he had never hit on that Thought, but would have known that the diſtance betwixt Alzano and Venice is above forty Leagues. His Gueſs is turn'd into a real Affirmation by Mr. Teiſſier, who beſides tranſlates quartum lapidem, by four Leagues, tho' in the Latin ſtyle they contain only four thouſand paces. I take Bergamo to be the City, from whence Zanchius's Father departed, on account of good Husbandry. Quenſtedt hath committed two groſs faults: he ſays page (m) 276, that Jerome Zanchius was born at Alzano in the Valley of Seri, four Miles from Venice; and in pag. 302, he makes him a Native of the City of Bergamo.

(B) Zanchius loved peace.] He was according to Melchior Adam, (n) litium fugitans, concordiæ amans.——(o) Modeſtiæ ſingularis, pacis Eccleſiarum ſtudioſiſſimus. (p) Others ſay that very few ſurpaſſed him in Learning, Piety, and Modeſty. See the Remarks in which I examin the Narrative of Thuanus and Moreri.

(C) Obliged him to ſign a Formulary, which he did with ſome reſtrictions.] We ought to know that there happened ſome Broils betwixt him and John Marbachius

|| Hieron. Zanchius epiſt. [illegible]

(a) Lilius Gregor. Gyrald. de poetis ſuor. temporum dial 2. pag. 569. Tom. 2. oper. edit. 1696.

(b) Paulus Manutius epiſt. 28. lib. 4. pag. m. 226.

(c) In the Remark B of the Article Gambara.

(d) Teiſſier addit. aux eloges Tom. 2. pag. 160.

(e) Melch. Adam. in vit. Theol. exter. pag. 148.

(f) In valle Seriana, Id. ib.

(g) See Leander Alberti deſcript. Ital. pag. m. 638.

(h) Ad quartum inde diſtans lapidem. Melchior Adam. ibid.

(i) Quod rebus ſuis conſultius fore judicaret. Id. ibid.

(k) He might have found it in the 2d Book of Zanchius's Letters pag. 444.

(l) Id. ib.

(m) Of his Book de patriis illuſtrium virorum.

(n) Idem pag. 142.

(o) Idem. pag. [illegible]

(p) Sanderſon de obligat. conſcient. prælect. 2. apud Pope Blount. cenſ. Author. pag. 541.

ing the News of their Victory every where. He deſigned to retrieve himſelf, and new Propoſals of Accommodation were begun, when a favourable Opportunity afforded him a handſome Pretext to extricate himſelf out of this Labyrinth. The Church of Chiavenna, in the Griſons Country, invited him to be their Miniſter, and he accepted that Vocation. He ſurrendred his Canonſhip, deſired leave to depart, and retir'd from Straſburg in November 1563. From which time to the Year 1568, he very well ſerved the Church of Chiavenna, and met with ſome Croſſes * there alſo. He was offer'd a Divinity Profeſſor's Chair at Heidelberg, which he accepted, and began the exerciſe of that Function in February 1568. He was alſo promoted to the Degree of Doctor the ſame Year, in the preſence of Frederick III. Elector Palatin: At whoſe ſollicitation he wrote a large Book againſt the Antitrinitarians; and after the death of that Prince, refuſed the Invitations of the Univerſity of Leyden, and the Church of Antwerp, chuſing rather to ſtay at the College of Neuſtad, where John Caſimir, Count Palatin got together the Profeſſors, whom the new Elector, a great favourer of Lutheraniſm, had obliged to leave Heidelberg. Upon the death of this Elector, the Adminiſtration of the Palatinate fell into the hands of the ſame John Caſimir, who re-inſtated the Profeſſors in their former Poſts; but Zanchius, by reaſon of his great Age, was declared Emeritus. He died at Heidelberg on the 19th of November 1590. He loſt his Sight ſome time before his death †. It doth not appear by Melchior Adam's Life of him, that he was ever Married; but according to Thuanus, he left a numerous (D) Iſſue. He compoſed ſeveral Works, which

* [illegible] ſe quidem ſed non [illegible] [illegible], Melch. Adam in vit. Theol. exter. pag. 151.

† Taken from Melchior Adam in vitis Theolog. exterorum. pag. 143. & ſeq.

Marbachius, Miniſter, and Divinity Profeſſor at Straſburg. They differed on the Doctrine of Predeſtination, and its dependencies; but the Fire lay hid under the Aſhes till 1561. when Zanchius engaged the Authority of the Magiſtrates to ſuppreſs a Book of Telemannus Heſhuſius, which had been re-printed at Straſburg, and Magdeburg was expreſſed in the Title as the place of the Impreſſion. This Book treated of the Real Preſence in, cum, ſub pane, and contained a Scandalous Preface againſt Frederick III Elector Palatin, Melancthon, and ſeveral other excellent Divines. The Author of this Preface accuſed all thoſe of Hereſy and Atheiſm, who did not approve his Opinion concerning the Reality and Oral Manducation. Zanchius occaſioned the ſuppreſſion of this Book, not on account of its Doctrine, which he left to the judgment of the Church, but for the Calumnies of the Preface. This diſpleaſed Marbachius and the other zealous Aſſerters of Lutheraniſm, and put them upon trying all ways to remove Zanchius. To this purpoſe they examined all his Lectures and the Sheets he had dictated, and when they had extracted whatever they could, they accuſed him of Heterodox Notions, with regard to Predeſtination and Perſeverance, &c. The Diſpute was vigorouſly debated; Zanchius conſulted the Divines of ſeveral places of Germany, and offered a verbal Conference with his Enemies. But this Propoſal was rejected, and they in the mean time (a) declaimed againſt him before the People with great animoſity. At laſt, the Affair came to Arbitration; and the following Perſons were prevailed on to come to Straſburg: From Tubingen, James Andreas; from Deux Ponts ken) Cuman Flinſbach; and from Baſil, Simon Sulcerus and Ulrick Coccius; the Arbitrators declar'd that there was no Hereſy in Zanchius's Opinions; but drew up Articles which he ſigned in this manner, on the 28th of March in 1563. Hanc doctrinæ formulam ut piam agnoſco, ita etiam recipio (b): That is, as far as I acknowledge the Formulary of Doctrine to be pious, ſo I receive it; or, I acknowledge that this Formulary of Doctrine is pious, and ſo I receive it. The Latin words will bear both ſenſes, and I would not anſwer for Zanchius that he was not ſenſible of this ambiguity, and that he did not pretend to take advantage of it. However it be, his Adverſaries were yet more ſubtil; they (c) ſo dextrouſly ſlipt ſome ambiguities into the Articles of the Formulary, that they could explain every thing to their advantage: and accordingly they did not fail to interpret every thing to his Prejudice; which revived the Quarrel, but he quitted the Diſpute and went to the Griſons. Thus Henry Altingius relates the thing. But we may add to his Narrative ſome particulars which he omits, and Melchior Adam furniſhes us with. The Accuſations charged againſt Zanchius turn'd not only on the Doctrines of Predeſtination, and perſeverance; but alſo on the Euchariſt, Ubiquity, Images, Antichriſt, and the end of this World. The Chapter of St. Thomas, of which he was a Canon, tried ſeveral ways of accommodation; and the Diſpute was laid before the council of Thirteen. He perſonally conſulted the Churches and Univerſities of Germany, and Publiſhed the Deciſions which he obtained from them. He deliberated ſometime about the ſigning the Formulary drawn up by the four Arbitrators, and excuſed himſelf out of fear of ſcandalizing the Godly, and confirming Erring Men in their Opinions. At laſt being reſolved to ſubſcribe it (d) for peace ſake, and out of a Belief that it would be no prejudice to his Opinion, he armed himſelf with a precaution in the manner of Signing it, and meaſured the Artifices of his Enemies by his own Candor. This Melchior Adam tells us; but for my part, I confeſs I cannot diſcover this Candor; for Zanchius's Subſcription is ſo ambiguous, and liable to Shifts and Subterfuges, that it doth not appear he couched it in that manner, without a further Proſpect. Is it not owned that he choſe this Phraſe rather than another out of precaution? But if there was an Artifice herein, it did not ſerve its Author at all, nor contribute to the work of Peace. (f) Sed ne ſic quidem bene coiit gratia: cùm ſtatim poſt adverſarii de victoria jactitare, triumphare, & laureatas in Saxoniam, atque alias regiones literas miſere.

I had written thus far without ever thinking of conſulting Hoſpinian's Sacramental Hiſtory; which I afterwards did, and found a long relation of this Diſpute. I there ſaw (g) that one of Zanchius's good Friends broke with him, and took advantage of a Letter which he had communicated to him. I ſaw that (h) Marbachius and his Adherents forbore ſpeaking to him, and ſo much as pulling off their Hats after the diſgrace of Heſhuſius's Book. But what ſerves moſt to prove the certainty of my Conjecture, is that I there find that Zanchius in his Mind put a very particular ſenſe upon the expreſſions of his Subſcription. His Mental Reſervation was: (i) Hanc doctrinæ formulam recipio quatenus illam piam eſſe judico. His Adverſaries ſent Copies of what he had ſigned to all parts, without ever (k) mentioning the terms of his Subſcription; by reaſon they feared that their triumph would not appear very conſiderable to thoſe who were capable of examining the equivocal words of Zanchius.

If we believe a Letter (l) which he wrote to David Chaillet, dated the 1. of November 1563, they made uſe of many Frauds. This Letter deſerves to be read; he therein makes his Apology, and endeavours to prove that he did nothing againſt his Conſcience.

(D) But according to Thuanus, he left a numerous Iſſue.] His Words are: (m) Scripſit multa--- quorum

(d) Perſuaſus tamen concordiæ cauſa, cùm ſine præjudicio doctrinæ ſuæ id factum iri intelligeret, his verbis, ut ſibi caveret, ſubſcripſit: Hanc doctrinæ formulam, ut piam agnoſco; ita etiam recipio; & ſubſcripſit quidem aliorum calliditatem ſua ſimplicitate menſus. Melch. Adam ubi ſupra pag. 150.

(e) See the foregoing quotation.

(f) Id. ib.

(g) Hoſpin. Hiſtor. ſacrament. parte 2. pag. 536.

(h) Id. ib.

(i) Id. ib. pag. 543. (k) Id. ib. (l) It is in the 2. Book of Zanchius's Letters, pag. 81. & ſeq. (m) Thuan. lib. 9. pag. 379.

which doubtless are as good as those of the more modern Divines, and yet nobody reads them: They are sold almost for nothing in the Auctions of Libraries; and the Grocers more eagerly catch them up for their despicable price, than the Students in Divinity, or even the Ministers themselves. The Fate of other Divines, who shone so brightly in the XVIth Century, is very like this. We may justly censure (E) Thuanus in some particulars, and Mr. (F) Moreri also; for the Proofs which they bring of Zanchius's Moderation, are not good, tho' it is really certain, that few Ministers have been so moderate. He did not believe the Pope to be Antichrist, and † highly condemned the prepossession which he thought he observed in the Writings of several Protestants. His Conference with the Pope's Nuncio in 1561 is very curious. Pallavicini speaks of it at large, in the 10th Chapter of the 15th Book of his History of the Council of Trent. To conclude, there are several Authors named ZANCHIUS, as appears by the Scene ‖ of the Writers of the Bergamasque published in 1664. Amongst others there was one Jerome ZANCHIUS, who published some Law-Books. He was second β Cousin to our Divine. It will not be an unacceptable thing to the Reader, if I say here that our Jerome had a Servant named Frederick Sylburgius, who became a very Learned Man. He kept him γ four Years, and then recommended him to Lælius Zanchius, that he might procure him δ a place at Padua. His Letter of recommendation is dated the 2d of April 1565.

† See the Quotation out of Father Labbe in the Remark e.

‖ Donato Calvi is the Author of it: It's intitl'd Scena letteraria de scrittori Bergamaschi.

β Zanch. epistol. lib. 2. p. 414.

γ Id. ib.

δ Id. ib. pag. 415.

ZENOB-

---

quorum partem, dum vixit, in lucem dedit, partem filii, quos PLURES reliquit, post mortem ejus publicarunt. This is somewhat Hyperbolical; for the Epistle Dedicatory to Zanchius's Letters signed by his Heirs, mentions the Names of only two Sons, and that of his Son-in-law. Here follows what I find concerning his Marriages. His first Wife was a Daughter of Celius secundus Curio, by whom he had a Daughter who did not live long. He afterwards married the Sister of a Gentleman named Laurence Lumage: the two Twins of which she was delivered in the Year of her Nuptials died soon after. The Daughter who came into the World the following Year died at three Years old. This is what Jerome Zanchius wrote (a) to Lælius Zanchius on the 2d of April 1565. He there tells him that he had then two Daughters.

(E) We may justly censure Thuanus.] Peter Martyr left Italy in the Year 1542, and Zanchius did the same in 1550. wherefore the following words of Thuanus are not exact: (b) Hieronymus Zanchius ——— paullo post Petri Martyris ——— discessum ob eandem caussam Argentinam concessit. II. They are also faulty in another particular: for Zanchius did not go to Strasburg till after having resided about (c) nine Months in the Grisons Country, and as long at Geneva. III. Vermilio in Angliam evocato Anno 54. in munere successit. This Latin may signify that Peter Martyr went into England in 1554. But that is false, he went thither in 1547. However, not to take the Expression in the strictest sense, let us grant Thuanus that the Year which he mentions concerns only the installation of Zanchius; that cannot remove the justice of my Criticism, since it is certain that Zanchius was installed in 1553, not in Martyr's, but Hedion's place. (d) Successit ei (Caspari Hedioni) in professione Hieronymus Zanchius Italus. (e) Cum anno quinquagesimo tertio, in demortui Casparis Hedionis locum Theologus, qui in schola sacras literas doceret, esset sufficiendus: ab amplissimo illius Reipubl. magistratu & scholarchis decretum est, Italum quendam, Martyri non absimilem, vocandum. Itum ergo primum est a Cœlio Secundo Curione, cui ea cura ab Argentoratensibus demandata, ad comitem illum Martinengum: &, cum hic Ecclesiam Genevæ plantatam destituere nollet ad istum Zanchium: quem inde Argentoratum ipsi etiam Scholarchæ, missis benevolentiæ plenis literis, invitarunt. It is indeed true, that the Letter (f) written to him by James Sturmius, in the Name of the Scholarchs of Strasburg, offers him the same Employ, and the same Salary which Peter Martyr had; but that doth not import that he succeeded him, properly speaking. IV. He left Chiavenna only to go immediately to profess Divinity at Heidelberg; Thuanus is therefore (g) to blame to assign him a Post at Basil betwixt his leaving Chiavenna and his going to the Palatinate. V. He is yet more mistaken when he says that he did not go to the Palatinate before 1577, since he went thither ten years before. VI. He should not have omitted that he went thither to teach Divinity in Heidelberg, and that he continued to do so in that University, till the Troubles which arose against the Calvinist Doctors, after the Death of the Elector Frederick III. He ought not, I say, to have directly sent him from Basil to Neust for he did not teach in this last City till after he had been a Professor eight Years at Heidelberg. To these six Errors in Fact, let us add one in Reason. VII. " (h) A great Moderation was observed in " his Writings, and he always discovered his sin- " cere desire to determine all the Differences occa- " sioned by Religion: FOR at the Age of Seven- " ty Years, he addressed his Confession of Faith " to Ulysses Martinengue, a Noble Venetian, Count " de Barco, and published it as well in his own " Name as that of his Family, for that was the " Title it bore. In this Confession he protests " that he had not absolutely, and in all particulars " renounced the Church of Rome and all her Do- " ctrines, but only those which are not conform to " the Writings of the Apostles, and the Doctrine " which she her self formerly taught, and which " was believed by the Primitive and Pure Church: " And that when he left the Romish Commu- " nion, it was with a design to return to that " Church, in case, that correcting her Errors, she " should reassume her antient Form: That he de- " sired with all his Heart, that this happy Change " might one day happen; for what can a pious " Man more ardently wish for, than to live to the " last of his Days in the Church, in which he had " the privilege to be regenerated by Baptism, if " the Communion held with it does not offend God? Luther, Calvin and that James Andreas whom Thuanus immediately mentions as (i) a Divine much more exasperated against the Romish Church and the Pope, would all very sincerely have signed this Confession of Zanchius; wherefore it is not a good Proof that Zanchius differed from other Ministers.

(F) And Mr. Moreri also.] I. When he saith that Zanchius was an Apostate Monk of London, it is not his fault, but that of his Dictionary. The Printers have put de Londres, (of London) instead of de l'Ordre, (of the Order), and I observe this to shew to what Errors they expose the Readers: For how many Readers easily believed from hence, that Zanchius stole out of a Monastery at London when he turned Protestant? II. He was not a Hermit of St. Augustin, as Mr. Moreri affirms; those so called are different from the Regular Canons. Grant that both have St. Augustin for the Author of their Rule; that should not prevent our observing a distinction when we speak of them. III. He had from Mr. Teissier (k) the pretended difference betwixt Melchior Adam and Thuanus concerning the Birth-place of Zanchius. IV. And the pretended

(a) This Letter is in the 2d Book of Zanchius's Letters, pag. 414. & seq.

(b) Thuanus, Hist. lib. 99. pag. 379. ad ann. 1590.

(c) Melch. Adam ubi supra pag. 149.

(d) Melch. Adam in vit. Theol. German. pag. 242.

(e) Id. in vit. Theol. exter. pag. 149.

(f) It is the first of the 2d. Book of Zanchius's Letters.

(g) Postea Clavennæ, in Rætia, dein Basileæ usque ad annum 78 ac postremo Neapoli Nemetum docuit. Thuan. ib.

(h) … supra.

(i) An… riot co… Romanæ Ecclesiæ Pontifici nominis oppugna… tor Ja… bus An… dreas… Thuan…

(k) Se… Rema…

ZENOBIA.

ZENOBIA, one of the moſt illuſtrious Women that ever ſwayed the Scepter, pretended * to be deſcended from the Ptolemies and Cleopatra's. She Married Odenatus † a Sarracen Prince, and contributed very much to the (A) great Victories which he obtained over the Perſians, and which preſerved the Eaſt to the Romans, when after the taking of Valerian it was very probable that Sapor would have wreſted all that Country from them. She was alſo Honoured with the Title ‡ of Auguſta, when Gallienus in grateful acknowledgment of the Services of Odenatus made him Emperor in the Year of Chriſt 264. After the Death of her Husband ſhe ſupported her Power, and Reigned very Vigorouſly and Glorioſly. Her Sons β by Reaſon of their nonage enjoyed only the Imperial Name and Honours. She did not only preſerve the Countries ſubject to Odenatus, but alſo Conquered γ Egypt, and prepared for farther Conqueſts when the Emperor Aurelian declared War againſt her. She ζ loſt two Battles, and was conſtrained to ſhut up her ſelf in the City of Palmyra, where Aurelian beſieged her. She defended her ſelf very bravely; but ſeeing that in all probability the Emperor would take the City, ſhe privately retired out of it. Of which Aurelian being informed cauſed her to be ſo diligently purſued, that ſhe was overtaken in the Ferry in order to paſs the * Euphrates. This happened in the Year 272. The Emperor ſaved her Life, and after making her an Ornament of his (B) Triumph

* Trebellius Pollio in triginta Tyrannis, p. m. 195.
† Procopius, [illegible] Trebellius Pollio ibid. pag. [illegible] [illegible] Principes Palmyrenorum.
‡ See Tillemont, Hiſt. des Empereurs tom. 3 pag. m. 97[illegible].
* Trebell. Pollio ibid. pag. 325.

γ Zenobia [illegible] Vopiſcus in Aureliano. ζ [illegible] in Annal. [illegible]
* Palmyra built by Solomon was 2 days Journey diſtant from that River.

pretended four Miles diſtance betwixt Venice and that place. V. Which he ſhould have call'd Alzano and not Azano. VI. He ſays after Thuanus that Zanchius went directly to Straſburg. VII. And hath increaſed the Error of his pretended ſucceſſion to Peter Martyr; for one may well without being guilty of above one falſity ſay that Zanchius was called to Straſburg to ſupply the place which Peter Martyr had left void, but one cannot without redoubling the Blunder affirm that he publickly profeſſed Hereſy at Straſburg in Martyr's place. Is the publick profeſſion of a Doctrine made in another's place? VIII. He ſhould not have Copied Thuanus with regard to Zanchius's pretended reſidence at Baſil. IX. Much leſs ſhould he have imputed to him the ſaying that this Miniſter taught at Spire. For he doth not ſay ſo, his Neapolis Nemetum is Neuſtad, a City continually mentioned (a) in the Gazettes for theſe ſeven or eight Years paſt. Thuanus's Tranſlater was to blame to call it Spire. Mr. Teiſſier may then if he pleaſes allow us to diſlike the following Period of his Additions, (b) Zanchius never Taught at Baſil, or Spire, as Thuanus believed. X. Heidelberg was not the laſt place where Zanchius taught, as Moreri avers. He was declared emeritus, when his Collegues the Profeſſors of Neuſtad were re-eſtabliſhed in Heidelberg And if he died in the laſt mentioned City, it was by Accident; he took a journey thither (c) to ſee his old Friends. XI. To prove Zanchius more moderate than all other Proteſtants, to prove it I ſay, by the already cited Words of Thuanus is an illuſion. XII. To Conjecture that Father Labbe grounded himſelf on the ſame Words, when he ſaid that Zanchius was the moſt ſubtil of his Communion, is a Thought which doth not much contribute to the credit of that Jeſuit, and which appears ill grounded when we Conſult the Original. To allow no more Capacity and Subtilty to our Adverſaries than in proportion to the regard they have for us, or the Moderation with which they ſpeak of our Cauſe, is not to act on the Foot of Reaſon, but to be blinded with Prejudices. However the place where Father Labbe beſtows this Elogy on that Miniſter, affords us a more probable Conjecture than that of Moreri. This Jeſuit cites a paſſage where Zanchius ſpeaks very ill of the Proteſtant Writers. Whence it might more probably be inferred that this Miniſter's reſentment againſt his Brethren rather than his Modeſty towards the Church of Rome occaſion'd the praiſes which Father Labbe beſtowed on him; and perhaps it were better to ſay that Father Labbe had no regard to any thing but the parts of Zanchius, which doubtleſs were very ſubtil. But to enable the Reader to judge the better of it, I ſhall ſet down the whole paſſage, which clearly diſcovers the Temper of an Author, whoſe Anger was not intermittent, but continual. (d) Quid de cæteris Lutheri & Calvini Miniſtris dicam, qui dum Conciliorum, Patrum, ſcriptorum antiquorum opuſcula interdum volvunt, apertiſſimam hæreſeon ſuarum damnationem legunt: numquid non diſſimulant, numquid non tergiverſantur, numquid non argutantur? Audi domeſticum teſtem Hieronymum Zanchium omnium Sacramentariorum ſubtiliſſimum: Legi librum (Pſeudo Evangelici neſcio cujus) ſed non ſine ſtomacho perlegi; cùm nimirum viderem qualiſnam ſit ſcribendi ratio, quâ in Eccleſiis ex Evangelio reformatis (an nomine Lutheri, Calvini, ſimiliumque ſectas appellat) permulti, ne dicam plerique omnes, utuntur: qui tamen Paſtores, qui Doctores, qui Columnæ Eccleſiæ videri volunt. Statum cauſæ ne intelligant, de induſtria ſæpenumero tenebris involvimus: quæ ſunt manifeſta, impudenter negamus: quæ falſa, ſine fronte aſſeveramus: quæ apertè impia, tamquam prima fidei principia obtrudimus: quæ orthodoxa, hæreſeos damnamus: ſcripturas ad noſtra ſomnia pro libidine torquemus: Patres jactamus, cùm nihilminùs quam illorum doctrinam ſequi velimus: Sophiſticari, calumniari, conviciari, nobis eſt familiare; modò cauſam noſtram, ſive bonam ſive malam, quo jure, quaque injuria tueamur; reliqua omnia ſuſque deque facimus. Hæc ille τὶς ἐξ αὐτῶν ἴδιος αὐτῶν προφήτης, ut de Epimenide Cretenſi dixit Apoſtolus, Paulus cap. 1. Epiſtolæ ad Titum, ἡ μαρτυρία αὕτη ἐστὶν ἀληθής.

(a) I write this in July 1697.

(b) Teiſſier ubi ſupra pag. 161.

(c) Melch. Adam. ubi ſupra pag. 152.

(d) Philippus Labbe, diſſert. de ſcript. Eccleſiaſt. tom. 1. pag. 807. 808. Note that he quotes none of Zanchius's works, which ſhews that he did not go to the fountain head, but relied upon the quotation of another Man.

(A) And contributed very much to the great Victories which he obtained.] This is teſtified by Aurelian in a Letter which he wrote to the Senate. (e) Audio P. C. objici quod non virile munus impleverim, Zenobiam triumphando. Ne illi qui me reprehendunt ſatis laudarent, ſi ſcirent qualis illa eſt mulier, quam prudens in conſiliis, quam conſtans in diſpoſitionibus, quam erga milites gravis, quam larga quum neceſſitas poſtulet, quam triſtis quum ſeveritas poſcat. Poſſum dicere illius eſſe quod Odenatus Perſas vicit, ac fugato Sapore Cteſiphontem uſque pervenit. Poſſum aſſerere, tanto apud Orientales & Ægyptiorum populos timori mulierem fuiſſe, ut ſe non Arabes, non Sarraceni, non Armeni commoverent.

(e) Trebellius Pollio, in triginta Tyrannis, pag. 329. vol. 2. hiſt. Auguſtæ Scriptor. edit. Lugd. Bat. 1671.

(B) An Ornament of his Triumph.] Her Letter in Anſwer to that of the Emperor Aurelian to Summon her to ſurrender her ſelf, ſhews that ſhe deſigned to follow (f) the example of Cleopatra, in putting an end to her life rather than to live without reigning; but ſhe altered her Reſolution, and ſubmitting to neceſſity adorned Aurelian's Triumph. Where ſhe appeared ſo overloaded with Jewels, that tho' very ſtrong, ſhe was ſcarce able to ſupport the Weight. But at the ſame time Golden Fetters were faſtned to her Feet, and Chains of the ſame Mettle bound her Hands. (g) Ducta eſt igitur per triumphum ea ſpecie ut nihil pompabilius populo Rom. videretur. Jam primum ornata gemmis ingentibus, ita ut ornamentorum onere laboraret. Fertur enim mulier fortiſſima ſæpiſſime reſtitiſſe quum diceret ſe gemmarum onera ferre non poſſe. Vincti erant præterea pedes auro, manus etiam catenis aureis: nec collo aureum vinculum deerat, quod ſcurra Perſicus præferebat.

(f) Deditionem meam petis, quaſi neſcias Cleopatram reginam perire maluiſſe, quam in qualibet vivere dignitate. Vopiſcus in Aureliano, pag. 481.

(g) Trebellius Pollio ubi ſupra pag. 336.

FATHER PAGI affirms that Zenobia was led in Triumph in the Year 274. two Years after ſhe fell Triumph preſented her with a Country Seat (C) near Rome, where ſhe quietly ſpent the remainder of her days. It is reported that upon her Evidence Aurelian put many Perſons to Death. She was Beautiful, Chaſt, Learned, (D) Valiant, and Temperate, tho' on ſome Political occaſions ſhe would Drink great Quantities of Wine. If to theſe excellent Qualities ſhe could but have added that of a good Mother in Law, ſhe might have been placed amongſt the greateſt Rarities; but ſhe was ſo far from having ſuch a Virtue, that ſhe was ſuſpected of having conſented to the Aſſaſſination of (E) her Husband in the Year 267. from a reſentment of the tenderneſs which he ſhewed to his Son Herod, whom he had by another Wife.

[illegible]

She engaged in Diſputes concerning Religion, and protected Paulus (F) Samoſatenus fell into Aurelian's hands; and refutes ſeveral very Learned Chronologiſts, who have miſplaced the Year of theſe two Events. See his Diſſertatio hypatica towards the end.

(C) A Country Seat where ſhe quietly ſpent.] Let us farther cite Trebellius Pollio. Huic ab Aureliano vivere conceſſum eſt. Fertur que vixiſſe cum liberis, matronæ jam more Romanæ, data ſibi poſſeſſione in Tiburti, quæ hodieque Zenobia dicitur, non longe ab Adriani palatio, atque ab eo loco cui nomen eſt Conche.

(D) She was Beautiful, Chaſt, Learned, Valiant, and Temperate, tho'.] Pollio having ſpoken of the hunting exerciſes which enured Odenatus to the moſt rigid Fatigues, adds that Zenobia had acquired the ſame robuſt Temper, and that according to the Report of ſeveral ſhe was more Vigorous than her Husband. (a) Non aliter etiam conjuge aſſueta, quæ multorum ſententia fortior marito fuiſſe perhibetur: mulierum omnium nobiliſſima Orientalium fœminarum, & (ut Cornelius Capitolinus aſſerit) ſpecioſiſſima. The laſt Word would afford me a good Proof, if it were certain that this Auther made uſe of it. But the Manuſcripts vary; ſome have it expeditiſſima, inſtead of ſpecioſiſſima: Wherefore we ought not to depend upon it: Let us look for other Evidences. The following Picture repreſents her of a deep brown Complexion, but very charming withal, and as having the fineſt Teeth in the World. (b) Fuit vultu ſubaquilo, fuſci coloris, oculis ſupra modum vigentibus, nigris, ſpiritus divini, venuſtatis incredibilis: tantus candor in dentibus, ut margaritas eam plerique putarent habere, non dentes. (c) "Her "Chaſtity was ſo extraordinary, that ſhe made "uſe of the Liberty, which Marriage allowed her, "no farther than was neceſſary for the procrea- "tion of Children. (d) Cujus ea caſtitas fuiſſe dicitur, ut ne virum ſuum quidem ſciret, niſi tentatis conceptionibus. Nam quum ſemel concubuiſſet, expectatis menſtruis continebat ſe, ſi prægnans eſſet; ſin minus, iterum poteſtatem quærendis liberis dabat. This is what ſome rigid Caſuiſts would impoſe upon all Married People. And thoſe who write for Polygamy apply this Morality to their pernicious deſign; for they pretend that a Man ſhould abſtain from his Wife during her impregnation, and that if he cannot contain he ought to have another which is not with Child. A Learned Commentator on Tully's Offices obſerves, that if the Age he lived in produced ſuch Women as Zenobia, there would be leſs danger in Marriage for ſtudious Men, or thoſe of a weak Conſtitution; a ſort of Men, adds he, who have Reaſon to fear either Diſhonour, continual janglings, or an immature death. His Maxims are ſomewhat ſevere, read what follows. (e) Cum——— ſacræ literæ omnes vagas libidines deteſtentur: in ipſo etiam matrimonio hic finis ab ipſa natura deſtinatus, diligenter conſideretur, & (quantum vel naturæ imbecillitas, vel conjugii ſervitus ſinit) ſervetur ne homo infra beſtias ſeſe abjiciat: quarum pleraque non niſi certo anni tempore ad procreationem incitantur: & femellæ pleræque, concepto fœtu, marem non admittunt. Eadem etiam Zenobiæ Palmyrenorum reginæ continentia celebratur, quæ cum ſe gravidam ſenſiſſet, Odenatum maritum in thalamum ſuum non admiſit. Digna (ut quidam exclamat) quæ ſine omni dolore pareret: cum in matrimonio non voluptatem, ſed procreationem ſobolis ſpectaret. Cujuſmodi matronas ſi noſtra ætas ferret, etiam ſtudioſi homines, & non firmiſſima præditi valetudine, minore periculo uxores ducerent: quibus nunc aut infamia, aut rixæ perpetuæ aut immaturus obitus cum detrimento rei familiaris ſunt metuenda. Ridentur hæc ſcilicet a laſcivis hominibus, & in luſtris ac ganeis magis verſatis, quam in Theologia & Philoſophia: quibus nos hæc non præſcribimus. Indulgeant illi genio: ſed probus adoleſcens hominem ſe eſſe, non pecudem meminerit. Quod ſi verum eſt, quod ἀνώνυμος Ptolemæi ſcribit interpres, Ægyptios ſingulis menſibus ſemel tantum conſuetudine uxorum uſos; quo infantis concepti momentum deprehenderent: quid Chriſtianis facere par eſt propter Deum, ſummam & continentiam & abſtinentiam flagitantem? It would be to no purpoſe to urge againſt Zenobia, that ſhe had (f) but very few Maids in her ſervice; for her Domeſticks were moſt Eunuchs, advanced in Years: Such Servants were much fitter to attend a warring Queen than Chamber-Maids. As for her Learning, it is ſufficient to declare that Longinus inſtructed her; that ſhe ſpoke the Ægyptian Tongue in perfection, and that ſhe underſtood the Hiſtory of Egypt and the Eaſtern Hiſtory ſo well, that ſhe compiled an Abridgment of it. She read the Roman Hiſtory in Greek, and underſtood Latin, but durſt not ſpeak it. (g) Ipſa Latini ſermonis non uſque quaque ignara, ſed ut loqueretur pudore cohibita: loquebatur & Ægyptiace ad perfectum modum. Hiſtoriæ Alexandrinæ atque Orientalis ita perita ut eam epitomaſſe dicatur: Latinam autem Græce legerat. I was willing to excuſe her Drinking; by urging that She put Foot to Foot and Drank Glaſs for Glaſs with her Generals and Strangers, only to endear them to her, or bring them over to her ſide; but I own my ſuppoſition to be very Arbitrary, and the Expreſſion of the Hiſtorian (h) ſignifies that She Drank down the Perſians and Armenians. Tho' it is true that he ſaith She was otherwiſe Sober.

(E) Conſented to the Aſſaſſination of her Husband ——— from a reſentment.] The Hiſtorian having repreſented the exceſſive complaiſance of Odenatus to Herod his Son by another Venter, adds that Zenobia being animated with a Step-mother's reſentment againſt this Herod, increaſed his Father's Love to him. Which ſeems to hint that Odenatus had no great Affection for Zenobia; for if he had loved her very tenderly, he would have favoured Herod leſs, than the Children he had by her; and not have looked upon Zenobia's hatred as a great motive to redouble his Tenderneſs for Herod. (i) Erat circa illum (Herodem) Zenobia novercali animo: qua re commendabiliorem patri eum fecerat. This Author a little farther ſpeaking of Mæonius the Murtherer of Odenatus ſays: (k) Hic conſobrinus Odenati fuit: nec ulla re alia ductus niſi damnabili invidia, imperatorem optimum interemit, quum ei nihil aliud objiceretur præter filii Herodis delicias. Dicitur autem primum cum Zenobia conſenſiſſe, quæ ferre non poterat ut privignus ejus Herodes priore loco quam filii ejus Herennianus & Timolaus, principes dicerentur. From hence we may judge what Perſons of no Virtue will do, ſince Zenobia endued with ſo many excellent qualities, ſacrificed her Husband to an Ambitious Tenderneſs for her Children, and to the Chagrin of a Mother in Law which continually preyed upon her.

(F) She protected Paulus Samoſatenus.] I can ſcarce believe that the Reaſon why ſhe favoured him was that which you will immediately ſee in the Words I extract from Page 1040 of the third Volume of Mr. de Tillemont's Hiſtory of the Emperors. "(1) S. Athanaſius ſaith that ſhe "was

(a) Id. ib. pag. 299.

(b) Id. ib. pag. 333.

(c) Tillemont, Hiſt. des Emper. tom. 3. pag. m. 1041.

(d) Treb. Pollio, ubi ſupra pag. 330.

(e) Hieron. Wolfius, Commentar. in Ciceron. de Offic. lib. 1. pag. m. 72. 73.

(f) In [illegible] Eunuchos gravioris ætatis habuit, puellas [illegible] mis raris. Trebell. Pollio ubi ſupra pag. 335.

(g) Id. ib.

(h) Bibit ſæpe cum ducibus, quum eſſet alias ſobria. Bibit etiam cum Perſis atque Armeniis ut eos vinceret. Id. ib.

(i) Id. ib. pag. [illegible]

(k) Ibid.

(1) Athan. ſolit. p. 857.

ſatenus, who was Condemned by the Council of Antioch: And her protection prevented his being driven from his Church. From which he was not forced till after Aurelian's Victory over this Princeſs. See Father Pagi's diſſertatio hypatica towards the end.

ZENO of Elea one of the moſt Eminent Philoſophers of Antiquity, flouriſhed in the † 79. Olympiad. He was Diſciple of Parmenides, and even according to ſome Authors, his Adopted * Son. He was a (A) very handſome Man. And ſome Writers repreſent him beloved by his Tutor to an unlawful Degree. Moreri informs us that he was the (B) Inventor of Logick. He ſhould have acquainted us alſo that he attempted the reſtoration of his Country's Liberty when labouring under the Oppreſſion of a Tyrant, and that when the Enterpriſe was diſcovered he ſuffered the moſt cruel Torments with an extraordinary " was a Jew, [by Religion without doubt] (2) " Which Abulpharagius after him tells us. (3) but at " leaſt ſhe followed ſeveral of the Jewiſh Opinions; " and ſhe is ſaid to have been the cauſe of Paulus " Samoſatenus Biſhop of Antioch, (4) of whom ſhe " was Protectreſs, (5) falling into the Hereſy of " Artemon [whoſe Opinions concerning JESUS " CHRIST] very nearly reſembled thoſe of the " Synagogues." For to perſuade the World that ſhe was of the Jewiſh Religion, another ſort of Evidence ought to be produced. It is eaſy to conceive that a Pagan Princeſs ſhould take Pleaſure in ſtopping the courſe of a Synodical Decree, if it be never ſo little intimated to her that the Condemned Perſon is worthy of her Protection, and that the fomenting diviſions amongſt Chriſtians tends to the Advantage of Paganiſm. Some Learned Men believe that Paul Samoſatenus was not Condemned by the Council of Antioch till after the fall of Zenobia; but Father Pagi (a) hath ſolidly refuted them.

(A) He was a very handſome Man ——— repreſent him beloved by his Tutor to an unlawful Degree.] I elſewhere mention (b) the reproach thrown at Apuleius, importing that he was handſome, and dreſſed too well for a Philoſopher. To which beſides other particulars, he offered in Anſwer that Beauty had not been always ſeparated from Perſons of his profeſſion, and he proves his aſſertion by the inſtances of Pythagoras and Zeno of Elea. (c) Præterea, licere etiam Philoſopho eſſe vultu liberali. Pythagoram, qui primum ſeſe Philoſophum nuncuparit, eum ſui ſeculi excellentiſſima forma fuiſſe: item Zenonem illum antiquum Veliâ (d) oriundum, qui primus omnium dictionem ſolertiſſimo artificio ambifariam diſſolverit, eum quoque Zenonem longè decoriſſimum fuiſſe, ut Plato autumat. Plato's Citation is right, but there are certain particulars in this paſſage of his which every Body doth not approve, and I take him to be juſtly Cenſured for it. His Words run thus: (e) Ἔφη δὲ δὴ ὁ Ἀντιφῶν, λέγειν τὸν Πυθόδωρον ὅτι ἀφίκοντό ποτε εἰς Παναθήναια τὰ μεγάλα Ζήνων τε ϗ Παρμενίδης. τὸν μὲν οὖν Παρμενίδην, εὖ μάλα ἤδη πρεσβύτην εἶναι, σφόδρα πολιὸν, καλὸν δὲ ϗ ἀγαθὸν τὴν ὄψιν, περὶ ἔτη μάλιστα πέντε ϗ ἑξήκοντα. Ζήνωνα δὲ, ἐγγὺς ἐτῶν τετταράκοντα τότε εἶναι, εὐμήκη δὲ, ϗ χαρίεντα ἰδεῖν. ϗ λέγεσθαι αὐτὸν παιδικὰ τοῦ Παρμενίδου γεγονέναι. Dicebat ergo Antiphon, Pythodorum narraſſe, Zenonem atque Parmenidem veniſſe quondam ad magnorum Panathenæorum celebritatem: & Parmenidem jam ſenem, atque canum, aſpectu decorum fuiſſe, annos ferme quinque & ſexaginta ætatis agentem; Zenonem verò annos penè quadraginta natum; procero inſuper & grato corporis habitu: dicebatur autem in deliciis Parmenidi fuiſſe. Athenæus blames Plato for having unneceſſarily blemiſhed the Manners of theſe two Philoſophers. Thoſe who deſire to ſee his own Words may be ſatisfied by the following Citation. (f) Παρμενίδη μὲν γὰρ ϗ ἐλθεῖν εἰς λόγους τὸν Πλάτωνος Σωκράτην, μόλις ἡ ἡλικία συγχωρεῖ· οὐχ ὡς ϗ τοιούτους εἰπεῖν ἢ ἀκοῦσαι λόγους· τὸ δὲ πάντων χαλεπώτατον, ϗ τὸ εἰπεῖν οὐδεμιᾶς κατεπειγούσης χρείας, ὅτι παιδικὰ γεγόνοι τοῦ Παρμενίδου Ζήνων ὁ πολίτης αὐτοῦ. Parmenidem certe cum Socrate Platonis confabulatum fuiſſe ætas vix permittat, nedum hos vel illos ſermones edidiſſe ruiſſe, aut audiviſſe. Quod autem indigniſſimum eſt, nullâ compulſus neceſſitate ſcribere is non erubuit Parmenidi Zenonem civem ſuum in amoribus & deliciis fuiſſe.

(B) That he was the inventer of Logick.] Ariſtotle allows him that Honour, as Sextus Empiricus (g) and Diogenes (h) Laertius obſerve. But his Art of reaſoning ſeems deſigned to perplex, and not to clear a Subject. And he accordingly uſed it only to diſpute againſt all comers, and ſilence his Adverſaries, whatever they aſſerted, tho' never ſo contradictory. Plutarch gives him this Character. (i) Διήκουσε δὲ Περικλῆς ϗ Ζήνωνος τοῦ Ἐλεάτου πραγματευομένου περὶ φύσιν ὡς Παρμενίδης, ἐλεγκτικὴν δέ τινα, ϗ δι᾽ ἀντιλογίας εἰς ἀπορίαν κατακλείουσαν ἐξασκήσαντος ἕξιν· ὥσπερ ϗ Τίμων ὁ Φλιάσιος εἴρηκε διὰ τούτων.

Ἀμφοτερογλώσσου τε μέγα σθένος οὐκ ἀπάτηλον
Ζήνωνος, πάντων ἐπιλήπτορος.

Audivit Pericles Zenonem quoque Eleatem, de natura, Parmenidis more, philoſophantem: qui impugnans quemlibet, uſum paraverat quemdam refutandi, qui deduceret ad perplexitatem. Quod Phliaſius Timon affirmat quoque, his verbis.

Omnia perſtringens, Zeno diſceptat, utraque
Ex parte invictus, ſed non fallax.

Theſe Verſes of Timon appear leſs mutilated in Diogenes Laertius; I Copy them from the Amſterdam Edition.

Ἀμφοτερογλώσσου (k) τε μέγα σθένος οὐκ ἀλαπαδνὸν
Ζήνωνος πάντων ἐπιλήπτορος, ἠδὲ Μελίσσου,
Πολλῶν φαντασμῶν ἐπάνω, παύρων γε μὲν ἥσσω.
Expreſſitque (l) Plato vires utriuſque periti
Linguæ Zenonis, jurgatoriſque Meliſſi,
Phantaſias qui aluit paucas, multaſque ſubegit.

Theſe Verſes repreſent a Man who overthrew ſeveral Opinions, and kept very few for himſelf. If he was not the Palamedes of whom Plato relates ſome particulars, he perfectly reſembled him. This Palamedes argued ſo ſubtilly that he rendred both ſides probable to his Auditors: he convinced them that the very ſame things were alike and unlike, that they were but one thing and different things, and that they reſted and Moved at the ſame time. (m) Τὸν οὖν Ἐλεατικὸν Παλαμήδην λέγοντα οὐκ ἴσμεν τέχνῃ, ὥστε φαίνεσθαι τοῖς ἀκούουσι τὰ αὐτὰ ὅμοια ϗ ἀνόμοια, ϗ ἓν ϗ πολλὰ, μένοντά τε αὖ ϗ φερόμενα. Enimvero Eleatem Palamedem artificio ſuo efficere ſolitum accepimus, ut eadem audientibus ſimilia & diſſimilia, unum & multa, manentia & fluentia viderentur. Diogenes Laertius (n) ſaith that Zeno was called the Palamedes of Elea, in Plato's Sophiſt: but Mr. Menage charges him with two Errors. He ſhews that this Palamedes is not mentioned in that work of Plato, but in the Dialogue entituled Phedrus; after which he proves by the Evidence of Quintilian, that this Palamedes was Alcidamas the Rhetorician. (o) Quæ non de Zenone Eleate, verum de Alcidamante intelligenda ſunt, ſi fides Quintiliano. Ita enim ille libro III. inſtitut. Oratoriarum capite I. ubi de Scriptoribus Artis Rhetoricæ: Et Hippias Eleus, & quem Palamedem Plato appellat, Alcidamas Eleates.

This

---

† Diog. Laert. lib. 9. n. 25. pag. [illegible] edit. Wetſten. [illegible]

* Id. ib. n. 25.

(2) Abulf. p. 8[illegible]

(3) Theod. hær. l. 2. c. [illegible]

(4) Ath. p. [illegible] d.

(5) Theod. [illegible]

(a) Pagi, diſſert. hypat. pag. 317. & ſeq.

(b) In the Article of Apuleius.

(c) Apuleius, apolog. pag. m. 275. 276.

(d) See Menage in Diogenem Laert. lib. 9. n. 28. where he ſhews that Velia is the ſame Town of Italy with Elea.

(e) Plato in Parmenides pag. m. 1110. A.

(f) Athenæus lib. 11. pag. [illegible] F.

(g) Sextus Empiricus adverſus Mathematic. p. 139.

(h) Diog. Laert. lib. 9. n. 25.

(i) Plutarch. in Pericle, pag. 154. The tranſlation of theſe words may be ſeen in the Remark D△

(k) Diog. Laert. ubi ſupra.

(l) Theſe Verſes were thus rendred from a Copy, in which there was Ζήνωνός τε Πλά. τον ἐπιλήπτορος instead of Ζήνωνος πάντων ἐπιλήπτορος.

(m) Plato in Phædro. pag. 1231.

(n) Diog. Laert. ubi ſupra.

(o) Menagius in Diog. Laert. lib. 9. n. 25. pag. 403. col. 2.

ordinary Reſolution. This Action (C) is related with a Thouſand Variations,

(C) This Action is related with a Thouſand Variations.] The Elean Tyrant which he deſigned to deſtroy was Nearchus according to ſome, and Diomedon according to other Writers (a). Plutarch calls him Demylus, as we ſhall ſee hereafter: Tertullian Names him Dionyſius, and doubtleſs by a miſtaken (b) Chronology takes him for the Syracuſian Tyrant, which we find every Moment mentioned in Authors under the Name of Dionyſius. Zeno Eleates, ſaith he towards the end of his Apology, conſultus à Dionyſio, quidnam Philoſophia præſtaret, cum reſpondiſſet, contemptum mortis, impaſſibilis flagello Tyranni objectus, ſententiam ſuam ad mortem uſque ſignabat. Here is one Teſtimony of the Admirable Conſtancy of this Philoſoper. I believe Tertullian placed the Scene (c) of all this not at Elea, as he ought to have done, but at Syracuſe. Others lay the Scene in the Iſle of Cyprus, and are beſides miſtaken both in the Perſon tortured, and the Tyrant. (d) Ducebatur intrepidus (Euſebius) temporum iniquitati inſultans, imitatus Zenonem illum veterem Stoicum qui ut mentiretur quædam laceratus diutius, avulſam ſedibus linguam ſuam cum cruento ſputamine in oculos interrogantis Cyprii Regis impegit. Valeſius's Note on this paſſage of Marcellinus will diſcover the Errors of this Hiſtorian, and if you conſult Mr Menage (e), you will find a very happy Conjecture concerning the occaſion of theſe miſtakes. Zeno's Action it ſelf is differently reported. Some ſay that being required to declare his Accomplices, he averred that all the Tyrant's Friends had a hand in the Conſpiracy, that he might ſhew him that every Body had abandoned him. And after this general Declaration he named ſome particular Perſons, and deſired to whiſper the Tyrant, who approaching the Philoſopher he fixed his Teeth ſo deep in his Ear, and kept his hold ſo faſt that nothing but pricking him could force him to let go. (f) Εἶτα περί τινων εἰπὼν ἔχειν τινὰ εἰπεῖν αὐτῷ πρὸς τὸ οὖς, καὶ δακὼν, οὐκ ἀνῆκεν ἕως ἂν ἀπεκεντήθη, ταὐτὸν Ἀριστογείτονι τῷ τυραννοκτόνῳ παθών. Deinde cum de quibuſdam dixiſſet, quædam ſibi ad aurem loqui velle, eam mordicus apprehenſam non ante dimiſit quam ſtimulis foderetur, idem agens quod Ariſtogiton tyrannicida. (g) Others ſay that he did bite off the Tyrant's Noſe. And ſome aſſure us (h) that he having declared his Accomplices, and called the uſurper the Plague (i) of his Country, he addreſſed himſelf to the ſtanders by, telling them that he was aſtoniſhed at their cowardice, and that the fear of being treated like him could oblige them to continue in ſlavery: After which biting off his Tongue he threw it into the Tyrant's Face; whereby the Citizens were ſo incenſed that they immediately ſtoned the uſurper of their Liberty. This is what Diogenes Laertius tells us. Plutarch obſerves that Zeno in biting off his Tongue, and throwing it in the Tyrant's Face, practiſed his Maſter's Maxim, that Diſhonour is terrible to great Men, but that none but Children, Women, or baſe Cowards are afraid of pain. (k) Ζήνων τοίνυν ὁ Παρμενίδου γνώριμος, ἐπιθέμενος Δημύλῳ τῷ τυράννῳ, καὶ δυστυχήσας περὶ τὴν πρᾶξιν, ἐν πυρὶ τὸν Παρμενίδου λόγον, ὥσπερ χρυσὸν ἀκήρατον καὶ δόκιμον παρέσχε· καὶ ἀπέδειξεν ἔργοις, ὅτι τὸ αἰσχρὸν ἀνδρὶ μεγάλῳ φοβερόν ἐστιν. ἀλγηδόνα δὲ, παιδὲς καὶ γύναια, καὶ γυναίων ψυχὰς ἔχοντες ἄνδρες, δεδίασι· τὴν γὰρ γλῶτταν αὐτοῦ διατραγὼν, τῷ τυράννῳ προσέπτυσεν. Zeno Parmenidis diſcipulus, Demylo tyranno inſidiatus, re infeliciter geſta, doctrinam Parmenidis, velut aurum in igne, illæſam ac probam facto oſtendit. Scilicet turpitudinem magno viro metuendam eſſe: dolorem a pueris & mulierculis, ac viris animum muliebrem gerentibus timeri. Linguam enim ſuam dentibus amputatam, in tyrannum expuit. (l) Hermippus ſays that Zeno was beaten in a Mortar.

Valerius Maximus could not fail to mention the conſtancy of this Philoſopher; but he is guilty of ſome Faults: For inſtead of aſcribing what relates to the Tyrant Nearchus, to Zeno, he beſtows it on another; and beſides ſuppoſes that Zeno deſigning to deliver the Agrigentins from the Tyranny of Phalaris, did and ſuffered what others relate with reſpect to the Tyrant of Elea. Qui (Zeno Eleates) cum eſſet in diſpicienda rerum natura maximæ prudentiæ, inque excitandis ad vigorem juvenum animis promptiſſimus, præceptorum fidem exemplo virtutis ſuæ publicavit. Patriam enim egreſſus, in qua frui ſecura libertate poterat, Agrigentum miſerabili ſervitute obrutum petiit, tanta fiducia ingenii ac morum ſuorum fretus, ut ſperaverit, & tyranno & Phalaridi veſanæ mentis feritatem à ſe deripi poſſe. Poſtquam deinde apud illum plus conſuetudinem dominationis, quam conſilii ſalubritatem valere animadvertit; nobiliſſimos ejus civitatis adoleſcentes cupiditate liberandæ patriæ inflammavit. Cujus rei cum indicium ad tyrannum manaſſet, convocato in forum populo, torquere eum vario cruciatus genere cœpit: ſubinde quærens, quoſnam conſilii participes haberet: At ille nec eorum quempiam nominavit, ſed proximum quemque, ac fideliſſimum tyranno ſuſpectum reddidit: increpitanſque Agrigentinis ignaviam ac timiditatem, effecit ut ſubito mentis impulſu concitati, Phalarim lapidibus proſternerent. Senis ergo unius eculeo impoſiti, non ſupplex vox, nec miſerabilis ejulatus; ſed fortis cohortatio totius urbis animum, fortunamque mutavit (m). After which he relates what follows. (n) Ejuſdem nominis philoſophus, cùm à Nearcho tyranno, de cujus nece conſilium inierat, torqueretur, ſupplicii pariter atque indicandorum conſciorum gratia; doloris victor, ſed ultionis cupidus, eſſe dixit quod eum ſecreto audire admodum expediret: laxatoque eculeo, poſtquam inſidiis opportunum tempus animadvertit, aurem ejus morſu corripuit, nec ante dimiſit, quam & ipſe vita, & ille corporis parte privaretur. Oliverius, who commented on Valerius Maximus, finds but one Fault in it: He doth not blame Valerius Maximus for any thing but ſaying that Zeno the chief of the Stoicks was put to Death for endeavouring to deſtroy a Tyrant. This Cenſure is unjuſt; and tho' it be ſaid (o) that Zeno voluntarily killed himſelf at the Age of 90 Years, it will not convict Valerius Maximus of any Error, ſince he doth not ſay that one of his two Zeno's was the head of the Stoicks. Doth not Diogenes Laertius (p) ſay that there were eight Zeno's? It is not then neceſſary that he, who is diſtinguiſhed from Zeno of Elea, ſhould be the founder of the Stoicks. Henry Valeſius (q) blames Valerius Maximus for making two Zeno's of one Zeno of Elea. One of our beſt Criticks (r) made the ſame obſervation, and beſides pointed out what might miſlead this Ancient Author. He obſerves that John Vorſtius making the ſame Critical Remark expoſed himſelf to Cenſure, by making Nearchus Tyrant of the Liparitans. Vorſtius grounded this Opinion on Zeno's being examined concerning the Arms which by his means were brought to the Iſle of Lipara. He conceived that this Philoſopher after having delivered the Agrigentins from the Tyranny of Phalaris retired to this Iſle, and endeavoured to free it from the Tyranny of Nearchus. But Perizonius clearly proves (ſ) that it was the City of Elea which Zeno attempted to free from the Tyranny of Nearchus. But to go on; I ſhall take the Liberty to obſerve that theſe Learned Men ſuffer the greateſt Fault of Valerius Maximus to eſcape unpuniſhed; that is, the bringing Zeno into a Plot againſt Phalaris: Which Chronology will by no means allow. Let us ſuppoſe that Euſebius is miſtaken in placing the twenty eight Years of Phalaris's Tyranny betwixt the ſecond Year of the thirty firſt Olympiad, and the ſecond of the thirty eighth. And let us prefer his placing this Tyrant at the end of the fifty third Olympiad

(a) Diog. Laert. ubi ſupra, n. 26.

(b) Antiquior Zeno Eleates Dionyſio Tyranno centum quinquaginta annis circiter. Menag. ib. pag. 404.

(c) I mean that he thought the whole matter happen'd at Syracuſa.

(d) Ammian. Marcellin. l. 14. c. 9. p. 46.

(e) Menag. ubi ſupra.

(f) Diog. Laertius ubi ſupra, n. 26. pag. 565. ex Heraclide in Satyri Epitome.

(g) Laert. ibid. n. 27. ex Demetrio in Æquivocis.

(h) Id. ib. ex Antiſth. in Succeſſionibus.

(m) Valer. Maxim. lib. 3. cap. 3. n. 2. in extern. pag. m. 280.

(n) Id. ib. n. 3.

(o) Oliverius ſays ſo.

(p) Diog. Laert. ubi ſupra, n. 29. Jonſius de Scriptor. hiſtor. philoſ. p. 116. reckons [illegible] Zeno's.

(q) Ex uno Zenone Eleate duos perperam fecit. Henric. Valeſius, Notis in Amm. Marcellin. lib. 14. c. 9. p. 46.

(r) Ut modo duorum Fabiorum res geſtas uni cum adſignaſſe contra Pighium probavimus, ita contraria plane culpa unius Philoſophi facta, in duos ejuſdem nominis diviſit. lib. III. cap. 3. Nam quum retuliſſet, quam patientiam Zeno præſtitiſſet, &c. Jacobus Perizonius Animadv. hiſtoric. 85.

(i) Μετὰ τὸ μηνῦσαι τοὺς φίλους ἐρωτηθῆναι πρὸς τοῦ τυράννου εἴ τις ἄλλος εἴη· τὸν δὲ εἰπεῖν, σὺ ὁ τῆς πόλεως ἀλιτήριος. Illum quum amicos indicaſſet, rogatum à Tyranno eſſet ne alius quiſpiam, dixiſſe, Tu civitatis pernicies, Id. ibid. This will be better underſtood, if it be read in Seneca at the end of this Remark. (k) Plut. adverſus Colotem, circa fin. pag. 1126 Vide etiam de garrulit. p. 505. (l) Apud Diogenem Laertium ubi ſupra.

(ſ) Mr. Perizonius cites Cicero de nat. Deor. lib. 3. & Diogenes Laertius ciations, as I ſhall ſhew in the Remarks. I have but two Faults to (D) charge on Mr. Moreri. The Opinions of Zeno Eleates, were very near the ſame with thoſe of Xenophanes and Parmenides concerning the Unity, Incomprehenſibility, and Immutability of all things. I cannot believe that he aſſerted that there is nothing (D△) in the Univerſe, for how could he pretend that he, who maintain'd that Principle, did not exiſt? How could he, who aimed at nothing but by his Arguments † pro and con to perplex all thoſe with whom he diſputed, and confound them ſo, that they ſhould not know which way to turn themſelves, be guilty of ſuch a palpable Abſurdity? Could not he ſee that it was eaſie to confound him, by asking whether nothingneſs could Reaſon? He argued ſtrenuouſly againſt the exiſtence of Motion. Some of his Objections

† See Plutarch's words towards the end of the Remark D△

Olympiad after 16 Years uſurpation. And even let us with ſeveral Learned Men (a) ſuppoſe that Phalaris ſeized the ſovereign Authority in Agrigentum about the fifty ſecond Olympiad, and that he held it ſixteen Years according to ſome, or twenty eight according to others; it will nevertheleſs appear that he was dead before our Zeno was of age to undertake what Valerius Maximus relates of him. We have ſeen above that Parmenides was about 65 years old when Zeno was but 40. But Parmenides flouriſhed (b) in the 80th Olympiad: judge then whether Zeno could make any figure in the 69th. But to deal plainly, I find ſome perplexity in the time when Parmenides is ſaid to have flouriſh'd. For ſince Pericles, who died in the 87th Olympiad, was Zeno's Diſciple, the flouriſhing time of Zeno ought to be placed about the 76th (c), and that of Parmenides, (d) his Tutor, a little higher. This is ſufficient for my purpoſe. I ſhould have examined all this more exactly, if I had Publiſhed the Article of Phalaris, which when going to begin, I was informed that a worthy Nephew of the moſt Illuſtrious Mr. Boyle had Publiſhed the Life of that Tyrant. After which I made a vain ſearch in ſeveral places, which was the cauſe that I omitted that Article; and I refer it to another time, when I may make uſe of that Author's Learning, ſince I know † no more of his Book but what is extracted out of it by the Journaliſts. However, it is to be believed that Valerius Maximus did not mention two Zeno's, without ſome ſort of Reflection. He knew that Nearchus lived after Phalaris; ſo that being miſtaken in making the Zeno Eleates (e) contemporary with Phalaris, he could not perſuade himſelf that the ſame Zeno who deſigned the expulſion of Nearchus, was he who contrived a Plot againſt the Tyrant of Agrigentum. Obſerve that ſeveral Criticks will have it, that Seneca meant our Zeno of Elea, when he ſaid, (f) Notus eſt ille tyrannicida, qui imperfecto opere comprehenſus, & ab Hippia tortus, ut conſcios indicaret, circumſtantes amicos tyranni nominavit, quibus quam maxime caram ſalutem ejus ſciebat. Et cum ille ſingulos, ut nominati erant, occidi juſſiſſet, interrogavit: Ecquis ſupereſſet? Tu, inquit, ſolus: neminem enim alium, cui carus eſſes, reliqui. Effecit ira, ut tyrannus tyrannicidæ manus commodaret, & præſidia ſua gladio ſuo cæderet. But without offending Muret and Juſtus Lipſius, I am apt to think, that Seneca meant one of thoſe whom Hippias the Son of Piſiſtratus, cauſed to be tortured. And tho' Seneca relates what others aſcribe to Zeno of Elea, yet I do not believe that he had him in his Eye. It is cuſtomary for him and ſeveral other Authors to apply to ſome Perſons, what has been ſaid of others.

(D) Two Faults to charge on Mr. Moreri.] The firſt is his quoting Diogenes in the 9th BOOK de hiſt. Græc. & de Sect. Philoſ. When it is certain that Diogenes never wrote on the Greek Hiſtory, of the Greek Hiſtorians, nor is his Book intitl'd de Sectis Philoſophorum. But the Title of it runs thus, de vitis, dogmatis, & apophthegmatis clarorum Philoſophorum, libri X. His ſecond Fault is ſaying that Diogenes ſpeaks of ſeven other Zeno's, whoſe lives he hath not given us. For one of them is Zeno of Citium, the Head of the Stoicks, whoſe Life Diogenes hath written at large.

(D△) I cannot believe that he aſſerted that there is nothing in the Univerſe.] Wherefore I ſuſpect Seneca, who charges him with this Opinion. Juſtus Lipſius alſo diſtruſts the truth of it. (g) Audi, quantum mali faciat nimia ſubtilitas, & quam infeſta veritati ſit. Protagoras ait, de omni re in utramque partem diſputari poſſe, ex æquo, & de hac ipſa, an omnis res in utramque partem diſputabilis ſit. Nauſiphanes ait, ex his quæ videntur eſſe, nihil magis eſſe, quam non eſſe. Parmenides ait, ex his quæ videntur, nihil eſſe in univerſum. Zeno Eleates omnia negotia de negotio dejecit, ait nihil eſſe. Circa eadem ferè Pyrrhonii verſantur, & Megarici, & Eretrici, & Academici, qui novam induxerunt ſcientiam, nihil ſcire. Hæc omnia in illum ſupervacuum ſtudiorum liberalium gregem conjice. Illi mihi non profuturam ſcientiam tradunt, hi ſpem omnis ſcientiæ eripiunt: ſatius eſt ſupervacua ſcire, quam nihil. Illi non præferunt lumen, per quod acies dirigatur ad verum: hi oculos mihi effodiunt. Si Protagoræ credo, nihil in rerum natura eſt, niſi dubium: ſi Nauſiphani, hoc unum certum eſt, nihil eſſe certi: ſi Parmenidi, nihil eſt præter unum: ſi Zenoni, ne unum quidem. Quid ergo nos ſumus? quid iſta quæ nos circumſtant, alunt, ſuſtinent? Tota rerum natura umbra eſt, aut inanis, aut fallax. Non facile dixerim, utrum magis iraſcar illis, qui nos nihil ſcire voluerunt: an illis, qui ne hoc quidem nobis reliquerunt, nihil ſcire. I have cited thoſe words of Seneca ſomewhat at large, in order to diſplay all the degrees of Scepticiſm, amongſt which there is none ſo extravagant as Zeno's Notion. And if he really maintained ſuch a Paradox as this, either he deſign'd it only for his own diverſion, or he did not underſtand the word nothing in the ſame ſenſe as others do, or elſe he talked idly. But we don't find any Tracks of Folly in the reſt of his Opinions. Wherefore we ought rather to ſolve it by taking it for a witty diverſion, or a particular Notion of the word nothing. We may paſs the ſame judgment on Gorgias Leontinus's Book (h) in which he maintained three Aſſertions: Firſt, that there is nothing; Secondly, That if there is any Being, Man cannot comprehend it; Thirdly, That tho' Man could comprehend it, he could not expreſs it. But let us ſee Juſtus Lipſius's Reflection on Seneca: (i) Sententia eſt. Zeno Eleates moleſtiâ nos liberavit, & omni inquiſitione: nam ait, Nihil eſſe. Sed hæc mira, & eximiè fatua aut ſapiens ſententia, nec mihi nunc capienda. An ad contemptum rerum retulit, Nihili hæc (non tamen Nihil*) eſſe? velim, & ſic laudem, non ſolum tolerem. Si aliter, & de ipſa exiſtentia; elleboro hæc egent. Ceterùm Zeno Eleates nuſquam tale, apud Laertium quidem, ubi Dogmata ejus diverſa, ſed, nec alibi commemini legiſſe. Viderit Seneca.* What Plutarch relates of Zeno will doubtleſs be objected againſt me: "Pericles, ſaith he, (k) did by ſnatch-"es, and by the by hear ſeveral Lectures of Ze-"no Eleates, who diſcourſed and treated of na-"tural Philoſophy much at the ſame rate as Par-"menides did; only that he had by Exerciſe and "Practice, gotten a kind of habit or knack of con-"futing any Opinion right or wrong, and of baf-"fling People by thwarting and oppoſing whatſo-"ever they ſaid, and ſo running them aground "that they did not know which way to turn "themſelves. And accordingly Timon the Phlia-"ſian hath given the account of him in this pair "of Verſes.

Zeno's great force, who ſpoke to either part,
Confuted all, and never fail'd in's Art.

It will be objected againſt me that a Philoſopher of this Humour, was capable of ſhifting to that degree, as to maintain that every thing is nothing. I anſwer, that it is not at all probable that ſuch a ſubtil Diſputant ſhould run into ſuch Extremities, out of which it ſeems impoſſible for him to extricate himſelf.

But

(a) Car. Boyle, apud Acta Eruditor. Lipſienſ. 1696 pag. 102, 103. In the Abſtract of Phalaris's Letters Printed at Oxford in 1694.

(b) Chron. Euſeb.

(c) Jonſius de Script. Hiſt. Phil. pag. 116. places him in the 78. Olympiad.

(d) In the Edition of Diogenes Laertius, 1692. he is placed in the 64 Olympiad.

(†) I write this in the year 1696.

(e) Nay, he ſuppoſes that he was very old in the time of the Plot.

(f) Seneca de ira, lib. 2. cap. 23. pag. m 141. See the Commentators upon it.

(g) Seneca epiſt. 88. p. m. 361.

(h) See Sextus Empiricus adv. Mathemat lib. 7. cap. 2.

(i) Lipſius manuduct. ad Stoic. Philoſ. lib. 2. diſſ. 4. ſub fin. p.m.693. to.4.oper.

(k) Plut. in vita Periclis pag. 154.

ons on that head are (E) preſerved in Ariſtotle's words; but it is very probable

But however incredible this may appear, let us ſay that the Conſequences of Pyrrhoniſm may have occaſioned the aſſertion of a great many extravagant things, and let us moderate a little the Poſitions we have read. We may alſo ſay, that perhaps Zeno maintained that there was nothing, only in arguing on thoſe Principles which he would deſtroy. It may be that from an Argument ad hominem, it was concluded that he taught it poſitively and abſolutely, tho' he advanced it only as a Doctrine which reſulted from the Hypotheſis, whoſe Falſehood he had undertaken to ſhew. We know that he argued thus: If there is a Being, 'tis indiviſible, for Unity cannot be divided; now that which is indiviſible is nothing; for that cannot be accounted among Beings which is of ſuch a nature, that being added to another, it will not encreaſe it, and being taken away from another, doth not diminiſh it: and therefore there is no Being. This Argument is mentioned (b) by Ariſtotle, who looks upon it as ridiculous. We'll omit the Greek, and ſet down rather Fonſeca's Paraphraſe, from which we learn that Zeno thus attack'd a Doctrine of Plato: (c) Poſterior ratio quam affert (Ariſtoteles) pro opinione naturalium contra Platonem, erat Zenonis Eleatæ, Parmenidis diſcipuli, qui hunc in modum argumentabatur. Ipſum unum ſeparatum ſi datur, eſt omnino indiviſibile, ergo nihil eſt; unde ſequitur: non tantum illud, non eſſe ſubſtantiam rerum, ſed neque omnino quicquam, quod ad eas pertineat. Conſequentiam verò ex eo firmam putabat Zeno, quia nihil eſſe credebat, niſi quod aliquam magnitudinem haberet: quam ob Cauſam, ſæpe utebatur hoc quaſi Principio, Quod nec additum facit majus, nec detractum reddit minus, nihil eſt. Quocirca dicebat nihil eſſe, quod omni ex parte eſſet ens, niſi Corpus, quando quidem ſolum Corpus additum ſecundum quamcunque dimenſionem facit majus. Siquidem linea addita non facit majus, niſi ſecundum longitudinem; nec Superficies, niſi ſecundum longitudinem & latitudinem: Unde ſequebatur Unitatem abſtractam, qualem ponebat Plato, itemque Punctum, nihil omnino eſſe, quia nequeant rem ullam majorem facere.

(E) Some of his Objections againſt the exiſtence of Motion, are preſerved.] Read (d) Ariſtotle's Phyſicks, where you will find Zeno's four Objections examined.

THAT time is not diviſible in infinitum.

The Firſt is (e). If an Arrow, which tends towards a certain place, ſhould move, it would then move and reſt at the ſame time. But that is a Contradiction: therefore it doth not move. The Conſequence of the Major is thus proved. The Arrow is every moment in a ſpace equal to it ſelf. It is then at reſt; for a thing is not in a ſpace when it leaves it: Wherefore there is no moment in which it moves; and if it moves in ſome moments, it will be at once in motion and at reſt. To comprehend this Objection the better, two Principles which cannot be denied ought to be carefully obſerved: one is, that a Body cannot be in two places at once; the other, that two parts of Time cannot exiſt together. The firſt of theſe two Principles is ſo evident, even without making uſe of any attention, that it wants no Explanation: But as the other requires a little more reflection in order to apprehend it, and contains the whole force of the Objection, I will render it more obvious by an Inſtance. I ſay then that what ſuits Monday and Tueſday with reſpect to ſucceſſion, ſuits every portion of Time whatſoever. Since then it is impoſſible for Monday and Tueſday to exiſt together, and that of neceſſity Monday muſt ceaſe to be before Tueſday begins to be, there is no part of time whatſoever, which can co-exiſt with another; each muſt exiſt alone; each muſt begin to be, when the precedent ceaſeth to be; and each muſt ceaſe to be before the following can begin to exiſt. From whence it follows, that Time is not diviſible in infinitum, and that the ſucceſſive duration of things is compoſed of Moments, properly ſo called, each of which is ſimple and indiviſible, perfectly diſtinct from time paſt and future, and contains no more than the preſent time. Thoſe who deny this Conſequence, muſt be given up to their Stupidity, or their want of Sincerity, or the inſurmountable power of their prejudices. But if you once grant that the preſent time is indiviſible, you will be unavoidably obliged to admit Zeno's Objection. You cannot find an inſtant when the Arrow leaves its place; for if you find one, it will be at the ſame time in that place, and yet not there. Ariſtotle contents himſelf with anſwering, (f) that Zeno very falſly ſuppoſes the indiviſibility of Moments.

Zeno's 2d. Objection was, That if there be Motion, what moves may paſs from one place to another; for all Motion comprehends two Extremities, terminum a quo, and terminum ad quem, the place from whence it departs, and that to which it comes. But theſe two Extremities are ſeparated by ſpaces which contain an infinity of parts, ſeeing Matter is diviſible in infinitum; it is then impoſſible for the Body that is moved to proceed from one Extremity to the other. The intermediate ſpace is compoſed of an infinity of Parts, through which it ought to run ſucceſſively, one after the other, without ever being able to touch that which is before at the ſame time that it touches that which is behind: ſo that to run through one Foot of Matter, I mean, to reach from the beginning of the firſt Inch to the end of the 12th Inch, an infinite time would be neceſſary; for the Spaces, which it is ſucceſſively obliged to run through, betwixt the two Extremities, being infinite in number, it is plain that they cannot be run through in leſs than an Infinity of moments; unleſs it were pretended that the Body which moves is in ſeveral places at the ſame time, which is falſe and impoſſible. To this Ariſtotle makes a wretched Anſwer: He ſaith that a Foot of matter being no otherwiſe infinite than in Power, may very well be run through in a finite time. I ſet down his Anſwer with the perſpicuity which the Coimbrian Commentaries have given it. (g) Huic rationi ſatisfactum ab ſe jam ante Ariſtoteles ait, videlicet cum hoc libro docuit infinitum ſectione, quod non actu, ſed poteſtate infinitum eſt, tempore finito decurri poſſe. Enimvero cùm tempus continuum ſit, parique modo infinitum, eodem infinitatis jure, eiſdemque partium diviſionibus ſibi mutuò reſpondebunt tempus & magnitudo. Nec contra naturam talis infiniti eſt hoc modo pertranſiri. You have here two Particulars: 1. That each part of Time is diviſible in infinitum; which is invincibly refuted above. 2. That a Body is only Infinite in Power. Which ſignifies that the Infinity of a Foot of Matter, conſiſts in that it may be divided without end into ſmaller parts, but not in its being actually ſuſceptible of that diviſion. To urge this, is to impoſe on the World; for if Matter is diviſible in infinitum, it actually contains an Infinite number of parts, and is not therefore an infinite in Power, but an Infinite which really and actually exiſts. The Continuity of parts doth not hinder their actual Diſtinction; conſequently their actual Infinity doth not depend on the Diviſion; but it ſubſiſts equally in a cloſe quantity, and in that which is called diſcrete. But if we ſhould grant this Infinity in Power, which by the actual diviſion of its parts, would become an actual Infinite, we ſhould not loſe any ground, for Motion hath the ſame Virtue as Diviſion. It touches one part of the Space without touching the other, and touches them all one after another; is not this actually to diſtinguiſh them? Is not this to do the very ſame thing which a Geometrician performs on a Table, when he draws Lines which mark out all the half Inches? He doth not break the Table into half Inches, but makes a diviſion which expreſſes the actual diſtinction of Parts: And I don't believe that Ariſtotle would have denied, that if an infinity of Lines was drawn on an Inch of Matter, it would introduce a Diviſion which ſhould reduce that to an actual Infinity, which, according to him, was only virtually ſo. But what would be done, with reſpect to the Eyes, by drawing Lines on an Inch of Matter, is certainly done

(b) Ariſtot. Metaphyſ. lib. 3. cap. 4.

(c) Fonſeca in Ariſtotle's Metaphyſ. lib. [illegible] p. m. 473, 474.

(d) In the 9th Chapter of the 6th Book.

(e) I reckon it the firſt, becauſe Ariſtotle propoſes and anſwers it at the beginning of the Chapter; but afterwards he places it in the third rank.

(f) Vide [illegible] Hoc vero eſt falſum, cùm tempus ex momentis individuis non conſtet, ut neque alia ulla magnitudo. Ariſtoteles Phyſic. lib. 6. c. 9.

(g) Conimbricenſes in Ariſtot. Phyſic. lib. 6. c. 9. pag. m. 147, 148.

bable that he alledged ſeveral others, which perhaps were the ſame with thoſe I ſhall (F) mention, ſome of which oppoſe the exiſtence of Extenſion, and ſeem much tion with reſpect to the underſtanding by Moti-on (a). We conceive that a Body which moves by ſucceſſively touching the parts of ſpace, doth determine them as effectually as the Circle in the mind. But beſides, when it may be ſaid that the Diviſion of an Infinite is ended, is there not then an actual Infinite? Don't Ariſtotle and his Followers aſſert, that an Hour contains an infinity of parts? Wherefore when it is paſt, it muſt be owned that an infinity of parts did actually exiſt one after another. Is this a virtual, and not an actual Infinite? Let us then ſay that this Diſtinction is null, and that Zeno's Obſervation remains in full force. An Hour, a Year, or an Age, &c. are each a finite time. A Foot of Matter is an infinite ſpace; and therefore there is no Body in motion that can ever reach from the beginning to the end of a Foot. We ſhall ſee in the following Remark, whether this Objection may be eluded, by ſuppoſing that the Parts of a Foot of Matter are not infinite. Let us content our ſelves in this place with obſerving, that the ſubterfuge of the Infinity of the Parts of Time is null; for if there were in an Hour an infinity of Parts, it could never either begin or end. All its Parts muſt exiſt ſeparately; any two of them never do, nor can exiſt together: They muſt then be comprized between a firſt and laſt Unity, which is incompatible with an infinite number.

The 3d. Objection was the famous Argument called Achilles. Of which Zeno of Elea was the Inventer, if we believe (b) Diogenes Laertius, who tells us nevertheleſs that Phavorinus aſcribed it to Parmenides, and ſeveral others. This Objection hath the ſame Foundation with the 2d, but is more adapted to the declamatory Style. It tends to ſhew that the ſwifteſt Body in motion purſuing the ſloweſt, can never reach it. (c) Γίνεται δὲ παρὰ τὸ αὐτὸ τῷ διχοτομεῖν. ἐν ἀμφοτέροις γὰρ συμβαίνει μὴ ἀφικνεῖσθαι πρὸς τὸ πέρας, διαιρουμένου πως τοῦ μεγέθους. ἀλλὰ πρόσκειται ἐν τούτῳ, ὅτι οὐδὲ τὸ τάχιστον τετραγῳδημένον ἐν τῷ διώκειν τὸ βραδύτερον. ὥστ᾽ ἀνάγκη καὶ τὴν λύσιν εἶναι τὴν αὐτήν. Ob idem autem evenit atque in diviſione in dimidia. Nam in utraque accidit, ut ad finem non perveniatur, quoquo modo magnitudine diviſa. Sed in hac additur ne illud quidem, quod celerrimum eſt, (quod tragicè prolatum eſt) id quod tardiſſimum eſt attingere perſequendo. Quamobrem ſolutio eadem ſit neceſſe eſt. Suppoſe a Tortoiſe to be twenty Paces from Achilles, and limit the ſwiftneſs of that Hero in proportion as 1 to 20. Whilſt he advances 20 Paces, the Tortoiſe advances one: She will then be before him ſtill. Whilſt he proceeds to the 21ſt Pace, ſhe will gain the 20th part of the 22d, and while he gains this 20th. part, ſhe will go through the 20th part of the 21ſt part, and ſo on. Ariſtotle refers us to what he ſays in anſwer to the 2d Objection: And we may refer him to our Reply. See alſo what ſhall be ſaid in the following Remark, concerning the difficulties of explaining wherein conſiſts the ſwiftneſs of Motion.

I proceed to the 4th Objection, which ſhews the contradictions of Motion. Suppoſe a Table of 4 Ells, and take alſo two Bodies of the ſame meaſure, one of (d) Wood, and the other of Stone. Let the Table be immoveably fixed, and bear the piece of Wood according to the length of two Ells Weſtward, and ſuppoſe the piece of Stone placed to the Eaſt, and only to touch the edge of the Table. Suppoſe it to move on the Table Eaſtward, and that in half an Hour it goes the length of two Ells; it will become contiguous to the piece of Wood. Suppoſe that they touch one another only by their edges, and in ſuch a manner, that the motion of the one towards the Weſt doth not hinder the motion of the other to the Eaſt. At the moment of their contiguity, let the piece of Wood begin to tend towards the Eaſt, whilſt the other continues to tend towards the Weſt; let them move a pace equally ſwift. In half an Hour the piece of Stone will finiſh its courſe over all the Table, and ſo it will move through a ſpace of four Ells, the whole length of the Table, in an Hour. But the piece of Wood will run through the ſame ſpace of four Ells in half an Hour, by reaſon that it touched the whole extent of the piece of Stone by the edges. And therefore it is true that two Bodies moving with an equal ſwiftneſs go thro' the ſame ſpace, one in half an Hour, and the other in an Hour: And therefore an Hour and half an Hour are equal Times; which is contradictory. Ariſtotle ſaith that this is a Sophiſm, ſome of thoſe Bodies is conſidered in reference to a ſpace which continues at reſt, meaning the Table, and the other with reſpect to a ſpace in motion, meaning the piece of Stone. I own he is in the right to obſerve that difference, but this doth not remove the difficulty; for a thing, which ſeems incomprehenſible, remains ſtill to be explain'd, that is, that a piece of Wood ſhould at the ſame time move 4 Ells on its South ſide, and but two on its inferior ſurface. But I ſhall illuſtrate this with a clearer Inſtance. Suppoſe two Books in Folio of equal length, as two Feet each. Place them on a Table one before the other; move them at the ſame time one above the other, one towards the Eaſt, and the other towards the Weſt, till the Eaſtern edge of the one, and the Weſtern edge of the other touch one another: And you will find that the edges by which they did touch one another, are now 4 Foot diſtant from each other; and yet each of the Books hath moved but the ſpace of two Feet. You may ſtrengthen the Objection by ſuppoſing whatſoever Body you pleaſe in motion, in the midſt of ſeveral others, which are moving ſeveral ways, and in various degrees of ſwiftneſs; you will find that the ſame Body will in the ſame time run through ſeveral ſorts of ſpace, double, triple, &c. to one another: Conſider well of it, and you will find that this is only explicable by Arithmetical Calculations, which are only the Idea's of our Mind; but that the thing doth not ſeem practicable in the Bodies themſelves: (e) For we ought to remember theſe three eſſential Properties of Motion. 1. It is impoſſible for a Body in motion to touch the ſame part of a Space twice ſucceſſively. 2. It never can touch two of them at once. 3. It never can touch the third before the ſecond, nor the fourth before the third, &c. He that can Phyſically reconcile theſe three Particulars with the diſtance of four Feet betwixt two (f) Bodies, which have run through no more than the ſpace of two Feet, muſt be no ignorant Perſon. Obſerve that theſe three Properties are as neceſſarily requiſite to a Body which croſſes Spaces, whoſe motion is contrary to its own, as to one which paſſes through Spaces where it meets with no reſiſtance.

(a) The ſame difficulties may be raiſed from the ſmall Wheels of a Coach, making as much way as the great ones, with the ſame number of rotations about their Center. The ſame may be ſaid of a very ſmall Wheel and a very large one fixed to one and the ſame Axis.

(f) For inſtance, the two Folio Books above mention'd.

(g) See the Art of Thinking, part. 4. pag. 1. ch. 1 m. 392. and the Remark D of the following Article towards the End.

(F) The ſame I ſhall mention.] I am apt to think that thoſe who would revive Zeno's Opinion, ought to argue thus.

OBJECTIONS againſt the exiſtence of Extenſion.

I. There is no Extenſion, therefore there is no Motion. The Conſequence is good, for what hath no Extenſion takes up no room, and what takes up no room cannot poſſibly paſs from one place to another, nor conſequently move. This is inconteſtable: The difficulty is then to prove that there is no Extenſion. Zeno might have argued thus. Extenſion cannot be compoſed of Mathematical Points, Atoms, or Parts diviſible in infinitum; therefore its Exiſtence is impoſſible. The Conſequence ſeems certain, by reaſon it is impoſſible to conceive more than theſe three Modes of compoſition in Extenſion; Wherefore the Antecedent alone remains to be proved. A few Words ſhall ſuffice as to Mathematical Points; for the moſt inapprehenſive Capacities may apprehend with the utmoſt certainty, if they conſider it with a little attention, that (g) ſeveral nullities of Extenſion joined together will never make an Extenſion. Conſult the firſt Body of Scholaſtical Philoſophy that comes to hand, and you will find the moſt convincing Reaſons in the World, ſupported by many Geomemuch ſtronger than all the Reaſons which the Carteſians can alledge. I mean ſome Carteſians, who publickly aſſert, even in Countries where the Inquiſition prevails,

---

(b) … & Achillea primus oratione argumentatus eſt; quamvis Phavorinus Parmenidem & alios complures profert. Diogen. Laert. lib. 9. n. 29. (c) Ariſtotle, ubi ſupra. (d) Another matter would be as proper, Wood and Stone being here uſed only for an Inſtance.

Curve, as there are parts in the Circumference, Geometrical Demonſtrations againſt the exiſtence of theſe (a) Points. Wherefore to ſay no more on that head, let us believe it impoſſible, or at leaſt inconceivable that Matter ſhould be compoſed of 'em. Nor is it leſs impoſſible or inconceivable that it ſhould be compoſed of the Epicurean Atoms, that is, of extended and indiviſible Corpuſcles; for every Extenſion, how ſmall ſoever, hath a right and left, an upper and lower ſide: Wherefore it is a conjunction of diſtinct Bodies; and I may deny of the right ſide what I affirm of the left, for theſe two ſides are not in the ſame place. A Body cannot be in two places at once; and conſequently every extenſion which fills ſeveral parts of Space contains ſeveral Bodies. I know beſides, and the Atomiſts do not deny it, that by reaſon two Atoms are two Beings, they are ſeparable from one another: Whence I conclude with the utmoſt certainty, that ſince the right ſide of an Atom is not the ſame Being with the left, it is ſeparable from the left; And therefore the Indiviſibility of an Atom is meerly Chimerical. Whence it follows that if there be an Extenſion, its parts are diviſible in infinitum. But on the other ſide if they cannot be diviſible to in infinitum, we ought to conclude the exiſtence of Extenſion impoſſible, or at leaſt incomprehenſible.

The diviſibility to in infinitum is an Hypotheſis embraced by Ariſtotle, and almoſt all the Profeſſors of Philoſophy, in all Univerſities for ſeveral Ages. Not that they comprehend it, or can anſwer the Objections it is liable to; but becauſe having clearly apprehended the impoſſibility of either Mathematical or Phyſical Points, they found no other ſide but this to take. Beſides, this Hypotheſis affords great Conveniencies: For when their Diſtinctions are exhauſted, without being able to render this Doctrine comprehenſible, they ſhelter themſelves in the nature of the Subject, and alledge, that our Underſtandings being limited, none ought to be ſurprized that they cannot reſolve what relates to Infinity, and that it is eſſential to ſuch a Continuity to be liable to ſuch Difficulties as are inſurmountable by Humane Nature. Obſerve that thoſe who eſpouſe the Hypotheſis of Atoms, don't do it, becauſe they comprehend that an extended Body may be ſimple, but by reaſon that they believe the two other Hypotheſes impoſſible. We may ſay the ſame thing of thoſe who admit of Mathematical Points. In general, all thoſe who argue on Extenſion, determine the choice of an Hypotheſis no otherwiſe than by virtue of the following Principle: If there are but three ways of explaining a Subject, the truth of the third neceſſarily reſults from the falſity of the two others. Whence, they don't believe themſelves miſtaken in the choice of the third, when they are clearly convinced that the two others are impoſſible; and accordingly the impenetrable difficulties of the third don't ſhock them in the leaſt: They comfort themſelves with the Conſideration that they may be retorted, or with a perſuaſion that after all this Hypotheſis is true, becauſe the others are not ſo. The ſubtil Arriaga having propoſed an inſoluble Objection, declares that he will not therefore change his Opinion; for, ſaith he, other Sects cannot reſolve it better. (b) Video hac adhuc urgeri argumento ſupra facto, quod a nemine vidi ſolutum, ſed nec illud ſolvere præſumo: cum autem commune ſit omnibus ſententiis de continui compoſitione, non eſt cur propter illud aliquis à propria ſententia diſcedat———— (c) Quòd autem alia in ſententia Ariſtotelis difficilia valde ſint, & quæ a nobis ſolvi non poſſint, non cogit nos hanc ſententiam deſerere: materiæ enim difficultas eſt talis, ut ubique aliqua nobis inexplicabilia occurrant. Malo autem aperte fateri me ignorare ſolutionem aliquorum argumentorum, quam eam dare quæ forte a nemine intelligatur.

A Zenoniſt might tell thoſe who chuſe one of theſe three Hypotheſes; you don't argue juſtly, you make uſe of this disjunctive Syllogiſm.

Matter is compoſed either of Mathematical Points, or Phyſical Points, or of Parts diviſible to in ifinitum.

But it is not compoſed of———— (d) nor of———

Therefore it is compoſed of————

The fault of your Argumentation is not in the Form, but in the Subject: You ought to lay aſide your disjunctive Syllogiſm, and make uſe of this Hypothetical one.

If Extenſion exiſted, it would be compoſed of Mathematical Points, or Phyſical Points, or of parts diviſible in infinitum:

But it is not compoſed of Mathematical Points, or Phyſical Points, or of Parts diviſible in infinitum.

Therefore it doth not exiſt.

There is no fault in this Syllogiſm; the Sophiſm a non ſufficienti enumeratione partium is not in the Major; the Conſequence is therefore neceſſary, provided the Minor be true. To be clearly ſatisfied of the truth of which, we need only conſider the Arguments which thoſe three Sects alledge one againſt another, and compare them with their reſpective Anſwers. When each of thoſe three Sects attacks, it triumphs; but when on the defenſive, it is utterly ſilenced and confounded in its turn. To be convinced of their weakneſs, it is enough to remember that the ſtrongeſt of them, that which beſt diſputes the ground, is the Hypotheſis of the diviſibility to in infinitum. The School-men have armed it from head to foot with all the Diſtinctions which their great leiſure would allow them to invent. But all this only ſerves to afford their Scholars Matter for talk upon a publick Diſputation, that their Relations may not ſuffer the Diſgrace of ſeeing them mute. And accordingly a Father or a Brother go away better ſatisfy'd, when the Scholar diſtinguiſhes betwixt a Categorematical Infinite, and a Syncategorematical one, betwixt the Parts communicantes, & non communicantes, proportional and aliquot, than if he ſhould anſwer nothing. It was therefore neceſſary for the Profeſſors to invent a ſort of Jargon; but all the pains which they have taken, will never be able to obſcure this Notion which is as clear and evident as the Sun: An infinite number of Parts of Extenſion, each of which is extended, and diſtinct from all others, as well with reſpect to its Entity, as the room it takes up, cannot be contained in a Space One hundred Millions of times leſs than the Hundred Thouſandth part of a Barly Corn.

DIVISIBILITY in infinitum would hinder all manner of Contiguity.

Another Difficulty is, That an extended Subſtance muſt neceſſarily admit of an immediate Contact of its Parts. In the Hypotheſis of a Vacuity, ſeveral Bodies would be ſeparated from all others, but ſeveral others muſt immediately touch. Ariſtotle, who denyed this Hypotheſis, is obliged to own that there is no part of Extenſion which doth not externally and immediately touch ſome others; which is incompatible with the diviſibility to Infinity; for if there be no Body but what contains an Infinity of Parts, it is evident, that each particular part of Extenſion is ſeparated from all others by an Infinity of Parts, and that the immediate Contact of two parts is impoſſible. But when a thing cannot have whatever is abſolutely neceſſary to its Exiſtence, it is certain that its Exiſtence is impoſſible: Wherefore the Exiſtence of Extenſion neceſſarily requiring the immediate contact of its Parts, and that immediate contact being impoſſible in an extenſion diviſible to in infinitum, it is evident that the Exiſtence of ſuch an Extenſion is impoſſible, and that it barely exiſts mentally. What the Mathematicians acknowledge with reſpect to Lines and Superficies, with which they demonſtrate ſo many excellent things, muſt be owned to be true of Bodies. They (*) honeſtly own that length and breadth without depth, are things which cannot poſſibly exiſt any where but in our Imagination. As much may be ſaid of the three Dimenſions. They cannot find any room any where beſides in our Minds; nor can they exiſt any other way than Notionally. Our Mind is a certain ſort of Ground, where a hundred thouſand Objects of different Colours, Forms, and Situation unite: For from an Eminence we may ſee at once a vaſt Plain covered with Houſes, Trees, and Flocks, &c. Whilſt it is ſo far from Truth, that all theſe things can poſſibly be ranged

(a) See among others a Book of Libertus Fromondus Profeſſor at Louvain, intitled Labyrinthus ſive de compoſitione continui. 'Tis a much ſtronger Book than the Anſwer Publiſh'd in 1636. by James Chevreuil (in Latin Capreolus) Profeſſor of Philoſophy at Paris to two queſtions of Cardinal de Richelieu de demonſtratione magnitudinis in puncto &c.

(b) Arriaga diſput. 16. phyſ. ſect. 11. n. 241. p. m. 433.

(c) Id. ib. ſect. 12. n. 256. pag. 435.

(d) For Brevity ſake, I don't expreſs the rejection or the admiſſion; for according to the Laws of Logick, one may proceed here from the rejection of the two parts to the admiſſion of the third.

(*) Compare with this what is ſaid towards the end of the Remark I in the following Article.

prevails, that it is impossible to know that there are any Bodies, any otherwise than by Faith: Our Senses deceive us, say they, with respect to the Qualities ranged in this Plain, that there are not two which can find room there; each won't require an infinite Space, since it contains an Infinity of extended Bodies. There should be infinite Intervals left round each one, by reason that there is an Infinity of Bodies betwixt each part, and every (i) other part. Let no Body say that God can do every thing; for if the most strict Divines venture to say, that in a right Line of 12 Inches, he cannot render the 1. and 3. Inches immediately contiguous, I may very well say that I cannot make two parts of Extension immediately touch one another, when an Infinity of other parts separate them from one another. Let us therefore say that the Contact of the parts of Matter is only Notional; and that the extremities of several Bodies no where unite but in our Mind.

(i) The [illegible] samples.

I shall now make a quite contrary Objection. The Penetration of Dimensions is impossible, and yet it would be inevitable, if Extension should exist; therefore the existence of Extension is impossible. Put a Canon Bullet upon a Table, a Bullet I say, covered over with some liquid Colour, make it roul on the Table, and you will find it trace out a Line by its motion: You will then have two strong Proofs of the immediate Contact of the Bullet and Table. The weight of the Bullet will shew you that it immediately touches the Table; for if it did not touch it in this manner, it would remain suspended in the Air, and your Eyes will besides convince you of this Contact by the track which the Bullet hath left. But I maintain that this Contact is a Penetration of Dimensions properly so called. That part of the Bullet which touches the Table is a determinate Body, and really distinct from other parts of the Bullet which do not touch the Table. I affirm the same thing of that part of the Table touched by the Bullet. These two parts touched are each of them Infinitely divisible in length, breadth and profundity; they must therefore mutually touch one another according to their profundity, and consequently they penetrate one another. This is every day objected to the Peripateticks in their publick Disputes: And they defend themselves by a Jargon of distinctions, proper for no other use than preventing the Anger of a Scholar's Relations, if he should be silenced; and as for the farther use of these distinctions they have never served to any other purpose than to make appear it that the Objection is insoluble. Here is therefore a very singular thing: If Extension existed, it would not be possible for its parts to touch one another, and it would be impossible that they should not penetrate one another. Are not these most evident Contradictions comhended in the existence of Extension?

DIVISIBILITY in infinitum would confirm the penetration of Dimensions.

Add to this, that all the ways of suspension which destroy the reality of corporeal Qualities, overthrows the reality of extension. Since the same Bodies are sweet to some Men, and bitter to others, it may reasonably be inferred that they are neither sweet nor bitter in their own Nature, and absolutely speaking. The modern Philosophers, tho' they are no Scepticks, have so well apprehended the foundation of the Epoche with Relation to Sounds, Odours, Heat and Cold, Hardness and Softness, Ponderosity and Lightness Savours and Colours, &c. that they teach that all these Qualities are perceptions of our Mind, and do not exist in the Objects of our Senses. Why should we not say the same of Extension? If a Being, void of Colour, yet appears to us under a Colour determined as to its species, figure, and situation, why cannot a Being without any Extension be visible to us under an Appearance of determinate Extension, formed, and situate in a certain manner? Observe also, that the same Body appears to us little or great, round or square, according to the place from whence we see it: And certainly, a Body which seems to us very little, appears very great to a Fly. It is not therefore by their proper, real, or absolute Extension that Objects present themselves to our Mind: Whence we may conclude, that in themselves they are not extended. Would you at this day Argue thus: Seeing certain Bodies appear sweet to one Man, sower to another, and bitter to another, &c. I dare aver that in general they are savoury, tho' I don't know the tast proper to them, absolutely and in themselves? All the modern Philosophers would explode you. Why then would you venture to say, tho' certain Bodies appear great to this Animal, middle-sized to that, and very little to a third, I dare aver that in general they are extensive, tho' I don't know their absolute extension? Let us see the acknowledgment of a celebrated Dogmatist: "(b) It is clearly discernible by the Senses, that such a Body is larger than another; but we cannot certainly know what is the true and natural size of each Body; to comprehend which we need only consider, that if all Mankind had never seen those External Objects any otherwise than thro' magnifying Glasses, it is certain that they would not have formed any other Idea of Bodies and all the measures of Body, than according to the size in which they had appeared to them through those Glasses. But our Eyes themselves are Spectacles, and we don't know exactly whether they diminish or increase the Objects which we see, and whether those Artificial Glasses, which we believe diminish or increase them, don't on the contrary establish their true magnitude; wherefore we do not certainly know the absolute and natural magnitude of each Body. Neither do we know whether they appear of the same size in our Eyes as in those of other Men. For tho' two persons measure them, and agree that a certain Body for instance is but five Feet; yet what the one conceives to be a Foot, differs perhaps from what the other takes to be so; for the one conceives what his Eyes report to him, as doth the other also; but perhaps the Eyes of the one do not report the same thing which the Eyes of the other represent, because the Spectacles are differently wrought." Father Mallebranche (c) and Father Lami (d), a Benedictine Monk, will give you an excellent Account of all these particulars, which is capable of carrying my Objection to a very great Degree of strength.

THE means of suspension make use of against the existence of Extension.

(b) [illegible] Art de penser, 4. part, ch. 1. pag. m. 397. [illegible] See also Rohault Traité de Physique 1. part. chap. 2[illegible] n. 9. pag. m. 201. where he mentions the various appearances of the same Colours: he knew it by Experience.

(c) Mallebranche, Recherche de la verité B. 1. chap. 6. & seq.

(d) Lami, Connoissance de soimême tom. 2. p. 112. & seq.

My last Difficulty shall be grounded on the Geometrical Demonstrations so subtilly displayed, to prove that Matter is divisible in infinitum. I maintain they are proper for no other use than to make it appear that Extension doth not exist any where but in our Minds. In the 1. place I observe that some of these Demonstrations are made use of against those who affirm that Matter is composed of Mathematical Points. It is objected to them, that the Sides of a Square would be equal to the Diagonal, and that amongst concentrical Circles, the least would be equal to the largest. This Consequence is proved by making it appear that the right Lines which may be drawn from one of the sides of a Square to another will fill the Diagonal, and that all the right Lines which may be drawn from the Circumference of the largest Circle, will find room in the smallest Circumference. These Objections are not stronger against Bodies being composed of Points, than against their being divisible in infinitum; for if the parts of a certain Extension are not more numerous in the Diagonal Line, than in the sides, nor in the Circumference of the largest Circle, than in that of the smallest concentrical Circle, it is clear that the sides of the square equal the Diagonal, and that the smallest concentrical Circle equals the greatest. But all the right Lines which can be drawn from one of the sides of a Square to another, and from the Circumference of the largest Circle to the Center, are equal to each other: they ought then to be considered as aliquot Parts; that is as parts of a certain Magnitude and the same denomination. But it is certain that two Extensions, whereof the aliquot parts and of the same Denomination, as Inch, Foot, Pace, are in equal Number, do not exceed one another: It is then certain that the sides of the Square would be equal to the Diagonal Line, if the Diagonal Line cannot be intersected by more right Lines than the sides. The same may be said of two concentrical Circles. In the 2. place I affirm that it being very true that if Circles did exist, as many right Lines might be drawn from the Circumference, to the ſities of Matter, wherefore we ought to diſtruſt their Evidence concerning the three Dimenſions. It is not neceſſary, add they, that any Bodies ſhould exiſt; for God can it follows that the exiſtence of a Circle is impoſſible. I aſſure my ſelf that it will be allowed me that every Being which cannot exiſt, without containing properties which cannot exiſt, is impoſſible: But a round Extenſion cannot exiſt, without having a Center, in which as many right Lines as there are parts in the Circumference meet; and it is certain that ſuch a Center cannot exiſt: It muſt then be owned that the Exiſtence of this round Extenſion is impoſſible. But that ſuch a Center cannot exiſt, I ſhall clearly prove. Let us ſuppoſe a round Extenſion whoſe Circumference is 4 Feet; it then contains 48 Inches, each of which contains 12 Lines; the Circumference will then contain 576 Lines; which is the Number of right Lines that may be drawn from the Circumference to the Center. Let us trace a Circle very near the Center; it may be ſo ſmall that it will not contain above 50 Lines; it cannot then give paſſage to 576 right Lines; wherefore it will be impoſſible for theſe 576 right Lines begun to be drawn from the Circumference of this round Extenſion to reach the Center: And yet if this Extention exiſts, theſe 576 Lines muſt of neceſſity reach the Center. What remains then to be ſaid, but only that this Extenſion cannot exiſt, and that accordingly all the properties of Circles and Squares, &c. are founded on Lines without breadth, which cannot exiſt otherwiſe than ideally? Obſerve that our Reaſon and our Eyes are equally deceived in this caſe. Our Reaſon clearly conceives; 1. That the concentrical Circle neareſt the Center is leſs than the Circle which encompaſſes it: 2. That the Diagonal of a Square is larger than the ſide. Our Eyes ſee this without, and more certainly with Compaſſes; and yet the Mathematicians teach us, that as many right Lines may be drawn from the Circumference to the Center as there are Points in the Circumference, and that from one ſide of a Square to the other as many right Lines may be drawn as there are Points in the ſide. And beſides, our Eyes ſhew us that there is not in the Circumference of the ſmall concentrical Circle any one Point, which is not a Point of a right Line, drawn from the Circumference of the great Circle, and that the Diagonal of the Square contains no one Point that is not a part of the right Line drawn from one of the ſides of the Square to another. Whence then can it proceed that this Diagonal is greater than the ſides?

GEOMETRICAL demonstrations alledged against the existence of Extension.

This is what relates to the firſt Proof, which I ſuppoſe Zeno might have made uſe of to refute the exiſtence of Motion. It is founded on the impoſſibility of the exiſtence of Extenſion. We ſhall hereafter (a) ſee another Reaſon of the ſame impoſſibility. I am willing to believe that what he might have ſaid in the laſt place, by making uſe of Geometrical Demonſtrations, is eaſy to be refuted by the ſame means; but I am ſtrongly convinced that the Arguments taken from the (b) Mathematicks to prove the diviſibility in infinitum, prove too much: For either they prove nothing, or they prove an infinity of aliquot parts.

II. Zeno's Second Objection might have been this. (c) Granting that there is an Extenſion extraneous to our Mind, I ſhall not yet ſtick to ſay, that it is immovable. Motion is not eſſential to it, nor is it contained in its Idea, and ſeveral Bodies are ſometimes in a ſtate of reſt. It is then an Accident. But is it diſtinct from Matter? If it be diſtinct, of what muſt it be produced? Doubtleſs of nothing; and when it ceaſes to be, it will be reduced to nothing. But don't you know that nothing (d) is made out of nothing, and that nothing returns to nothing? Beſides, muſt not Motion neceſſarily be diffuſed on, and through the Body that is moved? It will be then as much extended as it, and of the ſame figure; there will therefore be two equal Extenſions in the ſame ſpace, and conſequently a Penetration of Dimenſions. But when three or four cauſes move one Body, muſt not each of them produce its motion? muſt not theſe 3 or 4 Motions penetrate together, both with the Body, and amongſt themſelves? How then can each produce its effect? A Veſſel moved by the Winds, Tide, and Rowers, deſcribes a Line which participates more or leſs of theſe three Actions, according as one of 'em is ſtronger than the others. Will you venture to affirm that inſenſible Entities penetrated amongſt themſelves, and with the whole Veſſel, will ſo far reſpect one another as not to confound themſelves? If you ſay that Motion is a Mode which is not diſtinct from Matter, you muſt then allow that whatever produceſs it, creates Matter; for without producing of Matter, it is impoſſible to produce a Being which is the ſame thing with Matter. But would it not be abſurd to aſſert, that the Wind which moves the Veſſel, produces a Veſſel? It doth not appear that theſe Objections can be any otherwiſe anſwered than by ſuppoſing with the Carteſians, that God is the ſole and immediate cauſe of Motion.

III. Another Objection is this. It is impoſſible to affirm what Motion is; for if you ſay that (e) it is to paſs from one place to another, you explain an obſcurity by a greater, obſcurum per obſcurius. And I immediately aſk what you underſtand by the word place? Do you underſtand a ſpace diſtinct from Bodies? If ſo, you will involve your ſelf in an Abyſs (†) which you will never be able to get out. Do you underſtand by it the ſituation of a Body, among ſome others which ſurround it? But in this caſe you will define Motion in ſuch a manner, that it will a Thouſand and a Thouſand times ſuit with Bodies that are at reſt. It is certain that hithertho no true Definition of Motion hath appeared. That of Ariſtotle is abſurd, and that of Deſcartes is wretched. Mr. Rohault after much Pains in endeavouring to find one which ſhould rectify that of Deſcartes, produceth a deſcription (f) which may agree with Bodies, of which we conceive very diſtinctly, that they don't move at all; wherefore Mr. Regis thought himſelf obliged to (g) reject it: But that which he hath given (h) is not capable of diſtinguiſhing Motion from Reſt. God, the only mover according to the Carteſians, muſt do with reſpect to a Houſe the ſame thing as with reſpect to the Air, which flies from it in a high wind: He muſt create the Air every moment with new local Relations, with reſpect to that Houſe: And he muſt alſo every moment create that Houſe with new local Relations with reſpect to that Air. And certainly according to theſe Gentlemens Principles, no Body is in reſt, if an Inch of Matter is in Motion. All then that they can ſay centers in explaining apparent Motion, that is, explaining thoſe circumſtances which make us judge that one Body moves, and another doth not. But all this is uſeleſs labour; every one is capable of judging of Appearances. The Queſtion is about explaining the very Nature of things which are out of our minds; and ſince in that reſpect Motion is inexplicable, one had as good ſay that it doth not exiſt out of our Minds.

IV. I ſhall now offer an Objection very much ſtronger than the precident. If Motion can never begin, it doth not exiſt; but it is impoſſible for it ever to begin; therefore &c. I prove the Minor thus. It is impoſſible for a Body to be in two places at once: But it could never begin to move without being in an infinity of places at once; for tho' it moved never ſo ſlowly, it wou'd touch a part diviſible in infinitum, and which conſequently correſponds with infinite parts of ſpace; therefore, &c. Beſides, it is certain that an infinite Number of Parts doth not contain any which is firſt; and yet a Body in motion can never touch the Second before the firſt: For Motion is a Being eſſentially ſucceſſive, of which two Parts cannot exiſt together; wherefore Motion can never begin, if Extenſion is diviſible in infinitum, as doubtleſs it is if it exiſts. The ſame Reaſon demonſtrates that a Body in motion, rolling in a ſloping Table, could never fall off the ſaid Table; for before it falls, it muſt of neceſſity touch the laſt part of the Table. And how will it touch that, ſince all thoſe parts which you will take for the laſt, contain an Infinity of parts, and an infinite Number hath no part which can be laſt? This Objection obliged ſome Scholaſtick Philoſophers to ſup-

poſe

(a) In the Remark F Δ Δ.

(b) There are very fine ones in the Art of thinking 4 part ch. 1. p. 392. & ſeq. See alſo Rohault's Phyſicks 1. part. c. 9.

(c) Take this for a dato non conceſſo.

(d) Zeno might have ſaid it boldly, for all the Ancient Philoſophers admitted this maxim of Lucretius, Res —— non poſſe creari De nihilo, neque item genitas ad nil revocari. Lucret. lib. 1. v. 265.

(e) Migratio de loco in locum.

(†) See the Remark F Δ Δ.

(f) Motion ſays he, Phyſ. 1. part. ch. 10. n. 3. p. m. 62. conſiſts in the ſucceſſive application of all the External parts of a Body to the ſeveral parts of the Bodies that are immediately near it.

(g) See his Phyſicks, Book firſt, 1. part. ch. 1. p. 42. of the 1. tom. at Lyons, 1691. in 12.

(h) Motion ſays he, ibid. pag. 43. in the ſucceſſive application of all the external parts of a Body to ſeveral parts of the Bodies, which immediately touch it.

can without that communicate to our Mind whatever it feels and whatever it knows, and conſequently the Proofs of the exiſtence of Matter which Reaſon affords us, are not evident enough to form a good (F Δ) Demonſtration poſe that Nature hath intermixed Mathematical Points with the parts diviſible in infinitum, to the end that they may ſerve to connect them, and compoſe the extremities of Bodies. They thought by that means to anſwer alſo the Objection of the penetrative Contact of two Surfaces but this ſubterfuge; is ſo abſurd that it doth not deſerve to be refuted.

V. I ſhall ſcarce inſiſt on the impoſſibility of Circular Motion, tho' that would ſupply me with a forcible Objection. I ſay only in one Word, that if there were a Circular Motion, there would be a whole Diameter (a) at reſt, whilſt all the remainder of the Globe moves very ſwiftly. But conceive this if you can in a Continuity. The Chevalier de Meré remembers this Objection in his Letter (b) to Mr. Paſcal.

(a) To wit the Axis.

(b) I ſhall ſpeak of it in the Remark D of the following Article.

VI. To conclude, I ſay that if Motion exiſted, it would be equal in all Bodies; there would be no Achilles's nor Tortoiſes; the Hound would never reach the Hare. Zeno Objected this; but it ſeems that he went only up on the diviſibility of a Matter in infinitum; and perhaps, ſome will ſay, he would have given over that inſtance, if he had been to deal with Adverſaries who would have admitted either Mathematical Points or Atomes. I anſwer, that this Inſtance equally ſtrikes at all the three Syſtems: For ſuppoſe a Road compoſed of indiviſible Particles; place the Tortoiſe one Hundred Points before Achilles, and if ſhe goes on, he will never reach her: Achilles will go but one Point every Moment, ſince if he went two he would be in two places at the ſame time. The Tortoiſe will Advance one point each Moment: Which is the leaſt ſhe can do, nothing being leſs than a Point. (c) The formal Reaſon of the ſwiftneſs of Motion is inexplicable: The moſt happy thought on this head is, that no Motion is continued, and that all thoſe Bodies which ſeem to us to move, ſtop by intervals. That which moves ten times faſter than another, reſts ten times to the others Hundred. But however well contrived this ſubterfuge appears, it is really worthleſs; it is refuted by ſeveral ſolid Reaſons which you may ſee in all the Bodies of (d) Philoſophy. I Content my ſelf with that which is drawn from the motion of a Wheel. You may make a Wheel of ſo large a Diameter that the part of the Spokes the fartheſt diſtant from the Center will move one Hundred times ſwifter than the part fixed in the Stock. And yet the Spokes remain always ſtrait: An Evident Proof that the lower part doth not reſt, whilſt the upper moves. The diviſibility in infinitum of the Particles of Time, rejected (e) above as viſibly falſe and contradictory, is of no force againſt this 6th Argument. You will find ſome other very ſubtil Arguments in (f) Sextus Empiricus.

(c) Becauſe 'tis plain that the Atomes of Epicurus are diviſible in infinitum, ſince they have the 3 dimenſions, and that no Body can deny it as to the ſpace they fill up, I have not applyed this inſtance to them.

WHAT uſe ought to be made of the foregoing diſpute.

Thus, or in a manner very near like it, we may ſuppoſe our Zeno of Elea to have oppoſed Motion. I will not aver that his Reaſons perſuaded him that nothing moved; he might be of another Opinion, tho' he believed that none could refute them, nor elude their force. If I ſhould judge of him by my ſelf, I ſhould affirm that he as well as others believed the motion of Extenſion; for tho' I find my ſelf very incapable of ſolving all the difficulties which we have juſt now ſeen, and tho' the Philoſophical Anſwers which may be made to them do not ſeem to me very ſolid, yet that doth not hinder me from following the Common Opinion. Nay, I am perſuaded that the expoſition of theſe Arguments may be of great uſe with reſpect to Religion: and I ſay here with reſpect to the difficulties of Motion, what Mr. Nicolle ſaid of thoſe of the diviſibility in infinitum. (g) The Advantage which may be drawn from theſe ſpeculations is not merely to acquire the ſort of knowledge, which in it ſelf is very barren; but to learn to know the bounds of our underſtanding, and to force it againſt its Inclination to own that ſome things exiſt, tho' it is not capable of comprehending them: for which Reaſon it is neceſſary to fatigue the Intellect with theſe ſubtilties, in order to quaſh its preſumption, and rid it of the Aſſurance of ever oppoſing its faint light to the Truths which the Church propoſes, under pretext that it cannot comprehend them: For, ſince all the force of Humane Underſtanding is not Proof againſt the ſmalleſt Atome of Matter, and is obliged to own that it clearly ſees that it is infinitely diviſible, without being able to comprehend how it can be: Is it not to Sin viſibly againſt Reaſon, to refuſe to believe the ſtupendious effects of God's Omnipotence, which is of it ſelf incomprehenſible, becauſe our Minds cannot comprehend them?

(F Δ) The Proofs of the exiſtence of matter which Reaſon affords us are not evident enough to form a good Demonſtration.] There are two Philoſophical Axioms which teach us, One (h) that Nature does nothing in vain; the other, (i) That things are done in vain by more means which might have been as commodiouſly done by fewer. By theſe two Axioms the Carteſians, whom I am ſpeaking of, may maintain that no ſuch thing as Matter exiſts; for whether it doth or doth not exiſt, God could equally communicate to us all the Thoughts which we have. To ſay that our Senſes aſſure us with the utmoſt Evidence that Matter exiſts, is not to prove it. They deceive us with reſpect to all the Corporeal qualities, not excepting (k) the magnitude, figure and motion of Bodies; and when we believe them, we are perſuaded that out of our Mind there exiſts a vaſt Number of Colours, Savours, and other Beings which we call hardneſs, fluidity, cold, heat, &c. Yet it is not true that any thing of that Nature exiſts out of our Mind. Why then ſhould we rely on our Senſes with reſpect to extenſion? It may very well be reduced to appearance in like manner with Colours. Father Mallebranche having diſplayed all theſe Reaſons to doubt of the exiſtence of Bodies in the World, concludes thus: (l) "It is "then abſolutely neceſſary, in order to be poſi"tively aſſured of the extraneous exiſtence of Bo"dies to know God, who hath beſtowed on us this "ſentiment, and to know that being infinitely "perfect he cannot deceive us. For if the Intel"ligence which gives us the Ideas of all things, "would, if I may ſo ſay, divert it ſelf by repre"ſenting Bodies to us as actually exiſting, tho' "there were none; it is evident that it would be "no very difficult thing." He adds, that Mr. Deſcartes could find no other ſteady foundation, than the Reaſon grounded upon this, that God would deceive us, if there were no Bodies; but he owns that this Reaſon can never paſs for Demonſtrative. To be fully convinced of the exiſtence of Bodies, ſaith he (m), it muſt be demonſtrated to us not only that there is a God, and that God is no deceiver, but alſo that God hath aſſured us that he hath really Created many; which I don't find proved in Mr. Deſcartes's Works. God ſpeaks to the mind, and obliges us to believe only two ways, by Evidence and by Faith. I grant that Faith obliges us to believe that Bodies exiſts; but as for Evidence, it is certain that it is not full, and that we are not invincibly inclined to believe the exiſtence of any thing elſe beſides God and our own Soul. Obſerve that when he affirms, that God hath not invincibly obliged us by Evidence to determine that Bodies exiſts, his deſign is to teach us that the Error in which we ſhould be in this reſpect ought not to be charged on God. This is to reject Mr. Deſcartes's Proof, and to ſay that God would be no Deceiver even tho' not one Body ſhould exiſt in the Nature of things.

Michael Angelo Fardella, a Sicilian, publiſhed a Logick at Venice in 1696, in which he aſſerts the ſame Principles with Father Mallebranche; As appears by the following extract of his Book. He particularly

(h) Natura nihil fruſtra facit.

(i) Fruſtra fit per plura quod æque commode fieri poteſt per pauciora.

(k) Mallebranche ubi infra pag. 70.

(l) Mallebranche, Eclairciſſemens ſur le 1. livre de la recherche de la verité pag. 64. Paris 1678.

(m) Id. ib. pag. 68. 69.

(d) See Arriaga ubi ſupra ſect. 11. He follows the hypotheſis of the moralæ or interruptions of motion: He anſwers the Objections very ill, and owns that of the Wheel to be inſoluble: Oviedo in his Body of Philoſophy tom. 1. p. 357. & ſeq. does mightily ſtrive to reſolve it, and believes he has found out a new ſolution of it. Gordiani nodi nova ſolutio, ſays he. (e) In the Remark E. (f) Sextus Empiricus, Pyrrhon. hypotyp. lib. 3. c. 8. (g) Nicolle, Art de penſer 4. part ch. 1. pag. m. 394. 395.

ſtration on this Point. As for the Objections which may be grounded on the diſtinction of a full Space and a Vacuum, and which might prove very puzzling to the modern Philoſophers, I think it is very likely (F △ △) that he did not forget them. Not being contemporary with Diogenes the Cynick it was not his

Lecture

(a) particularly applies himſelf to prove, that it is very poſſible that Objects ſhould not be conform to their Ideas. He ſaith, that he very clearly conceives that the Author of Nature might ſo diſpoſe our Senſes that they might repreſent to us thoſe Objects as exiſtent, which really do not exiſt. Yet when he defines (b) the ſenſations in the ſecond part pag. 98. he ſays, that they ariſe in the mind from the impreſſion which outward Bodies make on the extremity of the Nerves. When it is objected to him that if the Evidence of the Senſes is not infallible, Jeſus Chriſt impoſed on the Apoſtles when to convince them that his Body was real, he ſaid, Handle me and ſee, for a Spirit hath not Fleſh and Bones; he anſwers that the ways of Arguing, which the Scripture moſt commonly makes uſe of, are rather drawn from a Logick accommodated to the Capacity of the vulgar, than from a real Logick: Whence he concludes, that Jeſus Chriſt in order to perſuade the Apoſtles that he was no Phantom, but a real Man, made uſe of that ſort of reaſoning which was beſt adapted to vulgar Intellects, by which Men uſe to ſatiſfy themſelves of the exiſtence of things. He adds that God is not obliged to give us infallible ſatisfaction that there are Bodies which exiſt, and that if we have more than a moral certainty about it, we owe it only to Faith. Father Mallebranche's Reaſons are very ſtrong, but I may very well venture to ſay that they are much weaker than thoſe we have ſeen (c) above. I ſhould be glad to know how Mr. Arnauld would have refuted this, no Perſon being more capable than himſelf to find out a Solution. By his Examination of Father Mallebranche's Opinion he hath diſcovered that he throughly underſtood the Art of Attacking. He hath ſtruck at the foundation of his Adverſary's Doctrine; for he he hath ſhewn, that if there are no Bodies we are (d) forced to admit ſome things in God which are utterly contrary to the Divine Nature, as that of being deceitful, or ſubject to other Imperfections, which the light of Reaſon evidently makes appear to us, cannot be in God. He makes uſe of eight Arguments, which Father Mallebranche (e) calls good Proofs but very ill Demonſtrations. I believe, continues he, that Matter exiſts, but I believe it as well proved and ill demonſtrated. I believe it alſo as Demonſtrated, but preſuppoſing Faith. He propoſes an Objection which (f) he grounds on the ill and impious thoughts of the Mind, and anſwers (g) That it is certain that the Body doth not immediately actuate the Mind, and that it is God alone who immediately puts all the Good and Evil thoughts into the mind, as it is he alone that moves the Arm of an Aſſaſſinator or impious wretch, as well as the hand of the Alms-giver; and that the only thing which God doth not do is Sin, that is, the conſent of the Will. It is indeed true, that God doth not inſtill into the mind of Man vain and ill thoughts any otherwiſe than conſequentially to the Laws of the union of the Soul and Body, and of Sin which hath changed the union into dependance. But how will Mr. Arnauld demonſtrate, I mean regularly demonſtrate that he did not commit ſome Sin or other ten or twenty Thouſand Years ago; and that it is not by way of Puniſhment for that Sin that he is afflicted with theſe uneaſy thoughts, by which God chaſtizes him, and deſigns to oblige him to deſerve his recompenſe, by oppoſing what he calls the motion of concupiſcence? Will Mr. Arnauld demonſtrate, that God who could permit Sin and whatever follows from it, which, as a conſequence of the Natural Laws he hath eſtabliſhed, oblige him to put into the mind ſo many filthy thoughts and impious inclinations, could not permit that he himſelf ſhould have Sinned twenty Thouſand Years ago? Will he demonſtrate that God could not without the help of a Body give him diſturbing thoughts, in conſequence of the Laws of the Union of the Soul and Body, which he foreſaw, and which he can follow without his having formed any one Body? But let him Argue as much as he will I ſhall break without the leaſt difficulty, the chain of his Demonſtrations, by telling him, that God might have deſigns which he did not impart to him. Mr. Arnauld offers a great many things by way of Reply, and particularly (h) that there are in Father Mallebranche's anſwer ſome extravagant propoſitions, which ſtrictly taken tend to the eſtabliſhment of a very dangerous Pyrrhoniſm. His Proof of which may be ſeen in the following paſſage: (i) "I beg of him to tell me, what he means, when he grants that this Propoſition may be taken for an Evident Principle: God is no Deceiver, and it is not poſſible that he ſhould take pleaſure in deceiving us. Doth he acknowledge that the Evidence of this Principle is abſolute, or doth he think it reſtrained by this Condition, if I ſhould not have committed ſome Sin 10 or 12 Thouſand Years ago, for the Puniſhment of which God might take pleaſure in deceiving me? If he anſwers that it is abſolute, what he ſaith of the Sin I might have committed ten or twenty Thouſand Years ago is foreign to the purpoſe. And if he ſaith that this Principle is not abſolute but reſtrained by that Condition, nothing can be eaſier than to convince him, that it cannot be aſſerted without overthrowing the Divine Faith, and all Humane Sciences. For he affirms, that not only the Divine Faith, but whatever we know by ratiocination, is grounded on this Principle. That God is no Deceiver——— (k) But this Principle, that God is not a Deceiver, will be utterly uſeleſs, if he who makes uſe of it was obliged to prove that he hath not committed ſome Sin ten or twenty Thouſand Years ago. I will ſay no more: The conſequences of this ſhifting are ſo horrible and impious, that it is even dangerous to dwell too long upon——— it. (l) It is neceſſary that God ſhould impart all his deſigns to us, that we may be aſſured he doth not intend to deceive us? If ſo, none can be certain of it: And thus there will be no Divine Faith, no Humane Sciences, according to the Author himſelf, as I have juſt ſhewn.

It was requiſite for ſeveral Reaſons that I ſhould ſet down ſome paſſages of the diſpute of theſe two illuſtrious Authors, and that in general I ſhould inſert in this Remark what I find in it. For in the 1. place. I was obliged to prove that there are ſtronger Objections than thoſe of Father Mallebranche. In effect if it were true that the actual exiſtence of extenſion includes (m) Contradictions, and Impoſſibilities, as has been ſet forth (n) above, it would be abſolutely neceſſary to recur to Faith in order to be convinced of the exiſtence of Bodies, and Mr. Arnauld who hath found other refuges, would be obliged to have recourſe to that only. In the 2d. place the Article of Zeno of Elea, requires a large Account of the difficulties which this Philoſopher might have propoſed againſt the Hypotheſis of Motion. 3. It is of uſe to know that a Father of the Oratory as illuſtrious for his Piety, as for his Philoſophical Learning has ſſerted, that nothing but Faith can fully convince us of the exiſtence of Bodies. The Sorbonne nor any other Tribunal ever gave him any Trouble on this occaſion. The Inquiſitors of Italy never diſturbed Mr. Fardella, who aſſerted the ſame thing in a Printed Book. This ought to inform my Readers, that they ought not to be ſurpriſed that I ſhould ſometimes ſhew that with reſpect to the moſt myſterious Evangelical Subjects Reaſon puts us to a ſtand, and that then we ought to be fully ſatisfied with the light of Faith.

(F △ △) I think it is very likely that he did not forget the Objections which might be grounded on the diſtinction of a full Space and a Vacuum.] Meliſſus, who ſtudied under the ſame (o) Maſter with him, denied Motion, and made uſe of this Proof: (p) if Motion exiſts, there muſt of neceſſity be a Vacuity; but there is no Vacuity, therefore &c. This ſhews that in Zeno's time there was a great Philoſopher, who did not believe motion and a full ſpace to be conſiſtent together. Wherefore

(a) Journ. des Savans of the 30. of July 1685. pag. 451. 452. Dutch Edit.

(b) The Author of the Journal is miſtaken. He is in the wrong to pretend that Mr. Fardella contradicts himſelf: It is no contradiction to ſay that there are Bodies, and that it were poſſible there ſhould be none, and yet that we ſhould have the ſame ſenſations we have now. The Author of the Journal might have made a better Objection, which is, that ſuppoſing CHRIST accommodated himſelf to the popular Logick, it cannot be proved by the Scripture that there are Bodies. How then can one be ſure by Faith that there are Bodies?

(c) In the Remark F, where the 1. Objection is propoſed. (d) Arnauld, Traité des vraies & des fauſſes idées pag. 324. (e) Mallebranche, Reponſe au livre des vraies & des fauſſes idées pag. 321. (f) Id. ib. pag. 325. (g) Id. ib.

(h) Arnauld Defenſe contre la reponſe au livre des vraies & des fauſſes idées pag. [illegible]

(i) Id. ib. pag. [illegible]

(k) Id. [illegible]

(l) Id. [illegible]

(m) That is, if according to the light of Reaſon it ſhould ſeem to imply ſome contradictions and impoſſibilities.

(n) In the firſt Objection of the Remark F.

(o) That is, under Parmenides. See Diogenes Laertius lib. 9. n. 24. 25.

(p) Ariſtotel. Phyſ. lib. 4. textu 61.

Lecture that was refuted by Walking. Every body admitted the Method which Diogenes made uſe of to confound the Arguments of the Philoſophers fore ſince Zeno (a) denyed a Vacuum, I cannot perſuade my ſelf that he did not make uſe of the ſame Proof with Meliſſus, againſt thoſe who admitted Motion. He made it his buſineſs to oppoſe them, and uſed Arguments to that purpoſe. Would he have forgot the Argument which the Aſſerters of a Vacuum have ſo often employed? He might have turned it otherwiſe than they, but not leſs ſpeciouſly. If there was no Vacuum, ſaid they, there would be no Motion; but Motion exiſts, therefore there is a Vacuum. He would have argued on the contrary foot, agreeing with them in this Principle, that Motion cannot exiſt in a full Space; for from this Poſition common to them and himſelf, he might have drawn a Conſequence diametrically oppoſite to theirs. His Syllogiſm ought to have run thus: If there was any Motion, there would be a Vacuum; but there is no Vacuum, therefore there is no Motion. Obſerve, that when I ſay his manner of arguing would not have been leſs ſpecious than theirs; I mean this only with reſpect to Philoſophers very capable of comprehending the Reaſons againſt a Vacuum; for I know very well that to the Populace to deny a Vacuum, was almoſt as ſtrange a Paradox as to deny Motion. Anaxagoras found the Vulgar ſo poſſeſs'd with the exiſtence of a Vacuum, that he had recourſe to ſome trivial (b) Experiments to deſtroy this falſe prejudice. Ariſtotle, in the Chapter where he mentions this, alledges ſome of the Arguments which were made uſe of to prove a Vacuum. They are not of any force, and he refutes them pretty well in the following Chapter. (c) Gaſſendus hath given all poſſible force to the Experiments and Arguments which favour the Hypotheſis of Epicurus concerning a Vacuum; but he hath ſaid nothing really convincing, and the weakneſs of it is not expoſed in the Art, (d) of Thinking. However I believe our Zeno rendred himſelf formidable on this Topick: Such a ſubtile and warm Logician as he, could very dexterouſly perplex this Subject, and it is not probable that he neglected it.

SOME Arguments againſt a Vacuum.

But if he had known what ſeveral excellent Mathematicians (e) ſay in this Age, he would have made vaſt ravages, and given himſelf Airs of Triumph. They aſſert that a Vacuum is abſolutely neceſſary, and that without it the motion of the Planets, and the conſequences thereof are things inexplicable and impoſſible. I have heard a great Mathematician (who hath reaped great Advantages from the Works and Converſation of Sir Iſaac Newton) ſay, that it is no longer a Problem whether Motion be poſſible, ſuppoſing a full Space; that the Falſity and Impoſſibility of that Propoſition hath been not only proved, but Mathematically demonſtrated, and that henceforth to deny a Vacuum will be to deny a Point ſupported by the utmoſt Evidence. He maintain'd that Vacuity takes up incomparably more room than Matter in the moſt ponderous Bodies; and ſo that in the Air, for inſtance, there are not more Corpuſcles than there are great Towns on the Earth. Thus we are doubtleſs highly obliged to the Mathematicks: They demonſtrate the Exiſtence of what is contrary to the moſt evident Notions of our Intellect; for if there be any nature with whoſe eſſential Properties we are clearly acquainted, it is Extenſion: We have a perſpicuous and diſtinct Idea of it, which informs us that the Eſſence of Extenſion conſiſts in the three Dimenſions, and that its inſeparable Attributes and Properties are Diviſibility, Mobility, and Impenetrability. If theſe Idea's are Falſe, Deceitful, Chimerical and Illuſory, is there a Notion in our Mind which we ought not to take for a vain Phantome, or matter of diffidence? Can the Demonſtrations which prove a Vacuum remove our Diſtruſt? Are they more evident than the Idea which ſhews us that a Foot of Extenſion may change place, and cannot be in the ſame place with another Foot of Extenſion? Let us rummage as much as we pleaſe into all the receſſes of our Mind, we ſhall never find there any Idea of an unmovable, indiviſible and penetrable Extenſion. And yet if there is a Vacuum there muſt exiſt an Extenſion, eſſentially endued with theſe three Attributes. It is no ſmall difficulty, to be forced to admit the exiſtence of a Nature of which we have no Idea, and is beſides repugnant to the cleareſt Ideas of our Mind. But there are a great many other Inconveniencies which attend this. Is this Vacuum or Immoveable, indiviſible and penetrable Extenſion, a Subſtance or a Mode? It muſt be one of the two, for the Adequate Diviſion of Being, comprehends but theſe two Members. If it be a Mode, they muſt then define its Subſtance. But that is what they can never do. If it be a Subſtance, I ask whether it be created or uncreated? If created, it may periſh, without the Matter, from which it is diſtinct, ceaſing to be. But it is abſurd, and contradictory, that a Vacuum, that is a Space diſtinct from Bodies, ſhould be deſtroyed, and yet that Bodies ſhould be diſtant from each other, as they may be after the deſtruction of the Vacuum. But if this Space diſtinct from Bodies is an uncreated Subſtance, it will follow either that it is God, or that God is not the only Subſtance which neceſſarily exiſts. Which part ſoever we take of this Alternative, we ſhall find our ſelves confounded: The laſt is a formal, and the other at leaſt a material Impiety; for all Extenſion is compoſed of diſtinct parts, and conſequently ſeparable from each other; whence it reſults, that if God was extended, he would not be a Simple, Immutable, and properly Infinite Being, but a maſs of Beings, ens per aggregationem, each of which would be finite, tho' all of them together would be unlimited. He would be like the Material World, which in the Carteſian Hypotheſis is an Infinite Extenſion. And as to thoſe who ſhould pretend that God may be extended without being Material or Corporeal, and alledge, as an Argument, his Simplicity, you will find them ſolidly refuted in one of Mr. Arnauld's Books, which I ſhall cite only theſe words: (f) "So far "is the Simplicity of God from allowing us room "to think that he may be extended, that all Divines have acknowledged after St. Thomas, that "it is a neceſſary Conſequence of the Simplicity "of God not to be extended." Will they ſay with the School-men, that Space is, at moſt, no more than a privation of Body; that it hath no reality, and that, properly ſpeaking, a Vacuum is nothing: But this is ſuch an unreaſonable Aſſertion, that all the modern Philoſophers who declare for a Vacuum, have laid it aſide, tho never ſo convenient in other reſpects. (g) Gaſſendus carefully avoided any reliance on ſuch an abſurd Hypotheſis; but choſe rather to plunge himſelf into the moſt hideous Abyſs of conjecturing, that all Beings are not either Subſtances or Accidents, and that all Subſtances are not either Spirits or Bodies; and of placing the extenſion of Space amongſt the Beings which are neither Corporeal nor Spiritual, neither Subſtance nor Accidents. Mr. Locke (h) believing that he could not define what a Vacuum is, hath yet given us clearly to underſtand that he took it for a poſitive Being. He had too clear a Head not to diſcern that Nothingneſs cannot be extended in length, breadth and depth. Mr. Hartſoeker hath very clearly apprehended this Truth. There is no Vacuity in Nature, ſaith he, (i) this ought to be acknowledged without difficulty, becauſe it is utterly contradictory to conceive a meer nonentity, with all the Properties which can only agree to a real Benig. But if it is contradictory that Nothingneſs ſhould be endued with Extenſion, or any (k) other quality, it is not leſs contradictory, that Extenſion ſhould be a ſimple Being, ſince it contains ſome things, of which we may truly deny what we may truly affirm of ſome others which it includes. The Space fill'd up by the Sun is not the ſame ſpace taken up by the Moon; for if the Sun and the Moon filled the ſame Space thoſe two Luminaries would be in the ſame place, and penetrated with one another, ſince two things (l) cannot be penetrated with a third, without being penetrated betwixt themſelves.

(a) Diog. Laert. lib. 9. n. 72.

(b) Ariſtot. ubi ſupra text. 51.

(c) Gaſſend. Phyſ. ſect. 1. lib. 2. cap. 3. oper. tom. 1. pag. 191. & ſeq.

(d) Art de penſer 3. part. ch. 18. n. 4. p. m. 329. & ſeq.

(e) Mr. Huygens. Sir Iſaac Newton, &c.

(f) Arnauld, Defenſe contre la reponſe au livre des vraies & des fauſſes idées pag. 360.

(g) Gaſſend. ubi ſupra cap. 1. p. 182.

(h) Locke, An Eſſay concerning Human Underſtanding, Book 2. ch. 13. p. m. 188. 189.

(i) Non entis nulla ſunt accidentia, is a common Notion as evident as any other.

(k) Hartſoeker, Principes de Phyſique p. 4.

(l) Quæ penetrantur cum uno tertio penetrantur inter ſe.

Philoſopher whom he heard dogmatically deny Motion. He took a turn in the Auditory, thinking that it was ſufficient to ſhew the falſity of what the Profeſſor had ſitive. It is moſt evident that the Sun and Moon are not in the ſame place. It may then be ſaid truly of the Space of the Sun, that it is penetrated by the Sun, and it may as truly be denied of the Space penetrated by the Moon. Here are then two portions of Space really diſtinct from one another, by reaſon that they receive two contradictory Denominations, of being penetrated, and not being penetrated by the Sun. Which fully confutes thoſe who venture to aſſert, that Space is nothing but the Immenſity of God; and it is certain that the Divine Immenſity could not be the place of Bodies, without giving room to conclude that it is compoſed of as many real diſtinct Parts as there are Bodies in the World. It will be in vain for you to alledge that Infinity hath no Parts, this muſt neceſſarily be falſe in all Infinite Numbers, ſince a Number eſſentially includes ſeveral Unities. Nor will you have more reaſon to tell us that incorporeal Extenſion (a) is wholly contained in its ſpace, and alſo wholly contained in each part of its ſpace; for it is not only what we have no Idea of, and beſides thwarts all our Ideas of Extenſion, but alſo what will prove that all Bodies take up the ſame place, ſince each could not take up its own, if the Divine Extenſion was intirely penetrated by each Body, numerically the ſame with the Sun and with the Earth. You will find in Mr. Arnauld (b) a ſolid Refutation of thoſe, who attribute to God, the diffuſing himſelf throughout infinite Spaces.

By this Specimen of the Difficulties which may be raiſed againſt a Vacuum, my Readers may eaſily apprehend, that our Zeno would, at preſent, be much more formidable than he was in his time. It is no longer to be doubted, would he ſay, that if all is full, Motion is impoſſible. This Impoſſibility hath been Mathematically proved. He would not diſpute againſt thoſe Demonſtrations, but admit them as inconteſtable; he would only apply himſelf to prove the impoſſibility of a Vacuum, and would convince his Adverſaries of Abſurdity. He would confute them on whatſoever ſide they turned; he would plunge them into perplexities by his Dilemma's; he would make them loſe ground wherever they ſhould deſign to retire; and if he did not ſilence them, he would at leaſt force them to confeſs, that they neither underſtand nor comprehend what they ſay. If any one ask me (they are Mr. Locke's words) (c), What the Space, I ſpeak of, is? I will tell him when he tells me what his Extenſion is. ——— (d) They ask whether this Space be Body or Spirit? To which I anſwer by another Queſtion, Who told them that there can be only Bodies and Minds. If it be demanded, (as uſually it is) Whether the Space, void of Body, be Subſtance or Accident, I ſhall readily anſwer, I know not: Nor ſhall be aſhamed to own my Ignorance, till they that ask, ſhew me a clear diſtinct Idea of Subſtance. Since ſuch a great Metaphyſician as Mr. Locke, after having ſo well ſtudied theſe Subjects, is not able to anſwer the Queſtions of the Carteſians otherwiſe than by other Queſtions which he thinks yet more obſcure and perplexed than theirs, we may judge that the Objections which Zeno might propoſe, could not be anſwered: and we may certainly conjecture that he would addreſs himſelf thus to his Adverſaries: You ſhelter your ſelves in a Vacuum when driven from the Hypotheſis of Motion and a full Space; but you cannot hold out in a Vacuum, the impoſſibility of it is demonſtrated. Lay hold then on ſome better means to come off; that which you have already choſen being to avoid one Precipice by throwing one's ſelf into another. Follow me, I will ſhew you a better way. Don't conclude from the impoſſibility of Motion in a full ſpace, that there is a Vacuity, but rather conclude from the Impoſſibility of a Vacuity that there is no Motion, I mean real Motion, but at moſt an appearance of Motion, or an Ideal and intellectual Motion. See the Margin (†).

Let us, from what has been ſaid, deduce a few Corollaries.

I. The Firſt is, That Zeno's Diſpute could not be wholly uſeleſs: For if he miſſed his main aim, which is to prove that there is no Motion, he would have the advantage of ſtrengthening his Hypotheſis of the acatalepſia, or incomprehenſibility of all things. The Demonſtrations of our Modern Mathematicians, to prove a Vacuum, have convinced them that Motion in a full Space is not comprehenſible. They have therefore admitted the ſuppoſition of a Vacuity, not by reaſon they did not find it ſurrounded with ſeveral inconceivable and inexplicable Difficulties; but being obliged to chuſe one out of two Incomprehenſible Syſtems, they preferred that which leaſt ſhocked them. They choſe rather to ſatisfie themſelves on the Mechanical, than the Metaphyſical part, and even ſlighted the Phyſical Difficulties which fell in their way; this, for inſtance, it is not poſſible to give a Reaſon for the reſiſtance of Air and Water, if there be but ſuch a ſmall quantity of Matter, and ſo much Vacuity in thoſe two parts of the World. Other Mathematicians (e) deny a Vacuity ſtill, not but that they are ſenſible of the Difficulties which obliged others to admit it; but they are more ſenſibly touched with the diſmal perplexities they find in that Suppoſition: they don't think it reaſonable, on account of thoſe Difficulties, to renounce the cleareſt Idea's which we have of the nature of Extenſion. Obſerve that ſome Philoſophers (f) of the firſt Rank don't believe that we know either what Extenſion or Subſtance is; they cannot talk otherwiſe as long as they believe a Vacuity. Which affords no ſmall occaſion of triumph to Zeno and all other *Acataleptick*s: For when it is diſputed whether we know, or are ignorant of the nature of Subſtance and Matter, it is a Sign that we comprehend nothing, and that we can never be ſure that we hit the Mark, or that the Objects of our Minds reſemble the Ideas we have of them.

THE SYSTEM of Spinoza is incompatible with a Vacuum.

II. I ſhall obſerve by the by, that the Hypotheſis of a Vacuity is the moſt proper in the World to overthrow Spinoza's Syſtem. For if there are two different Extenſions, the one Simple, Indiviſible and Penetrable, the other Compounded, Diviſible, and Impenetrable; there muſt be more than one Subſtance in the Univerſe. This is the more eaſie to be inferred, by reaſon that the Impenetrable Subſtance would not be a perfect Continuity, but a maſs of Corpuſcles intirely ſeparated from each other, and ſurrounded by a large incorporeal Space. The Spinoziſts would not deny that each of theſe Corpuſcles is a particular Subſtance diſtinct from that of all others. And thus by their own Axioms, they muſt renounce their Syſtem, if they own that there is a Vacuity.

A NEW Proof againſt the real exiſtence of Extenſion.

III. The laſt Conſequence which I would draw, is that the Diſputes concerning a Vacuum, have afforded a plauſible Reaſon to deny the real Exiſtence of any other than an Ideal Extenſion. It is conceived in Arguing againſt the Carteſians, who deny the poſſibility of a Vacuum, that Extenſion is a Being which cannot be limited. It muſt then follow that there is no ſuch thing as Body in Nature, or that there is an Infinity of Bodies. One of 'em cannot be deſtroyed without annihilating all the reſt, nor can the ſmalleſt be preſerved without preſerving them all. Yet we know by evident Idea's, that when two things are really diſtinct, one of 'em may be had ſaid; but it is certain that an Anſwer of that nature is (G) more ſophiſtical than our Zeno's Arguments. I don't believe what ſome affirm of him, that he taught that Matter is compoſed of Mathematical Points: I ſhould rather think that he aſſerted || that it could not be compoſed of them. I muſt not forget that he was leſs reſolute in ſuffering Detraction, than the Tortures exercifed on him. He was very angry with a Man who abuſed him, and when the World was ſurprized at his Indignation, he anſwered *, If I was inſenſible of Calumny, I ſhould be likewiſe inſenſible of Praiſe. An Anſwer unworthy of a Philoſopher.

(a) Tota in toto & tota in ſingulis partibus. This is what the Schoolmen ſay of the Preſence of the Soul in a Humane Body, and of the preſence of Angels in certain places.

(b) Arnauld, Letter 8. & 9. to Father Mallebranche. See particularly pag. 171. & ſeq. & pag. 21[illegible]. & ſeq. See alſo a Book of Peter Petit, a Phyſician of Paris, intitl'd de extenſione animæ & rerum incorporearum natura, and M. de la Chambre's Anſwer to it, which he Publiſh'd at Paris in the Year 1666. in Quarto, with this Title, Defenſe de l'Extenſion & des parties libres de l'ame. All the Reaſons he alledges to ſhew, that Extenſion and Spirituality may be together, are ſo weak, that they are only good to ſhew the falſity of his Aſſertion.

(c) Locke ubi ſupra.

(d) Id. ib.

(†) The [illegible] Vacuity, [illegible] quidam vacuum eſſe corporum [illegible] quidem locum [illegible] idem eſſe [illegible] Ariſt. Phyſ. lib. 4. cap. 7.

(e) Mr. Leibniz, & Mr. de Volder a famous Profeſſor of Philoſophy and Mathematicks in the Univerſity of Leyden.

(f) See above Mr. Locke's words.

|| See Ariſtot. Phyſic. lib. 6. cap. 9.

* Diog. Laert. in Zeno lib. [illegible] pag. 18.

ZENO,

be preſerved or deſtroyed without the other; for whatever is really diſtinct from a thing being accidental to it, and each thing being capable of being preſerved without that which is accidental to (a) it, it follows that the Body A, really diſtinct from the Body B, may continue in being, without the Body B ſubſiſting, and that the preſervation of the Body A, doth not at all infer the preſervation of the Body B. This Conſequence which appears ſo clear and conform to common Senſe, cannot however agree with the Subject of which we ſpeak; and you cannot ſuppoſe that all the Bodies included in a Chamber ſhould periſh, and the four Walls be preſerved; for in this caſe there will remain the ſame diſtance betwixt them as before; but this diſtance, ſay the Carteſians, is nothing but a Body. Their Doctrine then ſeems to infringe the Creator's Sovereign Liberty, and his due unlimited Power over all his Works. He ought to enjoy an undoubted right of Creating few or many, according to his good pleaſure, and of preſerving or deſtroying this or that, as it ſeems good to him. The Carteſians may anſwer, that he may deſtroy each Body in particular, provided he make another of the ſame magnitude; but is not this to ſet bounds to his Liberty? Is not this to impoſe on him a ſort of Slavery, which neceſſarily obliges him to create a new Body every time that he pleaſeth to deſtroy another? Theſe are Difficulties, which cannot be anſwered on the ſuppoſition that Extenſion and Body are the ſame thing; but they may be retorted againſt thoſe who propoſe them to Deſcartes, if they acknowledge a ſpacial Extenſion really exiſtent and diſtinct from Matter. This Extenſion cannot be finite; one part cannot be deſtroyed without the production of another, &c. But if the nature of penetrable or impenetrable Extenſion draws along with it ſuch a large train of Inconveniencies, the ſhorteſt way is to aſſert that it hath no other Exiſtence than in our Mind.

(G) An Anſwer like that of Diogenes is more ſophiſtical.] (b) Πρὸς τὸν εἰπόντα ὅτι κίνησις οὐκ ἔστιν ἀναστὰς περιεπάτει. Dicente ſibi quodam non eſſe motum, exurgens ambulabat. This is all that we find on this head in Diogenes Laertius, where the Fact is related with great ſimplicity: But the Moderns have a little amplified it. (c) Vulgo etiam fertur Diogenes, cum negari a Zenone motum localem audiſſet, illico ſurrexiſſe, & itu redituque aliquoties magnâ feſtinatione replicata inambulaſſe, & rogatus, quis eum ſubitò enthuſiaſmus perculiſſet, reſpondiſſe: Zenonem refello. They have named the Philoſopher who denied Motion, they have embelliſhed the Circumſtances of the Practical Anſwer, they have made it a ſubject of Declamations for young Rhetoricians. I am ſurprized that Sextus Empiricus ſhould not vouchſafe to name the Perſon, who thus refuted the Objections againſt the Exiſtence of Motion. What he ſaith is, that a Cynick made uſe of this way of refuting thoſe Objections: (d) Ταῦτά τοι καὶ ἐρωτηθεὶς φιλόσοφος, τὸν κατὰ τῆς κινήσεως λόγον, σιωπῶν περιεπάτει. Ideoque cum propoſita eſſet Philoſopho oratio motum negans, tacitus ambulare cœpit. In another place he expreſſes himſelf thus: (e) Διὸ καὶ τὸν Κυνικόν τε ἐρωτηθέντα κατὰ τῆς κινήσεως λόγον οὐδὲν ἀποκρίνασθαι, ἀναστάντα δὲ καὶ βαδίζοντα ἔργῳ καὶ διὰ τῆς ἐναργείας πιστῶσαι, ὅτι ὄντως ἐστὶν ἡ κίνησις. Ideoque aiunt ex Cynicis, cum ei propoſita eſſet contra motum oratio, nihil reſpondiſſe; ſed ſurgens ambulare cœpiſſe, opere & actu oſtendentem exiſtere motum. It is better not to name the Perſon, than to affirm that Diogenes the Cynick, and Zeno of Elea were the Actors. For this (f) Chronological Error is inexcuſable: which the Jeſuits of Coimbra have aſcribed to Simplicius without refuting it. And in this particular they fell in with the common Blunder. Certè, ſay they (g), hæc Zenonis tam abſurda opinio nulla melius quam experientia ipſius argumenta refellitur. Quod Diogenes Cynicus fecit, ut refert Simplicius hoc in libro commento 43. & lib. 8. comment. 25. Nam cum Zenonis rationes aliquando audiſſet, ſurrexit, nec aliter quam coram ambulando reſpondit. They have avoided the other common miſtake; they don't believe that Zeno who denied Motion, and whoſe Arguments Ariſtotle examined, was the founder of the Stoicks; But have expreſly named (h) him Zeno of Elea. The Paſſage which follows is full of Faults: (i) Continuum ex partibus indiviſibilibus conſtare contra Ariſtotelem conſtanter defendebat Zeno Stoicorum Princeps, quem ducem ſunt ſequuti ex Philoſophis Democritus, & Leucippus. Ex Theologis Antiquis. May. in 2. diſt. 2. quæſt. 5, Gerardus apud Tartaletum hoc lib. quæſt. 1. & Ægidius diſcipulus D. Thom. lib. 1. de generat. quæſt. 8. citatus a Veracrux 6. Phyſic. ſpeculat. 1. There is no room to doubt that this Author in this paſſage deſigned to ſpeak of the ſame Zeno, whom Ariſtotle refuted in the 9th Chapter of the 6th Book of his Phyſicks. But it doth not appear that Zeno of Elea taught that Matter was compoſed of indiviſible parts. He contented himſelf with taking advantage of the contrary Doctrine, to ſhew the impoſſibility of Motion. Nay, he aſſerted that an (†) indiviſible Body did not differ from a Nonentity; and I ſhall make it appear below, that he did not admit of any Compoſition in the Univerſe. Notwithſtanding all which, he is taken (k) to be the Author of the Sect which maintained, that Matter is compoſed of Mathematical Points. It would be more reaſonable to aſcribe this Opinion to Pythagoras and Plato, as Derodon (l) hath done, going, with regard to Pythagoras, on the Teſtimony of Sextus Empiricus, and with relation to Plato on that of Ariſtotle. But what a Blunder is it to make the Founder of the Stoicks to be the Guide of Democritus and Leucippus! Leucippus preceded Democritus, and both of 'em preceded the Head of the Stoicks by ſeveral Olympiads. Beſides, their Atomes formed a Syſtem very different from that attributed to the Zenoniſts about the compoſition of Matter.

However it be, the Anſwer of Diogenes the Cynick to the Philoſopher who denied Motion, is the Sophiſm which the Logicians call ignorationem Elenchi. Diogenes ſwerved from the ſtate of the Queſtion; for the Philoſopher did not deny apparent Motion; he did not deny that Motion ſeems apparent to Human Senſe; but he aſſerted that nothing did really move, and proved it by very ſubtil and perplexing Reaſons. See what Sextus Empiricus ſays of the Scepticks: (m) Ὅσον μὲν γὰρ ἐπὶ τοῖς φαινομένοις δοκεῖν εἶναι κίνησιν, ὅσον δὲ ἐπὶ τῷ φιλοσόφῳ λόγῳ μὴ ὑπάρχειν. Quantum ad apparentia quidem videri eſſe motum, ſed quatenus quis Philoſophicam rationem ſequatur non eſſe. Of what force then is it againſt this Aſſertion, to walk or cut a Caper? Is it

(e) Id. ib. lib. 8. cap. 8. pag. 124.

(f) Diogenes the Cynick lived a long time after Zeno of Elea.

(g) Conimbricenſes in Phyſ. Ariſtot. lib. 6. c. 2. p. m. 118.

(h) Ibid. in cap. 8. pag. 145.

(i) Franciſcus de Oviedo Phyſic. controverſ. 17. p. 334. col. 1.

† Ariſt. Metaph. lib. 3. cap. 4.

(k) Arriaga and many other Spaniſh School-men call thoſe, who hold that Matter is compoſed of indiviſible and unextended parts Zenoniſts. A very different Opinion from that of the Atomiſts.

(l) Derodon, diſput. de atomis pag. 4. & 5. He quotes Sextus Empiricus lib. 9. adv. Mathem. & Ariſtotle lib. 1. de generat. tex. 7.

(m) Sext. Empir. Pyrrh. hypotyp. lib. 3. cap. 8. pag. 104.

---

cannot be ſeparated from an Ethiopian. Wherefore they re- ... the diſtinction between a Mental and a real Separa- ... Which is a meer Illuſion; for the ſubject of the Black- ... of an Ethiopian is Matter, which would not be deſtroyed, ... the Body of that Man was calcined. (b) Diog. Laertius lib. ... (c) Libertus Fromondus de compoſitione continui ... (d) Sextus Empiricus Pyrrhon. hypotypoſ. lib. 8 c. 22. ... 104.

Z E N O.

ZENO, an Epicurean Philosopher, a Native of Sidon, gloriously asserted the Honour of his Sect; for he * acquired a great Reputation. Amongst other Pupils, he was Tutor to (A) Cicero and Pomponius Atticus, whence we may judge of the to prove any thing besides the appearance of Motion? And is that the Subject in Dispute? Did the Philosopher deny that? Not in the least; he was not Fool enough to deny ocular Phenomena, but he asserted that the Evidence of the Senses ought to be sacrificed to Ratiocination. Consult Aristotle; he will inform you that several Antient Philosophers, who found Reasons utterly to deny the plurality of Parts, Divisibility, and the Mobility of the World, afterwards made no account of the Testimony of the Senses. (a) Ἐκ μὲν οὖν τούτων τῶν λόγων, ὑπερβάντες τὴν αἴσθησιν καὶ παριδόντες αὐτὴν, ὡς τῷ λόγῳ δέον ἀκολουθεῖν, ἓν καὶ ἀκίνητον τὸ πᾶν εἶναι, καὶ ἄπειρον ἔνιοι. Ob hasce igitur rationes nonnulli sensum prætereuntes, despicientesque quasi rationem sequi eum oporteat, universum ipsum, unum & immobile & infinitum esse asserunt. Parmenides and Melissus are the Antient Philosophers of whom he speaks. It must be believed that Zeno of Elea retained the Substance of the Doctrine of Parmenides his Master. Plutarch having said, that Parmenides admitted the Eternity and Immutability of all things, adds, that Zeno of Elea (b) did not particularize any thing, but seemed to float in uncertainty. But others (c) say, that with Xenophanes, Parmenides, and Melissus, he taught the Unity and Incorruptibility of all things, and the Imperfection of the evidence of the Senses. He was not humble enough to continue in his Tutor's Principles without any alteration: We see his Innovations in a Book (d) ascribed to Aristotle. They don't hinder his believing that there was no Generation: So that by a necessary Consequence of his Principles, he was obliged to oppose the Motion, Divisibility, Composition of Extension, &c. We have already seen in the Article of Xenophanes. That the Author of the Art of Thinking hath drawn up an Indictment against Aristotle in favour of Parmenides and Melissus. And long since Attempts have been made to give their Opinion a favourable sense, and a great air of Conformity to the Principle of the Orthodox, concerning the Nature of God. But in all Appearance, Aristotle doth not deserve Censure here; for he very well apprehended, and exactly related what they taught, and consequently we must believe their System to be a sort of Spinozism. There is no room to Conjecture that they (e) expressed themselves by Riddles or Emblems; for the particular Doctrine of the Unity and Immutability of all things was a Consequence of several clear and evident Principles. See above the Article Xenophanes. So that it was in good earnest, and as a Systematical Doctrine, and not out of a witty Conceit, that they denied Motion, and asserted that its Existence was barely mental. Here follow the Names of some Apologists for those Philosophers: (f) Si prædicti Philosophi suum illud dogma ad hujus tam recondita (g) veritatis intelligentiam retulere, non modò reprehendendi non sunt, sed magnopere etiam commendandi. Certe Parmenidem defendit, atque interpretatur Simplicius, hoc in libro ad textum 6. Bessario, 2. Libro contra Calumniatorem Platonis, capite 3. & Nicolaus Cusa, in lib. de filiatione Dei. Lege etiam pro eadem re Eugubinum, lib. 3. de perenni Philosophia cap. 6. & 7. & F. Mirandulam lib. 6. de examine vanitatis, cap. 1.

The result of all this is, that Diogenes's Answer was sophistical, tho' it proved proper to draw on him the applause of the Company. It was a scoffing Answer, which I believe the Philosopher concerned took no other notice of, than to despise it. Perhaps he heartily laughed at it; being a thousand times happier than the Sophist Diodorus, who was not in a laughing Condition, when his Lectures against the Existence of Motion, were attacked by a malicious Irony. (h) He having put his Shoulder out of joint, applied himself to Hierophilus the Physician to get it set. How, said the Doctor? Your Shoulder dislocated! that cannot be; for it is neither removed out of the place where it was, nor where it was not. This was one of this Sophist's Reasons against Motion. If a Body moves, said he, it doth it either in the Place where it is, or in the place where it is not. But it doth not move either in the place where it is, (for if it is there, it doth not depart) or in the place where it is not, for it can neither act nor suffer where it is not. Therefore, &c. Diodorus being then very little able to relish this Logick, entreated Hierophilus not to remember his Discourses, but to give him a necessary Remedy.

(A) Amongst other Pupils he was Tutor to Cicero and Pomponius Atticus.] Mr. Menage's Words are Zenonem Sidonium & Cicero & Atticus Athenis audiverunt, ut indicat ipse Cicero libro II. & V. de finibus, & lib. III. Tuscul. Quæst. & libro I. Academ. I found the passage in the 3d Book of the Tusculanæ Quæstiones, and it containing one of our Zeno's Principles, I shall set it down: (i) Solent isti negare nos intelligere quid dicat Epicurus. Hoc dicit, & hoc ille græculus me audiente Athenis senex Zeno istorum acutissimus contendere, & magna voce dicere solebat, eum esse beatum, qui præsentibus voluptatibus frueretur, confideretque se fruiturum aut in omni, aut in magna parte vitæ, dolore non interveniente: aut si interveniret, si summus foret, futurum brevem: si productior, plus habiturum jucundi quam mali. Hæc cogitantem fore beatum, præsertim si & ante percepta bonis contentus esset, nec mortem, nec deos extimesceret. Habes formam Epicuri vitæ beatæ verbis Zenonis expressam, nihil ut possit negari. I have also found the passage in the First Book of the Academical Questions, which runs as follows: (k) Carneades nullius philosophiæ partis ignarus, & ut cognovi ex iis qui illum audierant, maximeque ex (l) Epicuræo Zenone qui quum ab eo plurimum dissentiret, unum tamen præter cæteros mirabatur, incredibili quadam fuit facilitate. I have not found the Passage (m) in the Second Book de Finibus, but I have found this in the First Book: (n) Hic mihi Phædrum, inquam, mentitum, aut Zenonem puta, quorum utrumque audivi, quum mihi nihil sanè præter sedulitatem probarent. Omnes mihi Epicuri sententiæ satis notæ sunt, atque eos quos nominavi cum Attico nostro, frequenter audivi, quum ille quidem utrumque, Phædrum autem etiam amaret, quotidieque inter nos, ea quæ audiebamus, conferebamus: neque erat unquam controversia quid ego intelligerem, sed quid probarem. Let us add to these three passages, that wherein the Pontif Cotta, Cicero's Contemporary, acknowledges himself to have been a Disciple of this famous Epicurean: (o) Zenonem, quem Philo noster coryphæum appellare Epicureorum solebat, quum Athenis essem, audiebam frequenter, & quidem ipso autore Philone, credo ut facilius judicarem, quam illa bene refellerentur, quum à principe Epicureorum accepissem quemadmodum dicerentur. Non igitur ille ut plerique, sed isto modo ut tu, distinctè, graviter, ornate. Sed quod in illo mihi usu sæpe venit, idem modo quum te audirem acciderat, ut molestè ferrem tantum ingenium (bona venia me audies) in tam leves ne dicam in tam ineptas sententias incidisse. Mr. Menage hath not, like Gassendus, referred us to one of Cicero's Letters to Atticus, to find the great tenderness of these two Illustrious Romans for our Zeno: (p) Quando Cicero & ipsum audivit & de eodem ad Atticum scribens: Zenonem, inquit, tam diligo quam tu. Gassendus seems to me to be mistaken. This Letter of Cicero was written in the Year 702 of Rome. What probability is there that Zeno was alive at that time, since he was very old when (q) Cicero was present at his Lectures in the year of Rome 674? How is it probable, if then alive, that we should find no hint of his great Age, in the Epistle of Cicero, cited by Gassendus, nor in the preceding Letter, where he mentions the same Man? Observe, the time when he lived. Voſſius (B) is miſtaken on that Head. Zeno is repreſented as a Philoſopher who Treated his Adverſaries with (C) a great deal of Contempt, and very roughly. There is ſcarce any greater inſtance of his Boldneſs than the Book which he wrote againſt (D) the Mathematicks. A Work

---

* See the Remark A.

(a) Aristotel. de generat. & corrupt. lib. 1. c. 8. p. m. 395.

(b) Ἰδίως μὲν οὐδὲν ἀπεφήνατο, διηπόρησε δὲ περὶ τούτων πλεῖον. Nihil hoc in genere singulare vulgavit, sed ancipiti fere dubitationis æstu fluctuavit. Plut. in Stromatis apud Eusebium præpar. Evang. l. 1. c. 8. pag. 23.

(c) Aristocles de Philosophia lib. 8. apud Eusebium lib. l. 14. c. 17. p. 756.

(d) Aristot. lib. de Xenophane, Zenone, & Gorgia.

(e) As the Jesuits of Conimbra fancy in Phys. Aristot. lib. 1. c. 7. p. m. 92.

(f) Conimbricenses ibid. See the same also in lib. 1. de generat. c. 8.

(g) That is to say, that In divina bonitate sunt omnia immensurate & unicè, sicut in monade omnis numerus uniformiter est, & in centro omnes lineæ ad se ipsæ, & ad unum medium, a quo processere, conjunctæ & copulatæ continentur.

(h) Sextus Empiricus ubi supra lib. 2. c. 22.

thenis Cicero & Atticus A. U. DC LXXIV. Olymp. CLX nem audiverint. Jonsius de Script. hist. Philos. pag. 183.

Obſerve that in the beſt Editions, for inſtance, that of Mr. Grævius, this Philoſopher is not called Zeno but Xeno. Manutius's Conjecture on this head is incomparably better than that of Corradus. (a) According to Corradus the Epicurean Philoſopher is meant there; but according to Manutius (b), Cicero ſpeaks of an Agent of Pomponius Atticus. Obſerve that it is believed by ſeveral (c) that Lucretius was a Diſciple to our Zeno, and ſee what I have Remarked againſt (d) the Memorial, wherein the Baron des Coutures was cenſured for having advanced that Zeno was the Honour of the Epicurean Sect.

(B) Voſſius is miſtaken on this Head.] (e) He ſaith 1. That Zeno the Sidonian a Philoſopher of the Epicurean Sect was a Diſciple of Apollodorus. 2. That this Apollodorus was one of Epicurus's Scholars. He cites Diogenes Laertius to prove both theſe Facts, and is miſtaken in the laſt; for Diogenes Laertius (f) only ſaith that Apollodorus ſurnamed κηποτύραννος horti tyrannus, was an illuſtrious aſſertor of the Epicurean Doctrine. If he had conſidered the paſſages which inform us that Cicero, Cotta, and Pomponius Atticus were Auditors of Zeno, he would not have made one of Epicurus's Diſciples his Maſter; for ſince Epicurus died in the 2d. Year of the 127th Olympiad, and Cicero heard Zeno in the 674th Year of Rome, that is, the 1. Year of the 175th Olympiad, it is impoſſible that Zeno ſhould have been inſtructed by an Auditor of Epicurus. There are above 190 Years betwixt the Death of Epicurus and the Year when Cicero heard Zeno's Lectures. (g) See Jonſius who hath noted this miſtake of Voſſius. (h) Mr. Menage has adopted it.

(C) Treated his Adverſaries with a great deal of Contempt, and very roughly.] Cotta attempting to prove that the Epicureans were Slanderous, alledges our Zeno. (i) Zeno quidem non eos ſolum qui tum erant Apollodorum, Syllum, cæteroſque figebat maledictis, ſed Socratem ipſum parentem philoſophiæ latino verbo utens (k) ſcurram Atticum fuiſſe dicebat, Chryſippum nunquam niſi (l) Cheſippum vocabat.

(D) The Book which he wrote againſt the Mathematicks,] Of which we are informed by (m) Proclus, who adds that Poſſidonius refuted it. Mr. Menage cites ſome of Proclus's Words: (n) Eum (Zenonem) integro volumine refutavit Poſidonius Apameenſis; alias Rhodius; teſte Proclo libro III. ad 1. Euclidis. Ζήνων, inquit, ὁ Σιδώνιος τῆς Ἐπικούρου μετέχων αἱρέσεως, πρὸς ὃν καὶ ὁ Ποσειδώνιος ὅλον γέγραφε βιβλίον, δεικνὺς σαθρὰν αὐτοῦ πᾶσαν τὴν ἐπίνοιαν. M. Huet having told us that Epicurus rejected Geometry and the other Parts of the Mathematicks, becauſe he believed that they being founded on falſe Principles could not be true, adds, that Zeno Attacked them another way. Which was by alledging that in order to render them certain, ſome things ſhould have been added to their Principles which were not joyned to them. (o) Alia via adverſus Geometriam graſſabatur Zeno Epicureus, imperfecta ejus eſſe docens initia, unde nihil effici poſſet, niſi alia quædam adjicerentur, quæ in iis prætermiſſa ſunt: quam ejus ſententiam toto libro confutare conatus eſt Poſidonius. The Mathematicks are the moſt evident and certain of all Humane Sciences, and yet they have met with oppoſers. If our Zeno had been a great Metaphiſician, and grounded on different Principles from thoſe of Epicurus, he might have compoſed a Work not very eaſy to be refuted, and cut out more Work for the Geometricians than can be imagined. All Sciences have their weak ſide; nor are the Mathematicks free from that Fault. It is true that very few are able to oppoſe them very well, becauſe to ſucceed in this Engagement 'tis requiſite not only to be a good Philoſopher, but alſo a very profound Mathematician. But thoſe endued with the latter Quality are ſo raviſhed with the certainty and Evidence of their inquiries, that they never think of examining whether there be any illuſion in them, or whether the firſt Foundation be well eſtabliſhed. They rarely think of ſuſpecting any deficiency. But what is very certain is that ſeveral diſputes prevail amongſt the moſt Famous Mathematicians. They refute one another, and Replies multiply amongſt them as well as amongſt other Learned Men. We ſee the Truth of this amongſt the Moderns, and it is certain that the Ancients were not more unanimous (p). It is a ſign that there are in this Road ſeveral dark Paths, and that the Mathematicians wander and loſe the Track of truth. Which muſt of neceſſity be the Lot of the one or the other, ſince the one affirms what is denied by the other. It may be urged that 'tis the Fault of the Workman, but not of the Art, and that all thoſe Diſputes proceed from ſome Mathematicians miſtaking that for a Demonſtration which is not ſo; but that very thing ſhews that ſeveral Obſcurities are intermixed with this Science. Beſides, a parallel Reaſon may uſe of with reſpect to the Diſputes of other Learned Men. It may be urged that if they cloſely followed the Rules of Logick, they would avoid the ill Conſequences, and the falſe aſſertions which miſlead them. Nevertheleſs we muſt confeſs that there are many Philoſophical ſubjects concerning which the beſt Logicians are incapable of coming to a certainty, by Reaſon of the want of Evidence in the Object; but Mathematical Objects are free from this inconvenience. Let it be ſo; but yet that Science is chargeable with an irreparable, and very enormous Fault; for it is a meer Chimera which cannot poſſibly exiſt. Mathematical Points, and conſequently the Lines and Surfaces, Globes and Axes, of the Geometricians are Fictions which never can have a being: they are then inferior to thoſe of the Poets; for the latter commonly contain nothing that is Impoſſible, but have at leaſt probability and poſſibility. Gaſſendus made an Ingenious Obſervation. He ſays that the Mathematicians, ſpecially the Geometricians, have eſtabliſhed their Empire in the Land of Abſtractions and Idea's, where they walk at their Eaſe; but that when they get into the Country of Realities, they ſoon meet with an invincible reſiſtance. (q) Mathematici, imprimiſque Geometræ, quantitatem abſtrahentes a materia, quoddam quaſi regnum ſibi ex ea fecerunt quamliberrimum; quippe nullo facto a materiæ craſſitie, pertinaciaque impedimento. Quare & ſuppoſuere imprimis in ea ſic abſtracta ejuſmodi dimenſiones, ut punctum, quod foret prorſus immune partibus fluendo lineam, longitudinemve latitudinis expertem crearet, &c.——Atque iſta quidem ſuppoſitiones ſunt, ex quibus Mathematici intra puræ, abſtractæve Geometriæ cancellos, & quaſi regnum conſiſtentes ſuas illas præclaras Demonſtrationes texunt—— (r) Uno igitur verbo Mathematici ſunt, qui in ſuo illo abſtractionis regno ea indiviſibilia ſupponunt, quæ ſine partibus, ſine longitudine, ſine latitudine ſunt, ac eam multitudinem, diviſionémque partium, quæ ad finem nunquam perveniat; non item verò Phyſici, quibus in regno materiæ verſantibus tale nihil licet. He to ſhew inſtances the vanity of their pretended Demonſtrations, in two ſubtil Mathematicians attempting to prove that a finite and an infinite quantity are equal. (ſ) Nuper Viri præclari Cavalerius, & Torricellius oſtenderunt de acuto quodam ſolido infinitè longo & cuipiam tamen parallelepipedo, cylindrove finito æquali. Others prove (t) that there are infinite quantities bounded on each ſide. If they find Evidence in theſe ſorts of Demonſtrations, ought it not to be ſuſpected, ſince after all they can ſay, it doth not over-

---

(a) Corradus in Ciceron. epiſt. 11. lib. 5. ad Atticum p. 257. Edit. Græv.

(b) Manutius in 10. epiſtolam Ciceronis ad Attic. lib. 5. pag. 151. edit. Græv. See the ſame Cicero. epiſt. 37. l. 13. ad Atticum & ibi Manutium, aliosque comment.

(c) See the Remark X in the Article Lucretius.

(d) Ibid.

(e) Voſſius de hiſtor. Græcis lib. 1. c. 15. p. 105. & lib. 4. c. 10. p. 466.

(f) Diog. Laert. lib. 10. n. 25.

(g) Jonſius ubi ſupra pag. 184.

(h) Menage in Laert. lib. 7. n. 35. pag. 279. (i) Cicero de nat. Deorum lib. 1. n. 94. pag. 135. edit. Leſcaloperii. (k) See Lactantius divin. inſtitut. lib. 3. c. 19. p. m. 201. (l) ἀπὸ τοῦ χέζειν, quod eſt alvum exonorare. (m) Proclus pag. 55. apud Barrow lect. 5. Mathem. pag. 76. (n) Menag. in Laert. lib. 7. n. 35. p. 279. col. 1. (o) Huetius demonſtr. Evangel. præfat. n. 3. pag. 6. edit. Lipſ. 1694.

(p) See Huetius ubi ſupra axiom. 4. pag. 28. 29.

(q) Gaſſend. Phyſ. ſect. 1. lib. 3 cap. 5. pag. 264. oper. tom. 1.

(r) Id. ib. pag. 265.

(ſ) Id. ib. pag. 264.

(t) See the 12. Chapt. of Father Maignan's Phyſicks p. m. 295 and the 12 propoſition, which runs thus, Infinitum categorematicum eſſe poteſt, quamvis clauſum intrinſecis terminis etiam in eo genere in quo eſt infinitum.

over-

Work which is loſt, as well as that written by Paſſidonius to confute it. There are ſome who more regret the loſs of theſe two Books, than that of twenty or thirty Dramatical Pieces, or that of the beſt Hiſtorians of Antiquity.

ZEUXIS,

over-balance the Evidence by which common Senſe informs us that what is finite can never be equal with what is infinite, and that Infinity as Infinity cannot have any bounds? I add, that it is not true that Evidence can accompany thoſe Gentlemen in all their Walks. For Proof of which I ſhall call a Witneſs very well acquainted with their Subtilties. It were to be wiſhed, ſaith he (a), " that the Analyſis of infinite Diminutions, which is pretended " to be ſo admirably fertile, ſhould carry in its " Demonſtrations that Evidence which is, and of " right ought to be expected in Geometry. But " when they Argue on the Infinite, on the Infinite " of Infinite, on the Infinite of Infinite of Infinite, " and ſo on, without ever finding Terms to ſtop them, " and when they apply to finite magnitudes, in" finities of infinites, thoſe whom they would " either inſtruct or convince, have not al" ways the Penetration requiſite to ſee clearly in" to ſuch profound Abyſſes——— (b) Thoſe who " are accuſtomed to the Old ways of reaſoning " in Geometry don't eaſily quit them to follow " ſuch abſtracted Methods; they chooſe rather not " to go ſo far than to engage in the new Paths of " the Infinite of infinite of infinite, where one doth " not always ſee very clearly about one, and where " it is eaſy to go aſtray without perceiving it. " For it is not ſufficient in Geometry to con" clude, it muſt be Evident that the Concluſion is " good."

It is a pretty good ground of prejudice againſt the Mathematicks, to urge that Mr. Paſcal deſpiſed them even before he applyed himſelf to Devotion. He had been paſſionately fond of, and had made extraordinary progreſſes in them. He was beſides endued with a very ſolid judgment, and very few were capable of knowing the value of things better than he. And it was not by his Converſion to the only thing neceſſary, that he became diſguſted at theſe Sciences which had ſo charmed him. It was the Examination of the thing it ſelf, and the reflection he made on the diſcourſe of a Perſon of Quality, which cured him of his prepoſſeſſion in Favour of the Mathematicks. It would be too great a weakneſs to fancy that the Chevalier de Meré Attacked him with Pious Reflections. He undoubtedly made uſe of no other than Philoſophical conſiderations: Let us ſee the effect of them, and cite the beginning of a Letter from him to Mr. Paſcal. (c) Do you remember you told me once that you were no more ſo fully perſuaded of the excellency of the Mathematicks. And now you write to me that I have wholly undeceived you, and diſcovered to you ſomethings which you had never ſeen, if you had not known me. But yet, Sir, I don't know whether you are ſo much obliged to me as you think. For you ſtill retain a Habit, which you Learned with that Science, of not determining on any thing whatſoever any otherwiſe than by your Demonſtrations, which moſt frequently are falſe. The tedious raciocinations drawn from Line to Line perplex you in a more ſublime knowledge which never deceives——— but you will continually remain in thoſe Errors into which the falſe Demonſtrations of Geometry have plunged you, and I don't believe you entirely cured of the Mathematicks as long as you affirm that the little Bodies, concerning which we diſputed the other day, may be divided in infinitum. The Chavalier de Mere goes on offer to him ſeveral Objections on the infinite diviſibility of Matter. Some of which are pretty good, and the others very bad, and look rather like rallery than ratiocination; and indeed there is ſufficient Room left to be ſurprized that one and the ſame Letter ſhould be mixed with ſo many unequal things. The Author nevertheleſs boaſts of a prodigious ability in the Sciences of which we are ſpeaking. You know, ſaith he (d), that I have diſcovered in the Mathematicks ſuch extraordinary things, which the moſt Learned of the Ancients never mentioned, and at which the beſt Mathematicians of Europe have been ſurprized: You have writ on my inventions as well as M. Huiguens Mr. de (e) Fermat: and ſo many others who have admired them. You muſt then judge from thence that I do not adviſe the contempt of this Science, which, to ſpeak truth, is really uſeful, provided we don't too much apply our ſelves to it; for commonly what is diligently ſought after in it appears to me uſeleſs; and the time which it takes up might be better employed. Methinks alſo that the Reaſons which we find in this Science, tho' never ſo little obſcure, or oppoſite to Senſe, ought to render the conſequences drawn from them very ſuſpicious, eſpecially, as I have already hinted, when they meddle with Infinity. Obſerve that it is highly proper that thoſe, who apply themſelves to ſhew the weak ſide of the Mathematicks, ſhould convince the Publick that they underſtand them, that they have ſtudied them, that they acknowledge the uſefulneſs of them, and that they have no deſign to rob them of their juſt value. The Learned Biſhop of Avranches, above cited, hath acted according to this Rule, (f) after having ſaid ſeveral excellent things (g) concerning the uncertainties and illuſions of this Science.

Another paſſage of the Chevalier de Meré's Letter runs thus: (h) I put you in mind that beſides this Natural World, which falls under the cognizance of our Senſes, there is another inviſible, and that it is in the latter that you may attain to the moſt ſublime knowledge. Theſe who only inform themſelves of the Corporeal World, commonly judge very ill, and always groſly, like Deſcartes, whom you ſo highly eſteem, who did not know the ſpace of places otherwiſe than by the Bodies which fill them up—— But without undertaking to convince him of this Error, know that it is in this inviſible World, of an infinite Extenſion, that we are enabled to diſcover the Reaſons, and Principles of things, the moſt hidden Truths, the Relation, exactneſs, and Proportion, and the true Originals and perfect Idea's of all that we ſearch. Thus concludes his Letter to Mr. Paſcal: I beg leave to ſay that I don't apprehend what he drives at; for he expreſſeth himſelf ſo looſely that he gives us opportunity to conclude quite contrary to what he muſt have thought and repreſented. His deſign was to cure Mr. Paſcal entirely of the Mathematicks: He therefore intended to hint to him another Object than that of this Science, to mark it out to him, I ſay, as the ſource and ſeat of thoſe Truths after which we aſpire; and yet he deſcribes to him an Object which very nearly reſembles that of the Mathematicks: For they do not conſider this World which falls under the cognizance of our ſenſes, but that inviſible World, of an Infinite Extenſion, where we may diſcover the exactneſs, proportion, &c. I believe he intended to recommend the Philoſophy of Idea's, the moſt ſubtil Metaphyſicks, which only tend to the Contemplation of Spirits, and the intelligible World which is in the mind of God: But the Characters, which diſtinguiſh that Science from the Mathematicks, have not been conſidered by him; nor did he remember that the Mathematicks have this principal property of conſidering Extenſion as ſeparated from Matter and every ſenſible Quality. Extenſion or intelligible (i) Matter is their Object as ſenſible Matter is that of Phyſicks. Their excellency, according to the Ancients, conſiſts in diſengaging us from periſhable Corporeal things, and elevating us to thoſe which are Spiritual, Immutable and Eternal. Whence it proceeded that Plato diſliked the Conduct of (k) ſome Mathematicians, who attempted to make good their ſpeculative Propoſitions on Matter. I ſhall here tranſcribe a moſt excellent paſſage of Plutarch, which turns on a Maxim of Plato that (l) God is continually Employed in Geometrical Exercises.

(a) Journal de Trevoux for May and June 1701. art. 11. pag. 423. Dutch Edit.

(b) Ibid. pag. 430.

(c) Lettres de Mr. le Chevalier de Meré n. 19. pag. 60. Dutch Edit.

(d) Id. ib. pag. 63.

(e) It ſhould be Fermat.

(f) Hue[illegible] ubi ſupra axiom. [illegible] c. 4. pag. 31.

(g) Ibid. c. 5. pag. 33. & ſeq. See alſo from page [illegible] to page [illegible]

(h) Chevalier de Meré ubi ſupra pag. 65. 6[illegible]

(i) Hæc eſt illa Quantita[illegible] quæ dici ſolet materia intelligibilis ad differentiam materiæ ſenſibilis quæ ad Phyſicum ſpecta[illegible] illa enim ab hac per intellectum ſeparatur, ac ſolo intellectu p[illegible] cipitur. Blancanus de natura Mathematicarum pag. 6. (k) Plutarch, in Marcello. pag. 305. (l) Τὸν θεὸν ἀεὶ γεωμετρεῖν Deum ſemper geometriam tractare. Plut. ſympoſ. lib. 8. cap. 2 pag. 718. NOTE that the Moderns, who doubt of the exiſtence of Bodies might make uſe of this Maxim, and ſay, that the Action of God [illegible] our minds, whereby he communicates to us the Ideas of Exten[illegible] and thoſe of Numbers, and Motion, and of the Relations of [illegible] to ſpace and duration &c. is only a Geometrical Work.

ZEUXIS, a very Famous Painter, flouriſhed four Hundred Years (A) before JESUS CHRIST, towards the 95th. Olympiad. What we know of his Country

Exerciſes. (a) "This Sentence intimates ſome curious and difficult ſpeculation, and not that which "he has often mention'd, when he profeſseth Geometry as a Science that takes off Men from ſenſible Objects, and makes them apply themſelves "to the intelligible and Eternal Nature, the Contemplation of which is the end of Philoſophy, "as to view the Myſteries of initiation into holy "Rites: For the Nail of Pain and Pleaſure that "faſtens the Soul to the Body, ſeems to do us the "greateſt miſchief by making ſenſible things more "powerful over us than intelligible; and by forcing the Underſtanding to determin, the rather according to Paſſion than Reaſon: For it being accuſtom'd by the vehemency of Pain or Pleaſure, "to be intent on the mutable and uncertain Body "as if it really and truly were, grows blind as to "that which really is; and deſtroys that Inſtrument "and light of the Soul, which is worth a Thouſand "Bodies, and by which alone the Deity can be diſcover'd. Now in all Sciences, as in plain and "ſmooth Mirrors, ſome Marks and Images of the "Truth of Intelligible Objects appear, but Geometry chiefly; which according to Philo is the chief "and principal of all, doth bring back and turn the "Underſtanding as it were purg'd and gently looſen'd "from Senſe: And therefore Plato himſelf diſlikes "Eudoxus, Archytas and Menechmus, for endeavouring to bring down the doubling the "Cube to Mechanical Operations, for by this "means all that was good in Geometry would "be loſt and corrupted, it falling back again "to ſenſible things, and not riſing upward; and "conſidering immaterial and immortal Images, in which God being verſed is always God. "Several paſſages of (b) Ariſtotle inform us that Quantity, as diſengaged from whatever falls under the Senſes, is the Object of the Mathematicks. And the greateſt part of the Mathematicians own that this Object doth not exiſt out of our Intellect. Dr. (c) Barrow diſapproves the granting this. And his Cenſure falls expreſly on the Jeſuit Blancanus and Voſſius; but it is certain that Blancanus was in the right, and that he ought not to have been cenſured for any thing beſides aſſerting the poſſibility of the exiſtence of the Globe and Triangle &c. of the Geometricians: (d) Ultimò dici poteſt: hæc entia eſſe poſſibilia quis enim neget Angelum, aut Deum ea poſſe efficere? There is no need of a long diſcourſe to ſhew that it is impoſſible that that Globe, that Triangle, &c. ſhould really exiſt; we need only remember that ſuch a Globe placed on a Plane, will not touch it any where but in an indiviſible Point, and that rolling on the Plane, it will touch it always in a ſingle Point. From whence it will reſult, that it muſt be wholly compoſed of non-extended Parts; but that is impoſſible, and manifeſtly includes this Contradiction that an Extenſion ſhould exiſt and not be extended. It will exiſt according to the ſuppoſition, and it will not be extended, ſince it will not be at all diſtinct from a Being not extended. All Philoſophers agree that the material cauſe is not diſtinct from its effect; wherefore what would be compoſed of non-extended Parts, would not be diſtinct from them: But whatever is the ſame thing with a non-extended being, is neceſſarily a non-extended thing. Our Divines when they teach that the World was produced out of nothing, do not mean that it is compoſed of nothing: The Word nothing doth not ſignify the Material cauſe of the World, materiam ex qua; but the ſtate antecedent to the Creation of the World, which they call terminum a quo, and they acknowledge that taking the Word nothing in the firſt ſenſe, it is abſolutely impoſſible that the World ſhould have been made of it. It is not more extravagant to aſſert that the World was made of nothing as of its material cauſe, than to affirm that a Foot of Extenſion is compoſed of non-extended Parts. It is not therefore poſſible that an Angel, or God himſelf ſhould ever produce the Triangle, the Plane, the Circle, the Globe &c. of the Geometricians; and therefore Blancanus deſerved on this head to be cenſured.

I leave my Readers to determine whether my Cenſure of the laſt paſſage of the Chevalier de Meré is well grounded.

(A) Flouriſhed ——— towards the 95 Olympiad.] Mr. Moreri is guilty of a Fault in ſaying plainly (e) that Zeuxis lived in the 78th Olympiad; for he ought not to have been ignorant that Pliny (f), who ſpecified the Chronology of this Painter, (g) Namely in the fourth Year of the 95th Olympiad, refutes thoſe who have placed it in the 89th. I am ſurprized that Scaliger hath not obſerved this in his Note on the place of Euſebius, which makes Zeuxis to Flouriſh in the 78th Olympiad. Euſebius deſerved to be reprehended; by Reaſon it is undeniable, without giving the Lye to almoſt all thoſe who ſpeak of Zeuxis, that he was very intimately known to Archelaus King of Macedonia. But there were two of the Name of Archelaus, and the firſt not having began his Reign, according to Euſebius's Chronology, before the beginning of the 87th Olympiad, Zeuxis muſt be arrived at a very Remarkable Old Age, if his Flouriſhing Condition fell in the 78th Olympiad, and yet he Worked at Archelaus's Court. I own indeed they are not incompatible things; but however Euſebius was too forward; he ought to have referred Zeuxis to the Reign of this Macedonian King. I ſhall obſerve by the by, that the manner of the Ancients placing the Chronology of illuſtrious Men, naturally tends to Confuſion. The Year of their Birth and that of their Death ought to be ſpecified, and not the time when they flouriſhed; for that is loſe and uncertain, it advances forwards or goes back according to Tempers and Opportunities: Some are at the higheſt Pitch of their Reputation at 30. Others don't reach it till the Age of 60. Which makes me obſerve the Proof that Pliny uſes againſt thoſe who place Zeuxis in the 89th. Olympiad. He refutes them by Reaſon that it is an Olympiad wherein the Painter who taught Zeuxis, muſt be placed. This Reaſon may paſs, conſidering the time when Zeuxis appears in Pliny: But if we alter the Text from the 89th to the 79th Olympiad as Father Hardouin hath done on the Credit of the Manuſcripts, Pliny's Argumentation will ſcarce appear juſt; he will refute thoſe, who ſay that Painter Flouriſh'd in the 79th Olympiad, he will refute them, I ſay, by ſhewing that to be he time where the Maſter of Zeuxis ought to be placed. But why muſt this time be aſſigned to him? Becauſe Zeuxis did not ſignalize himſelf before the end of the 95th Olympiad. This is a weak Reaſon. Muſt not a Painter grow Famous till 60 Years after his Apprentiſhip? Wherefore I ſhould rather chooſe the ordinary Reading, than that of the Manuſcripts in the King's Library. I don't impute to ſuch a Learned Man as Father Hardouin what I am to ſay; his Printers muſt have forgot ſome Numbers. He pretends that Suidas agrees with Pliny on the time of Zeuxis, ſeeing Suidas building on Ariſtotle places the Birth of this Painter in the 86th Olympiad and makes him Flouriſh in Iſocrates's time. A little after he refutes the vulgar Reading of Pliny concerning the 89th Olympiad, by Reaſon that it is certain even by Virtue of what he juſt before cited from Suidas that Zeuxis died in the 89th Olympiad. I am ſure that if my Eyes don't deceive me, Father Hardouin's Printers have confounded the Numeral Letters of the Original.

As for the reſt I would not depend too much on the preciſion of Pliny; (h) it ſeems to me ill placed. There is no need of being ſo nice about the time of the Reputation of a great Man, and it were eaſy to prove, from this Author's own Words, that he had been more exact, if he had ſpecified the Chronology ſomewhat more generally. For what

(a) Id. ib.

(b) Voſſius de ſcient. Mathematicis pag. 4. & ſeq. quotes them.

(c) Iſaac Barrow lect. 5. pag. 84.

(d) Blancanus ubi ſupra pag. 6.

(e) Mr. Hofman has committed the ſame fault.

(f) Mr. Felibien pag. 66 of his I. Entret. ſur les vies & ſur les ouvrages des peintres places Zeuxis in the 95. Olympiad; but the Printer has committed a fault in making this Olympiad anſwer to the Year of the World 583. It ſhould be 3583. Voſſius de 4. art. popul. places him alſo in the 95. Olympiad.

(g) I don't mean with the utmoſt exactneſs. See the following marginal Note.

(h) Ab hoc (Apollodoro) artis fores apertas Zeuxis Heracleotes intravit, Olympiadis nonageſimæ quintæ anno quarto, audentemque jam aliquid penicillum (de hoc enim adhuc loquimur) ad magnam gloriam perduxit, à quibuſdam falſo in octogeſima nona Olympiade poſitus, cum fuiſſe neceſſe eſt Demophilum Himeræum & Neſeam Thaſium, quoniam utrius eorum diſcipulus fuerit ambigitur. Plin. l. 35. c. 9. p. m. 198. 199.

his Country is (B) a little confuſed. Painting was then in the firſt Degree of its Luſtre: And he raiſed it from the beginning of Reputation to which Apollodorus had brought it, to a great perfection. Some Authors tell us † that it was he who invented the manner of (C) diſpoſing lights and ſhadows; and it is agreed on all Hands that he excelled in Colouring. Ariſtotle found Fault with his Pictures for not expreſſing the Paſſions, and yet Pliny β teſtifies the contrary of his Picture of Penelope, in which, ſaith he, Zeuxis ſeems to have Painted her Manners. He acquired immenſe γ Riches; and once made a ſhew of them during the Celebration of the Olympick Games, where he appeared in a Cloak Embroidered with Gold Letters expreſſing his Name. After he became ſo Rich, he would no longer ſell his Works; but gave them away, and freely ſaid, that he did not know how to ſet a price on them equal to their Value. But before this time he obliged People to pay for the ſight of them; and none were admitted to ſee his Helena on any other Condition than ready Δ Money; whence in raillery the Wits called that Picture, Helena the Curtezan. He made no ſcruple ‖ of placing under her portraicture the three Verſes of the Iliad, where Homer relates that Priamus, and the venerable Old Men of his Council agreed, that the Greeks and Trojans were not to blame, to expoſe themſelves for ſo long a time to ſo many Evils for the ſake of Helena, whoſe Beauty equalled that of the Goddeſſes. I cannot well determine whether this Helena of Zeuxis was the ſame that was at Rome in Pliny's time, or that † which he made for the Inhabitants of Crotona, to be placed in Juno's Temple. It will not be improper to recite here what Zeuxis required from the Crotonians with reſpect to that Picture. They had by the Power of Money prevailed on him to come to them, in order to get a great Number of his Paintings, with which they intended to adorn their Temple; and when he imparted to them his deſign what doth he mean by this fourth Year of the 95th Olympiad? Would he be underſtood that before that time Zeuxis lived in obſcurity, and did not begin to make himſelf known before that Year? But this is not a proper way of ſpecifying the time when any Perſon flouriſhed; ought it to be noted with reſpect to a Reputation of ſome Duration; and if Pliny had done otherwiſe with regard to Zeuxis, he would have been very much miſtaken. In effect he informs us that this Painter did not give his Pieces for nothing, till after he was extreamly enriched. But when he gave them away Archelaus was alive; for the Preſent of his Pan to Archelaus is one of the Examples of his liberality related by Pliny. He had therefore acquired vaſt Riches and a great Reputation by Painting before the Death of the laſt Archelaus, that is, (a) before the end of the 94th Olympiad; and conſequently Pliny would have been ſtrangely miſtaken, if he had placed the beginning of his Reputation in the 4th Year of the 95th Olympiad. For my part, I believe that the middle way betwixt Euſebius and Pliny ought to be taken, the rather becauſe we Read in Plutarch, (b) that this great Painter floriſhed when Pericles cauſed a great Number of Publick Edifices to be built, the ſupervifal of which he entruſted to Phidias. But without alledging that Pliny (c) places Phidias in the 84th Olympiad, it is certain that Pericles cauſed the Erection of thoſe ſtructures to be made ſeveral Years before his Death, which happened in the 87th Olympiad. Wherefore it doth not appear that Pliny had a great deal of Reaſon to refute thoſe who placed Zeuxis in the 89th Olympiad, and to make him then but a Young Diſciple.

(B) Of his Country is a little Confuſed.] For tho' the Teſtimony of Tzetzes (d), who makes him a Native of Epheſus, ſhould not make us doubt that he was Born at Heraclea, ſince (e) Cicero (f) Pliny, and (g) Ælian agree in affirming it; it is not a little perplexing to chooſe out of ſuch a great Number of Cities which bore the Name of Heraclea, that wherein Zeuxis came in the World. Some (h) Conjecture that it was Heraclea near Crotona in Italy.

(C) Who invented (i) the manner of diſpoſing lights and ſhadows.] The Glory of invention being that on which Mankind ſets the higheſt Value, Moreri ſhould have imparted this place of Quintilian to his Reader. Inſtead of which he aſſures us, that the Art of Shadows, in the charming Pieces of Zeuxis, exceeded all price. Which is on the one ſide to forget the principal part, and on the other to ſtretch the thing too far. He forgot to tell us that Zeuxis was the Inventer of the mixture of lights and ſhadows in Pictures; and without any ground he ſaith, that the Art of ſhadows rendred Zeuxis's Pieces ineſtimable. His miſtake happened thus. He had read in (k) an Author from whom he took ſeveral things, that it was obſerved of Zeuxis that tho' his pieces, wherein the Art of ſhadows appeared firſt of all, exceeded all manner of price, which reduced him to the neceſſity of giving them gratis; yet he was Guilty of the Fault of repreſenting the Heads (l) larger than they really were, as he did alſo moſt of the Members: In which Quintilian (m) obſerves that he did no more than imitate Homer, whoſe Beautiful Ladies are robuſt, and in good caſe: Moreri, I ſay, had read this, and did not know how to make uſe of it. He ought to have extracted out of it what was ſaid againſt the Works of Zeuxis; but above all he ſhould have drawn out the Remark that the Art of ſhadows was the invention of this Painter. Or at leaſt after having left out this Obſervation, he ſhould not have connected the Words that go before it with thoſe that come after; for by that means he hath falſified the paſſage of la Mothe le Vayer, which wanted to be mended inſtead of being falſified. What makes me ſay ſo, is that this Famous Writer lays down for a certainty, that the true Reaſon why Zeuxis diſcontinued the Sale of his Pieces, was becauſe it was not poſſible for any Perſon to pay the full Value of them. But this is to take that Painter's (n) Words too literally, who probably did not think as he ſpoke: And if he had really believed it, he had been the moſt extravagant bragadocio in the World; and conſequently his Rodomontade ſhould not be alledged as a juſt Reaſon. It is very probable that the Pieces which he preſented after his being very Rich, were not better than thoſe which he formerly Sold; for it is not cuſtomary to labour more carefully what one has a mind to give gratis, than what one deſigns to ſell at a dear rate. To which purpoſe I remember it is commonly ſaid that an Abbot's Sermons are better whilſt he is aſpiring after a Biſhoprick than after he hath obtained it. And therefore if Zeuxis's Reaſon had been true, he ſhould have left off ſelling his Works ſooner than he did. I was ſurprized not to find Quintilian's Obſervation deſign of Painting Helena (D), they were extreamly pleaſed, becauſe they knew his principal Excellence lay in Painting of Women. He then asked them what Beautiful Virgins they had in their City, and they conducted him to the place where young Boys Learned their Exerciſes. Which gave him the moſt favourable opportunity poſſible of ſeeing if they were fine and clean ſhaped throughout, by Reaſon they were ſtark Naked; and he appearing very well pleaſed, they gave him to underſtand, that he might judge thereby whether they had Beautiful Virgins in their City, ſince they had the Siſters of thoſe very Young Boys whom he moſt admired. He then deſired to ſee the moſt Beautiful, and the Council of the City having ordered all the Virgins to come together to the ſame place, that Zeuxis might have his free choice, he ſelected five; and taking from each of them what ſhe had moſt charming, he formed the Picture of Helena. Theſe five Maids were highly extolled by the Poets on the Topick of † their Charms (F) having obtained the Suffrage of the very Perſon in the World, who beſt underſtood Beauty, and accordingly their Names did not fail of being Conſecrated to Poſterity, tho' I don't believe any Track of them is left. Cicero, who informs us of all theſe particulars, hath left his Reader to gueſs that the Painter would ſee thoſe young Beauties ſtark naked: But Pliny * expreſly tells us ſo, and that before he choſe the Five, he had ſeen all of them in that Condition. It is indeed true, that he ſays Zeuxis worked for the Agrigentins, and not for the Crotoniates; and that he doth not name the Picture: This being excepted, 'tis plain he relates the very ſame Story with Cicero. I muſt not forget that ‖ Zeuxis diſputing † Luminum umbrarumque inveniſſe rationem, traditur. Quintil. l. 12. c. 10.

---

* De poet. c. 6.

β Plin. lib. 35 cap. 9. pag. m. 199.

γ Id. ib.

Δ Ælian l. 4. c. 12.

‖ Valerius Maximus l. 3. c. 7.

† The ſame Author ſays that Zeuxis's Marſyas bound up was to be ſeen in the Temple of the Concord. Zeuxidis manus vidi, says Petronius, nondum vetuſtatis injuria victas.

(a) Euſebius places the Death of Archelaus in the 3. Year of the 94. Olympiad.

(b) In the life of Pericles.

(c) Lib. 34. c. 8.

(d) Chiliad 8. hiſt. 196.

(e) Lib. 2. de inventione.

(f) Plin. lib. 35. c. 9.

(g) Var. hiſt. l. 4. c. 12. & l. 14. c. 17. & 47.

(h) Harduin. in Plin. tom. 5. pag. 199. Jacob. Prouſt in Cicer. l. 2. de invent. Note that the Ancients, who were contented to call him Heracleotes, have done worſe than if we ſhould now a days denote a Mans native Country by ſaying that he was Born at Clermont.

(i) See Plutarch's paſſage concerning Apollodorus in the Remark G.

(k) La Mothe le Vayer, Letter 9. in the 12 Vol of the Edit. in 12. pag. m. 76.

(l) Pliny not quoted by La Mothe le Vayer informs us of it l. 35. c. 9. Deprehenditur tamen Zeuxis grandior in capitibus articuliſque.

(m) La Mothe le Vayer quotes li 12. Inſt. c. 18. but it ſhould be c. 10.

(n) Po donare opera ſu inſtituit, quod ea nullo ſa digno pre tio permu tari poſſ diceret. Plin. ub ſupra.

Obſervations amongſt thoſe which Felibien hath given us about Zeuxis. Mr. Hofman hath tranſlated Moreri's Expreſſion ſomewhat ambiguouſly; for the words, Donare opera ſua, INTER QUÆ UMBRÆ EMINEBANT, inſtituit, expreſſed as they are, ſeem to ſignifie that there was one of Zeuxis's Pieces in which he had painted the Shadows, which was the moſt excellent of his Works; beſides, the word eminebant doth not ſeem deſigned for umbra in the Painters Stile; for no places appear to have leſs relievo in Painting, than thoſe expreſſed by Shadows (a).

(D) Of Painting Helena.] It is an inexcuſable Omiſſion in Charles Stephens, Lloyd, Moreri and Hofman, to have ſaid nothing of the Picture of Helena, but that Zeuxis painted it, tho' the Ancients have related ſo many ſingularities concerning it. Charles Stephens hath only cited Pliny, who ſpoke of it by the by; he ſhould have quoted Cicero and Ælian, who have touched on the Circumſtances. Lloyd and Hofman don't cite otherwiſe, properly ſpeaking, than Charles Stephens: For tho' they refer us to Cicero, it is plain that it is with regard to Zeuxis in general, and not with reſpect to Helena's Picture; this, I ſay, is plain, becauſe they refer us alſo to Plutarch, in the Life of Pericles, where he doth not treat of this Picture. By reaſon of the Printer's Blunder, we find Cicero cited in Mr. Lloyd's Dictionary thus, 2. de Iuvent. and in that of Mr. Hofman alſo, lib. 2. de Juventut. inſtead of lib. 2. de Invent. which is enough to make ſeveral Readers believe that Cicero wrote de Juventute as well as de Senectute. (b) Voſſius hath reproved Bulengerus for ſaying in his Book of Painting, that it was Venus and not Helena whom Zeuxis painted, from the five living Originals placed before him: But in the correction of this Fault, Voſſius himſelf hath committed another; he ſays that Pliny doth no leſs expreſly than Cicero, ſpecify that Zeuxis painted Helen. But it is not true that Pliny mentions it; he ſpeaks in general of a Portraiture. Obſerve that Cœlius Rhodiginus committed a groſs Solleciſm (c) in ſpeaking of the Picture of Helena the Curtezan. Zeuxin, ſaith he, picturâ nobilem, inter cætera ejus artificii, haud parum multa quæ circumferuntur, & hominum deſideria vix explens, Helenam quandoque ab eo expictam ferunt, cui tantum ſanè attribuerit, ut non temere nec quemlibet, ac (ut Græci dicunt) ὡς ἔτυχε, ſpectatum admitteret, ni μισθὸν ἀργύρεον, id eſt propoſitam pecuniæ quantitatem erogaſſet. The like faults in Language have eſcaped the beſt Authors.

(F) Were highly extolled —— on the Topick of their Charms.] One might very well doubt whether the five Virgins whom Zeuxis choſe, were each of them handſomer than thoſe whom he did not chuſe. The reaſon of this ſcruple is, that he deſigned only to unite in one Body, the particular Beauties which he found ſeparated in thoſe five Virgins: to which purpoſe there was no neceſſity that they ſhould be all very fine; it was ſufficient that one had the Beauties which the other wanted. But who can deny that there are Women moderately handſome, who upon the compariſon of one ſingle part with the ſame in another, will ſurpaſs the greateſt Beauties. Wherefore it doth not appear that Cicero, or the Poets of whom he ſpeaks, were neceſſarily in the right to prefer thoſe five Crotonian Maidens, choſen by the Painter of Helena, to thoſe who were paſſed by. Perhaps the Painter rejected ſome, who wanted very little to render them perfect Beauties; but were not at all for his purpoſe, becauſe he found the ſame Beauties they were endued with, in a more exquiſite Degree in one of the five: After which it was enough for another of the five, tho' but indifferently handſome, to have that very ſmall thing which thoſe whom he refuſed wanted. The Queſtion, as is viſible to all, is not important, it may be laid aſide; and if any Perſon ſhould aſſert that Zeuxis choſe the five fineſt of them all, not by reaſon of its being neceſſary to his Deſign, but to enjoy a more agreeable Proſpect, I will not oppoſe him. One of the chief Grounds of this Story is what is commonly ſaid, that nothing in the World is perfect. And this holds true eſpecially in relation to Beauty: I refer my ſelf to the Criticiſms which handſom Women paſs upon one another, and yet they don't ſee every thing, as Zeuxis did, being, without doubt, reſolved not to follow the method of which Horace ſpeaks in his 2d. Satyr of the Firſt Book.

Ne corporis optima lynceis
Contemplere oculis, Hypſæa cæcior, illa
Quæ mala ſunt ſpectes. O crus! ô brachia! verum Depygis, naſuta, brevi latere ac pede longo eſt.

But after all, the Painter had no need of any thing beſides his own Imagination to draw the Picture of an accompliſh'd Beauty; for it is certain that our Ideas go beyond Nature. Ego ſic ſtatuo, nihil eſſe in ullo genere tam pulchrum quo non pulchrius id ſit unde illud ut ex ore aliquo quaſi imago exprimatur, quod neque oculis, neque auribus, neque ullo ſenſu percipi poteſt, cogitatione tantum & mente complectimur ——→ Nec verò ille artifex (Phidias) quum faceret Jovis formam aut Minervæ, contemplabatur aliquem è quo ſimilitudinem duceret, ſed ipſius in mente inſidebat ſpecies pulchritudinis eximia quædam, quam intuens, in eaque defixus, ad illius ſimilitudinem artem & manum dirigebat (d). It would not be more impoſſible to find as compleat Men as the Heroes of Romances, ting the Prize of Painting (F) with Parrhasius lost it in the following manner. Zeuxis painted some Grapes so extraordinary well, that the Birds flew down to peck at them. And Parrhasius painted a Curtain so artfully, that Zeuxis taking it for a real one, drawn before his Antagonist's Work, asked with the utmost assurance, why they did not immediately draw the Curtain, in order to shew what Parrhasius had done. And having found his mistake, he confessed himself outdone, since he had only deceived Birds, whilst Parrhasius had imposed on the very Masters of the Art. Another time he painted a Boy loaded with Grapes, and the Birds accordingly resorted thither; at which this Artist being displeased, ingenuously owned that his Work was not sufficiently finished, since if the Boy had been as naturally expressed as the Grapes, the Birds would have been afraid of him. We are told † that he wiped out the Grapes and only kept the Figure, in which he had the least succeeded. Archelaus King of Macedonia, made use of Zeuxis's Pencil for the Embellishment of his Palace; on which occasion Ælian || presents us with a good Reflection of Socrates. One of this Painter's best Pieces was Hercules strangling some Dragons in his Cradle in the sight of his affrighted Mother: but he himself preferred his Athlet, or Wrestler, before the rest, and under it (G) placed a Verse which afterwards

---

* [illegible] Cicer. l. 2. de invent.

* Tantum diligentiæ ut Agrigentinis facturus tabulam, quam in templo Junonis Laciniæ publice dicarent, inſpexerit virgines eorum nudas & quinque elegerit, ut quod in quaque laudatiſſimum eſſet pictura redderet. Plin. l. 35. c. 9.

‖ Id. Plin. l. 35. c. 10.

(a) See Voſſius de Graphice pag. 69.

(b) De Graphice pag. 69. in libro de 4 artib. popular.

(c) Cœlius Rhodiginus antiq. lect. lib. 19. cap. 27. pag. m. 1086.

(d) Cicero in Oratore, init.

† Senec. Controv. [illegible] || Ælian. Var. Hist. l. 14. c. 17.

Romances, than to find as beautiful Heroines as those of the same fabulous Country. This is so true, that when Authors would in few words represent a Person perfectly beautiful, they content themselves with saying, that they surpass the fictitious Ideas of Poets and Painters (a).

(F) Zeuxis disputing the prize of Painting with Parrhasius.] The Fact relating to the Birds which Zeuxis deceived by his Painted Grapes is commonly ted after a very confused manner. But if Pliny were well consulted, Authors would not fall into that confusion; for they would there see that Zeuxis painted two several Pieces which related to this fact and that each had its particular Adventure. I don't take notice of what several Authors relate, that Zeuxis himself attempted to draw Parrhasius's Curtain; for Pliny doth not tell the Story so: But that alteration of Circumstances is too inconsiderable to mention it. There is much more reason to think it strange, that Moreri's Dictionary should say nothing of the Challenge or Wager of these two Painters, and that Lloyd and Hofman have given but a very small hint of it. As for what relates to the other Piece, wherein the Boy carried Grapes, Mr. Moreri hath mention'd it in a manner which cannot redound to his Honour, by reason that he hath omitted the principal Circumstances, not having given the least hint of the Judgment which Zeuxis himself made of this Piece; Mr Hofman hath not forgotten this, but he makes use of a Phrase which he ought intirely to have suppressed: eadem ingenuitate, saith he, processit (Zeuxis) iratus operi ac dixit. These words are Pliny's, and are extraordinary proper in the Original, where they relate to the Story of the Wager, that is to say, to Pliny's Narrative, with what ingenuity Zeuxis owned that he was outdone. But when in an Article where there is nothing of this Ingenuity, we are informed that Zeuxis acknowledged with the same ingenuity, &c. it throws us into impenetrable Obscurities, where we are left with room only to conjecture, that the Author gives us a very imperfect passage. Most Abbreviators are subject to this fault (b). But Mr. Hofman is on this Head much more excusable than Mr. Lloyd; for the last having retained the Phrase, eadem ingenuitate processit, which he found in Charles Stephens, might easily think that it concern'd a particular to which the Reader of Charles Stephens was referred. But Mr. Lloyd hath suppressed this Reference, and by this means hath encreased the obscurity of his Article. Not that I pretend wholly to excuse Charles Stephens, for his ut in Parrhasio supra vidimus, could not give him a right to make use of these words, eadem ingenuitate processit, because he had not been speaking of the success of the Wager. The Article of Zeuxis is much better in (c) Calepin, than in all the Dictionaries which I have just mention'd. But I have not found any Author, who hath worse expressed the Dispute betwixt these two Painters than he (d), who makes the greatest figure in the Commentary variorum on Valerius Maximus. He affirms that Parrhasius painted some Birds on a Cloth, so very naturally, that Zeuxis fearing the judgment of the Birds, with a modest ingenuity gave up the Cause. I am very much mistaken if his Phrase, Zeuxis alitum judicium timens is not a corruption of Pliny's words, Zeuxis alitum judicio tumens; and if so, what greater Instance can there be of the Alterations made in the Thoughts of Authors?

Let us remember that Lancelotti of Perugia, takes all that is said of these two Pictures to be fabulous. He doth not believe that the Birds pecked at Zeuxis's Vine, nor that Zeuxis mistook for a real Curtain that of Parrhasius. It is thus that he clears himself of the Objection of those who have a mean Opinion of the Moderns; he denies the Fact; a very convenient way of solving Difficulties. (e) Oh, Zeusi con l'uva dipinta, dite voi, trasse gli uccelli a beccarla, il che non habbiamo d'alcuno de' nostri mentovati di sopra. Gia io hò dato dentro con un libro di Farfalloni contra gli antichi Historici, & bocci rotto, come suol dire il Volgo, un paio di scarpe, intendendola come vogliono i presenti o' posteri bell' Ingegni, è però non temo, che sono millanterie della Grecia, e Farfalloni di Plinio, e quello dell'uva, e quelli de gli animali, che dessero segno di riconoscere altri della loro specie fatti di colore per naturali. Mr. Perrault full as zealous for the Moderns as Lancelotti is, hath hit upon a more solid Answer; for he alledges the like performances of a fresh date, which also prove that the nicety of painting doth not consist in that. His words are: (f) "'Tis storied that Zeuxis represented some Grapes so naturally, that the Birds flew down to peck at them. But where is the surprizing Miracle of this? A world of Birds have killed themselves against the Heaven of Ruel's Perspective by attempting to pass beyond it, without our ever being surpriz'd at it, and even this hath not much redounded to the praise of that Perspective—— (g) Some time since, going by the English Nuns, I was an Eye-witness of an Adventure full as Honourable to the Art of Painting, as the Story of Zeuxis's Grapes, and much more diverting. A new painted Picture was set to dry in Mr. Le Brun's Yard, the Door of which was open; in the fore-part of the piece a great Thistle was perfectly well represented. An honest Country Woman went by with her Ass, which seeing the Thistle, briskly ran into the Yard, threw down the Woman, who in vain strove to hold him in by his Halter, and if a couple of lusty young Fellows had not each of them bestowed on him fifteen or twenty Blows with a Cudgel to force him to retire, he had eaten the Thistle, I mean that it being newly painted, he would have licked off all the Painting with his Tongue—— Pliny also relates that Parrhasius so naturally counterfeited a Curtain, that Zeuxis himself was deceived by it. Cooks, in our days, have a hundred times laid hold of Partridges and Capons naturally represented, in order to spit them; and what followed? The Company Laughed, and the Picture remained in the Kitchin.

(G) Under it placed a Verse which became famous.] If we believe Plutarch (b), this Verse was placed

(a) Lateri applicet meo mulierem omnibus simulacris emendatiorem Petronius. Spondebatque dicam cui nitor ignotus oris, Membrorumque modus qualem nec carmina fingunt Semideis. Claudian. de laudib. Stilicon. l. 1.

(b) Some Instances of it may be seen in Gronovius's Book de pernicie Judæ. See the Nouvelles de la Republ. des lettres 1684. for May art. 6.

(c) The Quotation out of Pliny, ought to be mended. It should be 53 instead of 35. Charles Stephens and Father Cantel in his Valerius Maximus in usum Delph. quote. l. 55. (d) His Name is Oliverius. See Valerius Maximus Variorum of Leyden 1655. pag. 314.

(e) Secondo Lancelotti da Perugia Abbate Olivetano, l'Hoggidi parte 2. disinganno 15. pag. 308.

(f) Perrault, Parallele des anciens & des modernes tom. 1. p. 136. Dutch Edit.

(g) Id. ib. pag. 137.

(h) Plut. de gloria Atheniens. pag. 346.

which became famous β. It is not improbable that he highly valued his γ Alcmena, since he presented it to the Agrigentines. He did not aim at (H) hastily finishing his Works. It is said that having painted an Old Woman, he fell into such an extravagant Fit of laughter at the sight of that Picture, that he died of it, as (I) Verrius Flaccus δ relates. There is in Lucian a Description of a Piece of Zeuxis which deserves to be read: It represented a Female Centaur. I had collected several Particulars for this Article, which I suppress, on account of the Publication of Junius (K) de Pictura Veterum ‡. I shall here insert a Remark which was in the Additions to my Projet: It relates to a Book of (L) Carlo Dati. I shall not forget the first which I made in this Ar-placed under the Pieces of Apollodorus. He doth not say that Apollodorus himself put it there, as (a) Vossius and Father (b) Harduin aver; he saith, in general, that it was placed in the Works of Apollodorus, ᾧ τοῖς ἔργοις ἐπιγέγραπται, Μωμήσεταί τις μᾶλλον ἢ μιμήσεται. Cujus operibus inscriptum fuit, Facilius hoc culpabit quis quam imitabitur. This is not the only thing Plutarch ascribes to Apollodorus, instead of attributing it to Zeuxis as others do: He will have it also that Apollodorus invented Shadows in Painting. ἀνθρώπων πρῶτος ἐξευρὼν φθορὰν καὶ ἀπόχρωσιν σκιᾶς. Primus hominum invenit colorum temperationem diversorum & umbrae coloribus exprimendae rationem. The whole passage runs thus: Apollodorus the first Inventer of the tempering of Colours, and of the Art of expressing Shadows, was an Athenian, on whose Works was written,

'Tis easier to find fault with it,
Than to imitate it.

One of our (c) Poets shewing an equal assurance, saith of his Franciade in the following Verses,

Un lit ce livre pour apprendre,
L'autre le lit comme envieux:
Il est bien aisé de reprendre,
Mais mal aisé de faire mieux.

(H) He did not aim at hastily finishing his Works.] (d) Plutarch tells us that Zeuxis being informed that Agatarchus boasted of painting quick, and in a very short time, said, that as for his own part, he valued himself upon his slow performance, because that was the way to make his Works of a long duration. The same Plutarch, in another (e) Book, relates the Story, as if Zeuxis owned to some who reproached his sluggishness in working, That he was long in painting his Pieces, because they were designed for a long time. But all Writers make him answer, That he painted for Eternity: And thus this Thought has lately been applied to the Dictionary of the French Academy, in the Preface to that of Furetiere. Those who amplifie the boasting of this Painter, should tell us what Authority they have for it.

(I) As Verrius Flaccus relates.] He adds two Verses which allude to this Adventure, Nam quid modi facturus risu denique,

Ni pictor fieri vult qui risu mortuus est?

But if it be true that Zeuxis dy'd in this manner, how is it possible that so few Authors should mention it? Was there any thing so remarkable in all his life as this extraordinary death? Notwithstanding who, amongst the whole croud of Antients which have mentioned Zeuxis, only Verrius Flaccus informs us of this uncommon particular. And that by chance, and so improperly, that he is reprimanded by his Abbreviator Pompeius Festus, for inserting such a thing in a Work designed to treat of the signification of Words. I wish we had the Passage of Verrius Flaccus entire: What remains of it, was in the most deplorable condition in the World, before Joseph Scaliger applied his conjectural Criticisms to it. If Moreri and Hofman had known this, they would doubtless have mentioned it, as they should have done, and then they had given us the two Latin Verses a little more intelligible. Honest Ravisius Textor (f) hath not inserted our Painter in his Catalogue of those who died of Laughing; which is doubtless an involuntary Omission.

Observe that Simon Majolus, Bishop of Vulturara is very much mistaken in relation to this fact. Zeuxis Pictor, saith he (g), deformissimam spectans quandam picturam solutus in risum expiravit. Verrius alter pictor quod Anum quandam deformissimam pinxisset eandem mortem in risum solutus obiit, Rhodigino teste lib. 4. cap. 18. There is a very considerable Omission in what he saith of Zeuxis, and a very great mistake in the rest: For this pretended Painter Verrius, who died of Laughter, is a chimerical Person: Besides, Rhodiginus is also very ill cited. See the Margin (h); you will admire the Metamorphosis of the Thoughts transcribed by some Compilers, which is sometimes as surprizing as those of Ovid.

(K) On account of the Publication of Junius de Pictura Veterum.] I had rather refer to the excellent and Learned Collections of Junius, than heap up things which are to be found there. I take this opportunity to observe, that this Work of Junius Printed at Rotterdam by Reinier Leers, would perhaps have yet lain hidden in a Closet, if the Abbot Nicaise (i) had not made a thousand efforts to procure the Edition of it, which was forgotten to be told to the Publick in the Preface. This excellent Work is dedicated to the Abbot Bignon, one of the most illustrious Protectors which the Sciences at present have, who also by his Wit, Eloquence, and extent of Learning, worthily maintains the glory of the Name which he bears. Read that Epistle Dedicatory (k).

(L) It relates to a Book of Carlo Dati.] Here is the last piece of the Additions to my Projet: "Since the Printing of this Article, a Book "came into my hands, which would have "saved me a great deal of labour, if I had met "with it sooner. It is the Life of Zeuxis written in Italian by Carlo Dati, and Printed at "Florence in 1667, together with those of Parrhasius, Apelles and Protogenes. The Author hath "collected whatever he found relating to those "four Painters in the Works of the Ancients, "and hath very exactly connected the whole; "besides, he hath added to each Life, several Remarks, enriched with an excellent and "curious Erudition. Those which relate to the "Life of Zeuxis would afford me a great "deal of Matter, if I was not in the last Page "of my Prodromus. I shall only observe that they "have informed me of a particular of which Vossius was ignorant; that is, that Bullengerus was not "the first who said that Zeuxis Painted Venus "and not Helena, from the living Originals which "he selected out of the Beautiful Virgins of the "City. Volaterranus and John della Casa, before "him, mistook the one for the other; and what "is more, Lipsius hath somewhere said (l), that "it was Juno and not Helena that Zeuxis painted. I shall say by the by, that Carlo Dati "hath drawn up an Indictment against Pliny which "he hath not backed with good Evidence. He "believes that because the Temple of Juno Lacinia was near Crotona in Calabria, the Agrigentins did not cause Zeuxis to paint a Piece "in order to be Consecrated in that Temple. But "were not the Temple of Delphi, and that of

---

[illegible]

γ Mr. Moreri pag. 16. says Atalanta instead of Alcmena.

δ At the word Pictor.

‡ It was Printed since my Projet in the Year 1692.

(a) De Graphice pag. 13.

(b) In Plinium, tom. 1. pag. 200.

(c) Ron-[illegible]

(d) Plut. in vita Periclis pag. 159.

(e) Id. de multitudine amicorum pag. 94.

(f) See his Officina or Theatrum historicum. l. 2. c. 87.

(g) Simon Majolus dierum Canicularium colloq. 4. pag. 165. edit. Romanae 1597.

(h) Zeuxis in pictorem risu emortuum prodidit Verrius, dum anum a se pictam ridet affluentius. Coelius Rhodiginus lib. 4. c. 18. p. m. 207.

(i) Concerning his Officious humour towards Authors, and his Zeal for the promoting of Learning, see M. Nicole's Preface against the Quietists.

(k) It is very well written, and ascribed to Father de la Baune.

(l) Lips. monit. polit. lib. 1. cap. 1.

Article of my Project. It points out some general Imperfections (M) in Moreri's Dictionary.

ZIA, or ZEA, an Island of the Archipelago, one of the Cyclades, was anciently called Cea, or Ceos. It is a ten Thousand Paces from the Promontory of Attica, formerly call'd Sunium, and at present Capo delle Colonne. It was anciently part of Eubœa, but the Sea separated it, and washed away almost one fourth part of its length, which was (A) 500 ſtadia, or fixty two Thouſand five Hundred Paces a. In Strabo's time, the four Cities which had been in the Iſle of Cea, ‡ were reduced to two, one of which was called Julis, and the other Carthea. One of the two ruined Cities bore the Name of Coreſſus, and the other that of Pœeſſa. There was in the Neighbourhood of theſe two laſt Towns a Temple dedicated to Apollo Sminthens; and betwixt the Ruins of Pœeſſa and this Temple, was that of Minerva Nedufia, which Neſtor Conſecrated after his return from Troy *. I have elſewhere || noted the Names of ſome illuſtrious Perſonages born in the Iſle of Cea, and whatever relates to it with reſpect to Ariſteus the Inventer of Honey. I muſt add here, that a Woman of this Iſland invented the Art of ſpinning (B) the production of the Silk-Worms, and weaving it into Stuffs; and that it was the Cuſtom of the Inhabitants to poiſon themſelves as ſoon as they (C) arrived at a certain Age. The Port of Zea is one † of the ſecureſt Harbours in the Mediterranean, beſides, the Ships there take in freſh Water, Biſcuit and Wood. The Iſland pays to the Turk * ſeventeen Hundred Piaſtres for the Carafch, and two Thouſand five Hundred by way of Tenth. ‡ The Biſhop of Thermia ſpends half the Year in this Iſland, which hath at preſent a large City and a ruined Caſtle. Conſult Moreri's Dictionary in the Word Zea; to which word he ſhould have referred the Reader, rather than to that of Cea, when he ſet down the Word Z I A.

a Plinius lib. 4. cap. 12. pag. m. 477. ‡ Idem, ibid. ‡ Strabo lib. 10. pag. 333. See also Pliny ibid. * Strabo ibid. || In the Article Julis. † Guillet, Athenes ancienne & nouvelle pag. m. 55. * Spon, Voyage tom. 1. p. Dutch Edition. ‡ Baudrand, Geogr. tom. 1. pag. 25.

ZIEGLER

" Jupiter Olympius filled with the Gifts of all " ſorts of People, as at preſent our Lady of Loretto is filled with Ex Voto's from all Catholick Countries ?,,

When I Publiſhed what you have juſt read, I did not know that Taſſoni fell into the ſame Error with Juſtus Lipſius. Queſti fu colui, ſaith he, (a) ſpeaking of Zeuxis, che chiamato da gli Agrigentini, ò come hanno altri voluto da i (b) Protoniati, a fare il ritratto di Giunone, il copiò dalle fattezze piu belle di cinque vergine da loro elette fra un numero infinito, che ne vide d'ignude. The Italian is not leſs liable to equivocal ambiguities than the dead Languages: If a French Man ſhould place his words as they are in Taſſoni, one would think with Reaſon that he ſaid that Zeuxis ſaw naked an infinite number of Virgins, and that out of this great number, the Inhabitants of Agrigentum choſe five to ſerve as an Original for this Painter. But the Circumſtances of this Picture ſhould not be ſo related.

(a) Aleſſandro Taſſoni, Penſieri diverſi lib. 10. cap. 19. pag. 414.

(b) 'Tis doubtleſs an error of the Preſs inſtead of Crotoniati

(M) Some general Imperfections in Moreri's Dictionary.] I ſhall ſet down another Piece of my Project, tranſcribed from pag. 387. " I don't " pretend to propoſe this Article as a perfect " Model: The World will do me ſufficient juſtice, " if they find it exempt from ſome Faults which " prevail in Moreri. That Author's manner of " citing Books, is certainly a great fault; he heaps " up all his Quotations at the end of each Article, " without diſcovering that ſuch a thing was ſaid " by this, and ſuch an one by that Author; he " gives his Reader a great deal of trouble, ſince " he is ſometimes obliged to knock at five or ſix " Doors before he can find the Perſon with whom " he would ſpeak. This is a predominant fault " in ſeveral other Books, the conſequences of " which were very well known to a (c) very knowing " and judicious Writer, who hath lately only given " us the Hiſtory of the Roman Emperors. To this " I further add, that Mr. Moreri advances a thouſand things, which we either do not find at all " in his Citations, or which he confirms by no " Evidence, or which are curtailed by the Omiſſion of certain Circumſtances, which are the " moſt material parts of a Fact, afford the greater pleaſure. To conclude, I ſay, he doth not " always repreſent Perſons by the moſt remarkable paſſages of their Lives. And I think thoſe " Faults will not be diſcovered in my Article of " Zeuxis.

(c) Mr. de Tillemont.

(A) Which was 500 ſtadia, or ſixty two thouſand five hundred Paces.] Pliny affirms it: and Mr. Baudrand is miſtaken in affirming (d) on the Teſtimony of this Author, that the Circuit of the Iſle of Cea was formerly ſixty Thouſand Paces. There is a great difference betwixt the Circuit and length of an Iſland; however he ought to have follow'd the account of his Author without any diminution. He adds, that at preſent the Circuit of this Iſland is ſcarce 40 Thouſand Paces, the Sea having devoured part of it.

(d) Baudrand Geograph. tom. p. 25.

(B) A Woman of this Iſland invented the Art of ſpinning the production of the Silk-Worms.] Pliny and Solinus affirm it. (e) Ex hac (inſula) profectam delicatiorem feminæ veſtem, auctor eſt Varro. (f) Ceos quæ ut Varro teſtis eſt, ſubtilioris veſtis amicula arte laniſica ſcientia prima in ornamentum fœminarum dedit. What follows is more exact. (g) Telas araneorum modo texunt (bombyces) ad veſtem luxumque feminarum, quæ bombycina appellatur. Prima eas redordiri, rurſuſque texere invenit in Ceo Mulier Pamphila, Latoi filia, non fraudanda gloria excogitatæ rationis, ut denudet feminas veſtis. Ariſtotle (h) furniſhed Pliny with this Fact. Salmaſius (i) aſſerts that Ariſtotle's words ought to be underſtood of the Iſle of Cos, and that Pliny is miſtaken in underſtanding them of the Iſle of Ceos. His pretenſion is not utterly groundleſs, but it is not inconteſtable.

(e) Plin. lib. 4. cap. 12. pag. m. 477. (f) Solin. cap. m. 22. (g) Plin. lib. 11. cap. 22. pag. (h) Ariſtot. Hiſt. animal. lib. 5. cap. 19. pag. m. (i) Salm. in Solin. pag.

(C) The Cuſtom of the Inhabitants to poiſon themſelves aſſoon as they arriv'd at a certain Age.] It is pretended that they were obliged to it by a Law. Strabo, on this Subject, cites two Verſes of Menander, and believes that the Perſons who had paſſed the Age of 60, were obliged to conform to that Law, that a ſufficient ſtore of Proviſions might be left for the reſt of the Inhabitants. (k) Παρὰ τούτοις δὲ δοκεῖ τεθῆναί ποτε νόμος, οὗ μέμνηται καὶ Μένανδρος:

Καλὸν τὸ Κείων νόμιμόν ἐστι Φανία
Ὁ μὴ δυνάμενος ζῆν καλῶς, οὐ ζῇ κακῶς

Προσέταττε γὰρ ὡς ἔοικεν ὁ νόμος τοὺς ὑπὲρ ἑξήκοντα ἔτη γεγονότας κωνειάζεσθαι, τοῦ διαρκεῖν τοῖς ἄλλοις τὴν τροφήν. i. e. Apud hos lex poſita aliquando videtur, cujus meminit etiam Menander:

Optimum Ciorum inſtitutum eſt Phania
Qui non poteſt vivere bene, non vivat malè.

(k) Strabo lib. 10. pag.

Jubebat

ZIEGLER (JAMES) Profeſſor of Divinity, a Mathematician and Coſmographer

Jubebat enim, ut videtur, lex, eos qui ſexaginta annos exceſſiſſent, cicutam bibere, ut aliis victus ſufficeret. He alſo ſays that it was reported that the Inhabitants of that Iſle being beſieged by thoſe of Athens made a Decree, by which they Condemned all the Old Men to Death, upon which the Athenians retired. The Greek Word κονιάζεσθαι in Strabo ought to be changed into κωνειάζεσθαι, which ſignifies to drink the juice of Hemlock. This is Caſaubon's Conjecture (a), which he confirms by two paſſages, one out of Heraclides, and the other out of Ælian. The firſt of theſe Authors ſaith that the Air of the Iſle of Cea is ſo good, that Men, but more eſpecially Women, might live there to a great Age; but that they do not make any Advantage of this Favour of Nature, and before they ſuffer the Infirmities of a frail Old Age, they diſpatch themſelves out of the World ſome by the uſe of Poppy, and others by that of Hemlock. (b) Οὔσης δὲ ὑγιεινῆς τῆς νήσου καὶ εὐγήρων τῶν ἀνθρώπων, μάλιστα δὲ τῶν γυναικῶν, οὐ περιμένουσι γηραιοὶ τελευτᾶν, ἀλλὰ πρὶν ἀσθενεῖν ἢ πηρωθῆναί τι, οἱ μὲν μήκωνι, οἱ δὲ κωνείῳ ἑαυτοὺς ἐξάγουσι. Quum ſalubri cœlo fruatur hæc inſula, & extremam ſenectam attingere ibi hominibus detur, præſertim fœminis, non expectant tamen provectæ ætatis qui ſunt, fatum ſuum, ſed illud antevertunt priuſquam vel imbecillitas accedat, vel parte aliqua manci fiant, ita ut hi quidem papavere, illi vero cicuta ſibi ipſis vitam eripiant. As for Ælian, he affirms that thoſe who by Reaſon of a decrepit Age found themſelves incapable of doing Service to the Publick, Aſſembled together at a Feſtival and drunk the juice of Hemlock. (c) Νόμος ἐστὶ Κείων, οἱ πάνυ παρ' αὐτοῖς γεγηρακότες, ὥσπερ ἐπὶ ξένια παρακαλοῦντες ἀλλήλους, ἢ ἐπί τινα ἑορταστικὴν θυσίαν ἀθροισθέντες καὶ στεφανωσάμενοι, πίνουσι κώνειον. ὅταν ἑαυτοῖς συνειδῶσιν ὅτι πρὸς τὰ ἔργα τὰ τῇ πατρίδι λυσιτελοῦντα ἀχρεῖοί εἰσιν, ὑποληρούσης ἤδη τι αὐτοῖς καὶ τῆς γνώμης διὰ τὸν χρόνον. Conſuetudo eſt apud Ceos, ut ii, qui ſenio plane confecti ſunt, tanquam ad convivium ſe mutuo invitent, aut ad quoddam ſolenne ſacrificium conveniant, & coronati cicutam bibant: quum ſibi ipſis conſcii ſunt, ſe ad promovenda commoda patriæ inutiles amplius eſſe, animo jam ob ætatem delirare incipiente. Pinedo (d), Kuhnius (e), and Berkelius (f) approve of Caſaubon's Correction, and there is no Reaſon to doubt of it. Scaliger (g) citing the paſſage of Strab reads κωνειάζεσθαι, and not κονιάζεσθαι. Another of Caſaubon's Conjectures is that Stephanus Byzantinus (h), who relates the ſame particular with Strabo, but inſtead of telling us that the Old Men drank Hemlock juice, ſaith that they fought Duels together, ἀγωνίζεσθαι, in certamine dimicare, made uſe of a Copy of Strabo where the Reading runs thus κονίεσθαι or κονίζεσθαι in arenam deſcendere, and not κωνειάζεσθαι. Berkelius rejects this Conjecture on pretence (i) that it is contrary to the Practice of the Old Men of Ceos and the Teſtimony of the Hiſtorians; but he did not in the leaſt apprehend Caſaubon's thought; he fancied that Caſaubon ſuppoſed that this Word might be that of Strabo, whereas he ſhould have known that Caſaubon ſuppoſed the Copy of Stephanus Byzantinus to be corrupted. Mr. Kuhnius (k) offers another Conjecture, which is that the Reading in Strabo was ἀκονίζεσθαι to Drink Aconite: The change of which Word in to ἀγωνίζεσθαι might very eaſily happen. Pighius (l) had before him told us that the Text of Stephanus ought in this manner to be Corrected.

It remains that we examine whether this Practice of the Old Men was founded on an Order of the State, or barely on one of thoſe Cuſtoms, which being linked to the Notions of a Greatneſs of Soul, are almoſt as ſtrictly obſerved as the publick Edicts. We have ſeen that Strabo was of Opinion that there was an Edict, which obliged them to deſtroy themſelves after having paſt the Age of 60 Years. But there is a great deal of probability that he is miſtaken, for ſince the Air (m) of this Iſle was very healthful, and the Inhabitants lived very long, the Senate would have deprived themſelves of ſeveral robuſt Subjects, who were yet capable of ſerving their Country, if they had forced all thoſe who were Aged 61 Years to poiſon themſelves. And obſerve that the expreſſions of Heraclides inſinuate rather a Voluntary Cuſtom than an Obligatory Law. Obſerve alſo that Ælian's Words very clearly ſpecify decrepit Perſons, and not thoſe who had attained the Age of 61. All which Naturally tends to the Refutation of Strabo's Opinion. If it were true, we could at leaſt prove that this Edict was not in force in the Iſle of Cea in Tiberius's time. The Proof which Valerius Maximus hath given us of it, is ſufficient to diſcover to us the true ſtate of the caſe. Wherefore it will be convenient here to conſider the circumſtances of that Writer's Narrative: They will make appear to us that the Publick Authority did not interpoſe any farther than to permit thoſe to poiſon themſelves who were weary of living, but not to command thoſe who had paſſed a determined Age. Valerius Maximus before relating what he ſaw in the Iſle of Cea, Relates that at Marſeilles a poyſoning Liquor was kept by the Publick, and given to thoſe who offered ſatisfactory Reaſons to the Senate why they deſired to rid themſelves of their Lives. The Senate examined their Reaſons with a Temperament, which neither inclined to favour a paſſionate Inclination to dye, nor contradicted a juſt deſire of Death, whether to deliver one ſelf from the Perſecution of ill Fortune, or ſecure one ſelf from running the riſk of falling from proſperity. This was the Rule of the Senate, they forced no Body to poiſon himſelf, but granted a permiſſion to do it when they adjudged it proper: None could kill himſelf in form, and canonicamente without leave from the Sovereign. (n) Venenum cicuta temperatum in ea civitate publice cuſtoditur, quod datur ei, qui cauſas Sexcentis (id enim Senatus ejus nomen eſt) exhibuit, propter quas mors ſit illi expetenda: Cognitione virili benevolentia temperata, quæ nec egredi vita temere patitur & ſapienter excedere cupienti celerem fati viam præbet; ut vel adverſa, vel proſpera nimis uſis fortuna (utraque enim finiendi ſpiritus, illa ne perſeveret, hæc ne deſtituat, rationem præbet) comprobato exitu terminetur. The Author adds, that he believed this Practice at Marſeilles to be borrowed from Greece (o); for I have obſerved, ſaith he, that it is alſo in uſe in the Iſle of Cea. He tells us that going into Aſia with Sextus Pompeius, and paſſing by the City of Julis, he was preſent at the laſt hours of a Lady Aged above 90 Years. She had declared to her Superiors the Reaſons which induced her to depart this Life, and after that ſhe kept her ſelf ready to drink the Poyſon; and believing that Pompey's preſence would add a great luſtre to the Ceremony, ſhe cauſed him to be moſt humbly ſupplicated to be preſent. He granted the Favour, and with the moſt preſſing inſtances eloquently exhorted her to conſent to live, but all in vain. She (p) thanked him for his kindneſs, and conjured not ſo much the Gods whom ſhe was going to, as thoſe whom ſhe quitted to reward him. She Declared that ſhe had been always Favoured by Fortune, and would not expoſe her ſelf to the reverſe of it. (q) Ceterum ipſa hilarem Fortunæ vultum ſemper experta, ne aviditate lucis triſtem intueri cogar: reliquias ſpiritus mei proſpero fine, duas filias & ſeptem nepotum gregem ſuperſtitem relictura, permuto. She left two Daughters and Seven Grand Children, and having exhorted them to a mutual Agreement, &c. with an undaunted Courage She took the Glaſs which contained the Poyſon, and after recommending her ſelf to Mercury to obtain a Happy and ſucceſsful paſſage, She greedily drank up the Mortal Liquour. (r) Cohortata deinde ad concordiam ſuos, diſtributo eis patrimonio, & cultu ſuo ſacriſque domeſticis majori filiæ traditis; poculum, in quo venenum temperatum erat, conſtanti dextra arripuit. Tum defuſis Mercurio delibamentis, & invocato numine ejus, ut ſe placido itinere in meliorem ſedis infernæ deduceret partem; cupido hauſtu mortiferam traxit potionem. I omit the Reſt of

---

(a) Caſaub. comment. in hunc locum Strabonis pag. m. 165.

(b) Heraclides de Politiis pag. m. 20. Note that Berkelius in Stephanum Byzantin. pag. 421. falſely ſuppoſes that Heraclides ſaid that the men were particularly obliged to execute the Law.

(c) Ælian. var. hiſtor. lib. 3. cap. 37.

(d) In Steph. Byzant. pag. 731.

(e) In Ælian. ubi ſupra.

(f) Ubi ſupra.

(g) Scaliger in Varronem de ling. Lat. lib. 6. pag. m. 118.

(h) Steph. Byzant. voce Ἰουλίς.

(i) Hæc quanquam ſpecioſa videntur, minime approbanda judico, cum antiquo ritui & hiſtoriæ plane ſint contraria. Berkel. ubi ſupra.

(k) Kuhnius in Ælian. ubi ſupra pag. 233.

(l) Pighius in Valer. Maximum lib. 2. cap. 6.

(m) See the paſſage of Heraclides above.

(n) Valer. Maximus lib. 2. cap. 6. n. 7. in ext. pag. m. 180.

(o) E Græcia tralatam inde exiſtimo, quod illam ETIAM in inſula Ceo ſervari animadverti. Id. ib. n. 8.

(p) Tibi quidem, inquit, Sex. Pompei Dii magis, quos relinquo, quam quos peto, gratias referant: quia nec hortator vitæ meæ, nec mortis ſpectator eſſe faſtidiſti. Id. ib. pag. 181.

(q) Id. ib.

(r) Id. ib.

grapher, Flourished in the XVI. Century. He was born at Landshut (A) in Bavaria. He is said † to have been a Mathematical Professor in the University of Upsal. Paul Jovius thought him a Swede, (B) probably from Ziegler's Writing some Books concerning that Country. But that Proof will be scarce sufficient to those who should only say that he resided there some time; for he declares himself that he compiled his Work concerning Scandinavia from (C) Memoirs Communicated to him whilst at Rome. The Bishop of Passau, ‡ a very Learned Prelate, was his Mecenas, and provided him with a Tomb in his Episcopal City at his own expence γ. Ziegler retired to this Prelate's Court, when the Terror of the Ottoman Arms obliged him to leave Vienna were he had taught a long time δ. He died in August 1549. and not in 1559, as Moreri says. The Reading of several of his Books is prohibited by the Inquisition; and that of others permitted only on Condition that some things be Corrected in them, and that the note of Condemned Author be always placed by the Word Ziegler §. Some Protestant Authors ‖ acknowledge him their Brother. In the Year 1523. he was strongly inclined to turn Protestant, as appears by a Tract, which he wrote at Rome in (D) Favour of Erasmus against James Stunica, and which was Printed at Basil by John Froben that Year. What he wrote on

* Schefferus in Suecia literata p. m. 255. He quotes Messenius in Sueopentap. c. 6.

‡ His Name was Wolfgang, and he was of the House of the Counts of Salm.

γ Gaspar Bruchius, de Laureaco & Patavio Germanico lib. 2. p. 173. 174. & in epitaphio Jacobi Ziegleri ib. pag. 322.

† Thuan. lib. 6. pag. m. 118.

§ See the Index librorum prohibitorum page 546. Edition 1667.

‖ See Mollerus hypomn. ad Sueciam literatam pag. 441.

of the Relation; and had not cited so much, if it had not been very rare to find in the heathen Writers, the manner of their recommending themselves to the Gods at the Point of Death. I don't remember to have ever found that they asked Pardon for their Sins. Nor do we see that this Lady of the Isle of Cea put up that Petition.

It is observable by the by that the Heathens admired less those, who destroyed themselves in their misfortunes, than those who rid themselves of Life, when under prosperous circumstances, only to escape the Inconstancies of Chance. A Man was no sooner prepossest with the Maxims of the Stoicks, but he lookt upon those as Cowards who were fond of Life during Bodily Infirmities or disgraceful misfortunes. In such cases Death was accounted the only Remedy, which one ought to have recourse to without Murmuring or Complaining, and it was pretended that none, but those who loved Life, would accuse the Gods and Men. Otho when dying made use of this Maxim. (a) Plura de extremis loqui, pars ignaviæ est: præcipuum destinationis meæ documentum habete, quod de nemine queror; nam incusare deos vel homines, ejus est, qui vivere velit.

(A) He was Born at Landshut in Bavaria.] And not at Landau, as we are told in the French Translation of Thuanus cited by Mr. Teissier (b). The same thing is asserted with the Addition of a fresh Error in Moreri's Dictionary; for it is there specify'd that James Ziegler was Born at Landau in the lower Alsace. The Dutch Editions, and that of (c) Paris have corrupted this place instead of Correcting it; for they have changed the lower Alsace into the lower Germany. Thuanus (d) called him Lindauus, which rather signifies that Ziegler was of Lindau, than of Landau. However it is, we ought to take it for granted that when Gesner (e) and several others call him Landavum Bavarum, they mean that he was born at Landshut. Paul Jovius is mistaken in making him a Swede. I shall produce his Words in the following Remark. His Error was followed by several, as Mr. Mollerus observes in his Additions to John Scheffer's Suecia literata pag 441. The Learned Mr. Schurtzfleisch (f), tho' none of Jovius's followers, represents our Ziegler Originally a Swede. I don't know any more than Mr. Mollerus whether he is in the right.

(B) Paul Jovius thought him a Swede, probably from his Writing some Books concerning that Country.] He quotes him with great Elogies on what he wrote concerning the Cruelty of King Christiern II. (g) Quis eò Latinas literas, quo Romana arma penetrare nequiverint, pervenisse non miretur? Hic enim in terra Gothica natus, ac educatus, adeo exactè, puriter & facunde, Christierni Daniæ, atque Norvegiæ Regis immanitatem, neque ipsi sanguinario Tyranno diu latam, neque demum Diis ultoribus neglectam perscripsit, ut eruditis gentibus pudori esse possit; quod Latinæ facundiæ fruges, sub Cimmerio cœlo pene felicius ac uberius, quam sub hoc benigniore, ac temperatiore plaga proveniant. Schefferus observes that (h) this Work was Printed at Strasburg by Wendelin Rhiel in 1536. Gesner saith the same, but observes that it was Printed with some other Books of the same Author, and with a description of the Holy Land Written by Wolffgang of Weissenburg: (i) Terra sancta, quam Palæstinam nominant, Syriæ, Arabiæ Ægypti, & Schondiæ doctissima descriptio, una cum singulis tabulis earundem regionum topographicis. Item, Holmiæ plane regiæ urbis calamitosissima clades ab eodem descripta: cujus libri & hic titulus est: Christierni secundi regis Danmarchiæ crudelitas perpetrata in proceres Sueciæ & populum Holmensem. Volumen impressum Argentorati apud Wend. Rihelium, 1536. in fol. cum alia descriptione Terræ sanctæ juxta ordinem alphabeti, ad scripturam proxime directa, authore Wolffgango Weissenburgio. This History of the Cruelties of Christiern is inserted in the 2d. Tome of the Scriptores historiæ Germanicæ, Printed at Basil by the care of Schardius in 1574. It was annexed by Wolfius, with Ziegler's Scandinavia, to Albertus Krantzius's historia regnorum septentrionalium, of the Francfort Edition in 1583. (k) The index librorum probibitorum informs us that the Description of the Holy Land, &c. was Printed at Strasburg apud Petrum Olipionem in 1532. Gesner was ignorant of this Edition.

(C) That he compiled his Work concerning Scandinavia, from Memoirs communicated to him whilst at Rome.] I shall set down a piece of his Preface, extracted out of Gesner's Bibleotheque in the 368 leaf. Ego qui de locis Septentrionalibus, veteri historiæ incognitis, commentarium editurus sum, atque ita ut illa loca rebus his, unde regiones beatæ dicuntur, affluentia sim ostensurus, ut hæc plena fide apud auditorem reponam, necessario quoque præfabor quibus auctoribus constet susceptum opus. Romæ dum essem, fuerunt in urbe continuo tempore, duo Archiepiscopi Nidrosienses regni Norduegiæ, prior quidem gente Danus, &c. Post hujus mortem substitutus ei Olavus Romam venit, quem frequenter conveni, & didici reliqua Norduegiæ quanta tradi ab uno potuerunt. Gothiam vero, Sueciamque, & Finlandiam, supraque has ad Boream Laponiam extensam, sed etiam Gronlandiæ Chersonesum & insulam Tylen accepi à reverendis episcopis, Joanne Magno Upsaliensi, & Petro Aorosiensi Gothis, tunc in urbe privatis amicis, & mecum conjunctissime conversatis. Et quidem Upsaliensis in commentario Schondiæ scribendæ antea fuerat, permiseratque id censuræ nostræ &c.

(D) A Tract which he wrote at Rome in Favour of Erasmus.] The Title of which is, Libellus Jacobi Ziegleri Landavi Bavari adversus Jacobi Stunicæ maledicentiam, pro Germania. The Printer Frobenius saith of it: Commodum à Roma missus est libellus,

(a) Tacit. histor. lib. 2. cap. 47.

(b) Teissier, addit. to Thuanus's Elogies tom. 1. pag. 20. edit. 1696.

(c) In the Year 1699.

(d) Thuan. lib. 6. pag. 118. edit. Francof. 1625.

(e) Gesner in Biblioth. fol. 367.

(f) Page 34. of his dissertatio de rebus Sueo-Gothicis apud Mollerum hypomn. ad Sueciam literatam pag. 441.

(g) Paulus Jovius elog. cap. 138. pag. m. 281.

(h) Scheffer. in Suecia literata pag. 2 5. edit. 1698.

(i) Gesner. in bibl. fol. 367. verso.

(k) Page 546 of the Edition 1667.

on Aſtronomy (E) is not amiſs. There are ſeveral other Authors of this Name; ſome of which are in Mr. Konig, but not Jerome ZIEGLER Profeſſor of Poetry at Ingolſtad in the XVI. Century. He publiſhed Aventinus's Annals, and wrote † ſeveral dramatick Poems which are publiſhed.

† See the Epitome of Geſner's Bibliotheque p. m. 355.

ZOROASTER, King of the Bactrians, was Conquered by Ninus, and paſſed for the Inventer (A) of Magick. Euſebius places this Victory of Ninus in the 7 Year of Abraham, and ſeveral Authors make Zoroaſter much Ancienter. Some make him of a much later Date: All Authors are full of (B) uncertainties on this part of the Hiſtory of this Famous Perſon, and ſcarce agree better on the reſt. Wherefore my Readers ought not to expect here any thing beſides a heap of uncertainties, and differing libellus Jacobi Ziegleri Landavi Bavari, quo promittit perpetuam rerum geſtarum ſeriem ex quatuor Evangeliis contextam, & obiter Stunicam pro ipſius dignitate tractat——Videtur hic Landavus homo multæ reconditaque lectionis, ingenio feſtivo, magno judicio, ſtilo non neglecto, denique toto pectore Germanam ſpirans indolem.

(E) What he wrote on Aſtronomy is not amiſs.] At Baſil in 1536. was publiſhed in 4to. his Book de conſtructione ſolidæ ſphæræ, cum ſcholiis in opuſculum Procli de ſphæra, & de canonica per ſphæram operatione, & de hemicyclio Beroſi memorato a (*) Vitruvio. Adjunctis Arati phænomenis Græcu cum commentariis Theonis. His Commentary on the Second Book of Pliny, quo difficultates Plinianæ, præſertim aſtronomicæ, omnes tolluntur: item Organum quo catholica ſyderum, ut apud Plinium eſt, mira arte docetur, was Printed at Baſil in 1531. Of this James Milichius ſpeaks honourably in the Preface to a Book which he publiſhed on that Subject in (a) 1534 in 4. Extant, ſaith he (b), in hunc librum (ſecundum Plinii) Cigleri hominis docti, Commentarii, erudite & ſubtiliter ſcripti, ſed neque integrum librum interpretantur, & à ſcholarum conſuetudine nonnihil recedunt. Quare ſpero eum boni conſulturum eſſe, quod amicis morem geſſi, qui mihi autores fuerunt, ut hæc ad utilitatem juventutis collecta ederem. Adeo enim nihil de ipſius exiſtimatione detraho, ut libenter profitear, me ab ipſo ſæpe adjutum eſſe.

* Lib. 9. cap. 9.

(a) Father Hardouin pref. in Plinium mentions that edition, I have not ſeen it, nor that of the Year 1538. Halæ Suevorum in 4. mention'd by Geſner; but I have ſeen that of Francfort 1543. in 4. and that of Leipſick typis Wœgelianis 1573. in 4.

(b) Jacobus Milichius præfat. commentarii in 2. librum Plinii fol. A. 2 edit. Lipſ. 1573.

(A) Was Conquered by Ninus, and paſſed for the Inventer of Magick.] The following Words of Juſtin inform us that this was the laſt Victory of this Conqueror, and that Zoroaſter philoſophized very judiciouſly on the Principles of the Univerſe, and the Motion of the Stars. (c) Poſtremum illi (Nino) bellum cum Zoroaſtre rege Bactrianorum fuit, qui primus dicitur artes magicas inveniſſe, & mundi principia, ſiderumque motus diligentiſſime ſpectaſſe. Hoc occiſo, & ipſe deceſſit. (d) Some attribute to Semiramis the Glory of having vanquiſhed Zoroaſter. They doubtleſs mean ſomewhat more than what we read in Diodorus Siculus, (e) that being gone to her Husband at the Siege of Bactra, ſhe adviſed and made an Attack, which ended in the Reduction of the City. After which Ninus Married her. I believe they mean that one of the Wars which ſhe glorioully terminated after the Death of that great Monarch was that in which Zoroaſter loſt his Dominions. An Hiſtorian cited by (f) Syncellus Treats of the Birth of Semiramis and of that Magician, after having related the Actions of Ninus (g). It is then to Semiramis rather than Ninus that he aſcribes the Victory of which we are ſpeaking, and I cannot tell whether to confirm this, one would not take Advantage of the following Latin Verſes.

Perſarum (b) ſtatuit Babylona Semiramis urbem,
. . . .

. . . .
Juſſit & imperio ſurgere Bactra caput.

Mr. Stanley (i) ſaith, that Zoroaſter according to Euſebius, was contemporary with Semiramis; but it is certain that by the Relation of Euſebius he was vanquiſhed by King Ninus. If what Arnobius ſaith be true, that magical Secrets were uſed on both ſides in this War betwixt the Aſſyrians and Bactrians, it will be difficult to believe Zoroaſter the Inventer of that Art; for it muſt be ſuppoſed that theſe Secrets quickly paſſed into Chaldea, and that they grew to ſuch a great Perfection in a very ſhort time, that Ninus's Magicians were able to conteſt with, and overcome the Inventer. I don't lay this down as an impoſſibility. But Arnobius Words run thus: (k) Ut inter Aſſyrios & Bactrianos Nino quondam Zoroaſtreque ductoribus non tantum ferro dimicaretur & viribus, verum etiam magicis & Chaldæorum ex reconditis diſciplinis, invidia noſtra hæc fuit? Ammianus Marcellinus (l) will have it that Zoroaſter was only the Augmenter of the Magical Secrets of the Chaldeans. Some Authors inform us that Azonaces was Zoroaſter's inſtructer, and conſequently Azonaces muſt be conſidered as the Inventer of Magick: (m) Hermippus qui de tota ea arte diligentiſſime ſcripſit, & vicies centum millia verſuum a Zoroaſtre condita, indicibus quoque voluminum ejus poſitis explanavit, præceptorem, a quo inſtitutum diceret, tradidit Azonacem, ipſum vero quinque millibus annorum ante Trojanum bellum fuiſſe. St. Auguſtin (n) and Oroſius (o) have followed the Tradition mention'd by Juſtin. Apuleius's Liſt of the moſt Famous Magicians of Antiquity places Zoroaſter in the firſt Rank, and makes him the moſt Ancient of all. (p) Si quamlibet modicum emolumentum probaveritis, ego ille ſim Carinondas, vel Damigeron, vel Moſes, vel Jannes, vel Apollonius, vel ipſe Dardanus, vel quicumque alius POST Zoroaſtrem & Hoſtanem inter Magos celebratus eſt.

Obſerve that Diodorus Siculus (q) who very amply relates the War betwixt Ninus and the Bactrians, calls the King of the latter not Zoroaſtres but Oxyartes, nor doth he mention any Magick. Yet he relates what he had read in Cteſias, an Hiſtorian ſufficiently enclined to ſpread ſuch (r) ſtories. (ſ) Voſſius and Henry Valeſius pretend that Juſtin ſays that Zoroaſter defended himſelf againſt Ninus, not only by force of Arms but alſo by that of Magick. But Juſtin hath no ſuch thing. The ſame Voſſius affirms that Juſtin's Relation was taken from the firſt Book of Cteſias, as Arnobius aſſerts But this is a new falſity. Arnobius's Words (t) are very confuſed, and this Fact doth not appear there.

(B) All Authors are full of uncertainties concerning the Time of Zoroaſter.] We have ſeen him made Contemporary with King Ninus, who according to Euſebius died about 825 Years before the taking of Troy. We have alſo ſeen (v) that Zoroaſter according to the Opinion of Hermippus preceded the Trojan War five Thouſand Years. Hermodorus the Platoniſt (w) followed the ſame Chronology with Hermippus, and Plutarch (x) mentions it as (i) Thomas Stanleius hiſtor. philoſ. Orientalis lib. 1. cap. 3. pag. 10. ex verſione Jo. Clerici.

(k) Arnob. lib. 1. pag. m. 5.

(l) Cujus (Magiæ) ſcientiæ ſeculis priſcis multa ex Chaldæorum arcanis Bactrianus addidit Zoroaſtres. Amm. Marcell. lib. 23. cap. 6. p. m. 374.

(m) Plinius lib 30. cap. 1. p. m. 725.

(n) Magicarum artium fuiſſe perhibetur inventor (Zoroaſtres). Auguſtin. de civitat. Dei lib. 21. cap. 14.

(o) Oroſius lib. 1. cap. 4.

(p) Apuleius apolog. pag. m. 331.

(c) Juſtin lib. 1, cap. 1. (d) Theo in progym. cap. 9. pag. m. 112. (e) Diodor. Sicul. lib. 2. cap. 6. (f) Call'd Cephalion. He lived under Hadrian. See Marſham ubi infra. (g) Syncellus pag. 167. apud Marſham. Chron. can. ad ſecul. 9. pag. m. 144. (b) Propert. eleg. 10. lib. 3.

(q) Diodor. Sicul. lib. 2. cap. 4. & ſeq. (r) Henr. Valeſ. in Amm. Marcell. lib. 23. p. m. 374. (ſ) Voſſius de orig. idol. lib. 1. cap. 5. pag. m. 33. (t) Arnob. lib. 1. pag. m. 31. (v) In the foregoing Remark. (w) Apud Diogen. Laert, in proœm. n. 2. (x) Plut de Iſide pag. 369.

ing ſtories. We are told * that Zoroaſter laughed, the very day he was Born, which was peculiar to him, amongſt the whole race of Mankind; and that the Palpitation of his Brain was ſo ſtrong, that it repulſed any Hand laid upon his Head, which was a preſage of his Knowledge. It is added † that he paſſed twenty Years in the Deſerts, and that he eat of but one Cheeſe which never grew old; that the ♃ Love of Wiſdom and Juſtice obliged him to retire to a Mountain to live there in ſolitude; that when he deſcended from thence there fell a celeſtial fire upon it which perpetually burned; that the King of Perſia accompanied with the greateſt Lords of his Court approached it in order to put up Prayers to God; that Zoroaſter came out of the Flames without being damaged; that he comforted and encouraged the Perſians, and that he offered Sacrifices as if God had accompanied him to that place; that afterwards he did not live indifferently with all ſorts of Men, but only with thoſe born for Truth, and who were capable of the knowledge of God, whom the Perſians called Magi; that he wiſhed γ to be ſtruck with Thunder, and conſumed by it, and that he ordered the Perſians to collect his Bones after he was Burnt in this manner, and to keep and reverence them as a pledge of the Conſervation of their Monarchy; that they really retained a great Veneration for his Relicks, but in proceſs of time they neglected them, and alſo fell from their Royal Sovereignty. The Chronicle of Alexandria adds, that after having made this diſcourſe to them, he invoked Orion, and was conſumed by a heavenly Fire. Some Writers ſay ♃ that Mizraim the Son of Ham was inſtructed in Magick by his Father, and that he was ζ Burned alive by the Devil, whom he too frequently importuned; that the Perſians || adored him as a Favourite of God, and a Saint whom a Thunderbolt ſerved as a Vehicle to Mount to Heaven, and ♃ Dio Chryſoſt. orat. Boryſthenica.

* Riſiſſe eodem die, quo genitus eſſet, unum hominem accepimus Zoroaſtrem. Eidem cerebrum ita palpitaſſe, ut impoſitam repelleret manum, futuræ præſagio ſcientiæ. Plin. lib. 7. cap. 16. p. m. 35.

† Id. lib. 11. cap. 42. p. 102.

γ Cedrenus, & Suidas.

as being the moſt commonly believed: But according to Suidas, the interval betwixt Zoroaſter and the Trojan War was but 500 Years. Some very great Authors have ſaid that Zoroaſter lived ſix Thouſand Years before the Death of Plato: (a) Eudoxus, qui inter ſapientiæ ſectas clariſſimam, utiliſſimamque eam (Magicam artem) intelligi voluit, Zoroaſtrem hunc ſex millibus annorum ante Platonis mortem fuiſſe prodidit. Sic & Ariſtoteles. Others, as Xanthus (b) the Lydian, do not make him above ſix Hundred Years more Ancient than Xerxes's Expedition. Others will have him to be confounded with a Pamphylian (c) whoſe Name was Er, and who was the Son of Armenius, and being riſen again twelve days after his Death, related what he had ſeen in the other World. His Narrations ſeem to prove that he had read Homer's Iliads, and are at leaſt a Demonſtrative Proof that he lived after the Siege of Troy. You will find them in Plato (d) in the 10 Book of the Republick. It is Clemens Alexandrinus who ſuppoſes that this Man was the ſame with Zoroaſter's which he proves by (e) the Latter; declaring himſelf the Son of Armenius, a Pamphylian by Birth, and Divinely inſtructed in ſeveral things in Hell. But ſince Arnobius obſerves that this Pamphylian was a Favourite of Cyrus, we have a Tradition according to which Zoroaſter appeared in the World much later than 'tis believed. (f) Armenius Zoſtriani nepos, & familiaris Pamphilus Cyri, are Arnobius's Words. Valeſius (g) obſerves that Armenius is there taken for filius Armenii; and the Word Cyri ſeems to him very ſuſpicious, he rather inclining to have it Nini, becauſe, ſaith he, the Perſon ſpoken of is one Zoroaſter mentioned in Cteſias's firſt Book. But Cteſias did not begin to ſpeak of the Kings of Perſia till his 7th Book; and his ſix preceding Books were employed in the Relation of the Actions of the Aſſyrians and Medes. I anſwer that it is not at all certain that Arnobius pretends, that Cteſias ſpoke of this Son of Armenius. Obſerve that ſeveral Criticks will have Oſtanis or Hoſtanis put into the place of Zoſtriani; but they are not aware that they aſcribe a very groſs Anachroniſm to Arnobius, for Oſtanes having followed Xerxes (h) in the Expedition to Greece, it is not poſſible that he ſhould have been Grand Father to a Friend of Cyrus.

Agathias, who lived in Juſtinian's time, informs us, that according to the Perſians of that time, Zoroaſter, and Hyſtaſpes were Contemporary. But they did not ſay whether this Hyſtaſpes was the Father of Darius, or any other. Marſham (i) poſitively decides, that it ought to be underſtood of Darius's Father, and grounds his Opinion on one of the Elogies ingraved on his Tomb, which makes him (k) the Inſtructer of the Magi; and beſides he alledges another Reaſon for it, viz. that the ſame Hiſtorian who affirms that Hyſtaſpes excell'd in Magick, ſtyles him the Father of Darius: (l) Deinde (poſt Zoroaſtrem) Hyſtaſpes Rex prudentiſſimus Darii pater. Qui cum ſuperioris Indiæ ſecreta fidentius penetraret, ad nemoroſam quamdam venerat ſolitudinem, cujus tranquillis ſilentiis præcelſa Brachmanorum ingenia potiuntur: eorumque monitu rationes mundani motûs & ſiderum, puroſque ſacrorum ritus quantum colligere potuit eruditus, ex his quæ didicit, aliqua ſenſibus Magorum infudit: quæ illi cum diſciplinis præſentiendi futura, per ſuam quiſque progeniem, poſteris ætatibus tradunt. Ex eo per ſæcula multa ad præſens una eademque proſapia multitudo creata, Deorum cultibus dedicatur. Ammianus Mercellinus had no Reaſon to ſay, that this Father of Darius was a King, and perhaps he committed this Fault having Read in general, that one King Hyſtaſpes was a great Magician, and believing that there was no other Hyſtaſpes than the Father of Darius. But it is beyond diſpute that a certain Hyſtaſpes elder than the Foundation of Rome, and a great Prophet, is mentioned by Authors. (m) Hydaſpes quoque, qui fuit Medorum rex antiquiſſimus, a quo amnis quoque nomen accipit qui nunc Hydaſpes dicitur, admirabilis omnium, ſub interpretatione vaticinantis pueri ad memoriam poſteris tradidit, ſublatum iri ex orbe imperium, nomenque Romanum; multo ante præfatus, quam illa Trojana gens conderetur. It ought to be Read Hyſtaſpes and not Hydaſpes in this paſſage of Lactantius. Thus alſo ſome good Criticks have Corrected two places, where Juſtin Martyr mentions this Pagan Prophet; (n) one of them tends to inform us that he predicted the conflagration of all periſhable things; and in the other he obſerves that the Reading of his Writings was prohibited on Pain of Death, becauſe they diſcovered the truths which the Pagans perſecuted. (o) Καθ' ἐνέργειαν δὲ τῶν φαύλων δαιμόνων, θάνατος ὡρίσθη κατὰ τῶν τὰς Ὑστάσπου, ἢ Σιβύλλης, ἢ τῶν προφητῶν βίβλους ἀναγινωσκόντων, ὅπως διὰ τοῦ φόβου ἀποστρέψωσιν ἐντυγχάνοντας τοὺς ἀνθρώπους τῶν καλῶν γνῶσιν λαβεῖν, αὐτοῖς δὲ δουλεύοντας κατέχωσιν· ὅπερ εἰς τέλος οὐκ ἴσχυσαν πρᾶξαι. Operâ autem & inſtinctu malorum dæmonum mortis ſupplicium adverſus librorum Hydaſpis aut Sibyllæ aut prophetarum lectores conſtitutum eſt: ut per timorem homines ab illis, quò minùs ſcripta ea legentes verum bonarum notitiam percipiant, ſed in ſervitute eorum retineantur, abſterreantur. I ſhall obſerve

(a) Plin. ubi ſupra.

(b) Apud Diogen. Laert. lib.

(c) Plato de repub. lib. 10. pag. 361.

(d) Pag. 361. & ſeq.

(e) Clem. Alexandr. Strom. lib. 5. p. 599.

(f) Arnob. lib. 1. pag. 31.

(g) Henr. Valeſius ubi ſupra.

(h) Plin. lib. 30. cap. 1. pag. 7?6.

(i) Marſham ubi ſupra pag. m. 145.

very, but as a living Star, whence it proceeded, that after his Death he was called Zoroaster. Gregorius Turonensis (C) relates very near the same thing of Cush, the Eldest Son of Ham. Others will have it that Ham himself was the Zoroaster of the Eastern Nations, and the Inventer of Magick. Mr. Bochart * very clearly refutes this Falsity. Cedrenus observes that Zoroaster, who became so famous for Astronomy amongst the Persians, was descended from Belus. Which imports that he descended from Nimrod. Some Authors have taken him for Nimrod † himself, others for Assur or Japhet. ß The Ancient Persians believe Zoroaster ancienter than Moses, and some Magi affirm him to be the same with Abraham, and frequently call him Ibrahim Zerdascht, as much as to say, Abraham the lover of Fire. The Eastern Christians say that Zoroaster γ began to flourish in the Reign of Cambyses, and that he was a Native of the Province of Media; but others make him an Assyrian, and will have him to have been a Disciple of the Prophet Eliseh—— δ Ben Schuhnah saith, that he was a Disciple of Ezra, and that this Prophet laid his Curse on him, on account of his maintaining some Opinions which were utterly opposite to the Jewish Law; that he became Leprous by way of punishment for his Impiety, and that being forced out of Jerusalem on that account, he retired to Persia, where he set up a new Religion. Some have taken him ε for the Prophet Ezekiel, and it cannot be denied that they ground their Assertion on the ζ Agreement of numerous Particulars which belong to the one, and are related of the other. George Hornius imagins, η Zoroaster to be the false Prophet Balaam. Mr. Huet θ shews that he was the Moses of the Jews, and mentions an infinite number of Particulars, in which the Scriptural Relations of Moses agree with the Pagan Stories of Zoroaster. There are scarce any who do not believe that there were several Zoroasters, as well as several Jupiters and Hercules's. See Mr. Thomas Stanley's Treatise ι which Mr. le Clerc hath rendred into Latin; and you will there find mention'd a κ Chaldean, a Bactrian, a Persian, a Pamphilian, a Proconnesian, and a λ Babylonian Zoroaster. Those are in the wrong who believe that Zoroaster taught a Diabolical Magick; for his Magick was only the study of the Divine Nature, and Religious Worship, as Plato (D) expresly declares. But tho' it is easie to clear him

[illegible]

δ Hyde, [illegible] pag. 313.

ζ Id. ib. pag. 312.

ε Hornius [illegible] lib. 2. cap. 4 pag. [illegible] θ Hornius ubi supra pag. 132 & 314.

ι Intitled Historia Philosophiæ Orientalis.

κ In the 2d chapt. of the 1st. Book.

λ See the Remark E towards the end.

---

observe by the by, that these Books (a) as well as those of the Sibyls were the pious Forgeries of some Christians. Marsham might have made use of another Proof, and form his Argument thus: Clemens Alexandrinus saith, that Zoroaster was the same with the Pamphilian Son of Armenius; but, according to Arnobius, this Pamphilian was a Favourite of Cyrus, and we find in Herodotus (b) a Discourse of Cyrus and Hystaspes the Father of Darius; wherefore it is true that Zoroaster and this Hystaspes lived at the same time. Valesius (c) the younger affirms, that according to the Testimony of Agathias, some said that Hystaspes the Doctor of the Magi, was of a much older Date than Darius's Father. It is certain that Agathias doth not say this, but on the contrary, complains that the Persians did not express whether their Hystaspes was the Father of Darius or not. I mention this for no other Reason than to shew that the Citations of the most judicious Authors frequently deceive us, and consequently that Prudence obliges us to examine Quotations, by whomsoever alledged. I here repeat this Observation, tho' I remember to have made it in other places.

I should never have done, if I should censure all the mistakes of our Authors, and mention all their differences with relation to the Chronology of Zoroaster. But what farther confirms Marsham's Opinion is this. It is affirmed that Pythagoras was Zoroaster's Disciple under the Reign of Cambyses the Son of Cyrus. I have elsewhere cited the words of Apuleius, which inform us of this Fact. Some understand them as if Pythagoras having been a Slave in Egypt, was transported into Persia. Others will have him transported into Babylon, and there instructed by Zoroaster the Babylonian, whom they distinguish from the Persian. (d) Hisce (quinque Zoroastris) addi potest Sextus Zoroaster, sic enim ab (1) Apuleio vocatur, qui Babylone vixit, quo tempore Pythagoras captivus à Cambyse eo deductus est. Idem scriptor eum vocat, omnis divini arcanum antistitem, eoque magistro præcipuè usum esse Pythagoram dicit. Videtur idem esse ac Zabratus, a quo Diogenes (2) affirmat Pythagoram purgatum esse omnibus pristinæ vitæ sordibus, & edoctum, quarum rerum probos expertes esse oporteret, uti & Physicam. Idem quoque erit Nazaratas Assyrius, quem Alexander, in libro de Pythagoricis Symbolis, affirmat magistrum fuisse Pythagoræ. Hunc eundem Suidas vocat Zarem, Cyrillus Zaranem, Plutarchus Zaratam. These words are taken out of Thomas Stanley's Book: I don't know what he means when he observes that Apuleius making use of the Expression Sextus Zoroaster, which I don't find in the Book he cites. Nor am I more certain on what he grounds his Assertion that Pythagoras was brought Prisoner to Babylon by King Cambyses. The words of Apuleius plainly import (e) that he was sent into Ægypt with the Prisoners of that Monarch. In order to understand this perfectly well, Herodotus (f) should be consulted, who relates that Polycrates Tyrant of Samos, intending to put to death some Persons which he suspected to be hatching a Rebellion, entreated Cambyses to ask some Troops of him; which Cambyses accordingly desiring, Polycrates sent him into Egypt Forty Sail of Ships, in which he embarked these Persons, and prayed him not to let them return. Apuleius meant, no doubt, that some pretend that Pythagoras was one of those who were then delivered by Polycrates to Cambyses. He doth not speak of the transportation of Pythagoras either to Persia or Babylon.

(C) Gregorius Turonensis relates very near the same thing of Cush the Eldest Son of Ham.] The eldest Son of Ham, saith he (g), was named Cush. The latter was the first Inventer of the Art of Magick by the suggestion of the Devil, and withal the first beginner of Idolatry. He was the first that moved by a diabolical suggestion, made a small Statue to be adored: He made Men believe that he had power to bring down the Stars and Fire from Heaven. He went to the Persians, who called him Zoroaster, that is, a living Star. Having also learned of him the custom of worshipping Fire, they adored him as a God, after he had been divinely consumed by Fire.

(D) His Magick was only the study ——— of religious Worship, as Plato expresly declares.] There are four chosen Persons, saith he, appointed for the Education of the Eldest Son of the King of the Persians. They chuse the Wisest, the most Just, the most Temperate, and the bravest Man that can be found. The wisest Man instructs him in Zoroaster's Magick, that is, the Worship of the Gods: Besides, he teacheth him the Art of Reigning.

(a) See in [illegible] Clemens Alexand. Strom. lib. [illegible] pag. 570. D. Xen. [illegible]

(b) Herodot. lib. 1. cap. 209.

(c) Hadrianus Valesius in Ammian. Marcellin. ubi supra.

(d) Thom. Stanleius Histor. Philos. Orientalis, lib. 1. cap. [illegible] pag. 8, & 9.

(1) In Floridis.

(2) Porphyr. vit. Pythago[illegible]

(e) Inter captivos Cambysæ Regis, Egyptum cum adheretur (Pythagoras) Apul. Flor. pag. m 351.

(f) Herodot. lib. 3. cap. 44.

(g) Gregor. Turon. Histor. Francorum lib. 1. cap. 5.

him from this Accuſation, it is difficult to excuſe him on account of the Doctrine of two Principles, ſo ſtrong is the preſumption, that he actually taught that there are two coeternal Cauſes, the one (F) of Good things, and the other of Evil. Dr. Hyde in his excellent Tract of the Religion of the Ancient Reigning. (a) Ὧν ὁ μὲν μαγείαν τε διδάσκει τὴν Ζωροάστρου τοῦ Ὡρομάζου· ἔστι δὲ τοῦτο θεῶν θεραπεία· διδάσκει δὲ καὶ τὰ βασιλικά. Quorum primus magiam Zoroaſtri Oromaſi filii docet, eſt autem illa Deorum cultus; atque idem tradit inſtituta regia. Obſerve that Zoroaſter is called the Son of Oromaſius, and that Oromaſius is the Name which he and his Followers gave to the good God. Whence to call him the Son of Oromaſius ſhould ſeem to be the ſame, as to call him the Son of the good God. Mr. Stanley conjectures with great probability, that the laſt Title was really beſtowed on him. (b) Hinc colligas verba Platonis eſſe intelligenda de Mago Perſa, qui propter inuſitatam eruditionem ſigurate, aut fabuloſe dicebatur filius Dei, aut alicujus boni Genii, quo honore affecti ſunt Pythagoras, Plato, aliique præſtantiſſimi viri. Thoſe who are diſpoſed to ſee a great many paſſages which teſtify, that the Magick of the Perſians inſtituted by Zoroaſter, was the ſtudy of Religion and Morality, need only read (c) Briſſonius and Bullengerus (d). Nor is any Perſon ignorant that Gabriel Naudé (e) hath learnedly and ſolidly juſtified our Zoroaſter againſt the Accuſation of the Black Art. He mentions ſeveral Authors who may be conſulted.

(F) That there are two coeternal Cauſes, the one of Good things, and the other of Evil.] Plutarch (f) having told us that it is the Opinion of moſt, and of the wiſeſt of the Ancients, adds; “ Zoroaſter the Magician, whom they report to “ be five thouſand Years older than the Trojan “ times, call'd one of 'em Oromazes, and the o- “ ther Arimanius——— and taught Mankind to “ make Vows and Offerings of Thankſgiving to “ the one, and to offer Averting and Feral Sa- “ crifices to the other. For they (g) beat a certain “ Plant called Homomy, in a Mortar, and call up- “ pon Pluto and the Dark; and then mix it with “ the Blood of a ſacrificed Wolf, and convey it “ to a certain Place where the Sun never ſhines, “ and there caſt it away. For of Plants, they be- “ lieve that ſome appertain to the Good God, “ others again to the Evil Demon; and likewiſe “ they think, that of Animals, ſuch as Dogs. “ Fowls, and Urchins, belong to the Good, and “ Water Animals to the Bad; for which reaſon “ they account him happy that kills moſt of them. “ Theſe Men moreover tell us a great many Ro- “ mantick things about theſe Gods, whereof “ theſe are ſome. They ſay that Orimazes ſpring- “ ing from pureſt Light, and Arimanius on the “ other hand, from pitchy Darkneſs, theſe two “ are therefore at War one with another. And “ that Oromazes made ſix Gods, whereof the firſt “ was the Author of Benevolence, the ſecond of “ Truth, the third of Juſtice; and the reſt, one “ of Wiſdom, and another of Wealth, and a “ third of Pleaſure which accrues from good “ Actions; and that Arimanius likewiſe made the “ like Number of contrary Operations to con- “ front them. After this, Oromazes having firſt “ trebled his own Magnitude, mounted up aloft, “ as far above the Sun, as the Sun it ſelf above “ the Earth, and ſo beſpangled the Heavens with “ Stars. But one Star (called Sirius, or the Dog) “ he ſet as a kind of Centinel or Scout before “ all the reſt. And after he had made four “ and twenty Gods more, he placed them all “ in an Egg-ſhell. But thoſe that were made by “ Arimanius (being themſelves alſo of the like “ Number) breaking a Hole in this beauteous and “ glazed Egg-ſhell, bad things came by this means “ to be intermixed with good. But the fatal “ time is now approaching, in which Arimanius, “ who by means of this brings Plagues and Fa- “ mines upon the Earth, muſt of neceſſity be him- “ ſelf utterly extinguiſhed and deſtroyed; at which “ time, the Earth being made plain and level, “ there will be one Life, and one Society of “ Mankind, made all happy, and one Speech. But “ Theopompus ſaith, that according to the Opinion “ of the Magi, each of theſe Gods ſubdues, “ and is ſubdued by turns, for the ſpace of three “ thouſand years apiece, and that for three thou- “ ſand years more, they quarrel and fight, and deſtroy “ each others Works; but that at laſt, Pluto ſhall “ fail, and Mankind ſhall be happy, and neither “ need Food nor yield a Shadow. And that the “ God, who projects theſe things, doth, for “ ſome time, take his Repoſe and Reſt; but yet “ this time is not ſo much to him, although it “ ſeem ſo to Man, whoſe Sleep is but ſhort. It was not a needleſs thing to ſet down this whole Paſſage, ſeeing it contains ſomewhat at large the Opinions and Precepts of Zoroaſter; and we may obſerve from thence, that the Aſſerters of two Principles, involved themſelves in ſeveral inconſequential Abſurdities, when they deſcended to a particular Explanation of their Syſtem. I have remarked the ſame thing when ſpeaking of the Manichees. But ſince, according to the moſt common Tradition, Zoroaſter muſt paſs for the Founder of the Magi, and it appears by a great number of Authorities (h) that they admitted a Good God, whom they called Oromaſes, or, Oromaſdes, and an Evil one whom they named Arimanius; it is very probable that he really aſſerted this Doctrine. Let us obſerve, that Plutarch having related what we have ſeen above, adds, (i) Theſe are the Conceits of the Fable invented by the Magi. If we ſhould infer from thence that he rejected, in general, the whole Hypotheſis of two Principles, the one Good, and the other Evil, we ſhould miſtake his Sentiments. He might indeed very well condemn the particular Explications of Zoroaſter's Followers, but doubtleſs he admitted the whole foundation of their Syſtem, that the God whom they called Good, is not the cauſe of any Evil. I have cited, in ſome other places, ſeveral paſſages of his Works, wherein he declares himſelf very clearly on this head, and yet they don't diſcover the whole Foundation of his Doctrine. Wherefore I ſhall add here ſome Paſſages which will more clearly explain it to us. I believe that it agreed very well with the Opinion he attributed to Plato. “ Which Philoſopher, ſaith “ he (k), admits two Souls of the World, one “ Good, and the other Evil; and alſo acknow- “ ledges, betwixt theſe two, a third Cauſe, which “ is not without either Soul or Reaſon, nor in- “ gaged in it ſelf, as ſome think, but adjacent, “ and adherent to the other two, always deſiring “ and purſuing what is beſt——— becauſe the Ge- “ neration, Compoſition and Conſtitution of this “ World is intermixed with contrary Powers, “ which are not always equal, for the beſt pre- “ vails and is ſtrongeſt, but it is impoſſible that the “ worſt ſhould utterly periſh; ſo much it is im- “ moveable in the Body and Soul of the Univerſe, “ perpetually warring againſt a good One.„ He, in another place, more amply ſets forth this Doctrine of Plato, and gives us to underſtand that the Original of Evil is not lodged in an inſenſible inanimate Subject utterly void of Action and Qualities, and which is capable of the reception of all imaginable Forms, but in a Subject which moves and is united to a Soul, the Diſorders of which cannot be wholly and intirely corrected. I ſhall hereafter declare why I cite ſuch a long Paſſage.

“ The World, ſaith Heraclitus, neither did any “ one of all the Gods, nor any mortal Man create. “ As if he had been afraid, that not being able to “ make out the Creation by a Deity; we ſhould “ be conſtrain'd to acknowledge ſome Man to “ have been the Architect of the Univerſe. But “ certainly far better it is, in ſubmiſſion to Plato's Judgment, both to avow, and in our Songs “ of Praiſe to attribute the Glory of the Struc- “ ture to God. For the Frame it ſelf is the moſt “ beautiful of all Maſter-pieces, and God the moſt

“ Illuſtrious

(a) Plato in Alcibiade 1. pag. [illegible] C.

(b) Stanleius ubi ſupra. pag. 11.

(c) Briſſonius de regno Perſarum lib. 2. p. 178. & ſeq. edit. Commel. 1595.

(d) Jul. Cæſar Bullengerus eclog. ad Arnobium pag. 345. & ſeq.

(e) Naudé, apolog. des grands hommes. pag. 134. & ſeq.

(f) Plut. de Iſide & Oſiride pag. 369.

(g) That is, the Perſians.

(h) Se Diogen Laerti proœmi n. 8. & Agathia hiſtor. lib. 2.

(i) Ἡ ἐν ... Hæc ſe habent magorum fabulæ. Plut. de Iſide pag. 370. A.

(k) Plut. Ibid. pag. 370. A.

ent Perſians, cites ſome Authors who clear him on this Head. I ſhall examin “ Illuſtrious of all Cauſes; but that the Subſtance and Materials were not created, but always ready at the ordering and diſpoſal of the Omnipotent Builder, to give it Form and Figure, as near as might be approaching to his own Reſemblance. For the Creation was not out of Nothing, but out of Matter wanting Beauty and Perfection, like the rude Materials of a Houſe, a Garment, or a Statue lying firſt in ſhapeleſs Confuſion. For before the Creation of the World, there was nothing but a confus'd Heap. Yet was that confus'd Heap neither without a Body, without Motion, nor without a Soul. The Corporeal part was without Form or Conſiſtence, and the moving part Stupid and Headlong without Reaſon or Conduct. God neither incorporated that which is incorporeal, nor conveyed a Soul into that which had none before, like a Perſon either Muſical or Poetical, who does not make the Voice nor the Movement, only he reduces the Voice with harmony, and graces the movement with proper Meaſures. Thus God did not make the Tangible and Repercutient Solidity of the Corporeal Subſtance; nor the imaginative or moving Faculties of the Soul. But the taking theſe two Principles, as they lay ready at hand, the one obſcure and dark, the other turbulent and ſenſeleſs, both imperfect without the Bounds of Order and Decency. He alſo diſpos'd, digeſted and embelliſh'd the confuſed Maſs, that he brought to perfection a moſt abſolute and glorious Creature. Therefore the Subſtance of the Body is no other, than that all-receiving Nature, the Seat and Nurſe of all created Beings. But the ſubſtance of the Soul in Philebus he called an Infinite Being, the Privation of Number and Proportion; having neither Period or Meaſure either of Diminution or Exceſs, or Diſtinction or Diſſimilitude. But as to that order he alledges in Timæus, to be the mixture of Nature with the indiviſible Subſtance, but being appli'd to Bodies, become liable to Diviſion, he would not have it thought to be a Bulk augmented by Units or Points, nor by Longitude and Breadth, which are qualities more conſentaneous to Bodies than to the Soul, but that diſorderly unlimited Principle, moving both it ſelf and other Subſtances, that which he frequently calls Neceſſity; and within his Treatiſe of Laws he openly ſtiles the diſorderly, ill acting, or harm-doing Soul. For ſuch was the Soul of her ſelf, but at length one became wiſe, that by the participation of Underſtanding, Ratiocination and Harmony, ſhe might be the Soul of the World. Thus that All-receiving and material Principle, enjoy'd both magnitude, ſpace and diſtance, but Beauty, Form and meaſure of Proportion it had none. However all theſe it obtained, when it came to be embelliſh'd and adorn'd with all the Ornaments of Sea and Land, the Heavens, the Stars, and all thoſe infinite varieties of Plants and living Creatures. Now as for thoſe who attribute to Matter, and not to the Soul, that which in Timæus is call'd Neceſſity, in Philebus, vaſt diſproportion and unlimited Exorbitancy of Diminution and Exceſs, they can never maintain it to be the cauſe of Diſorder, in regard that Plato always alledges that ſame Matter to be without any Form or Figure, and altogether deſtitute of any quality or effectual virtue properly belonging to it; comparing it to ſuch Oils that have no ſcent at all, which the Perfumers mix in their Tinctures. For there is no likelyhood that Plato would ſuppoſe that to be the Cauſe and Principle of Evil, which is altogether faint in it ſelf, ſluggiſh and never to be rouz'd on to Action; and yet at the ſame time brand this Immenſity with the harſh Epithet of diſcharged and miſchievous, and call it Neceſſity, repugnant and contumaciouſly rebellious againſt God. For this ſame Neceſſity, which tranverſes Heaven (to uſe his own Phraſe in his Politicks) and turns it the quite contrary way from decency and ſymmetry, together with innate Concupiſcence, and that [illegible] Confuſion of ancient Nature, hurly-burly'd with all manner of Diſorder, before they were wrought and kneaded into the graceful Beauty of the World, whence came they to be convey'd into the ſeveral varieties of Forms and Beings, if the Subject, which is the Firſt Matter, were void of all quality whatſoever, and depriv'd all of efficient Cauſe; more eſpecially the Architect being ſo good of himſelf, and intending a frame the neareſt approaching to his own Perfections? For beſides theſe, there is no third Principle. And indeed we ſhould ſtumble in the perplex'd Intricacies of the Stoicks, ſhould we advance Evil into the World out of non-Entity, without either any preceding cauſe or effect of Generation, in regard that among thoſe Principles that have a Being, it is not probable, that either real good, or that which is deſtitute of all manner of all quality, ſhould afford Birth or Subſtance to Evil. But Plato eſcaped thoſe Pitfalls into which they blunder'd who came after him; who neglecting what he carefully embrac'd, the third Principle, and energetick Vertue in the middle between God and the firſt Matter, maintain the moſt abſurd of Arguments, affirming the nature of Evils to have crept in ſpontaneouſly and adventitiouſly, I know not how, nor by what ſtrange Accidents. And yet they will not allow an Atom of Epicurus ſo much as a moment's liberty to ſhift in its ſtation, which as they ſay, would infer motion out of non-Entity, without any impulſive Cauſe; nevertheleſs themſelves preſuming all this while to affirm, that Vice and Wickedneſs, together with a thouſand other incongruities and vexations afflicting the Body, of which no cauſe can be aſcrib'd to any of the Principles, deriv'd their Being from Conſequence. Plato however does not ſo; who deſpoiling the firſt Matter of all manner of diſtinction, and ſeparating from God, as far as it is poſſible, the cauſes of Evil, has thus deliver'd himſelf concerning the World in his Political Diſcourſes. The World, ſaith he, receiv'd from the Illuſtrious Builder all things beautiful and lovely; but whatſoever happens to be noxious and irregular in Heaven through its exterior habit and diſpoſition, from thence it derives thoſe Inconveniences, and conveighs them into the ſeveral Creatures. And a little farther in the ſame Treatiſe, in proceſs of time, when Oblivion had encroached upon the World, the Diſtemper of its ancient Confuſion more prevail'd, and the hazard is, leſt being diſſolv'd, it ſhould again be ſunk and plung'd into the immenſe Abyſs of its former Irregularity: But there can be no diſſimilitude in the firſt Matter, as being void of quality and diſtinction.

“ Of which when Eudemus, with ſeveral others, was altogether ignorant, he ſeems deridingly to cavil with Plato, and taxes him with aſſerting the firſt Matter to be the Cauſe, the Root and Principle of all Evil, which he had at other times ſo frequently dignify'd with the tender Appellations of Mother and Nurſe. Whereas Plato gives to Matter only the Titles of Mother and Nurſe; but the Cauſe of Evil he makes to be the moving Force reſiding within it, not govern'd by Order and Reaſon, tho' not with a Soul neither, which in his Treatiſe of the Laws, he calls expreſly the Soul repugnant and in Hoſtility with that other propitiouſly and kindly acting. For tho' the Soul be the Principle of Motion, yet is it the Underſtanding and Intelligence which meaſures that Motion by Order and Harmony, and is the cauſe of both. God therefore did not awake a ſluggiſh and ſleepy Matter into Action, but prevented it by a fix'd eſtabliſhment from being any longer troubled and diſquieted by a ſenſeleſs and ſtupid Cauſe. Neither did he infuſe into Nature the Principles of alteration and paſſive ſubjection to diſorders; but when it was under the preſſure of thoſe unruly diſorders and alterations, he diſcharg'd it of its manifold Enormi-examine whether they deſerve (F) Credit. It is even affirmed, that he was no “ ties and Irregularities, making uſe of Symmetrie, Proportion and Number, as the moſt proper Inſtruments.

This Explication of Plato's Doctrine concerning the Creation of the World, and the original of Evil, is one of the moſt beautiful places we find in Plutarch; and tho' this doctrine is not true, it deſerves to be read with attention, and contains ſeveral excellent Idea's, and ſublime Conceptions, of a ſurprizing fertility with regard to thoſe who know how to make good uſe of Conſequences. This is the Reaſon which engaged me not to curtail this paſſage. How many that ſhall read this, would not take the pains to recur to Plutarch, if I had only mention'd the Pages of the Author? Another Reaſon prevented my being contented with this: I find ſome particulars in this paſſage of Plutarch of which I ſhall make uſe (a) hereafter.

(F) Dr. Hyde——— cites ſome Authors who clear him——— I ſhall examin whether they deſerve Credit.] Thoſe who have read Mr. Bernard's (b) Journal, need not be informed that the Hiſtoria Religionis Veterum Perſarum Publiſhed by Dr. Hyde (c) at Oxford in 1700. in 4to. is one of the moſt excellent Pieces that can poſſibly be written on that Subject. The Idea which that Learned Journaliſt hath given of it is ſufficient to convince us, that this Hiſtory of the Religion of the Ancient Perſians, contains an exquiſite Erudition and profound Diſcuſſions, which detect ſeveral uncommon Particulars, and diſcover a Country which we ſcarce knew any thing of before. But to come to the matter. Dr. Hyde affirms that the Ancient Perſians acknowledged no more than One ſole uncreated Principle, which was the Good Principle, or, in one word, God: And that they look'd upon the Evil Principle as a created Being. One of the Names which they gave to God was Hormizda, and they called the Evil Principle Ahariman. And this is the Original of the two Greek words Ὠρομάσδης and Ἀρειμάνιος: One of which was the Name of the Good, and the other that of the Evil Principle, as we have ſeen (d) above in a Paſſage of Plutarch. The Perſians pretended that Abraham (e) was the firſt Founder of their Religion. Zoroaſter afterwards made ſome Alterations in it, but 'tis ſaid that he made no manner of Change with relation to the Doctrine of one ſole uncreated Principle; but that all his Innovation in this particular, was the giving (f) the name of Light to the good Principle, and that of Darkneſs to the Evil Principle. Of which here follows an Evidence. (g) Zerduſht aſſirmavit Lucem & Tenebras eſſe——— duo Principia ſibi invicem contraria: & ſic eſſe Yezdân & Ahreman, qui fuerunt——— initium eorum quæ inveniuntur in Mundo: ex eorum miſtione [ſeu combinatione] extitiſſe Compoſitiones; & ex variis Compoſitionibus producta fuiſſe formas. Et quòd Deus qui creavit Lucem & Tenebras, utriuſque Autor unicus ſit, ſine Socio, ſine Pari aut Simili; nec ei referenda ſit——— exiſtentia Tenebrarum, ſicut dicunt Zervanitæ: ſed Bonum & Malum, Integritas ac Corruptio, & Puritas ac Spurcities exiverunt ex miſtione [ſeu commiſſione] Lucis & Tenebrarum: & niſi hæc duo commiſta fuiſſent, non extitiſſet Mundus. Et hæc duo contra ſe invicem inſurgebant & de victoria contendebant, donec Lux vinceret Tenebras, & Bonum Malum. Tum poſtea ſalvum evaſit Bonum ad mundum ſuum, & Malum divertebat ad Mundum ſuum: & ſic fuit cauſa Liberationis. Cumque Deus excelſus hæc duo temperaverat & miſcuerat pro arbitrio ſuo, eaque in Compoſitione viderat, tum inſtituit Lucem ut originale quiddam, & indixit exiſtentiam ejus ut exiſteret. Sed Tenebræ ſecutæ ſunt ſicut umbra perſonam. Nam cùm videret eas quodammodo exiſtere, ſed non realiter exiſtere, tum planè produxit Lucem, & acquiſitæ ſunt Tenebræ per conſequentiam: nam ex neceſſitate extitit contrarium, quippe cujus exiſtentia fuit neceſſaria, &c. ut contingentis [illegible] creatione, non autem ex primâ intentione, ſecundùm exemplum quod adduximus de Perſonâ & Umbrâ. These words clearly expreſs that in Zoroaſter's Hypotheſis, the two Principles, one Good and the other Evil, Oromazes, Arimanius, or Light and Darkneſs were, properly ſpeaking, no more than Second Cauſes, and did not ſtrictly deſerve the Name of Principles. They were the Effects of another Cauſe, and the productions of God. The Abſurdities in the particular Explication of the Doctrine of this Magus are very numerous; for he aſſerted on the one ſide that God alone produced Darkneſs; and on the other that its exiſtence ought not to be referred to God. He ſaid that God intermixed the Light with Darkneſs, becauſe without this mixture the World could not have been produced; that Good and Evil, Purity and Impurity proceeded from this mixture: that there was a ſharp Engagement betwixt Light and Darkneſs 'till the latter was overcome; that after its Defeat it retired into its own World, and Light to its proper World alſo; that God having mixed theſe two Contraries together, eſtabliſhed an Original Light, and made it exiſt; that Darkneſs reſulted from it as a Shadow from a Body; for God ſeeing that Darkneſs exiſted in a ſort, tho' not really, gave a plenary exiſtence to Light, and ſo to Darkneſs by an inevitable Conſequence, and not according to the primitive and direct intention of the Creator. This Chaos of Thoughts appears very myſterious to us Weſterns: None but Levantines accuſtomed to a myſtical and contradictory Language can bear ſuch enormous Nonſenſe without Diſguſt and Horrour. But be it how it will, it may be replied to me, that Zoroaſter is cleared of his principal Accuſation, and it muſt no longer be pretended that he acknowledged two uncreated Principles, an Arimanius eſſentially Evil and ſelf-exiſtent. This is what remains to be examined.

I. I anſwer in the firſt place, that it is out of doubt, that the Greek Authors, who have aſcribed to Zoroaſter the Opinion of two Principles, have pretended to attribute to him a Doctrine contrary to the common Theology, as well as to the Principles of the Ariſtotelians and Stoicks: Thoſe two Sects agreed with the People on this Head, that the ſame God who ſhowers down Good upon the Earth, pours down Evil alſo; and that if he puniſhes on one ſide, he rewards on the other, &c. But if it was aſſerted that Zoroaſter and the Magi were of a contrary Opinion to that, it muſt have been believed that they taught that the Principle which diſtributed Good, is perſonally diſtinguiſh'd from the Principle which does the contrary, and that theſe two Principles are independent of each other, and the one Coeternal with the other *.

II. This is confirmed by reaſon, that this Hypotheſis was recurred to on no other account, than in order to ſhun the perplexity (h) which they met with in the Suppoſition, that the ſame Being, which is the cauſe of Good, is alſo the cauſe of Evil. But this difficulty had not been avoided, if Arimanius had been allowed to have been a production of a Good God; for the Queſtion would have returned, how Arimanius the Evil Principle could have been produced by a Cauſe infinitely Good. It is obvious to all Men, that to aſſert that God himſelf produced all Evils, or that he produced Arimanius, who conſequently is the neceſſary (i) Author of all Evils, amounts to the ſame thing, quod eſt cauſa cauſæ eſt cauſa cauſati. So that Zoroaſter could not eſcape the force of any one Objection, if his Doctrine had been what Shahriſtâni ſays it was. Therefore let us grant that the Greeks have not without ground charged him with admitting two Eternal Principles.

III. I am

(a) In the following Remark.

(b) Nouvelles de la republique des lettres for February 1701. art. 5. and for March 1701. art. 6.

(c) Thomas Hyde hiſt. religionis veter. Perſarum cap. 2. p. 161.

(d) In the Remark E.

(e) Id. ib. cap. 21. pag. 275.

(f) Id. ib. cap. 22. pag. 290.

(g) Shahriſtani apud Hyde ubi ſupra pag. 299. I have left out the Arabick words which are in this and the following Paſſages of Dr. Hyde.

(*) Dr. Hyde that this Doctrine was ta by tho whom Pl tarch tians.

(h) See Plutarch in the going Remark.

(i) & are aſſerting eſſentially without ry no Idolater, either with respect to the Worſhipping of Fire, or (G) the Adoration

III. I am not ignorant that it may be urged that the Grecians were very imperfectly acquainted with the Opinions of the Philoſophers whom they called Barbarous; and that what they wrote of the Jewiſh Nation, and the Antiquities of Ægypt is very unaccurate. But let this be repeated as often as one pleaſes I ſhall Anſwer that the Arabian Writers are not more credible, when they ſpeak of a Philoſopher ſo diſtant from their own time as this was.

IV. I gueſs that his Followers out of Charity as well as for their own intereſt have aſcribed to him the Creation of the Evil Principle, and that they did it ſince they became ſubjected to the ſevere Domination of the Mahometans who abhor them, and call them Idolaters and Worſhippers of Fire. Being unwilling any longer to expoſe themſelves to their hatred, and inſults, under pretext that they acknowledged an Uncreated Nature Sovereignly Wicked, and independant of God, they thought fit to varniſh over this part of their Syſtem with another Interpretation: For they cannot abſolutely, deny that Zoroaſter admitted of two Principles, ſince it is too well known that he acknowledged them. " (a) The Tarikh Montekheb ſaith, " that Zoroaſter, Author of the Sect of the Megiouſch, or Magi, was alſo the firſt who taught " the Doctrine of two Principles of all things, " and that the Sir-Name of Megiouſch, beſtowed on them, is a Word corrupted by the Arabians, from the Perſian Word, Meikhouſch, which " ſignifies ſharp-ſweet, by Reaſon of the two " Principles, Good and Evil which he eſtabliſhed. " Here is an Author who aſcribes to Zoroaſter the firſt eſtabliſhment of this Opinion; but Dr. Hyde alledges a paſſage which makes this Syſtem of a much older date, and beſides ſeems to hint that Zoroaſter only reformed it: (b) Quoad Perſarum gentem ——— ei eſt Religio pervetuſta: & in eâ Ducti vocantur Keiomarſii. Iſti ſtatuunt aliquem Deum æternum quem vocant Yezdan, eo deſignantes τὸν Θεὸν: & alium deum creatum ex Tenebris, quem nominant Ahrenam, deſignantes Diabolum. Magnificiunt Lucem, eo uſque dum colant Ignem: & cavent ſibi à Tenebris. Nec deſtiterunt ſic facere, (c) DONEC prodiit Zerdusht jactans prophetiam. Aſſerunt itaque Deum Creatorem, quod ſcil. creavit Lucem & Tenebras; eumque eſſe Unicum, nec habere Socium. Et quod Bonum & Malum, & Probitas & Improbitas conquiſita ſunt ex mixtione Lucis & Tenebrarum: & quòd ſi hæc duo non fuiſſent mixta, non extitiſſet Mundus: &, quod hæc duo hoc modo mixta non deſinent, donec Bonum approprietur Mundo ſuo & Malum Mundo ſuo; [i. e utrumque horum tandem concedet ad Mundum ſibi proprium, ſcil. in fine Mundi.] ——— Et hanc eſſe Religionem Magorum.

